The second stander was that of the Apostle Saint Iames the Sonne of Zebede, whom the Spaniards acknowledge for Patron, and protector of their Country and state, and for guide and defender of their Kings of Castile and Leon: at the sight wherof the army and the people cried out with great ioy, Santiago, Santiago. Saint Iames, Saint Iames; And the third was the King and Queenes royall Banner, wherein were pictured the armes of all their realmes, and dominions; and when that was lifted vp and displaid, they all cried aloude Castile, Castile, for King Fernand, and Queene Isabell. After all this, the prelates, and Clergy did expiate, and purge the mesquites, or Churches, which had serued for the reprobate vse of the Mahometan religion, blessing and dedicating them to some Saint or other; and if in the towne or Citty taken, any Christian Captiues were found, as vsually there were some; they after the Priests had sung Te Deum laudamus, were made to answere, Benedictus dominus Israel, quia visitauit et fecit redemptionem plebis sue. These were the ceremonies; vsed by King Fernand, and Queene Isabell, at the taking of any towne from the Moores.

Alora being taken and fortified, Don Lewis Fernandes Lord of Palma had the keeping thereof; then the royall army passed on to the valley of Carthama; the Marquis of Cales led the vanguard with two thousand horse and as many chosen foote-men. Those C of Alozagra yeilded vpon condition, they might bee mayntayned in their consciences, and religion, the which the King graunted; then they beseeged the towne of Caçaranouelle where the Moores made incredible resistance, killing in diuers skirmishes greate numbers of Christians; as namely Don Gutierrez de Sotomajor Earle of Benalcaçar, a young Noble-man, of foure and twenty yeares of age; hardy and valiant; who was shot throw the body, with a poysoned arrow, for whose death the king and the whole army were very sorry, because these braueries of the Moores, did make them become oblitrate, and encouraged others, which would haue yeilded, to make resistance. The Army, with this losse, & without performing any other exploit, then burning the country, did returne backe to Antiquera, where the King receaued letters from the Queene his wife, which caused the whole army to blush for shame; for shee let them vnderstand how that so goodly an army, ought not to liue vnprofitably, nor returne without doing some notable exploit: wherefore, being incouraged by a woman, they retired againe into the enemies country, and spoiled it euen to the mountaine called Sierra Neuada: the King being lodged with a great body of an army, within halfe a mile of the Citty of Granado, to oppose him selfe against the sallies, which they off the towne, might make vpon those that did forrage, the Duke of medina, and the Earle of Cabra, being in another place, where as much as in them lay, they spoiled the country, and made it vnfit to beare frute, the sooner thereby to starue them. The Queene had laden 5000. beasts of carriage with victuals which by the helpe of this army, entred into Alhama where the King E left Don Gutierrez de Padilla gouernour, who was nephew to Don Garcia Lopes de Padilla, Maister of Calatraua, in regard the Maister had promised to defend that place; with the forces of his iurisdiction. Afterwards the army returned to Cordoua, where the Queene being demanded if shee were pleased with what they had donne, shee answered, that it was not fit they should spend the rest of the yeare in idleness: where vpon the King returned, and marched against Septenill, which for three daies space was battered, and afterwards the Moores yeilded it vpon composition; that they might depart with their liues, goods and liberty; the place was committed to the keeping of D. Francisco Henriquez: from thence the army went to ruine the country of Ronde, and because winter did draw neere, it did attempt nothing else, and was brought backe to F Siuill, whether the Queene came. The garrisons of Alhama, Alora, and Septenill, were commanded by the King and Queene to aide King Mahomet the little with all their power against Muley Albohacen his father.

Wee will here for a while lay by the affaires of Castile and Arragon, and speake of Portugal, and of the raigne of Iohn the 2. who succeeded Alphonso 1481. being fixe and twenty yeares of age. This Prince was a great Iusticer, and it may be, ouer rigorous

Hhhh 3

King Fernand promiseth the Moores liberty of their conscience.

A courageous woman and constant in her enterprise.

6 Portugal. King Iohn a greite iusticer, namely against the nobility, with other of his qualities.

in the execution thereof, especially against the Nobilitie and great Lords of his kingdome, whome he did punish, and reclaimes from many oppressions which his father had tolerated: this caused him to be hated, and gaue cause vnto some who were very neere vnto him in blood, to practise against his life and state.

He was of a quicke and sharpe iudgement, and of an excellent memorie, he could discourse eloquently of all matters, and would haue those that did talke with him, to consider how and what to speake, and he would ordinarily say, that it was impossible but that Kings should be wise men, because euery one that spake to them, whether they were foolish or wise, did strue to speake well and wisely. He shewed great wisdom in all his actions, not suffering himselfe to be carried away by Court-flatterers, and if hee did fauour any one, hee would aduance him but to a certaine meane and no further, giuing authority to no man more than was needfull: hee was a louer of good counsell, very true, firme, and constant in whatsoever he graunted or denied, liberrall aswell to strangers as to his owne seruants: he was religious according to those times, and charitable towards the poore, for whose ease and comfort, hee builded the royall Hospitall of Lisborne, in the honour of all Saints: he shewed himselfe very obedient towards his father, and had the good hap, to haue the kingdome of Manicongo discovered in his raigne, at which time with great care and diligence, the navigation for spices did beginne, for which things, hee was furnished the Great. When hee beganne to raigne, hee was already father to the Infant Don Alphonso begotten on Queene Elenor, daughter to Don Fernand Duke of Visco his Vncle, and to the Infanta Donna Beatrice, shee who had procured the peace betwixt Spaine and Portugall: the Infant was seauen yeares old when his father came to the Crowne, who the yeare 1481. had a sonne by a Mistris of his called Donna Anne de Mendoza, whose name was George, Master of Saint Iames and Auis, Duke of Coimbra, Lord of Auero and Montemajor the old, who was brought vp openly as the Kings sonne, by his Aunt the Infanta Donna Isabe, a Nunne in the Monasterie of Iesus d'Auero: hee was father to Don Iohn Duke of Auero, a worthie Prince in our age.

This King Iohn of whome wee speake, was the first King of Portugall that entituled himselfe Lord of Guiney, the navigation into which countrey hee mayntained and continued, and builded the Citie and Castle of Saint George, the fort of Tanger and others. Hee called a Parliament in the Citie of Ebora, there to receiue the oath of fealtie and homage due to the Kings his progenitors: at the same time it happened, that Don Fernand Duke of Bragança, being at his house of Villa-viciosa, did search for certaine records and titles of lands with other letters of priuiledge, to haue them renewed and confirmed by the new king: his Secretarie whome hee employed in this businesse, found certaine letters of intelligence and practise in a chest, betwixt the Duke his master, and the King and Queene of Castile, contrarie to his allegiance to King Iohn: Wherefore this Secretarie, whose name was Lope de Figueredo, being moued either with zeale towards his Prince, or with hope of some good reward, did embezell those writings, and gaue them to the King, who hauing copied them, re-delivered the originall to Figueredo, who layd them among the rest of the papers which hee had found, his Lord not perceyuing it: the Duke neuertheless was still fauoured and welcommed by the King, who in matters of weight could very well dissemble, and was continually at Court accompanying and serving the King and Queene: vntill vpon a time the Court being at Almerin, where the Queene was brought a bed before her time, and in great danger of her life: the Duke of Bragança came to visit her, with Don Dominicke Duke of Visco, one of his complices, who was brother to the Queene: the King entertained them with a pleasant countenance, and vpon a certaine day hee tooke the Duke of Bragança aside into his chappell, within the with-drawing Curtaines, and did brotherly admonish him of his fault in these termes:

„ Cousin, I haue vnderstood a matter, which I must acquaint you with in this holy place, where I stand in the presence of God, before whom I will not dissemble: therefore beleeue it, I speake nothing but truth: I heare that you haue secret intelligence and practise with the Kings of Castile, against my State and seruice, greatly forgetting therein

A the honour faith and loyaltie which you owe vnto mee: in regard whereof, considering the reasons on both our sides, I for my part hauing giuen none occasion to your selfe or any other, and seeing no cause why you should hope for more honour and fauour of any other Prince then of me, I can not but be very much troubled, and I know not whether I may firmly beleeue it or no: yet notwithstanding, howsoever it is, I thought good to admonish you, that if vpon any false surmise, you haue entred into this vnreasonable imagination, to giue it ouer: protesting to you that I meane to forget, and graciously to pardon your offences, requesting you, seeing it hath pleased God to make me heire to his crowne to stand stedfastly to me, and to acknowledge this fauour towards you, and the place and rancke which you hold in this Kingdome; wherein by your owne deserts, and those of your ancestors, you are the chiefe person next vnto myselfe, the which should stirre you vp to maintaine and procure the safety and greatness thereof, especially considering, that God hath as it were parted the faculties and riches of this royall patrimony betwixt vs two: and that of two sisters borne of the noble race of the Infants Don Fernand and Don Beatrice, Dukes of Visco, I haue married the one and you the other. It may be that I am taxed with some fault, common to Kings newly come to their crownes, as to proceed ouer rigorously against some persons, and to shew small liberality and meeknesse in certaine matters, which could not be otherwise managed: but if it were so that some bee offended with my new government; you before all men, ought to tolerate it, and to be a singular president of loyalty and obedience vnto others. If my Iudges and Commissioners sent into your iurisdiction haue exceeded the bounds of modesty in their charge, you know very well that they haue had great cause so to doe, and that they haue many reasons on their sides to iustifie their proceedings, in respect of the present state; but if they were in fault, should not you greatly binde me vnto you for bearing with those things? and for your owne part you may be assured, that in regard of your place, wisdom and deserts, I can not refuse you any thing that you should craue of mee. Now, you are bound, in regarde I am planted in the royall seate of Portugall, to aide mee both with counsell and armes if need were, and whensoever I shall craue it; therefore I intreate and commaund you both in heart and will to dispose your selfe therewith to euer hereafter.

When the Duke heard these words, he would haue excused himselfe, and entreated the King not to beleeue those reports, which (he said) were contrary to his meaning, and that whilst hee had a heart, a hand and meanes, they should all bee employed in his seruice. And so the King left off, hoping that the Duke would amend, and that he should no more neede to speake vnto him concerning it. But the Court being not longe after remooued from Almerin to Saint Iren, Iasper and Peter de Iubartes brethren and seruants to the Duke of Bragança, came to the King, and certified him that the Duke their Maister did continue his practizes with Castile, and that Iasper had bene twice sent as messenger to the Kings of Castile, and that the Marquis of Montemajor, and the Earle of Faro the Dukes bretheren, were consenting to those practizes. The King did largely recompence these two bretheren for their aduertisement, and did resolve to punish the Duke of Braganças treachery, and hauing a fit occasion by his comming to the court, which lay then at Ebora, whether hee accompanied the Prince Don Alphonso, hee caused him to bee arrested of high treason and to bee committed to prison in May the yeere 1483.

The Kings Atturney General pleaded against him, & he was found guilty of treason, and was iudged and condemned by the Lords, to haue his head cut off, and all his goods to be confiscate to the crowne: the which sentence was executed; and Fernand Duke of Bragança was brought to the publike place of execution in the city of Ebora, where he was beheaded and made a pittifull spectacle to all men. Six other gentlemen were likewise beheaded with him, and diuers banished, in which number, was the Constable of Portugall. The Dutchesse Isabella the Queenes sister, as soone as she heard of her husbands imprisonment, sent her three children Don Philip, Don Iames, and Don Denis into Castile who were kindly receiued and welcomed by Queene Isabella their Aunt: the poore Lady their mother, hauing no other comfort in her widdow-hood but a little daughter Mediocrity is to be observed in the advancement of Princelings.

Discovery of Manicongo.

Genealogie of Portugal.

The Duke of Braganças practises discovered by his Secretarie.

A gentle admonishment made by King Iohn to the Duke of Bragança.

The Duke of Bragança beheaded at Ebora.

daughter called Marguerite, whose company she enioyed not long, for within a while after she died. D. Philip her eldest sonne died in Castile: the second Don James returned into Portugall, and Don Denis this third sonne, did marry the Countesse of Lemos in Castile.

The Marquis of Montemajor, and the Earle of Faro, the Dukes brethren, did likewise flee into Castile, where they spent the remainder of their daies beeing honoured and maintained by King Fernand and Queene Isabella. Now Don Dominico the Queenes brother, was one of the conspiracy as hath beene already said; and the King the next day after the Duke of Bragança his execution called him into his presence, and knowing him to be young both in yeeres and discretion, he did admonish him as a father, to behaue himselfe discretely, and told him diuers things which concerned his honour and wel-fare, and did freely pardon him all offences past: to which speech of the Kings, Don Dominico could not answere one word but onely kissed the Kings hand in signe of thanks. This young Prince had aspired to reigne, and being young and inconsiderate, he did oftentimes permit his hand to be kissed, and would receiue other honours belonging to a foueraigne Prince, the which in the end bred his ruine.

After all these things the King being gon to visit the townes and fortresses vpon the frontiers of Galicia and countries neere adioyning, Don Ramir Nagues de Guzman arriued in Portugall, of whose quarrell to the Admirall of Castile and his sonne we haue amply spoken heretofore. This Lord came to the Court at Saint Iren, where hauing a time appointed him to come into the Kings presence, as hee was going to masse in Saint James his Church, he kneeled downe at the great doore with his traine and seruants; the King presented him his hand to kisse with his gloue vpon it, but Don Ramir thinking that the King did either contemne or scorne him, and being a knight of an high and couragious spirit, he did plucke the Kings gloue off, and so, kist his bare hand, then the King said, I could haue done that my selfe if it had pleased me; but Don Ramir did not heare him in regard he was some-what deafe: for this cause he was called euer after in Portugall El de la loba, which is as much to say, as He of the gloue. Yet neuertheless the King vsed him very graciously; and did assure him that he was in a place of safety, and therefore willed him to be merry; and not to feare any daunger at all. Don Ramir gaue him many humble thanks, and excused his boldnesse in plucking off his gloue, beseeching him not to take it as done vnreuerently, in regard it was the custome of Spaine to kisse the Kings bare hand. Not long after, Don Ramir, had some ieaousie of the Marquis of Villareall a friend and kinsman to the Admirall of Castile, King Iohn hauing notice thereof, called the Marquis before him, and told him that his pleasure was, that Don Ramir should liue safe and secure in Portugall, free from feare either of the King of Castile or any else, and therefore if any euill did happen to him, his life should answere it: the Marquis answered, that for him Don Ramir should liue in all safety, and that he neither had nor would procure him any displeasure.

But the Duke of Braganças death did displease diuers great Lords of the Kingdome of Portugall, in regard whereof, new conspiracies were made against the Kings life. The chiefe of the conspirators were Don Garcia Meneses Bishop of Eborá, and Don Fernand de Meneses his brother, Don Lopo de Albuquerque Earle of Pegnamacor, and Don Pedro de Albuquerque his brother, Don Aluaro de Atayde, and Don Pedro d' Arayde the father and sonne, Don Guttiere Contino Commander of Cezimbra sonne to the Marshall, and Fernand Selucyra, who againe did draw Don Domingo the Duke of Viseo into their practises, determining to make him King, and they watched for a fit time and occasion to kill King Iohn, who being at Setuball did discover the treason, by the relation of one called Diego Tinoco, who knew it by the meanes of a sister of his who was concubine to the aboue named Bishop no lesse secret then chaste and faithfull, and this Tinoco came of purpose disguised in a Friers habit, to discloase it to the King, who in recompence of his good seruice, gaue him five thousand Cruzados in ready money and sixe hundred thousand Marauedis of yeerely rent, the which hee did not long enioy, for soone after, he died. Within few daies after, the King receiued the same aduertizement from Don Vasco Contino, vnto whom Don Guttiere his brother, one of the

The Kings fatherly aduertizement to D. Dominico Duke of Viseo.

D. Ramir Nagues de Guzman cometh into Portugall.

A the confederats had reuealed it, thinking that without any danger he might haue spoken it to him by reason that he was in disgrace with the King, and ment to haue fled into Castile: but he was therein deceiued; for Don Vasco by this meanes made his owne peace, was created Earle of Barba with hereditary right, and beside the Castle of Estremoz, hee receiued many other aduancements. The same day that the confederats should meete the Duke of Viseo at the Court, the King hauing visited a Church neere to Setuball, he went a boord of a little fisher-boot to see them take fish, hauing with him onely foure of his faithfull seruants, namely Fernand Martinez Mazarrenas captaine of the genets or light-horse, Diego d' Almeida, Don Iohn de Meneses, and Don Ramir Nagues de Guzman: In the euening, as he was returning to Setuball, thirty of the confederates stood vpon the banke of the riuer, with intent to haue executed their treason, whereof the King being aduertized at his landing, by a Groome of his Chamber named Anthony Faria, who told him in his care that it behooued him at that time to dissemble, and to shew his Kingly courage, expecting a fitter time and opportunity to punish them according to their deserts: the King who could very well dissemble, being leapt on horse-backe, called the Duke of Viseo to him with a smiling and pleasing countenance, and gaue him and the rest of the conspirators, many gracious and louing words, so as for that present they had not the hearts to proceed in their determinations: in the meane time, the King who was weakly accompanied, went into a Church called Our Lady the Old, wayting for his guardes arriual, and beganne to talke with them leaning his back against the wall, the better to keepe his enemies from comming behinde him, among whom was D. Vasco Contino, whom he called vnto him and made a shew to diuert him from going into Spaine, the better thereby, vnder colour of this talke, to draw the whole conspiracy from him. By these meanes it was Gods pleasure that the King should escape that daies daunger, and returne in safety to his pallace. Certaine daies after, the King being more sufficiently aduertized of these Lords conspiracy against his person, sent to commaund the Duke of Viseo, who was then at Palmela with his mother the Infanta Beatrice, to come to him to Setuball, who forthwith did so, not doubting any thing, and he was no sooner arriued and come into King Iohns presence, but hee was stabd to death with a poniard by the Kings owne hand, in the night, in a Chamber in Don Nugno d' Acugnás house where the King then lay, in the presence of Don Pedro Deza, Diego d' Açambuya and Lopes Mendez, with no other words but these, Thou shalt die, and goe carry newes to the duke of Bragança in what state the treason stands which he beganne.

In this manner the Duke of Viseo died a young Prince of twenty yeeres old, by following naughty counsell, and giuing credit to the vaine predictions of Astrologers, who had assured him that hee should bee King. The Dutchesse his mother was by the King certified of what had happened, who excused himselfe, in regard that hee was constrained by necessity to commit so sodaine an execution, and intreated her to beare it patiently: and in some sort to comfort her, the very same night he called Don Manuel her other sonne into her presence, who was more wise and discret then his brother vnto whom hauing told the Dukes death, and the causes wherefore he died, hee gaue all that his brother did possesse and more, and conferring with him, with a fatherly affection, hee promised to cause him to be sworne and acknowledged for Prince and heire to the crowne of Portugall, after his death and Don Alphonso his sonne: but hee would not permit him to name himselfe Duke of Viseo as his brother had done, but Duke of Beja, Lord of Viseo, and Maister of the Order de Christus, and hee made him Lord of the Isle of Madera, and gaue him other lands.

The Duke was at the same time onely seauenteene yeeres of age, and the King gaue him a Sphere for a diuise to beare in his armes, the which the Kings of Portugall doe yet at this day beare in their armes and royall scutcheon: the same was a lucky presage vnto him of the conquests and discoueries which were afterward made in his reigne and name vnder both the Poles: the same was likewise fore-told by the Bishop of La Garde a great Mathematicien; in regard of his Horoscope, and position of the heauens at his Natiuity, being in the yeere 1468, albeit that such iudgments are deceiuable and vnlawful,

The young duke of Viseo slain by King Iohns owne hand.

The Duke of Viseo seduced by Astrologers.

A Sphere vpon the armes of Portugall.

full, for the actions of Kings, and the euent of all other matters depend vpon Gods A only Ordonance.

Now when the confederates vnderstood of the Duke of Viseo death, and that their practizes were discovered, each of them thought to saue one, but all of them were not quicke enough: for Don Pedro d' Albuquerque was taken as he fled towards Lis-bone, and Don Pedro d' Arayde at Saint Iren who were brought to the Court. The like happened to the Bishop of Ebor, and to Don Fernand de Meneses his brother, and to Don Gustierre Coutino. As for Don Aluaro D' Arayde who remained at Saint Iren accompanied with men at armes attending the successe of their businesse, meaning to haue taken Donna Ioane surnamed the Excellent, who was a Nunne, from the Monastery of Saint Clare at Coimbra, and to haue lodged her in the castle, he fled away into Spaine, and so did Don Lopes d' Albuquerque Earle of Pennamaçor with all his family. D. Fernand de Silueyra hauing beene hidden by one of his father seruants, who neither for grie-uous threatnings nor for promises of reward from the King could euer be drawne to disclose him did likewise escape, and fled into Spaine. The King, to iustifie the Duke of Viseo death, and to giue notice thereof to all men, caused his processe to be made after that he had slaine him, and condemned the rest. D. Fernand de Meneses and D. Pedro were beheaded and quartered as traitors. As for D. Gustierre Coutino he was committed to the tower of Auis, for D. Vasco his brother who had reuealed much of the conspiracy to the King, did a while prolong his life, neuertheless hee did not escape, nor is it certainly knowne how he died. D. Garcia de Meneses Bishop of Ebor, being prisoner in the castle of Palmela, was found dead vpon the cesterne of the said fort, and there is great presumption that his daies were violently shortned. At the same time, the Kings of Castile were at Siuill, where receiuing newes that the conspiracy was discovered, and imagining that the Duke of Viseo should bee committed to prison, and that King Iohn would not haue proceeded against him so indiscreetly, they hauing no notice of his sodaine death, did fend D. Imigo Manriques Bishop of Leon, and Gaspar Fabro a Knight of Arragon Ambassadors into Portugall, with instruction to entreate the King to saue the Duke of Vi-seos life, if he were yet liuing, and if he were dead, to comfort the Dutchesse his mother, who had beene the cause of the peace betwixt Spaine and Portugall. The Ambassadors perceiuing the Duke of Viseo to bee dead, did their best to comfort the sorrow-full mother, and so returned into Spaine without speaking to King Iohn, who neuer ceased to pursue Don Fernand de Silueyra, vntill hee had driuen him out of Spaine:
He was afterward slaine in Auignon by an Earle of Catalonia, who was likewise banished from his country, but the French King had like to haue taken his head from his shoulders in requitall of his paines. This Earle was afterward liberally rewarded by king
D. Iohn, for that he had rid him of an enemy. The Earle of Pegnamaçor died in Castile, D.
Aluaro of Arayde liued a banished man during the life of King Iohn, and in King Manuels time returned into Portugall. By these seuerities King Iohn was feared of all his subiects, in regard he had not spared those two great Lords who were of the greatest parentage in Portugall.

An 1485.
Castile.

7
Moors.

The yere 1485, the commons of Castile sent their Deputies and Commissioners to Or-gas where D. Alphonso of Arragon, Duke of Villahermosa lay, who was capitaine generall of their Hermandades or brotherhoods, and with him D. Alphonso de Burgos Bishop of Cuenca, president of the royall Councel, and Alphonso de Quintanilla, who hauing propounded the great costs and charges which the Kings were at in following the Moorish wars, did demad a subsidy, the which was very readily granted, in regard they did see that it should be employed in matters so worthy and profitable for the commonwealth.

The Gouvernors and capitaines on the frontiers of Andalusia would lose no fit occasion that might anoy the Moores, who did all of them in a manner follow King Muley Albo- hacen, and had almost restored him to all his lands in Granada, reuolting from Mahomet the Little, because he had beene aided by Christian Kings; so that they left him no other place of retreat, but only the city of Almeri, from whence hee made cruell warre vpon the Moores, which tooke his fathers part: they meaning altogether to despoyle him of all rule and gouernment in Granada, and perceiuing King Muley Albohacen to bee already

A already old and vnfit for warre, did elect, a brother of his, one of King Ismaels sonnes for their gouernour in Granada, who was likewise called Muley Boabdalin, who thinking it most necessary for the establishing of his Kingdome to ridde his Nephew Maho- met out of the world, hee had secret intelligences, with the chiefe men of his faction which were neere in credit about his person in Almeri, whom he induced by promises to deliuer their Prince and City into his hands at a certaine time appointed, before which place Muley Boabdellin shewing himselfe, they failed not to open him the gates, & they let him in vpon such a sodain, as Mahomet hardly escaped with life, but God gaue him meanes to escape, leauing a young brother of his behinde him, who was cruelly murdered by his enemies: after the taking of which towne, Muley Boabdellin openly and without contradiction was chosen King of Granada both against the father and the sonne, who were driuen away, in the yere 1485. and the 868. yere of the reigne of the Arabians there; Muley Albohacen hauing reigned nineteene yeres. Now these two Princes of one name did make such cruell warre vpon each other for the crowne of Granada as is not almost to bee beleueed. Boabdellin is a corrupted word, those which speake it better, call both of them Aben Abdilleha, but the truest is Aben Abdella. The Moores to make a difference betwixt them by some surname, called King Albohacens brother, Zagall, which signifieth valorous, and Mahomet the little his Nephew, Zagois, that is to say, the vnhappy.

Muley Boabdellin 21. King of Granado.

I N the beginning of the reigne of Muley Boabdellin el Zagal, hee had to doe with the Earle of Cabra, with Martin Alphonso de Corduba, Lord of Montemajor, Diego del
Castillo great Commander of Calatraua, Pedro Ruis d' Alarcon, Diego Lopes d' Ayala, Francisco de Bouadilla, and other, braue capitaines and Knights, who ouer-ranne the country neere to Nixar and Guejar beyond the City of Granada neere to the hilles called Sierra Neuada, where they tooke great booties, and made their retreat by means of the good garde which they had left at the difficult passages, by the aduise of Pedro Ruis d' Alarcon, after the new King had drawne great numbers of Moores out of the city of Granada and else where to enclose and defeat them.

King Fernand and Queene Isabella did then lie at Siuill where Don Imigo Manriques
the Archbishop being dead, the Pope by his full power and authority gaue that Arch-bishopricke to the Cardinal Don Roderigo Borgia, who was afterward Pope Alexander the sixth: these holy fathers being not able to abstaine from breaking the concordats which did in some sort restraine their power, the which they pretend to bee absolute: but these courageous Kings, brideled them at this time likewise, and delt in such sort as the Cardinal hauing resigned that Archbishopricke, and put it into the Popes hands; it was giuen at the Kings entreaty to Don Diego Hurtado de Mendoza Bishop of Palence, and his Bishopricke of Palence resigned to Don Alphonso de Burgos Bishop of Cuenca, that of Cuenca to Don Alphonso de Fonseca Bishop of Auyla, and that of Auyla to Frier Hernando of Talauera, and Oropeza, Prior of the Monastery of Pré of Valiodellit and the Queenes Confessor: In this sort did euery one affect good Bishoprikes in recognition of their seruices: I call them good, in respect of their reuenues.

Whilst the Kings remained this yere at Siuill, they made diuers good Edicts and Ordonances for Iudges, and for the administration of Iustice, as also for the manning of the future warre: and the time drawing neere when as armies vsd to march into the field, and diuerse companies of horse and foote being already arriued from all parts of Spaine vpon the frontiers of Andalusia, they left Siuill and came to Cordoua: di-uerse great Lords, Knights and people of all sorts did come thither, who suted themselues the best they could, which made a gallant shew, wherein great cost and superfluity was vsed, as likewise, in feasts, games and other military sports: in regard whereof,
the

Castile.
Popes cannot keepe themselues from breaking the concordats which restrain their power.

Profitable
waies for to redresse superfluous expen-ces.

The generall History of Spaine.

Lib. 23.

the Kings thought to redresse those matters by two courses, both profitable and milde, A namely, by admonishments which they themselves made to the noblest, and to others by religious persons of credit, and afterwards by their owne example shewing in their apparrell, traine and manner of life great modesty, wherein neuerthelesse some Maicsty did appeare, as was fitting for their degree.

As concerning the warre the opinion was, that Malaga should be besieged, and by the way they laboured (but in vaine) to take the castle of Montefrio. Passing forward, they did ouer-runne, spoile and destroy the country neere to Carthama, where the common opinion was to seeke to take Carthama and Coin before they did attempt any thing against Malaga, to the end to haue the country more at their commandement, the which was not the worst counsell: and because the army was great, part thereof was sent to besiege Carthama vnder the conduct of the Maister of Saint Iames, the Constable, and D. Alphonso D' Aguilar, and the other part to Coyne which was commanded by the Marquis of Cales, the Earle of Crugna, and D. Hurtado de Mendoza, with the Cardinalls people. The King with some part of his forces was lodged betwixt both these scages, to succor either of them as need should require. In the mean time the towne of Benamexi yeelded as it had done in time before: but it did reuolt when the Earle of Benalcazar was slaine, into the which fault it fell againe after it had yeelded, and was now taken by assault, the Inhabitants were taken or slaine, and the place razed to the ground: the King did choose out one hundred of the principall prisoners C and caused them to be hanged for a terror to the rest, chiefly for an example to them of Carthama, Coin and Ronde; yet notwithstanding they were not negligent in their owne defence. Certaine African Moores of Velez de la Gomera, being moued with zeale to their religion, came ouer into Spaine, and espied a fit occasion whereby to enter into Coin, which they did at such time, as a great and large breach was made, which the Christians did assaile, who by this new aide were rudely repulsd with great slaughter: there were slaine Pero Luis Alarcon, a most wise and valiant capitaine, and Tello d' Aguilar likewise, whose death did greatly greeue King Fernand, wherevpon hee caused the battay to bee redoubled and did to presse the besieged, as they beganne to take of composition. The King being highly displeased for his losse received at that assault, would not receiue them at the first vpon any condition, but at the last he graunted them their liues and goods, and so the towne was yeelded vp. Coin was a great towne and very hard to be kept, wherefore it was razed. Those of Carthama hauing notice that Coin was yeelded, did compound in like manner, whose example was followed by Curiana, Paniana, and others. The garde and defence of Carthama was committed to the Maister of Saint Iames vpon his entreaty, who left there for Lieutenant vnder him a Gentleman of his owne, named Iohn de Cespedes. About the same time, Don Alphonso Henriquez high Admirall of Castile died at Valiodolid, in whose place and dignity Don Frederike Henriquez his sonne succeeded. The Queene being at Cordoua tooke care to prouide the army of money and victuals, wherein she vsed incredible diligence and dexterity.

After the taking of the places aboue mentioned, the King passed on with a great number of men at armes and came within sight of Malaga, a strong towne, and exceeding well furnished with men and all things necessary for a towne of warre. The Moore King who lay within it made a sally with a thousand horse, which were the floure of his cavalry, where they skirmished valiantly on both sides, where D. Fernand D' Ayalos the eldest of that family was slaine. And because the army wanted water, the King went backe to Carthama, where sitting in counsell what was best to bee done, it was concluded to goe and besiege Ronde. D. Pedro Henriquez Marquis of Cales and capitaine of the frontiers of Andaluzia with other capitaines marched on before with three thousand horse and eight thousand foot to inuest the place, and the King followed them at the heeles with the rest of the army. The towne was stronge and defended by very warlike Moores, being besieged and furiously battered, the Christians in a few daies won the suburbs thereof, where Alphonso Foyardo shewed great prooffe of his worth and valor. The battay continuing against the towne albeit the Moores which were sent to the succor thereof, did

Lib. 23

The generall History of Spaine.

913

A did their best to enter into it and did put the campe in continuall alarmes, the Christians neuerthelesse did so presse them as the besieged were faine to yeeld, vpon condition that their goods and liues might be saued, with liberty to liue in their owne sect in any place of Castile where they pleased. The King entred into the towne of Ronda vpon Whitsunday; D. Bernardin de Velaasco, sonne to the Constable hauing first seized vpon a tower of the castle, and as soone as the Moore gouernor was gonne forth of it with his people to retire himselfe into the King of Castiles country to a place in the territory of Siuil, the towne was repeopled with Christians drawne from the same city, from Cordoua and other places of Andaluzia. The Queene made prouision for the ornaments of the Churches, and things necessary for their seruice; and the gouernment of the towne

Ronda taken,
and the Moore liues, goods, and religion granted
vnto them.

B was giuen to Antonio de Fonseca. The Moores of that country hauing made themselves Mudejares, that is to say, vassals to Christians, were at that time religiously maintained and preferred, according to the capitulations and promises, by means whereof, diuers other townes did voluntarily yeeld themselves to the Kings, namely, Burga, Iunquera, Monda, Ganfin, Caleres, Montija, with other castles and fortresses of the mountaines of Ronda, Villalonga, and Carthema, who were permitted to liue in their owne religion, paying the same tribute which they were wont to giue to the Moore Kings. The places which did yeeld were more then forty in number. And because Casaramouella did make delays, King Fernand caused the Inhabitants thereof to bee summoned to yeeld, vpon paine of tasting of all the rigour of warre: wherevpon they submitted, vpon the same

Equity of the King and Queene of
Castile.

C conditions as the rest had done, and the garrison thereof was giuen to D. Sancho de Rojas. Those likewise of Marbela, a sea towne, being sommoned to yeeld, made answer that they were contented so to doe, and they sent their gouernor or Alguazil Major to the King, who desiring to bee present at the yeelding thereof, brought thither his army by the way of Antequera, fetching a long circuit but easie and commodious: By the way he receiued letters from the Moores of Marbela, who demanded new capitulations, the which were not answered till the army was in sight: wherewith they being amazed, deliuered vp the town, and retired themselves, some into Affrica, and others into the Kingdome of Castile: Montemajor and other places of the country of Marbela did likewise yeeld. And because the army beganne to want victuals by reason that the tempests and stormes at sea did hinder the ships of burthen from sayling, the King was aduised to make retreat to Cordoua, so the army marched within sight of Malaga once againe, from whence the Moores came forth and skirmished, but to no purpose, the seege whereof had not bene in vaine nor without effect, if victuals had not wanted. The army being returned neere to Antequera, it was abundantly refreshed with victuals sent thither by the Queene. The King afterward entred into Cordoua with great ioy and applaud of the Queene, Prince and Infantas of the Court, the people, Clergy, and sundry Ambassadors: there were sollemne processions made, where the King in manner of a triumph caused great number of Christians to bee led in pompe, and in a glorious shew, which were redeemed from captiuitie, whose shackles and irons were afterward sent to Toledo, and there hung vp against the wal of the Monastery of Saint Iohn of the kings, which are to be seene at this day.

E For the maintenance and preservation of what had bene wonne and conquered, Iohn de Torres, a knight of the Kings house, was sent vnto the frontiers with a Prouost or Alcayde of the Court, named the Licenciante La Font, who distributed the lands to the new Inhabitants, for the ordinary garrisons were vp in the country of the Moores more then twenty leagues; and because diuers Pirates had robbed sundry Moores as they passed out of Spaine into Affrike, contrarie to the capitulations, informations being made therevpon, the Licenciante recouered all that had bene taken away, who demanding a safe conduct for his passage ouer into Affrica to restore to euery one what was his owne, the Moores made him answer that hee needed none other safe conduct then the greatnesse and renoune of the Kings of Castile his Maisters: wherevpon the Licenciante made himselfe ready to passe ouer, yet diuers of his friends counsellled him not to giue ouermuch credit to the light faith of the Moores, wherevnto with great boldnesse and constancy hee replied, that God forbid, that the power

Equity of the Kings of Cas-
tile.

and greatnesse of his Kings honor should be impaired or diminished thorow his feare: a A courageous speech of a most faithfull and affectionate subiect and seruant. And so he passed ouer and restored the Moores their goods, and promise was kept with him. In the meane time the garrisons of Alhama hauing ouer-runne the country neere to Granado, as they returned with great quantitie of cattaile and other booties, they met on a so-daine and vnlooked for the King of Granada who came from Malaga thither, accompanied with great numbers of horse, by whom they were charged and pursued vnto the very gates of Alhama with great losse of their people, beside the spoiles which were re-couered from them. There remained yet some small season of this yeere 1485. fit to make warre in, the which the Kings would not haue vnprofitably spent, without enter-prizing some matter of worth: therefore they caused the forces of Andaluzia, Extrema-dura, and the Marquisate of Villena to bee assembled (for they had licenced the men of warre of the farthermost prouinces of Spaine to depart as soone as they returned to Cordoua) whereafter diuers consultations, they resolved, at the perswasion of the Earle of Cabra to goe and beseege Moclin: the Earle with Martin Alphonso de Cabra Lord of the house of Montemajor, was sent before to shut in those of the towne with the forces which he had in Baena, then their followed him with foure thousand horse and other forces the Maister of Calatraua, the Earle of Buendia and other Knights, the King with the rest of the forces came after, and the Queene with the whole Court came to Baena.

The Christians defeated at Moclin.

Those that went first with the Earle of Cabra being arrived on a morning neere to Moclin fell vnawares vpon the King of Granadoes army which was come to Moclin consisting of twenty thousand Moores as well horse as foote, who neuertheless began to flie as soone as they did see the Christians whom they thought to bee farre more in number then they were: but hauing better viewed them they returned and charged them so brauely as they disordered and put them to flight: diuers were there slaine and taken, the Earle escaped being hurt in the hand with a Harquebuz shot, his horse hauing receiued foure wounds with a lance, his brother D. Gonçall de Cordoua was slaine, the Moores following the chafe were staied and constrained to turne their backs, by the troups of the Maister of Calatraua and the Earle of Buendia. This newes did greatly D displease the Kings, who altering their determination left Moclin and turned their forces against Cambill and Alhabar, very strong places on the confines of Iuen, and within three leagues of the city, alwaies well kept and defended by the Kings of Granada. The Marquis of Cales with the vangard did approach neere vnto their forts, whether the Artillery was brought with great difficulty, and the battery made with all diligences but they yeelded forthwith and the Moores which were within it were sent away free with their goods into Granada: the Queene gaue these two forts to the city of Iuen, where the King with the Maister of Saint Iames did determine to strengthen Alhama with foure thousand horse and fife thousand foot which were appointed for the same purpose. The Treasurer of Calatraua being gouernor of Alhama was solicited by a E Moore of the garrison of Salea, to come thither with his forces, and hee did assure him that he would finde meanes to cause him to enter into it: the Treasurer hauing first of all well examined the Moore, and being assured that he ment no deceite went on a night to Salea, where the traitors brother did let downe a rope from the walles, and helped to erect the scaling ladders by which the Christians mounted, who after a dangerous fight made themselves Maisters of the place, the Inhabitants whereof were all made slaues.

Birth of the Infanta Catherine.

Pope Innocent the eighth being daylie aduertized of these goodly victories, graunted this yeere to the Kings to raise greater subsidies vpon the Clergy, the which were moderated by the Cardinall of Spaine to one hundred thousand golden florins of the coine of Arragon. About the end of the yeere the Court leauing Andaluzia, came to Alcala de Henares, where Queene Isabell was brought in bed of a daughter named Catherin who was wife to Arthur Prince of Wales heire to the crowne of England, and afterward married to his brother King Henry the eight of that name.

In Alcala which was a place belonging to the Archbishop of Toledo, the Alcaldes and Prouosts

A Prouosts of the Court executing their offices, were hindered by the Cardinall, who was Archbishop of Toledo, who made grieuous complaints to the Queene, how her Officers did vsurpe vpon his authority: the Queene told him, that shee being Soueraigne in Castile, and in all other her realmes, might execute iustice in any place. The matter being debated on both sides, it was referred to the compromise and iudgment of fife persons of the counsell, whom the Queene would name, and to fife Channons of the Chapter of Toledo for the Cardinall: but the other affaires of Court, the short staye thereof at Alcala, with other hinderances, did end this strife, the which remained vndeci-ded. Then were the Iudges of the Court discharged of part of the Processe which did abound in all places where the King and Queene went, the which were turned ouer to the Chancery at Valiolidit, where Don Alphonso de Fonseca Archbishop of Saint Iames was made President, with eight Doctors for his Councell.

Contention betwixt the Arche-bishop of Toledo and the Queene.

During all these warres and businesse Don Ramir Nugnes de Guzman, of whom wee haue often spoken heretofore, had remained in Portugall, greatly honoured by King John. Hee vnderstanding of the Admirall of Castils death, his ancient enemy, procured his friends to obtaine his pardon of King Ferdinand and Queene Isabell, but be-eing aduertised that the matter was now harder to bee effected then before, by reason that Don Frederick, sonne to the deceased Admirall, who had begonne the quarrell, was made Admirall in his Fathers place, and highly fauoured, hee desperately resol-ued to kill him: and to effect his purpose, hee departed with leaue from the Court of Portugall, and came to Braganca. Don Frederick Henriquez being aduertised by his friends what his enemy did intend, hee thought, like a wise man, that it was not good to hold him still in dispaire, and therefore hee sent to Mary Osorio, Don Ramir Nugnes mother, to let her vnderstand, that if shee would come to Valiolidit to sue for her sonnes restitution, hee would assist her therein, provided that shee would take order that Don Ramir should returne back from Braganca, to the Court of Portugall.

This Lady being desirous to haue her sonne restored to his lands and goods, did not loofe so fit and vnlook for an occasion, but came to the Admirall, with whom after long conference, she went to the court being at Alcala de Henares, where she obtained, D but not without difficulty, the goods of Don Ramir, as depositarie, and that hee might returne into Spaine, vnder the keeping of the Earle of Feria. Don Ramir hauing notice hereof, tooke his leaue of the King of Portugall, and came to the Earle of Ferias house, where hee remained three yeeres, vntill his businesse were brought to this conclusion; that hee might enioy his goods, and marry with his promised wife, the daughter to the Earle of Luna: but that hee might not goe to his owne lands, vntill the King and Queene gaue him leaue. Afterward hee was permitted to come into his owne houses, vpon condition, that during his life he should not come ouer the riuer of Duero: such was the end of the quarrell caused by the Ladies of the Court, betwixt Don Ramir Nugnes de Guzman, and Don Frederick Henriquez.

Sentences of the quarrell betwixt Don Ramir Nugnes
de Guzman, and Frederick Henriques.

E Before the Court departed from Alcala de Henares, Don Inigo Lopes de Mendoza
 Earle of Tendilla, and Doctor Iohn de Medina, both of them of the Kings Coun-cell, were sent Ambassadors into Italy, about the warre which was betwixt Ferdinand King of Naples, and Pope Innocent; the which Ambassage they performed so wisely, as they made peace betwixt those great Potentates. These Ambassadors did in open Consistorie performe the obedience and submissions due to the Pope. King Ferdinand and Queene Isabell did in the meane time cause diligent search and punishment to bee made, vpon conuerted Iewes and Moores, which did returne to their old superstition.
 In the beginning of the yeare one thousand, foure hundred, eighty and sixe, the Court remooued to Medina del Campo, with intent to punish Don Rodrigo Osorio Earle of Lemos, who did disquiet the countrey of Galicia, and had surprised the Castle of Ponferrada, driuing thence the garrison which Captaine George Abendaño held for the King, and had broken in all sorts the truce which the King had made betwixt him and the Earle of Benauent. In regarde whereof hee was commanded to repaire in person to the Court, but hee durst not, and adding crimes to crimes, hee committed sundry excesses and robberies in Galicia.

The Queene being busied about the warres of Granado which she so much affected, and A not being able to goe in person into Galicia, gave commission to the Earle of Benauent his vicer enemy to repress this insolent Earle of Lemos.

The spring time drawing neere, the city of Cordoua began already to be filled with souldiars sent for by the Kings out of all the Prouinces of Spaine for the Moorish wars: wherefore the Kings parted from Medina, and passing along by Toledo came to Cordoua. There, did hourly arrive many troupes, not onely of Spaniards, but of Frenchmen, English and other foraine nations. Amongst the Lords of Castile, D. Inigo Lope de Mendoza Duke of Infantazgo made the bravest and gallantest shew. The army being mustered amounted to the number of twelue thousand horse, and forty thousand able fighting footmen, great number of Cannoniers and peeces of Ordinance of all sorts, thirty thousand beasts of carriage, two thousand waggons with their equipage and ment to drue them. With these forces Loxa was besieged. Into this towne King Mahmet the Little had shut him selfe, breaking his faith giuen to the Kings of Castile, for to reconcile himselfe to his vnkle: for the Moores perceiuing, though to late, that their ordinary diuisions and strifes had plunged them into extreame ruine, they did so handle the matter, as they made these two Pricies friends, who diuided the soueraine authority betwixt them, the city of Granado remayning neuerthelesse to King Muley Boabdellin el Zagil: in such sort as communicating their counsels and forces together to annoy the Christians, Mahmet the Little, did undertake to defend Loxa, from whence diuers sallies and hot skirmishes were made vpon the Kings vanguard, so as King Mahmet receiuing two wounds there, the Moores were shut in, the place was besieged, and the battery furiously begunne. The Duke of Infantazgo being one day vpon the garde, did take certaine Moores of Granado who would haue entred into Loxa, by whom he had notice that King Muley Boabdellin came with a great power to the aide of the besieged, wherevpon the guardes were doubled in all places of the campe, and preparation was made for whatsoever might happen. The suburbs being opened with the Canon, they were sharply assailed and well defended, neuerthelesse they were taken, with great effusion of Christian blood, where the Lord Scales Generall of the English was hurt. There was found in the suburbs a Moore that was a Weauer, who was so obstinate, as seeing the place to bee taken, and that the other Moores withdrew themselves into the towne, would not for all that leaue his owne house, saying, that hee had rather die by iron then die in irons, seeing that Loxa which was wont to defend the Moores and offend the Christians, was now the repaire of the enemies, and the grave of her owne citizens, and in this obstinacy hee was slaine. The suburbs being wonne, they beganne to batter the towne in such sort as in a short time, the walles, towers, and defenses were ouerthrowne, so as the Moores which defended them, lay open and exposed to the Cannons mouth, which did so terrifie and discourage them as they craued parley and composition vpon these conditions: That King Mahmet the Little should be pardoned for his disobedience passed: that hee should giue over the title of King of Granado, and intitle himselfe thence forward Marquis of Guadix, if so bee that hee could recouer the place within sixe monthes next ensuing, and that it might be lawfull for him to goe into Africa, or to liue in the country of Granado or else in Castile as should seeme best vnto him, and that the Moores which were within Loxa might doe the like. These things agreed vpon, Loxa was yeilded, and the gouernment thereof committed to Don Aluaro de Luna Lord of Fuente Duegna, processions and signes of ioy were made at Cordoua and else where for the taking of this towne. The Melquites being purged, the Queene provided them of ornaments after the accustomed manner.

From thence the King sent the Maister of Saint Iames and the Marquis of Cales, with foure thousand horse, and twelue thousand foot to beginne the sege of Illora a very strong place and well defended, distant three leagues from Granado: whither the rest of the army being come, the quarters and lodgings appointed, and well fortified hauing ser waches, and sentinells in the fields, vpon towers and high eminent places, to discover from a farre off, (for being so nere Granado, they feared some todaine and vnlooked for

The King of Castiles army at the sege of Loxa.

Loxa yeilded.

A for assault of the Moores) the suburbs were beaten and assailed, where the Duke of Infantazgo with his troupes, had the honour of the first assault: but he perceiuing his souldiars, who at the muster made the gallantest shew in brauery of armor and apparell aboue all others, to goe coldly to the fight, cried out vnto them, „How now my fellows, shall men say of you, that you are of the number of those braggarts which are of no other worth then to make a shew in the streetes and in a muster, where men are out of danger and farre from blowes; and that you are couragious in nothing but spending of your money in brauery like vnto women, no, no, souldiars, your honor consisteth in being valiant in fight, and therefore if you be men, preferre it before your liues, and doe not endure, that being beaten backe from this place with double shame, other men should carry away the glory from you: for mine owne part rather then I will bluth at your baseness and cowardize, I am resolu'd not to suruiue such a shame, but forgetting the place which I hold, I will cast my selfe into the breach amid the greatest throng of the enemies; and whosoeuer loue their honour let them follow me.

The souldiars being ashamed, at this speech reiterated by the Earle of Cabra and others, they tooke courage, beseeching their captaine to command them what they should doe, and they marched with such fury against the enemies, as entring into the suburbs, they made a pittifull slaughter of all those which could not soone enough get into the city; against the which, the cannon being planted, the flankes and curtines were soone ouerthrowne and infinite numbers of houses perced thorow: so as the Moores fearing to bee sooner forced by the enemies, then succoured by their friends, yeilded themselves and went forth of the towne with bagge and baggage, and without their armes. The King gave the garrison of Illora, to Don Gonzalo Hernandez de Cordoua brother to Don Alphonso d'Aguiar, who was afterward surnamed the great captaine.

The army after that, marched to Moclin, whether Queene Isabella came to ioyne with the campe at Loxa. The towne had beene newly fortified with towers and bulwarks, more then in former times, but the battery was made with such store of ordinance, as nothing could resist it: the Christians besides did vse diuers kindes of artificiall fiars, the which did great hurt to the besieged, and burnt all their store of gunpowder, by meanes of a pot of this wild fire which flew in the ayre, and did stick fast in a tower where the said powder lay, which was blowne vp into the ayre; wherewith the Moores being amazed, they did compound to depart with their liues and goods saued. Moclin being taken, part of the army was sent to beate Montefrio, they were the troupes of Suuill, Xeres, and Carmona, whilst the King with the residew thereof made spoile vpon the confines of Granado, not without diuers encounters and sharpe skirmishes with the Moores, who came forth of the head city. The King being returned to Moclin, the captaines of Montefrio and Colomera presented themselves vnto him demanding composition, which was granted them, and the Moores went forth of those two places to Granado with their goods, but they left their armor, weapons and victuals behind them. All these places which were taken were rampired and fortified with good garrisons, victuals, and other necessities, and hauing left D. Frederike de Toledo, sonne to D. Garcy Aluarez of Toledo Duke of Alua, captaine generall of the who country newly conquered, the King and Queene returned to Cordoua.

Not long after, they marched towards Leon, to order the affaires of Galicia, which was greatly troubled, by the insolvency of the Earle of Lemos, who neuerthelesse appearing before the Kings, did humbly craue his pardon and obtained it, being fauoured by diuers great Lords of the Court: Hee was notwithstanding enioyned not to enter into Galicia for a certaine time, and the places of Ponferrada, Sarria and Castro real were taken from him and were applied to the crowne, the Kings neuerthelesse giuing a certaine summe of money for the marriage of his aunts.

These things thus ordered, the Kings went to visit Saint Iames his Church, in the which city they builded a goodly Hospitall, for the releefe of the poore and of pilgrims, from thence fetching a circuit round about the country of Galicia, they redressed diuers tyrannies which were there committed, restoring diuers monasteries and Churches, which were

Illora yeilded
to King Fernand.

Moclin taken.

The Hospitall of Saint Iames built by King Fernand and Queene Isabel
for the releefe of pilgrims.

Mutinous and murderous persons sent forth
of the Court under colour of other employment.

Mutiny under colour of religion.

The first coming of Christopher Colombus, to the King and Queene
of Castile.

Qualities of Christopher Columbus.

were by force dispossessed of their goods, lands, and reuenues by certaine Knights and Gentlemen. To containe whom and all others in their duties, they established a Iudgement seate of foure Auditors, which was the beginning of the Royall Audience of Galicia, and they confirmed Don Diego Lopes Earle of Haro in his dignity of Viceroy of the country, as he had bene in time before. And the better to procure the peace of the countrey, they caused diuerse strong houses to be ouerthrowne and razed to the ground which serued for the repaire of theeues and robbers, and carried away with them out of Galicia diuerse mutinous and quarrellous Gentlemen, to the end they should employ their strength and courage in the warre against the Moores. The Court being returned to Benauent, the Earle shewed himselfe very liberall and magnificent in the entertainment of the Kings and the great Lords: from thence they came to Salamanca, where they spent the remainder of this year 1486.

It hapned this year in the towne of Trugillo, that the Iudge or Corrigidor of the place, hauing laide hands vpon a Priest for committing some notorious crime, and not sending him soone enough to his ordinary Iudge, the prisoners kinfolke hauing taken a Crosse in their hands, ranne vp and downe the City crying out for helpe, and said that the holy Catholike faith was trodden vnder foote, the which did so stirre vp the brutish multitude, as they ranne to take Armes, and came in tumultuous manner to the Corrigidors lodging, who was glad to make hast to deliuer the prisoner, whereof the King and Queene had notice, who were greatly displeased with such seditions, and sent certaine Iudges and Commissioners to Trugillo with forces, who executed diuerse of the mutiners according to lawe.

This year, Christopher Columbus borne at Cugurco vpon the riuer of Genoa, came to the Court of Castile, who made offer to search the Occidentall Ocean, where hee did undertake to discover a great land, riche and abundant in gold and other commodities, crauing ayde of the King and Queen of money and shippes, to furnish him out on such a voyage. Columbus was a man very expert in Navigation, and vntill that time hee had gotten his liuing by making Sea Cardes. Hee being married, and dwelling in the Isle of Madera; a shippe of Bilcay, which had for many dayes bene driuen vp and downe by tempests, and cast vpon the same coasts, whereof hee did then speake, did happen to arrive in the Island, Columbus brought the Pilot thereof and three other Mariners home to his house, who hauing endured much misery at sea, did there dye, and in recompence of their kinde entertainment, they did amply informe their host, whereabout these lands lay, and with what windes a man might saile thither. Columbus being a man of a quick apprehension, and great courage, came to King John of Portugall, hoping to perswade him to undertake that Navigation, offering him his seruice therein, and after that to King Henry the seauenth of England; in the end to Don Henriques de Guzman Duke of Medina Sidonia, and to Don Lewis de la Cerde Duke of Medina Celi, who held commodious Hauens in Castile, beseeching them to ayde him in so worthy an enterprize: but all his trauaile was to no purpose, for they esteemed him as an Italian, who by bragges and vaunts of matters which hee knew not, endeouored to relieue his pouerty. Now this year hee came to Court with letters from Frier John Peres de Marchena, one excellently learned in all humane learning, who dwelt at Ruida, which gaue good testimony of Columbus skill, yet all this was to small purpose: and without the assistance of Alphonso de Quintanilla, hee was at the point to haue giuen ouer all: Quintanilla hauing brought him to his house, and well founded him, gaue him access to the Cardinall of Spaine, and after that, to diuerse of the Kings speciall fauourites, by whose meanes hee was sundry times heard discourse, in so much as his speech beganne to please, and the Kings promised him ayde and employment for the discouerie of a new world, so soone as the warres of Granada were ended: In this manner Columbus, full of hope and courage, did constantly pursue, for the space of fixe whole yeares, the effects of the Kings promise, till at last it was performed. Hee was a man firme and constant in what hee undertooke, strong and able in trauaile, seuer, and chollerick, bigge of limbes and stature, redde faced and full of pimples.

The

A The Court lying at Salamanca, the Kings caused the Court of Chancerie to remooue from Vailladolid into their owne pallace there, which was the Bishops house, to the end they might be eye-witneses, after what manner they ended suites, and did administer iustice, in regard many complaints were made of them. And being aduertised that the Marshall Don Pero d' Ayala had caused a Scriueners head to be cut off, who was one of his tenants, for giuing his mother Donna Maria, with whom hee was at strife, a coppie of his fathers will, they sent to take him prisoner, and to seize vpon his goods.

Princesse core full of iustice.

When he was brought to Court, the Constable, who was allyed vnto him, (for hee had married a Neece of his, daughter to the Earle of Miranda) would haue departed, saying, that he would not be present at the iudgement of one so neere vnto him: but the Queene assuring the Constable, that the Marshall should not bee touched neither in life nor member, stayed him there. The controuersie betwixt the mother and the sonne, was referred to the Kings Councell, as also the difference betwixt the Duke of Medina Sidonia, and the Earle of Alua de Lista, about the Earldome of Niebla, which the Earle said did belong vnto him in right of his mother, which controuersie remaines at this day vndecided. The countrey of Biscay being at this time somewhat troubled, in regard the Kings Officers did seeme to inroach vpon their priuiledges, the Licenciate Garcy Lopes of Chincilla, one of the Kings Councell, was sent thither, who did iustice, and reformed many matters: but he could neuer obtaine of the people, that the Bishops should come into the countrey to visit the Churches, who sayd, that it was against their priuiledges. In regard of the warre against the Moores great leaues of souldiers were made as well in Biscay, Alaua, Guipulcoa, Asturia's, as Galicia, who marched into Andalusia towards Cordoua.

Bishops banished from Biscay.

The state of the Moores, which was the other day vnited, became on a sudden diuided; it being an impossible matter for two Soueraignes to commaund in one country. King Muley Boabdellin el Zagal, which possessed the citie of Granada, with a great part of the countrey, began a fresh to pursue his Nephew Mahomet the Little; putting all those Moores to death which tooke his part, confiscating the goods of such as he could catch: and he laboured by all meanes to procure King Mahomet death by poyson or otherwise, who after the taking of Loxa, had withdrawne himselfe into the towne of Velez the white. To that place there came to him a very dangerous Ambassage from his vncle Muley, saying to treat of peace and concord, with too great submissions, the better to disguise his intent, which was to kill Mahomet, and the Ambassadors had expresse charge so to do, who brought him some poysoned presents, to the end that if they failed in the execution of the one, yet the other might take effect. King Mahomet being aduertised by his friends of the Ambassadors intents, would by no meanes heare or see them, nor yet receiue their gifts, but sent them word to tell his vncle Muley Boabdellin, that he was sufficiently warned of his proceedings, and that he would accept of no other conditions from him, but onely to throw him out of the royall throne of Granada, which was his true inheritance, and did in no sort belong vnto him, who was a tyrant and a murderer of the Princes of his blood, for the which he did hope shortly to chaunstise him, and to cut off his head.

Moores.

Now was King Mahomet ayded and assisted by the commandement of the kings of Castile, by John de Benauides, Gouverneur of Lorcia, and by Don Frederick of Toledo, Gouverneur of the new-conquered countreys, and other Christian Captaines, who did often enter into the lands and territories of Granada, and were sundry times constrained to beate backe the enemies, and to defend their owne gouernements from their inuasions. This assistance notwithstanding, King Mahomet the Little was euill intreated by the contrarie partie, dispossessed almost of all, and brought into despayre, by which he was driuen to a marueilous hazard, either to lose all, or winne all: for hee went secretly to Granada, not hauing any intelligence there, and arriuing in the night at the gate of the Albaycin, he called to the guards, by whom he was knowne and brought in, hauing but foure or foue men in his company: there he assembled diuers of the inhabitants of the Albaycin, and did so well lay open the tyrannies and wrongs which King Muley his vncle had done to him, and did so perswade them by forcible reasons to fauour his right to the Crowne

Resolute enterprise of K. Mahomet
the Little.

Great felition in Granada.

Crowne of Granado, as euery one beeing mouued with pittie towards him, and rage A against the tyrant, did take armes in his behalfe, and raised a great tumult in the City, crying out, that Mahomet was lawfull King. In the morning King Muley Boabdellin, who lay in the Forte of Alhambra, vnderstanding that his Nephew had seized on the Albaycin, caused his people to arme themselves, and came forth into the City, where hee likewise had many partakers, where this cursed nation made such hauock and spoile one vpon another, as imagining the streetes not to bee spacious enough for their furie, they went forth into the fields, and fought a fierce combate, wherein dyed multitudes of men, and then returning euery one into his owne Forte, they renewed the skirmishes and assaults a freth: but Mahomet the little, perceiuing his party to be the weaker, hee B sent to Don Frederick de Toledo, eldest sonne to the Duke of Alua, who was Generall of the Christians in the next garrisons, to entreate ayde and succour from him. Don Frederick who was wife and discreet, gathered together all the forces hee could, and came neere to Granado, but would by no meanes enter into it, to meete whom King Mahomet sent a Moore Captaine named Aben-Comix with certaine troopes of horse, hee himselfe remaining in the City, fortifying himselfe in certaine places. King Muley vnderstanding of Don Fredericks comming, sent to offer him battaile, but hee would not accept thereof, saying, that the Moores feigned to haue quarrels among themselves, by that meanes to entrappe him and his soldours, and to enclose them: wherefore keeping his forces in good order without stirring, hee placed the Moores horsemen C ledde by Aben-comix in the Front to sustaine the enemies skirmishes, which were furious and bloody. King Muley Boabdellin el Zagal, perceiuing that the Christians kept themselves in order, and that by no meanes they would come to battaile, hee did re-enter the City, and began to assaile the Albaycin, which was courageously defended, in regarde that Don Frederick stayed more then an houre after, in order of battaile before the City: but afterward hee returned into his Fort, leaving the Moores to murder one another; and because hee knew that vpon Mahomet the lirtles victory, King Fer- dinands and Queen Isabells content and profit did depend, hee sent him certaine Harquebuziers vnder the conduct of Ferdinand Aluarez Gouvernour of Colmera, by whose valour the Albaycin held out, and the assaults and combates continued fifty dayes after, D King Boabdellins people beeing vexed within by King Mahomet, and abroad, by the Christians of the next garrisons.

Castile.

Whilest these troubles continued in Granado betwixt the two factions, King Fer- dinand hauing assembled and reuiued the troopes, which from all parts were arriued at Cordoua, hee went to field with an Armie of twenty thousand horse, as well men at Armes, as Genets, and of fifty thousand foote: the chiefe Commanders were the Maisters of Saint James and Alcantara, the Duke of Nagera, the Marquis of Cales, and Villena, the Earles of Benaucnt, Vregna, Cabra, Oropeza, Feria, Cituentes, Osorno, Medellin, and Ribaden. Don Alphonso d' Aguilar, the Treasurer of Calatrava, with the Captaines generall of the Frontiers of Andaluzia and Murcia. Those which sent their forces thither, were the Cardinall of Spaine Archbishop of Toledo, the Archbishop of Siuiil, the Bishops of Burgos and Cuenca, the Dukes of Medina Sidonia, Alua, Playsance, Medina Celt, and Albuquerque, the maister of Calatrava, the Marquis of Astorga, and Aguilera, the Earles of Castro, Gragna, Saint Steeuens, Miranda, Nieua, Priego, Fuentisilla, Alua de Lissa, Montanaga, the Constable, the great Commanders of Calatraua and Leon, with other Lords and Knights of Castile. There came likewise from Arra-gon diuers great Lords, among whom was Don Phillip of Nauarre, bastard sonne to the late Prince Charles of Viana, whom King Ferdinand his Vncle had newly made maister of the order of Montela in the Realme of Valentia, hauing obtained it of the Pope, and deposed Philip Boyll from the same dignity, who had bene elected maister thereof con-uentually. Don Lewis Borja Duke of Gandia was likewise there, with many others of Arragon, Valentia, Sicill and Sardinia. With these great forces they undertooke to goe and besiege Malaga, but first of all it was thought fit to remooue all lets and impediments that Velez Malaga might do vnto them, the which place was besieged in April 1487.
And the king being delirious to lodge certaine companies of footmen vpon a rising hill, which

1487.
Velez Malaga
besieged.

A which did greatly import the safteie of the armie, the Moores making a furious salley foorth of the cittie, did beate them from thence, and the King was the same time armed with a Cuirasse, his sword in his hand, exposing himselfe that day to the enemies ar-rowes and shot, which fell round about him as thicke as haile, beeing in great danger of his person: neuerthelesse his people by his presence were encouraged, and forced the Moores to turne their backs, and to shut themselves into the towne.

Albeit, that this valour of the kings be prayse-worthie, and highly to bee extolled as a singular example, yet notwithstanding it may be reprobued, in regard of the consequence of a mischiefe which might haue happened, therefore they besought him, no more to hazard his person in such dangerous attempts. The next day they assailed the suburbs, where the Moores had barricadoed themselves, who defended it for the space of sixe whole houres with such obstinacie, as the Christians could not get one foote of ground from them, vntill that the Duke of Nagera, and the Earle of Benaucnt came with fresh succours, who caused the enemies to leaue the place, but to the cost of diuers: for Nugno
d' Aquila, and Don Martin of Acugna were slayne there, Don Carlo of Gueuara, Garcy Lazo de la Vega, Fernando de Vega, Iohn de Merlo, with diuers other men of note were hurt. The Artillerie was not yet come to the campe, therefore King Fernand caused di-uers forts to be made against the citie, wherein he lodged diuers companies of souldiers, and being well acquainted with the Moores pollicies, he placed in all the wayes that led to the campe, in the mountains and vallies, which might any way be an hinderance to the armie, diuers watches and sentinels, with places for them to retire vnto, which were well furnished and defended by valiant souldiers, vpon which occasions, sundrie profitable things were ordained necessarie for martiall discipline, the Moores neuer ceasing from comming downe from the Mountaines, and making many enterprises vpon the armie which they kept in continuall alarme.

King Muley Boabdellin on the other side, beeing importuned by the Affricane Captaines, and old Moores of Granado to succor Velez Malaga, he went to field with great numbers of horse and foote, and passing thorough sharpe and narrow places, hee sent part of his forces from Bentomix against the Master of Alcantara, who conducted the artillerie; but hauing intelligence, that king Fernand had sent the great Commander of Leon for his conuoy, he called backe the Moores, and with all his forces hee beganne the very same night to come downe from the hilles, and presented himselfe in order of battell in the view of the Christian armie, making shew as if they would succour the besieged, or else dye in fight. This sudden and vnlookt-for arriuall of the enemies, made di-uers at their wits end, and did in a manner terrifie them: wherefore it behooued king Fernand to vse his best skill and discretion, so to order matters, as he might not receiue a disgrace: but Don Diego Hurtado of Mendoza, brother to the Cardinall of Spaine, a braue and resolute knight, beeing in the fore-ward with the Cardinals forces, did put them out of feare: for he gallantly opposed himselfe against the front of the Moores bat-tallions, and made them to stand still. They perceiuing the Christians valour and boldnesse, did dislodge by breake of day, like runaways in such amazement, as many of them flung away their weapons and armor, to be the lighter to run. This notwithstanding, the king would not be ouer confident, but caused euery man to stand still in his order the whole day long and the night following, vntill he had certaine notice that the Moores sight was not fained but true.

King Muley Boabdellin by this shamefull retreat lost his reputation amongst his own people, so as they beganne to detest him, and to incline to his aduersarie Mahomet the Little. This Moorish armie did disperse it selfe into sundrie places, and Muley with-drew himselfe to Alnuecar, and then to Almerie, from whence he went to Guadix. By this disgrace of his, King Mahomet the Little found meanes to recover the Alhambra, and all the strong places of the Cittie, where hee cut off the heads of foure Moorish knights of the noble family of Aben Carrax, because they had opposed themselves against him at his returne from prison. By this meanes he remayned King of Granado alone, and making vse of the king of Castiles friendship, hee obtained two truces for his vassals, and sufferance to goe and trafficke in their dominions, and to buy all kind of merchandizes, armor,

Shamefull retreate of the Moores.Moores.
Muley Boabdellin
retreated, & Mahomet the Little recovered by the Granadins.

armor, and victuals excepted: and hee did not onely obtaine it for those Moores, A which were now obedient vnto him, but for all those that would submit themselves to his Crowne hereafter, and besides that, souldiers, artillerie, and all other prouision to pursue his Vncle, and to annoy those places which were vnder his subiection, publishing declaratorie letters of his loue and good will towards all such as within fixe moneths after would submit themselves to him, and threatening grieuous punishment to the obstinate and rebellious.

Castille.

The Moores within Velez Malaga hauing scene the flight of their King Muley Boabdellin el Zagal were out of all hope to receiue any succour from him, and fearing that as soone as the artillerie was come, they should be enforced to yeeld, they compounded by the meanes of the Earle of Cifuentes, and yeelded vp the place, their liues and goods B beeing saued, their victuals and armor excepted: and they had licence to depart into Africke, or else where, or if it pleased them, they might remaine in Castile. The towne of Benthomix followed the example of Velez Malaga, and the gouernement thereof was giuen to Pietro Navarro, who from a poore youth, (although a gentleman) and from being a mariner, as it is reported, attained to the degree of a Captaine, and afterward became one of the most famous men of his time, as well in the warres of Spaine as Italy, and was created Earle of Albeto. The towne of Comares, and diuers other Castles of the Countrey called las Alpuxares, hearing of the Kings of Castiles good successe, did at the first summons without any resistance submit themselves to their obedience, C paying the same tribute to them which they did vse to pay to the Moore kings; and vpon other conditions which were imposed vpon them, to the end to be the better assured of them, till such time as they did become Mudejares, whereby they might liue in their vain superstition. The gouernement of Velez Malaga was giuen to the great Commander Don Gutiere de Cardagna, Superintendent or high Treasurer to the Kings.

Malaga besieged.

The neighbour Countries beeing thus cleaned of the enemies places of retreat, the D armie marched to the seage of Malaga, a cittie, as hath beene sayd, exceeding strong, and well provided of men, victuals, and all other necessities: within the which a valiant Captaine called Hali Dmax, had the command of diuers valiant Moores, as well of the Realme of Granada, as of Africane Gomerres, but vnderneath a Generall, or Alcayde major, who was as Consable to the King el Zagal, whose name was Amir-zeli, who was then at Guadix, from whence the King made warre vpon his Nephew, and from thence, at the earnest entreatie of his subiects, hee intended to succour Malaga, if neede were; which the Kings of Castile sent to summon, promising libertie to the Moores, and assurance of their liues and goods: but they answered that their king had placed them there, not to giue the towne to the Kings of Castile, but valiantly to defend it, whereof they meant to shew sufficient proofes.

This answer beeing made, they consulted whether it were best to batter it, or else to E beseege it a farre off, cutting off their victuals, and annoying them by the neighbour garisons, vntill they were enforced to yeeld: the king remained firme in his opinion, which was to beseege it roundly neere hand, notwithstanding, that they prayed him to consider the great strength thereof, as well by nature as by art: for the cittie of Malaga stand vpon a plaine on the sea side, which beates vpon the walles, wherewith it is well rounded: and it was flanked with strong towers according to those times, hauing two Castles seated vpon a little hill, one of which is called Alcapaua, and the other Gibraltar, which is the highest of the two, whereunto men go from the one to the other, by a way about fixe foute broad, betwixt two great walles, wherewith it was couered, and these two fortresses were likewise compassed with strong walls and high towers, furnished with Artillerie, engines of defence, and great numbers of valiant souldiers, who were all of them determined rather to dye then to yeeld.

Now for the more easie and commodious lodging of the armie, it was needfull to winne a little hill, seated a stones cast from the fort of Gibraltar, betwixt the same and an high hill: there the Moores made great resistance, notwithstanding it was wonne, and foureene thousand footmen, and fixe and twenty hundred horse were placed there, vnder the command of the Marquis of Cales: the next day after, they disposed the quarters

A ters round about the towne: the Marquis had the first, with whome were Don Gutiere of Sotomajor, Don Aluaro Baçan, Fernand de Vega, and the Pourveyor of Villafrañca, Don Pedro Vaca, and Garçy Brauo Captaine of Atiença, with other Capraines and Knights, namely, Charles Arellan, Hernand Carillo, Don Francisco of Bouadilla, Don Diego Lopes d Ayala, George de Veteta, Gouernour of Soria, and Michel d Abassa. The next quarter belonged to Don Diego Fernand of Cordoua, hauing charge of the forces of the Dukes of Albuquerque, and of Medina Sidonia, and so consequently euery man had his quarter disposed to him round about the cittie, the Earle of Cifuentes, Captaine of the men of Siuill, Don Lorenzo Snares Figueroa, Earle of Feria, and Don Gutiere of Padilla, Treasurer of Calatraua with the forces of Eccia, those of the Earle of Benauent, those of Pero Carillo of Albornos, and of the Arch-bishop of Siuill, then the companies of the Earle of Vregna, those of Don Alphonso of Aguilar, of the Duke of Nagera, of Don Fredericke of Toledo, of John Aluarez, and of Alphonso Osorio: Don Diego Hurtado of Mendoza followed after with the forces of the Cardinall his brother, the Earle of Cabra, the great Commander of Leon, with the men of Cordoua, those of Don Garçy Lopes of Padilla, Master of Calatraua, of Don Antonio of Fonseca, of Antonio d Aguilar, of Don Alphonso of Cardagna, Master of Saint Iames, those of Don Lewis Fernand Porro Carrero Lord of Palma, and of Don John of Estuniga Master of Alcantara.

Malaga beeing thus beseege, the Kings tent was knowne by the Moores, who bestowed many cannon shot vpon it from the cittie, so as they were constrained to remove it behind a little hil. The batterie planted to the most conuenient places was great and furious from the Marquis of Cales quarter against the Castle of Gibraltar, the which in many places was pierced and ouerthrowne in many places, and as soone repayed by the Moores. The Marquis hauing taken away the towers which did offend him, aduanced his lodging a stones cast neerer to the fort, but hee was constrained to returne to his former quarter by the continuall sallies which the Moores made vpon him and his people, fighting with such furie, as they came to the poynyard, and slue the Captaine of Atiença, and Inigo Lopes of Medran, Lord of Catiagnillas, Gabriel of Sotomajor, and other valiant men, besides diuers hurt, in the number of whome was the Marquis, who D was shot into the arme with an arrow, for the Moores fought from a place of great aduantage. At this seage, two great shippes of warre arrived on the coast of Malaga, commanded by Don Ladron de Gueuara sent from Flanders by Maximilian of Austria king of the Romaines, husband to the heire of Bourgondie, and father to Philip which was sonne-in-law to the Kings of Castile, who for the seruice of this warre did send these two vessels laden with diuers peeces of brasse Ordonance, and barrells of powder, bels for the use of the Churches of the places newly conquered, great store of mettrall, with workmen to worke it, with other instruments and things necessarie for the warre, beeing desirous for his part to partake in some sort the honour of this great conquest which his posteritie enioyeth at this day. A tower of the cittie beeing wonne with great toyle and effusion of blood, was quickly recovered againe by the Moores, who grew more obstinate in their E defence, by meanes of a false rumor raised by certaine cowards of the campe, which desired to returne home againe, who sayd, that Queene Isabella did sollicite the King her husband to raise his seage, because the plague was within and about diuers places of the Cittie, and in this hope the Barbarians did valiantly resist all assaults. The King to let them vnderstand, that his intent was otherwise, sent for the Queene to come to the campe, who was accompanied thither by great numbers of voluntarie Knights: and then hee sent word to the beseege, that if they would yeeld, he would vse them gently as hee had done others, if not, he gaue them to vnderstand, that he would not depart thence, till the cittie were taken, and that then they should expect nothing but rigor; to the which they F made no answer, but did straightly commaund that not any one amongst them should dare, vpon paine of life, to talke of any agreement or composition with the kings of Castile: and they did indeed kill diuers vpon the same occasion, being resolved to hold out till their last breath, the which did greatly prolong the seage, where powder beginning to fayle, the gallies were sent to Valencia, Barcelona, yea into Sicill, which brought thither great quantitie.

The Emperor Maximilian sends Artillery and powder from Flanders to the king of Castile.

The King of Portugall beeing entreated to send some thither likewise, did it willingly, A & with great speed. There was no part of the day almost, which was free from skirmishes, where many men of either side dyed daily: wherefore certaine Moores of the Cittie bee-ing displeased with the losse of their friends, and fore-seeing the danger whereinto they were likely to fall, yet not daring to speake of composition, did secretly send a messenger to the campe, to tell king Fernand, that if he would promise to saue their liues and goods, they would giue him entrance, whereunto the king consented, and as this Moore returned, he was taken by certaine Gomeres of Affricke, who assayed him with their swords in such sort, as he returning hurt to the campe, dyed there, and so the treaty ended.
As the land skirmishes were continuall, so were those at sea, where the armie of Castile B did hinder, as much as in them lay, any entrance of comming forth of the cittie, and to redresse the sallies by land, there were by the diligence of Garcy Lazo de la Vega, John d'Es- piniga, and Diego of Tayde, diuers forts made, and great trenches drawne, where diuers great Corps de gard were placed, so as the Moores in that manner shutte in, could not do so much hurt, nor vex the armie as before it had done, the Moores beeing neuer-thelesse constant in their resolution to hold out to the last man, notwithstanding that viſtualls did greatly decrease in the cittie: for they were aduertised by diuers traitors of the campe of what fouer was done there good or bad, and oftentimes they told them, that which was false, in such sort as they were not discouraged, but did beleue, that the C king and Queene would shortly bee constrained to depart thence, and there were some that left the cittie, vnder color of yeelding themselves to the King, and to become Christians, who falsely reported, that there was great and incredible abundance of viſtualls, and all other necessities in the cittie, to the end thereby to cause the Christians to leaue the sege, the which report did put the King and his Councell into a studie, whether they should cease the batteries and assaults, and keepe the sege by sea with certaine gallies, or else by land with certaine forts to starue them by little and little: but weighing the nature of that nation, who liue with so little meate, as it is to be wondered at, this counsell was reiected as vnfruitfull, wherefore the batteries were renewed, and to that end diuers artificiall engines were made of excellent inuention, and mynes were wrought in diuers D places, which beeing discovered by the industrious and vigilant Moores, were cause of the death of a great number of braue souldiers. King Boabdillinel Zagal beeing daily sollicit to succour Malaga, went forth of Guadix, with certaine troupes of horse and foote, but beeing met and encountered by the army of his nephew Mahomet, which came forth of Granado for the same purpose, hee was vanquished and put to flight, whereof King Fernand had speedie intelligence, to his great contentment. Within the besieged cittie were certaine Moores that were esteemed holy men, who with mad and idle prattle went about to encourage the souldiers, saying, that the dead did greatly desire to rise againe, for to helpe them to driue the Christians thence, with other such like words, which were of great force to animate that superstitious race. There arriued at the campe fresh supplies of horse and foote from Arragon, Valencia, and Cattalonia, E which did much encourage the assaillants, who had this aduantage, not to want viſtualls.
The K. of Tremessen being aduertised by the Moores which daily past into Affricke vnder the Kings safe conduct of their great good successe in those warres of Granado, sent his Ambassadors to them with rich presents, who did request their friendship and protection, and permission for their Kings subiects to saile vpon the seas without hurt or feare of the Spanish gallies, the which was graunted them, so as the King their maister did not giue ayde and assistance to those of Malaga, and other Moores of Granado their enemies.
Matters standing at a stay, a certaine Moore borne at Tunis, leading a solitarie life neere to Guadix, called Abraham Alguerri, a man of a low stature, and aged, began to preach how that their Prophet Mahomet had reuealed to him, that if Malaga were this one time releued, it should neuer more be in danger to be taken: therefore vnder the conduct of F this Hermite, who was reputed a holy man, foure hundred horsemen did hazard to enter the towne, who making way thorough the guards and trenches of the campe, two hundred of them passed into the cittie, and the rest of them were cut in peeces.

The Hermite in the meane time had withdrawne himselfe aside, and looking as if hee had

The Arabians
liue with a little.

A had beene rauished in spirit, was at his prayers in great deuotion: the Christian souldiors which pursued the Moores did finde him, and brought him before the Marquis of Cales, who askt him what he was, hee made answer that hee was a holy man, vnto whom God reuealed his great secrets, which should happen in that sege, and end by the taking of Malaga, which the number of seauen; and what signifies seauen sayd the Marquis, are they yeares or moneths? they are neither yeares nor moneths, quoth the Hermit but weekes, daies, or howers, but enquire no farther of mee, for Ala (that is God) hath commanded mee, to tell the rest in secret to the King and Queene, and to none others. The Marquis although hee made a iest of that hee heard the Moore say, B did neuerthelesse send him to the King, by a reuolted Moore; for hee would not leaue his owne quarter, especially so soone after the fight: when hee arriued, the King, was a sleepe, and the Queene taking no delight to behold such manner of foolish people, hee was brought into a tent, where Don Beatriz de Bouadilla was in talke with Don Aluaro, Son to the Duke of Bragança who was fled from Portugall, and Ruy Lopez de Toledo the Queenes Treasurer. The Marchiones looking vpon this old Hermit, bad them giue him some meate: hee seeing her to bee richly appattelled, and they that were with her in like manner, asked those that were next him, if it was the King, and Queene, they to mocke him, told him it was they. Then the villaine, who of purpose came from his cell with an intent to kill them, layd hand vpon a short Cimeter, that hee wore vnder his habit, and C therewith gaue Don Aluaro, such a stroake vpon the head, as he had well neere flaine him; and being ready to doe as much to the Marquis; the Treasurer there present did hold him backe, and the rest runne out of the tent, yet at the noyse diuers of the Marquis ser-uants, came running in and hewed the wicked Hermit in peeces. The King beeing awake and hearing what was done, did greatly wonder at his boldnesse, and was afterward better guarded. The peeces of the Moores body, were with engines throwne into the City, in reuenge whereof the Moors did kill a Christian prisoner, who was a man of note, and setting him vpon an asse, they draue it towards the campe, where at the same instant Don Henriques de Guzman, Duke of Medina Sidonia with his trayne did arriue, who besides the supply of souldiours, which hee brought, did lend the King twenty thou-D sand golden doubles, and the very day of his comming, more then a hundred shippes lo-den with viſtualls and munition did arriue in the roade neere to Malaga, where with the army was greatly refreshed, and the Duke highly honored and esteemed, for such a seruice: Soone after, there arriued other succors from the Duke of Infantazgo. The Moores being againe summoned to yeeld, and not to attend the miseries, which a victory gotten by force doth bring with it, being still obstinate, and hauing notice of certaine disca-ses in the campe, they would by no means harken there-vnto: wherefore they were assayled a fresh, and did as valiantly defend themselves, killing many Christians. The citty beeing in great want of viſtualls, the Moores did already beginne to eate roasted skins, and other such like things, but they had still some idle Prophet or other which con-E firmed them in there obstinacy: yet notwithstanding, two of the cheefest Moores in the citty, whose names were Amet, Aben-Amar, and Ali Dudux, and with them an Alfaqui called Abraham Alharis; with diuers Marchants, officers, and men of quality, being ioyned together, came and besought the gouernour to take some order, for the people of the City, which dyed for hunger, who without any hope of releefe, could not auoyd the enemies rigor, and that hee needed not to thinke it a disgrace to him to yeeld the citty of Malaga, seeing that other places as strong as it in the realme of Granado had yeelded to the Christians: if hee thought to better their estate by a battayle, they wist him to march forth to the fight, for they were not able any longer to liue, in so great necessity: but all this serued to no purpose. The King perceauinge the obstinacy of F this wretched people, caused certaine peeces of ordonance to bee bent against the towers of the bridge, the first of which was wonne by assault, Francisco Ramiers of Madrid Captaine of the artillery, hastning and increasing the battery to prepare entrance for the souldiours was by the king made knight the same day for his good seruice. The besieged being brought to the last dispaire, a great troupe of horse and foote animated by one of their Prophets, made a furious sally vpon the quarters of the masters of Saint Iames, and Alcantara, where at the beginning they caused great disorder comming vnlookt for, but

A Mahometan
Hermitee
murderer.

Superstitions
Moores.

Kkkk

but at the last they were repulsed and beaten back with great slaughter, and the Moore A Prophet was the first man that was slain. By this overthrow the Alcaide or Gouvernor being excused from making any more resistance, gaue the inhabitants leaue to capitulate as well as they could with the Kings of Castile: wherefore they sent Amet-Aben-Amat, and Ali Dudux, and three other principall Moores to the Campe, who besought the Kings to receiue them for Mudejares or vassals, and to giue to them and the rest of the Citizens, the towne of Coin to dwell in, and to permit those that would, to passe into Affrick with their goods: the King told them that the great Commander of Leon should make them an answer, the which was, that for as much as the extremity of hunger had constrained them to yeeld, and not any good will to the Kings, it behooued them to yeeld to their mercy. Those of the towne hauing vnderstood the Kings resolution by their deputies, did say, that in regarde they went about to take away the liberty of their persons, they were resolved to hang five hundred Christian prisoners on the walls, and then to come forth every man with his sword in hand, and to dye fighting: the King sent them word that if they did put one Christian to death, hee would without any mercy, put them all to the edge of the sword. Those of Malaga once againe sent fouretee Moore of euery quarter of their City to the Campe, who brought with them a writing which they shewed for an example of the deceased Kings of Castiles clemencie vnto the subuigated Moores, and with great humillity they begged for mercy. Diuers of the Lords and Captaines were of opinion to put all that raskally obstinate nation to death, C who were enemies to the name of a Christian: but the Queenes more iust and Christian-like opinion was followed, which was to saue all their liues. Then the King wrote back to them, that their liues were onely granted, and no more: whereat the Moores being much astonied, were at strife amongst themselves, some being of opinion to make a desperate sally vpon the Christians with their weapons, and to set fire on the City, and all the wealth thereof, following the examples of certaine townes of Spaine in antient times; but they who thought it better to become slaues, did preuaile. Thus was the City of Malaga yeilded: the great Commander of Leon entring first into it with his troops in armes, by means of hostages, who seized vpon the City, towers and Fortes thereof, and hauing disarmed the Moores of all their weapons and munitions, all people D of both sexes and of all ages were assembled in the two base Courts of the Castle of Alcaçauo, where most lamentable cries of Morish men and women were heard, lamenting their liberty, and goodly City lost, with their Fortes, Towers and Castles, which could not defend her Cittizens liues, nor giue them buriall after their death. Among the multitude, twelue renegades Christians were found, who serued as spies for the Moores, who were stricken thorow with Darts, and so slaine: the Christian prisoners were deliuered and sent home to their houses, fauoured and rewarded by the Kings. Two other Sea townes neere to Malaga, were likewise taken, and the Moores made slaues, by Pedro de Vera whom the King had sent thither.

After that all things were surely possessed by the Christians in Malaga, the Bishops E and Clergie made their entrance, who performed the accustomed ceremonies, purifications, dedications, with such other solemnities, as wee haue heretofore written: and the Kings hauing at the same time received a Bull from Pope Innocent, by the which hee granted them and their successors, authority to name and appoint Bishops and other Ecclesiasticall dignities needfull in the Realme of Granada, it was thought fit to restore the Bishops: so to the City of Malaga, as it had bene in times past, and Don Pedro de Toledo was chosen Bishop of the same, who was a Channon of Siuill, a man of great learning and merit, who was confirmed therein by the Pope, vnto whom the Kings sent a hundred Moores Gomerers of Affrick for a present, and to Queene Isabe of Naples the Kings sister, fifty Morish maides, and thirty to the Queene of Portugall: of all the other slaues, the third part of them was diuided among the Lords, Knights, Gentlemen, and Captaines of the Campe: an other third part was imployed for the redemption and exchange of Christian Captines: and an other third part remained to the Kings, towards their great costs and charges sustained in that siege, the which lasted three moneths and one day, which was the eighteenth of August this yeare 1487.

The

A The order and gouernment of the Cittie being disposed, the commaund thereof was giuen to Don Garcia Fernandes Manrique, who had bene Corrigidor of Cordoua. The Iudges, Rectors, and Iurates, with other Officers of iustice, being established, the goods were distributed to such as were receiued for new inhabitants, who were provided of good and wholesome lawes, though fit and necessarie for those times.

These matters with others being dispatched, the King and Queene returned victorious and triumphant to Cordoua, where they were no sooner arrived, but they began to thinke vpon necessarie prouisions for the next yeares warre: for, seeing they had had so happy successe alreadie, they were very loth to giue it ouer by any interruption whatsoever.

B In the interim of these great busineses, the strifes of diuers Arragonois did still trouble the Kings eares, for that in regard of his long absence, all appeales coming before the Magistrate, whom they call Iustice of Arragon, all euident wrongs, excesses, and outrages committed by the great ones, were with partialitie drawne out in length. The Kings left Cordoua and came to Sarragossa, where they assembled the Estates to redresse those insolencies which were complained of. The Estates being perswaded by the Vice-chancellor of the Kingdome, whom the King had appoynted to speake vnto them, did relinquish diuers poynts of their pretended rights and liberties, and did suffer many things to be reformed, and namely, they were content to establish the Courts of iustice of the Hermandades or brotherhoods, after the manner of Castile, a most profitable and C necessarie matter for the whole cuntry, and did besides that obtaine great subsidies of money for the King towards the wars of Granada. And because the Inquisition brought great profite to the Kings coffers in Castile, of the goods of the Iewes and Moores, which were reuolted to their foolish superstitions: it was decreed, that like proceeding should be vsed against them in Arragon, and Iudges appointed to make their definitiue sentence. One of the sayd Commissioners had like to haue bene slayne, by those manner of people, on a morning in the Church of Sarragossa, which gaue them occasion to enquire more diligently of such as were faulty: wherein, choller, greedinesse of gaine, and desire to fill the kings coffers, made them greatly to exceed, the which the practise of D their successors at this day can very well witnesse: the obstinate were burned, and those which did reconcile themselves, or were in any fault at all, were fleeced to the very quick.

The Kings passing into the Realme of Valencia, which was troubled with the same diseases, did call the Estates to Orihucla, where they made diuers goodly Edicts. Whilst the Court lay at Valencia, there entred into Cattalonia an Ambassador from the French king Charles the eighth, sent to King Fernand, who sent to meete him, and to let him vnderstand, that vlesse he brought with him the restitution of the Earledome of Rossillon, he might returne from whence hee came, and for ought that the Ambassadour could say or do, he could not be suffered to come to Valencia, but was enforced to returne without being heard or seene. King Charles at the same time was troubled with ciuill warres E against the Duke of Orleance, Duke Francis of Brittain, and the Lord of Albret, who was dispossessed of his lands, father to John of Albret who was king of Nauarre, and with others.

Hermandades
in Arragon.
Inquisition in Arragon.

King Fernand
refuseth to heare or see the French Ambassadour.

Kkkk 2

John

The City of Malaga yeeld-
ed.

Don Pedro de
Toledo Bishop of Malaga.

John of Albret, and Katherine of Nauarre, Kings of Nauarre, accounted for the 35. in the order of the Kings.

Nauarre.

John Vicount of Narbonne quarrells for the Earledome of Foix, and Saigneary of Bearn.

JOHN of Albret, the sonne of Alain, of whom we haue made mention heretofore, was married to Catherine the heire of Nauarre: but before we come to the declaration thereof, it shall be needfull to speake of the state wherein the late King Francis Phœbus left the succession to his sister Katherine who reigned after him. John, Vicount of Narbone, vnkle B to her, and to the deceased King, did forth-with quarrell with the Lords of Foix and Bearn, saying, that for those lands, lying vpon the limits of the Realme of France, where women do not succeed, that Queene Catherine his Neece was incapable of enioying them, and therefore shee ought to content her selfe with her inheritance of Nauarre, which is gouerned by other lawes, and to leaue those two Lordships to him. Vpon this strife great warre arose betwixt the parties the Vicount of Narbonne, beeing fauoured by Iasper of Villemur, Seneshall of Foix, and the Lord of Calmont, John of Castel Verdin, and others; who the year 1484. leading with them forces of horse and foot, tooke, through the trecherie of one called Romengas, the towne of Maçeres, and then they seized on Monthault, and in the end they came to assaile Pamiers, where the citizens would willingly haue receiued the Vicount, whom they acknowledged to be a son of the house of Foix, but not his souldiers, whereat the Vicount being enraged, went to S. Antonies, which is the Cathedral church, and the Bishops place of residence, from whence he draue away Paschal, who was Bishop and possessor thereof, and enthronized Mathew Artigalu therein, who pretended and pleaded the sayd Bishopricke against the other: the Vicount moreover, doing his best to enter into Pamiers, but the inhabitants persisting in their resistance, he was constrained to retire to Maçeres, from which place he continued the war against his Neece, and the princeesse Magdalen her mother, who sent in the year 1485. John of Lautrec to keepe and defend the countrey of Foix with diuers troupes leauied in Bearn, and in the Earledome of Bigorre, as also to recouer that which John of Foix Vicount had vsurped. Lautrec marching on to execute his commission, was preuented by the way by Raymond Lordat, Lord of Rodel, who intreated him, from those of Sauardun, who some few dayes before had yeilded to the Vicount, to pardon them, in regard they did it to auoyd the present danger, and to appease the Vicounts furie, against whom they were not strong enough to resist, they being desirous with all their hearts to serue queene Catherine their naturall Princeesse, and that if her pleasure were to receiue them, they would obey her, and most willingly would cast off the Vicounts yoke: therefore the Lord of Rodell intreated him to make all the hast he could to Sauardun, assuring him that hee should be kindly welcomed, and let into the towne. Lautrec accepting this offer marched thither, and arriued at the bridge gate, at the same instant, when as the Vicount of Narbone, who was aduertised of all their practises entred at another gate called Vlmet. These two Lords being met together in this sort, did in stead of assailing one another, performe offices of complement, and they fell into discourse of peace, which grew to this conclusion, that John of Foix should enioy Sauardun, Maçeres, Monthault, and S. Espartio, with the church of S. Anthony, the castle of Heremen and Montagu, with other places and forts, the which agreement, as being vnlawfull, was not obserued: for within a few dayes after, Odes Cardinall of Carcasson, recouered Montagu and S. Anthony, and restored them to Queene Catherine. Lautrec likewise on the other side took Montagu, S. Espartio, with the castle of Heremen, which he ouerthrew. In those busineses was queene Catherine entertayned in the beginning of her raigne, to the great contentment of the chief Lords of the factions in Nauar, who in the meane time managed their owne affaires by the intelligences which they had in Castile, notwithstanding any impediment that the Lord of Aubenas was able to giue them, who was Viceroy in that Kingdome.

The yeare following, which was 1486. John Vicount of Foix in recompence of the losses he had sustained, did by intelligence with certaine of the Inhabitants surprize the towne

A towne of Pamiers, and left the Lord of Lauellane with certaine companies of souldiers there: but Captaine Peter Bunsiere, did, by the selfe same meanes, and by the helpe of a Locke-smith who made false keyes to the gate of Conserans, beeing sent thither by the Princeesse Magdalen, and the Queene her daughter, recouer the sayd towne, slew diuers of the Garrison with Lauellane their Captaine, and carried thence whatsoeuer hee found: yet for all this, the warre ended not; but continued to the great hinderance and preiudice of the countreies of Foix and Bearn: during which turmoyles, the Princeesse Magdalen reiecting the great and profitable match which was offered by the Prince of Castile, married her daughter to John of Albret, which caused many troubles in the Realme of Nauarre: For it was no easie matter to bring the factious to any reason. Those which had any intelligences with Castile; were so farre off from desiring this marriage with Prince John of Castile, as they hindered it to their vttermost power, because they would not be subiect to a Prince that was mightie, and had means to punish their crimes, and yet neuerthelesse, they could make vse of the occasion, why that match was not accomplished, by resisting their Princeesse and John of Albret her husband, and by that meanes vpheld themselves in their tyrannies. The absence of the Cardinall of Foix, the Queenes Vnkle, was a great hinderance to her affaires: For this yeare 1486. he was sent for to Rome by Pope Innocent the eighth, to be employed for the pacification of Naples, which was troubled with ciuill wars betwixt the Barons and their King Fernand, the same king beeing at great strife with the Pope, who sent this Cardinall to Naples with power as Legate à latere, where in some sort, he composed those differences: but he dyed at Rome, and neuer returned more into Nauarre: the state of which Kingdome beeing thus miserably distracted, Amand, Lord of Albret, father to the new king, did resolute to enter into Nauarre, where hauing had conference with the Lord of Aubenas his brother, who was Viceroy there, and then with John de Ribera, who spoiling the countrey for the King of Castile at the same time, vnder color of defending and vpholding the Constable D. Lewis of Beaumont, Earle of Lerin, and who had taken certaine townes, he delt in such sort, as he perswaded him to go with him to Valencia to king Fernand, where being arriued, the Lord of Albret beeing welcomed and kindly entreated, did beseech the King to accept of the desire he had to do him seruice, in stead of the effect, for so much as he was a poore Knight, vniustly expelled from his countrey by the French King, who was mooued against him, and John of Albret his sonne, whose person with his kingdome of Nauarre, hee came to offer vnto him, requesting him to receiue them into his protection: and also that he had commission to make the like request for the Dukes, Francis of Brittain, and Lewis of Orleance, pursued and afflicted by the same King Charles, each of whom promised him seruice and ayde for the recouerie of his Earledome of Rosillon, and in all other occasions. The Lord of Albrets speech was fauourably and attentively heard by King Fernand, who graunted all that which hee demanded in the behalf of the king his son, commanding John de Ribera to restore to him or his Lieutenants Viana, with all the rest of the places, which he held in the Realme of Nauar. And did moreover giue order for the rigging forth of an army by sea in Guipuscoa and Biscay, against the French King for the aide of the aboue-named Princes, who had likewise sollicitated Henry the seventh King of England to take their part, who inclined thereunto, so as a great number of Spanish shippes did lye vpon the coasts of Brittain, whose Admirall was Monsieur Gralla, with whom Alain of Albret returned, and an armie out of England was likewise sent, conducted by the Lord Scales to the hurt of the French-men, who by meanes of a victorie obtained by K. Charles or his Lieutenants, at S. Aubin, did deliuer themselves from all danger, the D. of Orleance, and Monsieur Gralla being taken prisoners: the Lord of Albret escaped, and the D. of Brittain died for griefe of mind, leauing two daughters, Anne the eldest, albeit that she was promised to Maximilian King of the Romans, who was of the D. of Orleance faction, was won by King Charles to be his wife, who was desirous by such a marriage to vnite the Dutchie of Brittain to his Crowne. And because he was betrothed to Margueritt of Austria, daughter to the king of the Romaines, who beeing very young, was brought vp in France, in hope of the future marriage, he sent her home againe, and she was afterwards married to Prince John of Castile.

The factious of Nauar hinder their Princeesse marriage.

Castilians foile the Realme of Nauar.

Amand of Al-bret, succiteth
the K of castile to mar upon K. Charles the eighth.

King Fernand
fauours Amand of Albret against King
Charles.

K. Charles his victorie at S.
Aubin.

The Britons oppose themselves against the French
King.

The Bretons euer hating the French gouernment, keeping their Princeesse in the Castle A of Nantes, made new practises with the Kings of Castile and England, and obtained great ayde from both of them, Don Diego Peres Sarmiento Earle of Salinas, beeing Generall of the Spanish Armie on the coast of Brittain, with Don Pero Cavillo de Albornos, and other renowned Captaines, hauing two hundred men at armes, and great numbers of footmen, Crosbowes, Pikes, and Harquebuziers, who were called in those dayes Espingardiers. King Charles in the meane time came with a mighty Armie, and besieged Nantes, and by intelligence with some, hee obtained the Citty, Castle, and the Dutchesse whom hee married in the yeare 1489. and made her French Queene, making himselfe Maister of her inheritance, in despight of the Britons. This faire and gracious Princeesse Anne, was daughter to Dutchesse Marguerite, and grand-child to Queene Leonora of Nauarre, as hath beene already said, and coosin germaine to Queene Catherine of Nauarre, of whom we now treat.

Castile.

Death of Don Garcy Aluarez and of D. Alonso de Estuniga.

Wee will now returne to the Kings of Castile. After the assembly of the states of the Realme of Valencia at Orihuela, where diuerse ancient customes were reformed, and many notable orders receiued and established, they came to Murcia, with an intent to warre vpon the Moores from that part. There did Don Frederick de Toledo Captaine of the Kings guards, aske leaue to visit Don Garcy Aluarez de Toledo his father, who lay deadly sick; in whose dignities, to wit, the Dutchie of Alua, the Marquisat of Coria, and Earldome of Barco, his sonne succeeded him. This yeare likewise dyed Don Aluaro d' Estuniga Duke of Playfance, leauing his sonne of the same name successor in his Dutchie. The Bishop of Astorga likewise dyed, in whose place Bernardin de Carnajall was substituted, who was afterward Cardinal of the Sea of Rome, of the title of the holy Crosse. The companies from all parts of the kingdome made their Rendez-vous at Lorca, whether King Ferdinand marched, hauing in his company the Duke of Albuquerque, the Marquis of Cales, the Earles of Lemos, Saint Steuens, Castro, Cibra, Montagü, Buendia, and Don Henry Henriques the great Maister, Don Pero Lopes de Padilla Captaine of the frontiers of Castile, Don John Chacon, Captaine of the frontier of Murcia and others. The Army beeing ready to march, the Marquis of Cales, and the Captaine of the frontier of Murcia leading the foreward, marched against the Citty of Vera, the inhabitants whereof, who were Moores, beeing assured that they came towards them, would not fall into the like mischief as those of Malaga, wherefore they sent out before to the Marquis, offering to yeeld their Citty to King Ferdinand, if hee were there in person: wherefore the King made hast, and the Citty submitted vnto him on condition that their liues, liberties and goods might bee sau'd, with promise to liue in their religion in the next townes, or else where they should thinke good. Garcy Lasso de la Vega Maister of the Kings Hall, was made Gouernor of Vera. Diuers others strong townes and castles on those marches, beeing moued by the reports of the Kings clemency, and fearing likewise their great power, sent their Alfaqins or wise Councillors and deputies, to offer them obedience and tribute, as they were accustomed to pay to the Moore Kings, and namely the two Velez, the white and the redde, Muxicar, Cucuas, Telleisque Huefcar, and Porchena, Tabara, Alborca, Serena, Torilla, Monjagar, Tabernas and Benamaruel: the inhabitants of which places and diuers others, made themselves Mudejars or vassals to King Ferdinand and Queene Isabell, keeping their ceremonies and sect. The Armie after this marched towards Almerie, the which towne was then onely lookt vpon by certaine light skirmishes with the Moores of the garrison: then part of the army marched on forward within the view of Baza, where King Muley Boabdellin was then in person, who came forth with certaine troopes of horse and foote, and made a great skirmish, where D. Phillip of Nauarre and Arragon dyed, who was maister of Montezza, nephew to the King, and sonne to Prince Don Charles of Viana, by vs oftentimes heretofore mentioned, with other men of note, the which caused the Christians to make their retreat, who were insolently pursued in the Rere by the Moores, who notwithstanding were afterward beaten back by the Captaine of the frontier of Murcia. King Ferdinand leauing for that time Almerie and Baza, two strong places, marched towards Huefcar which yeelded, and Don Rodrigo Manrique was made Gouernor thereof.

Whilest

Vera yeilded
by compulsion.

Places yeilded to the King
and Queene
of Castile.

A Whilest the warre continued in these quarters, the Capraine of Alua de Tormes, and the gouernor of the Duke of Aluas lands, did Bastonado one of the Kings Collectors of his rents, which the King hauing notice of, the Licentiate Lewis de Polanco Prouost of the Court was sent thither to doe Iustice therevpon, who tooke the Capraine of Alua in his owne Castle, and caused him to bee hanged in the same place where hee had done the deed: As for the Gouernour of the Countrey, hee was brought to the Chancery at Valiodelit, and there condemned to haue his hand stricken off, and to bee for euer banished out of the Kings dominions. In the which place of Valiodelit the Court came and wintered: there was an Edi& made concerning the moneys, that the siluer coyne should bee thenceforth made of the same sterling as that of Paris.

It was enacted not long before in Portugall, to coyne certaine kindes of gold of two and twenty Carates, of the golden mine of Guiney, and likewise certaine siluer money, called, Twenties, of the worth of twenty Res, which were equialent to the Maraudis of Castile: for thirty six Res, were at that time worth a Real, as thirty six Maraudis in Castile and Nauar: The affaires of which kingdome since the execution of the Lords made by King John were quiet and peaceable; for euery one seeing that hee had not spared his owne blood, kept himselfe still, and this King was not onely reuerenced in Portugall, but likewise in Affricke, where hee possessed much land: in so much as the Moores of Azamor, who had beene in times past vnder the subiection of Portugall, and were now reuolted, did againe this yeare submit themselues vnto it: about which time he built the Fountaine at Setuball. And hauing no businesse to hinder him, hee went about to pursue new enterprises, no lesse profitable for mankind, than honorable to the house of Portugall: Hauing had the opinion and aduise of diuerse great personages skillfull in Cosmographie, and all other Mathematicall sciences, and especially good Marriners, hee sent away Bartholmew Dias, with a certaine religious Frier, named Anthony, inioyning them to coast the shoares of Affricke of the Ocean sea, till they could bee able to relate vnto him how farre that land stretched, and how the voyage which hee conceived in his owne vnderstanding, might bee made by the South into the East, to the countreys and Islands where the spices growe: Bartholmew Dias and the Fryer arrived at the Cape of Bona Speranza, or good hope, which is the farthest stretched out point of Affricke beyond the Equinoctiall winter Tropicke, and doubting againe the East, they came to the mouth of the Iland termed by them, of the Infant, which is a hundred and fifty leagues farther then the Cape of good hope. There Fryer Anthony with the consent of Bartholmew Dias landed, and trauailed with such turnings vp and downe this vnknown world, as hee brought himselfe with great labour and danger, as it is credible, into Palestine to the Citty of Ierusalem, taking a carefull note of all things.

Bartholmew Dias returned by sea into Portugall, the same way hee came, and informed the King of all that hee had seene or knowne of the shoares and sea coasts: as Fryer Anthony did the like of his land voyage, beeing returned a good while after, the which encreased King Johns desire to execute his praise-worthy enterprise, esteeming, and not without reason, that by the knowledge and practise of that Nauigation great profit might redound to his kingdome. Now the better to vnderstand the costs and charges of this trafficke for Spices brought from the Islands of the Moluccoes, and to bee able to reckon what the commoditie thereof might come to, following the passage of the Ocean sea: hee sent Pedro de Couanilla and Alphonso de Pajua into the East, who were wise and discrete persons, and very skillfull in the Arabian tongue, to bring him word of the traffick of these countries: Hauing then furnished them with money, credit, and other necessities for so long a voyage, they went to Naples, and from thence by Rhodes to Ierusalem, from whence they passed by Alexandria to Caire, then they went to Aden, to Ormuz, and at last came to Calicut, and other places of the Indies, carrying with them for their conduct, a Carde or Compasse made by the licentiate Caladilla Bishop of Viseo, the Doctor Rodrigue, Pero d'Alcaçaba, and Moyes a Jew, who had drawne it after the description of Martin of Boheme the great Mathematician, taking information of all the parts of Ethiopia, Arabia, Persia,

Injury done to one of the kings Receiuers of his money, and punishment of the offenders.

Moneys.

15
Portugal.

Nauigation of the Portugals into the Ocean sea, pursued by the commandement of King
John.
Cape de Bona Speranza.
River of the Infant.

Fryer Antho-nies long and dangerous journey.

King John diligence to leave the voyage to the East by the Ocean sea, and the Iland of Mo-
lucce.

Persia, and of the Indies where there is any trafficke, faires or assemblies of people. A Alphonso Payus died in this voyage: Pedro de Couanilla was deteined by Prester John Emperour of Ethiopia, so as the King could haue no relation from any of them concerning their voyage: yet Couanilla found meanes to write a discourse of what hee had learned, and sent it afterward to the King, by one Rabi Abraham, and Ioseph de Lamago, who hauing beene already in Persia, were sent backe againe by King John to heere some newes of the said Pedro de Couanilla. This discourse did whet on the Kings desire to effect this voyage, for the which purpose he did arme certaine Carauels this yeere 1488. at the same time the marriage of his sonne Prince Alphonso, and the Infanta Isabella eldest daughter to the King of Castile, whereof mention was made in the treaty of peace betwixt Spaine and Portugall, was wholly agreed vpon, albeit the Prince was then but thirteene yeeres of age: For the charges of which marriage the Estates of the Kingdome gaue to King John the sum of a hundred thousand golden cru- fadoes: at which time the King being desirous to aduance to wealth and honor D. Pedro de Meneses Earle of Villareal and Lord of Almeyda beeing at Beja, he created him Mar- quis of Villareal, and Earle of Oren.

Castile.

There came now into Castile a great Ambassage from Maximilian of Austria King of the Romans, who in the city of Valiodelit propounded to King Fernand and Queene Isabella, the desire which that Prince had to ally himselfe more streightly with them by marriages, demanding the Infanta Isabella for himselfe, and the Infanta Joane their daughters for his sonne Philip, setting downe diuers commodities which such a coniunction might bring with it, namely in making warre vpon the French. These Ambassadors beeing come by sea, their charges borne thorow the Kings coun- tries, and highly honoured, they did returne with an answer, conteyning very gracious and pertinent excuses: to wit, that the Infanta Donna Isabella was promised to Prince Alphonso of Portugall, but as for the Infanta D. Joane, who was a young child, conside- ring that the long attendance for such a marriage might weary the Archduke Philip, they could say nothing, but that as soone as she should be of age, if the occasion should serue, they would esteeme the alliance and friendship of so great Princes as most honoura- ble and highly to be desired, and that they beeing at that instant greatly busied in the warres of Granado, could hardly thinke as yet vpon the French warres. Whilst the Court staid at Valiodelit, Isabella caused the city of Playfance to be surprized and taken from Aluaro d'Estuniga who bare the title of Duke thereof, where three esta- blished officers of the crowne: and because the castle made some resistance, shee cau- sed it to be beseged by those of Salamanca, Ciudad-Roderigo, and the men of Extre- madura: but the Duke knowing it to be to no purpose to make resistance, did forth-with commaund to yeeld it vp: so this city was reunited to the crowne this yeere 1488. The Dukes of Playfance did then and afterwards intitle themselves Dukes of Bejar. Those of the family of Caruajall did chiefly assist the Queene in this enterprise. The same yeere died Donna Beatrice Pimentell, who was wife to Don Aluaro de Luna Con- stable of Castile and Maister of Saint Iames, who was executed by order of law, shee liued fife and thirty yeeres in honest widdow-hood, and lies buried in the Cathedral Church of Toledo in the Chappell of Saint Iames neere to her husband. The Kings passed this yeere in the aboue named busineses about prouision of necessary things for the future warre of Granado, doing iustice, and in persecuting the new con- uerts returned to Iudaisme, who were oftentimes ouerthrowne by false and slanderous accusations, whereof inquiry was principally made at Toledo, where diuers false witnesses were punished.

Playfance taken from D.
Aluaro de E-stuniga.

Jewes and conuersted Moones obserued by Spanishes repa-rati.

Moore.

During this stay in old Castile farre from the Moores, they taking aduantage of the occasion, did freely ouer-runne the country and surprized the city of Nixar, care- lessly kept by capitaine Bernard Francisco, where they slew three score gentlemen, and preuailed against the Christians in diuers other encounters, killing many, in number of whom the Commaunder Ruy Diaz Maldonado, sonne to Doctor Roderic, Lord of Aquila Fuente was one, who was a valiant knight, they tooke and burnt the towne of Cuellar, constraining the Christians that kept it to saue themselves within the castle, the

A the which they defended by the space of fife daies against the enraged assaults of the Moores by the discretion and valour of Iohn d' Aualos Lieutenant to capitaine Charles de Viedma who was absent.

In the spring of the yeere 1489. King Fernand and Queene Isabella, departed from Valiodelit, and came by Guadalupa not without great deuotion, to Iaen, with intent to goe and beseege Baça: for this purpose they had leauied thirteene thousand horse, and foure and twenty thousand foote, who hauing mustered at Sottogordo, the army beganne to march, the Maister of Saint Iames conducted the vangard, and had for fore-runners, according to the antient custome, the capitaine de los Donzelles, with the Prouost Marshalls, whose charge was to provide the lodgings of the campe: King

B Fernand knowing that the sege would bee long and difficult, and that the Moores of Guadix and Almery, which held King Boabdelsins el Zagals part, would disturbe them as much as in them lay, did place guards and watches in fit places, as well to withstand sur- prises, as to secure the victuallers and other people which serued and followed the campe. The first attempt which the army made, was at Cujar, a strong place, and fur- nished with all manner of munition for the warres, by reason whereof being summo- ned, they answered with armes, sallying forth to skirmish: but it was to their losse, for beeing put to flight they lost their suburbs, which they had intrenched and fortified, from whence they were afterward so pressed, and vexed, as abating their courage, they would gladly haue yeelded vpon any reasonable conditions, the which the King refu- sed, being highly displeased that they had resisted his mighty army: whereat they be- came so enraged and desperate, as in the next skirmish they made such slaughter of the Christians, as the King resolued to grant them whatsoeuer they demanded: so they yeelded vp the towne, and retired themselves with all their baggage in safety to Baça: soone after the fortress of Benfalema yeelded it selfe, with others. The Earle of Ten- dilla receiued Canillas by composition beeing a league distant from Baça. The take- ing of these forts prepared the access to Baça, within which place, King Zagall Boabde- lin had put tenne thousand souldiers as well horse as foote, with diuers expert capitaines, taking the greatest care he could for the well fortifying and keeping thereof, being the

C place of most importance, and the chiefe Bulwarke of the small state that was left him: for that being lost, hee was no more able almost to make any resistance. The Christian army being re-enforced with new troupes diuided it selfe into two parts, which lodged round about Baça a farre off, which gaue libertie to the Moores to goe out and in at their pleasures without any difficulty or danger: wherevpon the King taking counsell, he caused the campe to remooue, and to place the quarters neerer to the towne: The Moores who thought it was not for their proffit, comming forth to fight, did main- taine it for the space of twelue houres with a wonderfull resolution, and it may well bee termed a battaile, for the whole forces almost of either side, came to ioyne, and a great number of valiant men were there slaine: the conclusion was, that the Moores were glad to retire, and were in despight of them shut in, and the Christian army lodged in their gardens. Yet notwithstanding, this feat of the campe being not thought to bee very commodious for diuers respects, the King caused the lodgings to be remoued where they were at first: and in this retreat the beseged failed not to anoy their enemies by all meanes possible.

The difficulty being great to hinder the furious sallies of those barbarous people, the opinions therevpon were sundry and vncertaine, so as the King was at the point to raise the sege, and to cause great forts to bee raised round about it, furnished with strong guards, and to strengthen the neighbour garrisons, and by these slow meanes to tame the enemies and make them yeeld: but because Queene Isabel did greatly desire to see an end of this warre of Granado, to whose constancy the pursute thereof and the conquest of that Kingdome, so long time held by the Infidel is to bee attributed, the King craued her opinion: who being wonderfully displeased that so dishonorable a resolution should be taken, did entreate the King to thinke better thereon, and for modesties sake would not utter her opinion: but perceiuing that want of victuals and money was the greatest hin- derance they stood vpon, which in so long a sege might disaduantage the army, shee said,

17
Castile.

Dispaire some times brings helpe.

Sege of Baza.

The conquest of Granado attributed to Queene Is-
bels constancy.

said, that they needed not to doubt any such matter, for shee would prouide in such fort, A as there should be no want of either of them: The King knowing the Queenes diligence in such matters, and the desire shee had that Baga might bee taken, commaunded the seege should bee continued with all vehemency, wherewith the whole army in generall was well pleased; wherefore the two camps were disposed and placed, a miles distance the one from the other & a great trench drawn from one to an other fortified with piles and fiftene sorts of timber and flags, where great numbers of souldiars were lodged, and by this means the city was more streightly shut vp. An other trench was drawne from the hills side of two miles long, so as the place was enuironed round about, in which workes they spent two monthes, in all which time they neuer left skirmishing. And as diuers Moores, distrusting the successe of the seege, fled to the Christians campe it was knowne by their meanes how that the city was not well prouided with victualls, wherein King Zagal had greatly failed, and besides, how that they had their water from a fountaine at the foote of the hill called Alboahacen, which being taken from them they would be in great want: wherefore the King hauing resolued vpon this intelligence to build a fort vpon that hill: The Moores being aduertized thereof by some spies, did preuent him, and they themselves made a fort there for the garde of their fountaine. In the meane space Don Antonio de la Cueva and others, ranne vp and downe the country, and spoiled the townes and villages neere to Guadix, from whence bringing great numbers of cattails of all sorts, the Moores came forth to the reskew of them, and there the Christians beganne to stand at a stay, and knew not whether it were best to leaue their bootie to betake themselves to flight, or else to tarry still and defend it valiantly. The valour of Hernand Peres de Pulgar encouraged the rest, who hanging an hand-kercher vpon the toppe of a pike, cried out aloud, let those that are no cowards follow this Enseigne, and in this sort marching against the Moores, they beate them backe with great slaughter, and returned victorious to the campe: in regarde whereof the King made Hernand Peres Knight: and permitted him to beare a white hand-kercher in his armes in token of his valor to his posterity.

King Muley did oftentimes attempt to victuall Baga but it was in vaine: and foreseeing that the end of the Moores reigne in Spaine was at hand, his last refuge was, D by the counsell of his friends, to haue recourse to the Soldan of Egypt, who in a manner commaunded ouer all the petty Kings of Affrica, vnto whom hee complained of the greedinesse of the Christian King, who did vniustly dispossesse him from the Kingdome which his Ancestors had enioyed so long a time: whereat the Sultan being moued, sent two friers Ambassadors to Pope Innocent, of those that dwelt in the Temple of Ierusalem which they call our Sauours Sepulchre: to let him vnderstand how that the Kings of Castile did deale vniustly in vexing the Moores that dwelt there by warres, wherein if they persisted, hee would vse the Christians in the same manner that liued in his countries and dominions: the Pope gaue notice thereof to King Fernand and Queene Isabella, yet they for all that would not leaue of their desaigne, but E satisfied the Pope with reasons wherefore they pursued that warre: and being deuout and charitable Princes they gaue and assigned a yeerely stipend to the friars of a thousand ducats, which they enioy and is the fairest reuenue they haue at these daies: Besides that, the Queene sent a vaile wrought with her owne hand to hang ouer the Sepulchre at Ierusalem.

During the seege of Baga, this yeere 1489. Don Garcia Lopes de Padilla the last Maister of the Knights of Calatrava died: for the Maisterhip was then incorporated to the Royall crowne of Castile by the Popes authority, as not long after those of Saint Iames and Alcantara were: remaying euer after in the Kings hands with title of perpetuall administrators thereof: for in truth these masters did draw after them, by F reason of the authority which they had ouer so great a number of Knights, all gentlemen of great houses, to great a power and to be suspected by the Kings, as pernicious to a state, where in conclusion they were heads of factions, by whom, Spaine was many times torne in peeces.

The

The Soldan of Egypt's diligence in the behalf of the Spanish
Moores.

The King of Castile, gaue a thousand ducats yearly vnto the friers at Ierusalem.

18

The Mastership of Calatrava incorporated to
Castile.

A The Knights of this order were permitted to marry the yeare one thousand, five hundred and forty, by Pope Paul the third. From the first institution of this order, vntill this time, and the death of Don Garcia Lopes de Padilla, eight and thirty maisters of the same order are reckoned.

The siege of Baga had already lasted foure whole moneths, without hope of winning it, against which the Artillery wrought no great effect: for that men in those dayes were not skilfull in the approches and neere batteries, as they are now in these times: Neuertheless King Ferdinand thinking it would bee a great blemish to his reputation, if hee should raise the siege, would by no meanes giue it over, being assured that B continuance of time would bring the Moores to reason: the besieged on the contrary, knowing that the losse of Baga would carry with it Almerie, and Guadix, and so consequently the whole ruine of the Moores state in Spaine, did all of them resolute to dye rather then to yeeld. And because the trench on the hills side was a great hinderance to them, they went out vpon a day to breake and fill it vp, where they gaue a very furious assault, wherein great numbers on both sides were slaine. Wherevpon the King commanded that no man should goe forth to skirmish without leaue, and caused all the Moores to depart out of the Campe, commanding that all those that should flye forth of the City should bee made slaues, but they had rather vndergoe that condition then to starue. Being besieged so farre of, the sallies were the easier and oftner; C but the Moores commonly had the worst: At one of these skirmishes Don John de Luna was slaine, a yong Knight, and heire to the noble houle of Luna in Arragon. Winter drawing on, gaue some hope to the besieged that their enemies would shortly dislodge, and therefore they meant to hold out a little longer: but when they saw that King Ferdinand caused Carpenters to build small houses and cabins for the Souldiars, they then perceiued that the King meant not to leaue them so soone. The season being wette and rainie, did greatly trouble the Armie before Baga, and that which was worst of all, the wayes were so deepe and full of water, that no victualls nor munition could bee brought to the Campe, but with incredible difficulty. But the diligence of the noble and courageous Queene surmounted all these inconueniences, D for shee hired foureteene thousand ordinary beasts of carriage, besides those which went vp and downe to the Campe for their priuate gaine, taking marueilous paines and care to provide all things necessary for the reliefe of the Armie, not sparing for any cost. For to defray which charges, shee engaged part of the Royall patrimony, and assigned pensions: shee borrowed money of Citties, and of priuate men and women, and pawned her owne Jewels; and for an argument of her great pietie and charity, shee kept foure great tents in the Campe, which were termed the Queenes Hospital, for the reliefe of hurt and sicke Souldiars, seeing for that purpose, diuerse Physicians, Surgeons, and Apothecaries, and provided for all other necessities, with such care, iudgement and diligence, as the conquest of the kingdome of Granada, E and expulsion of the Mahometan Moores forth of Spaine, may more iustly bee attributed to this Princesse then to any other.

It was thought fitt that the Ordinance which was in the Maister of Saint Iames and the Duke of Nageraes quarter, should bee brought neerer to the enemies fortres and defenses: the which was done with many bloody encounters: the Moores continuing still more obstinate, were diuerse times aduised to yeeld, and to enioy the fauour and bountie of King Ferdinand, who promised them the liberty of their religion, and not to take away their goods, lawes, and customes, notwithstanding that they were in great want of victualls and money for the payment of the Souldiars, for whose wages, the Captaines tooke away the Rings and Jewels from the women, to F the end to auoyde sedition and rebellion in the towne. The continuall miseries of that siege did likewise trouble diuerse that were abroad, who cunningly did counsell the King, who was resolute not to rise from thence, to cause the Queene to come to the Campe, saying, that it would cause the Moores viterly to dispaire: but indeed they thought that the Queene, seeing with her owne eyes the trauaile and miserie which the Armie endured, would bee a meanes to dislodge, and that the rected opinion

The Queenes Hospital in the Campe.

Queene Is-bella's great diligence.

opinion of besieging them by Fortes, would bee then renewed. The King wrote diuerse letters to the Queene who lay at Iuen, to cause her to come to the Campe, the which shee did, beeing accompanied with the Cardinall of Spaine, and other Prelates, leaving the Prince her sonne at Vbeda with the Archbishop of Siuill, and some others of his Councell. Her coming caused most of the Souldiours to forget their misery and traualle, and brought forth an effect contrary to that which some of them, who had bene the occasion thereof, did imagine; But the Moores were wholly confounded thereby, and discouraged to make any longer resistance. Wherefore their chiefe Commander, whose name was Mahomet Abenhazan, began to hearken to that which had bene so often propounded by the King and Queene, and craued a parley. Don Gustiere de Cardena great Commander of Leon, had Commission to treat with him, hee beeing an eloquent and discrete Gentleman, shewed him what fauour and good hee might expect and hope for from these victorious Princes, and that there was nothing more plaine, then that God had giuen an end to the Moores happinesse in Spaine: The Moore apprehending sufficiently what the Commander told him, did with very humble speeches desire to become their vassall, but hee sayd, that it behooued him to conferre with the inhabitants of Baga, before hee could giue any resolute answer: which beeing granted him; those people of iudgement which consented to the yeelding of the towne, were of opinion to let King Muley vnderstand vpon what termes they stood, to the end they might hee able to iustifie the yeelding thereof.

During this negotiation, a suspence from Armes was granted, and King Muley beeing aduertised and perswaded by Mahomet Abenhazan, did not onely consent to the yeelding of Baga, but compounded likewise for the rest which he held, and for his state hereafter: Namely, that Almerie and Guadix should bee deliuered into the Kings hands; the which was effected as soone as the Gouvernour returned back. The Moores of the garrison of Baga came forth with their Armor and baggage, and the inhabitants were permitted to liue in the neighbour townes, or else where in Spaine, where they thought good, without any molestation in their beliefe and superstition: and the Gouvernour Mahomet Abenhazan with all his kindred, was receiued into the Kings fauour as their subiect and vassalle.

The Christian Souldiers entred into Baga the fourth day of December, the seauenth moneth of the siege. The yeelding of that place beeing diuulged all ouer the country, the Captaines and Gouvernours of the townes of Almunecar, Porchena, Tabernas, and others of the countrey of Alpuxarras, from Almerie vnto Granado, came and presented their keyes to the Kings, remaining their vassalls and Mudejares, the Captaine of Porchena excepted, who reiecting all entreaties, gifts and offers, would needs passe ouer into Affricke. King Ferdinand went from Baga to Almerie, where King Muley lay, who came and met him, hauing layde by the royall Diadem, and like a private man, alighting from his horse, would in signe of homage haue kissed his hands: but King Ferdinand, considering the alterations wherevnto humane affaires are subiect, would not permit it, but caused him to remount his horse, and so receiued him neuertheless for his vassalle. The City of Almerie beeing receiued, and the same conditions granted to the Citizens as was to others, namely, to liue free, and to enioy without any molestation their goods, and the exercise of their religion, in paying the same tribute which they were accustomed to giue to the Moore Kings, the Kings went to Guadix, where the like was done. This was in the beginning of the yeare one thousand, foure hundred and ninety. The governments of these places were giuen by the King, that of Baga to Don Henry Henriques his Vnckle; Almerie to the great Commander of Leon, and Guadix to Don Diego Hurtado de Mendoza, the Cardinalls brother. The Gouvernour of Solobregna and other Moores, did likewise yeeld their Fortes and Castles to the Kings, and did taste of their mildnesse and clemencie. The towne of Andaraz was assigned to Muley Boabdellin for his residence, with a thousand Mudejares to his vassalls, and foure millions of Marauedis for his pension, which hee enioyed but a yeare: for disdaining to liue as a subiect, there where hee had reigned, hee went ouer into Affricke. By meanes whereof Mahomet Boabdellin the little, remayned sole King of Granado,

The Moores
of Baga begin to parley.

Baga, Guadix, and Almerie yeilded.

Muley Boabdellin
submits himselfe to the Kings of Cas-
tile.

1490.
Moores.

A Granado, who not long after, was brought to the same passe like his vnckle, as shall appeare. The Bishops and the Clergie did in these cities performe the accustomed purifications and ceremonies: and Almerie and Guadix were after that erected into Episcopall Sees.

The power of the Moores after the taking of these places was in a manner brought to nothing: the city of Granado with a few other places remayning to Mahomet the Little: but all that was done was to no purpose vnlesse Granado were taken, which had bene the chiefe of that rich and mighty Kingdome for many yeeres: wherefore Mahomet was entreated by the Kings to giue them the city of Granado, alleading a certaine agreement and promise which he had made vnto them, that vpon the conquest of the cities of Baga, Guadix and Almerie, by the King and Queene, they should giue them to Mahomet the Little, with certaine other places, vpon condition, that hee should liue vnder them as their vassall, and that hee should enioy the rents and reuenues of those places, and hee in regarde thereof should deliuer the city of Granado into their hands. But the said Mahomet thought it an hard matter from a Master to become a seruant, and from a King a subiect, therefore some times excusing himselfe, by the resistance of the Moores of Granado, from performing his promise, and at other times demanding more townes and reuenues, this last was graunted him, with promise to amplifie and enlarge his dominion, and as for the rebellious Moores, hee was enioyned to disarm them.

C Some, who saw that it must needs bee so, did yeeld vp their weapons, others who could not endure such basenesse, did stirre vp King Mahomet in such sort as hee rebelled openly with them: wherefore this yeere 1490. the Moore King beganne the warre againe, and tooke diuers castles neere to the city, driuing away the Christians from thence: by reason whereof the garrisons of Alhama, Loxa, the townes of Illora, Moclin, Montefrio, Alhedin and Colomera were fortified by the Kings: who contenting themselves for that time to haue secured the frontiers, and the new conquered cities, they went to Cordoua, and from thence to Siuill: where receiuing newes how the Moores spoiled the country, they appointed Don Inigo Lopes de Mendoza Earle of Tendilla Generall, who abiding at Alcala the real, did giue and take many defeats: but it was not long after, before King Fernand came in his person, with an army of fife thousand horse and twenty thousand foote, and spoyle all the territory of Granado, where hee left nothing for the Moores to liue on, or to yeeld them any ease or commodity, not without sharpe resistances skirmishes and dangerous and deadly encounters as well on the one side as the other: in the campos retreat the Marquis of Villenas brother called Alphonso de Pacheco, Stefano de Luxon, and an other captaine of the Marquis, did amongst others loose their liues: the Marquis of Villena himselfe was hurt in the arme, which hee felt euer after during his life, but at that time hee purchased the fame of a braue, generous, and charitable Knight towards his seruants: for perceiving that a groom of his Chamber was hand to hand in fight with fife Moores who had the oddes of him, hee not being able to endure to see his seruant in that danger, did not feare to hazard his owne person in his rescue, but spurred his horse against those Moores slue two of them with his owne hand, and put the other to flight: and there hee receiued that hurt.

After that King the had made his retreat and was gonne to Cordoua with the army, sending them home to their houses (for they were all of Andalusia and the neighbour Prouinces) the Moores hauing gathered together some forces in the city and out of the hill called Sierra Neuada, came and planted their seege before Alhedin, which was kept by Mondo of Quesada, where they did assaile furiously seuen daies and seuen nights, in such sort as the Christians, hauing no leisure to eate or sleepe, were constrained to giue ouer the place, except a strong tower whereinto they shut themselves where they made the best resistance they could.

The King hauing notice of the daunger they were in, did forthwith assemble forces for their succour, but it could not come soone enough, for the beseged Christians, hauing done as much as men could doe in their owne defence, were at

20

King Mahomet the Little enforced to rebell.

Sharpe resistance of Moores.

The Marquis of Villena valiant and charitable.

Exploit of the Moors.

the last constrained to yeeld to the enemies discretion, who carryed them all away for slaves to Granado: when the King heard this, hee turned back againe: but the Moores proud of their victory, proceeded on in taking of places, as Marchena and others: and because there was nothing to bee had in the territory of Granado, they provided their victuals out of Affrick, having procured the Moores Mudeiares of Solobregna, a sea towne, against their faith giuen and sworne to the Kings of Castile, to giue them safe access in their harbor, with victuals, money, and other commodities, and they receiued King Mahomet into their towne, who a great while besieged the Castle, which was defended by Francisco Ramirez of Madrid, till such time as having intelligence of the coming of the Christian Armie, hee was constrained to abandon it, and to returne to Granado: whether King Ferdinand came to make an end of his former spoile. And because hee vnderstood that the Moores who remained in Baza, Guadix, and Almerie, had intelligence with King Mahomet, hee went thither, and caused that cursed race to bee expelled and dislodged out of all the walled townes and Castles, permitting them to dwell in the Villages thereabout if they would, and then went back to Siuill.

21
Portugal.

In that City in the moneth of March this yeare one thousand, foure hundred, and ninety, were celebrated the promises of marriage, betwixt the Infanta Isabell, and Prince John of Portugall, Don Fernand Siluera, and Doctor John de Taxeda high Chancellor of that kingdome, beeing sent thether Ambassadors for that purpose, the Cardinall of Spaine performing the ceremonie. The feasts, costs, gifts and presents, were great and magnificent, and the Kings beeing at Constantine, vpon their returne to Siuill, they sent the betrothed Princesse into Portugall, who was attended on by the Cardinall of Spaine, by Don Lewis Oforio Bishop of Iacn, Alphonso de Cardena Maister of Saint Iames, John de Esuniga Maister of Alcantara, Don Rodrigo Alphonso Pimentell Earle of Benaunt, Don Lorenzo Suares de Figueroa Earle of Feria, Don Pedro Porto cervero Lord of Palma, Rodrigo de Villosa who went as Ambassador, with other great numbers of nobilitie. With this company the Princesse arriued at Badajoz in the beginning of Nouember, and passing on to the bridge of Caia, ouer a little streame which deuided Castile from Portugall, shee was deliuered into the hands of Don Manuell Duke of Beja, cousin germaine to the King, who beeing accompanied with the Bishops of Eбора and Coimbra, with the Earles of Monsanto and Marialua, and diuerse other Knights, they brought her to Estremos, where King John and the Prince his sonne met her, and in that place they were married by George d' Acesta, Archbishop of Braga: after that they went to Eбора, where they feasted with great pompe and magnificence. Don George, bastard sonne to the King, was present at the wedding, who was newly come from the Monastery of Iesus d' Auero, where hee had till then beene brought vp, vnder the government of Don Joane his Aunt the Kings sister, who dyed not long before. At these feasts the King maintained the tilt against all knights that would runne, furnishing them with horse and armor.

Caia a small
streame diuis-ing Castile from Portugal.Marriage of the Infants
D. Alphonso of Portugall and Isabell of Castile22
Castile.

This yeare one thousand, foure hundred, ninety and one, the kings of Castile beeing at Siuill, they began to giue order for the siege of Granado, sending for the Knights and men of warre from all places of the kingdome, as well on this side as beyond the hills, commanding them to meete at Alcalá the reall, to which place they went in the moneth of Aprill, having in their company, the Prince and the Infantas their children, who with the Queene remained at Alcalá. The king passing on into the plaine countrey of Granado with the Armie, consisting of ten thousand horse, and about forty thousand foote-men, in the which were in person, the Maister of Saint Iames, the Marquis of Villena, hee of Cales, and his brother in lawe Don Rodrigo Ponce de Leon, who did begin this warre, the Earles of Vregna, Cabro, Cifuentes, and Don Alphonso de Aguilar: diuerse great Lords which came not themselves sent thither their forces. The Constable remained Viceroy in Castile the old.

The Campe having marched as farre as the place called Los ojos de Huefcar, stayed there, and the Marquis of Villena was sent with 3. thousand horse, and 5. thousand foot, into the valley of Alcin & to other places and passages of the country called Alpuxarras to

A to spoile it, and because the King was aduertized that in the same country were a great number of Moores able to make resistance, he followed the Marquis, and passing along by Granado he maintained skirmish with diuers Moores which came forth for that purpose, who with great losse were repulsd; the King went forward, and by the way met the Marquis and his troupes as they returned, who had burned and destroyed nine townes, and slue more then five hundred Moores, whom they found carelesse and secure, thinking themselves safe from any search in those sharpe and stony places: so their forces beeing ioyned together they returned againe into Las Alpuxarras to make an end of spoiling what was left. And King Fernand having notice that three capitaines of the Moores were come forth of Granado, and had made themselves masters of a passage, he sent the Marquis thither, who fought with them and draue them thence, hee slue about one hundred of them and tooke three score prisoners, and they destroyed fiftene townes more in the country, besides those nine about mentioned with great store of spoile which they carried away with them: for the Moores did alwaies thinke that their goods were safer in those places then in the city of Granado: After which exploit the army was brought backe to Pradal: & from thence marched to a place called Gosto: There the king by the aduice of the Lords which were with him, caused the compasse of a city to be measured out which was called Saint Foy, with an intent to build houses in that place for the beginning of the army if it should be constrained to winter there; and if the siege of Granado should bee drawne out in length, as it was greatly feared: they gaue it the title of Saint Foy, in regard that warre was vndertaken for the augmentation of the Holy Christian faith. Round about the foresaid compasse, the campe was lodged, being fortified and rampired with trenches and walls for feare of surprizes, in which workes the Moores failed not to hinder them by comming forth of Granado with continual skirmishes. The Queene with her children came from Alcalá to the campe; the Maister of Saint Iames and the Marquis of Cales went forth to meet them, and the with her Ladies were lodged in the safest place of al the campe, and they did oftentimes ride about the quarters, where for their disport they did many times behold the fights and skirmishes, which were almost euery houre made a farre off, and one especially among the rest where as the Moores in great troupes being come forth with two peeces of Artillery, did loose them, with 600. of their men slaine vpon the place, and more then fourteen hundred of them hurt, the Marquis of Cales leading the Christians, who attributed that victory to the Queenes good hap, and the ascribed it to the Marquis his good fortune. Now those of Granado were not long able to hold out: for the greater numbers of horsemen which were wont to fally forth of the city, were so diminished as they hardly had 300. horse of seruice, the rest, were lost and consumed in the last wars: and besides this; the city which containede about 200. thousand persons was very ill provided of victuals; so that diuers caualiers and men of great note began to deuise means how to treat with the Christians for their safety: to be short, al of them considering the state whereinto they were brought, and that they had no hope or expectation of reliefe from any place; they were glad to hearken vnto composition and agreement in yeelding vp the city to the Kings of Castile: wherefore King Mahomet the Little resolved to giue place to necessity, and to receiue this fatal wound, to fall from his crowne and regall dignity, and to become vassal and subiect to his enemies, and to that purpose he sent to entreat the Kings to appoint commissioners to treat and compound with him. This newes was pleasing to the Christians, who did not thinke to haue gotten it so good cheape: therefore D. Gonçall Hernandez de Cordoua, and the Secretary Hernando de Sastre, were appointed to capitulate with him; who after diuers goings and commings, did conclude with the Moores and their Prince Mahomet the Little, vpon these conditions following.

F 1 That King Mahomet should no more terme himselfe King of Granado: vnto whom the Kings of Castile should giue an honorable stipend for his entertainment, who might liue in the cities, lands, and other reuenues, specified, which hee had held in the daies of his father King Maley Albohacen; and the like to bee done to his mother Queene Aixa, his wife, sisters, and children.

2 That their traine, stufte, seruants and purueiors should be free from al tax and tribute.

LIII 2

3 That

Siege of Granado.The city of Holy faith.A great skirmish wherein the Moores are defeated.Great necessity in the city of Granado.

3: That the Moores should bee judged according to their owne lawes and customes, which they call Xaira, and if any Christian were a party, by Iudges that were one halfe Moores, and the rest Christians.

4 That their Armes should not be taken from them, (their Harquebuses excepted) the which no Moore might keepe without speciall licence.

5 That all Moores should bee suffered to liue in Spaine, with free liberty of their ceremonies and religion: and if they would goe ouer into Affricke, they might do so, and carry with them their mooueables, money, marchandise, and all other commodities, excepting Armor and munition for the warres, without paying any tribute for three yeares together, and they should bee furnished with shipping for their passage: After three yeares were expired, those that would depart should pay a Ducat for euery head.

6 That all Moores which possessed immouable goods in Spaine, might enioy them, albeit they themselves were in Affricke, and they might sell, let out, and accommodate them, and for that purpose they might keepe factors and Attorneys in the King and Queenes dominions.

7 That no Renegada Christian should bee constrained by force to returne to the Christian faith.

8 That within certaine dayes after the conclusion of this treaty, King Mahomet the little, or his Alcaides, should deliuer vp the Fortresse of Alhambra, with all the towers and other strong places of the city into the Kings hands.

9 That those of Granado should giue foure hundred principall Moores for hostage. As these matters were handling, the Queenes tents were set on fire by the negligence of one of the Queenes women; so as the whole Armie was in an vprore, and fell into order of battaile, thinking it to bee some Morish stratagem: but when the cause was knowne, all was quieted. The like inconuenience of fire hapned at the same time at Medina del Campo, by meanes whereof more then two hundred houses were burned. Now after that the aboue-named articles were agreed vpon, a great sedition was raised in the city of Granado, by more then twenty thousand of the common people, who tooke armes, gaine-saying the yielding vp of the city, in such sort as King Mahomet was glad to take the Fortresse of Alhambra with a strong garde, looking euery houre when they would haue assailed him: but their fury being appeased, he shewed them, that there was now no more time to make resistance, and gaue them many reasons for it: Neuerthelesse, hee perceiuing that there was euer some frantick Prophet or other among that nation which did put the people in those tumults, he wrote to the Kings, that without staying for the day appointed for the deliuey of the Alhambra, they should send to take present possession thereof, which King Ferdinand did forth-with, and marched with his forces against that Fortresse: from whence Mahomet the little, no more a King, went out to meete him, who with a sorrowfull and dejected countenance, presented him the Keyes, saying, that they were the Keyes of the Royall Pallace of Granado, the which, with himselfe, and all the men that were in it, were at his seruice. He pronounced these words with a broken and sorrowfull voyce, and would haue alighted from his horse to haue kissed the Kings hand, who moued with pity and compassion, would not suffer him so to doe, but did very gently and graciously comfort him. King Ferdinand gaue the Keyes to the Queene, shew to Prince John her sonne, and he gaue them to Don Inigo Lopes de Mendoza Earle of Tendilla, who with three thousand horse, and like number of footmen, entred into the spacious and royall fortresse of the Alhambra, with the Marquis of Villena, and other Knights: & Frier Hernando de Talavera Bishop of Auila (who was afterward Archbishop of Granado) did forthwith goe vp into the highest Tower there, and set vp the Crosse, which was the very same that the Cardinall of Spaine did vse to haue borne before him as Archbishop of Toledo and Primat, and the which is at this day kept in the Vestrie at Toledo: and then were the banners of Saint Iames and King Ferdinand and Queene Isabella set vp, with performance of the accustomed ceremonies: and soone after, other forces were sent to seaze vpon the gates and towers of the city, where the people were disarmed, and the armor carried into the Alhambra, sauing those which were hidden and afterward found, which cost diuers their liues, who were executed by course of lawe.

The

Capitulations betweene Ferdinand and Mahomet the
little.

Liberty of religion graunte to the Moores.

Vicereis stir up the people.

The Alhambra
of Granado yelded the yeare 1492.

Granado yel-
ded up.

A The city was yeilded vp the first day of Ianuary 1492. the 675. yeere of the reigne of the Arabians there: and thereby ended the warre of Granado, which lasted tenne yeeres, and gaue end to the Arabians and Moores dominion in Spaine; but the most part of the Knights would not tarry there but went ouer into Affricke: the greedinesse, inconstancy, infidelity, and desire to rule which that Nation had, brought them to this misery. King Fernand aduertized Pope Innocent and other Christian Princes his friends of this great victory, and hee staid a great while in the city of Granado, to giue order for the government thereof, as also of all that they had newly conquered: where in Queene Isabells constancy and magnanimity deserves the first place, then King Fernand valour, wildome and good conduct, with other Lords and chiefe Knights of their Kingdomes: the cities of Siuill, Cordoua, Iuen, Eccia, Xeres, Vbeda, Baeca, Murcia, Cartagena and Lorca did not spare any of their publike and particular goods.

The same day that King Fernand and Queene Isabell made their entry into the city of Granado, D. Pero Fernandes de Velasco Earle of Haro, Viceroy and Constable of Castile died, whom D. Bernardin de Haro his sonne succeeded as well in the Earldome as Constableship, who this yeere was made Earle of Frias and married to Donna Isaie of Arragon the Kings daughter.

A little before the viceroys death, the President and Auditors of the Kings Chancery residing at Valiodolit, did greatly forget themselves, by receiuing an Appellation to Rome, for a certaine cause depending before them, for which the King and Queene depriued them of their offices, and placed others therein: they that were disposed, were D. Alphonso de Valdinieffo Bishop of Leon who was president, and Doctor Martin d' Auila, the Licenciat Cinchilla, Doctor Cayo, and Doctor Olmedilla Auditors: In their rooms were placed Doctor John Arias del Villar Bishop of Ouedo for President, the Licenciat de Villena, Doctor de Palacios, the Licenciat Ville-Muriell, the Licenciat Palacios Rubies, and Doctor de Villoucla Auditors. The Iewes did also grant a generall subsidy to the Kings, which was the last subsidy raised vpon that sect: for soone after they were all driuen forth of Spaine. The King and Queene hauing begunne to take the best order they could for the government of the new conquered Prouinces, in

D the month of March this yeere 1492. they came to Cordoua to intend the affaires of the rest of the Kingdome: there they made a statute, whereby all gentlemen of the Kingdomes and Lordships, subiect to the crowne of Castile and Arragon, were enioyned to come and make prooffe of their pedigrees and nobility: and because it was made at Cordoua, it was called the statute or law of Cordoua.

Whilest the King and Queene were busied in the warres and seege of Granado, the ioy and feasts in Portugall were sodainly turned into teares and lamentations: the marriage betwixt Alphonso of Portugall and D. Isabella of Castile being celebrated with great magnificence at Ebor, and the feasts and triumphes continuing at Saint Iren, whether the new married couple were gonne to auoide the great heate: the Prince on an Euening accompanying the King his father, and beeing mounted vpon a very ready and swift horse, would needs runne a race against an other horse, whereon Don John de Menezes, Commander of Algezier, did ride, but the Commander excused the matter by reason it was late and almost night, the Prince commanded a Mule to bee brought vnto him, and in the getting vp the stirrop brake, wherefore hee tooke his former horse, and continuing in his determination to runne, hee tooke the Commander by the hand, and giuing spurres to his horse, hee constrained him to runne the race with him: but the mishap was that the Princes horse stumbling at the races end, ouer-threw his rider vnder him, and did so bruze him, as hee lay speechlesse and almost dead vpon the ground. The King and all the standers by, being very sorrowfull, caused him to bee carried to the next cottage which was a fisher-mans, where the Princesses, the mother and the daughter in law, hauing vnderstood this pittifull accident did come on foote, where finding this poore Prince in such state as for no speech nor any thing else that cold be said or don, hee did make any sign or shew of vnderstanding ought: They did all melt into teares, vtering forth very strang cries and lamentations. Great and sundry were the diligences and remedies though superfluous, which the Physitions

The end of the Arabians rule
in Spaine.

The President and Auditors of the Kings deposed and their names.

Subsidy raised
vpon the Iewes.

1492.

Statute of Cor-doua for the nobility.

24
Portugall.

A pittifull accident hapned to Prince Alphonso of Portugall.

Prince Al-
phonso dies.

Princess: Isabella's lamentation.

and Surgions vsed for his recovery: the Physitions telling the King that his sonnes end A drew nere, he brought the Queene and the Princess to the houses of Vasco Pallas, which are vpon the riuer of Tayo, and the Prince died seuen and twenty houres after the accident, who was lamented and bewailed by all men, for the great hope and expectation which he gaue of himselfe in those young yeeres, hauing hardly attained to seuentene yeeres of age: and that which did more encrease the sorrow, was that he left the Princess Isabell a widow euen almost as soone as shee had bene a wife: for they had not bene married fully eight monthes. The Princes body was laied in a herse and carried to the Monastery of bataille. The Princess in token of sorrow, did cut off her heire, and clothed her selfe in garments besitting her griefe, and hauing remained fiftene daies in the house of Vasco Pallas shee went to the Kings pallace one euening without any light, where the King, Queene, and shee, kept themselves shut vp a long time, giuing themselves to much ouer to griefe, and forgetting the health of their owne persons: and being in this estate they were visited and comforted on the Kings of Castiles part. After this manner King Iohns Court remained desolate, and it may bee, that God caused this losse to fall vpon him, for ouer hastily destroying the great houses of his owne Kingdome, especially that of his Aunt D. Beatrice Dutchesse of Visco, whose sonne D. Domingo a Prince of his blood, hee had slaine with his owne hand. The obsequies and funerals being ended, where the King and the great Lords and Ladies of the Realme were present, Queene Elenor, and the Princess Isabell excepted, shee being sorrowfull and a widow was brought backe into Castile the same time King Fernand and Queene Isabell were about Granado in the New towne of Saint Foy which they builded. King Iohn being in this anguish went backe to Lisbon, where this yeere 1492. the two Maisterships of Saint Iames, and Auis, fell to his sonne D. George: for whose gouernor hee appointed D. Diego Almeyda sonne to the Earle of Abrantes.

The end of the three and twentieth Booke.

THE

THE FOVRE AND TVVENT- tith Booke of the Generall History of Spaine.

The Contents.

- A 1. Christopher Columbus his first voyage to the Indies.
2. A rigorous Edict against the Jewes and Moores.
3. King Fernand is hurt at Barcelona: Politicke affaires of Spayne.
- B 4. Christopher Columbus returnes backe: Good and euill which the world hath receiued by the discoverie of the Westerne Indies: The Pope giues those new lands to the Kings of Castile: Columbus his second voyage.
- D 5. The Master-ship of S. Iames in the hands of King Fernand as perpetuall Administratour thereof: Charles the eight of that name, the French King, restores the Earledome of Rossillon to King Fernand, with other politicke affaires.
6. Order concerning the Spaniards and Portugals nauigations.
7. The Master-ship of Alcantara in the hands of King Fernand as perpetuall Administratour thereof: the Chancery of Granado, and of the country beyond Tejo.
8. Originall of the warres betwixt France and Spaine.
9. Don Pero Gonçal of Mendoza, Cardinall of Spaine dyes. Friar Francis Ximenes of Cisneros is promoted to the Archbisshoppricke of Toledo.
10. Peace betwixt Castile and Nauarre: Coronation of King Iohn of Albret, and Queene Catherine, which was the last in that Kingdome: pursutes against the Earle of Lerin.
- E 11. VVarre of Naples, noble exploits of Gonçalo Fernandes of Cordoua, surnamed the great Capitaine.
12. The Houses of Austria and Spaine, allyed together by marriage.
13. VVarre in the Earledome of Rossillon.
14. The third voyage of Christopher Columbus to the Indies. Enterprises vpon the Affricane Moores.
15. Don Manuel first of that name, and 14. King of Portugal his qualities and vertues, &c. Edict against the Jewes.
16. Vasco de Gama his nauigation to Calicut.
- F 17. The Marriage of King Manuel with D. Isabell of Castile, and the birth of D. Michel their sonne, heire to Castile, Arragon, and Portugal, if he had liued.
18. Christopher Columbus and his brother are brought backe as prisoners into Spaine: rebellion in the Indies: voyages of diuers particular persons to the Indies, by the King of Castiles permission.
19. Conuerfion of the Moores Mudejares commanded by Edict in Castile.

20. King Iohn of Albret his iourney into Castile: King Fernands courtesiesse to get the A Kingdome of Nauarre.
21. The warre of Italy, which in processe of time subiected the State of Milan to Castile.
22. Death of Prince Don Michel, whereby D. Ioane, mother to Charles of Austria, was aduanced to the successiue right of Castile and Arragon.
23. Persecution of the Moores Mudejares in Granado and else-where: Mahometans wholly banished out of Spaine.
24. Duke Lewis Sforza is taken by the French-men: The Kingdome of Naples is parted betwixt King Lewis the twelfth, and king Fernand, to the preiudice of king Fredericke.
25. Philip Arch-duke of Austria, and D. Ioane his wife, their iourney into Castile, where B they receiue the oath of the Castillians, as presumptiue heires to the same Crowne.
26. Peter Martyr of Angleria sent Ambassadour to Cayro by king Fernand.
27. Voyages of diuers particular persons to the Westerne Indies by king Fernand and Queene Isabels permission.
28. Voyages of the Portugals into the East, and other places of the Ocean sea, to wit, of Pero Aluares Gabralde, Iohn de la Nucua, Americus Vespucius, &c. Warres raised by the Portugals among the small kings of the East.
29. Birth of the Infant D. Fernand, sonne to the Arch-duke Philip, and to D. Ioane: their returne into Flanders. Treatie of peace betwixt France and Castile to no purpose.
30. Aduancement of Pope Iulius the second. The Duke of Valentine persecuted by him. Mife- C rable retreat of the French out of the kingdome of Naples. Death of Queene Isabell.

In

In this foure and twentieth Booke follo weth in the Line of Portugall,

14. Don Manuel the first.

HE warre of Granado beeing happily ended, it was followed with other great enterprises, partly profitable, and partly preiudiciall: whereof, that of the discoverie of the new world might haue beene worthie of great prayse, if those vnto whome the great and good God did the fauour to discover those countries and nations, vntill then vnkown to our Hemisphere, and their posteritie, could haue rightly vsed, to his honour and glorie, the wealth and riches which they found there, as they were bound to haue done: but there is no memorie of cruelty, auarice, and dishonestie, to bee compared to the actions of the Spanish Christians in the conquest of the occidentall Indies: which their owne Histories beare witnesse of, with terrour to those which reade it, and as a publike scandall to the vnbeleeuing Nations which haue heard tell of their dealings, for the Christian Religion: the which they thinke by reason thereof, to be a bloudie Religion, which seekes nothing but gold and wealth with an insatiate desire of rule. But wee may easily beleue, that the excessse committed by the euill ministers in these searches of the Westerne Indies, was not by their Kings consent, whose zeale herein is rather prayse-worthie, but their negligence in redressing and punishing such mischiefs can hardly be excused. Of which voyages and discoveries we intend not to pursue the Historie at large, as wee did protest in the beginning of this Worke, but wee will content our selues with the declarations of the decrees and ordonances made in the Courts and Councils of the Kings of Spaine, for the regard of things executed and done in their names and authoritie in those farther Regions, and to handle, by the way, that which hath followed thereuppon in generall: for such matters require particular and distinct Treatises.

Wee haue heretofore declared, how that Christopher Columbus hauing bene diuers times heard to discourse of the nauigation which hee had conceiued in his mind to bee made towards the West, with knowledge of new lands, whereof there was no memory in precedent times, had hope and promises of Fernand and Queene Izabella, to giue him meanes to effect it at a time conuenient; the which beeing offered vpon the time that Granado was taken, hee obtained three Caruels rigged and furnished with sixe-score men, souldiers and mariners: for the setting forth of whome, the Councillor Lewis of Saint Angell did lend the King sixteene thousand Duckets. Hee departed then from Palos de Moguer in Andalusia, vpon a Friday the fourth of August, in the yeare 1492. and hauing sayled two moneths and eight dayes, hee discovered the land which hee so much desired, that is to say, vpon the eleuenth day of October of the same yeare.

The first man which cryed, Land, was one called Rodrigo de Triane, who deseried the Iland of Guanahami of Lucaios betwixt Florida and Cuba, where they first landed, and tooke

The Spaniards
auarice and cruelty toward the Indians, makes Christian religion odious to the vnbeleeuing nations.

Christopher Columbus his first voyage to the Indies.

An. 1492.

rooke possession of that new world, in the name of King Fernand and Queene Isabella: A then they sayled to Barucoa, the port of the Isle of Cuba, where they tooke certaine Indians, and afterward they turned towards the Isle of Hati, since then called Hispagniola, and entered into the port by them named Royall.

The Indians gentle and tractable.

There the Indians, at the beginning sterne and rough, at the view of such new people, did in such manner become tractable, courteous, and gentle, as they came and brought gold, with such victuals as they had to the Spaniards, exchanging them for bables and toys of small worth. One of their Kings whom they call Cachiques, whose name was Guacanagari, did shew himselfe so kind, tractable and obedient to these new-commers, as they lovingly receyued from him what commodities they would, so as it was lawfull for them, being ayded by the Indians and their Cachique, to build a fort in that countrey, wherein Columbus left eight and thirtie Spaniards with a Captain of Cordoua named Roderigo d'Arana, and with his two Caruels which were left, (for he had lost the third) he returned to Spaine from whence he came, carrying some Indians with him, with gold of the Countrey, and other singularities, which he brought to the aforementioned place of Palos de Moguer within the space of fiftie dayes: before Columbus departure, King Fernand and Queene Isabella did graunt him the twelfth part of all the royall rights of the lands which he should discover, with this reservation, that he should not in his discourie, do any thing that might prejudice the King of Portugals navigation.

2
E is't against the Lewes.

There was a matter resolved vpon in the Kings Councell of Castile, as soone as they found themselves to be Masters of Granado, faire in shew, but of a pernicious consequence: For they made an Edict, whereby all Lewes, which inhabited in Castile and Leon, were enioyned to turne to the Christian Religion, and to be baptized within three moneths, on paine of having their goods confiscate, and perpetuall banishment. This decree was receiued, published, and executed by an inconsiderate zeale, and without the knowledge of the King and Queene, thinking thereby, as it is likely to augment Christian Religion, and to confirme vnto themselves the name and title of Catholike Kings: whereunto they were incited by the Prelates and slothfull Pastors, who contemned their charge of teaching good and wholesome doctrine; and likewise by the Monkes and other seditious Church-men, who desired rather to destroy, then to feed those miserable creatures, vnto whom they were in perpetuall detestation and skandall, by means of their wicked and corrupted liues, whereby it came to passe, that the name of God was prophaned and blasphemed among the Lewes and Mahometans of those times, who would rather haue retired a thousand leagues, then to draw neere to receive any religious instruction, from so irreligious people, whose pietie was but childish ceremonies, and external seruices, their knowledge meere cunning and deceit, to maintaine and increase their riches, ease, and vnruely appetites, and their ayme and end, honours and worldly glorie, with a popular opinion of wisdom in the affaires of this world: the which was playne and euident to people of vnderstanding among the Infidels: therefore it behoued such euill-affected persons, and no way disposed to amend, as were the Prelates of those daies to set forward such counsels, and to cause the Kings of Spaine to practise courses fit and pleasing to the Diuell, who is a murderer from the beginning of the world, and author of all ruine and desolation: the which hath beene since practised in all places of Christendome with very bad successe: for torments, death, confiscations of goods, and such other like violences, cannot beget a grayne of fayth in the heart of man, whose seed is the word of God; the watering, the holy workes of vnfeined charitie, by the example of the heavenly Father, and the increase thereof, the spirit of the Lord: but they may well bring fourth Atheisme, Hypocrisie, and despaire in abundance, which are the offerings which the enemy of Christ Iesus doth demanda.

The diuils of those who persecuted the Lewes.

Now the poore Lewes, at the publication of this Edict, were maruailously perplexed, and afflicted with sundry passions, for their religion, liues, and goods which were very great: whereunto perhaps, the Kings Councell had regard, thinking by their obstinacie, which is a vice proper and peculiar to that nation, to find meanes to fill the treasure emptied in the last warres, by the confiscation of so great wealth as they possessed in Spain, and to redeeme the alienated reuenues of the Crowne, and the Queenes ingaged Jewels.

Now

A Now the most religious Spanish Lewes, tooke counsell in these three moneths space of delay before they were to leaue the countrey, and found meanes, to send away their money and chiefe goods out of Spaine, wherein they were ayded and befriended by many honest-minded Christians, who being moued with pittie and humanitie, did helpe to hide them, and to conuey them into Portugall, Affricke, Italy, and else-where whether that nation went: great numbers of them did spred themselves ouer Macedon, Greece, and other Regions possessed by the Turkes, whom they taught to make Ordinance and Artillerie, and the art of making Gun-powder, Harguebuzes, and such other engins, which they haue sufficiently vsed to the hurt of Christendome.

Humanity of Christians towards the banished Jewes.

B The rest of them who loued their ease, did value the countrey where they were borne, and their goods, aboue all other matters, and were baptized, and made profession, either true or fained, of Christian Religion, such as they could learn and comprehend in so short a time, the which did cause another inconuenience: for in proceesse of time the noble families of Spaine, allyng themselves by marriage to that race, did wholly contaminate and pollute themselves both in bloud and beleefe. These are the effects which this violent law of King Fernand and Queene Isabella did produce, by the which the Spaniards end in the 2082. yeare of the Lewes habitation in Spayne, if so be they faile not in their account. The same rigour was obserued against them in Arragon, Valencia, Cattalonia, Sicill, and other places vnder the Kings obedience, who from Cordoua went into Arragon to order the affaires of that kingdome.

The Turke and Infidels make profit of the Jewes banishment. The Nobilitie of Spaine contaminated by the alliances with the converted Jewes.

C Being in the Cittie of Barcelona, God sent them a small aduertisement: for as King Fernand on a morning came forth of the towne-house, where himselfe in person had assisted at the pleas of iustice, and being come downe to the foot of the stayres towards the kings house talking to his Treasurer, a certaine mad man borne at Remença, whose name was Iohn de Cagnamates, drew neere vnto him, and lifting up a short sword, hee gaue him such a blow from the eare downe to the shoulders, as it was a wonder that hee strake not off his head: Whereat the King being astonished, and thinking it to be some conspiracie, he cryed out, Saint Marie helpe me, oh what treason, oh what treason; thinking that some others would make an end of what that foolish fellow had begunne: but when hee perceiued that no man stirred, but that euery one stepped before him, to the end the other might not redouble his blow, and that a Gentleman that was his Caruer, and one more had stept to the offendour, meaning to haue stabbed him to death with poynards: hee commanded not to kill him; therefore they ledde him to prison; and dressed his wounds: being afterward examined who had procured him to commit that treason, they could neither then, nor after that hee was healed, by any torments whatsoeuer, get any thing out of him, but that the diuell had assured him, if he would kill the king, to beking himselfe.

3
King Fernand hurt at Barcelona.

The cittie of Barcelona being highly displeased, that this act had beene committed in their iurisdiction, and beleueing verily that there had beene some conspiracie, did put themselves in armes, and the tumult could not be appeased, vntill the king, whose wound was newly drest, and stitched vp with seuen stitches of a needle, did come and shew himselfe out of his lodging windowes to the people, to assure them that hee was aliue: and then euery man went home to his own house. The foole who had committed the deed, was by law condemned to haue his hands and feete cutte off, his eyes pulled forth of his head, to bee dismembred, with burning pincers, and to bee drawn on a cart to the common dung-hill, where his bodie was burned, hauing bene first strangled, by the Queenes clemencie.

In these busineses the yeare 1492. was spent; in which the Brotherhood of the Court beganne, and the building the stately Colledge of the holy Crosse at Vailladolid was ended, and the same yeare dyed Don Pero Fernandez, Generall of the frontier of Andalusia, Don Henrique de Guzman, Duke of Medina Sidonia, Don Rodrigo Ponce of Leon, Marquis of Cales, by whose decease without children, the cittie of Cales returned to the Crowne: Don Pedro of Estuniga, Earle of Miranda of Duero, and Don Bertrand de la Cueva, first Duke of Albuquerque.

Cales reunited to the Crowne of Castile.

Pope Innocent the eight dyed likewise at Rome, in whose stead was chosen Rodrigo Borghia,

Borgia, Cardinall of Saint Nicholas in Carcere Tulliano, Bishop of Alba, Porto, and S. A. Ruffine, Vice-chancellor and Deane of the Church of Rome, sonne to Don Ieffrey Langsch, Lord of Canales, and to a sister of Pope Calixtus the third, who was of the family of Borgia, from whence this man did take his name, and he was called Alexander the sixth, who soone after his assumption to the Papacie, made two Cardinals of his Bloud, the one his Nephew, named Iohn Borgia, and the other his owne sonne called Cesar Borgia, of whome we shall haue occasion to speake in this Historie.

The same yeare the sonne of Don Pero Gonçales of Mendoza, Cardinall of Spaine, whose name was Rodrigo, was by King Fernand and Queene Isabella, honoured with the title of Marquis of Zenete, and they made an end of building the vaults of the Cathedral Church of Toledo, which were begunne in the dayes of King Fernand the third, and of the Arch-bishop Don Rodrigo Ximenes: the Court remayning stil at Barcelona about the beginning of the yeare 1493. Christopher Columbus arriued there, being returned from the West Indies, whose fame, for the discouerie of those new lands, was spread abroade over all Spayn: he presented the Kings with gold, beafts, and other things brought from those Regions, making an ample relation of his voyage, the which did greatly content them, who gaue him the title of Admirall of the Indies, with armes, wherein he vsed this Motto: For Castile and Leon, Columbus hath gotten a new world. If the finding out of the wealth brought from the Indies hath brought any commoditie to the courteous negotiators of our Regions, the euils which did accompanie them, did farre surmount and exceed them:

For then first of all, was the abhominable Venerean disease known, which in France is called the great pockes, brought by the Spaniards, which went with Columbus, who hauing had to do with the Indian women, which were infected there-with, as with a disease proper and peculiar to the Country, did communicate it to the women of Seuil, and of the Court, who distributed it to others: running on with such contagion and horrible accidents of knobbes and rotting soares, as in the beginning, when our Physicians knew not the remedie for such a disease, diuers did miserably perish, or remayned lame of their members, with a villanous and strange change of their forme and fauour, the reward of whoredom, ouer common then in Spaine and else-where, which neuertheless could not chastise the world in such sort, but that this sinne is at this day more in vse then euer it was, to the dishonour of God, contempt of his lawes, and confusion of all good order. The Spaniards in recompence of this euill brought brought from the Indies, carried thither the Kings euill and madnesse by the biting of dogges, which they brought thither with them, of which diseases the Indians had no knowledge at all.

The right remedie of this contagious infirmities, are Guaiacū, Chinaū, and Salsaparilla, which nature bringeth forth in abundance in that new world, where they haue daily need thereof. Another euill hath the desire of gold, pearles, and other high prized things found in those Ilands, brought with it, namely, that the Spaniards haue giuen ouer all honest and profitable exercises, the ground remayning vtilld in diuers places of Spaine, and other arts contemned, the people of Spayne making none account of any other matter, but onely of the voyage to the Indies: so that euer since, it hath had continuall need of the commodities of the neighbour regions.

King Fernand and Queene Isabella did forth-with send the desired newes of this discouerie to Pope Alexander, betwixt whome diuers discourses did passe by their Ambassadors, and letters to reduce the brutish and idolatrous people of that country, to the knowledge of the true God, and the benefite of Iesus Christ, which would haue bene a memorable worke. This Pope, in the Conhstorie of the Cardinals did approoue this enterprise and conquest for the Kings of Castile, granting and giuing to them and their successors by Apostolicall authoritie, the Indies, Ilands and firme land of the West, and did charge and enioyne them to cause the Gospell to be preached: the which moued the kings to furnish forth the number of eightene shippes, vsing therein the diligence of Iohn Rodrigo of Fonseca, Deane of Siuill, who was afterward Bishop of Burgos, and Superintendent of the Indian affaires: of which vessels, manned with fiftene hundred men, they gaue the charge to the Admirall Columbus, and to a brother of his named

At 1493.
Christopher Columbus
Admirall of the Indies.

The great Pockes, the disease of the Indians brought into Europe.

The Indies
haue diminted
the Spaniards
from husbandry and arts.

The Pope giues
the west Indies
to the Kings of Castile

A named Birtheolomew, the dignitie of Gouvernour of those new Countries, who departing from Cales, did againe cut thorough the Ocean sea, and landed at the Iland called by them the Desired, from whence without staying they passed to the port of la Plata in the Iland Hispaniola, and came to the royall port, where they found their tort to be overthrowne, and the eight and thirtie Spaniards with their Captaine, whom they had there left, to be slaine by the Indians, who were enforced to fall vpon them for the spoiles and robberies which they had committed.

There came in this second voyage with the Admirall Columbus, Friar Buyl, a Monke of the Order of Saint Benet, a Cattelan by nation, with authoritie of the Popes Vicar, and twelue learned Clearkes of good and holy life, according to those times, diuers artificers, beafts, as well horse as neate, with others, store of victuals, stoffes, and necessary and profitable matters for the life of man: with these prouisions the better to be furnished for future times, the Admirall Columbus caused a new towne to be measured out, which he named Isabella, after the Queenes name, the which hee peopled, and pursuing his search, hee discovered Cuba and Iamaica, and other smaller Ilands: wherein being busied, the Spaniards, left with the Friar, beganne to enter into mutinie, and to commit many disorders, the Gouvernours authoritie, nor the Friars exhortations and interdictions not beeing able to containe them within their bounds, whom the Admirall punishing according to their deserts, at his returne it procured him enemies and hatred, who did vn-worthily vexe and pursue him, as shalbe hereafter declared.

Don Alphonso de Cardenas, Master of Saint Iames, beeing dead this yeare, King Fernand retoynd the Masterhippe, not suffering any new election to be made, as hee had done the like to that of Calatrava with the selfe same considerations and reasons, who by the Popes authoritie, remayned Administrator of them. Don Alphonso was then the Master of the same Order, and the three and fortieth in order and continuance: the same was done to the Order of Alcantara: the which three dignities were since that incorporated to the Crowne by Pope Adrian the sixth, in the time of the Emperour Charles the fifth, who was heire to the Kingdomes of Castile.

The same yeare the Kings of Castile were altogether rid of King Atahomet Boabdellin the Little, who beeing impatient of the daily solicitations which were made to him, for to become a Christian, and to receiue the water of Baptisme, did sell all the lands and rights which had bene giuen him by the capitulations, at such time as hee deliuered vp the Cittie of Granada, for foure-score thousand Duckets, and with his family retired himselfe into Affricke. There were new teares and lamentations renewed, when his owne mother vpbaying him, sayd, That it well became him to put finger in the eye and weepe like a woman, for the losse of his dignitie and pallaces, seeing that hee could not defend them like a man. He was kindly welcommed and receyued by the King of Fez, but within a few yeares afterwards he was slaine in his fierce and intestine warres against the Xerifs.

The Spanish Authours set downe for a memorable matter, that the Kingdome of Granada beganne and ended, two kings of Castile of one selfe same name raigning, namely Fernand, and the first and last King of Granada were called Mahomet. At the same time the Earledome of Rossillon was restored to King Fernand by the French king, Charles the eighth, who hauing vnderaken at the entreatie and request of Lewis Sforza, named the Moore who did vsurpe the Duchie of Milan, the Conquest of the Kingdome of Naples, did feare least the King of Castile should in his absence enterprise vpon France, in regard of the strife and contention about the sayd Earledome: Wherefore to free and acquit himselfe from that feare and suspicion, hee yeelded it vnto him, and renewed the peace and allyances betwixt the Kingdomes of France, Castile and Arragon, but it was euill and vnfaithfully kept: Wherein the Kings chiefe Councellours did greatly stand him in stead, namely, Seephen Patissade vrs, and Friar Alphonso of Albi, and namely, the holy man Friar Francis de Raulen, who died at Plessis les Tours, certaine of whose letters are yet extant, which he wrote therevpon, and to the same effect to King Fernand.

Friar Buyl the Popes Vicar in
the Indies.

The Masterhip of S. Iames is the Kings hands in quality of administrator.

The Earledome
of Rossillon restored to King Fernand.

King Ferdinand and uncharitable.

It was concluded in this agreement, that King Ferdinand of Castile should not give A ayde nor assistance to the King of Naples: whereby it appeareth that this Catholike King knew well how to vse the vncharitable rule, which sayes, that Charity begins by it selfe. For he to recouer the Earldome of Rossillon, without restitution of the money which King John his Father had borrowed of King Lewis the eleventh, did not greatly care to leaue the honour, state, and life, of his cousin germaine, and brother in law Ferdinand King of Naples for a prey to the French, or at the least hee promised it, and swore so to the French King, notwithstanding that hee afterward changed his minde. King Ferdinand and Queene Isabell having remained for a while in Catalonia, and afterward at Saragossa, they came to Valiodolit, where Don Roderigo d'Vlloa beeing deceased, who B was one of the superintendents of the treasure which they call Cantador mayor, they suppressed that superintendencie, retaining no more but the two that remained, namely, Don Gutierrez de Cardenas great Commander of Leon, and Don Iohn Chacon gouernor of the frontier of Murcia. Beeing departed from Valiodolit to Medina del Campo, they receiued newes of the death of King Ferdinand of Naples, whom his sonne Don Alphonso Duke of Calabria succeeded. The King at the same time had called in the towne of Tordesillas, a Chapter of the order of Saint Iames, and reformed certaine abuses, and there the differences were compounded, betwixt Castile and Portugall about the Indian nauigation.

6 Wee haue declared how that Pope Alexander had granted by his Bull, dated at Saint C Portugal. Peters, this present yeare one thousand, foure hundred, ninety and three, and the first 1493. of his Popedom, the west Indies to the Kings of Castile. Now for to limit the Streights, betwixt Castile and Portugall, he did draw a line or a meridionall in the Globe from the Poles of the North to the South, leauing a hundred leagues distance to the Portuguze towards the West, from one of the Isles to Cape vert, to make their nauigation of Af-frick, and the East Indies: wherewith the King of Portugall was highly displeased, and complained in such sort to the Pope, that the Kings of Castile entreated that the nauigation might be left free to him towards the west, of foure hundred leagues, and the Isles and lands within the same repured for his conquest, wherewith the King of Castile D was not onely contented, but added to it threescore and ten leagues more, so as the Por-tugalls nauigation in all, did stretch from the Isles of Cape vert, towards the west, foure hundred and seauenty leagues, passing the meridionall by that point round about the globe: but time made it manifest, that the King of Portugall thereby did smally better his condition: for the riche Islands of the Moluccos, from whence the spices come, are found to be within the streight of Castile: this Tranfaction was passed the seauenth day of Iune in the yeare one thousand, foure hundred, ninety and foure.

Now King John thinking that the Moluccos were his part, hee sent certaine Caruels this yeare to seeke a passage by the Affrican sea towards the East, but they went not farre beyond the Cape of Good hope: wherefore the King beeing very desirous, that in his dayes this vnknowne nauigation might be practised, could not haue that E good hap, for hee did not liue this yeare. In his time neuerthelesse the kingdome of Manicongo in Guiney was discovered, the King whereof with the most part of his nobility were Baptized. King John beeing oppressed with continuall melancholy for the death of his sonne Prince Alphonso, hee fell into a dropisie, which by little and little brought him to his end, nor without suspicion, that his discafe was procured or augmented by poyson: hee neuerthelesse made his abode in the Citie of Lisbon, and attended the affaires of his kingdome: but his minde was, about all other matters, set on this nauigation, the which hee did set downe according to the opinions which hee had receiued from diuerse places, which did confirme and verifie the discourse which Pedro de Cobanills had sent him, who remained in Kresler Iohns Countrey Emperour F of Ethiopia, from whence there arrived at Lisbon, a little before the Kings death, a learned and discrete Monke, who informed the king more particularly of diuers matters, which serued afterwards to great purpose.

Now king John feeling himselfe neere his end, made his Will, and hauing no law-full children, hee knew that the kingdome was to fall to Don Manuell Duke of Beja:
hee

The Pope limits the Spaniards and Portugall nauigation.

The Portugall nauigation limited towards the West.

The Moluccos found to be within the nauigation of the Castilians.

The King of Manicongo receives the Christian religion.

A Hee was therefore desirous to giue Don George his base sonne a portion, vnto whom hee gaue the Cittie of Coimbra, with the title of Duke, and Montmajor the old, and the lands of the Infantaigo, in the same forme, as his Grandfather the Infant Don Pedro, sa-ther to Queene Isabell, his mother, had possessed them: hee gaue him moreover, the Isle of Madera, Beja, and Visco, which was not performed afterward.

This will and Testament was signed by Don Manuel, and D. George, and by siue other personages of great place, who made vp the number of seuen witnesses. After this hee went into Algarbe to the Bathes of Monchiz, in the moneth of October the season being cold, and visit for his discafe: and hunting the wild Bore vpon a wet rainie day, hee got a fluxe: Wherefore as soone as he came to Albor, assured tokens of death beganne to appeare vpon him, wherof he was admonished by D. Diego Ortiz Bishop of Tanger, and Don Diego Almeyda, Prior of Saint Iohns, who was Gouernour to Don George:
then disposing himselfe to dye, hee appoynted certaine things, out of a little Booke, to be read, and accomplished at such time as he was readie to giue vp the ghost. First, hee cra-ued pardon of the Dutchesse Donna Beatrix his mother-in-law, of Queene Leonora his wife, and of the Cardinal Don George of Acofta, who then was at Rome; he likewise cra-ued pardon of the whole Estates of his Kingdome in generall. And to the end that his sonne Don George should not grieve and trouble his mind, hee caused him to be ledde foorth of his chamber, and there stood round about his bed, Don George of Almeyda, Bishop of Coimbra, and his brother Don Diego of Almeyda, Prior of Saint Iohns, Don C Iohn de Silua Bishop of Silues, Don Diego Ortiz Bishop of Tanger, and Don Iohn de Vasconsellas, Earle of Penela, with certaine Chaplens, who exhorted him for his soules health. In this manner this King died, hauing held the scepter of Portugall foure teene yeares and two moneths in the yeare 1495. and in the sixe and fortieth of his age: his bodie, by his owne appointment, was layd in the Cathedrall church of Silues, and was afterwards transported by the commendement of the King his successor to the Mona-stie of Battaile, beeing the last king that was buried there, and it is reported that yet to this day his bodie lyes whole and vnconsumed. He was an excellent King, and esteemed to be so by the other Princes of Christendome.

D Returning to the affaires of Castile, King Ferdinand and Queene Isabella departing from Tordesillas, went to Arevalo to visite the old Queene Isabella, mother to Queene Isabella then reigning, from whence they came to Segouia, and afterward to Madrid, where by the aduice of their Councell it was decreed, that the king, should take the Master-ship of Alcantara into his owne hands, as well as those of Saint Iames and Calatraua, for to be perpetuall Administrator thereof, and to the end that there might be no more masters in Castile, then the King and Queene: the which was approved by autho-ritie Apostolicall: Don Iohn of Estuniga beeing bereft of his Mastership, was otherwaies recompenced. This yeare also, the new Chancerie and royall audience at Citee reall was erected for pleas and causes depending beyond Tayo, this riuer separating the bounds of the two Chanceries: namely, of this, and of that at Vailiodolit, from this Spring in the mountaine of Cuenca, where it enters into the lands of Portugall, Don Alphonso Ca-rillo Bishop of Catania, and afterwards of Auila, was the first President thereof. Now the King and Queene had sent some few dayes before Antonio Fonseca Ambassadour to the French king Charles the eight, to the end to diuert him from the warre of Naples, en-terprized against King Alphonso their Nephew, and to declare plainly to him (now that they had gotten the Earldome of Rossillon) their meaning. And king Charles be-eing already come into Italy with a mightie armie, the Ambassadour mette him at Vilitri neere to Rome, where he deliuered his Ambassage, and did protest, notwithstanding the agreement and promises made at the restitution of the Earldome of Rossillon, that if F he did persist to pursue by armes his pretended right to the kingdome of Naples, king Ferdinand his master could do no lesse then shew himselfe his enemy, and take vpon him his Nephewes defence, and therefore he entreated him to thinke of it, and to referre all their differences to the Popes iudgement, who could very well iudge whither the kingdome of Naples did belong to the French or to the Arragonois.

The Ambassadour wold haue sayd more, but he was interrupted in his speech, by certain

M m m m 2

hor

Death of King
John of Portugall.
1495.

7
Castile

8 hotte and fierie French Lords, who made him hold his peace, and told him that he spake A too arrogantly and impertinently: therefore the Ambassador following his instruction, tooke the Articles of the last agreement betwixt King Charles and King Ferdinand (which he brought with him) and rare them in peeces in the presence of the King, Lords, and Knights of his Armie: and hee warned at the same instant, Charles de Arellan, and John Petit Cernillon, Spanish Captaines, who serued in King Charles his Armie: that as subiects to King Ferdinand they should depart thence within three dayes, and giue ouer the French Kings seruice, on paine of being held rebels to their Prince: From the same time was the friendship betwixt those two Kings broken, and warre in a manner denounced. King Charles pursued his destinie, and without any difficulty made himselfe maister of B the Realme of Naples, King Alphonso before hee had fully reigned a yeare, hauing giuen ouer the kingdome to his sonne Ferdinand, went into Sicill, and there ledde a monastick life: but not long after, the Kings of Castile beeing at Tortosa in Cattalonia, did openly and by effect declare themselves enemies to the French, as well for feare least they being already Maisters of Naples, should seaze vpon Sicill, where they pretended like right, as also at the entreaty of Pope Alexander and other Potentates of Italy, being in the same feare of their owne estates, and would not permit the power of the French to grow so great in Italy: therefore they set forth a Nauie of Gallies and other ships, with fise thousand Spanish footmen, and sixe hundred horse, vnder the conduct of Gonzalo Hernandez of Cordoua: the which forces departing from Carthagena, arrived C safely in the Porte of Messina, this yeare one thousand, foure hundred, ninety and fise, making a shew as if they would haue succoured the new King Ferdinand driven from Naples. These troopes of Spaniards among other memorable matters, brought the great Pockes into Italy, wherewith they of the countrey were soone possessed, and did communicate it to the French men, which were scattered heere and there in the kingdome of Naples, and they afterward brought it on this side the Mounts, and did distribute it to their neighbour nations, so as this disease beeing indeed of India, was called the Spanish, Neapolitan, and French disease, according to the next subiect where it was discovered, and from whence the contagion was perceiued to come.

The Great
Pockes in Italy.

Death of the Cardinal Don Pero Gonfali
de Mendoza.

Pilates original title set on the crosse of our Saviour, kept for a relic in Rome.

About the same time in the City of Guadalajara, dyed Don Pero Gonçales de Mendoza Cardinall, and Primat of Spaine, and Gutierrez of Toledo, Patriarke of Alexandria, and Bishop of Siguença (such were his titles) who beeing visited in his sicknesse by the Kings, and being demanded whom hee thought worthy to succeed him in the Archbishopricke of Toledo, hee named Frier Francis Ximenes of Cisneros the Queenes Confessor, Prouinciall of the order of Saint Francis in the Prouince of Toledo. This Cardinall had a singular affection to holy Crosse, who besides that it was his hap to haue the holy Crosse in Ierusalem for the title of his Cardinallship, hee builded a Colledge at Valiopolis, and an hospitall at Toledo neere the place of Codebecer, called Holy Crosse: hee re-edified the Church of Santa Cruz at Rome, where they say the original title written by Pilate on our Saviours Crosse in Greeke, Hebrew, and Latin, E was found in an vnfitte place, the which remains as a famous relique in that Church. Besides, it is reported, that beeing neere his end, a great white Crosse of more then forty Cubits length appeared ouer the house where he lay sick, which beeing reported to him, he did reioyce, and hauing caused a Masse of the Holy Crosse to be said, hee gaue vp the ghost: these things are written for wonders by the Spaniards: his body lies buried in the chiefe chappell of the Church of Toledo, in a sumptuous Marble monument. As concerning Frier Francis Ximenes of Cisneros his successor in the Archbishopricke of Toledo, hee was sonne to a solicitor of causes in the towne of Tordelaguna, called Alphonso Ximenes: his first rising was to the Arch-priesthood of Vzeda, and hee was great Chaplaine of Siguença, and the lxxi. in the order of the Archbishops, and hee was afterward created Cardinall by Pope Alexander the sixt, of the title of Saint Balbine: but D. Bernardino de Carnajall Bishop of Carthagena, was preferred before him to the dignity of a Cardinall by the title of Santa Cruz in Ierusalem, and was likewise admitted to the Bishopricke of Siguença vacant by the Cardinals death, and at the last obtained that of Playfance. Frier Diego de Deza, of the order of Friers Preachers, Schoole-maister to Prince

A Prince John of Castile, was likewise made Bishop of Salamanca.

The affaires betwixt Castile and Nauarre, since the time that Alain of Albret came to Valencia to King Fernand, were peaceable: but the kingdome of Nauarre was still vexed by the factions: those of Beaumont, had euer for their chief the Constable Lewis of Beaumont, Earle of Lerin: those of Granmont ioynd themselves with the Lord of Abernas, Viceroy and Gouvernour of the Countrey, waiting with great desire for the coming of King John and Queene Catherine, vnto whom they protested all obedience. Now the great affaires which these Princes had on this side the mountaines, detayned them a long time there: for besides that they were in no sort fauoured by Charles the eight, the poursuites of their vnkle John Vicount of Narbonne had continually disquieted them, vntill the yeare 1493. that they fell to agreement with him: and to secure the countries of Foix and Bearne in their absence, from his surprizes and vsurpations, they had made ouer to him the townes of Sauardun, Maseres, Monthault, and Gibel.

This Vicount was a widower, by the death of Donna Marie of Orleance, sister to Lewis the French King, who left him two children, namely, Gaston, who was duke of Nemours, and Germaine, which was afterward wife to King Fernand of Arragon after Queene Isabella's death. Hauing then contented the Vicount, and King Charles busied in his journey to Naples, John Lord of Albret, and Queene Catherine his wife, went into Nauarre, leading with them great troupes of souldiers, for feare lest the Constable should rebell, who held the citie of Pampelona in such sort at his command, as he disposed of all matters there, as if he had beene King: and when the Princes came to the gates thereof, their entrance was denied, and they were constrained to lodge at Egues, where they remayned certaine dayes, vntill the Constable and his Faction were pleased to giue them entrance. In that Citie were the Estates assembled, and the King and Queene were crowned with the vsual ceremonies, in the presence of diuers Prelats, Knights, and the Ambassadors of diuers Princes. It was the last Coronation which was made in Nauarre in our time: for this kingdome beeing soone after in the Kings of Castiles possession, they would no longer continue such ceremonies, being content to receiue the oath of the Estates after the manner of Spaine. The titles of King John and Queene Catherine of Nauarre, were D Kings of Nauarre, Dukes of Nemours, Gandia, Momblanc and Pegnasciell, Earles of Foix, and Lords of Bearne, Earles of Bigorre, Ribagorça, Pontieure and Perigort, Viscounts of Limoges, Peeres of France, and Lords of the citie of Balaguer.

The yeare 1494. Cesar Borgia, who was after Duke Valentino, Cardinall and sonne to Pope Alexander the sixt, did by his procurators take possession of the perpetuall administration of the Church of Pampelona, by the decease of Don Alphonso Carrillo the Bishop, and by the grant of the Pope his father: and the yeare following 1495. Princessse Magdalen of France dyed, who was mother to Queene Catherine, in the same citie of Pampelona, who accompanied her daughter to her coronation, and had euer vertuously employed her selfe about the conseruation of her childrens estates for the space of fise and twentie yeares, all which time she had liued in holy widow-hood: her bodie lies buried in the great Chappell of the Cathedrall church of the same citie. About that time Queene Catherine visited the King and Queene of Castile at Alfaro, by whome she was greatly honoured and welcommed, as befitted so great a Princessse: and we reade of none other occasion of her coming thither, but onely for to see them.

Now after that the King and Queene had made themselves masters of the Citie of Pampelona, the chiefe of the Kingdome, and of many other places which they feared, they were obeyed and reuerenced by the most part of their subiects, and strongly accompanied with Knights and men at armes, they did call to remembrance many rash actions committed by the Constable Lewis of Beaumont, as well against King John of Arragon, and Queene Leonora their Grandmother, as against King Francis Phelias and themselves, namely, that the Beaumonts had denied to open them the gates of Pampelona, with other such recent occasions, whereupon they began to persecute him very sharply, so as the Realme of Nauarre was againe in as great confusion as euer it had beene: the two old Factions not forgetting to make vse of any occasions that might hurt one another: the which stormes were in some sort quietly calmed by the mediation of King Fernand

to
The last coronation at Na-
uarre.

Cesar Borgia
Cardinal Bishop of Pampelona.

of Castile & Arragon who procured this agreement, that the Constable Lewis of Beaumont his brother in law should withdraw himselfe into Castile for a certaine limited time, in which meane space either part should lay by their armes, and that the said Constables goods and lands should be laied in deposito in King Fernands hands. And in this sort the Constable left Nauarre, but he lost nothing thereby, for King Fernand gaue him twice as much reuenue as he had before, and made him Marquis of Huescar in Granado. The name of open warre ceased in Nauarre, but they left not of committing of many murthers and robberies without feare of law, for that nation had beene a long time accustomed to such outrages in contempt of the law; the which waxed still worie thorow King Iohn and Queene Catherines negligence, who by euill counsell, and particular afflictions, vnworthy of soueraigne Princes, did at the last bandy themselves in leagues one against the other, the King taking part with those of Beaumont, and the Queene with the Grammontois whereof infinite miseries ensued.

During these troubles Gonsalo Fernandes de Cordoua, surnamed the Great captaine, hauing ioyned the forces that hee brought from Spaine with those that King Fernand had, who was driuen forth of Naples, and beeing accompanied with D. Hugo Cardona the Sicilian, did to handle the matter as after that King Charles was departed forth of the Kingdome hee recouered Calabria from the French, and draue thence the Lord Aubigni who was gouernor in those marches, notwithstanding that soone after hee received an ouerthrow by him neere to Seminara, where King Fernand of Naples had like to haue beene taken prisoner: after which Gonsalo Fernandes hauing made his retreat to Rijsles, where he stood a certaine time on his defence, and beeing afterwards re-enforced with new supplies out of Sicile, and a navy of three score and tenne ships brought from Messina by King Fernand, hee had courage and meanes to beseege and make himselfe Master of the city of Naples, with her castles, and draue thence Lord Guilbert of Montpensier, whom King Charles had left there for gouernour and Lieutenant Generall, making such sharpe warre vpon the rest of the French that were left there, as King Fernand in short time was restored to his Kingdome, by the valour, prowess, and discretion of this great captaine: which when Don Alphonso vnderstood, who of a King was become a Monke in Sicile, hee laboured to recouer his former dignity: but his sonne who was in possession thereof, and who had valiantly employed himselfe in the recovery of that which his father had carelessly lost, would not giue it ouer: wherefore Don Alphonso did not liue long after in his monasticke state, for hee died this yeere 1495.

The succesfull exploits of the Spaniards in the Kingdome of Naples did greatly reioyce King Fernand and Queene Isabella, who beeing at Tortosa, did agree vpon the marriage of Prince Iohn their sonne and heire to the Kingdome, with Marguerite of Austria, daughter to Maximillian then Emperor, who was sent home, as hath beene said, by Charles the French King: and by the same meanes the marriage was concluded betwixt Philip of Austria sonne to the said Emperor and Donna Isabe, second daughter to the King and Queene of Castile and Arragon. These Princes and Princesses which were married, brother and sister to the brother and sister, were very nere of kinne by the line of Portugall: for Donna Isabella of Portugall, wife to Duke Philip of Burgondy, was mother to Duke Charles father to Mary, who was mother to Philip and to Marguerite of Austria.

And on the other side D. Leonora of Portugall the Empreffe, wife to Frederike, mother to Maximillian, father to Philip and Marguerite, was cofin getmain to King Fernand, daughter to Donna Leonora of Arragon, sister to King Iohn his father, the which Donna Leonora was wife to King Edward of Portugall. These treaties being made, the King made some stay at Tortosa, and then returned into Castile: but they were not long there, till the King was constrained to returne to Tortosa to take order for the warre which the French had raised in the Earldome of Rossillon: for King Charles beeing highly moued that the King of Castile, contrary to the agreement and promise which hee had made him, had sent aide to the King of Naples, fought against his armies and townes which hee had conquered, had sent a mighty army to

Lewis of Beaumont made Marquis of Huescar.

II
Castile.

Exploits of Gonsalo Hernandes of Cor-doua surnamed the Great captaine.

D. Alphonso
from a King become a Monke, striueth in vaine,
from a Monke to become a King.

Alliances betwixt the houses of Austria and Castile.

12

VVarrs betwixt the French and Spaniards in the Earldome of Rossillon.

13

A to the Pirenean hills, the which did assaile Sausses, defended by Captaine Bernard Francis, who was ouer-come and taken, and almost all the Spaniards were cut in peeces in the sight of the Spanish Armies, commanded by Don Henry Henriques Earle of Alua de Lista, and by the King himselfe, who was come as farre as Gyronc, thinking by vaine shewes to cause the French to retire: the which they did, but it was because winter drew on, and for want of victuals, the enemies Armie being in the like necessity. Sausses beeing forsaken, dismantled and burnt by the French, a truce was taken for foure moneths. Among other men of name which dyed at the taking of Sausses were Don Diego de Azucedo, and Pedro de Solis: the same hapned the yeare one thousand, foure hundred, ninety and sixe.

Queene Isabell remaining at Burgos, gaue order for the Iourney of her second daughter Don Isabe into Flanders to Phillip of Austria, vnto whom shee was promised, and for the same purpose shee caused a great Nauie to be rigged in the Porte of Laredo, whether shee came in person, after shee had celebrated the obsequies of Queene Isabell her Mother, who dyed at the same time at Areualo, hauing liued a widow the space of two and forty yeares, troubled with sicknesse both of body and minde, whose body beeing then laide in the Monasterie of Saint Francis of Areualo, was afterward transported to the Carthusians in the City of Burgos, called Mirefleur, where King Iohn her husband was buried. The same yeare dyed in Guipuscoa Don Iohn de Gamboa, a personage full of yeares and honour, who was Maister of the horse to the Kings of Castile, and of their Councell, Captaine generall of the frontiers of France and Nauarre, and gouernor of Fontaraby. This Knight left onely two daughters, one of which was married in Guipuscoa in the family of Sarauz, and the other into Biscay into that of Arceaga: the Queene gaue the conduct of the Nauie, and of the Infanta Donna Isabe her daughter, to Don Frederick Henriques high Admirall of Castile her Vnckle, beeing accompanied by Donna Maria de Velasco the Admiralls Mother, with other Lords, Ladies and Gentlewomen, who beeing shipped, the Queene went back to Burgos, and from thence into Cattalonia to ayde the King her husband.

In the meane space, the great Captaine continued the warre on the one side, and King Ferdinand on the other in the kingdome of Naples, who were resisted in Calabria by Eberard Stuard Lord of Aubigni, assisted by the faction of Aniow, and with a few French forces which were left him, and in the territorie of Lauoro by the Lord Guilbert of Montpensier Lieutenant generall to the French King, in the same kingdome, who was besieged in the City of Auerfa by King Ferdinand and the great Captaine both together, and was brought to such extremitie, as hee promised, if within thirre dayes hee were not succoured, to yeeld vp all that the French men held in the kingdome of Naples, excepting Gaietta, Venosa and Tarentum, which were in the hands of strangers, vpon condition that they would furnish him with shippes to carry him and his people into France: there fell afterwards great sicknesse among the men of warre on either side: and Lord Guilbert of Montpensier dyed at Pozzuolo with other French Lords, and there dyed likewise on the enemies part diuerse men of note, as namely King Ferdinand, who had for successour his Vnckle Don Frederick of Arragon, brother to Don Alphonso. King Frederick stayed not long ere hee besieged Gaietta, during which siege the Lord D. Aubigni rendred the places which hee held in Calabria, by whose example Gaietta, Venosa and Tarentum were yeilded, and King Frederick by that meanes recouered all the realme of Naples.

In this warre all the Potentates of Italy shewed themselves enemies to the French, the Florentines excepted, who thought by the meanes of the Frenchmen who held Pisa, to bring that Citie into their subiection. And the warre beeing ended, Pope Alexander did sharply persecute the Vrsins, friends and seruants to the house of France, and the chiefe of that family Virginio Vrsino, an excellent Captaine, of all which matters, King Ferdinand and Queene Isabell of Castile were aduertized to their great contentment.

The beginning of the yeare one thousand, foure hundred, ninetie and seauen, the Kings beeing in the City of Burgos, they receiued aduertisement that the Armie of Castile

Sausses taken by the French.

1496.

Queene Isabell the Dowager, sick both in body & minde.

Death of Don Iohn de Gamboa.

The Infanta Don Isabe voyage into Flanders.

All the Potentates of Italy enemies to the French except the Florentines.

1467.

Frier Francis Ximenes Archebish. of Toledo.

Castile was returned, which had conducted the Infanta Donna Joane, wife to Philip of Austria, and brought Margueret, sister to the said Philip, betrothed to Prince Iohn, who were married in the same City, Frier Francis Ximenes of Cissneros Archbishop of Toledo and Primat of Spaine doing the ceremony: and they had for their God-father Don Frederick the Admirall, and Donna Maria de Velasco his mother for their God-mother. The feasts and magnificences were great and pompous, whereat dyed Don Alphonso de Cardega second sonne to Don Gutierrez de Cardega, great Commander of Leon.

The wedding being ended, the Court came to Medina del campo, where Christopher Columbus arrived as a prisoner by the slanders and accusations of the Spaniards his enemies, who were impatient of discipline, the most envious of whom was Frier Buil, who came back the same time into Spaine: nevertheless the Kings thinking it an unseemly matter that such a personage should yeeld account of his actions in quality of an offender, they did absolve him of the great rigor which hee had executed by justice on the Spaniards, with commandement thence-forward to vse those more gently, who did crosse so many seas to doe them service, and they willed him to returne to the Iudges, they being highly contented with the reports which hee made of the great riches and wealth which those countries yeilded: whereof hee brought them proofes of golde, Brazil, mother of Pearle, Amber, pretious Feathers, Indian tapstrie, and other strange things: They did againe rigge forth eight ships for him, furnished with men and victuals, two whereof hee sent away before laden with victuals and weapons to his brother Bartholomew Columbus, who had begun to builde the Cittie of Saint Domingo, vpon the riuer of Ocamia in the Island of Hispagunola: hee with the other sixe parted from Saint Lucar de Barameda, and beeing arrived at Madera, vnderstanding that there were French Pirates at sea that watched for him, beeing drawne thither by the renowne of the wealth of the Indies, hee sent onely three of his shippes directly to the Island of Hispagunola, and hee with the other three sayled towards the Isles of Cape vert, tending to the Equinoctiall, and after great traual of heates, and calmes, hee arrived at Paria the firme land of those West Indies: then coasting three hundred and thirty leagues vnto Cape de Velas, hee discovered and tooke note of all that countrey, D where are Cabo Anegado, the point of Salinas, Cubagua, otherwise called the Isle of Pearles, the point of Araya, Cumana, Chirivichi, the Gulphe of Cariari, Curiana, Saint Roman, Venezuela Coquibocoa, and other places, from whence hee passed to the new City of Saint Domingo, and there was receiued for Gouvernour, to the great griefe of diuerse.

14 Columbus his third voyage
to the Indies.

This was the third voyage that Columbus made to the Indies, and then they had already begun to trade and negotiate with the Indians by force of armes: for the violent vse of them had made them become strange, and enemies to the Spaniards, so as they left off tilling of their grounds, and sowing of their Maiz, to the end to constrain them by hunger to leaue the contrey, and at the same time as these shippes arrived, great number of Indians beeing gathered together, did besiege the Spaniards of the Forte of Saint Thomas du Ciabo, who were put to flight by Alphonso de Hoiedo. Having then gotten the Cachique Coanabo into the Forte keeping him prisoner for the death of diuerse Christians, more then five thousand Indians assembled themselves, beeing conducted by a brother of his, for to deliuer him, who were likewise defeated by Hoyeda, having but a hundred Spaniards in his company, and some amongst them were horsemen, the which made the Spaniards to bee greatly feared, and much more afterward when Bartholomew Columbus by night defeated fiftene thousand Indians, tooke fiftene Cachiques, and a Generall about all the rest named Guarioux, all which hee set at libertie vpon their words and promises to continue subiects to the Kings of Castile.

Enterprizes vpon the Indian Moors.

Besides these conquests in the Indies, the Spanish Nobilitie, who seeing that there was no more warres in Spaine against the Infidells, began to enterprize vpon the neighbour shoare of Affrick, and this yeare the City of Melilla, neere the sea in the kingdome of Tremessen, was taken by Don Iohn de Guzman, Duke of Medina Sidonia, who

A who led a sufficient army thither, at his owne costs and charges. This was the first place which the crowne of Castile did possesse in that country beyond the sea, which gaue beginning to the warres of Affrike, which continued afterward, and whereof wee will speake in his place. This exploit of the Duke of Medina was acknowledged and rewarded by the King, who lying at Valencia of Alcantara did treat the marriage of their daughter, the Infanta Isabella the widow, with the new King D. Manuel of Portugall, of whom we must discourse.

B D. Manuel the fourteenth King of Portugall.

This Prince succeeded King Iohn his cosin and brother in law in the crowne of Portugall the yeere 1465. being seuen and twenty yeeres of age: hee was sonne to Don Fernand Duke of Viseo, and of the Infanta Donna Beatrice, grand-child to King Edward, and great grand-child to King Iohn the first, whose aduancement to the royall crowne had bene fore-told by certaine Soothsaiers and Astrologians: he obtained it by right of lawfull succession, and by the testamentary appointment of King Iohn his predecessor: in whose life time he did in no sort take vpon him the title of Prince and heire of Portugall, but onely of Duke of Beja and Master of Christus. Hee was a iust King, and loued honour, religious and zealous in the faith which had bene taught him, vsing the Nobility kindly, the which hee increased and aduanced in his dominions as much as hee could: he was gentle, liberall and a great giuer of almes, especially to religious friers as well of his owne Kingdome as to strangers, diligent and carefull in the administration of iustice, an enterprizer, lucky in voyages, nauigations and discoveries of countries, whereby he greatly augmented and amplified his Kingdome and Siegnories: hee was beloued and esteemed as well of his owne subiects as of strangers: magnificent and sumptuous in buildings, which the royall monastery of Belen or Bethlem, of the order of Saint Ierosime doth beare witness of, edified for the buriall of the Kings: the castle of Belen, which stands almost in the riuer of Tayo, for the garde of the Port of Lisbon; the Monastery of Saint Mary de la Pegna of the same order of Saint Ierosime neere to Sintra, and that of Saint Clare the New in the towne of Estremos: all which workes were by him built from the foundation; and hee did moreover restore and augment the couents of Saint Francis of Lisbon, Eboria and Saint Iren. The bridge of Coimbra, and that of Oliuena vpon Guadiana are likewise of his structure, with diuers others publike buildings and reparations: all which vertues and magnificencies were blemished by one vice, wherevpon Princes and great Lords doe often stumble, namely, he was to light of belcefe. Whereby hee shewed himselfe inconstant and variable, retracting on euery small occasion his decrees, orders, gifts and priuiledges by contrary commandments.

15
Portugal.

Qualities of King Manuel.

Buildings of King Manuel.

This King Don Manuel was thrice married, and all his wiues were Infantaes of Castile, and the two first were sisters: his first wife was Donna Isabella, widow to the Infanta Don Alphonso his Nephew his sisters sonne, on whom hee begat a sonne named D. Michel, who was borne in Arragon in the city of Saragossa at such a time as shalbe set downe hereafter, who if hee had liued, had bene heire to all Spaine: Donna Isabella being dead, his second wife was her sister, called the Infanta Maria of Castile, third daughter to King Fernand and Queene Isabella by whom hee had a great issue. First of all, D. Iohn heire of Portugall borne at Lisbon in the pallace of the Riuer, the Infanta Donna Isabella borne in the same city, who was Queene of Castile, Leon, Arragon and Nauarre, and Emperesse of Germany, married to Charles the fifth. Donna Beatrice who was Dutchesse of Sauoy, wife to Charles the ninth, and mother to Duke Emanuel Philibert of Sauoy, D. Lewis borne in Abrantes, father to D. Antonio who was at strife for the kingdome of Portugall with Philip king of Spaine in our time; next D. Henry, who in our time was a Cardinall, borne likewise in Abrantes on the riuer of Tayo, D. Alphonso

Genealogie of
Portugal.

Alphonso who was borne in the city of Eborā, and was likewise made Cardinall at seuen A yeeres of age by Pope Leo the tenth; Don Catherine who died young, then D. Fernand, Don Edward and Don Antonio. His third and last wife was Donna Leonora daughter to Philip of Austria, Infanta of Castile, and sister to the Emperour Charles the fifth, by whom he had a sonne named Charles who died young, he had moreouer by her a daughter, borne after his death, named Donna Maria, who liued in great chastity in our daies:
So as this King had by his three married wiues thirteene children liuing, namely nine sonnes and foure daughters: This Prince comming to the crowne hee erected diuerse Earledomes for the ornament of the Nobility of Portugall, hee gaue that of Portalegre to Diego de Silua his gouernor, who enioyed but the title onely, for the Inhabitants B of Portalegre did defend themselves, by reason of their priuiledges: hee made Don Vasco de Gama Admirall of Portugall Earle of Bediguera, Don Martin de Castil-blanc Earle of Villanoua, Don Iohn de Meneses Earle of Taroco and prior of Saint Iohns, Don Rodrigo de Merlo Earle of Tentugall, Don Pedro de Castro Earle of Montsancto, Don Françisco de Sofa, sonne to the Bishop of Eborā Earle of Bemiofo, and Don An- tonio of Portugall Earle of Lignare, honouring in that manner, by liberality and royall bounty the Nobility of Portugal.

At the instant entreaties and requests of the widow, Queene Leonora his sister, and of the Dutchesse Donna Isabel, widow of Bragança, hee restored to the honours and goods of the deceased Duke, D. James, vntil then in exile in Castile, who was the C Dukes second sonne, for Don Philip the eldest died in Castile, because the Princes of his Dukes should not liue in such calamity, and that so noble a race might not faile in Portugall: he shewed the like grace and bounty to diuerse other Lords, who were absent, for offences committed against the crowne, albeit that the new Duke D. James had for his owne part no way offended, but had run into his fathers disgrace who was executed by law. For a notable and religious act, as he and his counsel thought, he gaue commandement that all Iewes and Moores should voide forth of Portugal, vnlesse they would bee baptized, confiscating their goods, and children of euery sex, excepted vnder thirteene yeeres of age, whom by force he caused to be baptized, but beeing afterwards better ad-uised, hee retained onely the men and women of those sects by force, causing them to D receiue baptism, and to confesse Iesus Christ with their mouthes, but, as it is to bee presumed, without beleeuing it in their hearts, and people constrained, and not wel instructed, the which did beget infinite apostacies, sects, and heresies in Portugal, as it could not fall out otherwise.

Following the steps of his predecessor King Iohn, hee sent men into the parts of the East to make ample and certaine information of the trafficke of spices, and hee caused Don Vasco de Gama to pursue the nauigations and discouery of the shores of Affrike, who departing from Lisbon this yeere 1497. with two ships, the one named the Angel Gabriel, the other the Angel Raphael, manned with a hundred and E forty men, coasted about Affrike, and touching at the Isle of Saint Iames, and that of Saint Helen, places by him so named, hee came into Maçambuque a country of the Moores, and from thence, by a long and tedious journey passing hard by a rocke, which hee called Saint George, and by the shelues and sands of Saint Raphaell hee arriued at Mombaga a land fertile, pleasant, and of great trade and commerce, then going forward he came to the city of Melinde, in the which hee had not only some rest and refreshing from his painefull journey, but did likewise contract peace and alliance betwixt the King of Melinde, and King Manuel his Master: at the last sayling farther, he came to Calicut the place so much desired which was the aime of his enterprize. He found Calicut to be a great and wel peopled city, and of great trade for spices, he saw in the haven more then a thousand fine hundred saile of marchants ships, great and small, but ill built and vnserui- F ceable for long voyages, without art in their sailes, anchors and tackling, nor vsing the compasse, and wholly vnfit for sea fights, not beeing able to saile vnlesse they had a fore winde.

Now King Manuel beeing such an one as wee haue described him, and in his florishing age, the marriage betwixt him and the Princesse Isabella of Castile, who was

A was a widow was concluded at Valencia of Alcantara, at the same time as Prince Iohn of Castile newly married to Marguerite of Austria fell sicke of the disease whereof hee died at Salamanca: the which caused King Manuell to hasten the effecting of this marriage: because that after Prince Iohn, the succession of the Realmes of Castile and Arragon fell to Donna Isabella as to the eldest. Therefore hee vsed such diligence as the marriage was accomplished before the Prince his death, who deceased to the great griefe of the kings his father and mother, and of all their subiects, having not fully attained to the twentieth yeere of his age, and was buried in the Monastery of S. Thomas of the frier preachers in the city of Auila. All the Gentlemen, Knights, Lawiers, and other men of note in all parts of Spaine, did in signe of mourning for his death cloath themselves in blacke frise, or such like course cloath of meane price. The Princesse Marguerite his widdow, who was with child, was brought in bed soone after in the towne of Alcala de Henares of a dead daughter. King Fernand beeing the first that receiued these lamentable newes, fearing lest the Queene his wife would fall into some great perplexity for the losse of an onely sonne, heire to so great a state and of such young yeeres, did determine to send her newes that he himselfe was dead, and then when shee should enter into teares and lamentations, to come into her presence at the same instant to comfort her, and then plainely to tell her the truth of their sonnes death, imagining that a sodaine consolation betwixt two extreame griefes, would greatly moderate both the one and the other: the which tooke good effect, by the good reasons and examples which hee alleadged vnto her. By Prince Iohns decease, Donna Isabella his sister was Princesse of the Asturias, and eldest heire to the Kingdomes of Castile and Aragon.

This yeere died Don Iohn Arias de Villār, who was Bishop of Ouedo, the which place was giuen to Don Garcia Ramires de Villa Escusa, last perpetual prior of Saint Markes of Leon, and euer afterward the Priors of that place were but from yeere to yeere. There died also by a lamentable chance, the Court beeing at Alcala, Don Lewis
Pimentell Marquis of Villa-franca, eldest sonne to Don Rodrigo Alphonso Pimentell
Earle of Benauent, who fell downe to the ground out of a gallery. Don Diego of Castile great commander of Calatrava did likewise die, and his commandery was giuen to Don Gutierre de Padilla Treasurer, and his place to Don Alphonso de Silua, brother to the Earle of Cifuentes. Now the new Queene of Portugall, Infanta of Castile and Aragon, hauing right to so great a succession by the death of Prince Iohn her brother:
it behoued the King her husband and her selfe to passe into Castile, to receiue, in quality of future heires to those Kingdomes, the oth of the States: therefore leauing the widow Queene Leonora Regent in Portugall, they came to the city of Toledo the yeere 1498. where Queene Isabella of Portugall was sworne, and acknowledged Prin-cesse of the Asturias, heire to Castile and Leon: then going into Arragon, the like was done for the succession in those Kingdomes. But this Princesse being with child, shee was brought in bed and died in the city of Saragossa, leauing heire to all her fathers and mothers dominions, the child newly borne if he had liued, who was called D.
Michel, who in that infancy was sworne Prince of Girone and heire to Arragon and Si-cile. With this sorrow D. Manuel returned a widower into Portugal, leauing his only sonne in Saragossa. The dead Queenes body was brought to Toledo and buried in the Monastery of Saint Antolin, which is a parrish Church where were Religious Nuns, which was builded by Don Agnes d Ayala, wife to the Admiral of Castile, grand-mother to King Fernand. And afterward because of this Princesse, which was there buried, it was called the Monastery of Saint Elizabeth, and the parrish remooued to Saint Markes which was of the number of the Musarabes.

F About this time Lewis the twelfth of that name, before Duke of Orleans hauing succeeded Charles the eight in the crowne of France, and hauing his thoughts wholly bent to dispossesse Duke Lewis Sforza of the Duchy of Milan, which hee said was the ancient maternall inheritance of the house of Orleans, peace was granted to King Frederike of Naples, and an agreement procured betwixt France and Castile: therefore

Earldomes created in Portugall by King Manuell.

D. James restored to the Duchy of Vasco and to his fathers goods.

Jewes constrained to be baptized.

16
D. Vasco de Gama a Portugal Captaine in Calicut.

17
Castile.

Death of Prince Iohn of Castile.

General mourning.

A good means to comfort an extreme for-row.

An. 1498.

D. Michel that new borne Infant sworne heire of Arragon.

On to the Infant D. Michel for the future succession of Castile.

D. Mencía de Mendoza wife to Earle Henry of Nassau.

18

The brothers Columbus brought backe against prisoners into Spaine.

Pero Nugno voyage.

The voyage of Vincent and Arias Pinson.

Portugal.

fore Don Gonzalo Hernandez surnamed the great capitaine, returned out of Italy into Spaine, full of victory and honor. The Court being come to Ocagna, where Queene Isabella found her selfe somewhat well at ease the yeere 1499. the Infant Don Michel was sworne Prince of the Asturia's, and heire to Castile. There arose a great quarrel in Ocagna amongst the courtiers, wherein Don Alphonso Pimentel, sonne to Don Iohn Pimentel was slaine.

The Court comming to Madrid, the marriage was celebrated betwixt D. Rodrigo de Mendoza the first Marquis of Zenete, a widower by the death of his wife D. Leonora de la Cerda Marquise of Zenete, onely daughter to the Duke of Medina Celi, and Donna Maria de Fonseca, daughter to D. Alphonso de Fonseca, of which marriage was borne a daughter and heire called Mencia de Mendoza, who was wife to Henry Earle of Nassau.

The affaires of the Indies grew worse and worse, the Spanish arrogancy not being able to endure a bridle to restrain them in their disorders, for Rowland Ximenes from a seruant being become great Prouost and President of iustice in the Indies, by the fauour of the Admiral Christopher Columbus, did openly mutiny against Bartolmeu Columbus the gouernour, and with threescore and tenne of his confederates, hee sequestred himselfe and went into Xaragua, protesting that hee did not forsake the Kings seruice of Castile, but onely his obedience to the Geneuois, whose pride he could not beare: the Admirall endeouored by all meanes to appease this tumult, but he could not, wherefore they fell to writing one against an other into Spaine, and to lay great offences to each others charge, so as the Kings sent Francis de Bouadilla, a Knight of the order of Calatrava with foure caruels, with ample power and authority to the Indies to make information of these matters, who being arriued in the Island of Hispanuola, found, after enquiry made in the city of Saint Domingo, that the two brothers Columbs were in the fault, therefore hee apprehended them, and sent each of them in a caruell prisoners in fetters into Spaine.

Being landed at Cales, the Kings hauing notice of their arriual, caused them to be set at liberty and to come to Granado where the Court then lay, where notwithstanding their iustifications, the government of the Indies was taken from them. And so the Admirall remained three yeeres in Spaine, without returning to the countries by him discovered. The Kings the same yeere gaue leaue to Pero Nugno borne at Palos de Moguer to goe to the Indies with a ship and thirty mariners, on condition that he should not land, nor come neere the lands discovered by Christopher Columbus by fifty leagues: who being arriued at Parias, and hauing well noted the coast even to Curiana, which is nere to Venesuela, he landed in Curiana, where he found the people to be simple, with whom he exchanged his pedlery ware of smal value, for very precious pearles. This Pero Nugno being returned into Galicia was accused by his own fellowes, and had a long suite before Hernando de Vega Lord of Grayales viceroy in that country. Other inhabitants of Palos Moguer, who had bene in the voyages of Christopher Columbus, and had enriched themselves were desirous to saile againe to the Indies, as namely, Vicent James Pinson, and Arias Pinson his nephew, who at their owne charges hauing victualled and rig'd foure caruels, they passed by Saint Iames his Isle, one of those of Cap-ver, and arriued at the Cap of Saint Augustin, a country very thicke of trees, amongst the which they found one that sixteene men could not fadom, where they wrote their names, and thole of their King and Queene in token of possession: then coasting along the shoares (not without danger) where they thought to land, in regard they found there very fierce and barbarous Indians, they came to the mouth of the great riuier Maragnon, in the gulphe of Parias, and to that of the riuier Oreillana, which are the greatest in the world, and doe runne almost euer vnder the Equinoctiall: the which riuier of Oreillana the Pinsons hauing sailed, and spent tenne monthes in those nauigations; they returned into Spaine with two caruels onely laden with brail and drogues, but no gold nor pearles.

Don Vasco de Gama arriued likewise this yeere in Portugal from his voyage of Calicut laden with spices, which hee had bought at a cheape rate, from which place hee departed

A parted in the month of September of the precedent yeere, captaine Nicholas Coelho going before from the Cap of good hope to bring the King of Portugall good newes thereof, after whom the said Vasco arriued, who was most graciously welcomed, and largely rewarded for his trauaile which lasted six and twenty monthes, and of all the men which he carried out with him hee brought home fifty onely. The Portugalls from that time, did ordinarily saile to the East Indies.

This yeere the Princeesse Margueret of Austria widow, parted from Spaine to returne into Flanders, afterward shee shas married to Philibert Duke of Sauoy, by whom hauing had no children, after his death she remained a widow, and gouerned the country of Flanders a long time: the Monastery called Brunes neere to Bourg in Bresse, was builded by her. The Court being at Granado, Queene Joane of Naples, widow to the late King Fernand the first came thither, shee was sister to King Fernand of Castile. In her company was the Cardinall Lewis of Arragon, sonne to Don Roderigo of Arragon bastard to the King her husband: and in Flanders the Infanta Donna Joane wife to Philip of Austria was brought in bed of a daughter named Leonor, who was Queene of Portugall, married to the King Don Manuel and afterward to the great King Francis of France.

King Fernand and Queene Isabella being come from Granado to Siuil, being moued with zeale to religion, and the better to obtaine the title of Catholike Kings, by the counsell also of the Prelats, and namely of frier Francis Ximenes de Cisneros Archbisshop of Toledo, frier Thomas of Torquemada, the chiefe Inquisitor of Spaine being deceased a while before, they vndertooke the voluntary and forced conuersion of the Moores, contrary to the promises and capitulations made vnto those which yielded during the warres, whereof great troubles ensued.

The Archbisshop Ximenes was at Granado to assist frier Hernand of Talauera a little before made Archbisshop of Granado, who laboured to procure that conuersion to be voluntary, without vsing constraint. But hee of Toledo imagining that the other had proceeded ouer gently, did beginne to presse the Moores that were inhabitants of the Albayzin after his owne humor, giuing hard speeches to such as would dispute of religion with the Monks and Curats, who thought to conuert them: and then comming to deeds, he laid hands vpon a chiefe Moore of the familie of Zigrí, who was descended from the Kings of Granado, and kept him so long in prison as to recouer his liberty, hee said that hee was contented to beleue in Iesus Christ, and that hee had had a vision which did assure him that it was the right way of saluation. Hee sent after that, one of his household seruants named Sazedo, with a Prouost that was very ill beloued to apprehend a woman dwelling in the same Albayzin, but both of them were there slaine. Diuers Moores being gathered together at the womans cries, who after the deed ranne to the Archbisshop of Toledos lodging to haue done as much to him: but he and his people did valiantly defend themselves vntill the Earle of Tendilla the Gouernor came and freed him from them: the which Earle with the Archbisshop of Toledo delt in such sort as the murinous people were appeased, and their Alguazils were heard, who protested that they did not rise against the King, but onely to hinder the breaking of the Articles agreed vpon, which were, not be enforced to change their religion.

This was the first attempt of the Moores conuersion, with no small daunger and tumult, which lasted tennedays. The King hauing notice of what was done, was highly moued against the Archbisshop of Toledo; but hee contented him with reasons wherewith hee was not vnfurnished, and caused him to allow and approoue to haue them conuerted by force: for at the report of what the Moores of Albayzin had done, those of the mountaines, and of the country called Alpuxarres did fall into a mutiny, to chastice whom they were constrained to proceed by armes the yeere following 1500. In the same yeere Pope Alexander the sixth, celebrated the tenth Iubiley at Rome, whether people of sundry Nations went in great numbers: and they beganne to conuert the Moores of Granado, this yeere where diuers of them did

N n n n

19 Moores slaine
deciates enforced to change their religion.

did mutiny: neuertheless more then fifty thousand of that sect receiued the water of Baptisme, and their Mosques were blessed and consecrated to ceremonies and vses accustomed amongst the Christians of that age: those amongst them who would not change their religion at the Kings command, were constrained to doe it by force of armes, and because the townes of Huescar, Lanjaron, and Andarrax in the country of Alpuxarras did make the greatest resistance, the inhabitants being enforced were made slaues. And the same yeere was borne in the city of Gaunt vnto Philip of Austria and Donna Ioane of Castile vpon Saint Mathias day, a sonne named Charles, who was heire to all the Kingdomes of King Fernand, and Queene Isabella his grand-father and grand mother, and Emperour of Almaine, the fifth of that name, a great and an excellent Prince. It is reported that when the newes of his birth was brought to Queene Isabella his grand-mother, she in a propheticall spirit of his future vniuersal succession in the great dominions of Spaine, spake these words, taken out of the Acts of the Apostles, The lot is fallne vpon Mathias, noting thereby, that Don Michel of Portugal then liuing should not inherite, but that it should bee hee who was borne vpon Saint Mathias day: the which in deed fell out to be happy for the Emperour Charles, it is the foure and twentieth day of February.

Birth of Charles of Austria who was King of Spaine and Emperour.

Saint Mathias day lucky to Emperour
Charles.

Nauarre,

20

King John of Nauarre his iourney into
Castile.

King Fernand being returned from the Catholike warre of the country of Alpuxarras in the Kingdom of Granado vnto Siuill, hee was visited by John d' Albret King of Naurre, whom hee welcomed with great honour and curtesie, for the space of seuentene daies that hee remained there. Diuers busineses moued this Prince to come into Castile, but there were two of greatest importance, for hee imagined to get againe the townes of La Garde, Arcos, Saint Vincent, and Bermedo, the castles of Toro and Herera, and other places of La Soterra which the King of Castile possessed of the antient patrimony of Naurre; hee did moreover, in the right of the late Queene Blanch of Naurre, first wife to King John of Arragon, and great grand-mother to Queene Catherine then reigning, and by grant made in the contract of her marriage, demaund the Infantaigo of Castile, the Duchy of Pegnafiell and Lordship of Lara, with many other lands, and therewith all the sonne of 420112 florins, sixe shillings eight pence of the coine of Arragon: for which matters King John d' Albret and Queene Catherine of Naurre being at Pau, had not long since sent two Franciscan friers in Ambassage to the Kings of Castile, who were men of vnderstanding, namely frier John de Padre Warden of Corella, and frier John de Ro, warden of Tafalla, with ample instructions to obtaine them: but they brought away nothing but pleasing words and dilatory excuses. Besides this businesse, the suspicion which they had of the Earle of Lerin did greatly trouble them, who was newly come into Castile, and was much honoured and aduanced there, and it was reported to them that King Fernand had often times solicited him, to make ouer vnto him all the lands, goods, rights and actions which hee had in the Realme of Naurre, promising him treble recompence for them in Castile; the which the Earle had neuertheless refused, either for the naturall loue which hee did beare to his country, or else that hee did better esteeme the place which hee held, almost as King of Naurre, then to bee in Castile, where diuers others tooke place before him as it was fit: These two chiefe occasions caused the King and Queene of Naurre to depart from Pau, whether they were goone as soone as they had newes of King Charles the eight his death, and to returne into Naurre, where the Queene remained gouernesse assisted by frier Pedro Eraso Abbot of the Monastery of Oliua: King John d' Albret went to Siuill to bee resolu'd by King Fernand concerning these busineses, to prevent the inconueniences which he feared, and to renew the peace, friendship and alliance betwixt those two Kingdomes: Hee was highly honoured, as hath bene said, by the Kings of Castile, and lodged with them in the fort of that magnificent city: and the more to gratifie and reuerence him the Constable, the Earle of Lerin, was forbidden to come into the castle.

King Fernand
desirous to get the Kingdom of Naurre.

It is reported that King Fernand caused the King of Naurre to bee sounded whether he thought well of the exchange which hee desired to make with the Earle of Lerin of

of the lands which he possessed in his Kingdome, for other recompence in Castile, and that hee would giue King John d' Albret a good summe of money, if hee would consent that those lands should remaine to Castile: who notwithstanding the euill will that hee did beare to the Earle of Lerin, vttered his opinion concerning it, which was, that a man should neuer exchange lands and reuenues for money. King John d' Albret got no other matter by this iourney but good cheere, and diuers presents of rich plate, hangings, horse, iewels, and other such like things: wherefore hee returned into his Realme of Naurre, leauing the matters hee went for vn-effected. The Earle of Lerin Constable of Naurre being at that meeting reconciled to him did follow him and staid in Naurre, certaine monthes in good quiet. We haue made mention how that Cardinall Cesar Borgia, sonne to Pope Alexander, had the Bishoprike of Pampelona in nature of perpetuall administrator thereof, hee resigned the same to the Cardinall of Saint Praxede: hee laide aside likewise his Cardinals hat, and followed the warres wherevnto he was more inclined then to Church matters, and was made by his father Duke of the country called in old time Flaminia, and Gonfalonier and capitaine Generall of the Church, this was the Duke Valentino.

A man should neuer exchange lands for money.

Cesar Borgia,
made Duke Valentino.

In these daies beganne the warre which in proceesse of time did subiect the state of Milan vnder the dominion of the Kings of Castile. King Lewis the twelfth, of the house of Orleans, pretending that the right of that Duchy belonged vnto him as the proper inheritance of the Duchesse Valentine his grand-mother, lawfull daughter to Duke John Galeas Viscont, and heire to her two brothers John Maria, and Philip, successiue Dukes on after an other, who died without children, hee gaue ouer all thought of the conquest of Naples, the right of the house of Aniou, and turned his forces against the Duke then reigning, Lewis Sforza vsurper of that state, whereat not onely the Potentates of Italy, hating the French dominion, were discontented, but they drew the Spanish forces to the defense of Prince Sforza, wherein chiefly King Frederike of Naples employed himselfe, soliciting King Fernand, and Queene Isabella by continuall messengers and letters to oppose themselves by all meanes against the greatnesse of the French in Italy, who if they should obtaine the Duchy of Milan, hee did assure them that they would passe on to Naples, and after that into Sicile which was their antient right: Therefore it was concluded in the counsell of Castile, to send backe Don Goncal Hernandez the great capitaine; who tooke shipping at Malaga the eight of Iuly, this yeere 1500. and led into Italy, eight thousand foot, and twelue hundred horse, where being arriued, to auoide idlenesse, hee went ouer with his army into the Isle of Zante in old time Zacinthium, in the Illiri an sea, to the end to aide the Venetians oppressed by the Turkes army, which had taken from them Modon, Coron, Crisse, and Pila in Morea, and the Island of Cephalonia, in which the Spanish army ioyned to the Venetian, commanded by Benedetto Pezaro, did land, and there behaued themselves so valiantly, as they brought againe that Island vnder the Venetians power, the army of the Turke Bajazet then reigning, being gonne to Constantinople. The Venetians in acknowledgement of which seruice did honour the great capitaine with the title and priuiledge, of a Gentleman of their commonwealth, a thing rarely granted by them vnto strangers, who brought backe his army victorious to Messina, wayting for an occasion to employ it to the preiudice of the French.

During these stirres, the Court being at Granado, there died the Prince Don Michel heire to these Kingdomes, to the great grieue of the Kings of Castile his grand-father and grand-mother, and of King Mannell his father, hauing not exceeded the age of two yeeres, who lies buried in the chappell of the Kings, since then builded in the same City: By his decease the Infanta Donna Ioane, wife to the Archduke Philip had right to the succession of these great Estates; and so consequently the lotte fell vpon her sonne Charles borne on Saint Mathias daie, as Queene Isabella had fore-told, the Archduke and Donna Ioane his wife being called vpon that occasion, prepared themselves for their iourney into Spaine. The same yeere died Don Inigo Lopes de Atendoza, second Duke of Infantaigo, who was buried in the

21
Castile.

VVars of the French against Lewis Sforza.

22
Portugal.

D. Ioane wife to the Archduke Philip, presumptiue
heire of Castile and Arragon.

Conuent of Saint Francis at Guadaluja, King Manuel being a widdower and without children, contracted marriage with the other sister of his deceased Queene named Donna Marie, third daughter to the King and Queene of Castile, by whom he had many children, as hath beene heretofore declared. The new Queene of Portugal departed from Granado in the monthes of September this yeere 1500. and was conducted to the King her husband by D. Diego Hurtado de Mendoza Archbishop of Siuill and Patriarke of Alexandria, who was afterward Cardinall, with diuers other Lords and Knights.

Castile.

23
The Moores
persecuted in Spaine, so caused them to turne to Christian religion.

Cruel execution of the Moores at Benisique, Nixar, &c.

Warrenned
by the persecu-ted Moores.

The conuersion of the Moores of the Kingdome of Granado, begunne by King Fernand and Queene Isabel, was so greatly by them desired as they would not depart out of that country till they had brought it to such passe as they intended: the Moores on the other side nor being instructed, and seeing diuers contempts of religion, and infinite euill examples amongst the Prelats and in all the Ecclesiasticall Hierarchy of the Christians; they thought it a strang matter to be enforced to change their religion which they thought to be holy, and that they should so perfidiously breake the agreements and promises, vpon which they had yeelded themselves to the Kings of Castile: wherefore they made all the resistance possible: Neuertheless the inhabitants of Las Alpujarras, those of the cities of Almeric, Guadix and Baça, did in some sort fashion themselves to the Kings religion: but those of Benisique, Nixar, and Guijar, ranne to armes and resolved rather to die then to bee so euill intreated: wherefore they were constrained to send an army thither, by which those townes were taken by force and cruell slaughter made of the inhabitants: namely after the fury of the fight, the Kings caused all the male children, which were of age to beare armes, to be executed by law, and as for the women they were all sold for slaues; and this was done to quench the bloody thirst of the prelats and monkes, counsellors and solicitors of that ill vnderstood conuersion. Yet for all that, after the fury was past, the King caused the children of either sex amongst those miserable people vnder eleuen yeeres of age to bee separated and baptized, giuing them their liberty as innocent of their fathers obstinacy. This rigour was so farre off from fearing or abating the courage of the rest as they thereby became more stubborn: their being no spurre in the world more sharpe, then religion, to make men giue ouer and contemne life, and all other things to be beloued in this world, when they are constrained to take armes for that respect: for diuers Moores dwelling vpon the coast of Ronda, La Sierra Vermeille, and Villa longa: being brought to the last hope of beeing able to liue in the freedome of their consciences, and to keepe their old religion, did arme themselves, to the number of twelue thousand persons, which caused the Kings to thinke that they were entred againe into a very difficult warre, and that the conquest of the kingdome of Granado was not yet ended.

And because it behoued them to giue a present remedy to this fire which kindled, they dispatched away Don Alphonso d' Aguilar, and the Earle of Vregna, with as great forces as the present necessity could furnish: but Don Alphonso who was old, and a well experienced captaine, protested that with so small a number, he could doe the King no seruice, but should receiue losse and dishonour; for the Moores were foure to one of his people: neuertheless being vrged to it, he marched against the enemies, who keeping themselves close together, and in strong places, would not giue the least advantage to the Christians; for whom they laide waite in the valleies and streight places of the country, well knowne to themselves, to the end to surprize and defeat them, the which came to passe: for the Christians being lodged one night at the foote of Sierra Vermeille, in such a place as Don Alphonso's troupes were separated from those of the Earle of Vregna by a great botome which was betwixt them, the Moores at the shutting in of day-light fell vpon Don Alphonso and his people with such fury, as they cut them all in peeces, Don Alphonso himselfe lay dead vpon the place: his sonne Don Pedro, hauing his reeth beaten out with the blow of a stone, and hurt with an arrow, with great difficulty escaped at the beginning of the fight, the Earle of Vregna beholding the slaughter of his friends, not being able to succour them by reason of the

A the botome that lay betwixt them, or else because hee would not, as diuers did thinke, for euer among great Lords, and chiefe commanders vnder one Prince are enuy, iazozie, and emulation found, which cause such effects to the losse of their Prince and commonwealth.

King Fernand did greatly apprehend this losse, as also Don Alphonso's death, the which could not bee imputed to rashnesse: for he had protested that such resolute men as those Moores were, who were in their forts, ought not to haue beene assailed with such weak forces: and that they knew very well, the common proverbe, which saith, that for to fetch a dead man out of his owne house, there must alway bee foure, how much more then did it behooue them to goe strongly accompanied against those with whom he had to doe, who were living men, souldiers, and well armed: It is reported that as he was assailed, diuers Knights were of opinion to turne their backs and to flee, but he would needs make head, saying, that neuer any of his race did turne their backs to a Moore. Wherefore being kept backe by shame and dishonour hee sustained that conflict, whereas hee might haue made an excusable retreat. Now the King being in a mercurious chollor, departed from Granado against these Moores, with an intent to punish them rigorously: but perceiving that it is euermore harder to execute then, to counsell, hee was content to permit them to passe ouer into Africke, and to leaue the country: by this meanes after sundry defeats and slaughters on either side, he obtained his desire, and returned to Granado, where the marriage of D. Catherine his fourth daughter with Arthur Prince of Wales, heire to the crowne of England, was treated of. This Princesse tooke her journey towards her husband the yere 1501. accompanied by Don Alphonso de Fonseca, Archbishop of Saint Iames, Don Antonio de Rojas Bishop of Majorque, who was afterward Archbishop of Granado and President of the royall counsell, and D. Diego Fernandes de Cordoua Earle of Cabra: and at the same time Queene Ioane, the widdow of Naples, sister to King Fernand, tooke her leaue of him and withdrew herselfe to Valencia: The Archduke Philip of Austria making preparation for his voyage into Spaine, was father of his third child, Donna Ioane his wife beeing brought in bed of a daughter named Donna Isabella. This Princesse was wife to Christierne King of Denmarke, hee who was deposed by his vnckle Christierne King of Swethland, taken by him, and kept in perpetuall prison: by which Christierne shee had two daughters, that is to say, Dorothy, future wife to Frederike Earle Palatin, and Elector of the Empire, and Christine, who was married to Francisco Maria Sferza, Duke of Milan the yeere 1534. who died the yeere after; shee was secondly married to Francis Duke of Lorraine, father to Duke Charles who liues in our time. After that King Christierne was deposed from his owne Kingdome, for inuading that of Swenia: this Princesse D. Isabella, went into England, where her Aunt Donna Catherine was married, and then she died being six and twenty yeeres of age.

Whilest these things passed on in Spaine, the French King Lewis the twelfth, did luckily end his enterprife of Milan, and did shut vp into close and perpetuall prison Duke Lewis Sforza, surnamed the Moore, the Author of all the warres and ruines of Italy in his time: the which King Frederick of Naples considering, hee was moued partly by feare, least he should againe haue to doe with the victorious French armies, partly not to oblige himselfe ouer much to the Kings of Spaine, and not to giue occasion to the Spanish insolency to grow ouer saucie in his Kingdome: and namely because King John of Arragon, and Don Fernand his sonne, had at one time called in question the late King Alphonso his testamentary decree, whereby hee had left that Kingdome to his bastard sonne, incapable thereby (as they said) of so great an inheritance: wherefore hee beganne to haue secret intelligence with the French King, whereof King Fernand was soone aduertized: who thought, that hee was very ingratfully delt withall and ill requited for all his cost bestowed in the recouery of that kingdome out of the French mens hands: and he imagined that hee should not transgreffe either diuine or humane lawes, if he reputed that conquest to belong to him selfe; and if hee should ioyne this action to that which his father and hee pretended in the said Kingdome by reason

N n n 3

Particular crimes attaining captains of one side sides, and times cause the probable cause to be forgotten.

Vnreasonable
ma-nanimity of D. Alphonso de Aguilar.

24 Sforza taken
by the French.

Earles of Oropeſa, Miranda, and Benalcaſar, Crugna, Siruella, Ribadeo, Fuençalida, A Ajamonte, and others, with the Procurators, and Commiſſioners of all the citties and prouinces of Spaine, which haue place in ſuch aſſemblies. This oath beeing made for Caſtile, King Fernand was deſirous to haue the like done for the Kingdome of Arragon Caſtile, King Fernand was deſirous to haue the like done for the Kingdome of Arragon and dependancies thereof: and ſo he iourneyed towards Sarragoſſa, leauing the Queene with the Princes at Toledo, who went to paſſe away the hotte time of Iuly and Auguſt at Ocagna, recreating themſelues in the pleaſant forreſt of Aranjués neere to the river Tayo: and from thence they departed to Sarragoſſa, where by the Eſtates they were like- Tayo: and from thence they departed to Sarragoſſa, where by the Eſtates they were like- B wiſe declared and ſworne Princes of Gironne, heires to Arragon, Valence, Cattalognia, Sicill, and other Countries belonging to that Crowne. The Queene in the meane time ſtaying at Toledo, remooued to Madrid, where ſhe beganne to be euill diſpoſed of her perſon, which cauſed king Fernand to haſten his returne to her, the Princes deſiring to follow him, did ſeparat themſelues, becauſe the Princeſſe was with child, wherefore ſhee remayned at Sarragoſſa, and the Prince went to Madrid. Theſe matters fell out, the yere 1502. where in dyed the Cardinall Diego Hurtado of Mendoza in the ſame cittie of Ma- drid. Don Iohn of Eſtuniga, who had bene Maſter of Alcantara, and afterward was Car- dinall ſucceeded him in the Arch-biſhoppricke of Siuill. The Marquis of Denja dyed like- wife. The precedent yere, about the time that the Princeſſe Catherine departed into En- gland, Don Iohn d Arias del Villar dyed, who was Preſident of Vailladolid, and Biſhop of Segobia, in whoſe place ſucceeded Doctor Iohn de Medina, Biſhop of Carthage- C na. There dyed alſo D. Lewis de la Cerde, firſt Duke of Medina Celi, ſonne to Earle Gaſton. The Prince of Wales, huſband to the Infanta Catherine, died likewiſe this yere; and the Cittie of Gibraltar was re-uniſed to the Crowne, and another perſecution was raiſed a- gainſt the Moores.

Before the Kings of Caſtile departed from Siuill to come to Toledo, they had ſent an Ambaſſadour to the Souldan of Egypt, who was as Emperour of Arabia, acknowledged then for Soueraigne, ouer all the Kings of Affricke, who had bene informed by the Kings of Tremecen, Fez, Bugie, Tunis and others, of diuers rigors and inhumanities ex- erciſed vpon the Moores and Iewes dwelling in Spaine, which that Prince did greatly recent. The Ambaſſadour ſent thither was called Peter Martyr Angleria of Milan, Deane D of Granado, a learned and well-experienced perſon, vnto whom were letters of credite and inſtructions giuen, how to appeaſe the Souldan, and to perſwade him otherwiſe, then he had bene before informed: Wherefore he went by Venice, where the Seigneu- rie provided him of a ſhippe to carrie him to Alexandria: there he found diuers Chriſtian Merchants, with a Conſul, who was a Cattelan by nation, by whom hee was well enter- rayned. The Warden of the Monafterie of mount Sion beeing aduertized, ſome few dayes before of his coming, ſent him word, that he would meeete him at Cairo: there- fore Peter Martyr ſent certaine Friars before to Cairo, whom he had brought with him, for to receiue that Friar Warden: and to obtaine a ſafe-conduct for his owne perſon and trayne from the Souldan, to the end to declare his Ambaſſie vnto him. The father Warden E and his Friars beeing arriued at Cayro found a Truch-man or Interpreter there who was a Spaniard borne at Momblanc in the Realme of Valencia, vnto whom hauing gi- uen notice of the Ambaſſadors arriuall at Alexandria, and demanded the ſafe-conduct, the Souldan granted it, and ſent word to the Gouvernor of Alexandria, whom the cal Ad- mirall, to cauſe him to be conducted in ſafetie. But the Monkes hauing vnderſtood by their conferences with the Truchman, how ſiniſterly the Souldan was poſſeſſed againſt the Kings of Caſtil, by the reports of the Moores of Granado, and the Iewes which were expelled out of Spaine, they did aduertize him to be well aduiſed what he did, and to fore- ſee the danger he had put himſelfe in, by comming to the preſence of that angry Prince, whoſe anſwer, perhaps might be death: but the Ambaſſador was no whit amazed thereat: F but ſayd, that it would be a great happineſſe for him to die in ſo honourable a cauſe: ſo he tooke his iourney, going againſt the ſtream of the riuer Nilus, accompanied by diuers Mameluke ſouldiers, which were Chriſtians renied, or children of bought Chriſtians, in whoſe hands lay the government of al the affairs of Egypt, and namely, out of their bands was the Souldan choſen.

Being

26
The king of Caſtile ſends an Ambaſſade to the grand Cairo.
Peter Martyr
of Angleria Ambaſſador.

Mamelukes in Egypt.

A Being come to Caire, he was longed in the ſayd Truchmans houſe, and then the day following, he was ledde to the Caſtle to the Souldans pallace, and paſſing thorough di- uers galleries full of Mamelukes, he was brought into an hall where the Souldan taried for his coming: Hee found him ſitting vpon a bed of State, like vnto women, made in faſhion of an altar, clothed in a gowne of ſkarlet with large ſleeues ſurred with Martins, and vpon his head a rich Turbant, with two hornes after a ſtrange faſhion, and a ſword neere vnto him, being compaſſed about with diuers Gouvernours of Prouinces, which they called Admirals. Before this Emperour, the Ambaſſadour preſented himſelfe, appa- B relled in a coate of blacke ſattin, and a gowne of purple veluet, kneeling vpon one knee, the Monkes and other Chriſtians which followed him, kneeled on both their knees and hands, as though they would haue kiſſed the earth, then riſing vp, and going on neerer by two and two paces, they made three ſuch reuerences: then ſtanding vpon their ſecte, the Ambaſſadour went a little forwarder neere to the Prince, and hauing made a fourth reuerence, he ſtood vp, and preſented the Kings of Caſtils letters of credit to the Truch- man, the which beeing opened and read with diuers ceremonies, the Souldan told him, that hee was welcome. Then the Ambaſſadour making a great reuerence, told him, the Kings his Lords and Maſters had ſent him thither to ſalute and viſit him, in their name, and to offer him whatſoeuer was in their power, excepting that which belonged to Chri- ſtian Religion, and that he had commandement and inſtruction to communicate diuers C buſineſſes with him, Wherefore he beſought him to be pleaſed to giue him audience in a more priuate manner: the Souldan answered him, that he was contented to do ſo, and told him, that if in the meane time he wanted any thing, he ſhould ſpeake, and that what- ſoeuer he demanded ſhould be giuen: The Ambaſſadour hauing againe thanked him, and ſayd, that he could deſire no more fauour and courteſie then hee had already recei- ued, then tooke his leaue and returned to his lodging; whether the Souldan ſent him di- uers preſents of meares.

Three dayes after, the Ambaſſadour accompanied by the Truch-man, was brought againe to the Pallace early in the morning, before the Ambaſſadors of the Kings of Af- fricke and the Moores were riſen, and finding the Souldan at leiſure, he gaue him ſecret audience, where he answered very pertinently to all the Souldans demaunds, and did D highly content him, and this conference betwixt them laſted till two of the clocke in the after-noonne, all the contrarie Ambaſſadors beeing come to Court, in hope to ſee the Spaniſh diſgraced: but they were deceyued, for they beheld him returne to his houſe ve- ry honourably accompanied. Afterward, the Moorish Ambaſſadors in two ſeueral au- diences, preſſing and accusing the Kings of Caſtile, Peter Martyr did ſo well diſguiſe and handle the matter, as he perſwaded the Souldan, that whatſoeuer his aduerſaries had ſaid, was but meere vntruths: Wherefore hee beeing ſent backe againe the ſame time, the Truchman procured a fourth audience, wherein the Ambaſſador of Caſtile being heard E almoſt an whole day, did in ſuch manner content and ſatiſfie the Souldan, as hee procu- red his fauour and friendſhip for his King and Queene. And as hee was going forth of the Souldans preſence, two Admirals cloathed him with a gowne of Damaske ſurred with very rich Ermines, (it was in the moneth of Februarie) for which hauing giuen thanks, and made his vſual reuerences, hee returned with his trayne. In this manner are the faults of great men excuſed by great men. Before *Peter Martyr*s departure, he feaſted and banqueted the Admirals and chiefeſt Mamelukes, ſo as they were highly contented with him: and departing from Cayro, he went to viſit the notable places of Egypt and Syria: of which voyage and ambassage hee wrote a diſcourſe at his returne. This is hee which wrote an hſtorie of the Indies by Decades in Latin, which he entitled, The Ocean, vnto the yere 1526. He returned into Spaine with honour, and gaue good account to F the Catholicke Kings of his Legation.

The nauigations to the Indies were this yere very common, diuers particular perſons, tickled with a deſire of gaine, vndertaking thoſe dangerous voyages at their owne coſts, by the Kings permiſſion notwithstanding. Rodrigo de Baſſidas was one of thoſe aduenturers, who ſet forth two Caruels at his owne coſts, and *Iohn de Ledesma*s and others, carrying with him Iohn de la Coſa, an excellent Marriner borne in Saint Mary port,

Admirals Gouernours of Prouinces.

27 Voyages of di-uers particular perſons to the Indies.

Nicholas d'Onando Gouver-nor of the Indies.

The Governour
Bouadilla drowned, with three hundred Spaniards.

Columbus his fourth and last voyage to the Indies.

Columbus foretells an Eclipse of the Moone to the Indians to scare them.

28
Portugal.

port, who departing from Cales, sayled neere to Cape de Vela, and ranne one hundred A three score and tenn leagues vpon the coast from that Capeto the Gulph of Vraha, and Darian, in which are found Caribana, Zenu, Carthagena, Zamba, and S. Martha, places inhabited by people called Caribes, who feed on mans flesh, without law or naturall honestie, beeing armed with darts and poysoned arrowes. Rodrigo de Bassida beeing afterwards come to the cittie of Domingo, did lose his Caruels there, and was committed to prison by the Commander Francisco de Bouadilla, Gouvernor of the Iland of Hispagniola, laying to his charge, that he had trafficke with the Indians for gold, defrauding the king of his right: wherefore he sent him prisoner into Spaine: but the kings set him at libertie, knowing that this voyage was for the publike good, and gaue him 200. Duckets B of rent. Nicholas d'Oonando, Commander of Larez, of the Order of Alcantara, a valiant Knight, did by the kings commandement, set sayle, with thirty shippes, and a great company of souldiers, to succede the Commander Bouadilla, taking along Rowland Ximenes in his company, the enemy and accusers of the breethren Columbus, did embarke himselfe in the same vessell, which had brought the new Gouvernour, whereof Antonio de Torres was Captaine, hauing with them more then an hundred thousand Duckets weight of gold, and among others, a graine of pure gold to present vnto the Queene, weighing 3. thousand, three hundred Castillans: but their hap was such, as both they and their wealth perished by sea: the Admirall Columbus, and his brother beeing by that meanes reuenged of the great rigour that Bouadilla had vsed towards them, by fending them from the In- C dies in yrons into Spayne, and of Rowland Ximenes ingratitude and rebellion, with whom were drowned more then three hundred men, so as of those thirty ships, hardly sixe elca-
ped. Nicholas d'Oonando remained in his gouernement of the Iland of Hispagniola, the space of sixe yeares, all matters succeeding well and prosperously with him, by reason of his humanity and gentleness: he conquered the Prouinces of Higney, Zauana, Guaycarima, he pacified that of Xaragua, and vsing all his authoritie with such courtesie and mo-destie, he got honour and wealth for himselfe and the Kings his masters, vnto whom hee sent great treasures, in recompence whereof he was made great Commander of Alcantara. Then was the Admirall Columbus permitted to go to sea, who departed with foure Caruels set forth at the Kings cost, with an hundred, three score and ten saylers: but be- D eing come to the mouth of the riuier Oçman in the Iland of Hispagniola, the Gouvernour Nicholas d'Oonando would not suffer him to come into the city of S. Domingo: wherefore he sayled to the port Escondido or hidden, and after came to the riuier and cape of Figures: from whence he ran more then three hundred and seuentie leagues alongst the Sou-therne coast, desirous to find a passage beyond the Equinoctiall, he came to a place called Nombre de Dios, and from thence returned to Cuba, and fourth-with passed to Iamaica where he lost two Caruels.

In this Iland the Admirall had many crosses, for most of his people fell sicke there to the death, then they mutined, and would haue slaine one another, Francisco de Porras, E Treasurer of his nauie being author of that sedition: and besides that, the Indians refused to giue him victuals, which did greatly trouble him: for this he found a present reme-die, and beeing a good Astronomer, he knew that the day following, there would bee a great Eclipse of the Moone, he told the idolatrous Indians, that if they gaue him not vituals, they should all of them die of the plague, and for a true token thereof, they should the morrow after see the Moone appeare all bloudie; the which by reason of the Eclipse, became duskie and spotted: the Indians were to greatly amazed thereat, as they befought the Admirall to pardon them, and to reconcile them to the Moone, and brought him more victuals then he had need of. Hauing remained a yeare in Iamayca, the Admirall Columbus returned into Spayne, from whence he neuer afterwards did stirre: this was his fourth and last voyage to the Indies.

The same course held king Mannuel in his navigation to the East Indies, wherein hee spared no cost: for hauing had ample information of the whole voyage of Calicut by D.
Vasco de Gama: he had sent thither in the yeare 1500. a Nauie of twelue Carauels, vnder the command of Captaine Pero Aluarez Cabralde, a Gentleman of Portugal, followed by other Gentlemen manned with fiftene hundred souldiers, carrying along with him fue

A fue Friars, and good store of merchandize, to exchange for spices, and other things which the East produceth, all of it according to the order and appointment of Don Vasco de Gama.

These Caruels hauing sayled in view of the Ilands of the Canaries, and arriued at S.
Iames, as they discovered the Ile of Brefill, there appeared to them a Comet with long and fearefull beames towards the East: continuing their voyage, there arose so great and strange a tempest, as by day the water of the sea seemed as blacke as pitch, and in the night like to fire, which swallowed foure of those shippes, the rest of the Nauy sayling on in great danger, came in sight of Cape Double, and from thence arriued at Mosambique, then sayling towards Melinde, and beyond that to Anjauina, they came at last within a league of Calicut: from whence he beganne to contract with the King of the same coun-trie: but afterwards they fell at oddes, which caused losse to either of them. Vpon this occasion, Pero Aluarez Cabralde, went into the land of Malabar, belonging to the King of Cochin, with whome he agreed, and found meanes to laide his ships with spices: and so returning homewards, he touched at the cape of Good hope, and from thence to Lis-bone, where he arriued in Iuly, in the yeare 1501. with sixe Carauels of twelue, that hee carried ouer with him, hauing bene in that voyage neere sixteen moneths.

Before his returne John de la Nueva Gallego, departed from Lisbon with three shippes and a Caruell for the selfe same voyage of Calicut: but King Mannuel conceyuing in his mind to find a way to the Isles of Moluccos, and those countries where the spices grow, C he sent the same yeare 1501. a skillfull marriner called Americus Vesputius a Florentine, with foure Carauels, who passed not much farther then Saint Augustines Cape, and without taking notice of the great riuier of siluer, or Rio de Plata, he returned home.

The yeare 1502. Don Vasco de Gama, Admirall of Portugal, was againe sent by the King into the East, with thirteene shippes, and three Carauels, manned with great numbers of Gentlemen and souldiers, with Merchandizes, munitions and victuals, and all other things necessarie for so long and painefull a voyage: and within few dayes after, hee sent other five shippes to follow Don Vasco, commanded by Stephano Gamo. By these were new lands discovered, to the great profit and commodity of the nations of Europe.
D This same yeare King Mannuel had by his wife Queene Mary, a sonne called John, who succeeded him in the Kingdome, the day of whose birth was rainy, and such thunder and lightning on the day of his christening, as the Royall pallace was in danger of beeing burned.

And the yeare following 1503. his daughter the Infanta Isabella was born, who came to be Empresse of Germany, and was mother to king Philip the second deceased. Don Vasco beeing returned from his luckie and prosperous voyage, king Mannuel gaue no intermission to that most profitable and honorable nauigation: but the Portugals hauing raised warre in the East betwixt the Kings of Calicut and Cochin, tooke the King of Cochins part, beeing by him receyued and welcommed into his countrie and hauens: so as he of Calicut did in short time know, that he had greatly erred in wronging his guests.
E The yeare 1504. King Mannuel hauing notice of this warre, was displeased therewith, and set forth a Nauy of twelue great shippes, Don Lopes Suares de Merefes beeing Admirall of the same, who arriued in safetie at Cochin, by meanes whereof they did greatly en-crease the renowne of the Portugals, and established the trafficke, purchasing their King friends, not onely among those Easterne people, but also tributarie Princes for his seruants. These conquests were pursued by Ferdinand of Almeida, and Alphonso of Albuquerque, and other vertuous and valiant Capitaines, which haue continued those voyages since, and by meanes thereof haue carried some knowledge of the name of Iesus Christ to those barbarous and vnbeleuing people.

F The Court of Castile lying at Alcalá de Henares, the yeare 1503. the Princeesse D.
Isabe was there brought in bed of a sonne, who was named Don Ferdinand, who was king of Hongarie and Bohemia, and at the last Emperour. In Alcalá dyed Don Gutierrez de Cardena, great Commander of Leon, a most faithfull seruant to the Kings, who would haue giuen the great Commanderie to John Lopes of Leçarraga their Treasurer, but he refused it, saying, that he had already too much wealth: hee likewise refused the place

1501.

Voyage of John de la Nueva a Portugal.

An. 1502.
Don Vasco de Gama his second voy-ge.

Birth of prince
John of Portugal.

An. 1503.
Birth of Infanta Isabella.

An. 1504.
Voyage of Lopes Suares de Merefes.

29
Castile.

place of generall Superintendent of the Kings reuenues, and left behind him the report A of a loyall, faithfull, and iust man in all his affairs: he was borne in the towne of Ognate.

The affaires of Italy not succeeding prosperously for the Kings of Spaine, they began to resolute vpon somewhat that might bee hurtfull to the French: The great Capitaine kept himselfe in Barletta, being constrained to retire himselfe thither, and wanting all necessarie things: so as the French foraged the countrey at their owne pleasure: but at the last hauing new supplies, as well from Sicill, (from whence Hugo de Bonarides B entred into Calabria, with certaine companies of Spaniards, which had serued the Duke Valentino, when hee warred vpon the Vrsins, with intent to haue made himselfe Lord of Romagna) as also from Spaine, from whence the King sent Don Manuel de Bonarides B with certaine numbers of horse and foote: with which troupes Antonio de Leua did first passe into Italy, who was a famous Capitaine in the warres of Lombardy and Piedmont, betwixt France and Spaine, and likewise after that other Spanish companies arrived vnder the conduct of Don Pedro Puerto Carrero, who dying in Italy, hee left his men vnder the command of Ferdinand of Andrada, who hauing receyued by the gulph of Venice some Germaines, which had bene leauied by him, hee employed these forces in such sort, being sometimes diuided, and sometimes vnited, as hee soone restored all things, and suppressed the enemy by the winning of many victories, Spayne hauing alwaies after that time the advantage. Yet they had treated an accord betwixt the two Kings, Lewis C and Ferdinand, and had sent Ambassadors to that end, but without any effect: vntill that the passage and the returne of the Arch-duke Philip Prince of Spayne, into Flanders, gaue some greater hope of an agreement. This Prince passing thorough France in his returne, as he had done going, was honorably receiued in all places, especially at Blois, whereas King Lewis attended him, who, to vse the Arch-duke with greater courtisie, and to assure him the more, had sent certaine French Noblemen into Flanders for hostages, vntill he were arriued, the which the Arch-duke caused to returne, being loath to yield vnto the King, in demonstrations of friendship and ceremonies. Being at Blois, they treated an accord betwixt the French King and him of Spaine, the Arch-duke Philip hauing an ample Commission, with this onely restraint, that hee should communicate all things to the Ambassadors of Castile, which were sent expressly with him, and shold D gouerne himselfe by their counsell.

Matters being debated, in the end they were concluded, by the confirmation of a future marriage betwixt the Ladie Claude of France, the Kings eldest daughter, and Don Charles of Austria, sonne and heire to great Estates which fell to the house of Austria: capitulating, that the Lands which were in question in the Realme of Naples, should be left in deposit, in the Arch-dukes hands, and the future spouses should from that time intitule themselves Kings of Naples, and Dukes of Calabria. That the French king should enioy that portion which did belong vnto him in the sayd Realme, and appoint whome he pleased, to gouerne it in the names of the Princes Charles and Claude, and that the marriage being consummated, he should giue it in dowrie with his daughter.

This peace was solemnly sworne in the Church at Blois, but yet it prouoed of no effect: for notwithstanding that the Arch-duke gaue speedie aduice vnto the Kings Don Fernand and Donna Isabella, yet they did not forbear to make warre in the Realme of Naples, whence they had daily intelligence that their great Capitaine prospered: wherefore hee being required by the Duke of Nemours, Lieutenant for the French King, to stay all acts of hostilitie, he answered, that hee had no such commaundement from the King Don Fernand his master, but continuing to make warre, as well in Calabria, as in other parts of the Realme, the French had alwaies the worst, hauing had two Armies defeated in lesse then eight dayes, one in Calabria, led by the Lord of Aubigny, who was then taken, with many other Noblemen: the other at Cirignole, whereas Lewis F of Armagnac Duke of Nemours, their Generall, was slaine with many French. By means of which victories the great Capitaine tooke Naples, Capua, Auerfo and Melfi, by composition, and in the end the two castles of Naples by mynes and other practises inuented by Peter of Nauarre: so as the French had nothing but Gayette, and some other small places remayning in the Realme of Naples.

The

Antonio de Leua his first passage into Italy.

Prince Philip in Flanders.

Treaty of peace betwixt France and Spaine.

A The kings of Castille being aduertised of these things, they little regarded the accord made by the Archduke their sonne in law, alledging for excuse, that he had exceeded his charge, and had not gouerned himselfe by the aduice of the ambassadors which went in his companie: Yet they sent embassadours into Fraunce, to treat a new peace, in a more honest forme than before, propounding, that the realme should be restored to king Frederic: But king Lewis holding them but mockeries, and that the kings of Spaine had no wills to dispossesse themselves, seeing that all things succeeded wishfully for them, he sent backe their embassadours without any other answer.

30 Before that the Court of Castille parted from Alcala, D. John Chacon, gouernor of the frontire of Murcia, died. From Alcala the queene came to Madrid, and from thence to Segobia, where she had news of the death of Pope Alexander, by poison which had bin prepared for certaine cardinals; by the duke of Valentino, his sonne, the which he also drunke, through the negligence of the cup-bearer, or butler, who tooke one bottle for another. Cardinall Francisco Thadeschin Piccolomini of Siena, succeeded him, who was called Pius the third; but hauing held the See but six and twentie dayes, there was chosen Pope Julian of Rouere, bishop of Alba, and then of Ostia, cardinall of S. Peter ad Vincula, whom they named Julio the second. In these elections of Popes, which are made through the fauour of the princes and great monarches of Christendome, for the interest of their temporall estates, the citie of Rome was in great feare and ielousie, that the great capitaine would approach with his victorious armie on the one side, and on the other the lord of Tremouille being sent into Italie, by the French king, with great forces, and assisted by Florentines, Siennois, the duke of Ferrara, and the marquess of Mantoua, either of them to fauour the cardinals of their faction, and to make a Pope by force, to the prejudice of the citie, and of the whole territorie. This yeare there were sixteene foists of Moores scoured the coasts of Valencia; who landing, mette vnto the riuer Xucar, assailed the towne of Cullera, carried away seuentie prisoners, and committed other spoils. The duke of Valentino, at his fathers death, was so ill with this drinke which he had taken, as he was constrained to be a neuter; as he had carried himselfe in the warres betwixt Fraunce and Spaine, yet adhering more to the great capitaine, for the designe which they both had D to inuade Tuscanie, when as the warres of Naples should be ended. Hauing entertained himselfe in fauour with Pope Julio, at his aduancement, they fell afterwards to quarell, for certaine places in Romania, held by the duke of Valentino, which the Pope would haue, so as the duke was staied at Ostia, meaning to imbarke, & to go to Specie, and from thence by Ferrara to Imola. Afterwards hauing in some sort satisfied the Popes desire, and being set at libertie, he retired to Naples, hauing a passport from the great capitaine, thinking to beverie safe there: whereas propounding many great enterprises, euen vpon Tuscanie, and beginning to make preparation to put his designe in execution, the great captain staid him prisoner, saying that it was by the commaundement of the king D. Ferdinand, to whom he ought more reuerence than to the passport he had giuen him, and so he sent him E into Spaine, where he was lodged in the castle of Medina del Campo, called la More. By this meanes the great capitaine kept this turbulent man from troubling the affaires of Italie any more. The armie led by the lord of Tremouille, being come into the realme of Naples, did nothing but increase the glorie and reputation of the great capitaine, who by a memorable victorie gotten at the riuer of Garillan, did there fettle the Spaniards commaund: for soone Gajete, which was the onely hope of the French, yielded, vpon condition, that all prisoners should be deliuered, and that the French might retire safely into France, who being naked, and vnprovided of all things, perished in a manner all by the way of hunger, cold, and other extremities. At the same time king Lewis hauing appointed two armies to inuade Spaine, one by Guipulcoa, the other by Cattelonia, that which F marcht towards Fontarrabie, wherof the lord of Albret had the charge, could neuer come together; the other led by the marshall of Rieux, entred by the countrey of Rossillon, and besieged Sausses, but not being able to take it, he was forced to retire, both for that he fell sicke, as also for that D. Frederic of Toledo, duke of Alua, Generall of the Spanish armie which was raised at Perpignan, began to march to raise the siege, king Ferdinand being also come in person into Cattelonia, to giue order for the affaires of this warre, the

O o o

which 1594 Excuses of the Catholike kings for not maintaining the peace.

Death of Pope
Alexander the first.

Quarrell betwixt Pope Julia and the duke of Valentino.

Duke of Valentino sent prisoner into Spaine by D.
Gonsalo.

Retreat of the French out of the realme of Naples, verie miserable.

Two armies of French in Spaine

1504

which afterwards had some intermission; by a truce of five monethes, which was made at the instance of king Frederic, who was not out of hope to returne into his realme: Which conceit was grounded vpon the demonstrations of fauour, were made him both by France and Spaine; which was but a vaine content, and a comfort to him in his miserable estate. This truce was afterwards continued for three yeares, both by sea and land, with free trafficke for all their subiects, except the French in the realme of Naples. For the great seruices which D. Gonfalo Fernandes, surnamed the Great Captaine, had done to the kings D. Ferdinand, and D. Isabella, in this warre, he obtained the duchie of Terra noua, and of Seffa, besides the duchie of S. Ange, which king Frederic had giuen him; when as he fauoured him, and the Constablarship of the realme of Naples. Pedro Nauarro had also for his good seruices, and in recompence of his great industrie during the warre, the countie of Albeto, in the same realme of Naples, neere vnto Aquin. This man from a small condition came to this greatnesse by his vertues: for his beginning being scarce knowne, he first of all went to sea, and was a mariner, after which he was a footman to the cardinall D. Iohn of Arragon, then a souldier, and in the end a famous captaine, and an earle. After the swearing of the said truce, there was a great earthquake throughout all Spaine, so the great terrour and amazement of all men, by the which many houses, churches, forts, and other buildings, were shaken and ruined.

D. Gonfalo Fernandes made duke of Terra noua and Seffa.
Pedro Nauarro made earle of Albeto: his beginning.

Earthquake in Spaine.

At that time, they say, the testament of the deceased king Henrie the fourth, was found by the diligence of Hernando Gomes of Herrera of Madrid, who having notice from the curat of S. Croix, of the same towne, that this testament was in the towne of Almeyda in Portugal, whither he had transported it with other writings of importance, he aduertised the queene, and by her commission went to Almeyda, with the curat, found these writings, and brought them away: In recompence whereof, the king made the bacheler Hernand, Alcayde, or Prouost of the justice of his house and court. The queene did not see this testament, as it is probable; for she fell extremely sicke, and after foure monethes languishing died, at Medina del Campo, in the yeare 1504, being 53 yeares old, and seven monethes, and the thirtieth yeare of her raigne. A princeesse adorned with great vertues, which may couer some excesse of ambition; & her other imperfections: she was zealous in religion, chaste, liberall, and courteous. Her bodie was transported to the citie of Granada, and remained long there in the Alhambra, in the habit of a Franciscane Frier, as she had ordained: And after the decesse of her husband, which was twelue yeares after, it was layed with his, in the royall chappell of that citie. That yere died D. Magdeleina, Infanta of Nauarre, in the same towne of Medina del Campo, being daughter to the king D. Iohn of Albret and Katherine, then raigning. D. Henrie Henriques, vncle to king Ferdinand, and his lord steward, and D. Pedro of Esluniga, cardinall, and Archbishop of Seuille, did also leaue this world: which Archbishopricke was giuen to Diego, of Deca, borne at Toro, being then bishop of Palence, a doctor in Diuinitie, and afterwards Inquisitor generall, Confessor to the king, and founder of the colledge of S. Thomas of Aquin, at Seuille.

Death of the Q. Isabella.

Bodie of the Q. Isabella in a Friars weed.

THE

THE 25 BOOKE OF THE Historie of Spaine.

The Contents of the 25 Booke.

- C 1 Voyage of Iohn Cofa, and of Fernando Cortez, to the Indies.
- 2 Expedition of Africke by the Castilians, and the taking of the great port of Mersalcahir.
- 3 Peace betwixt Castille and France, and treaties of marriage.
- 4 The Archduke Philip of Austria and D. Ioane his wife, part out of Flanders, so returne into Castille, and are stayed in England.
- 5 Death of Christofer Columbus. His posteritie.
- 6 D. Philip and D. Ioane his wife kings of Castille. Retreat of king Ferdinand into Arragon.
- 7 Voyage of king Ferdinand into Italie. Enterview of king Lewis and king Ferdinand at Sauonne.
- D 8 The duke Valentin being a prisoner in Castille, escapes into Nauarre.
- 9 Affaires of Nauarre. Disposition of the king D. Iohn of Albret. Contentions betwixt him and the queene his wife, for the faction of Nauarre.
- 10 Rashnesse of the earle of Lerin, Constable of Nauarre. Sentence and condemnation against him. Warre betwixt the king and the earle. Death of duke Valentin.
- 11 Exploits of Pedro Nauarro in Africke, in fauour of the Portugals.
- 12 Rashnesse of the marquisse of Priego punished by the king D. Ferdinand, Regent in Castille.
- 13 Sedition at Lisbone for religion. The mutines punished.
- 14 Search of the firme land at the Indies, by Alphonso Hojeda, and others.
- E 15 League betwixt the Pope, the Emperour Maximilian, king Ferdinand, and Lewis 12, the French king, against the Venetians.
- 16 Discouerie of the firme land at the Indies. Forts built there.
- 17 Expedition of Cardinall Francis Ximenes into Africke. The taking of the citie of Oran.
- 18 Warre against the Venetians.
- 19 Praefise of Pope Iulio against the French. Schisme in the Church of Rome. Counsell demanded by the French king.
- 20 Taking of Bugia, and other exploits in Africke, by Pedro Nauarro. Death of D. Garcia Aluarez of Toledo.
- 21 Behaviour of the Spaniards at the West Indies. Seditions among them.
- F 22 Progresse of the warre of Italie, made by the French against the Pope. Councell of Pisa, and a counter Councell at Rome, at S. Iohn de Latran.
- 23 Warre betwixt France and Spaine. A league betwixt the Pope, king Ferdinand, and the Venetians.
- 24 Continuance of this warre by the Pope against the French. Exploits of Gaston earle of Foix, duke of Nemours.

- 25 Pursuit of the king and queene of Navarre in Castille, to be restored to much of their patri-monie in that realme, but without any effect.
- 26 Measures used by the Pope and king Ferdinand, to dispossesse the king D. Iohn of Albret, and the queene D. Katherine his wife, of the realme of Navarre.
- 27 Measures used by the Emperor Maximilian, to abandon the French. Battell of Ravenna.
- 28 Confines againe set, betwix the twelfth the French king, and his realme. Retreat of king Iohn of Albret into France. Invasion of the realme by the Castellans. Pampelune taken by the duke of Anjou.
- 29 Exploits of Vasco Nugnes of Bilbao, and other Spaniards, at the Indies.

D. Philip I. and D. Ioane, 21 Kings of Castille, and 42. of Leon.

1504

He Castellans and Leonois, for want of their Queene proprietarie, D. Isabella, began to accustome themselves to the yoke of German princes, having presently servd in Castille the Armes of the Archduke Philip of Austria, and of D. Ioane, heire of these realmes in her mothers right; and D. Frederic of Toledo, duke of Alba, advanced these banners in their name: yet the king D. Ferdinand continued lawfull gouernour vntill the coming of these princes, who had aduertisement sent them presently into Flaunders of the Queenes death. The Archduke Philip was then six and twentie yeares old, faire of face, well proportioned of his members, of a good grace, mild and courteous in speech, of a great spirit, active, quick, and learned: by reason whereof being in him more then ordinarie, hee was furnished the Great. Whilest that he made preparation to come and take possession of this great inheritance, king Ferdinand, after the royall and stately obsequies of the deceased Queene, and the bodie transported to Granado with a great traine, he retired himselfe to the monasterie of Meiorada, and from thence hee past to Toro, being accompanied by D. Francis Ximenes, Archbishop of Toledo, Diego of Deza, Archbishop of Seuille, and others of great qualitie and learning, to conferre about the execution of the deceased Queenes will.

Voyage of Iohn
de Cosa.

In the meane time Iohn de Cosa, a good sea-man, rigged forth foure Carauels, out of port S. Maria, at his owne charge, and by Iohn of Ledesma of Seuille, and others, desirous to enrich themselves, vnder taking the conquest of that countrey at the Indies, which was held by the Caribes: Whereupon setting saile he came and toucht at a place called Carthagena, there being joynd vnto him captaine Lewis Guerres who beginning to make warre together, they tooke sixe hundred of these Barbarians in the island of Codego: then coasting along the shore, desirous to barter wares, and to buy gold, they entred into Vtuba, where they found some little gold in the sand; and from thence they returned into the island of Hispaniola, and the citie of S. Domingo, laden with men, but scant of victuals, and of all other things, especially of gold, whereof they were exceeding greedie.

Fernando Cortez voyage to
the Indies.

The same yeare 1504, there went vnto the Indies Fernand Cortez, borne at Medellin in Estremadura, one of the most famous men that hath beene in these conquests vnto our dayes. He arriued at S. Domingo in a ship belonging to Alphonso Quintero of Palos of Moguer, where he was well entertained by the Secretarie Medine, the gouernour being then absent, and afterwards by the gouernor Nicholas d' Ouando himselfe, being returned.
This was he which conquered Noua Hispania. Of the maners of the Indians, their idolatries, and damnable superstitions, the curious may be more amply informed by the particular histories of the Indies, written by Peter Martyr of Angleria, Gonfal Fernandes of Quiedo, Francisco Lopes of Gomara, and others.

During king Ferdinands gouernment in Castille, the Estate began to be troubled by some noblemen, who thought that queen Isabel being dead, they might lawfully tyrannise: but the king hauing called the Estates to Toro, in the yeare 1505, he caused a new oath to be taken to the queene D. Ioane his daughter, and to her husband, as kings of Castille, Leon, Granado,

1505

A Granado, &c. and by his wisdom pacified those tumults and disorders which were likely to grow: Which yeare, for many reasons, the Chauncerie which was at Cité Royall, was transported to Granado, where since it hath remained. And by the perswasion of D.
Francisco Ximenes, Archbishop of Toledo, and Primate of Spaine, there was an expedition attempted against the Moores of Africke, nothing concurring with the embassage which had beene sent to Caire, whereof mention hath beene made.

2 The Primate had had sundrie discourses with a Venetian, called Ieronimo Vianello, an industrious man, and knowing the countrey of Africke. His designe was vpon the citie of Oran, well peopled, free, hauing priuat lawes, rich, a common haue for all nations trafficking into Barbarie, who entertained an ordinarie garrison for the safetie of their marchandises, and payed some tribute to the king of Tremessen, for protection; and they say, that it contained about 6000 families. This citie is seated vpon the descent of a high hill, enuiroined about with wals and towers: the sea is within a stones cast on the one side, and on the other side they haue pleasant gardens, & store of fountains. The countrey men call this citie Madaura, Aera, Auran, Guhara, all names signifying a place hanging, and exposed to the winds: but we call it Oran. The Archbishop Ximenes did easily conceiue by Vianellos discourse, that it were labor lost to assaile that citie, if they were not first masters of the coast about it, whereof Vianello made him a model in wax, which represented vnto him the hauens, ports, hills, vallies, townes, rockes, forts, and other particularities of that

Description of Oran.

C countrey, namely, of the watch called the Lampe, which is set vpon the top of a high mountaine, the which is inaccessible, but by one difficult passage, whereby they must necessarily passe that will goe to Oran. This watch hath on the one side the citie of Oran, and on the other the port called Mercalcabir, or Marfael-quibir, great and famous, the which they must first get, to make the expedition of Africke profitable and easie. Hauing acquainted king Ferdinand with these designs, and seeing that there wanted money to effect it, the treasure hauing beene wasted in the warres of Granado and Italic, the Archbishop offered to lend money to pay the armie two monethes; whereupon they began to make readie for the voyage, whereof the young courtiers were verie desirous. The charge of General was given to D. Diego Fernandes of Cordoua, who afterwards was marquisse of Comares, who had for assistants D. Raymond of Cordoua, General of the gallies, Diego Vera, master of the ordnance, Gonfal Ayora, captaine of the gards, Ieronimo Vianello, conductor of the enterprise, Pero Lopes of Oresco, and other old captaines and of great experience: Who parting from the port of Malaga came within few dayes neere vnto Mercalcabir, whereas the Moores being aduertised of their coming, had prepared to receiue them. Wherefore as soone as the armie was discouered, they gaue signes in such sort as all Africke had soone notice thereof, and all the countrey was full of souldiers of that nation, which came to succour them. Notwithstanding the Spaniards woon the port, and landing, had meanes to campe, and to fortifie themselves from so great a multitude of enemies which came running from Oran and other neighbour places.

Mercalcabir a great port in Africke.

E To gard the port there was a fort built vpon a rocke enui-roned by the sea but of one side where it joynd to a mount that did commaund the fort; which the Spaniards seeking to win, and to plant their batterie thereon, they found a sharpe and bloudie resistance made by the Moores: notwithstanding they planted their ordnance there, and began to batter the fort furiously, both from thence, and from the gallies, vntill the captaine, who employed himselfe vertuously for the defence thereof, was slaine with a bullet. In the meane time the king of Tremessen had sent an armie, against the which the Christians had many skirmishes, sometimes with gaine, sometimes with losse; yet the siege of Mercalcabir continued still, whereat the souldiers being discouraged, by reason of the losse of their commander, and also for that they F saw the passages both by sea and land were stoppt by the Spaniards, so as they could neither be releued with men nor victuals, they did capitulate, after some resistance, That if within certaine dayes the king of Tremessen did not come and succour them, they would yeeld the place to the Spaniards; the inhabitants and souldiers departing with their wiues, children, and baggage. No succours appearing, the fort was yeilded the fiftieth day after they parted from Malaga. The Moores went forth, the Christian armie

Mercalcabir taken by the Castilians

O o o o iij

armie being in battell, and proclamation being made, that no man should goe out of his ranke, to offer them any violence vpon paine of death: the which a Spanishe souldier tried, who for that he had offered to spoile or rauish a Moorish woman, was by the commaundement of D. Diego Fernandes slaine with darts. This conquest being made to the great contentment of all men, the king D. Ferdinand, and the Archbishop Ximenes were instantly aduertised, where attending the kings pleasure, the fort was rampared and furnished. They say, that most of the men of qualitie and wealth, which dwelt at Oran, being amazed at the taking of Mersalcabir, retired to Tremessen, thinking that the Christians would not stay long to come and besiege that citie, as it fell out: But foure yeares being past, and nothing attempted, they all returned to their losse, except one Moore, who was verie rich, who was still constant to remaine at Tremessen, and foretold the ruine of the rest. D. Diego Fernandes having well manned his conquest with good souldiers, he sent back the rest of his armie into Spaine, which was full of joy for so important a victorie, whereby not onely the coasts of Spaine were assured from the spoyles of pyrats, Moores, but also there was a faire way made for the Spaniards to inuade Africke. D. Diego Fernandes stayed still in Mersalcabir, vntill he had a new commaundement from the king. In the meane time Diego de Vera, Gonsal Agora, and Pero Lopes Orofco, sumamed by the Arabians Alcagal, past into Spaine, and there was presented vnto the Primate Ximenes, by Pero Lopes, a staffe of Ebene, which the Cadis or high Priests of the Arabians were accustomed to carrie, the which he carried many dayes for his sake, and then he sent it to his Academie at Alcala de Henares, for a monument of this Africane victorie. The king sent D. Rodrigo Diaz of Roia, a man of great worth and valour, for the gard of the fort and port of Mersalcabir, with one hundred light horse, and foure hundred foot, and called home D. Diego Fernandes, whom he honoured with the gouernment of his conquest, & other fauours, D. Rodrigo Diaz being his lieutenant, who ouerran the countrey, & kept the Moores still in alarme during his aboad there. There is one of the strangest blowes reported of him, that euer was giuen of any; who with an Azagay, or Iauelin, pierced a man thorow the pomell of the saddle and the horse necke. The fort of Mersalcabir hath since beene much fortified by the kings of Spaine, especially by D. Philip the second, who made it impregnable.

Birth of the Infanta Marie, who was queen of Hungarie.

The same day that Mersalcabir, or Masalquiuir, was woen, which was the 13 of September, Queene Jone was brought in bed in Flaunders, of a daughter called Marie, who was Queene of Hungarie and Bohemia, married to king Lewis, sonne to Ladislaus, after whose decease, remaining a widow, she gouerned the Netherlands, and then came and died in Spaine, in the towne of Cigales, neere to Vailedolir, in the yeare 1558, and lyes in the monastirie of S. Benedict of Vailedolir.

3 Whilest that the Queen D. Isabella lived, they did still practise some meanes of peace betwixt France and Spaine, and to this end the kings of Castille and Arragon had their embassadors in the French kings Court, making shew that they would restore king Frederic to his realme of Naples, or giue it to D. Ferdinand duke of Calabria, his eldest sonne, who was resident in Spaine: but it was not credible, for that is not the custome in our age, to giue away kingdomes which they doe quietly enjoy, especially hauing gotten it with so great charge, neither did he any thing: But the yeare of her decease there was a peace concluded betwixt the Emperor Maximilian and his sonne Philip, and king Lewis, by the which it was the third time agreed, That prince Charles of Austria should marrie Claude of France, with the consent of the princes and noblemen of France, by the kings commaundement, and namely of Francis duke of Angoulesme, who was next in degree to the Crowne. It was also concluded, That the Emperor Maximilian should grant the inueftiture of the duchie of Milan to king Lewis, for him and his heires and successors males, and for want of males to his daughter, and to her future spouse prince Charles, who dying before the consummation of the marriage, she should be giuen in marriage to the Infant D. Ferdinand his brother, and they & their descendants should enjoy the said duchie of Milan. For the expedition of which priuiledge and donation, king Lewis should pay vnto the Emperor 70000. ducats vpon the deliuerie of the letters, and the like summe six moneths after, and euery yere vpon new-yeres day a paire of gilt spurs, in signe of honor.

Be.

A Betwixt the Pope, the Emperour, king Philip his Sonne, and the French king, there was a league made against the Venetians, to recouer the townes, and Lands which either of these Princes pretended to belong vnto him, and had beene vsurped by this Common weale, into which league Ferdinand king of Arragon might enter if he pleased, and there was not any mention made of the realme of Naples; in expectation whereof king Frederic ended his daies that yeare 1505. at Tours. That yeare the truce betwixt D. Ferdinand king of Arragon and the French king, was conuerted to a peace, vpon condition that king Ferdinand should marrie Germaine the kings neece, daughter to his sister and to John of Foix and of Nauarre, Vicount of Narbone, which Lady was allyed to King Ferdinand in the third degree, the Vicount of Narbone being borne of queene Leonora of Nauarre his Sister: by reason of which consanguinity they had a dispensation from the Pope, and in consideration of this marriage it was agreed, that the part which the French king might pretend in the realme of Naples, should stand in stead of a dowrie for his Neece, the future queene of Arragon; vpon condition that the king D. Ferdinand should pay vnto the French king seven hundred thousand ducats for the charges hee had beene at in the warre of Naples, and moreover should indowe his spouse with three hundred thousand ducats: and in regard thereof a peace being concluded, the Noblemen and Barons of the Realme that were prisoners in the Spaniards hands, should be deliuered, and the banished men restored to their estates, all confiscations being void.

C That queene Germaine dying without children before the king D. Ferdinand, her dowrie should remaine to him, but if she survived and had no children, it should returne to the crown of France: That king Ferdinand should be bound to assist Gaston of Foix, brother to his future spouse, to conquer the realme of Nauarre which he pretended to belong vnto him, and not to queene Katherine his cousin: That the French King should giue leaue to queene Elizabeth widowe to King Frederic, to retire into Spaine with two children which shee had in France, to whom the King D. Ferdinand should giue honest meanes to liue: and if she should refuse to goe, that the French king should not giue any entertainment to her nor her children. That for a stronger bond of peace and assurance of the two realmes, the king of Spaine should be bound to aide him of France with two thousand light Horse, three hundred men at armes, and six thousand foot, the French king him of Spaine with a thousand Lances, and six thousand foot in their warres.

The king of England was caution for both of them for this peace, whereunto and to the marriage king Ferdinand did easily incline to quiet his minde in regard of the realme of Naples, being also aduertised that his sonne in law king Philip contenttning the will and testament of queene Isabell his mother in Lawe, did not meane that hee should gouerne the realme of Castille. The widow queene of Naples, being chased out of France according to the accord, she desired rather to teryre to Ferrara vnder the protection of Duke Alfonso of Este: than to go into Spaine, fearing; it may be, that king Ferdinand would put her children to death, that there might not be any to pretend to the realme of Naples. King Ferdinand hauing remained most part of the yeare at Segobia, and hunting at Cerezuela, hee came to Salamanca there to spend the remainder, in which yeare there dyed many great men of Spaine: D. Alfonso of Fonseca Bishop of Oña, to whom there succeeded an ignorant and vicious Prelate, base Sonne to the Admirall D. Frederic Henriquez, called D. Alfonso Henriquez, borne of a slave, of which promotion the king did often repent him, and was much blamed for it by other Prelates, namely of frater Antonie de la Perna, who preached before him: There dyed also D. Pero Aluarez Osorio, Marquess of Astorga, who left for successor his Sonne D. Aluar Peres Osorio, Di Gomes Suarez of Figueroa, Earle of Reña, to whom succeeded Don Lawrence Suarez of Figueroa his Sonne, who hauing married D. Katherine of Cordoua, eldest Daughter to D. Pedro of Cordoua, and neece to the great Capitaine, came by her right, to be Marquess of Priego, D. Alfonso of Fonseca, Lord of Coca and Alacxos, and D. Francisco of Velasco, Earle of Smuela, D. Hurtado of Mendosa gouernour of Casoria, brother to the deceased Cardinall D. Pero Gonsales of Mendosa, did also end their daies this yeare. The plague did also carry away infinite numbers of people in the citie of Burgos, so as it was in a manner left desolate.

League made against the Venetians.

Peace betwixt France and Spaine.

Treatie of marriage betwixt Ferdinand and the Lady Germaine of Foix.

Isabel widow to Frederic of Naples chased out of France.

Death of many Gentlemen in Spaine.

1506

Difference betwixt D. Ferdinand king of Arragon, and D.
Philip, and D.
Joane king of Castille for the government.

D. Philip & D.
Joane driven into England by a storme.

King of Englad
foreeth king
Philip to deli-uer him the duke of Suffolke.

Marriage of the king of Arra-gon with Germaine of Foix.

Death of Christopher Columbus.

4 In the year 1506, vpon the controuersie growen betwixt the two kings father G in lawe and sonne, touching the gouernement of Castille, Leon, Granado, and other the hereditarie lands of the deceased queene D. Isabella, and for the which king
Philip had sent embassadors into Spaine, it was concluded that the kings, D. Ferdinand, D. Philip, and D. Joane should bee all three gouernours, and that all letters should bee dispatcht in their name, whereupon their armes and Ensignes were againe set vp, according to the ancient custome; and this accord was proclaimed in the Citie of Salamanca, on Twelfth day: and soone after the kings, D. Philip and D. Joane parted from Flanders with many Ships, who were suddenly disperfed by a violent storme, and many of them driuen into diuers parts of England. That wherein the kings were and H two other ships came to Hampton, where they caused some alteration in the towne, the inhabitants fearing they had bene enemies, but being knowne they did them honour, as was fit for so great Princes. Many knights and men of experience of their traine, perswaded them not to land, foreseeing that which did happen; but king Philip hauing bene extreemely sicke, and seeing the queene and noblemen which did accompany him in the same estate, would not beleue them, but was the first who leaping into a boate caused himselfe to bee carried to land. It being bruted abroad that a storme had driuen the kings of Castille vpon that coast, a knight, whose name was Thomas Trenchard, hauing his house there nere adioyning, came to doe him reuerence, offering him his lodging, with other commodities, and entertained him I vntill that king Henry the seventh then reigning, was aduertised by messengers, sent in post: then many men drewe thither in armes, with a captaine called John Carew, who in the company of Thomas Trenchard besought king Philip not to depart out of England, vntill that hee had seene their king, who was his friend. Then did king Philip find that hee had erred, in not beleueing the counsell of his followers, and the queene more, who notwithstanding carryed this crosse courageously: wherefore seeing that this intreatie was a commandement, and that hee must obey it, hee staid, alleaging in vaine that his voyage was verie hastie, with much other excuses. Soone after there arriued many English noblemen, who conducted them with great honour to the castle of Windsor, whereas king Henry attended them. There king Philip K was required by the king of England, to deliuer vnto him Edmond de la Poole duke of Suffolke his Competitor, who was then a prisoner in the castle of Namur: and so great was his desire to haue this duke, as forgetting the lawes of hospitality and the friendship which princes allies should beare one vnto another, hee forced the king of Castille, notwithstanding all excuses, to giue him the duke, vpon a promise that hee should not put him to death: whereupon men were sent into Flanders to fetch this poore duke. In the meane time king Henry led his guests to London, where hee entertained them with great and statelie feasts, and royall sports; and the prisoner being arriued, they had libertie to depart at their pleasures. So as these kings hauing renewed the league with the king of England, they imbarked and continued their voyage towards Spaine. L

In the meane time Germaine the new queene of Arragon came to Duegnas, wher-as king Ferdinand came and married her. There passed many noblemen of the realm of Naples of the Angeuin faction, with her out of France into Spaine, who soone after did accompany the king D. Ferdinand to Naples. After the consummation of the marriage, the king led the queene his wife to Vailledolit and there leauing her with D. Joane his sister, the old queene of Naples, and one of her daughters, hee went to Burgos, to receiue the kings, D. Philip and D. Joane, thinking that they had landed at Laredo, or some other place of Biscaye, but it fell out otherwise: for they tooke port at Corunna, or the Groine in Galicia, whereof king Ferdinand being aduertised, hee tooke the way to Leon, and then to Torquemada, to goe and meete his sonne in law and his daughter. M

5 At that time there dyed in Vailledolit the admirall Christopher Columbus the dis-couerer of the Indies, whose body was carryed to Seville, and was buried in the mo-nasterie de las Cuenas of the Cartusiens. To him his sonne Diego Columbus succeeded in 1506

Library gathered together by Diego Columbus

Princes seruaunts follow for profit and not for affection.

Order touching the government of Castille.

King Ferdinand retires into Ar-
ragon.

Death of Philip
King of Castille.

Voyage of king Ferdinand into Italy.

A faithfull seruant.

A in the Admiraltie of the Indies, who married D. Maria of Toledo, daughter to D.
Ferdinand of Toledo great Commander of Leon: hee left another Sonne called D. Ferdinand Columbus who was neuer married. Among many deeds worthie of commendation, of this Admirall D. Diego Columbus, hee gathered together in the citie of Seuille, one of the greatest and goodlyest Libraries in Christendome, seeking out with great care and charge, all good bookes, in what language soeuer: so as there were about twelue thousand volumes: for the keeping, maintenance and increase of which library, he left and assigned sufficient rents.

6 At the arrivall of the new kings of Castille, the king D. Ferdinand found by experience that princes seruaunts doe most commonly follow them for profit, and not for loue and affection: for many of those that were with him in this voyage, left him without leaue, and went before to offer their seruice, and to accompany their new master, the which discontented him very much. These princes met betwixt Puchla of Sanabria and Asturie, where hauing conferred together touching the manner of government, they did not agree: whereupon the king D. Ferdinand came to Cordeillas, much distast of the king his sonne in law, who with Queche D. Joane part to Benauent: The diligence and care of the Archbishopp of Toledo, to reconcile king
Ferdinand and his children, was such, as they concluded that the king of Arragon should inioy the three masterships of Castille, Saint Iaques, Calatrava, and Alcantara.

C with the reuenues of the Indies, and eight millions of Mazaudis of yearly rent during his life, which queene D. Isabella had left him: in regard whereof hee should bee contented to remaine in his countie of Arragon: to consume which accord, the two kings had an enterview within a league of Vailledolit, in the Vestrie of Renedo, whereas the archbishopp himselfe kept the doore: There they say king Ferdinand gave much counsel to his sonne in law, by whome hee was intreated, notwithstanding their accord, to remaine in Castille, and to helpe him to gouerne, but he refused him, and went away this year 1506, in Iuly, leading his wife Queene Germaine with him into Arragon. The kings D. Philip and D. Joane entered into Vailledolit, whether they had called the estates of the realm, and there took a new oath, causing their eldest sonne D. Charles to

D besworn heire to the crown of Castille, Leon, & Granado. In these princes were enited vnto the realms of Castille and Leon, and there dependances, the great estates of the low countries and Burgundy, and afterwards Arragon, Sicile, Sardynia and Naples: At Vailledolit there were many noblemen honored with the order of the golden fleece.
The gard of the castle of Segobia was taken from the marquesse of Moya, & giuen to D.
John Maunell, who was much fauored by the kings, who being at Tudela of Duero, there appeared a strange comet in the firmament, foreshewing (as they said afterwards) the approching death of king Philip, which happened soon after in the city of Burgos, to the generall griefe of all his subiects, the comet still reigning, whereunto he did attribute his death, saying often in his paines and agonies, Ha cometa, ha cometa: He died in the floure of his age, in the constables house, this yere 1506, hauing reigned 1 yere and ten monethes:
his body was laied many yeres after by the commandement of the Emperour Charles his sonne, in the royal chappel of Granado, hauing remained in diuers places. This summer which was very drie, there died in Castille D. Gutierre of Toledo bishop of Plasencia, to whome succeeded D. Gomez of Toledo, sonne to D. Gutierre de Solis earle of Coria.

7 At the time of the death of the king D. Philip, king Ferdinand was at sea sayling towards Italie: for after the enterview of these two princes, & the order taken for the gouernment of Castille, he went to Cattelonia, where hauing caused a goodly fleet to bee made readie at Barcelona, he imbarked to go and visit the realms of Naples, & of Sicile, hauing conceiued a ieaousie that the great captaine did fauor the designs of the king of Castille his son in law: for hauing sent often for him to come into Spaine, hee had still delayed it with excuses, as he thought. At his departure out of Castille, he was abandoned by all the great men, except the duke of Alua, who did accompany him to the frontiers of Arragon.
He who shewed himselfe most faithfull of all the noblemen, was D. Bernard of Rojas and Saudoual marquesse of Denia, who neuer abandoned him, neither aliuie nor dead: for hee retired many of his officers and household seruaunts, which had no maintenance. It was concluded

Sinceritie of the great Capitaine

Entrie of king Ferdinand into Naples.

D. Joane queene
of Castille
saunt in her senect.

Councell of Ca-
stille.

Enterview betwixt the french king and him of Arragon.

cluded by the last accord made betwixt him and king Philip, that the realme of Naples, G although it had been conquered by the means and forces of Castille, more then by those of Arragon, should remain to the crown of Arragon. Being therefore ready to set saile to- wards his realme of Naples, he receiued letters from the great capitaine, by the which hee did assure him of his sinceritie and seruice, and did aduertise him of the estate of the coun- try, wherewith he was so wel satisfied, as he did confirme all his former gifts vnto him. & added new, yea he was much more pleased with him, for that contrary to the opinion of many he came and met him at the port of Genoua: for both the Pope and all the Potentates of Italy, thought that he was gone from Naples, with an intent to retire himselfe in- to Castille, and not to see king Ferdinand, as if he feared to looke on him. The king being H staid there some daies by reason of contrary winds, he had news of his son in laws death, for the which he seemed verie sorrowful: & notwithstanding that he was presby the widow queen D. Joane his daughter to returne into Spaine, yet he went on his voyage to Naples, where he enred in great pompe, vnder a canopie of cloth of gold, the city wal being bea- ten down for the more state, hauing all the honors and ceremonies accustomed at the re- ceptions of new kings: he staid 7. months there to the great content of the whole realm, and of all the Potentates of Italie, who posselt with an opinion of his iustice and equity, long to visit him by ambassadors, and made him arbitrator of many cotrouersies, that were amongst them. The Neapolitanes offered him great summes of money and other com- modities, but he would not accept any but 30000 ducats, for the charges of his voyage. Hee I would not at that time breake with the Venetians for the Popes pleasure or of any others, and yet they detained certain places from him, referring that quarel to a more conuenient time. He pacified and ended many quarrels, and pretensions of Barons, yea, of the Ange- main party, who were yet disposelt of their goods, which had been confiscated, & past into priuacemens hands, to whome they had been given in recompence of their seruices: and that which he could not end, he left in charge to the Viceroy D. John of Arragon earle of Ribagorça, whom he left in the place of Gonsalo Fernandes of Cordoua, the great Capitain, whome he caused to imbarke with him at his resume, and carried him into Spaine, being jealous of the honor which he had gotten in the conquest of the realme. In regard of the realm of Sicile, he made many good lawes, but he could not goe thither in person, being K prest by the queen D. Joane his daughter, the counsell, cities, and communalities of Castille to return into Spaine: for this poore princeesse, besides her affliction for the death of her husband, had other infirmities, which she did inherit from her grandmother by the mo- thers side D. Isabella of Portugall, wherefore finding her selfe vnable to gouern so great a state, she put all ouer into the hands of D. Francisco Ximenes Archbishop of Toledo & primate of Spain, & of doctor D. Alfonso Suarez de la Fuente del Sauz bishop of Iaca presi- dent of the kings counsell, Garcia of Muxica licentiate in the laws, born in the prouince of Guipuscoa, doctor Pedro of Orepeça a most religious Baron, the licentiat Fernando Teller, doctor Laurence Galindez of Camail, & the licentiate Lewis of Polanco, with others of the counsell, who took charge of the affairs, in the absence of the king D. Ferdinand her father, L the Prince D. Charles, who was then bred vp in Flanders, being yet a childe of 7 yeres old. Pope Julius staid many daies in the castle of Ostia, thinking that K. Ferdinand would land there to see him, but he excused himselfe by reason of the smal intelligence that was be- twixt them: for the king hauing demanded of him the confirmation & inuestiture of the realm of Naples, he would not graunt it, but with heauier conditions then other kings of Arragon his predecessors had held it. Queen Germaine did accompany the king her husband in all this voyage, who sailing towards Spaine, they toucht at Sauone, which place was as- signed for an enterview, betwixt them and Lewis 12. the French king, who was already M arriued with a goodly train of his nobilitie. At the comming of the Spanissh army king Lewis shewed so great a confidence in the vertue and generosity of king Ferdinand, as he made no difficulty to enter into his galley, without any guards, by a bridge of wood made to that end, and there hauing conference awhile together, they entred all into the city: queene Germaine going betwixt the two kings, the king her husband being on the right hand, and the French king on the left, who were immediately followed by the Cardinall of Rouan, and the great captain, and then by many noblemen, ladies and gentlewomen, richly atty- red.

A red: king Ferdinand made shew of as great confidence to the French king, entering into Sauone, a towne held by him, where hee was lodged in the Castle, and king Lewis in the bishops Palace. For three daies space that these great Princes were together, they treated of many matters of importance, in the which the Cardinall of Praxeda, the Popes Legate, was a great dealer: king Lewis spake much concerning the renewing and strengthening of their leagues, and the friendship which he desired to en- tertaine with the emperor Maximilian, who was greatly discontented with him, for many reasons, but especially for that the lady Blanche the eldest daughter of France, so often promised to prince Charles, had been lately made sure to Francis duke of Angoul- B leme: the which king Lewis excused, saying, that he had done it at the instant request of the estates of his realme. They did also treat of many things concerning Italy, and yet neuer entered into any speech of the realme of Naples: but the French king shewed great hatred to the Venetians, and little loue to the Pope, against whome hee pro- pounded to haue a generall Councill called, being animated thereto by the Car- dinall of Rouan, desirous to finde a meane to attaine vnto the dignitie of Soueraigne bi- shop, whereof he had some hope, when the seat was voided by the death of Alexander the sixt, wherein there were resolutions then taken to the contentment of both kings: but as for a Councell, king Ferdinand excused himselfe, saying that it was a dangerous thing for the common weale of Christendome. The French king, hauing often desired to see and C know Gonsalo Fernandes, called the great capitaine, he embraced him with much honour, and could not be satisfied in looking on him, as admiring those great matters which hee had heard of him, getting leave of king Ferdinand that hee might eate at their table, whereas Queene Germaine sayed (it may bee indiscreetly) that he which had vanquish- ed kings, should eat with kings: Some say, that at that time onely hee purchased the surname of Great, for that king Lewis did so call him, saying freely vnto king Ferdinand, that hee did enuie him for so worthy a man, whome hee honoured with praises and great titles in all his discourses, and taking a chaine of gold of great price from off his owne neck, he put it about his. The fourth day of this enterview, the kings parted one towards Fraunce, and the other continuing his course towards Spaine, D where the flecte arrived in mid-August 1507, at the port of Valencia, from whence without stay, the king and queene went to Almasan, a towne of Castille, nor without discontentment of the Arragonois, who found his short abode among them verie strange, to buse himselfe with the affaires of a realme where hee had found so much ingratitude. The great Capitaine was receiued in Spaine with great fauour of all men, being held the honour and ornament of Castille, but hee neuer saw Na- ples more, where he was exceedingly beloued, and desired. They say that at his de- parture from Naples, hee gaue a great part of his meanes to such as had bene faithfull full companions vnto him in the warre, to performe the which he sold some of his lands.

E 8 Whilst that the king D. Ferdinand was in Italie, the duke of Valentinois, who was a prisoner in the Castle of Medina del Campo, being ill garded slept downe by a roape, and escaped going towards Guipuscoa in a disguised habit, whereas he found in the towne of Mondragon, one Lewis Lauregui, who had serued him in Italie, and was then one of the chiefe of the place, who gaue him meanes to passe into Na- uarre, towards king John of Albret, whose sister hee had married. D. Joane queene of Castille being with childe at her Husbands death, had bene deliuered of a Daughter in Torquemada, who was named D. Catharina, future wife to John the third of that name, king of Portugall. This yeare one thousand five hundred and seuen, there was a change of Bishops in Spaine from lesse to greater, after the accus- F tomed manner: for by the death of D. John of Medina Bishop of Segobia, D. Fre- deric of Portugall was aduanced to that Bishopricke, and that of Calaozza, which hee held, was giuen to D. John of Velsco, who before was bishop of Cathagena, the which was bestowed vpon doctor Martin of Angulo, Archdeacon of Talauera in the church of Toledo: The archbishopricke of Granado in like manner being void, by the death of officer Hernando of Talauera, there was preferred to that dignity D. Anthony of Rojas, Bi- shop

Councils are dangerous for the church of Rome.

Gonsalo Fernan-des honored by Lewis the 12.

Bounty of the great Capitaine.

Duke of Valentinois escapes
out of prison.

Change of bishops in Castille.

1507

Archbishop of Toledo made a Cardinal.9
Nauarre.Genealogie of Nauarre.Diffusion of king Iohn of
Nauarre.

shop of Maiorca, and his Bishopricke was given vnto D. Diego of Riueria. By the decease G also of D. Garcia Ramires of Villa excusa Bishop of Ouiedo, who was the last Prior of S.
Marc of Leon, D. Valerio Alfonso of Villaguiran, was made Bishop in his place; and the bishopricke of Villaguiran & citie Roderigo, which he held, was given to D. Francisco of Bouadilla, son to the Marquesse of Moya. The same yere D. Francis Ximenes of Cisneros Archbishop of Toledo, obtained a Cardinals hat, with the title of Sancta Balbina: and for that he was primate of Spain, he was called Cardinal of Spaine: And D. Alonso Fon- seca, was allowed to resigne the Archbishopricke of Saint Iaques to his sonne, carrying the same name, for the which Cardinal Ximenes did greatly reproach king Ferdinand, who had countenanced it, saying, that he made Archbishopricks hereditarie, and that hee should see if women were excluded. King Ferdinand was then come to Sancta Maria del Campo, with the queene his daughter, where they made the anniuersarie for the deceased king Philip: from thence they went to Arcos, where the Queene staying, the king came to Burgos, where during his long aboad, wee will come to the affaires of Nauarre. The king D. Iohn of Albret, who is numbred for the five and thirtieth king of Nauarre, and the third of that name, had by his wife Katherine of Foix, a great issue, Iohn and Andrew Phabus, who dyed both young, Henrie who succeeded them in the estates of Foix & Bearn, and in the title of Nauarre, and was born three daies after the death of Andrew Phabus his brother, in the town of Sanguessa, in the yere one thousand five hundred and three, in the month of Aprill: the godfathers at the Christening I were two Germaine Pilgrimes, which past by chance at the time of his birth, to goe to Saint Iaques, whereof the one was called Henrie, and the other Adam: the which the king his father did by deuotion: but the Spaniards say that it was an aduertisement and presage of his future condition, that he should liue a stranger and Pilgrim out of his realme: Besides these, hee had Charles, named by some Francis, who dyed in the Lord of Lautrees voyage to Naples: Katherine, Anne, Quiterie, Magdeline, Isabell, and five other children, whose names are not specified, for they dyed young.
Of the daughters, Anne was betrothed, but not married: the earle of Candale, for shee dyed at the assurance making: into which house the Queene of Nauarres aunt, called Katherine also, had bene married: shee was mother to Queene Anne K of Hungarie, wife to king Ladislays: Isabell married with the earle of Rohan in Brittaine. This king D. Iohn of Albret was full of pompe and state in his court, and house, the which was frequented by the nobility both of Spaine, France, and other nations, as much as any of the greatest monarchs. His studie and delights were diuers, for he loued learning and books, whereof hee made a goodly Librarie: hee was curious in the search of Genealogies of noble families, and would vnderstand their armes, and blasons; yet sometimes he made some noble, that were of small merit: hee tooke great delight to discourse priuately and familiarly with his vassals and others, as if hee had been no king, but a priuate gentleman: hee daunced willingly, and did so little mainteine his royall grauitie, as hee made no difficultie to come into publike assemblies, and to dance in the streets with wiues and virgins after the cuntrye maner: he went familiarly to dine and sup, and to make good cheare in his subjects houses, inuiting himselfe, the which did winne him the loue of some, and made him to bee scorned of others, as not knowing how to hold his ranke: the which hee held of the French humor, whereas the princes doe sometimes make themselves too familiar with petty companions. Hee was so giuen to his pleasures, as many times hee referred matters of greatest importance to others, the which did purchase him contempt and hatred with many:
for by this meanes against his oath and promise made at his coronation, many strangers were admitted to estates, offices, and benefices within the realme of Nauarre, whereof there were sundrie admonitions and protestations made vnto him in the assem-blye of the estates by the noblemen of the realm, but he did not regard it: for hee thought to find a great support in the king of Castilles friendship: yet notwithstanding king Ferdinand did not forbear to capitular with Lewis 12 the French king who should help to dispossesse him of the realm of Nauar, to inuest Gaston of Foix duke of Nemours son to Iohn vicont of Narbone, & brother to queene Germaine, which D. Ferdinand did afterwards seale on vpon

1597

Iohn of Albret
king of Nauarre
& the Queene
his wife fall into factions.10
Rashnesse of the Earle of Lerin, which caused his ruine.Sentence against the Earle of Lerin.Castle of Viana besieged by the Duke of Valen-
tinus.Viana vidual-led by the Earle
of Lerin.

A vpon another occasion, as we will shew. About the end of the yere one thousand five hundred and sixe, the Duke of Valentinois hauing escaped from Medina del Campo, and being come, as we haue said, into Nauarre, he found that the King D. Iohn of Albret, and the Queene his wife were growne into factions one against another; the King fauouring them of Beamont, and the Queene the others of Gramont: wherefore the Duke shew-ing therein both iudgement and affection, hee dealt so as hee reconciled them, making the King his brother in law to fauor the faction of Gramont, wherewith the contrary par-tie was much troubled: yet Lewis of Beamont the Constable, a man of a great courage, maintained himselfe still proudly in his ranke, so as on a time a certaine Officer comming to giue him notice of some commaundement from the King, he caused him to be beaten with cudgells, and to be cast into prison in the castle of Larraga, making shew that he did B not much respect the King, nor his Aduerfaries of Gramont which were fauored by him, which was the cause of his ruine: for the King being iustly incensed at this audacious fact, hauing by many messages sent for him to Court, and hee not obeying, hee resolved to ruine him quite. He had to friend, although he were of the contrary faction, D. Alonso Carillo of Peralta Erle of Saint Stephen, sonne to Troilo Carillo, and grandchild to D. Al- fonso Carillo of Acugna Archbishop of Toledo, who did aduertise him of all that was practised against him, aduising him by no meanes to come to the Court, vnlesse hee would fall into their ambushes. By reason of this contumacie, the King hauing caused his processe to be made, he was condemned to loofe both life and goods, as guiltie of high trea-
C son: and hauing sent forth troupes for the execution of this Sentence, he gaue the charge to the Duke of Valentinois his brother in law, to pursue him with all extremite of warre, the which the Duke beganne by the siege of the castle of Larraga the eleuenth of February 1507. But a Gentleman called Oger of Beraitegui who commanded there, defended it brauely, so as both the King, who was there in person, and the Duke, left it, and went to Viana, whereas the towne made not any resistance, but the castle held good, although they were scant for victuals: whereof the Earle of Lerin the Constable being aduertised, he resolved to relieue it; for the effecting whereof hauing gathered together about two hundred horse and some foot, hee came to Mandauia to watch some opportunitie to execute his designe, the which succeeded happily, for the same night there did rise a hor-D rible tempest, which made the Duke thinke that the enemy would not goe to field, and that they would not adventure to succour the besieged; wherefore he retired his gardes and sentinells which hee did vsually set vpon all the approches to the castle, wherein hee was deceiued although he were held for a wise and discret Communder: for through fauour of the noyse of the winde, and the great raine, three score horses parted from Mandauia, euery one carrying a sacke of meale, and some baked bread, which prouision they put into the castle by a postern, and were not discovered: Morning being come, in their retreat they discovered certain horsmen vpon the way of Logroño, which made them thinke that it was a supply of 300. Castilian horse which the Duke of Negera had promised to send vnto the Constable, wherefore they beganne to crie, Beaumont, Beau-E mont, which gaue an alarme vnto the Towne. The Duke of Valentinois hauing caused himselfe to be richly armed by a groome of his called Ianico, who had sometimes serued the Constable; he went forth brauely mounted, and followed by a thousand horse, and a great troupe of foot, and so hee went towards Mandauia, saying, Where is this pettie Count? I vow to God I will this day kill him, or take him prisoner, I will not leaue him vntill he be quite ruined, and will not pardon any one of his, all shalbe put to the sword, euen the dogges and cattles. Being thrust on with this violent passion, hee aduanced his troup, following 60. horse which retired before him. The Constable had sent forth some, aswell to receiue those (if need were) which were gone to victual the castle of Viana, as to discover what the enemy did, who seeing the Duke whom they knew not come thus alone, and with a great assurance, doubting that he was followed by some great troupes;
they retired to the place where the Constable remayned, who wondering what this F Knight should be; and at his hardinesse, What? (saies hee) is there no man here that dares affront this gallant, which comes so nere vs? Then there disbanded three gentlemen of his troupe, who went to incounter him in a hollow way like vnto a ditch, whereas P p p p the

1507

Death of the duke of Valentinois.

the duke could not well vse his force and dexteritie, nor mannage his horse, who hauing charged their Lances against him, one of them tooke him vnder the right arme pit, where hee was vnarmed, as hee did lift vp his arme to charge his lance, and so ranne him through, hee falling downe dead to the ground. They saie that hee that gaue the blow was one of the Garceses of Agreda: The bodie was presently stript by these three companions, and left naked in the way, hauing couered his priuie parts with a stone:
they carried these rich spoyles vnto the Constable who beganne to retire, not knowing any thing of him that was slaine, but that hee should be some great capitaine, vntill that the same morning Janicot the groom of his chamber, who had followed his master, and mist his way, was taken by some and led to the Constable, by whom it was knowne after that he had seene his armes and habiliments, that it was Cesar Borgia duke of Valentinois which had bene slaine, whose bodie was found by the army which followed after. King Iohn himselfe being in person in the rereward, who lamented much for the death of his brother in lawe, and couering him with a cloake of scarlet he caused him to be carried to Viana, and to be buried in the great chappell of the parish church of Saint Mary, where this epitaph is to be read.

*A qui iaze en poca tierra
El que toda le temia,
El que lapas, y la guerra
Por todo el mondo hazia.*

*O tu que vas a buscar, Dignas cosas de loar,
Se tu loas lo mas digno,
Aqui pare tu camino
No cure de mas andar.*

It is obserued in Spaine for a memorable thing, that the death of the duke of Valenti-nois happened in Nauarre the like day that hee had in the same realme taken possession of the perpetuall administration of the church of Pampelome, the chiefe of that realme, which was the eleuenth day of March, on the which God would shew some testimonie of his wrath against him, who in contempt of all religion had quit his Ecclesiasticall estate, and the Ministerie, to follow the practise of armes: The Constable would haue bene more ioyfull if hee had bene taken aliue, to haue presented him to king Ferdinand. The king of Nauarre by reason of this death fell into such a rage against the Constable, and all his house, as euen some of his kinsmen which followed the Kings armie were forced to retire, not daring to present themselves before him: against whom the castle of Viana did still make resistance, notwithstanding that his armie was much increased by certaine troupes which had bene sent him out of Castille from D.
Bernardin of Velasco Constable and Duke of Frias, and the Earle of Nieua, with whom and with the Earle of Aguilar, the king had alwayes entertayned a strict friendship: but hee past into the Constables lands where hee committed all the spoyles that an incensed enemy could deuise: hee tooke the towne of Lerin, where hee ouerthrew and ruined the sepulchre or monument of the house of Lerin, and the Constables pro-genitours, which was a sumptuous and stately building; hee rased his houses, cut vp his vines and trees, then taking the rest of his places and castles, some by a voluntarie yeelding, and some by force, where hee caused the captaynes which made resistance to be hanged, hee reduced him to that extremitie, as hee was forced to retire himselfe into Castille to D. Ferdinand king of Arragon his brother in lawe, being followed by many other knights of the faction of Beaumont which was then vnderfoote, and that of Gramont aduanced, amongst whom was the Marshalls place; and moreover by the Constables retreat they obtayned that Office for D. Alphonso Carrillo of Peralta Earle of Saint Stephen: Then the castles of Viana and Larraga yeelded. And in this exile the Constable being old and disposed, died some moneths after in Arragon, in the towne of Aranda: His wife D. Lionora of Arragon dyed likewise at the same time in the citie of Tortosa in Cartelonia. The Constables bodie hauing bene left for a time in the monasterie of Veruela, was afterwards transported to Lerin, where he lies:
his sonne D. Lewis of Beaumont succeeded him after the conquest of Nauarre, made by D. Fer-

Warre against the Constable
of Lerin.

Death of D. Lewis of Beaumont
the Constable.

1508

A D. Ferdinand king of Arragon, in the office of Constable, and of high Chancellour of the realme, and in all his other estate and lands being by his mothers side, nephew to the king D. Ferdinand, and graundchilde to D. Iohn king of Arragon the second of that name. There was a bruite, that the Constable and his sonne had treated with Lewis the twelfth to dispossesse king Iohn of Albret of the realme of Nauarre, and to inuest Gaston of Foix duke of Nemours his nephew, and that Lewis of Beaumont, the sonne of D. Fran- cis of Beaumont, and D. Pedro Menat of Beaumont went into France to sollicite the king in this businesse, assuring him that all things should be easie for him, and fauourable, but that the king being then busied in other affaires, especially to reduce the ci-tie of Genoua which was then rebelled, to his obedience, would not hearken to it:
B wherefore D. Lewis of Beaumont, and D. Pedro Menat returned into Arragon, leauing
D. Francois in the French kings seruice, where hee continued vntill that hee was called home by his father D. Iohn of Beaumont, who had a certaine quarrell with Amador of Lascan, whose challenge hee could not answer by reason of his age, so as hee came and presented himselfe to the combat against Amador, during the raigne of these kings; but there growing a certayne question being ready to fight, vpon the qualitie of the armes, they spent the whole day in disputes, and nothing was done. The cardinall D. Anthony bishop of Pampelone being dead about the end of this yeare one thousand five hundred & seuen, there was preferred in his place by pope Iulio the second, the cardinall of Sancta Sabina, called Facio; but the chapter of the church of Pampelone, hauing already chosen cardinall Amad of Albret of the title of Saint Nicholas in carcere Tulliano, the kings brother, for their bishop, the cardinall of Sancta Sabina was reiected and kept from the possession of that bishopricke: whereupon Pope Iulio did censure the whole realme of Nauarre in the beginning of the yere one thousand five hundred and eight, and did continue a whole yere, to free them from the which they were forced to accept of the cardinall preferred by him for their bishop of Pampelone, whereof he tooke possession by his deputy, and the election made by the chapter was declared voyd. This cardinall Facio liued not long after, wherefore cardinall Amad of Albret the kings brother reco-uered his right, and was receiued in the place of the deceased. The archdeacons ship of D the table of that church, a chiefe dignitie, and of great reuenues, was giuen vnto D. Iohn of Beaumont, for his sonne called also D. Iohn brother to D. Francois of Beaumont aboue mentioned, who being returned out of France into Nauarre, was, notwithstanding the hatred and factions of Beaumont and Gramont, much fauoured by the Marshall
D. Pedro, who was then in greatest esteeme and authoritie with the Kings D. Iohn and
D. Catherina.

11 This yeare one thousand five hundred and eight Muley Mahomet king of Fez, of the family of the Merins, besieged the citie of Arzilla, in the which the earle of Redondo a Portugall was gouernour, and hauing taken the towne with his great power, being about a hundred thousand fighting men, hee also tooke part of the castle, and forced the Earle to retire into a tower with some souldiers: whereof king Ferdinand being aduertised, hee sent to the Earle Pedro Nauarro an excellent capitaine of his time, being at Malaga, to goe and succour the Portugalls at Arzilla, appoynting him certaine old souldiers which were come from Naples, who were then lodged in the Axarchia of Malaga. The earle hauing receiued this charge, imbarqued with great speed in a shippe of his owne, which was called Mariette, with other shippes which hee found readie, and four gallies, about two thousand and five hundred of these souldiers, and so sayled towards Arzilla, where vpon his first approach hee so terrified the Moores, which besieged the Tower where the Earle of Redondo was, with his great ordonance from the shippes, as they suffered him to land his men, with the which hee entred the citie, and fought so valiantly, as hee chased away the Moores, whom he found lodged, and fortified there, striking such a terrour into the king of Fez his armie, as the same night it retired about two leagues from the towne: D. Pedro Nauarro encouraged with this good successe, going forth with certaine field peeces, and setting a countenance on it, hee led the enemies in such doubt, as they retired to Fez, and Arzilla was freed, whereas within few dayes after the armie of Portugall arrived, being sent to succour it by the king

Pppp ij

D. Ma-

Castile.
Arzilla besieged by the Moores, and the towne taken.

Exploit of Pedro Nauarro at Arzilla in faueur of the Portugalli.

1503

D. Manuel, the which had come too late without the diligence and good office of King Ferdinand, and the Earle D. Pedro Navarro, who having sent backe part of his souldiers in the Mariette, hee ranne along the coast of Barbarie with his foure galleies, vnto Belis or Veles of Gomera, who discovering a rocke in the sea fit to build a fort on, for the defence and safetie of the coast of Spaine, especially for the streit, and the rest of Adalusia hee put thirtie souldiers in garrison there, in despite of the Moores: And being returned to Malaga, hee aduertised the King of the commoditie of this feat, yeelding him many reasons to induce him to build a fort there: whereupon the King sent a gouernour thither, whose name was John of Villalobos, capitaine of Trebeja, and rector of Malaga, who entring into this place called Pegnon de Veles, with three score and tenne souldiers, he spent his life there in garrison, and after him his sonne, who put in his place an vncle of his called Francis of Villalobos, in whose time this fort was taken by the Moores, eight yeres after it had beene first fortified by the earle D. Pedro Navarro.

Pegnon de Veles fortified.

Prouost of the court troubled in his charge, and the punishment the king inflicted.

Portugal.

Sedition at Lisbon for religion.

12 The king D. Ferdinand hauing this yeere sent one of the Prouosts of his Court called the Bachelier Hernando Gomes of Herrera to Cordoua, for certaine executions of Iustice, hee had such a quarrell with D. Pero Fernandes of Cordoua, nephew to the great caprayne, as the marquisse caused him to be taken prisoner, and to be carried to Montillo, wherewith the king found himselfe much wronged, and loath to imploy anie other, hee went himselfe to punish this disobedience and contempt. Wherefore comming to Toledo, and from thence by Cite royall, Syerra Morena, Pedroche, and Adamuz hee entred into Cordoua, where he beganne to haue informations made against the marquisse, for whom the great capitaine and other noblemen were suiters, intreating him to remember how D. Alphonso d'Aguiar the marquesse's father died, and how his vncle the great capitaine had liued: yet the marquisse was condemned in a great fine, his house of Aguiar rased, and himselfe banished for a certaine time.

13 In Portugall the king D. Manuel attending the gouernement of his realmes, and the navigations to the East Indies, made his greatest residence in the citie of Ebor, whilst that Lisbon was afflicted with cruell seditions, by reason of religion; an ordinarie thing in this later age, whenas most Christians iealous of their owne glorie, worship their opinions, and maintaine their ceremonies by tumults and effusion of blood. It did seeme vnto some women of the auncient families of Christians in that citie, that some of the new conuerts or of their descendants, being in the Conuent of the friers of Saint Dominike had mockt at the hoste, which they are accustomed to keep in their churches: wherewith being moued with a womanish choler, they beganne to cast their pattens at them, saying, Goe you wicked dogges, God forbid that the plague and other miseries should fall vpon vs for you. At this noyse there came two friers running, who moued with a monkish zeale, tooke vp a Crosse, and running vp and downe the streetes, cried, Kill, kill these wicked hereticall dogges, for both plague and famine will fall vpon this countrey for their impieties: with which cries they stirred vp the people, so as falling vpon these new Christians (as they call them) they slue about 4000, regarding the innocent no more then the offender: and that which was the chiefe motiue, they spoiled their goods, sackt their houses, and burnt many in the streetes, and publike places of the citie: the which the officers of Iustice could not help. In the end, being tired rather then glutted with killing and spoiling, the tumult ceased. King Manuel beeing aduertised of this excesse, caused the two friers which were the authors to be apprehended, and to be publicly burnt at Ebor, and informations being made against the mutines, and spoilers, about 70 of them were most iustly hanged, wherein it is strange how often they were then abused, who leauing Mahumets or the Iewish impietie, came into the bosome of the Romish church, thinking to find a safe refuge, or some mildnes and humanitie there, whereas they did often make triall of the smothered hatred, and crueltie, of these proud and rauishing olde Christians, as they call them in Spaine; men truly vnfit to draw infidelles to the healthfull Doctrine of IESVS CHRIST: for this detestable example could no wayes edifie the sonne of the King of Manicongo, who was sent a while after into Portugall, to bee there instructed in the Romish Religion. This King ruling vpon the westerne shoare of Asrike beyond the Equinoctiall, was vassall and

Lib. 25.

A and alied to the king D. Manuel, the infant his sonne was named Henry, and was bred vp and instructed in the Latine tongue and the sciences for the space of xviij yeeres, at Saint Eloy in Lisbon, after the which hee returned into his countrey, being accompanied by many of the monkes of S. Eloy, carrying with him many ornaments serving for the ceremonies of the Romish religion, and many gifts from the King D. Manuel.

1508
Henry Infant of Manicongo baptized.

14 D. Ferdinand King of Arragon for his part, seeking the propagation of religion, following the aduice of his counsell and of the diuines of Spaine, gaue leaue this yeere one thousand five hundred and eight, to some Spaniards dwelling at the Indies to search into the maine land there, to conquer prouinces and people, and to conuert those infidelles to the Christian religion, by armes, if they did not willingly submit themselves; sending ample instructions vnto them. The first that vnderooke that enterprise was Alphonso of Hojeda or Fojeda, borne at Cueneza, hauing dwelt long at the Indies, who departing from the port of Beate of Saint Dominike with foure shippes and three hundred men, came vnto Carthage, being followed by an other shippe, in the which there should be certaine mares, swine, and other cattell to breed, being conducted by the bachelier Martin Fernandes of Enfiso with an hundred and fiftie Spaniards. Hauing landed, Alphonso of Hojeda caused the Caribes a cruell and barbarous nation, which inhabite that countrey, to be summoned, to yeeld obedience to the King D. Ferdinand, and D. Ismael of Castille, and to receiue the preaching of the gospel, offering them peace with great priuiledges and exemptions: but they making no regard of all these things, Hojeda made cruell wars against them, killing or making slaues all he could get, according to the instruction of the diuines of Spaine. He marcht about five leagues into the land, and besieged a little borough of some one hundred houses, where there might dwell some three hundred persons of these Caribes, who defended themselves in such sort with poysoned arrowes, and their other armes, as they slew three score and tenne Spaniards, and among them Alphonso de la Cosa of Palos of Moguer in Adalusia, a man expert in nauigation, and lieutenant at that time to Hojeda, which was a great losse; and had not Diego of Nicuesa of Basca arriued, they were in daunger to haue receiued a greater losse D and affront. Nicuesa parting from the same port of Beate of S. Domingo, had brought foure score Spaniards in seuen shippes and two brigantines. Hojeda hauing ioyned with 780. did easily force the borough, and burnt it with all the Indians, who had no leasure nor meanes to flic, of the which they retayned seuen prisoners: and hauing gathered vp some little gold in the ashes of this fire, these captaines diuided themselves, Hojeda bending towards Vrabia, and Nicuesa to Beragua.

castile.

Alphonso of Hojeda first discoverer of the firme land at the Indies.

Caribes defend themselves courageously.

15 This was done at such time as the Christian princes made a league at Cambria against the Venetians, into the which D. Ferdinand King of Arragon and Gouernour of Castille entred. The Venetians who alwayes knew how to make their profite by other mens quarrels, held Padena, Vincence, Verona, Friuli and Treuifo which the emperour pretended. The French king as duke of Millane demanded of them Cremona, Ghirardada, Brest, Bergamo and Crema, for the pope there was exacted the towne of Farafe, Rimini, Rauenna and Ceruia, and King Ferdinand desired to retire the places and ports of the realme of Naples; which had beene engaged vnto them by the old King D. Ferdinand of Naples: for these considerations all their embassadors met there together, to conclude a warre against the Venetians; but king Ferdinand had no great will to take armes against that common weale, proiecing other meanes to recouer his right, but to please the Emperour hee ioyned in this warre, and for that there was some discontentment betwixt the king D. Ferdinand, the emperour and prince Charles, by reason of the gouernement of Castille, it was said, that there should be no speach of it, vntill the end of that war. There were many other particularities treated of and concluded there, every one of these princes seeking more his owne priuate interest then the good of the league in generall. King Ferdinand was then at Tordeuillas, whither hee had accompanied his daughter the Queene. D. Joane, who liued there, and hauing beene a widow eight and fourty yeeres, ended her dayes there. In May, in the yeare one thousand five hundred and nine, queene Germanie wife to king Ferdinand was deliuered Pretensions of Christian princes against the Venetians.

1509

Genealogie of Aragon.Fort built by
the Spaniards
in the firme land of the Indies.Policie of the Indians.

Nùbre de Dios

of a son at Vailledolit, who was named John, but he lived not long, after which this prince had not any more children: but the king her husband before he married her had D. Alphonso of Arragon by the vicountesse of Eboli, he was archbishop of Saragossa, a prince of singular vertue: he had also D. Joane of Arragon who was wife to the Constable D. Bernardin of Velasco: and moreover by a gentlewoman of Bilbao called D. Totá, he had D. Maria of Arragon, who was a nunne at Madrigal: and of a lady of Portugall of the family of the Pereiras, an other daughter named also D. Maria of Arragon, who was in like manner a nunne in Madrigal with her sister; this was the posteritie of king Ferdinand.

16 That yeare Alphonso of Hojeda or Fogeda, running over the countrey of Vraza, tooke in the strong Iland two men and seven women, and got about two hundred ounces of gold: and having landed in Caribana, hee beganne a fort and towne, which was the first the Spaniards made in the firme land of the Indies. The Spaniards being entred foure leagues into the countrey, they assailed a little towne called Taripi, whereas the Indians made great resistance, and they had this policie, to draw their enemies on with gold, whereof they knew them to be very covetous, casting it in certaine places, that comming to gather it vp, they might pierce them more easily with their poysoned arrowes, whereof they died like mad men. Hojeda prest with these difficulties, and with hunger, raised his siege, and went to another Borough, where he found some small store of victuals, and tooke some prisoners, and among others, a woman, whose husband came before Hojeda, and promised by a certaine day to bring her ransome, at which prefixed time hee came, being accompanied with eight archers, who began to shoot many poysoned arrowes among the Spaniards, wherewith Hojeda himselfe was hurt, and others died, wherefore the Spaniards slue them all nine. Hereupon Bernardin of Talavera arrived with a ship laden with victuals and three score and tenne Spaniards to succour Hojeda, but this did not much comfort the Spaniards: wherefore Hojeda fearing that they would mutine, hee resolved to returne himselfe to Saint Domingo, to make sufficient provision of victuals and other things necessarie, leaving for lieutenant in his place Francis Picarro, who was afterwards marquisse of Atabillos, with an expresse charge, that if within fiftie dayes they had no newes of him, they should make the best shift they could. So Hojeda parting from Caribana, hee arrived in the Iland of Hispaniola a citie of Saint Domingo, where being tired with the toyle hee had endured, and with the bad successe of his voyage, desperate, wounded, and sicke of his person, he became a Franciscan Frier the remaynder of his life. Diego of Nicuesa who had taken the rout of Beragua, aduanced with a carauell and two brigantines, and past the land without discoverie: but one of his brigantines commaunded by Lope of Olano, turned backe to consider of that coast, then returning to the other brigantine they went together, to enter in at the mouth of the riuer of Chagre, which they called Lagartos, where they found the rest of the army, except Nicuesa, who was strayed with his carauell. Being come to the riuer of Beragua, thinking to finde their captayne Nicuesa there, but hearing not any newes of him, they were out of hope euer to returne vnto their houses, breaking their vesselles in peeces which were halfe rotten, they chose Lope of Olano for their captayne, who beganne to make a fort there, and to till the ground, meaning to make his abode there. In the meane time Nicuesa who had lost his carauell, was come to Sorobaro in great want of victuals, so as hee and his companie liued some daies with wild fruits, the which was reported to Lope of Olano, by those men who had stolne away his carauells cocke-boat: wherefore hee presently sent a brigantine vnto him laden with victuals, in the which he came to Beragua: but there envying the good successe of Olano, he began to charge him that he had incroched vpon his authoritie, intreating him ingratfully, whereat the whole company was much discontented: after which he caused them to dislodge, and to leaue that country, where they had sown much Mays, leading them to Porto Bello, where hee left halfe his men, and led the rest to a place called Mammoll or Marbre, where hee began a fort, which since hath bene verie famous, which he called Nombre de Dios; there Nicuesa and his people were in such extreame necessitie, as they were forced to eate their dogges, whereof some were sold for Extremitie of

the Spaniards
at the Indies

A for five and twenty ducats of Castile, yea they did eate the flesh of an Indian; whom they found dead and halfe rotten. They which Hojeda had left in Caribana, seeing that their captaine returned not at the fiftieth day assigned, being oppressed with hunger, they imbarqued by the aduice of Francis Picarro, and hauing lost one brigantine, they sayled towards Cochibocoa, neere to the which they met with the bachelier Martin Fernandes of Enciso, hauing a shippe laden with victuals and men, and a brigantine, who commaunded them to returne backe with him: and hauing landed and watered at Camari, they came to Vraza, in which gulfes they built a Towne, the which they called Guarda. The King or Cachique of that countrey called Cemaco, being incensed that without his leaue they built vpon his land, hauing hidden all the wealth of his towne among the reedes, hee drew together five hundred Indians, and beganne to threaten the Spaniards: then was the Bachelier in great distresse, and beganne to make vowes and promises, That if he got the victorie of those men, hee would build a Temple of the Cachiques towne, the which he would haue called, Our Lady of the Ancient of Darien, and that he would send a certayne quantity of gold and siluer to the church of our Lady the Ancient of Seuille: whereupon a hundred Spaniards did charge these Indians, and defeated them, and their towne was taken and spoyled, and their hidden treasure found, which was not small, & then they began to build the towne and colonie of the Antique of Darien.

C 17 Whilest that these men guided by auarice, & by the practise of cruelty, thought to amplifie the religion of our Lord Iesus Christ at the west Indies, the cardinall D. Francis Ximenes of Cisneros archbishop of Toledo, vnder the same pretext, but it may be thrust on by some other affection, made offer to go in person into Affrike, and there to make warre against the Moores, animated thereunto (besides his owne desire to make that enterprife) by the spoyle which some pyrates Moores had lately made vpon the coast of Spaine, from whence they had carried away many poore slaues of all ages, men and women: and that which did more pricke him forward, was, that D. Diego Fernandes Gouvernour of Merscalabler had bene lately defeated by the Moores of Oran, importunately prouoked by him; which disgrace hee desired to reuenge vpon that citie. These things happened during the kings absence, whenas he was at Naples, from whence being returned, hee was presently sollicitated by the Cardinall to vndertake this enterprife of Oran, whither hee offered to goe himselfe: wherein hee had many oppositions and crosses, not so much by the king, as by the noblemen of the court, who scorned him, holding him for a man drunke with ambition, and ignorant how to maintaine himselfe in his ranke and profession, saying, That it was a pleasant change to see the great captaine Gonsal Fernandes famous for so many victories which hee had obtaigned, now telling of his beads at Vailledolit, and the archbishop of Toledo to leaue his mitre and crosse and to put on armes, hauing no thoughts but of killing and shedding of blood: but those courtiers which found this so strange, had not perused the Annales of Spaine, where they might haue read warrelike exploits of many other Bishops, equalling the greatest captaines of their time. Notwithstanding all the oppositions of these disdainfull spirites, yet the cardinall obtained what hee pretended: for the king knew his qualities and vertues better then any other, and could so extoll him to his Councell, and other noble men in Court, as in the end they did allow of the Cardinalls proposition, they commended it, and perswaded the youth to follow him into Affrike. This warre being concluded, there was present order given, that all the gallies and other vesselles of warre, and ships to carrie victuals and baggage which were made ready in diuers ports, should come to Malaga or Carthagen: there was provision made in diuers places of come and all kindes of victuall, great store of caske to water in the enemies countrey, and of powder in euery part of Spaine: and there was commaundement given to all vassals holding fees, commaunders, and militarie benefices, to be there in person, and no man to be exempted but for a very lawful cause, and for the necessary defence of the Christian commonweale: the souldiers which were in the kings pay, and remaining in ordinarie garri- sons were also sent, and new leues made. There were also two Alcades or Prouosts of Iustice of the court appoynted to assist the cardinall, which were Callego and Aguirro, who

Enterprife of Oran by Ximenes.

in

in the Kings name, and by his authoritie, should containe euerie man in his duetie. C Herewithall there were giuen vnto the Cardinall many blankes signed and sealed by the King, to vse them when neede should require, namely, to institute and appoynt Iudges to punish offenders: wherewith the cardinall would not meddle, for that hee was a Franciscan Friar, and a man of the church. These things provided, the great captain Gonsalo Fernandez did aduise, that the managing of the warre should be giuen vnto Pedro Nanarro Earle of Albeto, who some few moneths before had built the fort of Pegnon de Veles against the Moores, and was a captaine of iudgement and great experience. The cardinall conferred with him of all matters, and did write to Vargas of the Kings counsell, and to Villalobos commissarie of the victualles, that they should deliuer the victuals and munition ordayned for this warre, as Pedro Nanarro should appoint, and to the colonels to cause their men to march towards Malaga: the chiefe of which were D. Rodrigo Moscoso Earle of Altamira, D. John Spinosa, Alphonso Vaneza, Gonsalo Ayora, Pedro of Arias, and John Vilalua, having many good and valiant captaines vnder them. To Garcia Villaroello was giuen the commaund of the horse: Ierome Vianello was made marshall of the campe, by reason of the experience and knowledge hee had of the countrie of Africke, and therefore held fittest to choose the situation of the camp, and the places where they should assaile the Moores. Thus the cardinall drew together about foure thousand horse and tenne thousand foot. To this warre, besides the money which the king did furnish out of his treasure, and that which the cardinall drew out of his coffers, the chanons of Toledo did also contribute: for the cardinall knowing that money is that which maintaines and giues perfection vnto warre, hee would not make any iust proportion of the charge of this worke, or what it might amount vnto, but sought to gather so much together, as hee might haue an ouerplus. The execution of all these prouisions was much delayed, and the voyage almost broken, for many did still detract the Cardinall and his enterprize to the king, tearing it foolish and vnfit for a man of his coate, so as the king being almost altered, was in a manner resolved to referre it to another season: the which the commissaries, collectors, captains of gallies, gouernors of townes, and others hauing publique charges, perceiuing, there was not anie one that cared to doe his duetie, nor to obey Pedro Nanarroes commaundement; there came not a shippe to Malaga, the victuals and munition which was not neere, were made deere for the cardinales men, who had not his money yet readie: the which D. Pedro seeing, he sought himselfe to diuert this expedition by another enterprize which he propounded vpon some other parts in Africke; wherewith the cardinall was much perplexed, but hee must shew his magnanimitie and perseverance: for then hee resolved to employ all his meanes, and friends, rather then to faile in that which hee had vnder-taken, which was published to all the world, and had beene a great dishonour to the king, to him, and to all Christendome, if after so great a shew of armes, they should retire without cause: which hauing made knowne vnto the king with pertinent reasons, and vehement persuations, hee had answer from the king according to his desire, that although hee were dissuaded, yet hee would haue the armie passe into Africke at the first opportunity, yet notwithstanding there grew new difficulties, the souldiers being hardly stayed, and the victuals and other prouisions, through the couctousnesse and malice of the commissaries, delaied, and in a manner denied, and many of the men at armes gone backe: yet hee surmounted all these difficulties, making the rendes-vous for his armie at Carthagea: he himselfe parting from Alcala, being accompanied with a great number of his friends and seruants in armes, where there were many Friars of his household, which girded themselues with swords vnder the habite of Saint Francis, hee came to Toledo, where hee made knowne vnto the Chapter the cause of his voyage, and hauing recommended the charge of the archbishopricke in his absence to D. John de Velasco bishop of Calaozza, he came to Carthagea. Many of his chanons desirous to see the world, would haue followed him, but he stayed two onely, and sent backe the rest: those two were Francis Aluares learned in the lawes, and Charles of Mendosa Abbot of Saint Leocadie. Being readie to imbarque, the souldiers began to call for money, else they would not goe: the author of this sedition was a rascall of Alcala of Henares, called conscience of Ximenes.

Pedro Nanarro
chiefe condu-cter of the Africane warre.

Colonels at the warre of Oran.

Worsight of the Cardinal.

Magnanimitie of the Cardinall
Ximenes.

Sedition in the Cardinals camp caused by a ras-call.

A called Arnold, who had beene a broker in his youth: the which did somewhat trouble the cardinall, not knowing whether it had a further reach, being resolved not to giue the souldiers any money vntill they were past into Africke. Vianello master of the campe, caused as many of the seditious as hee could lay hand on to be hanged, or to passe the pikes: wherein vsing too great severity, the Cardinall sent Garcia Villaroello vnto him, to admonish him to proceed more mildly for the loue and respect of his person, and the religious habite which hee bare, whom so great rigour did not befit, and the rather for that manie of these souldiers were raised in his Archbishopricke, and were come to the warres for the loue of him, abandoning both wife and children. It is not well knowne in what manner Garcia deliuered his message to Vianello, but he made him a proud answer, to the disgrace of Garcia, and of the Cardinall himselfe; with which affront D. Garcia being incensed, he could not containe himselfe, but drew his sword and hurt Vianello very sore, and then hee fled into a castle, whereas a kinsman of his was captayne, fearing the Cardinales indignation, who was much offended with these actions. Vianello hurt did somewhat stay the departure of the armie; in the meane time they got the mutined souldiers to imbarke, with promise that they should haue money as soone as they were on shippe boord, the which was perfourmed. Being then imbarked, especially by the care and policie of Salazar colonell of them of Toledo, they sawe in the Generals galley manie sakes full of crownes, deckt with bowes, and many barkes about it, drest in like manner, with a great noyse of trumpets and drummes, which made them forget all discontent, receiuing their pay with great ioy. The Cardinall did also imbarke, but hee was forced to stay some dayes for a winde, the which tuning faire, they past happily into Africke, beeing foure score shippes of burthen, thirteene gallies, and many other smaller vessells, carrying tenne thousand foot, and foure thousand horse, with many marchants, victuallers, groomes, pioners and other people necessarie in a campe. The Spaniards which write of this action, say that the Cardinall at his departure from Carthagea, had conceiued such a hope of victorie, as hee did sollicite the king by his letters to prouide for the gard of Oran which hee had already conquered, assuring him that he might shortly make vse of the armie which he led, for his affaires of Italic, whether hee himselfe would goe if need required, and that it should please him to command him. Hee was not deceiued in his conceit: but comming to the coast of Africke on Ascension day, the whole countrey was presently aduertised by the watches and fiers which were made by the Moores, and all the Christians shippes came safely that night into the port of Mersalcabir, although it were verie darke. Hauing called a Council, it was resolved to seaze presently vpon the streit passage which is betwixt Mersalcabir and Oran, whereas the beacon is set, and to bring the shippes of burthen in view of Oran, and to plant their batterie speedily, before that the Alarabes being aduertised from all parts, should gather together to make head, and hinder their descent. Vpon this resolution Pedro Nanarro caused all the vessells as soone as the souldiers were landed, to passe towards Oran, and presently to towne all the barkes which should carry the horse, holding them vnecessary in a Countrey which was rough and vneuen: the which the Cardinall not vnderstanding so well as the other, hee held it for a disgrace which Nanarro meant to doe him, commanding the horse that they should follow by land as well as they could, disposing gardes in conuenient places, for feare of the Moores surprises, the which did serue to some purpose. The passage was attempted and woon, not without great difficultie, being defended by the Moores, and Alarabes, which came out of Oran: the which was in the meane time battered from the Christians shippes and gallies. It happened that many souldiers landing out of the gallies, they hindered the Moores and the Alarabes from flying into the towne, hauing beene charged from the passage of the mountayne, and were pursued by Pedro Nanarroes troups, so as the Citie wanting men to defend it, it was taken none knowes how the souldiers climbing myraculously ouer the walles and rampiers, with the helpe of theyr pikes: the which beeing tryed by manie after the taking of it, they could not

Vianello, Master of the Campe, hurt by Garcia
Villaroello.

Army parts from Carthagea generally.

Oran taken miraculously.

get

1509 get vp by reason of the height of the walles, and the weakenesse of theyr pikes, G so as this prise was held miraculous; Sosa who carried the Cardinales cornet was the first that mounted, crying Saint Iago, Ximenes, and victorie. The Moores fayl-ing both in defence and courage, shut themselues into their Mesquites, or into their strongest houses, some held the market places, being resolved to die fighting. But the citie gates being broke open, and all the armie brought in, all this wretched multitude ranne towards the port which is towards Tremessen, to see if they might escape. But Garcia Villaroello was set there in gard with some horse, to put all them to the sword that should seeke to flee away. It happened that neere vnto that port there lay hidden in the Treacherie of the mercenarie

Moores.

gardens and other places couered with trees a hundred and fiftie horse Alarabes, of those which had bene chased from the passage of the mountaine, with no other intent but to H spoil the people that should flee out of the citie (such trecherous and couetous theues they bee) when as they saw these Christian horsemen, who watcht also for their pray, they charged them suddenly and with such fury, as before they had viewed them, they flew tenné, and put the rest to flight, whereas Garcias horse was slaine. This accident gaue many poore Moores meanes to escape. Within the citie the victorious army put all to the sword that they found in the streetes or houses, in hatred of their religion, not sparing neyther age nor sex, neyther did the care of the commanders and captaines preuaile any thing, who causing a retreat to be founded, called euery one backe into his quarter, the night approaching: for most of the souldiers being dispersed in the Moores houses and streetes, hauing fed well, fell so soundly asleepe among the dead bodies, as I

Dutie of a well advised captaine.

many of them could not bee awaked the next day at noone: wherefore it was needefull that the Earle Pedro Nauarro and the captaines with troups chosen out of their best men to watch that night. Pedro Nauarro being sufficiently aduertised of the Moores subtil-ties, did neuer disarme, neyther did he sleepe, vntill hee saw all things assured, performing therein the dutie of a well aduised captaine. The Moores which had fortified themselues in their Mesquites and other places, being summoned to yeeld, and refusing, de-resting the conquerers crueltie, were forced. In this slaughter there was a miserable spectacle of a little infant which stroue to take the mothers dugg being slaine. There

Number of them that were slaine at Oran.

were slaine as some write, aboute foure thousand, and aboute fise thousand prisoners, or eight thousand, as Ierosme Lulien the cardinals Secretary writes, and of the Christians K only thirtie. The spoile of that citie was esteemed to be worth aboute 500000 crownes, the which is credible, for they hold that there were fiteene hundred store-houses, or marchants shoppes. To conclude, all men made themselues rich there, yea the venie horse boyes. The cardinall being in the fort of Merfalcabir hauing had intelligence of the winning of the citie of Oran, caused himselfe to be conducted thither in the galleys, where hee entred with great acclamations, causing a crosse to be carried before him:
there hee receiued the keyes of the Alcazaue, that is to say, of the chiefe fort, from whence there were drawne about 300 poore Christian prisoners and set at libertie.

Distribution of the spoyle at Oran.

The spoyle being all gathered together, and kept to be presented vnto him, that he might dispose thereof as generall of the army, hee retained nothing for himselfe, but onely cau- L sed certain things to be layd a part for the king: he did separte also a part for the commoditie and vse of the army in generall, leauing the rest to the captaines and souldiers:
many of the which who had shewed themselues most valiant he honoured with presents.
It was no small difficultie to cleanse the towne of dead bodies, which did already stinke, and were likely to corrupt the ayre, for the number being great, after that they had buried many in great and deepe pittes, and burnt many, yet did they many dayes after finde some in the streetes and houses; besides, there were few men that would busie themselues to bury the dead, for there was not so great gaine, as in killing them that were liuing. They found aboute three score peeces of ordonance, and an infinite number of other engins for defence, so as it is admirable, that a towne so well peopled and so well fortified made no defence, being assured of succours from the Alarabes, vagabonds and mercenaries of Afrike, whereof they had means to entertaine good numbers. True it is that some say this city was taken by practise and treason plotted by the Cardinall, and

A and by the ministerie of Martin Argoto of Cordoua, and Alphonso of Martos prisoners in Oran, since the defeat of D. Diego Fernandes gouernor of Merfalcabir, and that these two did corrupt Hamet Acanix, or Aben Canex, and Isael Otaybi receiueurs of the reuenue which the king of Tremessen had there, and a lew dwelling at Oran, called Cetora, who were the cause that the ports were shut against the Alarabes which were repulsed, from the passage of the mountaine, of the watch, and gaue entrie to the Spaniards:
the cardinall hauing had aduice by these traitors, that he must assaile the towne the day after his arriual, for if he delayed it, he should be deceiued of his expectation, for that the king of Tremessen had a mighty army which marcht to succour the city. And they say, that he that was captaine of the Alcazaue or fort of Oran, called Cedrin, was kinsman to Acanix, B and a partisan of his treason, the which is probable: for in truth the Spaniards did first enter into Oran by the fort. The cardinall hauing cleansed the Mesquites, the chiefe of them was dedicated to the Annunciation, and an other to Saint Iaqués: hee made an hospitall called Saint Bernard, and two Couents, one of Franciscan Friars, and the other of Iacobins, and hauing ordered all things concerning religion the best he could, he left the care of state and warre to Pedro Nauarro, and so returned into Spaine, for there was no good agreement among them. The cardinall spent a whole yeere in these matters, for he arriued in Spaine the same day that he parted: He did erect a dignitie with the title of an Abbot in regard of this victorie, to the which hee assigned a seate in his church of Toledo.

C 18 This yeere, one thousand fise hundred and nine, D. Catherine Infanta of Castille, widow to Arthur prince of Wales, was married to Henrie king of England, the eight of that name, brother to her deceased husband, who was that yeere come to the crowne, by the decease of their father Henrie the seuenth, and was crowned on Saint Iohn Baptists day, which by reason thereof was solemnized with extraordinarie pompe in Ca-stille by king Ferdinand, who to perform the articles of the league made at Cambray, sent at the same time a sea-army to the realme of Naples: wherefore the Viceroy of Naples beganne to shew himselfe vpon the coast of Apulia in shew of an enemy, to force the Venetians to yeeld vnto the king his master, the townes of Manfredonia, Trani, Mono-poli, Brindez and Otranto, which had bene engaged vnto them, during the precedent D warres with France. The Pope, the Emperour, and the French King did likewise invade them, the euent whereof I will forbear to relate, it belonging not to this Historie of Spaine.

Army of Spaine
sent to annoy
the Venetians.

During the warre against the Venetians, there was a controuersie reconciled betwixt the emperour Maximilian, and king Ferdinand, touching the gouernement of Castille, after the death of king Philip. The emperour thought, that being grandfather by the fathers side vnto prince Charles the heire of that realme, and of his brother and sisters, D.
Ferdinand, D. Leonora, D. Maria, D. Isabella and D. Catherine, issued of his sonne and D.
Ioane, and therefore pretending right in Castille, it was more fit that hee should haue the gouernement, than the king D. Ferdinand, their grandfather by the mothers side; E but king Ferdinand's title seemed to be the better, for that D. Ioane his daughter, the pro-prietarie Queene of Castille was yet liuing, and that it was an vnwoorthy thing that the gouernement of a realme, which had bene honored and enlarged by him with such great conquests, should be taken from him, to giue it vnto strangers. This controuersie was ended by the mediation of the French king, vpon these conditions, That the king D.
Ferdinand should gouerne the realme of Castille, Leon &c. in case hee had no sonne by queene Germaine, vntill that prince Charles should come to the age of fise and twentie yeares, at which time hee should resigne the gouernement vnto the prince, with this charge, that during the life of queene Ioane his mother hee should not intitle himselfe king of Castille: That during this time king Ferdinand should pay vnto the emperor fifty thousand ducats yearely, and to prince Charles other great summes of money, and that F persisting in the accords of the league made at Cambray, hee should contribute to the warre of Lombardie against the Venetians. After this accord the Emperour and the French King vnderstood, to their great griefe, what the Pope and King Ferdinand had done with the Venetians.

Controuersie betwixt the emperour Maximilian & king Ferdinand reconciled.

*Practises of pope Iulio the 2.
against the French.*

19 The pope doubting that the French king who was mighty in Italie, would seeke some revenge against him, he began to study by what means he might diuert him from Italy, and if occasion were offered to expell him quite: wherefore he drew the Suisses vnto him, hee did sollicite the king of England to make war against the French, and did what hee could to cause D. Ferdinand to declare himselfe their enemy; but the Popes practises were then of small effect, for England stirred not, & king Ferdinand seeing that the French king made no shew that hee meant to annoy the pope, hee persisted in some sort in the league of Cambray, saying that hee would according to the treatie made with the emperor, assist him in the warre of Lombardie whither he sent foure hundred horse, and two thousand Spanish foote, vnder the command of the duke of Termini. The pope fearing that the Venetians ruine would also cause that of the state of Rome, and of the other potentates of Italy, he sought to haue some pretext to quarrell with the French king, hoping that if hee declared himselfe his enemy, with any colour he should sway the league of Cambray much; wherefore he tooke an occasion for that king Lewis fauored Alphonso of Este duke of Ferrara, against whom hee had a quarrell, punishing him with his spirituall and temporall armes: and to gratifie king Ferdinand and to draw him to his deuotion, hee confirmed vnto him the possession of the realme of Naples, with the said conditions that the king of Arragon his predecessors had formerly held it: the which hee had before refused, and moreover hee drew a promise from the king, to aide him with three hundred men at armes, if need were, for the defence of the territories of the church. King Ferdinand foreseeing and fearing the miseries that might ensue, if the French king and the pope should grow to an open quarrell, he did all good offices to reconcile them, but hee could not: for the pope was obstinately bent to oppresse the duke of Ferrara, and the king held it dishonourable for him to abandon his allies: whereupon king Lewis moued with a iust indignation, began to treat a new league against pope Iulio, with the emperor and other princes and potentates of Christendome, persuaading Maximilian as emperor, to pursue the vnitie of the lands held in Italie by the popes as belonging rightly vnto the empire, and that the Germans and French ioyntly should demanda a generall Councell, for the reformation of the pope and clergie: and to giue some forme thereunto for his part, hee called an assembly of the prelates of France, in manner of a Nationall Councell, in the citie of Orleans, to the end they should withdraw themselves from the popes obedience by a decree. The prelates hauing transferred the assembly from Orleans to Towers, they drew some articles to be presented vnto the pope in the name of the French church, and in case hee did refuse them, then to protest that they did not acknowledge him for their superiour, appointing in that respect an other assembly within fixe moneths after, of the clergie of France. To this enterprise the king had drawne some cardinals, namely D. Bernardin of Caruajal bishop of Siguenfa cardinal of Saint Croix a Spaniard, who had bene apostolike legat in the emperours court, hoping to make king Ferdinand to yeeld vnto it, for the respect hee bare vnto the emperor. The pope besides the interest of the Venetians and of all Italy which did moue him, being in heart an irreconcilable enemy to the French, and to all them beyond the mountaines, he desired nothing but troubles, as appeared by his courses. In the mean time king Ferdinand, by reason of an army of Turkes which had bene discovered neere vnto Otranto, was forced to call home his souldiers which he had sent into Lombardie, in fauour of the league of Cambray: which made the emperor and French king suspect that hee would ioyne with the pope; whereupon they sent vnto him to know his intent: whereunto king Ferdinand made a plaine answer, without any ambiguitie, that although by reason of the see of Naples, hee had furnished the pope with some horsemen, yet hee meant not for all that to leaue the league of Cambray, but would entertaine it more then before: and therefore hee promised to send his souldiers backe into Lombardie: but as for the other league which they treated of, hee could not yeeld vnto it, and much lesse that which concerned a generall councell, for that, sayd this catholike king, it were a scandalous thing, and would trouble all Christendome; being most apparent, that this councell was not propounded but to offend the pope, whom both he and all Christian Princes did acknowledge to be Christs vicar in the church of God: and that peace and vnion should be

Councell propounded to reforme the pope.

Cardinal of S. Croix a Spaniard against the pope.

Excuses made by king Ferdinand for not yielding to a councell.

Excuses made by king Ferdinand for not yielding to a councell.

A bee the end of all holy councells, wherefore hee excused himselfe from entring into any other league, then that of Cambray, exhorting them for the tranquillitie of the state of Christendome (tome and dismembred with warre) to hearken to some good agreement with the Pope, notwithstanding which answere the French king and the Emperour made a new League, for the executing of the league of Cambray against the Venetians, leauing libertie for the Pope to enter within fixe monethes, and for the kings of Spaine and Hungarie within foure: and if the Pope should refuse to enter into their league, then they would call a generall Councell: for the effecting whereof, the Emperour should assemble the Prelates in Germany, as the French king had done them in France. Thus, great miseries did threaten Italie, through the obstinacy of Pope Iulio.

20 Whilst that the Christian Princes of Europe treated of these things in the yeare one thousand five hundred and tenne, the coast of Africke was much annoyed by the army of Spaine, of the which the earle Pedro Nauarro was gouernour, who tooke the citie of Bugia, which had bene a great Vniuersity for the Moores; the which strooke so great a terrour throughout all Africke, as the towne of Algier and many places vpon that coast became tributaries to the crowne of Castille, agreeing with Pedro Nauarro what annual rent they should paie, and sending embassadors into Spain, who brought with them 50 Christain, slaues, and they landed at Valencia, at such time as king Ferdinand hauing left the Infant D. Ferdinand his grand-childe with Cardinal Ximenes, whom they called the Cardinall of Spain, and the councell at Valladolid, he came into Arragon, and called the estates of the realmes to Monson. The earle Pedro Nauarro continuing his conquests, hee woone Tripoli in Barbarie: and soone after, about the middest of August, D. Garcia Aluarez of Toledo arriued at Gelbes with some ships and Spanish souldiers, the which hee ioynd to the army of D. Pedro Nauarro. D. Garcia was eldest sonne to D. Frederic of Toledo duke of Alua, a gallant knight, but vnfortunate in this expedition, for hauing landed in that countrie with his troopes, hee was fought with all, vanquished and slaine vpon the place by the Arabians, and could not bee reliued by the earles army, which was at sea, his men before they came to fight with the enemy, being almost dead with thirst which they had endured in that drie and barren countrie. Some did taxe the earle D. Pedro Nauarro for this rout of D. Garcia, saying, that hee would not succour him as he might, being discontented and iealous of his comming in qualitie of generall of that lamentable enterprise.

Bugia taken by Pedro Nauarro. Algier tributary to Castille.

Tripoli in Barbary taken.

D. Garcia Aluarez of Toledo slaine by the Arabians.

21 At the west Indies Diego of Nicuesa had not much better successe in his Colonie of Nombre de Dios, which was built vpon the firme land. Those also that were in the Colonie of the Antique of Darien were also in mutinies & seditions among themselves, raised by a great souldier, but verie mutinous, called Vasco Nugnes, of Balboa, borne at Badajos, who had incensed some of the people, against the bachelor Martin Hernandez, of Enciso, who was appointed gouernour in that place by the king: but the Bachelers Letters were vnfortunately lost, whenas hauing caused Francisco Picaro, and the companions of Hoieda to returne with him, the ship wherein hee was, was cast away at his comming to Vraba: wherefore Vasco Nugnes hauing quarreled with him, saying, that such charges did not belong to Bachelers, and hee opposing to the contrarie that he had receiued it frō the king, he could not shew it: so as there was great & long contention betwixt them, vntil the comming of Roderigo Henriques of Colmenares, with two carauels laden with victuals and prouisions, and 70 men, who went from the port of Beata of S. Domingo, to seeke out *Hoieda*s companions. He being come to a place called Garia, had landed with fifty Spaniards, to fetch water, but they were instantly charged by a great number of Indian archers, who slue 47 and tooke the rest aliue, and then they eate them all: whereupon Roderigo dislodging, he entred into the gulph of Vraba, where he found some steps and marks of the Spaniards landing: wherefore he shot off certain peeces of ordnance, and made a great smoake, to giue aduertisement that he was on shoare, to end that if there were any Spaniards they should answere him. Those of the Antique of Darien perceiuing the smoake, and hearing the shot, made answere in like maner: wherefore fore Colmenares directed his course that way, where he was receiued with great ioy. The Spaniards were relieued by him of their miseries & pouertie: for had he not arriued, they had been cut in peeces, or perished for hunger. Roderigo Henriques of Colmenares labored in such sort as he did pacifie these mutines of the Antique of Darien, making them all consent, except Vasco Nugnes of Balboa, and the Bachelor Martin Hernandez of Enciso, who were the heads of the factions, that the superintendency & authority should bee giuen to Diego Nicuesa, as to him who had order from the king to comand. And then Colmenares set saile towards the sort of Nombre de Dios, with one ship & a brigatin, & hauing found Diego Nicuesa there poor, he did comfort him with good news of his election, so as after much discourse of his misfortunes, he embarked him 60 with of his companions, to carry him to the Antique of Darien: but Nicuesa being an indiscreet man, & full of arrogancy, he began in his voyage to braue & threaten them which had not yet receiued him for their magistrat, saying, he would teach Balboa and Enciso, the authors of these factions, to hazard the affairs of the king their master by their diuisions, & that he would punish them severely, and put others in their places, that he would take away their gold, & doe many other wonders: which words proceeding as from a mad man, displeased Roderigo Henriques of Colmenares, and others of his company, who failed not to make report thereof to them of the Antique, yea to the 2 heads of the factions, who receiued Nicuesa with 1000 scoffes & iniuries, making him to take another course with his 60 companions. This wretch directing his voyage to the Iland of Hispaniola, with an intent to accuse the bachelor Enciso, & Vasco Nugnes of Balboa, before the admiral D. Diego Columbus, eldest sonne to Christopher Columbus, then lieutenant general or viceroy in those countries, in the place of the commander Nicholas of Ouato, he perished at sea, with all his copany. The dissention betwixt Enciso & Balboa continuing, Roderigo Henriques of Colmenares did adhere to Vasco Nugnes, of Balboa, who shewed himself so proud & rash as he not only attempted to put the bachelor Martin into prison, & to confiscate his goods, but, if some had not staied him, he was resolved to do him a publike shame, which he himselfe did better deserve.

Behaviour of the Spaniards at the west Indies. Seditions among them.

1510

1511

The yere 1511 being come, in the which king Ferdinand after the assembly of Moson, being returned to Madrid, & grieving for the death of D. Garcia Aluarez of Toledo, and of his men at Gelbes, he caused a great fleet to be made ready in the ports of Malaga, Gibraltar & Calis, being resolved to go in person into Africke, & to make war against the Infidels: from the which he was diuerted, by the intreaties of the estates of his realms, shewing him the inconueniences which were to be feared, if his person should miscarie, beseeching him to giue the charge of that war to his captains. The hatred betwixt the Pope and French king, was very great: the Pope did besiege Miradola, with such vehemency, being himself at the siege in person (against the aduice of the colledge, & the dignity of his papal estate) that he took it, and hauing put 500 Spaniards, & 300 Italijs there in garrison, he took the way to Bolonia, the princes seeking to quench this fire by all good means, yea the king D. Ferdinand by his ambassadors, D. Ierosme Vich of Valencia in the court of Rome, & D. Pedro of Vrrea, in that of the emperor, whom he desired to reconcile with the Venetians, hoping that the French king would afterwards yeeld vnto it: intreating them all to giue him this contentment, to see Christendom at peace, that he might with more liberty attend the war of Africke: an enterprize which by reason should please, and be fauoured by all Christian Princes: but he labored particularly to diuert the emperor from proceeding to an assembly or conuocation of the Prelates of Germany, concerning a Councell, the which hee did utterly disallow: propunding instead thereof an assembly of ambassadors in the city of Mantoua, to consult of a pacification. By his care and diligence this assembly was made, and there met at Mantoua, for him the aboue named ambassadors; for the emperor the bishop of Gurgensis, and for the French king, the bishop of Paris, whose labour proved fruitlesse. The time was come in regard of the league of Cambray to retire king Ferdinand three hundred men at armes, which had serued the Pope, wherefore these horsemen being retained longer then was agreed, they returned to Naples. The Pope being obstinate and furious, not caring for the Emperor, and much lesse for the French king, was forced to dislodge from Bolonia, for feare of the French army, which did approach, which city, either for that it was abandoned by them he left there, or

Arrogancy of Nicuesa makes him lose the go-uernment of the same land as the Indies.

King Ferdinand
opposeth against the calling of a Councell.

A or by intelligence with the Bentiuolo, came into the power of king Lewis, without any difficulty: and soone after there were bills set vp in the publike places at Mantoua, and at Bolonia, declaring that a generall councell was assigned in September that yere 1511, to the which (the Pope and his adherents being accused of many crimes) were cited: for the which the Pope (being a cholericke and furious man) thought to run mad, calling those Cardinals which were opposite vnto him, wicked Sectaries, vsurpers of the Soueraigne bishops authority, to whom only (said he) it did belong to call a councell, inciting the Vniuersities, and faculties of diuinitie, who declared this act to be hereticall. The Emperour had made offer as a fit place, and fatal to disordred Popes, of the citie of Constance, Turin had also bene propounded, but Pisa was held most conuenient. The fury of this war was so great in Italie, as king Ferdinand (being iealous of his realm of Naples) sent three thousand Spaniards to his viceroy D. Raymond of Cardonea, vnder the command of Pedro Nauarro, earle of Albeto, still doubting that king Lewis did gape after it, notwithstanding the accords made in regard of the marriage of Queene Germaine; and hee deferred his voyage of Africke, attending the issue of these troubles, and of the councell of Pisa, the chiefe fauourers whereof, were the Cardinals of S. Croix a Spaniard, Bayeux, Saint Malo, Albret, brother to John of Albret king of Nauarre, Frenchmen; they of Colensa, & Saint Seuerin, Italians: but Pope Iulio, for that he would not seeme to faile in his pastorall office, pretending that the calling of a councell did belong to him, and to disperse that of Pisa, hee did publish another at Saint Iohn de Latran in Rome: the which wrought great effects in the hearts of princes, and of religious people which did abhor schismes. So as notwithstanding that the French king had sent 24 bishops to Pisa, in the behalfe of the Clergie of France, expecting that the emperor according to their accord should do the like for the Clergie of Germany, yet whether retained by conscience or otherwise, he neither sent bishops nor embassidors, finding sometimes one euasion sometimes another.

23 King Ferdinand being also sollicit by the Pope, and (as it is credible) hauing good intelligence with him, he made a publike declaration, that seeing neither by intreaties, nor persuasions, he could not diuert the French king from his resolution to disquiet the Apostolike sea, hee tooke it into his protection: and it is likely that the emperor Maximilian had bene also wonne by these two. This declaration was made at Seuile: whether soone after came letters from the councell of Pisa, summoning king Ferdinand to send his Prelates, and embassadors thither, whereof hee made no accompt: whereupon he parted from Seuile and came to Burgos, from whence as the Spaniards say, he sent to John of Albret king of Nauarre, to intreat him him not to beleue the councell of the Cardinal his brother, nor to adhere in any sort to that false Councell of Pisa. Yet the k. of Nauarre joined with the French king, & was declared a schismaticke, which made king Ferdinand to invade his realm, as we wil shew. And being now come to open war king Ferdinand sent the whole army which he had prepared for Africke to Naples, whereof he made D. Alfonso of Caruajal, son to D. Diego of Caruajal, Lord of Xodar, general, and one called Camudio, Colonell of the foot. In this army were 3000 foot, and some 1100 horse, whereof 600 were light horse. During his abode at Burgos, he had news that Pope Iulio was fallen dangerously sicke, so as there was neither hope of life nor recovery, the which held many Potentates in suspence, fearing some great alteration, but he recovered. From Burgos he sent embassadors to Henry king of England his son in law, to moue him to make war against the French king vpon his old pretensions; against whom & his Councell of Pisa, there was a league made, which had bin breeding betwixt the king D. Ferdinand, the Pope, & the Venetians, since the beginning of these quarrels, vnder colour to defend the rights of the Apostolike sea, to disperse the schismatical & heretical councell of Pisa, for the recoveries of the cities of Bolonia & Ferrara, & the restoring of them to the church. King Ferdinand did offer for this war 12 hundred men at armes, one thousand light horse, & 1000 Spanisht foot, the Seigniorie of Venice eight hundred men at armes, one thousand horse, and 8000 foot, & the Pope 400 men at armes, five hundred light horse, & 6000 foot: Moreouer 12 galleys for the king D. Ferdinand, & 14 for the Venetians: making D. Raymond of Cardone viceroy of Naples, general of this warre: for the entertainment of which army the Pope should furnish twenty thousand ducats a month, and the Venetians as much, and forty thousand

1511
Public
a councell
den at Pisa.

Cardinals fauouring the councell of Pisa.

Warre betwixt
France and
Spaine.

League betwixt
king Ferdinand
the Pope and
the Venetians.

1511

thousand presently: and this league was published at Rome, in the church of Sancta Maria del populo, in Octob. this yeare one thousand siue hundred and 11, into the which the king of England should be admitted, if he would. After which they did admonish & proceed against the Cardinalls which disobeyed the Pope with the accustomed ceremonies, solemnities, and delaies, to bring the into the bosom of the holy mother church, that is to say, to the Councell assigned by the Pope at Saint John de Latran: which if they disobeyed, they should be deprived of their dignities and livings, and punished as schismatikes and heretikes; which act was celebrated by the Pope, in his pontificall habit, and in a consistorie of seuen partiall Cardinalls. Those of the contrarie faction, notwithstanding all this, began to hold the councell of Pisa, whereas the Florentines would not suffer 3 hundred Frenchmen at armes to enter, which the Fathers and Prelates demanded for their gard, being led by Gaston of Foix, the kings nephew, and duke of Nemours, fearing least they should seafe vpon that city for the French king. The fathers comming to the first session, they were so mockt by the people, & receiued so many indignities, as they were forced to transfere the councell of Pisa to Milan, where they had neither more honor, nor better vsage, notwithstanding that they were in the French kings dominion, where they held their second session, the Cardinall of Saint Croix a Spaniard being president; where they attended the prelates of Germany, and the Emperors embassadors in vaine, but they wanted no excuses.

Order of the conception of Nunnes.

These seeds of warre being cast among christians, Pope Iulio doing his duety in matters, of religion, he confirmed the new order of the conception of Nunnes, instituted in the citie of Toledo some yeares before, by one of the ladies of Queene Isabell, who was second wife to king Iohn the 2, her name was D. Beatrix de Silva, of Portugal, who being suspected by her mistresse, for that by reason of her great beauty, many courted her, and there grew daileie quarrels among the courtiers, she was put in prison, where being kept three daies in teares and heauines, without bread or drinke, shee was moued to make a vow of chastity, and for this cause, they say, the virgin Mary appeared vnto her in the habit which the Nunnes doe now weare, that is, a blew cloake, and a white hood, and did comfort her. Being out of prison, and going to Toledo, with an intent to be a religious woman, there appeared two Franciscane friers vnto her, which sight made her think that they were sent to cōfesse her, & then she should be put to death: but these fathers told her that she should be the mother of many daughters, declaring vnto her the spirituall vnderstanding of it, that it should be of many religious women, & then they vanished: wherefore she going on her way, being come to Toledo, she put herselfe into the monasterie of religious women, of S. Dominike the royal, where she remained 30 yeres in a secular habit, liuing holily; afterwards she remoued with 12 nuns to a place where now S. Foy is, which in former times was called the palace of galiena, being desirous to institute an order in honor of the virgin Mary, and there she remained with her company, by the permission of the queen D. Isabella, wife to the king D. Ferdinand now reigning, vntill that the habit was confirmed vnto them by Pope Innocent the eight, & the office of the conception, vnder the rule of Cristeaux, without any other new order: in the which hauing cōtinued some time, they ioyned with the Nunnes of Saint Peter de las Duegnas, of the order of Saint Benet, making a medley of the rules of the Benedictins & Bernardines, vntill that Cardinall Francis Ximenes, then prouinciall of the Franciscans, and generall reformer in Spaine, made them to leaue the rules of Saint Benet and Saint Bernard, and to take the habit and the Office of the conception, vnder the rule of Saint Clare, putting them into the monasterie which at this day is called of the Conception, which was wont to be the conuent of Franciscane Friers, transported by reason of them to S. Iohn des Rois. There this yere 1511 Pope Iulio confirmed them in their own rule and order of the conception, leauing that of S. Clare. This yere all the coast of Affrike was terrified vpon the brute of the great preparation which had been made in Spain, to inuade them: The king of Tremessen sent his embassadors to king Ferdinand, to offer him vassalage, and a tribute of 13000 double ducats of gold payable in the citie of Oran. In Spain there died D. Beatrix of Bouadilla, Marquesse of Moya, and soone after her husband D. Andrew de Cabrera.

The yeare one thousand siue hundred and twelue following, king Ferdinand ha-

uing

1511

ning vnder taken the Popes defence, hee commanded D. Raymond of Cardoua vice-roy of Naples, appointed generall of the holy league, to ioine his forces with the Popes and Venetians; the which was done at Imola, where they made the body of the army, in the which was Legate for the Pope Cardinall Iohn of Medicis, of the title of Sancta Maria in Dominica. These forces entering into Lombardie, in a manner all that the duke of Ferrara held on this side Po, yeelded vnto the league, without any force, but La Bastie, which the earle Pedro Nauarro tooke: and then they camped before Bolonia: but Gaston of Foix duke of Nemours, a gallant young nobleman comming to releuee it, the army of the league was forced to retire to Imola. On the other side the Venetians tooke Bresse, but not the Castle; and Bergamo, with other places were yeelded vnto them: but the duke of Nemours comming to succour the castle of Bresse, hee encountered Iohn Paul Baillon vpon the way, with part of the Venetian army, and put them to rout, and then hee entered the towne and put eight thousand Venetians and inhabitants to the sword, hee tooke Andrew Gritti their commander prisoner, with Anthony Iustinien, and other men of great quality; and soone after recovered Bergamo, and all the places which the Venetians had taken. In the meane time king Ferdinand prepared a fleet in the ports of Biscaye and Guipuscoa, to assaile France vpon the coast of Guienne, hauing induced the king of England to reuiue the old quarrell, who at the persuation of the Popes embassador, had made an assemblie of the Prelates of his realme, and promised to send to the Councell of Latran: and for a greater demonstration of his hatred, hee caused the French embassadors which did reside in his court to dislodge.

Exploits of
Gaston of Foix.

25 During these troubles, the king D. Iohn, and the Queene D. Catherine of Nauarre his wife, did enioy their realme in peace, since the expulsion of the earle of Lerin the Constable, and of Lewis of Beaumont his sonne, with others of that faction: then all their care was to restore it to the ancient estate, and the places reunited which were distracted and held by the king of Castille: for the which, and to demand other rights which they pretended, they had sent many embassadors to king Ferdinand, who had returned with good hope to obtaine what they demanded, or the greater part: wherefore they sent againe doctor Iohn of Lassu Seignior of Pauierre, Ladron of Monleon, and the Protonotarie Martin of laureguisar, who were of the councel, with ample instructions to capitulate, compound, and end all their pretentions, in this form: That they should intreat the king of Arragon, Regent of Castille, that, if he made any accord with the French kings, the kings of Nauarre might be comprehended. That the embassadors should make great instance to king Ferdinand that the townes of Saint Vincent, Sos, Arcos, Garde and Bernedo, and moreouer the places of Sofieria, held by him, and the crowne of Castille, might be restored vnto them according vnto the will of the deceased Queene D. Isabella at her death, as places belonging to the Crowne of Nauarre: That in like manner they should demand as hereditarie things, the Duchies of Gandie, & of Mombanc, the earldome of Ribagorça and the citie of Balaguer in Arragon; the duchie of Pegnafiel, and the Infan tazgo of Castille, the townes of Cuellar, Castro Xeris, Haro, Villalon, and other lands; and moreouer the summe of foure hundred and twenty thousand a hundred and twelue florins of gold, sixe soulz and eight deniers of Arragon, giuen in dowrie by king Charles the third of Nauarre, to his sonne in law, D. Iohn king of Arragon: These were the pretentions of the kings of Nauarre against Castille; for the which they had beene fed with many vaine hopes, that reason should be done them: but in effect king Ferdinand shewed by his delaies that he had no such meaning, & that he expected some other occasion to acquit himselfe, and yet not to leaue any thing that he held: wherein the best euasion hee had was the restitution of them of Beaumont, which he knew to be most odious to the kings of Nauarre. The embassadors hauing done their duties, and lost many iourneys in following the court of Castille, they returned without any effect, discharging themselves vnto their kings D. Iohn and D. Catherine, who were in France: whereupon they returned into Nauarre, whereas being, when as the aboue-mentioned warres were hottest in Italie, king Ferdinand who had a designe to leade an Armye into Gascogne, in fauour of the English, sent to demand

Nauarre.

Embassade of Nauarre to king Ferdinand

demaund a passage of them for his souldiers victuals, and munition, and for his assurance, they should giue him in hostage, the castles of Estelle and Maye in Nauarre, and that of Saint John de pied de Port, vpon the frontiers of Fraunce: promising them, as hee had done at other times, in requitall of this pleasure, to restore vnto them the townes of Saint Vincent, Arcos, Garde, and others, of the principallitie of Viana. The king D. John, and D. Katherine were much troubled at this demaund, for they saue themselves much engaged to either of these two realmes of France and Castille, so as in the quarrels of these great Monarchs, taking the party of the one, they declared themselves enemies to the other, and being natures, they were a pray to both. Being thus in suspence, their owne vncle Amand of Albrer, Lord of Obal, being then in their court embassador for France, made them to adhere to king Lewis his master, promising them infinite fauours, and aduancements, from the which Mondogredo embassador for the king of Castille sought in vaine to diuert them, shewing them the miseries that would ensue. King Ferdinand being presently aduertised hereof, hee thought it a fit occasion to further his designs, and to vnite the crowne of Nauarre to that of Castille: wherefore hee made great complaints of this resolution and adherence of the kings of Nauarre to the French king, whome hee called schismaticall, and an enemy to the church of Rome, and to Pope Iulio, who hauing vsed the ordinarie meanes, by admonitions and fatherly persuations to these princes, according to the forme and stile of Rome, to quit the alluance of the peruers, and to ioyne with him and his adherents, seeing that they did persist to hold the party of France, hee proceeded against them by the last remedie, declaring them by the aduice of the consistorie of Cardinals, schismatickes and heretikes, depriuing them and their posteritie, of all right to the realme of Nauarre, and of all their goods, giuing and transferring them to king Ferdinand, regent of Castille, whose forces being prepared to passe into Guienne, did send him sely to conquer Nauarre. King John of Albrer vnderstanding of all these proceedings, hee sent D. Alfonso Carillo, his constable, and D. Pedro of Nauarre marshall of the realme, embassadors, to prevent, if it were possible, these apparent dangers, who hauing found Lewis of Beaumont, and other banished men in the court of Castille, much fauoured, soliciting D. Ferdinand to vndertake the enterprise of Nauarre, holding it to bee the onely meanes for them to bee restored, they were so ill entertained, as they made all the hast they could to returne, to make report vnto the king and to the estates assembled at Tudele, that all things tended to warre. King Ferdinand hauing the Popes sentence for a pretext to assaile this countrey, and for meanes the intelligences of many fauorers, of the faction of Beaumont, hee held it an easie matter to conquer it: wherefore hee deferred the warre of Guienne: yet for his greater iustification hauing gathered his armie together about the citie Victoria, whereof Frederic of Toledo duke of Alua was the generall, hee sent againe to sommon the kings of Nauarre to deliuer into his hands the aboue named places and castles, aduertising them that vpon refusal thereof, hee would put the Popes sentence in execution, and spoile them not onely of Nauarre, but of all that they held in France. Notwithstanding all these protestations, king John refused him the passage, and the delinerie of the castles, obiecing the league and alluance which hee had with the French king, neither could hee persuade himselfe that king Ferdinand, whome hee had neuer offended, should pursue him with such rigour as hee said, but hee found himselfe deceived, for the duke of Alua had commandement presently, that leauing the way of Guipuscoa, hee should enter into Nauarre, to conquer it. At that time by the death of D. Bernardin of Velasco, first duke of Castille. There dyed also that yere D. John de Sylua, earle of Cifuentes, president of the council, and Ferdinand infant of Granado, sonne to king Mauley Alboacen. In Germany the emperor who sought but an occasion to breake with the French king, had called an assembly of the Prelates at Ausbourg, who declared the councill of Pisa to bee odious, and worthy to bee reiected: The emperor had in like sort refused the marriage which had bin offered by king Lewis of his second daughter Renee with prince Charles

King of Nauarre adheres to the French king.

Sentence giuen by the Pope against John Albrer king of Nauarre.

Demands vncle made by king Ferdinand to him of Nauarre.

Castille.

- A of Austria, and the restitution of that which he held in Bourgondie: Yet the warre continued still in Italie, and succesfull for the French, who hauing taken many places in Romania, and deliuered them to the cardinall of S. Seuerin, who was created Apostolike Legat for the Councell at Pisa, they besieged Rauenna, which the armie of the league comming to succour, the French defeated them in battell, but with the losse of their generall Gaston of Foix, duke of Nemours, who pressing the enemy that fled, was slaine. The losse of this battell much troubled the Pope and all the cardinals at Rome, and their onely care was how to auoyd the furie of the French, whom they thought to be at their backs: And had not king Ferdinands embassadour vsed great diligence, Pope Iulio had
- B cast himselfe into the Florentines armes, who were friends and allies to the French king, to obtaine some good conditions of peace by their meanes: but being better informed of the whole successe by Iulio de Medicis, who was afterwards cardinall, and then Pope Clement the seventh, he changed his resolution, and continued the warre, being encouraged by the descent of the Swissses into Italie, to defend the Church of Rome. At that time began the first fession of the Councell of Latran, that of Milan being so ridiculous, as the cardinall John of Medicis, a prisoner, hauing ample authoritie from the Pope, gaue dispensations, absolved from censures, and did all acts of an Apostolike Legat; with a great concourse of people, before the cardinals and prelates of the opposite Councell; the which the gouernours of Milan for the French king did not contradict.
- C King Lewis fearing to be assailed in Fraunce by the forces of Spaine and England, and the Swissses being incensed against him, hauing passed the Alpes with the cardinall of Sion, the Popes Legat, the Emperour Maximilian hauing also called home all the Germans that serued the French, prest with many difficulties, he was forced to yeeld the field to the enemy, and (after that he had sought an accord in vaine) to abandon the estate of Milan, and to retire his forces into France, and to defend his owne. The cardinals of the Councell of Pisa retired: Bologna, and in a manner all other places were recovered, Genoa obtained her libertie, and John Fregoso was chosen duke; so as the French king had nothing remaining in Lombardie, but the castle of Milan, that of Cremona, Bresse, Cremona, Lignago, the Lanterne of Genoa, and Castellet.
- D 28 Thus Pope Iulio seeing his affaires so succesfull, began to thunder out his spirituall censures and fulminations, against K. Lewis, causing him to be declared, by a decree of the Councell of Latran, an heretike and schismaticke, depriuing him for that cause of all honour and royall dignitie, yea of the name of Most Christian, which had bene so long ascribed to the kings of Fraunce; which title he would transference to the kings of England: And on the other side hee did honour the king D. Ferdinand with the title of Catholike, the which the kings of Spaine carrie at this day, vnder colour of the happie warres which hee had made and ended, against the Moores which had vsurped the prouinces in Spaine, and other Infidels; but being chiefly moued by the good offices which hee had done for him and the See of Rome, opposing himselfe at that time against the French and the Councell of Pisa, and fauouring the designs of Pope Iulio, which were to prejudice the Crowne of France: whereof letters and Apostolike briefes were presented vnto king Ferdinand, being in the citie of Burgos, in the yere 1512.
- E The realme of France was not so easie to be swallowed vp as that of Nauarre: which was inuaded by the duke of Alua, king John and queene Katherine being at Pampelone, and the Castilian armie within eight leagues of them; they were so vnprouided of all meanes to make resistance, as king John could take no better resolution, then to abandon the realme, and retire himselfe into Fraunce. The inhabitants of Pampelone seeing themselves forsaken, demaunded of him, That seeing hee left them, what his pleasure was they should doe; Defend your selues (said he) as well as you can, and if you cannot make it good, yeeld vnto king Ferdinand vpon some good conditions, for I will take good order that hee shall not long enjoy Nauarre. Queene Katherine found it strange, that the king her husband should so soone abandon his realme, before that the armie of Castille had done any notable exploit: but whether it were feare, or distrust that hee had of them of Pampelone, who hee knew were affected to the earle of Lerin, and to the faction of Beaumont, hee left it, notwithstanding all her reasons and persuations, on the two and twentieth Battell of Rauenna.

Despaire of the Pope.

Victorie of Rauenna vnprofitable for the French.

Popes fulminations against K. Lewis the xij.

Nauarre.

King John of Albrer forced to retire into France.

of Iulie, this year 1512; saying, That he had rather liue in woods and mountaines, than to be a prisoner in his owne countrey. His retreat was by the vallie of Baztan, and the castle of Moya, and so went to the Court of France, leauing the queene his wife at Pampelone, who hauing stayed there but two dayes after him, followed him, with prince Henrie her sonne, and three daughters; and hauing ouertaken him, among other speeches full of bitterness, she said vnto him: O King; you shall remaine Iohn of Albret, and neuer thinke more of the realme of Nauarre, for that hauing bene superfluously good, you haue bene the lesse esteemed of your subjects, and haue vndone your selfe and your realme. D. Pedro the marshall of the realme, parted with these princes, and many other knights of the faction of Gramont. D. Lewis of Beaumonts, earle of Lerin, had such intelligences in the Court, and throughout the realme of Nauarre, as hee had particular aduise of all that was done, whereof he aduertised the duke of Alua, who marching before, came and camped within two leagues of Pampelone, hauing in his armie six thousand foot, a thousand men at armes, and fiftene hundred light horse, Castilians, besides the supplies of Beaumont, their friends, kinsfolkes, and partisans. Then the inhabitants of Pampelone sent forth vnto the duke, requiring that they might be receiued vpon certaine lawes and conditions (for they had no power to defend themselves, nor, it may be, will: ) To whom answer was made by the duke, That it was for the vanquisser to prescribe lawes vnto the vanquished; wherefore they should resolve to yeeld themselves freely into his hands, or to attend all the miseries and calamities which are vsually felt in the expugnation of townes: by reason whereof he restrained their demands to the obseruation of their ancient priuiledges and liberties, the which was granted them, and moreover some prouisions for the present estate. Among these articles that were agreed vpon, the chiefe of them were these.

Speech of Katherine to the king her husband

Fallū of Beaumont in the Court of Nauarre.

Articles vpon the yeelding of Pampelone to the duke of Alua.

1 That the duke of Alua should from thenceforth be patron and mediator for the inhabitants of Pampelone, in the demands and requests which they should make vnto the kings D. Ferdinand and D. Ioane, for all matters either honourable or profitable.

2 That such as should remaine vassals or seruants to the kings of Castille, should be maintained in their goods and estates, fees, rents, and pensions whatsoever, which they had bene accustomed to receiue from precedent kings. And to such as meant to retire themselves, such things should not be payed, but to the day of the yeelding vp of the citie.

3 That the kings receiours should gather vp the rents, reuenues, imposts, and other profits of the Crowne, as they had bene accustomed, so as they did remaine in the citie of Pampelone.

4 That the wages of Counsellors and Presidents of justice, Auditors of the royall accounts, and other officers and magistrats of the kings D. John and D. Katherine, should be paid them, with condition that they should remaine in Pampelone.

5 That the inhabitants of Pampelone should remaine faithfull seruants to the kings D. Ferdinand and D. Ioane, and in regard thereof they should enjoy their goods mouable and immouable, rights, and ancient priuiledges: And in like manner those which had followed the kings D. John and D. Katherine, if within thirtie dayes they did returne into the countrey.

6 That the inhabitants of Pampelone should not be bound to lodge any one without paying for it, no more than they of Saragosse, Valencia, and Barcellona.

7 That all knights and gentlemen which within thirtie dayes should submit themselves to the seruice of the kings D. Ferdinand and queene Ioane, should be well and honourably intreated in their persons and goods, and nor called in question for any crime formerly committed in the time of the dissensions and factions of Beaumont and Gramont.

8 That when they should goe vnto the warre, their priuiledges and rankes, touching their persons and qualities, should be maintained, as in the time of precedent kings.

9 That the rights of prouisions of victuals, filkes, money, and other things due by the kings D. John and D. Katherine, to their officers, citizens of Pampelone, which came to serue the kings of Castille, should be paid them, so as it were duely verified.

10 That if any of these articles were prejudiciall to any one, the judgement thereof should

A should be referred to the kings of Castille, D. Ferdinand, and D. Ioane his daughter.

Many other heads were propounded, whereof some were granted, and others sent backe vnto the king and his counsell; but these were the most remarkable, the which were promised and swome by the duke of Alua, in the name, and with the consent of the kings of Castille, the foure and twentieth of Iulie, in the presence of D. Lewis of Beaumont the constable, D. Antonio of Acugna, bishop of Cuenca, Pedro Lopes of Padilla, Ferdinand Suarez of Toledo, and other knights. And notwithstanding that the duke had promised not to enter into the citie vntill the next day, least it should be reproached vnto them, That they had yeelded before they had seene the enemye, yet the earle of Lerin,

B who was constable of Nauarre, entred the same day, being the foure and twentieth, and the five and twentieth the duke with the rest of the armie. Thus the kings D. John and D. Katherine, were spoyled of their realme of Nauarre, which they had held together eightene yeares and a halfe, and the queene almost ten yeares alone, after the death of her brother Francis Phelipe. From the 25 of Iulie 1512, being S. James day, Nauarre was vnto the Crowne of Castille, 468 yeares after that it had bene diuided from it, in the time, and by the death of the king D. Sancho the great. After the yeelding of the chiefe citie, the duke of Alua caused the other places of strength within the realme to be summoned to yeeld, promising that in so doing they should be intreated with the like clemencie to Pampelone; if not, he would pursue them with fire and sword, as sectaries to princes, who were declared schismatikes and heretikes. In the beginning some townes seemed difficult, but hauing better considered of their affairs, the townes of Lumbier, Sanguesse, Montreal, Olite and Tafalla, with the citie of Tudele, yeelded, yet the castle thereof held good for the kings that were expelled, Denis of Desá, a gallant knight, and a good seruant to his masters, commanding therein. They of the vallie of Roncal, and of the vallie of Amescua, trusting in the naturall force of their mountainous countrey, made no account to yeeld. King Ferdinand being at Burgos, hearing the successe of this conquest, sent supplies of men to the duke of Alua: And the better to iustifie his actions, he sent D. Antonio of Acugna, bishop of Zamora, embassador into France, to king John, offering him, That if he would quit the friendship and alliance of king Lewis, he would restore his

Duke of Alua enters into Pampelone.

Union of Castille and Nauarre by conquest.

Denis of Desá faithfull to king Iohn of Albret.

C realme to him againe. The bishop came not to king John; for notwithstanding the prerogatiue of embassadors, he was staid prisoner in Bearn, from whence he parted not, but for a great ranfome. Vpon this excesse the duke of Alua was readie to passe into Bearn, to bereuenged of the wrong done vnto the king his master, and to his embassador: but seeing the townes of Tudele, Olite, Tafalla, and Estella, begin to be somewhat moued at the brute of king Johns comming with a French armie, he remained in Nauarre; where hauing ordered matters in such sort as they seemed secure, he assembled the chiefe men of Pampelone, in the monasterie of S. Francis; where hauing made a long discourse vnto them, to iustifie the conquest which his master had made of that realme, he required them to take an oath to king Ferdinand, and they demanded three dayes respite to consider thereon; which being expired, they said, That they were content to take an oath as subjects, but not as vassals. And what difference, demanded the duke, make you betwixt vassals and subjects? He (said they) is to be vnderstood a vassall, whom the lord may intreat well or ill, at his pleasure; but the subject ought to be well intreated by him. Then the duke hauing shewed them that they should not doubt but the king would intreat them well and fauourably in all things, he alledged many reasons which induced them to take this oath, acknowledging king Ferdinand for their king, who parting from Burgos, came vnto Logroño, neere to Nauarre, where he staid the remainder of that yere, to prouide for the defence of this new conquest.

King Ferdinand's embassador arrested in Bearn.

Difference betwixt a vassall and a subject.

D This yere died D. Pascall, of the Order of the preaching friers, bishop of Burgos, at Rome D. John of Fonseca, bishop of Palence, and superintendent of the affaires of the Indies, was preferred in his place; D. John of Velasco, bishop of Calaoorra had that of Palence and D. John Castellan of Vilalua, came to that of Calaoorra; he was brother to the colonell Valalua: D. Valerio Alphonso Ordognes of Villaquiran, bishop of Ouedo, died also, and his bishopricke was giuen to D. Diego of Muros, who was bishop of Mondognedo, he who did found the colledge of S. Sauier in the Vniuersitie of Salamanca, which hath the name of of Ouiedo : the bishopricke of Mondogredo was giuen to D. Diego of Villamuriel, Pre- G sident of the Chauncerie of Granado.

Exploits of Vasco Nuges
of Balboa.

29 King Ferdinands affaires standing in these termes in Europe, the Spaniards remay-ning at the Indies, at the place called the Antique of Darien, being commaunded by Vasco Nuges of Balboa, they obtained of him the deliuerie of the bachelor Martin Hernan-des of Enciso, who could not be staied by any intreaties in that countrey, to be chiefe lu-stice ouer all, but went presently to S. Domingo, and from thence into Spaine, where hee made his complaint vnto the king, accusing Vasco Nuges of much wickednesse and excesse: whereupon there was a grieuous sentence pronounced against him, the punishment whereof he auoyded by his great future seruices. The first voyage which Vasco Nuges H made against the Indians, was against a Cachique, or king of that countrey, called Careta, lord of Coyba, who hauing refused him victuals and gold, was by him & his troups, which were 130 Spaniards, assailed, taken, and his burrough sackt, where they found three Spaniards, who, for villanies committed, had fled from their captaine Nicuesa, and had beene receiued and wel intreated by this Cachique, at whose intreatie he was de-liuered, and held for a friend, and Vasco Nuges promised to aid him against another Cachique, his enemy, who was called Ponfa. Being preft with hunger, and want of all necessaries, these Spaniards of Antique sent Samudio and Valdiuia, two of their men, into the I island of Hispaniola, to fetch them victuals; and another into Spaine, called Zamudio, who carried the processe of the bachelor Martin Hernandez of Enciso. Vasco Nuges in the meane time went in person against the Cachique Ponfa, who fled away with his people, carrying all their wealth with them: whereupon he went against another Cachique, called Comagro, whose land was not farre from the South sea: for the region of Darien is but an isthmus, or a strait necke of land. Vasco Nuges contracted friendship and alliance with this Cachique, for he found him mild and tractable. He lodged him in a hall which was 150 paces long, and 80 broad, whereas he and all his Spaniards made good cheere with their victuals, wine of dates, and other fruits after their maner: and the Cachiques eldest sonne brought the weight of 4000 dragmes in gold wrought, and seuentie slaues, which he gaue vnto the Spaniards; who seeing them through greedinesse to contend and quar-rell about the diuision of these things, he wondred much, and said vnto them, That seeing K they had so great a desire of gold, which was but earth, as for it they did thrust themselves into so great dangers, and did trouble so many peaceable nations, he would shew them a region not farre of, and neere vnto the other sea, where they should glut their couetousnesse; but they must not goe with so small a troupe; being necessarie to lead a thousand Spaniards thither. Vasco Nuges and Roderigo of Colmenares being verie joyfull of this aduertisement, and more for that they heard him speake of another neere sea, imbraced this lord, who was called Panquiao, intreating him to become a Christian, and that hee should goe with them: the which he did willingly yeeld vnto, and was baptised Charles, in honour of prince Charles of Austria, the heire of Spaine. This region whereof Charles L Panquiao spake, was called Tumanama, to come vnto the which they must of necessitie passe the mountaines and woods inhabited by the Caribes, cruell people, and eaters of men, carrying arrowes dipt in deadly poison, which made them madde that were wounded therewith: and therefore Vasco Nuges returned to Antique, to provide all things necesarie for this voyage and conquest. Hauing found Valdiuia returned from S. Domini-go with some victuals, he sent him into Spaine, and with him 15000 dragmes of gold, for the kings fift part of diuers booties which they had taken; giuing him charge to beseech the king to send a thousand Spaniards for the conquest of the South sea. But Valdiuia miscarried by the way, he and all his treasure being drowned. In the meane time Vasco Nuges with a brigantine and many barks began to saile into the gulph of Vraha, to seeke for M victuals, and finding a great riuer which he called S. Iohn, he went ten leagues vp against the streame, but he found not any man, for all were fled vp into the countrey, hauing bin terrified with the crueltie and insatiable couetousnesse of the bearded Spaniards (as they called them) by Cemaco the Cachique, who had beene vanquished by Martin Hernandez Enciso: yet the Spaniards foraged the countrey neere vnto the riuers sides, and made great bundels of arrowes and other armes, nets, coverings, and other Indian implements, the Darien an isthmus or neck of land.

Couetousnesse of
the Spaniards
somewhat checked by an Indian.

A the which afterwards they cast into the sea, for that in their returne they were taken with a storme, carrying away the value of seuen thousand Castillans in gold, but nothing that could satisfie hunger: for these people in truth were poore, and liued only of fishing, exchanging their fish with their neighbours for Mays. Roderigo Henriques of Colmenares running vp along the riuers side with seuentie companions, returned without bread, or any other victuals; but he brought much Casse-fistula, which he found growing in those regions in great abundance. Hauing joyned againe with Balboa, they entred into the mouth of a floud, which they called the blacke riuer, where they were to encounter a Ca-chico, called Abenamaquer, whom they defeated and tooke prisoner, whose arme a villanous Spaniard cut off, in cold blood, for that he had been wounded during the skirmish.
B Colmenares remaining there with this Cachico, and the moitie of the Spanish troups, Balboa with the rest past on, & came vnto a place where as he found a building made vpon great old trees, much like vnto a cage to keepe birds in: there a Cachico kept, who thinking himselfe to be in a safe place, & inexpugnable, they mockt at the Spaniards who were on the ground, & did summon the to yeeld: but when as they saw them begin to o-uerthrow the foundation of his palace with axes, he came downe with two of his sonnes, and presented himselfe humbly to Balboa, excusing himselfe that hee had not any gold, whereof he had no need, but promised that he would goe and seeke some, if he would suffer him at libertie. Balboa trusting him, let him goe free, but he was deceived: For this C Cachico falsifying his faith, comforted with other Cachicoes and their people, in great numbers, who fell vpon the Spaniards, but to their owne losse, for they were repulst with the losse of many Indians. Not content with this insolencie, the Cachicoes about the blacke riuer and that gulph, conspired to assaile the Antique of Darien suddenly with all their power, and to kill the Spaniards and eat them: The which was discovered to Vasco Nuges by a faire Indian woman whom he entertained as his friend, who had beene aduertised to free her selfe of this danger, by a brother of hers, who was of the conspiracie, and for her sake did frequent familiarly among the Spaniards. Vasco Nuges of Balboa caused this Indian to be taken, & hauing vnderstood the truth from him, and what course the Indians meant to take to execute their enterprise, he wrought in such sort on the one D side, and Colmenares on the other, as they dispersed their forces, put a confusion in their counsels, and did in a maner subiect all the countrey of Vraha. Being returned to the Antique of Darien, they sent Iohn of Quincedo, and Roderigo Henriques of Colmenares, into Spaine, to make relation vnto king Ferdinand of that which they had done, and of the conquest of the South sea, which they intended, and to beseech him to send them 1000 Spaniards to that end. That yeare there went out of Spaine, with the kings leaue, and at his owne charge, Iohn Dias de Solis, pilot major to the king, who taking the course of Pinsons, past beyond S. Augustines cape fortie degrees vnder the Equinoctiall, vnto the great riuer of Parauaguasu, which signifies in the Indian tongue, great water, the which was by Iohn
Dias called the riuer of Plata, that is to say, of siluer, for that they found there some grains
E of that mettall: and hauing planted many crosses there in signe of possession, he returned into Spaine, laden with Brasil, where he gaue an account vnto the king of his nauigation.

Riuer of Plata found by Iohn Dias de Solis.

THE

THE 26 BOOKE OF THE Historie of Spaine.

The Contents of the 26 Booke.

- 1 Warre continued by the duke of Alua in Nauarre, and the frontiers of France. An armie of French in Nauarre, and their poore exploits.
- 2 Proceeding of Pope Iulio against the Councell of Pisa, and the fauourers thereof.
- 3 Practises of the duke of Ferrara against king Ferdinand. Death of Pope Iulio the second, and election of Leon.
- 4 Queene Germaine giues a drinke to king Ferdinand her husband, to haue children by him, which causeth his death.
- 5 Warre of Milan, and dissolution of the Councell of Pisa.
- 6 Discoverie of the South sea at the Indies, by Valco Nugnes of Balboa.
- 7 Warre continued in Italie by the Emperor and Spaniards against the Venetians.
- 8 Behaniour of Valco Nugnes of Balboa at the Indies.
- 9 Designes of Pope Leo, an enemy both to Spanish and French.
- 10 Seditions at the Indies. The miserable end of Valco Nugnes of Balboa.
- 11 Comming of king Francis to the Crowne, and treaties betwixt him, the Emperor Maximilian, and king Ferdinand.
- 12 Enterprises of king Ferdinand against France. Vnion of Nauarre and Castille.
- 13 Exploits of king Francis in Italie. Abolition of the Pragmaticke sanction.
- 14 Comming of doctor Adrian Florantin to Spaine. Testament of king Ferdinand, and his death.
- 15 Exploits of the king D. Manuel in Affricke. Exactions vpon the Clergie of Portugall. His third marriage.
- 16 D. Charles of Austria, first of that name, 22 king in Castille, 43 in Leon, and 20 in Arragon, and in Nauarre the fourth of that name, and 36 king. Government of cardinall Ximenes and doctor Adrian, in the kings absence.
- 17 Estate of king Charles his house.
- 18 Troubles in Spaine by D. Pedro Giron and others, pacified by the wisdom of cardinall Ximenes.
- 19 Ordinances for the ordinarie legions in Spaine, and other orders made by cardinall Ximenes.
- 20 Gouvernement of Nauarre. Councell to ruine the townes, and to make the countrey of Nauarre desolate. Death of king Iohn of Albret and queene Katherine. Order of the iustice of M. Nauarre.
- 21 Troubles at Malaga by reason of the priuiledges and iurisdiction of the Admiraltie. Punishment of the inhabitants.
- 22 Contentions for the towne of Arenal, and reprehension of Velasques of Cuellar.
- 23 Pitifull estate of queene Ioane, mother to Charles of Austria, troubled in her senses.
- 24 Arce.

- A 24. Arceuals and storahouses for munition appointed in Spaine.
 25. Search of euasions, writings and instructions for the publike good, appointed by cardinall Ximenes in Spaine, by the which many frauds were discovered, &c.
 26. Algier taken by Horusco Barberousse, and the vaine attempts of the Spaniards.
 27. Rigorous Edict in Spaine against the Genouois. The cause thereof, and the reuocation.
 28. Vniust proceedings against the accused by the Inquisitors. Contention for the bishopricke of Sigüenza.

B

In this six and twentieth Booke are vnited the Realmes of Castille, Arragon, and Nauarre, in

D. Charles of Austria

22 in Castille 1.
 43 in Leon 1.
 20 in Arragon 1.
 36 in Nauarre 4.

C

He realme of Nauarre being conquered with so great happinesse and ease, was afterwards defended and kept with more difficultie. 1512

About the moneth of May the English armie landed in Guipuscoa, being eight thousand foot, most archers, and some other men of warre, whereof the lord marquisse Dorset was Generall, who stayed some dayes vpon those marches, attending the duke of Alua, who was busie in subduing the vallies of Amescosa, Salazar, and Roncal, with the helpe and diligence of colonell Vilalua: whose armie being fortified with new troupes sent from king Ferdinand, who was offended at the detention of his embassadour, the bishop of Zamora, in Bearn, it was led to Saint Iohn du pied de Port, which place yeelded vnto him: From whence he sent word vnto the marquisse, what he should doe to come and besiege Bayone. But the English generall thinking that the duke of Alua had caused him to stay there for the conquest of Nauarre, which concerned his master, after that he had burnt Saint Iohn de Lus, and done some other spoyles vpon the sea coast, he imbarct his men, and went home; saying, That he would returne another time: besides, there was a brute of a great French armie which marcht through Guienne, to make head against these Spanish and English forces; by reason whereof the duke of Alua hauing fortified the castile of Pied de Port, and rased that of Montgelo, he returned into high Nauarre. The French armie whereof the brute was, was led by Francis of Valois, duke Angoulesme, who was afterwards French king, in the which there was king Iohn of Albret, Charles of Montpensier, duke of Bourbon, Odet of Foix, vicont of Lautrec, the earles of Palisse and Longueuille, and others, making about fortie thousand foot and foure thousand horse. About the end of the yeare 1512, the king of Nauarre aduanced with six thousand foot, and a thousand horse, accompanied with the lords of Palisse and Longueuille, he entred into his countrey by the vallie of Roncal, where hee tooke Burgui, hauing cut the Spaniards in peeces which were in garrison, with their commander Valdes, captaine of king Ferdinands gard. On the other side the duke of Angoulesme caused the duke of Bourbon and the lord of Lautrec, to enter by Guipuscoa, with ten thousand foot, and foure hundred horse, who ruined Yrum, Vranis, Ojarcum, and the townes of Hamam and Renterie, and besieged S. Sebastien, but they left it soone, the vicont of Lautrec going to joyne with king Iohns forces, who marcht towards Pampe-lone. At that time Diego Lopes of Ayala, lord of Ceuole, was gouernour of Fontarrabie, who caused the platforme called Diego Lopes to be built towards France. The marshall

Rrrr

D. Pedro

S. Iohn du pied de Port taken by the duke of Alua.

Armie of Frēch goes into Na-
uarre.

King Iohn of Albret goes into his realme of Nauarre with an armie.

1512

Places returne to the obedience of king Iohn.

Victorie of go men ouer 600
Arragonians.

Iohn Ramires of Baquedan faithfull to his prince.

Pampelone besieged by king
Iohn.

Assault maintained by the garrison of Pa-pelone against the French.

Siege of Pampelone raised.

Armes of the province of Guipuscoa.

D. Pedro was in king Iohns armie, with many of the faction of Gramont, whose partisans G being disperfed throughout the realme, caused many places to renok to the king, as Iohn Ramires of Baquedan, lord of Saint Martin, the towne of Estella, Ladron of Mauleon, that of Mirande, Martin of Gomis Tafalla, Pedro de Rada, thar of Murillo; Jaime Velaz de Medran, S. Care, with others by other men. The king thought that the citie of Pampelone would haue done as much, but he was deceiued. Hereupon D. Alphonso of Arragon, base sonne to king Ferdinand, and Archbishop of Saragosse, sent six hundred men from Teruel, Daroca, and Albarrazin, to enter into Pampelone; who passing with- in halfe a league of Saint Martin, they were charged by fourescore and ten footmen of the vallie of Roncal, and five horsemen, who defeated them, stript them into their shirts, H and sent them home: their colonell came to Olite to demand aid, but he was in danger to be hanged by the Archbishop. Anthonie of Fonseca recovered some of these reuol- ted places, and brought the hostages to Pampelone; into the which he put himselfe. D. Francisco of Beaumont, the constables cousen, set vpon Estella, and tooke the towne, but not the castle, and recovered that of Bernette: and D. Pedro of Beaumont, the constables brother, the castle of Montjardin. The duke of Alua being in the meane time in a ma- ner inclosed in betwixt the armies of the duke of Angouleme, and the king of Nauarre: he deceiued them, escaping by vnknowne wayes, and came with his armie to Pampe- lone. And to the end the siege of Estelle should not stay and disturbe the forces of the king of Castille, Diego Hernandes of Cordoua, was sent with a supplie to them that besie- ged it: Wherefore Iohn Ramires of Baquedan being extreamely prest, was forced to yeeld it, vpon condition, That they should depart with their armes, baggage, and ensigns displayed, refusing the great offers which king Ferdinand had made him, if he would come to his seruice: So this good knight came to the king of Nauarres campe. The towne of Larraga defended by a French capitaine, was also yeelded by composition. The king of Nauarre tooke the castle of Tiebas by force, where was the ladic of Gurendayn, of the house of Artieda, whom he suffered to goe away freely: and hauing receiued a new supplie of two thousand Germans, he besieged Pampelone towards Saint Nicholas port, where there were many sallies and skirmishes made, whereby the king of Nauarre vn- derstood, that the force of the besieged was great. The duke of Alua put some of the K faction of Gramont, whom he suspected out of the towne, and hauing visited thole parts of the towne which might be dangerous, ordering all things, and ramparing vp the breaches which the enemies made with their furious batterie, he prepared himselfe to maintaine the Assault which was giuen on Saturday, the seuen and twentieth of Sep- tember, from the which the assailants were repulsed with great losse. King Ferdinand being in the meane time at Logrogne, and aduertised of the estate of his affaires, hee had drawne together the forces of Alua, Biscaie, Rioja, and part of Guipuscoa, norwith- standing that a good part of the French armie was yet in thole limits, being in all fiftene thousand fighting men, assigning their rendez-vous at Pont de Roynie, whither he sent D. Pedro Manriques, duke of Nagera, surnamed the Strong, to be generall of this armie. L At the brute whereof the king of Nauarre, being out of hope to take Pampelone, and in great necessitie of victuals, Winter also tying his armie, he raised his siege the last day of Nouember, by the counsell and persuation of the lord of Palisic, and other captains of experience: And the next day the duke of Nagera arriued with his armie, whereof there was not any need, seeing that the siege was rayfed, who for that reason refused the battrell which the French sent to present vnto him, by a king at Armes. So king Iohn of Albret complaining his ill fortune, returned on this side the Pyrenes, in the straits of which mountaines the reereward of the French armie was much trou- bled by the Guipuscoans, and other mountainers, being forced to leaue in the moun- taines of Velate, and Leysondo, part of their artillerie, the which was drawne to Pam- pelone with great pompe, in the castle of which citie there are many peeces to bee M seene at this day: By reason of which prowesse and good seruice, the king, besides ma- ny exemptions and priuiledges, added to the Armes of the province of Guipus- coa, the twelue peeces of ordnance or in a field of azure, the which it carries at this day.

The

1512

Castile.

Pope Iulius ha-tried to the duke of Ferrar-ta.

Estate of Florence vexed by the Viceroy of Naples.

- A The duke of Nagera having brought his armie backe to Logrogne, the duke of Alua remained Viceroy of Nauarre, which realme he brought all vnder the obedience of king Ferdinand, except the castle of Moya, which held long for the kings of Nauarre, who were expelled vnder a pretext of schisme, as we haue said.
- Vpon the same occasion D. Bernardin of Cardajal, cardinall of Saint Croix, and bi- shop of Siguenza, was depozed by the Councell of Latran, from all Ecclesiasticall digni- tie; and to his bishopricke D. Frederic of Portugal, bishop of Segobia, was preferred; to Segobia D. Diego of Ribera, bishop of Majorca; and to that doctor Roderigo of Mercado, Abbot of Saint Martha; borne at Ognate, who was afterwards bishop of Auila, and B President of the Chauncerie of Granada.
- 2 During the warre of Nauarre king Ferdinand sent a new supplie of men into Italie, with the commander Solis, and was in a manner resolved to send the great capitaine thi- ther, had not the counsell of some eniuous disserred him. The French affaires declining there, the duke of Ferrara, who in all their actions had assited them, found himselfe in great danger to be depriued of his estate, and expelled by the Pope, his deadly enemy: to preuent the which, and to purchase vnto himselfe friends and fauour, he set Fabrizio Col- lone, his prisoner, at libertie, without ransom; by whose meanes, with the embassador of Spaine and others, he obtained a safe conduct, with the which he went to Rome, to treat of his affaires: but he could not make his peace with the Pope, being obstinately bent C to dispossesse him of Ferrara, and to vntie the citie to the estate of the Church, offering him in recompence the countie of Ast, which he held not, but maintained that it was of the patrimonie of the Church: so as Fabrizio Colonne and the rest, who had assured his coming to Rome, were forced to put themselves in armes, to warrant him, and to con- duct him to a place of safetie; whereof there followed great hatred betwixt the Pope and the Colonnais. And king Ferdinand was no lesse displeased at these violent proce- dings of the Pope; for he had a particular affection vnto duke Alphonso, his kinsman, borne of a daughter to king Ferdinand the first, of Naples. But to make an end of that which had bene concluded by the league: that is, to chase the French out of Italie, and out of the world, if they could, D. Raymond of Gardone, Viceroy of Naples, who since D the battrell of Rauenna had bene in his gouernment, returned this yeare with his ar- mie about Bologna, to continue the warre: But the Pope and the Venetians finding themselves seised of a good part of that which they pretended, refused to furnish mo- ney for the entertainment of his armie, as had bene agreed by the treatie of the league: so as there grew a great mutinie in the campe among the souldiers, for want of pay, and the Viceroy was forced to retire, with great danger of his person, to Modena, where he found meanes to recouer some money, with the which he returned, and kept his souldiers together, who began to disband.
- At that time there being a day appoynted at Mantoua, to consult of the affaires of the warre, the Viceroy of Naples came thither, with deputies from the Pope, Emperor, E Venetians, and Suisses. There it was concluded, That they should put Maximilian Sforce, sonne to Lewis Sforce, in possession of the duchie of Milan: And moreover it was propounded, to assaile the Florentines, who were friends and allied to the Crowne of France, as wel for this cause, as to restore the familie of Medice, expelled out of that com- monweale, to their goods and honours: the which the Pope did presse much, in fauour of cardinall Iohn of Medicis, his legate, and others of that familie. This was the Vice- roy's first taske, after his returne to the armie, to lead it into the estate of Florence, from whom he tooke the town of Prato, where there were slain about two thousand men of the Florentines part, and many taken. Whereat the citie of Florence being amazed, and their Councell vnprouided of forces and meanes to resist, they yeelded to the restitu- F tion of the Medice; and to whatsoever the Viceroy would impose vpon them. For besides the summes of money which they payed for the entertainment of the Spanish armie, and another summe vnto the Emperour, they made a league with king Ferdi- nand, promising to entertaine two hundred men at armes in the armie of the league, and yet the people were depriued of a good part of their libertie, by the cardinall of Medi- cis, who created magistrats and officers at his pleasure.

Rrrr ij

Thefe

These exploits being done in the Florentines countrey, the Viceroy led his armie to G Bresse, which the Venetians did besiege, so as the lord of Aubigny was out of hope to be able to keepe it, this Spanish armie hauing so great a fame, for that it had humbled so powerful a commonweale as that of Florence: and therefore he did capitulate with the Viceroy of Naples, although the Venetians had layed the siege, and yielded it vpon conditions to depart himselfe and his men free, with their armes and baggage, their colours flying, and without arillerie. After the taking of Bresse, the bishop of Gurcensis, embassadour for the Emperour, came to Rome, whereas he of Spaine laboured much to reconcile the Emperour and the Venetians, there remaining no difference but onely for the citie of Vincence. This embassadour did also seeke to reconcile the Pope with H the Colonna's, with whom he was much displeased, for the duke of Ferrares cause. Yet there was a new league made betwixt the Pope and the Emperour, against the Venetians, approued by the Councell of Latran, leaving aplace for king Ferdinand to enter. The reason of this league was, for that the Venetians would not yield to certaine conditions which the Pope propounded vnto them. King Ferdinand's doubt herein was, that the Venetians would joyne with the French king, if they were too much prest: wherefore his embassadour fauoured them what he could. The coming of Maximilian Sforce to Verona, caused the bishop of Gurcensis to part from Rome, to establish him in the Emperours name in the duchie of Milan, whither he conducted him, hauing found him at Cremona, with the Viceroy D. Raymond of Cardona. The duke much desired by the Milanois, was received there with great joy. The cardinal of Sion presented him the keyes in the Suisses name, who would haue the honour of his restoring.

Notwithstanding the league newly made against the Venetians, the Pope had a great desire to ruine the duke of Ferrara: to prevent the which the embassadour of Spaine, by commandement from his king, did all good offices, and vsed all the meanes he could: And this was one of the chiefe causes why king Ferdinand would not please the Pope, and enter into the league. Notwithstanding the duke shewing himselfe vngratefull (no man knowes vpon what reason) procured a scandalous and horrible attempt against him, as the Spaniards write, persuading D. Ferdinand of Arragon, duke of Calabria, sonne to king Frederic, and conspiring with him, to depriue him of his life. There was a certaine monk who was messenger from the duke of Ferrara to him of Calabria, who had also for negotiator on his part, Philip Copula, sonne to the earle of Samo, whose head king Ferdinand of Naples had caused to be stricken off. This Copula had made some voyages into France, and treated with king Lewis, to giue a retreat and meanes in his realme to the duke of Calabria, being then in the Catholike kings Court at Logrogne, and should haue saued himselfe in the French armie, which was about Pampelone, hauing resolved first to set fire on certaine powder that was hidden in the kings lodging: But God would not suffer so wicked a practise to take effect. The matter being discovered, Copula was quartered, and D. Ferdinand duke of Calabria was sent prisoner to the castle of Xatiua, nere vnto Valencia, where hee remained aboue ten yeares, vntill that the Emperour Charles pardoned him, and set him at libertie. Hereupon king Ferdinand conceived so great a hatred against the duke of Ferrara, as hee commanded the Viceroy of Naples to ayd the Pope with his armie, or any other thing hee had, without any respect to the pretended pay. The Venetians seeing the Pope and Emperour leagued together to annoy them, and that the Emperour would not giue care to the Catholike kings embassadour, who did still persuaide him to make a peace with their commonwealth, and to take a summe of money in the place of Vincence, they joyned with the French king (who had not wholly forgotten the affaires of Italie, and did still hold the castles of Milan and Cremona) at the same time when as a truce was accorded betwixt king Lewis and king Ferdinand, for a yere, to the great discontent of the king of England, M who was readie to enter into France, and attended to be assisted by the Spanish armie: by reason whereof the French king did deferre the recouerie of the realme of Navarre for a time, to the which he was greatly solicited by the dispossessed kings, John and Katherine. Which truce the French king had much desired, to assure his realme on that side, being aduertised that the king of England made great preparation to assaile him, be-

League made against the Venetians.

3 Ingratitude of
the duke of Ferrara pretended by the Spaniards.

Conspiracie against king
Ferdinand.

Truce betwixt France and
Spaine.

A being still prest thereunto by Pope Julius, who conceiuing great and pemitious enterprises in his mind, died at Rome in Februarie, in the yeare 1513. By his death the duke of Ferrara was freed from great care and feare; who embracing the occasion, recouered some places in Romania, and had taken more if the Viceroyes armie had not stopt him, being lodged betwixt Regio and Plaifance, through the fauour whereof Parma and Plaifance came into the hands of Maximilian Sforce, the new duke of Milan: The cardinals being assembled, they did chuse John de Medici, cardinal of Sancta Maria in Domini, for Pope, and called him Leo the tenth.

The Viceroy being aduertised of the truce betwixt Fraunce and Spaine, he began to B resolute vpon his retreat to Naples, sending for the garrisons which were in Tortona and Alexandria; and causing the armie to march towards the riuer of Trebia, hauing with him twelue hundred men at armes, and eight thousand foot, all choyce souldiers: the which did much terrifie the Milanois and their duke, knowing that the French king made great leuies of men to recouer that estate; and fearing that the Suisses, who were all their hope, would not be able to defend them, if the French armie did presse them on the one side, and the Venetians on the other: wherefore at their intreatie, and the Popes intercession, the Viceroy and the Spanish armie stayed, and held the warre in suspence.

The truce which the two great kings had made, assured king Ferdinand's conquest of C Nauarre, the noblemen and Estates of which realme, after the retreat of the French from before Pampelone, deputed the constable D. Lewis of Beaumont, earle of Letin, to take the oath of fealtie and homage, as to their king. And the duke of Alua being returned into Castille, there remained Viceroy of Nauarre in his place D. Diego Fernandes of Cordoua, marquisse of Comares.

4 The great prosperities of D. Ferdinand king of Arragon, Regent of Castille, were accompanied with some griefe, for that he had no lawfull issue male: but queene Germain his second wife, by whom he had no children, was more perplexed, for her owne interest, who by a womanish affection sought curiously for all deuices to conceiue, thinking by art and humane helpees to obtaine that which comes from the meere D bountie and blessing of God: Wherefore it happened this yeare (it is not knowne by whose aduice) that, with the kings consent, the queene her selfe, D. Maria of Velasco, wife to D. John of Velasco, superintendent of the treasure, and D. Isabella Faure, made a drinke, or broth, for the king, to giue him force and vigour: But he had no sooner taken it, but he found nature toucht with an incurable infirmite, wherof he languished continually, and in the end dyed. This was done at Carroncillo, whither the king was come to desport himselfe with the ladies: And it is not credible that they did present him this potion to any other end, but to quicken him in these sports; for all the queenes happiness and greatnesse depended vpon the kings life. Hee was like to haue dyed of this drinke in the monastrie of Meiorado; but beeing somewhat recouered by physike, hee came to Vailledoit, to an assemblie of the Estates, where hee dispatched many affaires.

5 The French king in the meane time had in a manner dispossessed Maximilian Sforce of all his duchie of Milan, he had onely remaining Como and Nouara: Into the last he had put himselfe with many ensignes of Suisses, and was besieged by the French, where followed that memorable fallie of colonell Morim and his Suisses, and the defeat of the French, with great slaughter, and the losse of their arillerie, as you may read at large in that historie: whereupon the French repast the Alpes, and on the other side D. Raymond of Cardone, Viceroy of Naples, being with his armie vpon the passage of the riuer of Pau, opposite to the Venetian armie, led by Bartholomew of Adiano, who hauing newes of this rout of the French, retired for feare to Ponte Vico, and from thence to Tomba, nere to the riuer of Tesin. The Viceroy suffering them to passe, busied himselfe about the reduction of Genoua, which the French had deliuered into the hands of Adornes and their factions: sending, at the instance of Vobin and Ottavia Fregose, three thousand Spaniards thither, led by the marquisse of Pescara, himselfe following with the rest of the armie. Wherewith the French and the Adornes their partisans, being amazed, they left

1513
Death of Pope
Julius.

Pope Leo chosen

Nauarre.

Diego Fernandes
des of Cordoua, Viceroy of Na-
uarre.
Castille.

Drinke giuen to king Ferdinand by the St.
his wife.

Defeat of the French at Na-uara by the Suisses.

left the citie, and Otiliano Fregose was made duke. In the meane time Aluiano tooke G Lignago, by the means of Iohn Paul Bailon, who slue most of the Spaniards and Germans that were there in garrifon. He also attempted Verona in vaine. All which did much incense the Viceroy of Naples, who passing the Pau with his armie, did soone take Bergamo, Pelcare, and Bresse, Aluiano flying before him, who having diuided his armie into garrifons, push himselfe into Padoua.

Pope Leo at his first aduancement trying by the best meanes he could to dissolue the Councell of Pisa, he then receiued into grace D. Bernardin of Caruajal, cardinall of Saint Croix, and Frederic of Saint Seuerin, deposed from their dignities of cardinals, and deprived of their reuenues and benefices by Pope Iulio and the Councell of Latran. These two hauing stayed a while at Florence, by the Popes commaundement, like priuat men, they came by his permission to Rome, where they entred by night, and the next day they presented themselves vnto the Consistorie, in all humilitie, where, vpon their knees, they acknowledged their fautes, and demanded pardon, the which they obtained, approving the decrees of the Councell of Latran, and the election of the present Pope, and confesing their deposition to haue beene just, and that the Councell of Pisa was false and abhominable: whereupon they were absolved; and went and embraced all the cardinals in their ranks, who moued not from their places; after which they put on their cardinals weeds, and sat in their vsuall places: and although they did not recouer their benefices and reuenues, yet afterwards they had other things in recompence.

At the same time the South sea at the Indies was discovered: For Vasco Nungnes of Balboa, jealous that any other should obtain commision from the king to that effect, and deprive him of the honour of this discouerie, which he had now attempted, without attending any answer from Spaine, nor the 1000 Spaniards which he had demanded from the king, parting from the Antique of Darien, in September this yeare 1513, with 190 Spaniards, in a galleon and ten barks, he came to Careta, where he landed his troupe, and marcht into the countrey of the Cachico Pansa, whom he forced to giue him gold, and guides to conduct him to the mountaines, whereof notice had beene giuen him by the Cachico D. Charles Panquiao. With these guides they came into a countrey called Quareca, and the Cachico Torecha, where they were forced to fight: They slue the lord and disperfed his people, not accustomed to see such great wounds as swords of yron make, nor to heare the noyse of harquebuses, nor the biting of furious dogs, which the Spaniards led to the warre with them, whom they caused to teare in peeces certaine Indian Sodomites, whom they found in that countrey. Palsing on, Vasco Nungnes went vp certaine high mountains, with 67 of his souldiers, leauing the rest to gard them that were hurt and sicke, in a burrough at the foot of the mountaine. Being neere vnto the top, he caused his troupe to stay, and would himselfe goe ypp alone, where he discovered the waters of the South Ocean, for the which he was exceeding glad, and gaue God thanks, and then he called all the souldiers to haue them see it. There they made mounds of stones, in signe of possession taken. Being come from the mountaine, they went to assaile Cachico, called Chiape, who being obstinat, they put to flight: yet being friendly invited he returned, and made himselfe vassall to the king of Castille, accompanying him vnto the South sea shore, whereof they tooke possession, and drew a writing on the 29 of September, being S. Michaels day 1515. By this seruice which Vasco Nungnes of Balboa did then vnto the king, he well deserved his pardon, if he had offended in any thing. The company which he had left at Quareca being joyned with him, he past a great riuer with 80 Spaniards leauing the rest vpon the banke, and went and forced another Cachico, called Coque-za, who put himselfe in defence, as Chiape had done, and brought him vnder his obedience. Then thrust on with a great courage, he would enter into that sea, notwithstanding that Chiape did dissuade him, saying, That the current was strong & troublesome: so as he was in daunger of drowning; seeking to recover a neere island, where he arrived with much paine and peril. There reigned there a Cachico called Tumaco, who made offer to fight, but being aduertised by the Indians, guides to Chiape, that the Spaniards were good men, this Tumaco sent them a sonne of his, to know what they demanded: Vasco Nungnes spake courteously vnto him, appaelled him, and gaue him looking glases, Cardinals receiued into grace.

Indies.

South sea discovered by Vasco Nungnes of Balboa.

A ses, with such other toies, the which he carrying to his company, it moued them so, as Tumaco came himselfe in person to the Spanish troupe with shewes of loue and friendship, of whom the Spaniards demanded perles, for they saw the Indians of his company weare some, whereof they did furnish them with a good quantiry, and aduertised them that there was a plash neere hand, where they did fish some as big as a mans eye, the which did please the couetous Spaniards and their Captaines: but for that they were few, and there were great difficulties and dangers, they deferred this prey vnto another voyage, wherefore they returned to their companions, & past into the countrey of the Cachico Chiape, where they refreshed themselves, and rested some daies. Chiape the Cachico did also fish vpon his shoare, and gaue them about foure charges of perles. Vasco Nungnes of Balboa tooke his leaue of him, leauing some Spaniards with him, for he wept being much grieved at their departure, for the opinion he had of their wisdom: then they past a riuer to come into the countrey of a Cachico called Teoca, where the Spaniards were receiued with great ioy, and Teoca gaue them presents of gold and perles. From thence they went through desert and barren places, full of Tygres, and Lyons with hunger, thirst, and extreame danger, into the lands of Pacta, a cruell tyrant, and a Sodomite, who pursued by the conscience of his owne wickednes, thought to escape by flight, but he was brought backe, and after information made of his tyrannies, & dishonesty, Vasco Nungnes caused him to be torne in peeces by his Mastiues, with foure other lords, his confederates and ministers of such filchines, and then the peeces to bee burnt: Hee called the countrey of Pacta, All Saints. Vasco Nungnes going from thence, he came to Buquebuca, the lord of which region, thinking that the Spaniards were diuine people, he was ashamed to appeare before them, holding himselfe vnworthy, but he sent them some vessels of gold well wrought, & craued pardon of them. Going on with more desire to find victuals than gold, they saw certaine Indians which crost their way, who being brought back vnto them and demanded of what region they were, and where there was any victuals, they said, that they were subiect vnto a king called Corixo, who desired to know them, and to bee their friend, of whom afterwards they receiued thirty plates of golde, offering them all that was in his power, and intreating them to aide him against another Cachico his enemy, in whose countrey hee assured them they should find great wealth: Balboa promised him friendship, aide and fauour, presenting him with their hatchets and other iron works, and then he past into the land of Pecorosa, where he found victuals, & receiued gold & slaues, & hauing left his sick men there, he went on with sixtie souldiers onely, vntill he came vnto the Cachico Tumanama, of whom D. Charles Panquiao had spoken vnto him; whom he surprised in his lodging at night: And for that he was giuen to the brutish sin against nature, Balboa was ready to haue him burnt, but thinking to draw from him some secret of his hidden treasure, & of the qualitie of the countrey, he was content to reprehend him sharply, and to keep him prisoner, giuing some satisfaction to his accusers: and there Balboa remained the rest of that yeare 1513.

E 7 The Spaniards affaires prospering after this manner at the Indies, the Armie which was in Italie against the Venetians, was no lesse successfull. After the retreat of Aluiano the Venetian generall, the emperours lieutenant besieged Padoua in vaine. The viceroy of Naples being resolu'd to put part of his armie into Bresse, and part into Bergamo, & there to winter, he was importuned by his souldiers, to keep the field with the Germanes, hauing the Cautalarie of Naples, and the Popes, with 4500 Spaniards; hauing sent one thousand Spaniards to assist the duke of Milan: The viceroy hauing with these forces sackt Bouoelta, past the Brent, and marcht vnto the sea, burning townes and villages, and all the houses of the gentlemen of Venice, which were in that countrey: and the more to afflict & braue them, he caused ten peeces of his greatest ordnance to be mounted at a place called Marguera, and shot against the city of Venice, whereof the bullets fel at S. Seconds church, with trouble and amazement to all the inhabitants, and the more, for that night comming, it did represent vnto them more plainly, the great fiers and ruines of their houses of pleasure in the countrey; the which they held to be the greatest indignitie that euer the common wealth of Venice receiued: which thinking to reuenge they encreased their disgrace: for Aluiano hauing assured the Senat, that the enemies

Perles.

Hope of gaine make vicere-maine unpunished.

Italy.

Cruell warre of the Spaniards against the Venetians.

armie

1513

armie laden with spoiles in those moorish places, and trenches of riuers, would find G such difficulties in their retreat, as it would bee easie to put them to rout, and therefore had gotten leaue to draw their forces to field after that hee had coasted the enemies, seeking to stoppe their passage at the riuer of Brenta, being himselfe deceived and surprisid, as hee thought to stop their passage going to Verona, whether they marcht onely with an intent to retyre, hee was fought with all, and vanquished about Vincence, hauing lost about fife thousand Venetians, and many Capitaines slaine: vpon the place, with their Poudidor Andrew Lauredan, who was slaine by the contention of two souldiers, whose prisoner hee should be, besides many capitaines and gentlemen of Venice, that were prisoners: which rout did much trouble the affaires of that state. What succeeded afterwards in that warre, I leaue to other Histories whome it concernes more particularly.

Venetians defeated by the Spaniards

Forts built in Africk.

1514.
Behaviour of Vasco Nunez of Balboa at the Indies.

Boots taken at the Indies.

Travels endured with great patience and happiness by the Spaniards.

Mastines received pay and a part of the spoile among the Spaniards.

Designes of Pope Leo to put strangers out of Italy.

Pope seeks to get the realme of Naples.

King Ferdinand being much impayred by his languishing infirmities, grown by reason of the potion which had bene giuen him, attended as well as hee could the government of his realmes: but hee had a good Councell, and faithfull ministers, so as his affaires both of state and iustice, were nothing impayred, neither were they in any sort peruerced. This yeare there was a fort built at Oran, and another at a place called Pegnon, or the rocke of Alger in Africk, whereas the crowne of Castille held Melille, Cafsa, Oran, Mafalquier, Tripoli, and Bugie, and the two rockes or Pegnons of Alger, and of Velez, besides the Princes and townes, that were Tributarie vnto it. And so ended that yeare 1513.

8 In the yeare one thousand fife hundred and foureteené Vasco Nunez of Balboa, hauing staid a good space in the countrie of the Cachico Tumacama discouering the mines and treasures of that region, he parted from thence, leading one of that princes sons with him, to be instructed in the Romish religion, and came into the countrie of D. Charles Panquico, who receiued Balboa being sicke verie courteously, with all his companions, giuing the al ease & commodities he could, and when they would depart, he presented them with 20 pounds of gold. Being thus satisfied of him, they retyred to their fort of the Antique of Darien, the which they found much better peopled than they had left it: for vpon the brute of the great riches that were on the firme land, many were come from Hispaniola, & the citie of S. Domingo to inhabit there. It is thought that Balboa brought beside the contentment he had to haue discouered the South sea, the value of about 100000 Castillans in gold, besides perles and other precious jewels in great abundance, hauing made a long and dangerous voyage, gone through many barbarous nations & enemies, by desert and vnknown places, hauing not only to encounter men, but Tygres and Lyons, hunger and thirst, thick woods & craggy mountaines, and yet neuer was put to rout, neuer lost a man, nor himselfe wounded in any fort. Of al their spoiles they laied to the value of 20000 ducats for the kings right; and then they diuided the rest among them, euerie one receiuing according to his place, yea their mastines had pay as wel as the men, for it is reported that a dog belonging vnto Vasco Nunez, called Leoncillo, had for his part 500 Castillans, receiuing a greater pay than a harquebusier. After that Vasco Nunez had ordered some things in the fort of Darien, he sent a friend of his called Arbolancha, born at Bilbao, into Spain, to carry news vnto king Ferdinand of his voyages and discoueries, and the fift penny of what they had gotten.

At that time the French king did sollicite both k. Ferdinand and the emperor Maximilian to conclude the marriage betwixt D. Ferdinand brother to prince Charles of Austria, and the lady Renee, the French kings second daughter, for whose dowrie hee would quit his pretensions to the duchie of Milan: but hauing made a peace with the king of England, by a marriage contracted betwixt him & Marie that kings sister, he changed his opinion, and gaue ouer that treatie for Renee and Ferdinand. The Pope hauing diuers designes to free Italie of strangers, hauing no desire to see the French king lord of Milan, yet he entertained him with this hope, to make vse of him and his meanes, to get the realme of Naples from k. Ferdinand, to settle his brother Italian of Medicis king there, & thereof he had already had some practise with the Venetians. To fauor the Popes designes, being profitable for the common-weale of Venice, Andrew Grissi was appointed by the Senat to be generall

1514

A generall of an army to inuade the banks of Apulia, thinking by that meanes to diuert the Spanish army out of Lombardie, & that they should haue none but the Germanes to encounter. Hereupon Bartholomew of Aluiano hauing surprisid certain Spaniards, he caused them to be hanged at Padoua; saying that they had been suborned by their commanders to kill him in treason: the which put the viceroy of Naples into such a rage, as he made a notable spoile of the countrie about Padoua, & hauing chased Bernardin Antinola, nephew to Aluiano, he shut him into Citadelle, which place being battered, was taken partly by a breach, and partly by escalado. Bernardin of Antinola & his men were carried away prisoners, and the place sackt. To recompence this losse, Aluiano defeated some troups of light horse nere to Este: the army which besieged Creme, being hardly retained for want of pay was forced to retire. The armie of Spain after the taking of Citadelle, diuided it selfe into diuers lodgings, the viceroy to Verona, the Marques of Pescara to Lendenara, with 3000 Spaniards: there came about 200 men at armes to Rouigo, of which D. Garcia Manrique was captain, who suffered himselfe to be surprized by Aluiano, who led both him and all his company away prisoners: some write they were 300 horse, & 1000 Spanish foot. On the other side Renzo de Cars, being freed from the siege of Creme which hee had defended valiantly, being fortified with men, hee surprisid Bergamo by intelligence of the inhabitants, but soon after the viceroy recovered it againe, hauing ioined his Spaniards with the forces of Milan, led by Siluis Sauello, Renzo, who was within it, yeelding it vpon honorable conditions. The Bergamasques were punished for their rebellion by the purse, redeeming the sack of the town, & other punishments prepared for them, for great sums of money: the which did much displease the Spaniards, who were in hope that the spoile of this town should haue been giuen to them. Winter approaching, the armies were lodged, and for that it was bruted that the French king prepared a great power to passe into Italy in the spring, D. Raymond of Cardone the viceroy, who had his Spanish army much diminished, went to the emperor to Inspruck, to take counsell touching the affairs of the future warre. At Rome the ambassadors for the emperor, king Ferdinand, and French king vsed their art and skil to win the Popes fauor for their masters: but he being cunning, politique, and enemy to them all, discouered not his conceits, but entertained them with vaine hopes.

D 10 About the end of this yere, before that k. Ferdinand had any intelligence of the successe of Vasco Nunez of Balboa, it was resolved in counsell, to send to the Antique of Darien, & into the region of Castille del or, a knight for gouernor, whose name was Pedro Arias of Auila, born at Segobia: which charge was demanded by many, Arbolancha whome Vasco Nunez had sent into Spain, being not yet arriued, for otherwise without doubt that charge had bin giuen him in recompence of his labors & great seruice which he had done vnto the king, in the discouery of so rich countries: yet he was made gouernor of the coast towards the South sea: but D. John Rodrigo of Fonseca, bishop of Burgos, who had the superintendcy of the affaires of the Indies, & did much fauor Pedro Arias, protracted the time to make the dispatch of his prouision, yet the sentence giuen against him at the suit of the bachelor Enciso was cancelled and made void. Pedro Arias then hauing embarked at Saint Lucar of Barrameda, with one thousand fife hundred men in 17 vessels, the 14 of May, hauing in his company, srier John Cabedo first bishop of the Antique of Darien, & first Prelat of the firme land at the Indies, and for pilot John Vesputio, Florentine, he sailed in 38 daies to the Antique, where he was receiued with great ioy, & Vasco Nunez of Balboa lodged him in his own lodging, with al the honor he could deuise, & was informed by him of the whole estate of that countrie, & of the discouery which he had made of Castille del or, for so he had named it, by reason of the great riches thereof; and of the South Sea, and of pearles: wherewith Pedro Arias de Auila was verie much pleased, finding that there was worke done, and that there remained nothing but to people and husband it. He made the Licenciad Gaspar of Espinose, borne at Medina del Campo, Alcayde maior, or president of his Iustice, and according to his charge, he beganne to diuide the prouinces to his people, sending Francis Benerra with 550 Spaniards towards the Riuier of Dabayba, who indured great miseries there, and returned with notable losse. John of Ayora with foure hundred men was directed into the countrie of the Cachico D. Charles Panquico, a most faithfull friend to the Spaniards, who

Spaniards surprisid in their lodgings

Pedro Arias of Auila made viceroy of the firme land at the Indies

John Cabedo first Bishop of the Antique of Darien

1514

who notwithstanding was so ingratefully intreated by them, and the Indians his subjects so cruelly and couetously vexed, as they were forced to take armes, and to chase away Ayobana, who returned flying from whence he parted. Captain Vasco being sent towards Caribana, and Barthelmew Hurtado to Acla, they had no better success: nor others in other places: so as Vasco Nunez, was not so fortunate, but Pedro Arias and his company were as unfortunate in all their enterprises. King Ferdinand toward the end of this year 1514 did so decay in his health, as there were apparent signes of a drop sicke in him: One of the captaines which Pedro Arias de Auila, called Gonsalo of Badajos, had sent to people in the maine land, tooke his course towards Nombre de Dios, in the beginning of the year

1515

1515, where hee found Indians that were strange and vntractable, so as hauing increased his troupe, being about 80 Spaniards, by the arrivall of Lewis of Mercado, who brought 50 more, they went in company towards the south Sea, and being come to a place called Coyba, they lackt it, for that the lord of the country called Tuana flying the acquaintance of these bearded men, had retired himselfe into the woods: then they made prey of many things, and especially of slaues. Passing on by a rivers side, on the 5 day they met with two Indians laden with bread, which a blind Cachico sent vnto them, who brought them to the place where this Cachico dwelt, with whom they made good cheare, & receiued presents of gold, with information of those countries, which they sought, and guides to conduct them. Continuing on their course they came wher there reigned a lord called Taracura, who also gaue the a good quantity of gold: but yet they did not forbear to fier a brother belonging to a brother of his, for that he was not to be found at their arrivall: then passing by the countries of the Cachicos Chera and Nathan they receiued so much gold & other things, as the treasure which they got in that voyage, amounted to about 80000 ducats, & at the least 400 slaues. But, as prosperity makes people careless & overweening, being come into the countrie of a mighty lord called Pariza, holding no order nor discipline, thinking they should find friendlie reception in all places, they were suddenly charged by a great number of Indians, who slue 80 of his Spaniards, put the rest to flight, and got their gold and slaues, with all the booty which they had made in this voyage. The same year Gasper of Morales being sent by the same gouernour with 150 Spaniards towards S.

Spaniards defeated and slain by the Indians.

Perles in abundance.

Mutinies at the Indies through enuie.

Michaels gulph, he past, with the help of the Cachicos Chiapo & Tumaco, into the island of Tarareque, leading 70 men only with him, being drawne on by the fame of perles and other riches which were there, and vpon that shoare: there he had three encounters, whereas the Indians shewed themselves braue, seeking to repulse the Spaniards, but at the fourth charge they were vanquished, and the Cachico brought to obedience, by the meanes of some Indians that were friends, and did accompany the Spaniards, who did highly praise them, and extol their inuincible power: Being friends, the Spaniards were well intreated by this lord, & receiued of him about 110 markes of perle, in recompence whereof they gaue him hatchets and other small mercery wares, of the which he and his Indians made great esteeme: and this Cachico grew so familiar, as he discovered vnto Gasper of Morales all the riches of those islands, & moreover made himselfe vassall & tributarie to the king of Castille, promising to giue him yerely 100 markes of perle: he suffered himselfe to be baptized, and was called Pedro Arias, by the gouernours name, and with this good success Gasper of Morales returned hauing sped better than the rest. The gouernour Pedro Arias in the mean time being entred into a great quarrel against Vasco Nunez of Balboa (whether it were through enuie, for that the one had been more happy in discovering, then hee in gouerning of those new found countries, or through the insolencie of Balboa, who cost at his enterprises, & the aduersities of his captaine:) it did much trouble his government: to pacifie the which, & to reconcile them, frier John Caudedo, the new bishop, tried all the meanes he could, causing Vasco Nunez to marrie Pedro Arias daughter: but notwithstanding this alliance, they fel againe to great discord, which proceeded so far, as Vasco Nunez being in his gouernment towards the south sea, where he had caused foure Carauels to be built to continue his conquests, the gouernour Arias caused him to be adiourned, and forced him to appeare in iustice at the Antique of Darien, where being arriued, he was laied hold on, and the procurator fiscal pleading against him, he accused him of mutinies and other infolences committed, for the which he had beene abfolued: yet they condemned him to lose

A lose his head, with siue of his companions: the which did wonderfully incense all the Spaniards that were in that countrie, who lamented with teares the pittifull end of Vasco, because a Captaine, vnder whose conduct and good fortune they did hope in short time to be the richest men in Europe.

11 Whilest these things past at the Indies, the counsell of Spaine was in great difficulties for the affaires of Italie, by the death of Lewis 12. the French king, who dyed the first of Ianuarie, this year 1515, to whom Francis duke of Angoulême had succeeded, a young, braue, and valiant Prince, who at the first intituled himselfe duke of Milan, with an intent to pursue the right of his predecessor and father in law, wherefore hauing confirmed the peace made with the English, and vpon a hope of marriage betwixt the ladie Remy, younger daughter to the deceased king, being then but nine yeres old, and prince Charles, who began to gouern his estates of the Netherlands, being assured of his friendship, he prepared himselfe for the warre of Italie. It was contracted with the earle of Nassau Prince Charles his ambassador, that to the Princesse his future spouse should be giuen 600 thousand crownes, and the duchie of Berry in dowrie, in regard whereof hee should renounce al rights & pretensions which she might haue to her mothers or fathers goods, that is, to the duchies of Britaine and Milan, and moreover, that prince Charles should be a mediator to the king D. Ferdinand his grandfather, for the restoring of Iohn of Albret and Gatherine his wife, to their realm of Nauarre: & on the other side, that king Francis should aid prince Charles with men & shipping, when as (after the death of king Ferdinand, which approached) it should be fit for him to passe into Spaine, where hee feared some opposition, by his brother D. Ferdinand, who was bred vp and much beloved in Spain. King Francis sought to prolong the truce made by king Lewis his predecessor with king Ferdinand, to win the Popes fauour, and to pacifie the Suisses: but hee found opposition in all these there: for these Potentates were directly contrarie to the design which he made vpon the duchie of Milan, and it was bruted that the Suisses prepared to inuade Burgongne, or Dauphine. Besides, there was a streit league made betwixt the emperour, king Ferdinand, and the duke of Milan, to force the French king to quit the title of duke Milan, and to renounce his pretended right to the duchie. And there was another league made betwixt the French king and the Venetians in that respect.

Contract of marriage betwixt Prince Charles of Austria and Queene of France

League against king Francis.

At that time Pedro Nauarro, earle of Albeto, remained prisoner among the French, since the battell of Raunna: for whose redemption king Ferdinand did not care, for that some noblemen Castillans, of lesse merit than himselfe, through emulation of his vertue, had impured the losse of that battell vnto him: which this wise and iudicious captaine apprehended, and thinking his seruices were ill rewarded, hee agreed to serue the French king, quitting the countie of Albeto, and all that hee held in the king of Castilles dominions, making all acts and protestations in that case required: After which he began to leuie troupes of foot in Galcoine, seeming that they with other forces should serue for the recouerie of the realme of Nauarre: but the princes whome it concerned, knewe well that this great preparation was for the duchie of Milan, so as euerie one stood vpon his gard.

Pedro Nauarro serues the French king.

King Ferdinand being bound by the league to inuade France by Cattelonia, and Guipuscoa, he approached neere to Burgos, where hauing beene verie sicke some daies in the monastirie of Mejorada, hee past at Aranda of Duero, from whence he sent Queene Germaine his wife into Arragon, to assist at the Estates at Monson, and to provide for that which should be necessarie, if the warre grew hot in France, to the end hee should receiue no harm on that side, himselfe taking the charge of Castille, and of the frontier of Guipuscoa. Being come to Burgos, he called the estates, with whose aduice and aid he provided for the sea coast & the realme of Nauarre, the which at that time, as a conquest made with the forces of Castille, he did solemnly incorporate for euer to that crown: And for that his charges would be verie great for the execution of those enterprises which hee had in hand, namely for the conquest and defence of those places which hee held in Afrike and at the Indies, and to free the seas from pyrats, the Pope gaue him leaue to raise certaine summes of money vpon the Clergie for two yeres. His infirmity increasing, hee had such continuall faintings, as on the seuen and twentieth of Iune, they thought hee would haue died:

Enterprises of king Ferdinand against the French king.

Nauarre incorporated to the crowne of Castille.

1515 Testament of king Ferdinand

Chancellor of Arragon accused to have sought to dispose of queen Germaine.

Interview betwixt Pope Leo and king Francis.

Pragmatike sanction abolished.

Death of D.
Gonsalo Fernandes of Cor-doua, called the
great Capitaine.

died: wherefore finding himselfe neere his end, he desired to make his will, and caused it to be written, leauing his daughter Queene Joane for his generall heire, and the infant D. Ferdinand his grand-child, gouernour of Castille; to whom he gaue for gouernour D. Gonsalo of Guzman treasurer of Calatrava, and for his Schoolemaster D. Aluaro Oforio bishop of Astorga, hauing a great desire to cause the three masterships of Castille to fall into his hands after his death, whereupon he made orders which hee thought might take place, but afterwards he reuoked them. He had some amendment, and came to Aranda of Duero, whether Anthony Augustine, his Chancellor of Arragon came, whom he caused to be apprehended, and committed, being informed that he had presumed to attempt against the honor of the queene, his wife: for seeing her too desirous to haue children, and the king her husband by reason of his age and infirmities, too weake, he had offered her his seruice too familiarly. This Chancellor remained in prison, till after the kings death, and then was set at liberty by the Cardinal Ximenes, who was gouernor of Spaine. The same yeare there hauing been an enteruiew at Vienne in Austria, betwixt the emperor Maximilian and Ladilaus king of Hongarie, and Bohemia, the marriages were accorded of the infant Ferdinand, with Anne daughter to the said king of Hongarie, and of Marie sister to prince Charles of Austria, Infanta of Castille, with Lewis sonne and heir to the said king Ladilaus.

13 King Francis past into Lombardy, with a great army: what succeeded in those wars you may read at large in the French Historie. The Pope seeing all things prosper for the French, made an accord with the king: they had an enteruiew at Bologna, with great shewes of friendship; there they confirmed their league, and conferred long of the conquest of Naples, for the French king: but they resolved to deferre it till after the death of king Ferdinand, which they knew to be neere: the Pope hauing no desire of it for the quiet of Italie, alleging for excuse, that the time of the league which hee had with the Catholike king, did not yet expire of sixteene months, yet in shew he seemed verie willing to countenance that conquest, so as the French king (who was well content to haue it deferred vntil another time, for that his treasure was exhausted) was verie well satisfied. There the Pragmatike sanction was abolished, the Pope granting liberty to the king, to the preiudice of the clergy of France, to name & present men at his pleasure, to ecclesiastical dignities and benefices being void within his realme; a priuiledge which belonged to Chapters and Colledge: they made many other agreements to the contentment one of another.

In this estate stood the affaires of Italie, towards the end of king Ferdinands daies, whose disease did vndermine him by little & little yet he would needs part from Segobia, to goe into Arragon to the estates, whether he had sent Queene Germaine his wife, transporting himselfe to Calatrava: but he was forced to returne into Castille, as well for the affaires of the realme, as to giue order to prouide men for Italie in fauour of the emperor Maximilian, who made preparation to enter it in the Spring, and also to care for the defence of that which he held in Africke. At that time was the marriage betwixt D. Alfonso Peres of Guzman, or Aluaro duke of Medina Sydonia, and D. Anna of Arragon, daughter to D. Alfonso of Arragon, the kings Neece: to whom one of his Councel comming from visiting a certaine woman, whom they held for a Saint in Spaine, called the holie woman of Barca, reported from her, that hee should bee of a good courage, for hee should not die before he had conquered Ierusalem: but this good woman was deceived.

This yeare dyed of a double quarter Ague, the great Capitaine Gonsalo Fernandes of Cordoua duke of Sessa, Terranova, of Saint Ange, marquisse of Bitonto, Prince of Squilaci, and Constable of the realme of Naples. Among the other vertues of this famous man, hee is much commended for his great chastity, a rare thing in a Spaniard: his end was in the seventy third yeare of his age, leauing by his wife D. Maria Henrique, one only daughter and heire, named D. Eluira of Cordoua: his bodie lies in the monastery of Saint Ierosme, in that citie. The king hearing of the death of this worthy man, sent to comfort his widow and daughter.

14 In the yeare one thousand five hundred and sixteene, which was the last of king Ferdinands life, there arriued in Castille, at a place called the Serene, doctor

A Adrian Florent deane of Louvain, embassador for Prince Charles of Austria, and his Schoolemaster, who in time was made bishop of Tortosa, then Cardinall, and successively Pope. His charge in shew, was for matters of gouernement; against the Lord of Cheures, who was the princes gouernour: but in effect he came into Spaine, to pricke and looke into the state of things, and to aduertise the prince: And the King dying, which was held to bee verie neere, hee had authoritie and commandement to take possession in his name of the gouernement of the realmes of Castille, Arragon, and the rest. The king parted from Plaisance, with an intent to goe to Guadalupe, there to performe a vow: passing from one place to another, his infirmities still increasing, hee stayed at Madrigalejo, a borough neere vnto Trugillo, where he had a kind of fluxe: by reason whereof doctor Adrian (who was verie vnpleasing vnto him) transported himselfe thither; yet shewing him a good countenance, hee willed him to goe and attend him at Guadalupe: his sicknesse encreasing, they that were about him were constrained to aduertise him that his end drew neere, the which did much discontent him: for hee thought hee had a longer time to liue; neyther did hee giue credit to all that his Confessor Frier Thomas of Matienso said vnto him: but when they had often reiterated this aduertisement, that hee might dispose himselfe to die like a Christian, he caused the Licenciat Zapata and doctor Caruial, who were of his chamber, and of his Councell, to bee called vnto him, and with them the Licenciat Vergas his Treasurer, who was also of his Councell, a man in whom hee had great confidence: whom he enjoined and conured to giue him good and faithfull counsell, in that which hee should demand of them: hee told them that for the opinion hee had that prince Charles would not come in person to gouerne the realmes of Spaine, hee had appoynted the Infant D. Ferdinand gouernour of them for the Queene D. Joane her daughter: whereupon hee desired to know their opinions, if hee had not done well. These three men zealous of the good of those realmes told him freely, that in so doing he had not prouided for the peace and quiet of the realmes, wherefore he should call backe that article, and name prince Charles gouernour of them, as Lawe and Iustice required, shewing him the great inconueniences which might happen, if haply the Infant D. Ferdinand, finding himselfe seiled of so great Estates, should seeke to hold them; such thoughts being easie to breede in the hearts of princes. The king yeilded to this Councell, and reformed his Will in that point, in regard of Castille, and that which is incorporated vnto it: As for Arragon and Sicile hee left the gouernement to his base sonne D. Alfonso archbishop of Saragosse, and vntil that prince Charles came, he appoynted gouernor in his absence, by the aduice of this Councell, Cardinall Francis Ximenes of Cisneros, saying, that hee knew him to be an honest man, and wel affected, fashioned and aduanced by him and by the Queene D. Isabella; one who had no great aliances, & had alwayes shewed himselfe a faithfull seruant. As for the realm of Naples, he confirmed the gouernment with the same condition to the viceroy D. Raymond of Cardone, & in Nauar there had bin viceroy D. Frederic d'Acugna, commader of Montemolin, of the order of S. James, brother to the erle of Buendia.

E Some few dayes before he had obtaigned from Pope Leo, a new prouision in his owne person, of the three masterships of Castille, Saint James, Calatrava and Alcantara, the which he desired to resigne to the Infant D. Ferdinand whom hee loued dearely; but hee was in like manner perswaded not to doe it, for hee should remember of what importance in former times one of those masterships had bin, in the person of a priuar man; to trouble the realme: and therefore hee must thinke that if all these were ioyned in one, and he of the blood royall, hee equalling (without doubt) the kings power might cause greater alterations: whereupon the king demanding, What then shall the Infant do remaying so poore? It is, answered his Councillours, the best and goodliest inheritance that you can leaue him: for finding himselfe poore, it wil giue him occasion to seek the loue of prince Charles his brother, who will aduance him. These things pleased the king, who gaue vnto the Infant D. Ferdinand 50000 ducats of yerely rent vpon Brindes, Tarentum, and other places in Apulia in the realme of Naples, by the aduice of the same counsellours. Out of the reuenues of the realm of Sicile, he left vnto his wife Queene Germaine,

Reformation of king Ferdi-nands testament by the aduice of some of his councill.

Infant D. Ferdinand ill appointed.

SSS

thirtie

thirtie thousand florins of gold of yearely rent, the which was afterwards assigned in G Castille, vpon the townes of Arcualo, Madrigal and Olmedo: hee left moreover vnto her tenne thousand ducats in the realme of Naples. These Ordinaunces in forme of a testament were written by the hand of one of the above named Councillours, reuoking that which hee had made at Burgos; all beeing done in great secret, to the end that nothing might come to the knowledge of the Infant D. Ferdinand, who was then at Guadalupe, not of his Gouernours and Ministers, who did hope to mannage the realme after the Kings decease. The will beeing written out faire, it was receiued by the Prothonotarie Clement of Velasco. The Queene D. Germaine having notice of the extremitie of the Kings infirmities at Calataub, whereas the estates of Arragon were held; shee came with all speed to Madrigalejo; and was at his death, which was on the three and twentieth of Ianuary one thousand six hundred and sixteene, being three score and three yeares old, and having reigned one and forty yeeres, one moneth, and nine dayes, comprehending the time that king D. Philip of Austria reigned. The Kings Councell and the Noblemen beeing assembled; they resolved to send to the embassadour Adrian, who attended the king at Guadalupe: wherefore Doctor Caruajal and the Licenciat Vargas were sent vnto him, who brought him to Madrigalejo, where in his presence the kings will was opened and read, whereof they gaue a copie to the ambassador, at his request. Afterwards by the aduice of them all, D. Bernard of Rojas, marquisse of Denia, and the licenciante Riniquillo Alcaidior prouost of the Court, did accompanie the Kings bodie to Granado, and the other Noblemen went to Infant D. Ferdinand at Guadalupe; where the funeral was made with royall pompe and ceremonies. The body passing by the cite of Cordoua, there ioyned with it D. Martin of Anglobishoppe of that cite, the marquisse of Priego, the earle of Cabra, with other Lords and Knights which did accompany it vnto Granado, where with the state woorthy of such a prince, hee was interred in the chappell of Kings, by Queene Isabell his wife, whose bodie had bene left in the Alhambra of that cite.

A little before the kings death, John Dias de Solis of Lebriza, chiefe Pilot to the king; parted from the port of Lepe, with three shippes armed, to goe and discover countries in the new world, vnder the equinoctial, where hee had already bene, and found out the great riuer of Panataguala, which hee had named the riuer of Plata, or of Siluer, where beeing arrived and entered, hee landed with fiftie Spaniards, thinking to finde all things quiet; as hee had at the other time: but hee found himselfe surprized; and charged by a multitude of Indians, who slew him and all them that had landed with him; and ate them: the rest which kept the shippes being terrified, weighed anchor, and returned into Spaine, laden with breffill, and white aniline, which they vse for dying.

15. D. Manuel king of Portugall had alwayes continued his navigations, and discoveries at the East with good successe and profit, and imitating the example of the king of Castille, hee prest the African Moores his neighbors vpon the westeme shoare, from whom hee tooke the towne of Zafin, by the meanes of Nugno Fernandes of Azaide, who was the first Gouernour, and afterwards hauing sent James Duke of Bragance his nephew, with two thousand horse, and fiftene thousand foote, who landing at Marzagán, did assaile and take the towne of Azamón; beeing abandoned by the Moores: and soone after Almedina yielded; with other places of that territorie: in which expeditions the Duke of Bragance purchased so great fame, as at this day the name of Bragance is a terror to the Moores. To supply the charges of this warre conquests, the King D. Manuel hauing emptied his cofers, he obtained from Pope Leo, by his embassadours Trifan of Acugna, and doctor Diego Pacheco, aid and subvention, out of the reuenues of the Clergie of his country: whereunto the Pope did the more willingly yeeld; hauing heard the great exploits which hee had done, and the discoveries which hee had made; to whom the embassadours presented in the name of the King their master a great elephant, a lionesse, and a bishops mitre or tyare garnished with perles and precious stones, the richest that euer had bene seene at Rome. The Pope therefore to incorage and giue

meanes

Death of king Ferdinand king of Arragon.

Indies.

Spaniards slain
in the riuer of Plata by the Indians.

Portugall.

Exploits of king Manuel in Africa.

Bragance a terror to the Moores.

A meanes vnto King Manuel to proceede in so commendable an action; hee graunted him the third part of the reuenues and fringes of Spiritual Linings, and moreover to haue a Croisade preached, wherein the Kings deputies behaued themselves insolently and couetously, as all men had occasion to complain: whereupon the con-uersts and new Christians tooke occasion to fall into many errors and peruerse opinions, touching our Religion. These things past about the yeeres one thousand six hundred and twelue, one thousand six hundred and thirteene, and one thousand six hundred and fouretee. The yeere one thousand six hundred and fiftene being come, the king vndertooke to build the fort of Mandorá in Africa; but his provisions and men were all disperst and lost there, by the incursions of the Moores, so as few, and those verie poore, returned into Portugall. This vnforgotten successe was imputed to the exactions which the kings Officers vied vpon the clergie; being an opinion alreadie settled in the hearts of men: that those princes which touch the treasures of the Church, prosper not.

This yeere Queene Mary was deliuered in the City of Lisbon; of the Infant D. Edward future husband to D. Isabella daughter to D. John duke of Bragance, from whom issued D. Edward, and D. Catharina duchesse of Bragance, wife in our dayes to the duke D. John second sonne to duke D. Theodosius, and grandchild to the said D. John. Of D. Edward Portugall, and D. Isabella, was also borne D. Maria; who was married to the prince of Parrut; sonne to Ollanio Farnese, and to Mary Anne of Austria, base daughter to the emperor Charles. Soone after the death of D. Ferdinand king of Arragon, the king D.

C Manuel was full of care, for the insolent behaviour of two of his vassals, who sought to disquiet him in his navigations and voyages to the Indies. These were Ferdinand of Magellanes and Ray Fallerio, who for some discontentment retired themselves into Castille, whereas the cardinal D. Francis Ximenes archbishoppe of Toledo gouerned, offering to discover a short course or way, to go to the rich Islands of the Moliques, whence the spices came, more profitable and commodious then that of Calicut and China. Magellanes gaue D. John Rodrigues of Fonseca president of the royall council of the Indies, aid and counsel to vnderstand, that they might finde better and more short cut to goe to the Moliques by the coast of Breffill and the riuer of Plata, then by the Cape of Bonne Esperance; and hee offered they told them that the great Island of Zafintra, and Malaca, were

D comprehended in the streit and line of the navigation of Castille: they did maintain that the Islands of the Moliques were not farre from Panama, and the gulph of saint Michael, and that in all those countries and regions they found abundance of gold, pearles, precious stones, spices and drugges: and to make these counsellors more desirous, they told them many other wonders of vntowen lands, which they offered to discover. Magellanes saying, that hee had a relation of Lewis of Vertheiman of Bolonia, who had beene at Badan, Barmay, Bathian, Tidore, and other countries of spices, which are vnder the Equinoctiall; shewing many letters written from his friends to the Indians: And moreover, hee had a slave of the Island of Zamana; who vnderstood many languages of that Coun-trei; and an other slave recovered in Malaca. By these reasons and persuasions, hee induced them of the council, and the Regent D. Francis Ximenes gave good hope to Magel-lanes, to obtaine shippes and men to make this voyage, at the commanding of the prince D.

E Charles, who would not stay long before hee parted from Plandres, to come and take possession of his realmes of Castille and Arragon. The king D. Manuel made many complaints against these lightie subjects; by his Ambassadors to the council of Castille, and they against him; and the voyage was performed as we will shew. About the spring one thousand six hundred and fiftene, hee married his second wife to the king D.
Manuel, who was then in child bed of the Infant D. Anthony, who lived not long after his mothers death. And hee had great heauinesse in the king: shee lies in the monastrie of the mother of God: shee was then fine and thirte yeares old, and the king nude and forse, who beeing with the prelates and clergie men of his realme had often pre-died vnto him: that his crosses and aduersities came for that hee took the reuenues of the church, and imployed them for the affairs of his realme, hee caused the collections & contributions to cease, promising to pay into the clergie 140000 ducats in yeeres, at 2 payers. The king tooke to his third wife D. Isabella sister to prince Charles of Austria

Third part of spiritual linings granted to the king of Portu-gall in his coun-trei.

Opinion fauourable for the clergie.

Genealogie of Portugall.

Magellanes and Fallerio Portugallians
in Castille.

Death of Maria
Queene of Portugall.

King conscien-
cious.

1516

Infanta of Castille, niece to the two former quenes, being then 19. yeeres old, and the king 50. She was conducted into Portugall by Castillide, in the yere 1518. a little before the arrivall of King Charles in Spaine: the marriage was celebrated in Crato, with great pompe and state: of which marriage were borne the infants D. Charles, and D. Marie.

D. Ioane Queene of Castille, Arragon, Nauarre,

Naples, Sicile, Saragosa &c. for whose incapacity, the reigne of D. Charles her sonne began, being the first of that name, and the two and twentieth king of Castille.

Castille.

Cardinall Ximenes gouernor of Castille.

Accord for the gouernment of Spaine.

Contention for the mastership of S. Iseme.

Providence of Cardinall Ximenes for the peace of Spaine.

16 After the decease of King Ferdinand, Queene Ioane his daughter succeeded in all his realmes, lands, and seignories. Charles archduke of Austria, and erle of Flaunders her eldest sonne, who should inherite all those great estates after her, was then in Flaunders: for whose absence, and for the Queenes incapacity, Cardinall Francis Ximenes of Cisneros, according to the testament of the deceased King, tooke upon him the gouernment of Castille, with the consent of all the Councell and Nobilitie of the realme: notwithstanding that the gouernours and ministers of the infant D. Ferdinand, would, by vertue of the first testament made at Burgos, haue him intrude himselfe into the gouernment of affaires, as regent. He having written to them of the councell, said vnto him to Guadalupe, and vnto his high titles in his letters, one of the councell, said freely vnto him that presented the Infantes letters, Tell him that wee will be shortly at Guadalupe, where knowing well our duties, we will doe him the honour and reuerence that belongs vnto him, & that we haue no other king but Cesar. The prince Charles was not yet chosen emperor: but that word was taken as a pledge of his future election. The first care of cardinall Ximenes, was to make an agreement with doctor Adrian, who had brought letters and authoritie from prince Charles, by the which he declared him his lieutenant, in case that the king D. Ferdinand should die, during his legation in Spaine. The accord was thus made, that vntill they had other newes from prince Charles, they should ioyntly signall dispatches. After which they were to pacify a trouble that was of no small consequence; for D. Pedro Portocarrero, called the Deafe brother to the duke of Escalona, the steeple of the Marquess of Villeneuve at this day, had obtained after the decease of the great capitaine, who aspired to the mastership of S. Iseme, bulls and prouision from the pope, of that mastership, & did sollicite the commanders of the Order, to assemble together to receiue him: but prince Charles during his grandfatheres life, had also obtained a later prouision, by the means of D. Bernart de Caracul, of all the said masterships, in his person, and it is most certaine that king Ferdinand was not pious in seeing that he would haue giuen them to the infant D. Ferdinand. The cardinall being indignant of these things, he sent (with the aduise of doctor Adrian, and the Councell) Masfume, one of the Alcaldes of the court with letters & force, to suppress Portocarrero, and to stay this assembly of the commanders, whereunto they obeyed. Portocarrero himselfe, who delisted from his enterprise. This Cardinall had a marvellous eye vpon the actions of the infant D. Ferdinand, and of those which did gouerne him, being alwayes auerare to his person, for he feared lest the noblemen of Castille, who desired some alteration in the State, would corrupt him, and take of his name. He provided in such sort for quene Ioane, in this beginning, (to whom all things were disclosed) that she might not want money for the contriuaunce of her house and royal dignitie. The place of residence for the councell was chosen at Madrid, for that it was commodious for the cardinall being not farr from his archbishopricke of Toledo from whence they saw Pope of Compostela, & King of Aul, to come news vnto prince Charles of the death of the king his grandfather, and of all that past there. The prince was then at Seville, where he had been borne & bred vp, and his brother D. Ferdinand in Spaine: the one in the court, the other in the Flemings, the other in the court of Spaine, which made the Spaniards to chide the younger more, and did much trouble the Cardinall Ximenes. The children which at that time did gouern the person of prince Charles, & his affairs were D. Juan, D. Pedro, & D. Luis.

1516

A of Bourgondie, and afterwards Chauncellour, the Lord of Cheures, and Laxan, Chamberlaines, Lawrence Gorrebot great master, and Charles of Lannoy Master of the Horse. Hee had a Philition of Milan, called Peter Marlian, a learned man and of great experience, who was the inuentor of that Mott Plus vltra, the which prince Charles vied betwixt Hercules pillars, hee was afterwards bishop of Tui, but against the will of cardinall Ximenes. The lord of Cheures was of greatest authority about the prince, hauing bred him vp: hee was so hated of King Ferdinand as a little before his death, in a certaine treaty made with doctor Adrian, hee would haue it expressly referred that Cheures should be chased away, the which did much discontent him, who for that cause conceiued a great hatred against doctor Adrian, but hee was forced to yeeld that to the King, that hee might winne his loue to prince Charles, for hee sawe his intent was to debashe him, to aduance the Infant D. Ferdinand, if hee could. Of Spaniards D. Iohn Manuel was in some credite in the court of Flaunders, a flatterer and breeder of debate betwixt King Ferdinand and Philip of Austria his sonne in lawe, for the which hee was put in prison by the lady Marguerite gouernesse of Flaunders: but after the kings death hee was presently set at libertie by prince Charles. D. Antonio of Estuniga brother to the duke of Bejar was also honoured in that Court, D. Pedro Portocarrero Ionne to him that was deafe, of whom wee haue spoken, D. Lewis of Cordoba, D. Alphonso Alantiques, the bishop of Badajos, and Pedro Mota archbishoppe of Seuille, a famous preacher, and Secretary to the prince. Such was the estate of his Court, when hee receiued newes of the death of the king his grandfather, for the which hee shewed a grieue besitting nature, and the neerenesse of bloud that was betwixt them: hee commended him for the election which hee had made of the cardinall Francis Ximenes, and did write vnto the Infant his brother, to the widow Queene, and to the councell, giuing them hope that hee would bee soone in Spaine. In his first letters to the Gouernours and the Councell hee did intitle himselfe Prince: but some of the Councell of Flaunders, seeing Queene Ioane weake of her senses, and to bee but a vaine maske of royall dignitie, they were of opinion that hee should take the title of King, the which hee did, for that said hee, it was conformable to the custome of the princes of Flaunders and Germanie, and that it was the aduice of the Emperour Maximilian, and of Pope Leo, the which was not well liked of in Spaine: notwithstanding seeing hee had once taken it, it would haue beene dishonourable to haue left it, and therefore hee continued this title, the cardinall Ximenes causing the rest to allow of it: and thereupon they did aduance the Standard and Armes of the new King Charles, in the towne of Madrid. The Arragonois (strict defenders of their Lawes) would neuer allow of this title of King, during the life of Queene Ioane: of whom D. Alphonso of Arragon, archbishoppe of Saragosse was gouernor.

Cheures gouernor to prince Charles.

Title of King allowed in Castille to prince Charles during his mothers life, but not in Arragon.

Quarrell betwixt Pedro Giron, and the duke of Medina Sidonia.

18 Whilest these things were done at Madrid by cardinall Ximenes, there grew new tumults, the which did first disquiet Andalusia, and afterwards all the Prouinces of Spaine. The chiefe of this tumult was D. Pedro Giron, eldest sonne to the earle of Vre-gna, who entred the countrey of the duke of Medina Sidonia with forces, and besieged Luzero a sea towne, with an intent to seaze vpon the whole Duchie, if hee could. And this was the cause of his enterprise: D. Iohn of Guzman duke of Medina Sidonia married two sisters successiually, one after an other, daughters to the Duke of Bejar; by the first hee had two children, D. Henrie, and D. Mentia: and by the second one sonne called D. Aluaro: D. Mentia was married to D. Pedro Giron: D. Henrie was vnapt for generation, and dyed without children: D. Aluaro borne of the second venturer, married, as we haue said, with D. Anne of Arragon, daughter to D. Alphonso of Arragon: which marriage was made by the King D. Ferdinand, in hope that D. Aluaro should succede in all the seignories of Duke Iohn his father: who being dead, hee was put in possession of the Duchie of Medina Sidonia, notwithstanding the opposition of D. Pedro Giron, who said, that D. Aluaro was a bastard, borne in incest, nor beeing tollerable neyther by Diuine nor Humane Lawes to marrie two sisters: and if Pope had at anye time suffered it, it was for some great good and benefite to the Common weale, which had no such consideration in the fact of Legionary foul-diets instituted by cardinal

Ximenes.

Men that have families fitter
to make soldiers to defend a realme then vagabonds.

Murmuring of
the Spaniards against the cardinal for the militarie order.

King D. Ferdinand confirmed, by private letters and messages from the king, if hee had G not letters drawne in forme of a publique Decree, and the resolution of the princes Councell: Notwithstanding, without attending them, hee put one thing in execution which had bene formerly projected, and attempted by the deceased King D. Ferdinand, the execution whereof had bene hindered by the kings infirmities and death: That is, he ordained for the defence of the realme in general, as well against foreine enemies, as home-bred mutines, legions and bands of ordinarie souldiers, taken out of the citizens and burgeses of the good townes of Spaine, men of good fame, dwellers, and hauing as they say, fire and family, remembering that hee had heard the deceased King discourse, That an army of such men was more profitable, and of greater effect in any kinde, than that which was leuiued of vagabond people, and ill liuers, whereof most companies are extraordinarily raised doe consist, who haue no courage but to spoile, and are more hurtfull to friends then enemies; whereas the other louing their honour, their goods, wives and children, are animated to fight more courageously against an enemy, for their defence, and fearing the Lawes, for that they haue something to loose, they abstaine from doing wrong vnto their friends: besides, it is a ready force, and is sodainely assembled, which keeps them in awe that would seeke to inuade and spoyle the realme, or moue seditions and tumults. This ordinance hauing bene concluded in the Councell at Madrid, contrayned, That such as should bee fitt to beare armes, should giue in their names, and be inrolled by certaine Commissioners deputed, and that they should enioy many exemptions of taxes, subsidies, lodgings and other charges accustomed to bee imposed, and leuiued vpon the people, to whom should be giuen captaines, officers, drum-pets, drummes and fises, payed with the kings money: They should arme and be readie when they should be commaunded, and should come every Sunday to be mustered before the people. This Edict being proclaimed throughout the townes of Castille, was receiued and found good, with great ioy and contentment: so as in an instant there were aboue thirte thousand men inrolled, every one thinking it was an easie way to attaine vnto a degree of gentrie: and in truth they could not haue desired a thing more profitable and more delightfull: for the youth which is corrupted through idleness, and giuen to vice and damnable pleasures, by this means they gaue themselves to manage armes, to ride horses, to leape, runne, swimme and other such exercises, as were imioyned them, and giuen them in discipline by old experimented captaines, and it was a pleasing sight to behold their troupes well armed to march in good order. For the which cardinal Ximenes did purchase the reputation of a wise and prudent Gouernor, yea with foreine kings and princes, thinking, as it is true, that there is no force like vnto it, when it is moderated with good iustice, especially in the beginning, by means whereof, we reade that great and populous nations haue been easily vanquished by small potentates.
The seditious and men desirous of innovations in Spaine, were so scandalized at this Edict, as there was nothing to be generally heard but murmuring, and ill words of the cardinal Ximenes: Whereunto tend these militarie troupes? What new shew of armes doth this Cardinal bring vs? Did hee thinke that Spaine was too quiet? Did hee enuey our peace? There needed nothing else in the kings absence, but to arme the multitude, to make him more insolent, and to authorize him to ruine the nobilitie: Let this turbid man (who likes of no counsell but his owne) be well aduised what hee doeth, and in so of what consequence it is to put armes and force in the hands of a rascall multitude, in so proud a nation, whereof hee will see many troubles and miseries to grow, as it will be impossible for him to prevent them. Moreover they said, that it was the kings means to make good townes desert and vnpeopled, and to draw away their Artizans and men of trade, who leauing their shoppes, would haue no care but to be gallants, and to walke like gentlemen, abandoning themselves to all insolencies and excesses, whereby it would happen that townes vnfurnished of things necessarie for the life of man, should by little and little be reduced to want and pouerty, which they could not in long time recouer, notwithstanding any diligence whatsoever. By these and such like speeches, the inhabitants of Leon, Burgos, Salamanca, Medina del Campo, Arenalo, Madrigal, Olmedo, and in a manner all the townes that were beyond the mountaines, beganne to oppose against

Sedition at Vailledolit against Ximenes.

Division among Councillors in a State in common.

Letts of the Cardinals military Edict.

A gainst the Edict, so as it could not be put in execution in their iurisdiction: but that which most contradicted the Cardinals commaundement was the townes of Vailledolit, whereas the Commissioners that were sent to make the enrollments, were outraged and put in prison: and as one fault drawes on another, they took armes, and put themselves in defence against Cardinal Ximenes, as against an enemy, shaking off the yoke of his commaundement; and resisting him as an oppressor of their liberties, and an inueirtour and bringer in by force and violence, new and vnaccustomed things; whereof the cardinal was presently aduertised, by such as were of his partie in that towne, and for that cause suffered many indignities. The cause of these disorders and rebellions was the bad intelligence which was betwixt the cardinal and D. Antonio de Rojas bishop of Granada, the chiefe of the roiall counsell, and some other councillors, who did hate and enuey him, and did secretly giue in out, that those ordinances were not allowed by the Couricell, but mere inventions proceeding onely from the Cardinales braine: whose testimony, as the people which held a rank in the affaires of the realme, was of great weight among the people, and was a great argument of the miseries which diuision of Councillors brings vpon a State: whereunto we must adde the practices of the great men of that countrey, accustomed to play the Kings, the means whereof were taken away by this ordinance, to their great griefe. They that did most animate the inhabitants of Vailledolit to rebellion, were the admiral of Castille, and the bishoppe of Asturia: for the admiral hauing great authoritie, and hereditary rightes in the gouernment of the towne, descending from the Henriques his predecessors, although hee were a very deere friend to the Cardinal, yet when hee heard at Madrid, that they would put this Edict in practise at Vailledolit, hee said openly, that hee would neuer suffer it: and making more esteeme of his owne private interest, then of the Cardinals friendship, he went to Vailledolit, where calling his brethren, his folks and friends together, hee procured every one by his credit to oppose himselfe: The bishop who had bene Scholemaster and Gouernor to the infant D. Ferdinand, seeing that by the Cardinales diligence and care hee could not get any thing, hee grew discontented, and poured oyle into this fire, which ran through the cities of Burgos, Leon and others: whereof Cardinal Ximenes was much troubled: for although that hee had all the country on this side the mountaines, namely Antakia, Toledo, Murcia, and also beyond them the cities of Zamora, Tordesillas and others that were obedient, yet hee thought it a hard matter to use force, doubting that the contumacie of them of Vailledolit and Burgos would keepe the rest from performing: wherefore hee proceeded against these forward people with all the mildnesse hee could, admonishing them, that if they had any ancient priuiledges which did exempt them from such charges, they should produce them, and they should haue iustice done them: but they being supported by the fauour of great men their neighbours, did not respect the Cardinals friendly admo-nition; but made answer, that whilst they had breath and life, they would defend their liberties against his misused tyrannie, until that their king D. Charles should come into Spaine. These differences continued the following yere: for the Cardinal would not proceed rigorously in this business until that hee had newes from the King, whom hee did aduertise particularly of their which hee had done; and of the causes which had moued him to make these legions: soliciting D. Diego Lopez of Aragon his Agent in Court, that he should perswade the letters patents; and the authority which hee desired to be confirmed vnto him: esse it was necessary for his honour to giue order that charge, by reason of the great difficulties and oppositions which hee found. And for that hee knew that the rebels had sent vnto the king, and to the Infante de Castille, the letters, which did fill their eares with many flatteries, and shewing that there was no charge more important then the necessity whereof, the function instructions had obserued to be obeyed, and that it was the ordinarie manner of the court, who had a haire a greece of honour ouer the Gueches, who had the king, who had the court, who had the court, who had the court, negligence and neglect, hee found himselfe afterwards engaged in a badle troubles and miseries that his history speake of. Whereof seeing that time and occasion required the like

1516

Altho of Cardinall Ximenes approved by the King.

Rebellions pacified in Castille.

Defeat of Turke at sea by the Spanishe gallies.

Orders for the Indies.

Cardinall Ximenes caused information to be taken at the Indies of the Spaniards.

like remedy, to force many great men to the obseruation of the Lawes, hee had reuiued this most necessary remedie, with the which hee meant to preferue him the realme of his predecessors, without any charge vnto his coffers. For this cause hee besought the king not to giue care vnto the slanderous reports of his ill willers, who desired nothing but troubles, seeing hee had had so great proofes of his loyalty and affection: and that it would please him to write sharpe letters to the townes that would not obey him, that they might bee drawne to their dueties, a contempt or rebellion being of great importance, the which can not be light, no not in light matters: And for that since the warre of Granada Spaine was much vnfurnished of armes, that it was necessarie to send out of Flaunders, and the neighbour countries, great store of corslets, harquebuzes, pikes, and other armes: the which was faithfully solicited by Diego Lopes, and fauourably granted by the King; so as at the comming of those Letters into Spaine, the inhabitants of Vaileddoliz and others, seeing that the Cardinall's counsell was allowed by the prince, submitted themselves, and gaue over their factions. There were foure Sinites of the people appointed at Vaileddoliz, who should assist at the Councell, and might oppose against all decrees and resolutions which should bee made to the prejudice of the King, or commonweale, and if they would proceede, then to aduertise the King. This was thought verie fit and necessarie by the Vaileddolitanes, the chiefe whereof were too much obliged to the Admirall and Earle of Benauent. Thus ended the rebellion of those townes against the Cardinall; who by meanes of these prouisions maintained himselfe in his charge and authoritie. These militarie Orders haue been in our time praesented by King Philip the second, having appoynted bands and captaines, and graunted immunities to the souldiers throughout all his townes. And for that the Cardinall had provided in vaine for all inconueniences which might happen at land, if he should not in like maner assure the realme towards the Sea, he added to the old gallies which hee found in Spaine, twentie new, which were built and rigged at the charge of the people, dwelling vpon the Sea coast, ynder colour to defend them from the incursions and surprizes of the Moores, Turkes, and pyrates; the which proueed honourable for him; for thone after that they were ready, the Spanish armie tooke six Turkish gallies with the slaughter of aboue six hundred Turke, and brought them to Alicant. This Cardinall forgetting nothing that might serue for the publique good, hee repaired the forts and publique monuments which went to ruine; amongst which was the Acazania, or Afcenal of Seuille. His care and diligence extended to the Islands and West Indies, where, by his pietie and wisdom, the Spaniards beganne to taste some libertie. At that time there was resident in Madrid, Don Diego Colombus Admirall of the Indies, who had bene called home into Spaine by the deceased King D. Ferdinand; by reason of some quarrelles betwixt him and some that had charge at the Indies, and for many complaints and accusations framed against him by his enemies. After the kings deasse hee did sollicite Cardinall Ximenes the Regente to take knowledge of his affaires; and to suffer him to execute his charge; whereupon hee thought it fittest to send some good and learned man to be informed of these quarrells at the Indies, and to that end hee made choise of two sinites, of the Order of Saint Ierome, the one was Lewis of Figueroa prior of the monastier of Mejorada of Olmiedo; and the other Alphons of Saint Iohn prior of Ortega of Burgos, so whom hee ioynd Aluarez de Aluarez de Aluarez, and gaue them charge to passe into the Island of Saint Dominicke or Hispaniola, and there to take an exact information of the insolencies and abuses of euery man, and especially of the quarrells betwixt the Admirall and the Spaniards, and to requite of all things that were profitable or necessary for the publique gouernement, and especially for the quiet and good vsage of the naturall Indians, who at that time were oppressed with cruell seruitude: recommending especially vnto them the instruction of those people in religion. Afterwards hee appoynted that Aluarez should follow them for President of the Iustice, a man learned in the Lawes, and very about. The sinites being come into the Island, beganne to execute their charge very diligently, and with discretion, and did order many things, whereof this is memorable. King Ferdinand deceased, had distributed the Islands and Indians to certaine captaines, and other Spaniards, ards, who had employed themselves in these discoueries and conquests, to haue the care and defence of them, as Lordes of their vassalls and subiects; and for this reason were called Commandataires, for that these poore Indians were committed vnto them: many of these hauing left the Indies, were returned into Spaine; and there remayned: from whence the Fathers (disannulling the king D. Ferdinand Edict) tooke their vassalles and subiects, saying, that it was not reasonable the absent liuing in idleness and delights, should enioy the fruites due to their verue, who sayling ouer the spacious Ocean with so great daunger, did sweate continually vnder their armes to extend the Empire of the Crowne of Spaine, and religion: wherefore the Islanders were diuided by them to the olde inhabitants residing at the Indies; according to euery mans merite and dignitie. Then they thought that these miserable Indians were slaues by the Lawes of armes; by reason whereof their masters did intreate them cruelly, causing them to draw and to carrie burthens like horses or asses, the which seemed verie inhumane to these fathers, and strange from all Christian pietie: wherefore somewhat to moderate that which they could not altogether helpe: they ordainned that this people liuing then in the fieldes and desert places, of whom they made no more accompt then of beasts, should bee drawne into townes and villages, and liue vnder some forme of policie and municipall Lawe, taking from their masters this great authoritie and power which they pretended of life and death, letting them know, that they should vse them as vassalls, and not abuse them as slaues.

1516

Thus the Fathers thought to prouide for the libertie of this people, against the tyrannie of the souldiers: where they found great difficulties and debates, the which is vsually seene when they seeke to abolish any peruerse customes, so as their holy diligence did afterwards cause a very bad effect, through the wickednesse of the Spaniards, who seeing the same order obserued by the fathers in other llands, and places of those regions, whereas the like diuisions and distributions had bene assigned, as well by the Admirall Colombus and others, thinking that hereafter there would come others, so as in the end the Indians should be set at full libertie, whereat the Spaniards were so mad, as furcharging their subiects and vassalls with insupportable trauel they made them shrinke vnder their burthens, and die. They saie, that by the industrie of these friers, the art of drawing and refining of sugar was much bettered and augmented, and therefore they were much honoured in Spaine, as the authors and inuentors of many profitable things.

It happened at that time, that some without the priuite of Cardinall Ximenes, had gotten leaue of King Charles in Flaunders, to carrie foure hundred Ethiopian Moores to the Islands, such as the Portugalles were accustomed to bring into Spaine, vnder colour that the art of drawing and trimming their sugars required great and strong labour, which the weake bodied Indians could not vndergoe: which the Cardinall vnderstanding hee presently aduertised the King of the daunger hee foresawe therein; for these Moores are more strong and giuen to armes: wherefore hee besought him to consider what a subiect of sedition those men which had obtrayned this leaue of him, carried to the Indians, a simple and rude people, who without doubt would leaue of them to bee hardie and warlike, and to rebell afterwards against the Spaniards. This counsell was contemned by the king, or rather by Monsieur de Charles who gouerned him, thinking that the Cardinall did not so much blame their trafficke of slaues for the good of the Common weale, as for that hee being Gouernour of Spaine, thought it should not be allowed without his priuite; but he found afterwards by the euents, how wise the Cardinall's aduice was. For in the yeare one thousand five hundred and twentie, by the conspiracie of fortie of these Moores, they did cause a seuerle warre in the Island of Hispaniola, the which was hardly quenched by the verue and diligence of Melchior de Castro, and Francis d'Anila inhabitants there.

20 The gouernement of Castille was not yet assured from troubles, when as they had newes, that Iohn of Albret king of Nauarre came with a great armie of French, for the recouerie of his realme, wherewith the Cardinall was troubled; hauing not suffici-

Cruelty of the Spaniards to the Indians.

Moores strong and fit for the warre.

Nauarre.

D. Antonio
Munrique de Lara viceroy of Nauarre.

Councell barbarous to make the countrie of Nauarre desart

ent forces to assure so many affaires: knowing well that D. Frederic of Acugna, vice-roy of Nauarre was not provided as hee ought: wherefore by the aduice, and at the request of the chiefe noblemen, hee gaue the defence of the realme to D. Antonio Munrique de Lara, sonne to D. Pedro Duke of Nagera, who willingly offered himselfe to take that charge in so dangerous a time, hauing his lands neere vnto Nauarre, from whence he might drawe speedie succours at all euents: and it is a bitte continued from time to time that it was propounded in the counsell of Castille, not onely to demantle all the Townes and places of strength within the realme, by reason of the mutinies which did rise at that time in Nauarre, but also to leaue the laide wast to serue to feede their troups: the demantling did afterwards take place, but as for the desolation of the fields it was held too barbarous. D. Inigo Fernandes of Velasco, Constable of Castille, an inveterate enemy to the Duke of Nagera, sought to disappoint his sonne of his gouernement, pretending that hee had alliances, with the faction of Gramont, and did still feare the ruine of it: wherefore hee made protestations against this decree made in Councell: whereby the necessarie provisions were so delayed in this apparent danger, as if the French had aduanced with more speede, they might easily haue bene masters of Pampelone, and of the whole realme.

Their armie entring slowly by the Pyrenees on the side of Moya and Ifana, it was stayed in the valley of Roncal, and defeated by the diligence of colonell D. Ferdinand Villalua of Plaisance: The Marshall D. Pedro, who was the Leader, and his brother Diego Velez, with other Noblemen Nauarrois, were taken and sent into Castille, to diuers prisons, whilest that king John was at the siege of the Castle of Saint John, at the foot of the Pyrennee mountaines, who hearing of the defeat of his men, returned into Fraunce, out of all hope euer to recouer his realme. It was bruted, that there were found in a coffer amongst the Marshalles baggage that was taken, certayne Letters of D. Lewis of Beaumont Constable of Nauarre, and of other Noblemen Nauarrois, who were grieued to see that auncient and noble Crowne reduced to a province. Others say, that the countesse D. Briande Munrique, his wife, sister to the Duke of Nagera, chofen Viceroy of Nauarre, hauing discovered these practises, by certayne papers which fell into their hands, shee aduertised Cardinall Ximenes, who gaue commandement vnto Frederic d'Acugna the Viceroy, to seaze vpon the Constables person, but as capitaine Picarro would haue laied hands on him, hee escaped and stode vpon his gard, vntill the coming of the Duke of Nagera his brother in lawe, to be Viceroy of the realme: for this cause the countesse his wife durst neuer afterwards come in his company.

Fortis demou-led in Na-
uarre.

The affaires of Nauarre beeing assured for Castille by the defeate of the French armie, the Cardinall caused them to beginne to demantle the forts throughout the realme, by the perswasion of colonell Villalua, or for that hee had formerly conceiued it in his fantasie, the which they that haue come after haue found profitable: for it is certayne that the Nauarrois could not forget their proprietarie and lawfull kings; and there is no doubt but if the forts had stode still, they would haue sought means to rebell: but seeing themselves without any retreats, they haue contrayned themselves: besides, in doing it, the Cardinall would spare a great expence, which hee must haue employed in the entertainment of so many garrisons, as was necessarie in a Realme newly conquered: To conclude, all were demanteled and ruined, except the citie of Pampelona, the Castle of Estella, and the townes of Lombier, and Pont de la Roine, which the Constable D. Lewis of Beaumont obtayned for a time of his brother in law: the Castle of Matzilia a place strong by scituation and art, vpon the river of Arragon, escaped this furie by the vertue of D. Anna of Velasco, Marquesse of Falses, who drew vpon the bridge against the Commissaries deputed for these demolitions, saying, that shee would keepe the place well vntill the coming of King Charles, and so hindered them.

Among other buildings which fell in this calamitie, the Conuent of Saint Francis of Oliza an auncient place, and reuerenced, was much lamented. The death of colonell

Death of Col-lonell Villalua

Death of John of Albre king
of Nauarre.

Qualities of Colonell Villalua

Death of queen
Catherine of Nauarre.

Castille.

Admiralty in Castille and the Iurisdiction.

A Ionell Villalua followed soone after, suspected to haue bene aduanced by the Constable Lewis of Beaumont, who meeting him neere vnto his house of Lerin vpon the way to Estella, inquired him to sup with him, where it was thought hee had poison giuen him, whereof hee dyed as soone as hee came to Estella: This was for the hatred which hee had purchased among all the Nauarrois, for that hee had bene the instrument of the demantling of the forts of Nauarre.

King John of Albre dyed also this yeare one thousand five hundred and seuentee, of grieft, seeing his affaires desperate; and his bodie was laied in the Cathedrall church of Lescar in Bearn, for his will was to be interred in the great church of Saint

B Marie of Pampelona: His death happened five yeares nine moneths and twenty daies after that hee was dispossest of his realme. The offices of colonell Villalua were confirmed to his sonne, by the intercession of Cardinall Ximenes, who gaue this profitable counsell vnto the king, to giue the suruiuancy of estates to their children that died in his seruice, as an encouragement to carrie themselves well and faithfully in their charges: yet hee was not of opinion to giue him the place of Colonell which his father had, holding that this great power and commandement ouer many men, should not bee sufficed in armes, being the cause of confusion and disorder, being a naturall thing and most necessarie, said hee, that all should looke vnto one head: Colonell Villalua was a valiant man, foudaine and active, sharpe witted, of a great courage, and a good souldier in all occasions: and as for his vertues they compared him to Hanniball.

C Queen Catherine suruiued her husband about eight moneths, and ordained by her will that her body should bee buried in the Cathedrall church of Saint Marie of Pampelone, to preserve the right to the realme of Nauarre, leauing Henry of Albre her sonne, heire thereof: She died at Mont de Marsan, being seuen and forty yeares old: her body was then fourtee yeares old, and did intitle himselfe king of Nauarre: the Viceroy of which realme at his entrie into his gouernment, assembled the estates at Pampelona, causing them to swear to king Charles of Austria, and to the queen D. Ioane his mother, and hee also swearing on their behalves to obserue the priuiledges of the countrie. And for that by reason of the faction, wherewith that realme had been in former times diuided, they had been accustomed to chuse a counsell or court of iustice of like number, of either part of Gramont and Beaumont, the president of which counsell being chosen by lot out of one of the factions, did commonly oppress the contrarie party, the Cardinall caused the order established first by king John of Albre and continued by king Ferdinand to bee followed: which was to giue them a President that was a stranger, notwithstanding the Nauarrois did solicit in the kings court in Flanders, to haue the auncient custome practised again. He also tooke the gouernment of Pampelone from an Arragonois, called Ferrera, and gaue it to a Castilian, letting the king vnderstand that the Arragonois & Nauarrois did alwaies disagree. He did also resist the Cardinall of Albre, who through the popes fauour would enioy his bishopricke of Pampelone, from whence hee had bene expelled.

E 21 Nauarre being pacified, there grew troubles in the realme of Granada, by reason of the rights and iustice of the Admiraltie. It is an auncient order in Spaine, as in many other realmes, that the admirall hath charge of the Sea-coasts, and of armes and warre at sea, and officiull and criminall iustice ouer all sea-faring men, as well Mariners, & passengers as Souldiers. And therefore in euery Province which lies vpon the sea, where there are ports, ships, & any comerce he hath his Iudges, as at Seuille, Malaga, and such like, & sets vp gibbets and other such markes of supreme iustice. They of Malaga had often tryed in the time of king Ferdinand to free themselves from this iurisdiction, and to abolish it in their towne, saying, that it did but hinder iustice, and giue way to ill liuers, to auoid deserued punishment: for in Sea-townes whither men come from diuers places, and many times vnciuill, if any one bee called in question for any crime, he requires to be sent vnto the admiraltie, and most commonly by these declinatories escapes the punishment that should be inflicted vpon him by the royal Iudges. In like maner the garrisons for certaine that the negligence of Lewis Ferrer did feed the malice of her infirmity, hee G dismissed him by reason of his great age, putting in his place Ferdinand Duca called Strate, of Talavera, a man of a Noble family, wife and well aduised, who carried himselfe so discreetly in his charge, as in a short time hee did moderate this violent humour in the Queene, and got her to bee content to haue her chamber made cleane, and many earthen dishes wherein they did commonly serue her to bee carried away: for hee had an humor to make them leaue the dishes full of meat in her chamber, not suffering them to carrie any one away, so as the meat corrupting, made a stinking sauour:

then by little and little he procured her to lie in a bed; hee perswaded her to goe abroad H to church, and made her to haue some feeling and apprehension that shee was a Queene, and so acknowledged: and so by little and little made her familiar, & brought her to a more milde and humane kinde of life: the which did much please king Charles her sonne, who thanked Cardinall Ximenes by his letters.

The displeasure which Lewis Ferrer had conceived for his displacing, was augmented by the dismissal of his sonne, from the gouernement of Toledo, for his misdemeanors and negligence, which caused infinite confusions; in whose place the earle of Palma, of the family of Portocarrero was made gouernour, a man worthy of great honour, who was receiued notwithstanding the oppositions of the faction of Ayala:
for the citie of Toledo, hath beene long diuided into two factions of Sylva and of Ayala. This was pacified by the diligence of the earle of Fuensalida, who was one of the heads of it, a deare friend to Cardinall Ximenes. Doctor Gallego being sent to Toledo I to informe of the life and behauiour of the gouernour of Ferrer, displaced by the Cardinall and the kings counsell, by a memorable example, and shewing his auncient feueritie, hee caused some officers and ministers of iustice to be publickly whipt, being convicted of corruption and other crimes, and would haue punished Arrois treasurer of the Calatrava more grieuously, if hee had not fled away, being accused of infinite villanies, rapes, & violences committed about his commandery of Zoria, whereof being deprived by sentence, the Cardinal gaue it vnto Sancho Cabrera. By these offices of piety and justice, the Cardinal made himselfe to be obeyed, feared, beloued and reuerenced in Castille, keeping the realme in peace, and prouiding in the meane time for those things which might serue for future and v unexpected accidents. Hee appointed arce-nals or storehouses for artillerie, engines, and all munition of warre, in three places of Spain: At Medina del Campo, beyond the mountaines, in Castille the old: in the realm K of Toledo, at Alcala de Henares; and at Malaga in Granado, that when any tumult or sedition should arise, they might haue speedy meanes to suppress it: As for that of Medina del Campo, it is most certaine that it was then made. He had an humour to haue coyned a peece of money, on the which should be grauen the Image of Saint Francis, but the kings counsell holding it to be somewhat ambitious in the Cardinal, who was a frier, opposed themselves. He began a commendable and most profitable thing in all great estates, that is, hee obtained a decree from king Charles, by the which there was commendement giuen to bring in all sort of registers, accomps, memorials, instructions, & such L like writings, concerning the publike affaires, of the realm, or the state of the kings house, which might be in the hands of the counsellors and soveraign Iudges, or of those which had been employed in embassages to foreine Princes and common-weales, and other persons whatsoeuer, to be kept in certaine places, to be vsed when time and necessity should require: the which if it had been executed, posteritie had beene better satisfied of that which had past in precedent times, and better informed of that which was to be done. By some little which was done according to this decree, the Cardinal came to the knowledge of many things, especially of that which concerned the militarie orders of Spaine, as the reuenues & ancient rights of the masters, & of their tables, of the common money of commanderies, & the duties of commanders & their justice and Chapters; which things were vknowne to the kings officers, the masterships hauing beene retained and held by kings, and then annexed to the crowne: so as there were infinite fraudes and abuses committed, which gaue occasion to the great comandars of those orders, to make oppositions, and to seeke to exempt themselves out of the Cardinalls power, yea

Ministers of iustice punished exemplary.

Storehouses for munition in Spaine.

Search of ancient writings
by Cardinall
Ximenes.

A yea of the king himselfe: the prouision of Comanderies was one of the quarrels which they debated; saying, that it should bee Canonically done; according vnto the orders which they held, and not giuen to any, but to them of their orders, respectively: but it is hard to kicke against the power of kings: wherefore all that the commanders could allege was easily refuted by the Cardinall, who could giue good interpretations to their Papall Bulles, and other instructions which they produced. Through the Cardinalls diligence, by the revision of the auncient accompts, hee found that there had been imbezeled from the king about forty Millions of Marauidis euerie yea, the fraud consisting chiefly in that the commanders were in old time to assist their masters in the warres against the moores, with a certaine number of Souldiers entertained at their charges, the which they concealed, and freed themselves, leaving the care and charge to the king. Finding that some townes belonging to these masterships had beene vsurped, hee restored them to the kings reuenues, wherein he did chiefly make vse of the labour and diligence of Touilla and Cabrera, commanders of the orders of Calatrava. He made inquirie of the manners and carriage of the Iudges of those orders, and censured them, displacing some, and instituting others: Hee had resol-ued to doe the like to them of the Chanceries and great counsell, as well following the court, as of Valledoliz, Granado, Gallcia, and others, with speciall commandement from the king, which hee had procured to that end: hee did with great diligence and se-ueritie cut off many gifts, fees and entertainments, which were not greatly necessarie;
the which did much ease the kings coffers, not fearing to offend his greatest and dearest friends, for the profit of his Prince, whereby he purchased many enemies: finally, imitating the emperor Seuerus, a most worthy Prince, he wold not haue any one receiue wages from the king, nor to haue an office in the state, that were not profitable and necessarie for the common-weale; and hee disappointed all those rars, which did but deuour, retaining onely in court, the Iudges or Counsellors of the great Chancery, the officers and ordinarie ministers of the roiall Pallace, the garrisons of the frontiers, the foure prouosts of justice, whome they call Alcaydes, and their archers, the marshall of the lodgings; and harbin-gers, guards of the body, and such like. But it is doubtfull touching the taking away of officers fees, whether hee did it of his owne motion, or by the kings commandement: for hee complained by some letters to the king, for that they gaue him wales an odious charge to take away, and neuer to giue any thing. But howsoeuer, he was of opinion that sparing was most necessarie and commendable in a prince; who must consider that all that hee spends comes out of the bowels of his people, complaining greatly that in lesse than four months that he had begunne to gouerne the realm, king Charles had giuen away aboue eightene millions of Marauidis. Aboue all things, he held that a multitude of Collectors and receiuers, and a great number of treasurers were verie pernicious and hurtfull to a state: wherefore he desired that some man of a noble house, diligent and expert, were made superintendent of all the kings money, whose charge should be to distribute the or-dinarie expenses, as need should require, and to reserve the remainder, to bee employed in v unexpected affaires, and in liberalities well employed by king; and vnder him such a number of deputies as should be necessarie: He held, that it was a great confusion in the managing of the treasure, to inuert and employ one kind of money to another vse than it had beene assigned: of which rules hee did continually aduertise the king his master by his letters, and gaue an accompt of his gouernment; shewing with how little charge ym a small time that he had been his lieutenant in Castille, hee had effected great matters; Hee had pacified the tumults in Andalusia, repulst the French in Nauarre, suppressed the contempt and rebellion of the Malaguins, held the frontiers wel manned, cleared the sea from pyrats, and assured the coast, made an enterprize against Alger, freed Bugia, Pegnon and Melille from feare and the assaults of Horusco Barberousse, succoured Argille for the king of Portugal, and with all discharged great debts, which D. Ferdinand his grandfather did owe. That if hee with a limited authority, and for another, amidst the enuy and crosses of his ill willers, could effect such great matters, by the means of sparing & good husbandrie, much more might hee doe it, who was a king, and whose greatness was without the touch of enuie.

Husbandrie of Cardinall Xi-
menes.

Multitude of officers in the treasurie hurt-
full to the realm.

1517 Alger held by Hornsea Barberousse.

26. As for the expedition of Alger, whereof hee makes mention in his letters, it had not been yarie happy: it was after this manner. Alger a sea towne which some hold to bee Cirta, the chiefe of the realme of Iuba and Siphax, but they are deceived: Others say it was the Colonie of Salde in Mauritania Cefariensis: it was then in a maner tributarie to the Spaniards, but it was much afflicted by the diffension of two brethren Moores, who contended for the Seignourie. The inhabitants desirous to shake off this yoke, had called Hornsea Barberousse to defend their liberties, who running along the coast of Afrique, with his younger brother Hareden, had bene lately repulst from Bugia, a Spanish towne, with the losse of an army, about the death of king Ferdinand. This famous Pyrat hauing thus seased vpon that citie, comodious for theft & Pyracies, he made himself king of Alger, hauing slaine Celim the lawfull prince; and then hee began to spoile vpon the coast of Spaine, and did not onely molest the Christians, but he did tyrannize ouer the pety kings of Afrique of his owne sect: so as hee vnderooke to dispossesse Albuquerque king of Tunis, whome hauing slaine, hee pursued Iahid his sonne so neere, as hee forced him to leaue the countie, and to flie into Spaine, where addressing himself vnto Cardinall Ximenes, and relating his miserie vnto him, he besought him that hee might recouer his ancestors realme. The Cardinall hauing giuen him good hope, caused men to bee leuiued in Spaine, and galleys and ships to bee made ready to passe into Afrique, against this Pyrat Barberousse: the charge of which army hee gaue to Diego Vera, master of the ordnance, a rash and indiscreet man, but it was first refused by Ferdinand Andrado, who excused himselfe, holding it perilous to lead new men and vnexperienced (such as the Cardinall ment to send to the warre.) The army of Diego Vera, being about eight thousand men, hauing weighed anchor they came neere vnto Alger in October: The Moores being long before aduertised of this preparation which was made against them, were ready to stop their landing, and at all euents had manned the towne of Alger with good souldiers, both of horse and foot, among the which there were sixe hundred Turkish archers, verie good souldiers, whome Hornsea had brought out of Asia for his ordinarie gard. Diego Vera approaching neere the towne, he diuided his armie into foure parts, against the aduice of other Captaines, the which was verie hurtfull vnto him, for the Barbarians were in all places stronger than the Assayants, either in assault, sallie or skirmish: so as the Christian army was chased and dispersit with a horrible slaughter, Diego Vera hauing abandoned all, and hiding himselfe with his sonne a good part of the day among the rocks, hee saued himselfe in the first vessell that he found at anchor: and being returned into Spaine he was receiued of all men with taunts and scoffes, the children singing songs in the streets, to his dishonour and disgrace, saying, that Diego Vera was to weak to wrestle against Hornsea, who had but one arme, with such like. After which the Spaniards were neuer succesfull in any enterprise against Alger.

The newes of this rout was brought to Cardinall Ximenes, when as hee was disputing in an assembly of Diuines: and they say, that hauing read the letters, hee shewed no signe of heauines, but said onely, that the Spanish army had bene defeated in Afrique, but God be thanked, the losse was not great: for Spaine by this meanes should bee purged of a great number of lewd insolent companions, whom hee had sent in this expedition, remembering what king Ferdinand was wont to say, that it was necessary after a time to send men out of the countie to some foreine warre: for it was like a potion of Rubarbe to a mans body, which carried away all sharpe and cholericke humors hindering the sweet harmony of the whole constitution: so did Pericles that famous captain of the Athenians vse to doe, and other men of worth: hee made the losse lesse in certaine letters written vnto the king, saying, that there were but a thousand of the whole army slaine and taken prisoners, laying the whole blame vpon Diego Vera.

27. About that time and not farre from the warre of Alger, there was a cruell edict made against the Genouois trafiquing in the towne and ports of Spain, by the which they were commanded to void the country within a short space, vpon pain of confiscation of their goods & losse of their liues: the cause was the error & indiscretion of some aswell Spaniards, as Genouois, but the fault was chiefly in D. Berenguelo, lord of Muscot a

Edict against
the Genouois
trafiquing into
Spaine.

A Cartellan commander of the Spanish gallies: And thus it was, there was a captaine of a brigantine or foist, named John Riue, borne at Toledo, who being not employed in the kings seruice, did steale at sea both from friend and enemie; so as meeting on a time certaine marchants ships of Genoua, hauing an aduantage ouer them in a caline, he had put them to ransom: for the which the Genouois hauing made their complaints, being friends to Spaine, they attended but an occasion to make John Riue repaite this iniurie, and to punish him as he deserved. It happened that three great ships of Genoua, being in the port of Carthagea, to carrie away wools, at the same time the commonweale of Genoua had sent forth three gallies well furnished with men and ordnance, as well for the safetie of those marchants ships, as to seeke out the pyrat John Riue, who had spoyled their companions: and as by chance all these vessels of Genoua were at Carthagea, behold the Spanish armie arrives, being commanded by D. Berenguelo, with whom John Riue was, who was presently knowne by the Genouois, and therefore they address themselves to D. Berenguelo, intreating him to deliuer him vnto them, who had ranomed and spoyled them, to the end they might represent him to the Iustice, or punish him themselfes, according to the league betwixt the deceased kings of Arragon and the commonweale of Genoua. Whereof D. Berenguelo, through his arrogancie, and also for that he was a Cartellan, and by consequence an enemie to the Genouois, made no reckoning. Wherewith the Genouois being incensed, following after the foist of John Riue, they did soplie her with their canon, as they had almost sunke her. D. Berenguelo growing in rage for this fact, leauing the Genouois gallies which were armed, and had committed the fault, he went against the Genouois ships which lay in the port, to assaile them, who presently put their boars downe into the water with certaine peeces of ordnance, and put themselfes in defence. D. Berenguelo, when he saw them in fight, left them, and went to land. There was a furious encounter betwixt the Genouois and the gallies of Spaine, wanting their head; two of them were so ill handled with their great shot, as the one sunke, and the other, being all broken, ran on ground, and was also lost. The towne (being moued at this noyse, and sollicit by the cries of D. Berenguelo, saying, That they must not in any sort suffer so great an outrage, which was against the Maiestie of the king, that strangers should presume to assaile his gallies in the port of Carthagea) was prestantly all in armes: the fight grew so hot, as the towne against the Genouois gallies and ships, and they against the towne, shot continually one at another, making a pitifull ruine of buildings, and killing of men, vntill that night parted them. The cardinall tooke this fact of the Genouois verie ill, as contemners of him and of the king his master; be- this fact of the Genouois verie ill, as contemners of him and of the king his master; he also sought by all meanes vnto the king, to haue D. Berenguelo deprived of the charge of the gallies, shewing his vnworthinesse of such a commander, and the great fault which he had committed: and also that the truce of an hundred yeares, concluded betwixt the kings of Arragon, and the commonweale of Genoua being expired, it seemed they would reuile with great hatred, the old quarell for the island of Sardinia. D. Berenguelo, besides that hee had friends and fauourers in the Court of Flanders, hee made the cardinals pursuit in vaine, by a victorie which he got soone after against foure Turkish gallies, the fight continuing almost a whole day, which was the onely remarkable thing hee did in six yeares space, that he had bene generall of the gallies. The commonweale of Genoua sent embassadors into Flanders, to king Charles, excusing themselves of this fact, and saying, That it was the fault of priuat men, and not of the citie, against whom they had proceeded by way of justice, condemning the commanders and captaines to loose their liues, and the souldiers and mariners to other punishments, according to their merits, as soone as they should be returned home: But God preuented the execution of these decrees, for these vessels being retired to the port of Villefranche neere Nice, they had by a sudden whirlwind bene swallowed vp in the sea, with the losse of about three hundred men. Wherefore they besought the king, seeing that these wicked breakers of the publike league, were diuinely punished, that he would be pleased to grant a restitution of their goods which had bene seized on in Spaine, and disannull that rigorous Edict: King Charles pacified by this embassage, pardoned the offence, and reuoked the Edict, against the refusal of in-dice cause of a great tumult

in Spaine.

Victorie of *D.
Berenguelo* against the Turke

1517 Cardinal Ximenes an enemy to the Genovese.

Edict against the Genovese revoked.

Proceeding unjust against the accused by the Inquisition.

Contention for the bishoprick of Sigüenza.

Nobilitie inflamed to command.

Cardinal Ximenes impatient of injuries, by reason of his ambition.

the cardinals will, who was verie obstinate in that which he had once conceived, and did still sollicite the king to breed jealousies in his head against that commonweale, and to bring them into disgrace with him; saying, that they had intelligence with the French: giving infinite crosses to these poore Genovese. Yet in the end, by their diligence and perseverance, they justified themselves, and obtained restitution, and an abolition of the Edict, the cardinal their adversarie (being somewhat pacified) consenting thereunto. He opposed himselfe with great vehemencie, against the pursuits of the new Christians (as they call them) in Court, that the judgements of the Inquisition might bee executed against them, touching that which concerns witnesses, according to the forme of other criminall causes; for the accused were not allowed to except against the witnesses, which were not confronted against them, nor yet named: which gave occasion and boldnesse unto judges, which were greedy of the blood and wealth of these poore men, to commit many cruelties and abuses in their charges. Finally, this cardinal did so labour with the king and Pope, whereas they of Arragon were also sutors, as the lawes of the tribunall of the Inquisition, practised in the time of king Ferdinand, remained firme.

29 About that time there fell out a great debate in the citie of Sigüenza, for the restitution of the cardinal D. Bernardin of Carvajal, sometimes bishop of that see, whereof he had beene deprived by Pope Inno, by reason of the Councell of Pisa. Cardinal Ximenes favouring his reintegration to his dignitie, goods, and honours, made by Pope Leo, he had for opposite D. Frederic of Portugall, subrogated into that bishopricke, after the deposition of D. Bernardin, who would not leave it. So as some holding with cardinal Carvajal, and others with D. Frederic, the diocesse was divided, & their contentions came to armes. The place where the greatest excessse was committed, was Almazan, a towne of the earle of Montagu jurisdiction, whither they were resolved to send an Alcayde of the Court, to suppress this tumult. This Alcayde called Ferdinand Calderon, shewed himselfe so cruell in his proceedings against this poore people, as the earle their lord telling him, that his too great severitie should rather be called outrage then justice: and having by sundrie messages advertised the kings Councell, and besought them, to commaund Calderon to retire: his being that they made no account of it, he came himselfe well accompanied to Almazan, and forced him to leave the towne. Wherewith the Councell, especially doctor Adrian, who was now a cardinal, and companion to cardinal Ximenes in the government of Castille, being incensed, sent a personall adjournment for the earle of Montagu, and meant to make his processe, as having offended the kings Majestie. But cardinal Ximenes opposed himselfe, shewing that he might lawfully doe that which he had done, seeing that vpon his many complaints made unto the Councell, against the excessse of Ferdinand Calderon there was no order taken: and so he caused this pursuit to cease. The difference for the bishopricke of Sigüenza, ended in like maner, by the death of D. Gutierrez of Toledo, bishop of Plaisance: which place was given to the cardinal of Carvajal, and D. Frederic left in the possession of Sigüenza. And for that the governments of cities and provinces of Spaine, had beene for a long time distributed confusedly, & without distinction of persons, whether noble or vnnoble, it was concluded to restore the ancient custome, and conformable to nature, that nobilitie instituted to commaund, and to exercise honourable charges, should be employed: wherefore there were many changes of old governours throughout all Spaine. True it is, that the Biscanes and they of Palence had no gentlemen at that time, but two famous Lawyers for their governours, that is, León and Gallego. In some places cardinal Ximenes was prevented by such as obtained them by the kings favour, and of the Flemish courtiers; wherewith he was much discontented, especially for the government of Burgos, the which was given without his priuite to D. Pedro of Castille, who deliuered the fort of Lara into the hands of the Sherifes and Communitie of the towne, and they gave the gard thereof to Iffrey of Conde, a Fleming, who had beene marshall of the lodging to the deceased king Philip, an inconstant man, and a prater, and therefore much hated by cardinal Ximenes. Of this and of many other things done by D. Pedro, he made sundrie complaints unto the king. So impatient he was of any injurie, as he thought that whatsoever king Charles ordained, touching the affaires of Spaine, if it came not from him, and his advertisements and counsels, it was done

A done in contempt of him, condemning it as pemitious, and as subiects of seditions; accusing the noblemen and counsellors of Flanders of rashnesse, who being ignorant of the lawes and maners of the Spaniards, medled with the disposition of the governments of Spaine, the which did wholly depend of the Viceroyes authoritie and reputation, and of the kings councell which was in the countrey. He did honour and cherish doctor Adrian Florent verie much, for that he yeilded unto him: He procured him the bishopricke of Tortosa, the which made his way to a cardinals hat, and afterwards to the Papacie. He sought also by all meanes to procure him the dignitie of Inquisitor generall of Arragon, as he himselfe had that of Castille; but he could not. The secretarie Mote of Burgos, a diuine, was verie decre unto him, whom he made bishop of Badajos, and would have made him cardinal, and Archbishop of Toledo, had not the cardinal died so soone, which hindered him from enjoying of those dignities whereof he held himselfe sure, but he was deceived. Mote had beene preacher to king Philip, after whose decease he would have retired into Flanders, for that in hatred of the king D. Ferdinand, he and all the servants of the deceased, sought to draw the Emperour Maximilian into Spaine, to contend for the government of those realmes, for prince Charles his grand child. To have the better accessse unto the young princes court, he begged letters of fauour almost from all the chiefe noblemen of Spaine. King Ferdinand knowing that this preacher was full of spleene against him, yet would he not hinder his voyage for Flanders, shewing therein C a generous mind: but he gave order, that when he should be readie to depart, all his letters of recommendation should be stolne from him, the which was cunningly performed by the care of D. Bernardin of Velasco, the kings sonne in law, who had great meanes in that citie to doe it. Mote not discovering what was done, goes on his way, and being arrived in Flanders, where they were already advertised that he should come, accompanied with many letters of fauour, when he opened his male he found not any, wherewith he was much abashed, and therefore for a time was held of all those courtiers for a man of a shallow braine. Notwithstanding his vertue and eloquence made him a way to king Charles his fauour, and advanced him to honour, by the meanes of cardinal Ximenes: who also procured honours and titles to many others, whose qualities and behaviour were D pleasing unto him, as to D. John Pacheco, sonne to the earle of Escalona, the title of earle of Saint Stephen; to D. William Peres of Ajala, that of earle of Gomera, which is one of the islands of the Canaries, which he obtained of the king for him. Such was the government and carriage of cardinal Ximenes, who was feared and respected both of great and small in Castille.

THE

THE 27 BOOKE OF THE Historie of Spaine.

The Contents.

- 1 Disagreement betwixt cardinall Ximenes and the noblemen of Flanders. Three gouernors in Castille.
- 2 Seditions in Castille, under pretext of the Flemings greedinesse.
- 3 Exactions of the Pope hindered by cardinall Ximenes.
- 4 Proesse ambitionously ended by cardinall Ximenes, among the great men. Contempt of iustice, rebellions, and other insolencies suppressed by him.
- 5 Profanation of the order of cardinals by Pope Leo.
- 6 Cardinall Francis Ximenes poisoned by his enemies.
- 7 Reformation of the house of the Infans D. Ferdinand, brother to king Charles of Austria, by cardinall Ximenes.
- 8 Arriuall of king Charles of Austria in Spaine. Disgrace, disburge, and death of cardinall Ximenes.
- 9 Behaviour and qualities of cardinall Ximenes.
- 10 Bible printed in Spaine in many languages by the diligence of cardinall Ximenes.
- 11 Buildings made by this cardinall.
- 12 Estates at Vailledolis. Crowning of Charles of Austria king of Castille.
- 13 Election of Charles of Austria to be Emperour: his departure out of Spaine.
- 14 Sedition in Castille against cardinall Adrian and the gouernors.
- 15 Enterprise of king Henric of Albret, for the reconuerie of his realme of Nauarre. The taking of Pampelone.
- 16 The beginning and progresse of the Iesuites.
- 17 Sect of Theatines differing from the Iesuites.
- 18 Vnfortunate exploits of the lord of Asperraut in Nauarre.
- 19 Another expedition of the French into Guipuscoa, under the lord of Boniuet: and the taking of Fontarrabie.
- 20 Adrian Pope. Continuance of the warre of Nauarre. The Emperours returne into Spaine.
- 21 Fontarraby recovered by the Spaniards. The gouernors of that fort successiue vnto our time.
- 22 Taking of king Francis at Pauts.
- 23 Marriage of the Emperour Charles the sixt.
- 24 Rome sacked by the Spaniards.
- 25 Marriage of king Henric of Albret with Marguerite of France.
- 26 Nauigation of Ferdinand Magellanes to the South.
- 27 Marriage of duke Charles of Sawoy, and D. Beatrix of Portugall.
- 28 D. Iohn the third of that name, and 15 king of Portugall.
- 29 Continuation of the nauigation to the East, and the wonderfull voyage of Iohn Sebastian del Cano.
- 30 Marriage of D. Iohn king of Portugal, with D. Katherine, sister to the Emperour Charles.

- A 31 Vnprofitable voyage of the Castilians to the Molucques.
- 32 Treatie of Cambray.
- 33 Coronation of the Emperour at Bolonia.
- 34 Peru discovered.
- 35 Muley Hascen, king of Tunes, expelled by Barberousse, and restored by the Emperour.
- 36 Voyage of Proneme by the Emperour.
- 37 Portugals assailed by the Turkes in the East.
- 38 Enteruiew of Pope, Emperour, and French king, at Nice.
- 39 Troubles for the impost in diuers places.
- 40 Emperours voyage to Algier.
- 41 Warre betwixt the Emperour and French king, and then a peace concluded.
- 42 Muley Hascen, king of Tunes, againe dispossessed.

For the continuance of the royall lines of Spaine in this seuen and twentieth Booke, mention is made for

CASTILLE, of LEON, ARRAGON, NAVARRE.
23 D. Charles 1. — 44 the same 1. — 21 the same 1. — 37 the same 1.

He feueritie and integritie of cardinall Ximenes, in the gouernement of affaires, could not be long supportable to the Spaniards, who are haucie and proud, and accustomed to serue their kings being present; and much lesse to the Flemings, who were neere vnto king Charles, who desirous to make vse of their credit and authoritie, did still busie themselves with the great affaires of Spaine, and made their profit, to the cardinals great griefe, he opposing himself against them in all he could: so as all things tended to confusion, as well among the Spaniards, who desired the comming of their prince into the countrey, the which might quench many quarels, and content those that did enuie the cardinals greatnesse, as with the noblemen Flemings, who entertained the king in Flanders, vpon diuers colours, thinking it a fit meanes to compass their designs, if he did not vndertake this voyage, and in truth these had the aduantage, the king being in their power. And to take some course for the mischiefes which he feared might happen in Spaine, by reason of the kings absence, it was concluded to send the lord of Chaux thither, who had beene much fauoured by king Philip; and was chamberlaine to Charles his sonne; a man fitter to entertaine a prince with pleasant discourse, and to keep him companie, than to manage the great affaires of a kingdome. To him was giuen the third place in the gouernement of Castille, with cardinall Ximenes, and doctor Adrian, who had procured the comming of this third, writing into Flanders, That he was not sufficience to resist cardinall Ximenes, a haucie man, who (not able to endure a companion) did manage all things at his pleasure. The coming of Chaux was verie pleasing to the noblemen, and to the people of Spaine, who were discontented with the cardinall, and he was receiued with all royall honours, against the which the cardinall did not in any sort oppose himselfe, shewing therein, as in all other things, a great magnanimitie and constancie, although he knew that he was sent to check his authoritie and greatnesse. All the great noblemen of Spaine, without attending any commaundement from cardinall Ximenes the Viceroy, went to meet him, being accompanied with great numbers of their friends and vassals: and comming neere to Madrid, there went forth to incounter him, doctor Adrian, accompanied with two of the Popes Nonces, the bishop of Burgos, D. Anthoine Fonseca, his brother, and by the commanders of the militarie orders, hauing with them a great traine of commanders of euerie order, the the Rectour or gouernour of the towne, the Sherifes and most apparent burgeses, the embassadours or deputies of Arragon, the royall Councell, the Inquisition, the chamber of accounts, and other officers of the kings house, euerie one going in his ranke and order, with whom there joyned the bishop of Auilla, with the cardinals traine: And of noblemen, blemen, the marquesse of Villena, the earle of Vregna, the marquesse of Comares and Aguilar, D. Bertrand de la Cueva, eldest sonne to the duke of Albuquerque, the earle of Orepesa, and others. Such as were not there were kept backe by a disease which did run generally ouer all Spaine. Cardinall Ximenes, in regard of his place of Viceroy, stayed in the palace, and receiued monsieur de Chanc, at the entrie of the great chamber of the lodging, which was prepared for him, and that night he feasted him with great state, and entertained him with much pleasant discourse, lodging him for that time in the chamber where the bishop of Auila was accustomed to lodge, for that the Infant D. Ferdinand, the widow queene Germaine, and the cardinall, were commonly lodged in the castle, and held a great part of it. Thus was this nobleman receiued and honoured, being the first that was sent into Spaine with authoritie, since that Charles of Austria tooke vpon him the title of king. The great lords of Spaine came to visit monsieur de Chanc, and courted him: but the cardinall had no great care to impart the affaires vnto him, nor to call him, vnlesse he came of himselfe, yet holding still the first place in all expeditions, the which he made knowne to him and doctor Adrian, who hauing on a time signed some dispatches, leauing a place for the cardinall to signe vnder them, being presented vnto him thus signed, he rare them in peeces, and caused others to be made, and signed them aboute, the which were of as great effect. And thus he continued vntill the kings coming, although before he would haue doctor Adrian signe all things with him.

The Flemish nobilitie being aduertised of this harsh proceeding, it made them thinke, that this cardinall would one day trouble both them and the king: wherefore to abate (as they thought) his greatness, they procured to haue a fourth sent into Spaine, vnder colour of some priuie businesse, with equall authoritie to the rest. This was Armas, a man that was some what graue: yet they might say, that of all that companie the cardinall was most iudicious, and continued his accustomed course, notwithstanding any thing that they could doe. But they stayed not here, for they often resolved in Flanders, to send some great prince to gouerne Spaine, to whom the cardinall should be forced to yeeld; or some other of judgement and vnderstanding, to oppose him against this great spirit. Some were of opinion to intreat the Emperour Maximilian to take vpon him this charge; others, Lewis, count Palatin, allied to the kings; and some, to giue the authoritie to the Infant D. Ferdinand: many gaue their voyces to the Chancellor Sauage. As for Maximilian, he was engaged in the warres of Italie: to aduance Ferdinand, that was not safe nor conuenient, and it had bene alwayes their care, which loued the peace and vniou of these two brethren, that the Infant should be neerely lookt vnto, least that mutines should make him their shield. The count Palatin was held fit, yea to take charge of the Infant, the which did not altogether displease the cardinall; for he had desired euer since the death of the Catholike king, to remoue such from about him, as, in his opinion, had bred him vp ill, yet he desired rather not to obey any one; to which end he writ to the king, beseeching him, not to send any into Spaine, with whom he must alwayes quarrell, but rather to giue him leaue to retire to his diocesse, where hee would looke to his owne priuie affaires, and liue religiously in rest: for he did foresee, that the enuie of some, and the couetousnesse of many, would alwayes seeke to crosse his good designs and resolutions to serue the commonweale, they tending to no other end, but to cause some great tumult in Spaine, wherein he desired not to be engaged, but rather to looke on a farre off: aduertising him, that the onely remedie of these inconueniences was, to commit the affaires to his tried faith, and to relie onely vpon him, not suffering any Fleming, nor any of his Councell a farre off (no nor himselfe vntill he were at age) to meddle in Spaine with the prouision of Estates, and order of justice, with governments of prouinces, leauing of the kings money, nor with garrisons of frontiers, and their commaunders: but onely retaine vnto himselfe the disposition of bishopricks being void, commaunders, and benefices of knights of militarie orders, and to vse his royall bountie with good measure: his cardinall diuiding betwixt the king and him the royall soueraigntie, the which euery man of judgement thought expedient, considering his constant resolution to maintaine justice and right in all things; adding still this concluding reason. For that, said he, the Flemings vnderstand nothing in our affaires in Spaine, and that the king by reason

Cardinall Ximenes maintains his au-thoritie resolutely.

Cardinall Ximenes cannot endure a companion in the government of Castille.

Cardinall Ximenes will disturb the royall authoritie betweene the king and himselfe.

A reason of his tender age, cannot vndergoe so great a burthen, full of care and trouble: By reason whereof he caused himselfe to be so hated, as many Councels were held against him, and without doubt his dayes were shortened. The courtiers dissembled, expecting but an opportunitie to tumble him from this high degree, in the which hee maintained himselfe invincible, against their wills, who writ vnto him, That hee should continue to doe well, assuring him that they would assist him with all their meanes, and sollicit the kings passage into Spaine; aduising him, for the effecting thereof, to send a good armie of ships well furnished into Flanders.

This voyage was much prest by the Emperour Maximilian, as most necessarie, and therefore he came to Brussels to see the king, and to conferre with him, fearing least his long stay there would cause some alteration in the State; comparing those people, being moued, to a colt, which being stung with a hornet, kickes at euery one, sparing not his owne damme. This conference put the cardinall into a jealousy, writing to monsieur de Chancres, That the enteriue of great men, did neuer bring profit neither to themselves, nor to their affaires, prouing it by many examples and great reasons. The Spaniards seeing that the time past away in vaine hopes of their princes comming, they began to make conuenticles, and to runne into the course (but by another way) of former seditions: For, sayed they, the Flemings not able to forbear to meddle with the affaires of Spaine, whereof they had made shew not to care, they leaue vs not any estate, charge, nor benefice; but it is sold to them that will giue most, and prophesied by vnworthie men: The great treasures of the realme gathered together, and religiously preserved by cardinall Ximenes; for the kings comming, are spoiled by strangers, and transported out of Spaine, the which is not tollerable to a free nation, well affected to the honour and greatness of their prince, and to the publicke good. They of Burgos, Leon, Vaileadolid, and all that countrey of Spaine, being incensed with these complaints and quarels, they appointed a day to resolve on some remedies for these great disorders, or how they might withstand the greedinesse of the Flemish courtiers. Many thought it fit to persuaade the king to chafe all Flemings from about him, and to take Spaniards in their places, such as were vnderstanding men, to counsell him. Others D sayed, That besides the difficultie to obtaine it, it was to be feared that Spaine would in short time be as corrupt as the rest, and more cunning in their villanies; holding, that the best course to restrain the couetousnesse of courtiers, by a publicke decree, by the which power should be taken from the king, to giue the estates, offices, or benefices of Spaine to strangers. That there should be no readie money carried out of the countrey without great cause, and that no necessarie money for the kings house, should be sent by cardinall Ximenes, without consent of the townes. Many other things of this kind were then propounded, profitable, in truth, for the publicke, but derogating somewhat from the authoritie and Maiestie royall: for thereby they did open a gate vnto the people to commit great insolencies, the which they found by experience, after the death of cardinal Ximenes, who moderating what he could the peoples heat, could not prevent the decrees of these assemblies for the publicke good, some gouernors consenting thereunto, and signing them, as D. Pedro of Castille, at Burgos, and others: yet the Leonnois could neuer induce D. Frederic of Zamora, their gouernour, to consent vnto such decrees, whereof the towne and Communalities did afterwards aduertise the cardinall and the kings Councell, sending deputies to treat with them of the affaires of the commonweale affected; and to intreat them to appoint a place and time for a generall assemblee to that end. The cardinall and the Councell knew well, that the desire of the townes was just, yet they sought to moderate them, fearing some popular tumults, persuaading them to forbear an assemblee, vntill they had more certaine newes of the kings comming, who they vnderstood made preparation to imbarke speedily. In the meane time they did aduertise the king of all that had past, excusing the Spaniards, for that they did not in any fort doubt of the kings good will, and judgement to know, that all the admonitions & counsels which they gaue him, were holy and just, but they complained of the Flemings that were about his person, who could make their diligences vaine, and get vnto themselves both before the kings comming and after, the riches of Spaine without measure: so as it

2 Greedinesse of the Flemings
gouerning king
Charles.

Demands of the townes of Spaine.

Cardinall and Councell fauour
the Spaniards demands against the Flemings.

1517 Rapacity of the Flemings.

Spaniards demand the Estates.

Libels cast aboard.

Exactions of Pope Leo hindered by cardinall Ximenes.

Clergie of Spaine free from the exaction of the tenth penie of their benefices.

was thought the Chancellor Sannage had gotten for his part in lesse than foure moneths, G about fife hundred thousand crownes: and if we will conjecture how monfieur de Chen- res and the rest profited, we cannot imagine what great summes thefe thefts amounted vnto. The Spaniards seeing the kings comming to be daily delayed, the cardinal and the Councell were againe importuned for a generall assemblee of the Estates, where they promised not to treat of anything, but to sollicite the king to come into Spaine, to maintaine the lawes and rights of the countrey; to suppress the coueroufnesse of courtiers, and the ambition of suters for estates and offices: else, the people did protest, that they would send embassadours vnto the king, and prouide that the common- weale should take no harme, by such meanes as God should put into their hands. The H cardinal not able with reason to denie their iust demaund, he appointed an assemblee in the next moneth of September 1517, proracting it of purpose to Autumne, beleuing that about that time the king might arrive in Spaine; and in the meane time he prepared a fleet of ships for his voyage, the which he sent him, posts running continually from Spaine to Flanders, and back againe, to aduance this comming, without the which they saw no meanes to maintaine the realme in peace: the cardinal holding (and rightly) it to be a pernicious thing; when as the people, hauing cause of griuance, presume to complaine publicly: for when as they haue once lost the reuerence which they owe vnto the superiour, there is no more any restraint; and popular complaints and quarels are easily receiued and beleued, by such as haue a desire to trouble the State, whereof the number is alwayes great in great realmes. The place assigned for the assemblee, was at Madrid, the Viceroyes and the Councells place of residence. Many slanderous libels were at that time cast abroad, euerie man censuring the cardinals actions according to his owne conceits: and seeing it was now a time of back-biting, and that some one had begun, doctor Adrian, monfieur de Chenres, Francis Ruiz, monfieur de Chaux, and others, were not spared. But cardinal Ximenes contemned these things, with a manly courage; saying, That they must leaue this solace to the multitude, to moderate their afflictions, which they could not otherwise reuenge; whereas the Flemings, who were not accustomed to this stinging, seemed to be much discontented: so as it is no wonder if Adrian comming to see Pope, caused the statues of Marforio and Pasquill to be cast into the riuer of Tiber, whom they made to carrie the libels that were set vp in Rome: whereupon, they say, that the Spanish embassadour which was then in Rome, said vnto him, That it was to be feared, by this drowning the frogs would presently learne to sing bad songs.

3 The cardinal being come to Toledo, to visit (attending the kings comming) his diocese, and the monasteries of Nunnes which he caused to be built, as well in that citie as at Illesca, being accompanied by doctor Adrian, he heard the complaints of the Clergie, for that Pope Leo, by vertue of the last decree of the Councell of Latan, demanded the tenth of the revenues of all their benefices, vpon colour to defend the Christian religion against Infidels; for that Selim Emperour of the Turkes, hauing vanquished the Sultan of Egypt, did threaten Christendome, and namely Ita- lie: Wherefore he not onely sent this year into Spaine, but into all others regions of Europe, whereas the Popes name and authoritie was reuerenced, to exact this money for three yeares; with many Indulgences and pardons to them that should contribute money willingly; and extraordinarily, whereof there followed great troubles in Christendome, yet with a lightning of the Gospell.

Cardinal Ximenes, whose authoritie was great with the Pope, was solicited not onely by the Clergie of Castille, but also by that of Arragon (where they doe all by an ancient right enjoy great priuiledges and liberties) to take this cause in hand, and to be a mediator vnto the Pope; that the Clergie of Spaine might not be made tributarie. The cardinal did willingly offer to take vpon him the protection of this order; but hee did admonish them, not to make any assemblies to that end, but when hee should commaund them. In the meane time hee did manage this businesse so politickly at Rome, by the ministerie of Artega, his Agent, as hee kept Spaine free from this exaction; but in case of great necessitie: and hauing after

A after the manner of auncient kings, called the deputies of the Clergie to the Court at Madrid, he gaue them this good newes, and attended willingly their resolution, which was, not to contribute any thing. They say, that this tenth penie for three yeares, was duly leuied in Ita- lie, in the territories of the Church, and no where else, but his Bulls of Indulgences, and the preaching of the Croisado, was generall.

4 There were many great suits in Spaine, which through the fraud and tergiversation of parties, and their counsels, were delayed and drawne into length, the which the cardinal desired to haue determined before the kings comming, but he was suspected: Wherefore three of the greatest noblemen of Spaine, in a manner at one instant, as it were conspiring together, did greatly crosse him, that is, the duke of the Infantazgo, chiefe of the house of Mendoza, D. Frederic of Toledo, duke of Alua, and the earle of Vregna, Giron. The duke of the Infantazgo remembred how that the cardinal had hindered the marriage betwixt D. Pedro Gonzales of Mendoza, his nephew, and D. Joane of Cisneros, the cardinals neece: wherefore being incensed against him, he thought there was some indirect dealing with his aduerser partie, the earle of Castro, against whom hee had his suit, for the place of Belenna, neere vnto Guadalajara; by reason whereof he desired to prolong the cause vntill the kings comming, of whom hauing obtained letters for his part, and the cardinal also for his part others of a contrarie tenour, to haue the cause judged by the kings counsell; in the end the cardinal obtained that which he pretended,

C and a sentence was giuen in fauour of the earle: about which time there comming a promoter from Alcala of Henares, for the cardinal, touching some proceedings at Guadalajara, the duke of the Infantazgo caused him to be chased away with cudgels, threatening to hang this poore petie-fogger, if he returned any more; saying, That hee did incroach vpon the iurisdiction of his brother D. Bernardin, archdeacon of Guadalajara. For which excesse the cardinal gaue it out, that he would be reuenged of the duke, and that he would call him in question, for that religion was violated, in that they had wronged an officer which did belong vnto the Church, and also for that the fact was against the publike peace, and that he would abate his greatnesse. The duke being incensed, and desirous to braue the cardinal, he sent a chaplaine of his vnto him, to deliuer him a message full of disgrace and threatning. This poore priest being forced to goe to Alcala of Henares, whereas the cardinal was, hee fell on his knees before him, and craued leaue to doe his message. They were nothing but reproaches of his base condition, growne proud to see himselfe so highly aduanced, adding some vaine threats, the which did little moue the cardinal, who hauing heard all that hee would say with a constant countenance, he answered him quietly: Goe backe vnto thy master, whom thou shalt find repenting the foolish words which thou hast deliuered me: and in truth before the priest returned, the dukes choler being past, he would haue giuen much that he had not sent him, blaming all his familiar friends and household seruants, that they had not pacified his rage, yea hee was displeased with the chaplaine, for that hee was so readie to obey him. This question, and all the spleene which the cardinal had against the duke, was afterwards pacified by the constable D. Inigo Fernandes of Velasco, who made them dine together at Fontcarillo, whereas the duke made so many excuses vnto the cardinal, as he remained satisfied. They say, that after the ceremonie of their reconciliation was ended, the lodging wherein they were was presently enuironed by John de Spinosa, capitaine of the Viceroyes gard, with his archers and light horse, the which did amaze the noblemen that were there assembled, thinking that it was a plot layed by the cardinal, but hee assured them that it was the importune diligence of Spinosa, who was come thither without any commission, for the which, he said, hee was much offended with him.

F The earle of Vregnaes quarell was more dangerous, and harder to be reconciled, the which did produce many violent effects. This earle soone after the decesse of Ferdinand, had also shewed himselfe opposit to cardinal Ximenes, and had assisted D. Pedro his sonne, in the tumult of Medina Sidonia, whom he should rather haue admonished to proceed by way of iustice. Certaine officers comming to execute a sentence of the Chancery of Granada, &c. to recouer certaine of the kings customes of Ofona, he had sent them away

Excesse committed by the duke of Infantazgo.

Magnanimitie of cardinal Ximenes

Reconciliation of cardinal Ximenes and the duke of Infantazgo.

Politic of cardinal Ximenes to keepe the noblemen in feare.

1517
Outrage committed by the earle of Vregna

Court of parliaments violated.

Pursuits of the cardinall against them that had violated Iustice.

away beaten and wounded, notwithstanding that they shewed him letters from cardinall Ximenes, who being busied in other affairs, dissembled these things, vntil some fitter opportunitie, the which was offered, when as the cardinall, according to his resolution to end all old suits, would haue the cause judged, which depended betwixt the earle of Vregna and D. Guttiere of Quixada, in the court of Chancerie at Vailledolit, for the towne of Villefratre neere vnto Vailledolit, whereof the earle kept forcible possession, Quixada pursuing the restitution, the which he obtained, whereat the earle being incensed, he complaining the sentence was vnjust. By vertue whereof an vsner and other ministers of iustice comming to Villefratre, to put Quixada in possession, they were outrageously intreated, and beaten by D. Rodrigo Giron, the earles sonne, D. Bernardin of Velasco, the constables sonne, D. Bertrand de la Cueva, son to the duke of Albuquerque, D. Ferdinand Henriquez, sonne to the Admirall, and other young and ill aduised noblemen, who were there present: Whereof complaint being made vnto the Court, the President D. Diego Ramirez of Villafusan, bishop of Malaga, notwithstanding that he was a verie mild man, yet moued with the foulness of the fact, he commaunded some legionarie souldiers in Vailledolit, and the neighbour places, to arme, to assist iustice, to execute the sentence of the court, and to punish those rebels, going himselfe in person towards Villefratre. The constable, who was wise, knowing the danger into the which these young men did runne, pisted thither, before that the President went to field, and made them abandon the place, and giue way to the execution of the sentence of the court: whereupon the bishop of Malaga dismissed his souldiers, and thanked the constable for this good office, and so remained satisfied without any further proceeding. But the cardinall, who was not of so tractable a nature, was much offended at this fact, adding this to other quarels he had against the earle of Vregna and his house; wherefore he sent out warrant to apprehend them that had resisted the iustice, and Sarmiento the Prouost of the court, to ruine Villefratre, and to make the processe of such as had committed this contempt. The young noblemen, who had left the place by the constables perswasion, seeing that they proceeded criminall against them, they returned vnto their old frenzie, and put themselves againe into Villefratre, with some troupes of souldiers raised at Villapando, a place belonging to the constable, being resolved to keepe it in despite of cardinall Ximenes. This businesse tended to sedition and great trouble, and many there were which did much blame the cardinals seueritie and obstinacie, to haue pursued these noblemen, after so good an office done by the constable, and their obedience, yea he might assure himselfe that the dukes of the Infantazgo and Alba, would bandie themselves against him, whereby the whole realme, by reason of their great alliances and power, would bee drawne into confusion: But the cardinall was well pleased to oppose himselfe against great men, searching such occasions ambitiously, to shew his magnanimitie, dexterity, and constancie to maintaine iustice. Finally, they proceeded by the course of iustice against the aboue named, whose names were proclaimed, and they summoned to appeare at Madrid and at Vailledolit, and giue an account for violating the lawes and offending the Majestie: and there were declarations set vp, according to the solemnities of iustice, obserued in Spaine in such affaires, vpon paine to bee held conuicted of those crimes, condemned and punished according vnto law: The which did much grieue the fathers of these young noblemen, who assembled at Tudela, to consult what was to be done, or, as some write, at Portillo, the earle of Benauent, the constable, the dukes of Alba and Albuquerque, and a deputie for the duke of the Infantazgo, who knowing the cardinals power, and austere disposition, resolved to proceed in this businesse with all quiet and peaceable meanes: wherefore they sent vnto him, to desire him to haue regard vnto the youth of their children; but on the other side they did write vnto the king, complaining of the cardinals fowre disposition, whereby Spaine was oppressed, and filled full of troubles. The cardinall in like maner did not faile to aduertise the king of what had past at Villefratre, and of the rashnesse, disobedience, and contempt of these noblemen, omitting nothing of the rigor of iustice in this action: wherefore there was appearance of some great tumult, for these noblemen made many assemblies, and the bishop of Zamora was already come to Vailledolit (who was afterwards strangled in

A in the castle of Aquila and the earle of Alba de Lista, with troupes of men, in fauour of the earle of Vregna, who notwithstanding were forced to depart the towne, by the aduice of them of the Chancerie, for that they did sollicite the people to sedition. They did also surprise a packet of the constables, directed to the earle of Vregna, to whom he promised to rayse all the countrey of Burgos, and that of the mountains: whereby it appeared, that the demonstrations he made to pacifie things, and to bee a neuter in this businesse, were but feined. On the other side, the duke of Alba, a secret enemy to the cardinall, by reason of the commission which he, in his opinion, had purchased, to depriue his sonne of the priorie of Saint John, he offered all his power and meanes to the duke of Albuquerque, against the cardinall. In the meane time the Alcayde proceeded against them that were within Villefratre, who to omit nothing that might make their cause odious, had made an image attired like a cardinall, the which they caused to be dragd vp and throwne the towne; in derision of cardinall Ximenes: but in the end these vaine young lords finding that their forces might not equall the Viceroyes power, they dislodged by night, and left the place. Then Sarmiento proceeding in the processe, pronounced sentence, by the which the towne of Villefratre was condemned to be burnt to ashes, and the ground of it to be sowne with salt, and neuer more to be built, for that the ministers of royall iustice had bene outraged there, and the decrees of the court of Vailledolit contemned: the earle of Vregna, Rodrigo his sonne, and their other confederats and adherents, conuicted of high treason, and condemned to Gutierre of Quixada, in his charges, damage, and interest. This sentence was presently put in execution, the towne was reduced to powder, first with the canon, and then with fire: seven of the inhabitants which had outraged the vsner, when they did bear him, and cried out, That they knew no other lord but the earle of Vregna, were publicly whipt: a seruant of the Admirall being accused to haue leued men secretly in fauour of the rebels, was also condemned by Sarmiento to be whipt. This sentence was executed vpon a festiuall day, against custome and example. Which rigorous acts did much afflict all the great noblemen of Spaine, among the which the duke of Escalona, who was then at Madrid, kept his chamber six dayes for griefe, and would not speake to any man, and then being visited by D. Francis Ruiz, bishop of Auila, he complained much of the cardinals rough and inextorable seueritie, a man without friendship or humanitie, to haue so vilely intreated the earle of Vregna, his kinsman; whereby he would tread vnder his feet the dignitie of great and famous houses of Spaine, and shew himselfe an enemy to nobilitie. The constable, with the duke of the Infantazgo, and other noblemen, gaue the cardinall to vnderstand, That seeing he had proceeded so furiously against Villefratre, to the great contempt and prejudice of the earle of Vregna, he should doe well to satisfie himselfe, and not pursue the house of Giron any farther. But the Admirall Henriques, who had neuer shewed himselfe an open enemy to the cardinall, being come to Madrid, spake vnto him with great mildnesse and modestie, shewing him the wrong he did vnto himselfe, as well as to the whole realme (holding the ranke of Archbishop of Toledo, and primat) so to blemish the honor of the great houses of Spaine, so well deserving of their kings, not onely in these publicke executions, but by accusations and reports written vnto the king, whereof they were well aduertised, and other bad offices. Wherefore he admonished him, That if he loued the quiet of the realme, and desired to doe the king seruice, he should moderate his austere behauiour, and intreat men and their affaires with more equitie, and lesse choler. Whereunto the cardinall, with a feld spirit, answered, That he intreated him to thinke, that he was neuer any of those, which sought to win the fauour of kings, or to maintaine their reputation in the world by crueltye, or doing iniurie to any other: but he had endeouored to acquit himselfe duly of that great charge which had bin committed vnto him, to gouerne the realme. And if they would inquire of that which he had written, and of the offices which he had done with the king, they should finde he had not bin so inuile as they thought, & as euery one did publish, according to his passions. As for the processe of Giron, matters were proceeded so far, as the king himselfe did set down an order. Thus matters remained in suspence, vntil the king had signified his pleasure, who did approue all the cardinall & iustice had done, referring the rest to his judgement: the which the duke of Escalona,

Sentence against the town of Villefratre, and the execution thereof.

Complaints against cardinall
Ximenes.

Admonition of the Admirall of Castille to cardinall Ximenes.

Answer of cardinall Ximenes
to the Admirall
of Castille.

Proceedings of the cardinall a-pproued by the king.

The generall Historie of Spaine.

Lib. 27.

lona, with the other friends, kinsmen, and allies of the earle of Vregna, seeing they knew not what to resolve, but to pacifie the cardinall, seeking by all meanes to haue his fauour by which meanes they obtained, that the earle representing himselfe in justice, & submitting himselfe thereunto, all offences were pardoned. D. Francis Bishop of Aulia, presiding in counsell, and pronouncing the sentence.

Causes of the duke of Albas
discontentment.

The discontentment which D. Frederic of Toledo, duke of Alba, had against the cardinall, grew for the priorie of S. Iohn of Ierusalem, of the knights of Rhodes, the which D. Diego his third son held then, & had enioyed it six years. This dignitie is esteemed among the greatest of Spaine, whereof the prior Valenzuela had bene deputed in the life of king Ferdinand, for his ill desertings, and D. Aluaro of Estuniga canonically aduanced, who had resigned it vnto his nephew D. Antonie of Estuniga, with the consent of king Philip, and confirmation of Pope Leo: but king Ferdinand, after the death of Philip, returning to the gouernment of Castille, & desirous to gratifie the duke of Alba, from whom he had drawne many good seruices, he tooke this priorie from D. Antonie, and did inuest the aduenamed D. Diego of Toledo, against the aunient order, and against the lawes and customes of Spaine, begging therein the authoritie of the great master of Rhodes, who was discontented that the Pope should take vpon him to conferre that priorie to D. Antonie of Estuniga, causing the grant of the order to be brought expressly from Rhodes to that end, D. Antonie complaining in vaine to the Pope, both of the king and great that end, who for his last refuge retired into Flanders, taking Charles, beseeching him to master, for his last refuge retired into Flanders, taking Charles, beseeching him to confirm and maintaine that which his father Philip had done: the which hee obtained, when as he was aduertised of the death of king Ferdinand, for king Charles did write in his fauour vnto the Pope. And so D. Diego of Toledo, and D. Antonie of Estuniga, began to fall to suit for this priorie, at Rome, where D. Antonie did win his cause, and got letters of execution from the Pope, with the which, and the Popes fauourable letters, he came vnto king Charles, who sent him into Spaine to cardinall Ximenes, whom he commaunded to take into his hands all the places of the priorie, admonishing the duke of Alba and his son, to retire their men, and to referre the controuersie to him to compromise: and if the duke of Alba should refuse, he should then cause the kings letters and sentence to be executed, forcing them to obey that should oppose themselves notwithstanding any oppositions. The duke of Bejar, with his brother D. Antonie of Estuniga, presented these letters and commaundement from the king to the cardinall: the which the duke of Alba vnderstanding, being out of hope to procure any delay from the cardinall (for hee was well acquainted with the nature of the man, and knew well that he desired to see this processe, in the which there had past many threats and injurious words, ended) hee resolved to oppose himselfe, and to crosse his proceedings by force. He had of his part the duke of Escalona, and many other noblemen, the which did trouble his aduerse partie. At that time the cardinall was troubled with a tertian ague, the which did animate the duke of Alba and his partie, and gaue them hope to prolong the processe, and to keepe the possession vntill that the king (said they) were better informed. But being somewhat recouered of his sicknesse, he called both parties, and enioyned them to lay aside armes, vntill he were better informed of the right. The cardinall would haue the places sequestred, according to the kings letters, wherein seeing great difficultie by the practises and force vsed on the duke of Albaes part, in the end he propounded to execute the kings letters, brought by D. Antonie of Estuniga: wherein there was adiunction among the counsellors, some holding that the duke of Albaes cause was more iust; and for that, said they, there was some obscuritie in the letters, not being certaine, whether the duke of Alba referring the matter to the kings arbitrement, might still hold the possession, as depositarie, vntill the cause were ended, or else vntill the king should name another depositarie, into whose hands the places & the priorie should be deliuered, they thought it therefore necessarie to haue another warrant, of which aduice were doctor Adrian & the seignior of Chaux. The cardinall banding himself against all these difficulties, he brought all the council to that point, as they concluded the kings letters should be executed. The duke of Alba forgetting no-thing that might helpe his cause, imploied in his fauor queene Germaine, the French king, and the king of England, by whose meanes king Charles was not so resolute to restore

D. An-

Lib. 27.

The generall Historie of Spaine.

A. D. Antonie of Estuniga to his Priorie: whereof the Cardinall being aduertised, hee wrote letters of complaint vnto the king, to the Lord of Chaux, and to the whole counsell of Flanders, shewing them how necessarie constancie and perseuerance were in such like ordinances and decrees: then hee thought it good to call the duke of Alba vnto him, to whom hee in the presence of the counsell, and the earle of Osorno, hee said friendly, that he should temper the heat which hee saw in him in the pursuit of his rights, and that there would be meanes, if he himselfe did not hinder it, to reconcile all things without tumult or armes: wherefore hee did aduise him to put the priorie into the kings hands, to dispose according vnto right and justice, assuring him that if hee did it willingly, hee would mitigate much of the rigour of the commaundement which hee had received from the king, and that hee would deliuer the Priorie into the hands of D. Pedro Bazan, who hee knew was much affected to his house, and hee should keepe it vntill the kings coming: promising moreover that he would then cause the deliuerie of it to D. Antonie to bee staied for three moneths, that in the meane time hee might worke his best meanes. These conditions were contemned by the Duke of Alba, who departed, saying, that the Cardinall might doe better, if hee list, and not derogate any thing from the kings authority: and going from Madrid with this discontent, hee went to his kinsmen and friends, to conferre with them of the enterprise which hee had in his braine, all dissuading him, from opposing himselfe against the Cardinall, witness the calamity of them of Villefratre and of the earle of Vregna, for the which they gaue him such reasons, as at that time hee yielded to their counsels. But falling afterwards into furie, the Cardinall was forced to come to the last remedy, calling together his Legionary companies, both horse and foot, as well to gard and fortifie the counsell and justice, as to suppress the mutines, and keepe them from ioyning together: which forces did encounter and put to rout about a thousand foote and some horse of the duke of Alba, and stript them in the diocesse of Toledo. After which rout the duke coming to himselfe, hee imploied the fauour of Queene Germaine and doctor Adrian, and came to Madrid, where hee was so tractable, as hee yielded the Priorie to the Cardinals discretion, for hee shewed him with what vprightnesse he proceeded in this businesse, and let him read the originall letters: hee had receiued of the kings commaundement; to the end hee might know it was no cause that hee did affect and seeke, adding that hee should consider with himselfe wherein hee might assist him preserving his honour, and the king his masters seruice, assuring him that hee would not faile him: to whome the duke made answere, that hee would not inreat any other thing of him, but after that his sonne should be deputed of the priorie, the king would remember that their house had alwaies been affectionat to the crowne, and haue regard vnto it: and for that hee had vnderstood that he would leaue the priorie in depositio in the hands of D. Ferdinand Andrada who had married D. Francis of Estuniga, kinswoman to his aduerse party, he desired it might be giuen to some other, to the end that his enemies might haue no subiect to scorne at his calamity. The Cardinall who was alwaies vanquished by them that yielded vnto him, said, that it was reasonable, ordaining that the Priorie should be deliuered into the hands of D. Ferdinand Andrada, & he should instantly redeliuer it to D. Antonie of Cordoua, brother to the earle of Cabra. These things concluded at Madrid, the duke sent letters to D. Diego his son, to leaue the priorie, & by the Cardinall to D. Ferdinand of Andrada, to cease from all acts of hostilitie. Thus the quarrel for the priorie of S. Iohn was ended, the which notwithstanding after the death of Cardinall Ximenes, D. Diego recouered, and enioyed partly with the consent, and partly against the wil of Charles himselfe, who decreed that D. Diego of Toledo, and D. Antonie of Estuniga, should enioy it in common: but D. Antonie dying at Perpignan, he left the whole possession to his competitor.

There remained another cause to determine, which the Cardinall did affect: it was the processe of the earle of Ribadeo in Gallicia, of a small circuit, but good, fertile, and pleasant; The earle of which place hath this priuiledge, that on twelue day hee dines at the king of Castilles table, & hath the robe that he weares that day. This earle dome had been held by D. Rodrigo of Villandradra, who hauing married two lawfull wiues, and those put a way

Speech of Cardinall Ximenes
to the duke of Alba.

Defeat of the duke of Alba
men by the Car-dinall's companies.

Duke of Alba submits himself to Cardinall
Ximenes.

Controuersie for the earledome
of Ribadeo.

Authority of Cardinal Xi-
menes vanquished by a womā

Profanation of the Cardinals order by Pope
Leo.

Manie sent into Flanders for Charles.

Cardinal Xi-
menes poisoned.

away for barrenesse, had in the end taken to wife a state of his owne free, called Leonor, by whom he had D. Rodrigo his sonne and only presumptive heire; to whom the admiral had giuen a base daughter of his to wife. Against this D. Rodrigo, there contented for the succession, D. Maria of Villosa, married to the earle of Salines, who was neece to the old earle of Villindrada, daughter to his sister, saying that D. Rodrigo was not lawfull; which sute had bene commenced long before the death of king Ferdinand. Cardinal Ximenes fauoured D. Rodrigos cause: but as many of the Countesse inclined more to the reasons of D. Maria, the cause was sent to the Chancery of Vailladolid; yea, D. Maria had such fauour in court, as the title and right was granted vnto her sonne by the kings letters, the which did much trouble the Cardinal, seeing himselfe vanquished by a woman; he that had gouerned the greatest Lords of Spaine at his pleasure.

This yeare one thousand five hundred and seenteene, Pope Leo created one and thirty Cardinals, among which Doctor Adrian Floris was one; for the which he was much blamed, against the which Cardinal de Montre, vncle to Pope Iulio the third, and others, opposed themselves, saying, that to make so many at one time, was to profane that sacred order. He had almost made Raphael of Urbino, an excellent painter, Cardinal, to free himselfe by a hat of a great sum of money which he ought him for pictures, with which hope being fed, he deferred to marrie with the Neece of the Cardinal of Bibiena, which was offered him, but his sodaine death deprived the painter both of the one and other.

Cardinal Ximenes being solicited by the king and the Flemish Lords, to send a fleet into Flanders, to condukt him, he rigged out a good number of ships, where Gomes of Buytron was admiral, causing the ports of Biscay, Asturia, and Galicia, to be visited, for that it was bruted the plague was in many places, appointing victuals and other necessities to be carried to refresh and ease the court, wherefoeuer the fleet should arrive: himselfe in the meane time leaving Madrid, went towards Aranda of Duero, where hee resolved to attend the kings coming, that abode seeming vnto him verie healthfull and pleasant, and by reason of the conuent of Franciscane friers, situated in the next village of Aguilera: in passing hee made his last visit of Tordelaguna, the place of his birth.

There were in his company, the Infant D. Ferdinand, doctor Adrian now made Cardinal, and Arnalfo: from Tordelaguna he came to Bozeguillas, a borough in the mountaine, where dying they did verily beleue that hee was poisoned, which made him fall into a lingring consumption, till hee dyed of it: for hauing dyed hee found himselfe verie ill, after which there came bloud out at his eares, and at the ioyning of his nayles, the suspicion of poison was augmented by a certaine horseman vnknown, who that morning hauing met neere vnto Bozeguillas the Prouinciall Marquise, with other monkes that went vnto the Cardinal, hee willed them to make hast to be there before hee sat downe to dinner: and to aduise him not to eate of a great trout which should be set before him, for without doubt it was poisoned: If you arrive said hee, too late, care then for the health of his soule, for his body will bee past helpe. This speech was deliuered by Marquise, but late vnto the Cardinal, who gaue little credit, saying, that if his infirmie came of poison, hee thought it came from Flanders, and that hee had bene infected at Madrid; by the eyes, in reading of a letter which was brought out of that countrey, since which time hee had not bene well; whatsoeuer it were, hee was ready to goe when God should call him, who sends infirmities, and takes them away at his pleasure.

They obserue that hee said often to the Physicians, that hee should die by the treachery and wickednes of traitors; and it was commonly reported that Francis Carillo, who was sewer to the Cardinal, hauing eaten of this trout, was verie sick; and they did vndoubtedly beleue that the Flemings sought his death: for they had discovered by his letters, that his intent was to procure the king to dismiss them all, and send them home to their houses, and to be serued by Spaniards in their places. The blame of this vild act was laid vpon Baracaldo, one of his secretaries, who had done other treacheries to the Cardinal his master; yet the Cardinal did still vse his seruice vnto his dying day: which breeds some doubt whether it were he or some other that committed this crime, whereof there were many

A many contrarie arguments. Cardinal Ximenes caused himselfe to bee carried to Aranda; whereas whilst hee strues against his infirmie, the towne of Vailladolid fell into new tumults, vpon a conceit the people had, that the brute of the kings coming was but counterfeite, and that this great preparation was to send the infant D. Ferdinand into Flanders: So as Spaine remaining destitute of her princes, being in the hands of an old Monke, halfe rotten, and neere his end, must of necessity bee ruined by intestine seditions, or be a prey to foreign nations. To pacifie this mutiny, and to certifie them of the truth of the kings coming, the Cardinal sent vnto them, and satisfied them.

B yet full of enuie, which was to reforme the Infant D. Ferdinand his house, and to take from him those that had bred him vp and serued him, especially D. Pedro Nugnes, of Guzman treasurer of the Calatrava, his gouernour, and D. Aluaro Oforio, a Iacobin, bishop of Astorga his schoolemaster: D. Pedro had neuer bene allowed by the Cardinal, in that charge, and hee had often sought to crosse him, whereupon there grew great hatred betwixt them, the which Oforio had entertained and increased, as well for some ambition, wherein hee saw himselfe hindered by the Cardinal, as through emulation; which hath bene long betwixt those two orders, the bishop being a Iacobin, and the Cardinal of Franciscane. It was commonly bruted; and every man did beleue it, that Oforio had bene the cause and breeder of seditions at Vailladolid; and Cardinal Ximenes knewe that

C hee did continually maligne him to the Flemish Lords: that hee sought to stirre him selfe into the fauour of the Emperour Maximilian, and that hee had treated of a marriage betwixt the Emperour and Queene Germaine: And many held opinion that D. Pedro Nugnes of Guzman, had had a conceit to carrie the Infant D. Ferdinand into Arragon, with an intent and hope to make him king of that country, whereunto the people would easily haue consented for the memorie and name of their deceased king D. Ferdinand, who had loued the Infant dearly; and other things of some true, some false, which were spoken in Spaine: whatsoeuer was the cause D. Pedro Nugnes and the bishop of Astorga were in no grace with the Cardinal; wherefore hee did write often to the king, and caused the lords of the Councell to be delt with

D all, to haue them discharged: so as a little before king Charles his coming into Spaine, there was a dispatch sent by the king, by the which the Cardinal was commanded to discharge D. Pedro Nugnes of Guzman gouernour; D. Aluaro Oforio Schoole-master; D. Gonfalo of Guzman, Chamberlaine, and Sancho de Paredes, steward to the Infant, and send them home to their houses, letting them know that the king was verie well satisfied with their good seruices; but their ages did now require rest; and that hee would haue regard vnto their merits, and remember them: as for the rest of the Infants house, hee left it to the Cardinal, to dispose as he should think fit. This packet by the Post-masters fault came not to the Cardinals hands before all the contents were diuulged, which caused the more difficultie in the execution of the E kings will, for the Post-master thinking it to be newes how that the king was imarkt to come into Spaine, he kept the packet five daies, before hee deliuered it to the Cardinal, to whome it was directed, and in the meane time sent this good newes to the noblemen, to draw presents from them: then Cardinal Ximenes being ill disposed of his person in the conuent of Aguilera, this Post-master thought it indifferent to giue the packet to Cardinal Adrian or to him, the which hee did: Adrian whether through curiositie or otherwise, opened it, & finding letters directed to the Infant, hee gaue him them, without any further apprehension, who by this meanes vnderstood what was ordained of him, and of his seruants, & of the change of his house, whereof hee did presently aduertise them, before the Cardinal had seen the kings letters: wherewith they being wonderfully discontented, and seeing no other remedy they implored the Infants aide, which was of no great moment, beseeching him to remember their fidelity and good seruices, letting him vnderstand that all this was done to debase him, and keep him vnder, at the Cardinals pleasure, who had procured and practised this alteration.

F The Infant being perswaded by his Masters, came the next day in great choler to the Conuent of Aguilera, hauing in his companye the Bishoppe Oforio,

1517
Tumult of Vailladolid.

Reformation of the Infant D.
Ferdinands house by the Cardinal.

Franciscane and Iacobins inuestigate enmities.

Secrets of Cardinal Ximenes discovered.

1517 Oforio (for D. Pera Nugnes was sick:) & doctor Adrian by reason of the error which he had committed in opening the packet, and giuing the letters to the Infant, before he had imparted them to Cardinall Ximenes, durst not shew himselfe.

Intreaty of the Infant D. Ferdinand to the Cardinall.

Cardinall Xi-
menes inexorable.

Being come vnto the Cardinall, he complained greatly (and with teares in his eyes) of the wrong he did him, in seeking to depriue him without any lawfull cause, of so good & faithfull seruants, the which he would neuer haue beleueed of him, whome hee held to be his deare friend: and thereupon he intreated him, and coniuired him by the memorie of Queene Isabell, and the great advancement hee had receiued from her, not to suffer this indignity to be done vnto him, to take from him so worthy a person as his gouernour, so fit a Schoole-master as the bishop Oforio, so many seruants which had attended him faithfully, and with whome hee had beene nourished and bred vp with great content; and that hee would not suffer him to receive that displeasure, to see them ignominiously and wrongfully disgraced. The Cardinall sought by mild words to pacifie the incensed courage of this Prince, laying before him the king his brothers pleasure, assuring him that all those things tended to his advancement, so as hee would shew himselfe obedient and tractable. As for the iniurie whereof hee complained, hee intreated him to thinke it was otherwise, and to beleuee that hee was a man of yeares and experience, and that hee loued him dearly: hee confessed that hee ought to haue a care of the honour and good of his seruants, but hee must wishall thinke that the king his brother was dearer vnto him: And therefore hee exhorted him that leauing these passions which his seruants had bred in him, he should wholly adhere to him; who was the greatest king in Christendome against whose will it were neither safe nor conuenient for him to oppose himselfe; and if hee did persist to complaine, and to shew a discontentment for that which the king commanded to be done, hee should be assured that hee would bring himselfe, his affaires, and his seruants into great danger. For all this the Infant D. Ferdinand, (being young and incensed) was not satisfied, but answering the Cardinall, I haue, said hee, tasted of your friendship in many occasions, but now it failes mee at my greatest need, neither doe I know which way it is fled: but seeing that I find that you are resolu'd to ruine mee and mine, whome you may ease and comfort much with a small delay, I must of necessitie find means to defend and preserue our selues.

Speech of Cardinall Ximenes to
the Infant D.
Ferdinand.

Diligence of Cardinall Xi-
menes to execute his desire.

At these words the Cardinall finding himselfe toucht, Do (said he) what you please, but I swear vnto you by the life of king Charles your brother, that to morrow shall not passe before his commandements be executed, the which it behooues you to obey before all others, yea though all Spaine had conspired to hinder it. This made the Infant take vnto him a manly courage, and to lay aside or dissemble his childish affections: wherefore hee departed from the Cardinall with a settled countenance, & without any shew of perturbation, and so returned to Aranda, where before his arriual, hee found himselfe garded, with the towne and all the approaches, by the souldiers of Cabanille, and Espinola, captaines of the guard, who were sent and instructed by the Cardinall, who knew how to execute their charge, and keepe the Infant or any of his house from attempting anything. All that night was spent in complaints in the Infants lodging, who slept not; hee would say often that hee would be reuenged of the Cardinall, and when they asked him what hee would doe against a man so well garded, and who had all the forces of Spaine at his command: well, I will make shew to goe and visit my mother, and then will I goe where I please, and the first that shall offer to hinder mee, let him assure himselfe I will kill him, with other such speeches of a yong man.

Day being come, the Infant by the aduice of his seruants, sent to intreat the kings counsell, and the Popes two Noncios to come vnto him, to whome hee said: That the king his brother had sent commandement to take his seruants from him, the which was grievous vnto him, but hee would obey, yet hee intreated them to doe one good Office for an Infant of the house of Castille, to complaine vnto the king by their letters, of the great wrong was done him, seeing they knew well that they had bred him vp, serued and accompanied him faithfully and honestly: the which they

A they promised to doe. Cardinall Ximenes by the meanes of Cardinall Adrian, drew D. Pedro Nugnes of Guzman, D. Aluaro Oforio, and Gonsall de Guzman, to come vnto him vnto the Conuent of Aguilera, to heare the reasons why they were discharged; and to answer the complaints they made of him, who hauing heard what hee would say vnto them, answered and replied, in the end they saide that they were ready to doe that which hee should command them; but they intreated him to persuaide the king, (with whome they knew hee had grace and credit) to haue regard vnto their honors and interests, and they did wisely to answer so, and shew themselves obedient: for if they had done otherwise, hee would nor haue suffered them to returne to Aranda, but would haue stayed them prisoners vntill the kings coming; attending the which the charge of the Infant D. Ferdinand was giuen to the Marquesse of Aguilar, in the absence of D. Alfonso Telles, whome the king had appointed to that place. There were eight and twentie of the Infants seruants discharged, in whose places there were subrogated men of base condition, and obscure families, to cut off all occasions to vndertake great enterprises, and this Cardinall was so seuer as hee would not suffer the Infant to haue the young Vicont of Altamire, whome he loued dearly for his dexterity and good fashion, for that hee was nephew to D. Aluaro Oforio: There remained onely of all the old seruants of that house Alfonso Castilege, for that being giuen to musicke and poetrie, hee seemed to be free from ambition; or any desire of alteration. These things thus done, being vnderstood at Court, the lords of the Councell sent letters from the king to the Cardinall for the Marquesse of Astorga, and the earle of Lemos, kinsman to D. Pedro Nugnes of Guzman, and to D. Aluaro Oforio, admonishing them not to oppose themselves to any act done by him, but hee did not vouchsafe to giue them these letters, so confident hee was in the authority which hee held, representing the kings person, and so hee had often done, not caring much for that which the Spaniards suspected or feared.

Seuerity of Car-
dinall Ximenes.

Marquess of Aguilar gouernour
to the Infant D.
Ferdinand.

D. Pedro Giron causeth new troubles.

The Marquesse of Aguilar gouerned himselfe so well with his master, as hee himselfe did write vnto the king his brother, and besought him not to giue that charge vnto any other: the which had beene appointed for D. Alfonso Telles.

There was a brute throughout Spaine, that the Cardinals infirmity had so weakened him, as leauing all affaires, hee liued retired in his Conuent of friers, not seeing any man, and in effect the bloud came more abundantly out at his eares than before, and hee was much tormented in his body, and as in old men all remedies are difficult and of small effect, they knew not what to hope of him: wherefore D. Pedro Giron watching for all occasions to mutine, went to Armes, to invade the countrie of Medina Sidonia, and the Moores also hearing these newes, did molest the coast of Granado, making spoile of all they incountred, for the which the Cardinall provided notwithstanding his infirmity, for against D. Pedro hee opposed the earle of Luna, who kept him in awe, being assisted by D. Anna of Arragon, wife to the duke of Medina, who gaue him her iewels for the charges of the warre. The earle of Vregra his father, remembering the error committed at Villefratre, which was not yet forgotten; hee besought the Cardinall, not to impute these new broiles to him, promising that hee would cause his sonne D. Pedro to lay aside armes, and so hee did: yet the Cardinall did write letters vnto the king full of accusations against these Girones, persuauding him so to punish them once for all, as they should haue no more desire to fall into such errors, and others might take example by them.

About that time the Turkes who had newly seized vpon Alger, vnder Hornico Barberousse, meant to make an enterprise vpon Oran, which was the Cardinalls conquest, and therefore hee did much affect it, and the king being then at Sea, had news of it, the which did trouble them much, holding it a great losse if this landing place in Afrik were taken from the Christians. But God provided for it, for the Moores and Arabian Africans ieaious that the Turkes should settle themselves in their countrie, assembled in great multitudes, and incountred them, which came against Oran, and defeated them, freeing the Spaniards, who attended a siege, from that paine and care.

King

1557
Arrivall of king
Charles as the Asturies.

8. King Charles having taken ship in Flanders about the beginning of September, hee came in the end of that month to the most vneascie coast of all the Asturies, about Tazane, a place full of rocks, and not frequented by seafaring men, not farre from Villeuicuse. The mountaine people of that countrey not knowing what they were which landed vpon their coast, hauing put their wiues and children into the most inaccessible places of the mounrains, they betooke them to armes, and ranne in troups to the Sea shoare, thinking they had bene French-men or some other enemies, which came to spoyle the countrey: the which they perceiuing which were yet at sea, and the king himselfe, hee commanded to display the royall standard, that hee might beeknowne. The Asturians discouering the Lions and Castles, knew that it was their king, and laying downe their armes, they came to salute him vpon their knees, accompanying him to Villeuicuse, the which by a good equiuocation they called Villadichofa, which signifies a happy Towne, which sight was most pleasing vnto the king: there hee rested himselfe after his sea trauell, being accompanied by his sister D. Leonora then Queene of Portugal.

There were with him the lord of Cheures, the Chancellor Sauuage, Charles of Lanoy, & other Flemish lords: and in a short time there came many noblemen of Spaine vnto him, among which were D. Inigo Fernandes of Velasco the Constable, a man of great possessions, in that barren countrey, being accompanied with 700 horse, all his kinsmen, friends, and vassals, who had giuen order that store of victuals should be brought vnto them as they past: there came other noblemen to kisse their princes hand, and then they returned presently, that they might not incōmodate his household and train in the streits of the mounrains, vntill that he were come into a more open country, and better provided. The Cardinal who lay in his Conuent, scarce able to breath, was so glad at the news of the kings arrivall, as he left his bed, sung masse, and eat in the Refectorie among the friers, the which did much discontent the Flemish Courtiers, who desired that hee had bene dead before that the king should conferre with him; for they were well aduertised that hee sought to chase them from the counsell, and from all affaires, whereof hee had often treated by his letters and agents with the king wherefore they informed themselves curiously of his phisitions, how long he would liue, thinking that his death was neer; & therefore they staid the king as long as they could vpon the way, desiring much that he were dead before the king should see him. Some counselled the king to goe first and visite the realme of Arragon, before he staid in Castille, the which the Cardinal hindred all he could, informing him of many inconueniences which would happen by that counsell: and beseeching him most humbly not to determine anything touching his publike or priuate affaires, before hee had giuen him a full information of the estate of his realme: hee did also counsel him to send the infant D. Ferdinand his brother, as soone as might bee into Germany, to the emperour his grandfather, thinking that hee could not take a better resolution, neither for his owne affaires, nor for the good of the Infant, then to send him thither, and to bee a meanes that all; or a good part of Maximilians succession might come vnto him, seeing that by the grace of God, he was king and lord of so many realmes and rich estates.

This counsell was followed after the Cardinals death, nor at the Flemings sute, who it may bee had other designs, for the lord of Cheures desired to keep him vnder, & soon after would haue had him giue water vnto the king his brother: who, being discontented to see his brother so abuse himselfe, said, that Ximenes counsell was better. Whereupon he ordained that the Infant should be conducted into Germany. The king being come to Saint Vincent of Barquera, D. Anthony of Rojas, Bishop of Granada, President of the Counsell royall (who had bene alwaies opposit to the Cardinal) went from Aranda with all the Counsell, not making him acquainted therewith, to go and mee with the king; and the better to excuse their fact, they would haue carried with them the Infant D. Ferdinand, if the Marquesse of Aguilar had not hindred it. The Cardinal finding himselfe wronged herewith, sent two of the kings letters to the President; by the which hee and the whole counsell were commanded not to depart without him; but they staid not for all that, thinking that the Cardinals authority was much decayed: but hee mouued with this contempt,

A contempt, sent to the king, complaining of D. Antonio de Rojas, and of the counsell departure, in contempt of his letters, terming the forsakers of the commonweale, & of the affaires of estate, protesting, that if before his coming they had presumed to doe such a thing, he would haue punished them in such sort, as within 3 dayes both the president & the counsell had bin reuened, and had deprived the of their dignities with disgrace: wherefore he besought him to obserue the honor and dignity of his counsell of Spaine, & to cause them to returne, to the end they might all together go to meet him, as it was fit: the which was done to the presidents great discontent and shame, who returned with at his train to Aranda. The masters of accounts did not abandon the cardinal: to whom the admirall Henriques and other noblemen, who were ready to go & meet the king, offered to go in his company: but he thinking that there were other considerations in these noblemen than in the Senat he gaue them thanks, intreating them to goe before and without him. Winter which comes sooner, and is more sharp in the region beyond the mountains, than in other parts of Spaine, prest the cardinal to leaue the conuent of Aguilar, which place was too moist for his health: wherefore he removed to Roa a towne in the county of Siruelas, where he had learned his first letters in his infancie, causing himselfe to be caried thither in a close litter, and clad in furs: carrying with him the infant D. Ferdinand. Roa is 14 leagues nearer to Vaileddolit, than Aranda, and it is a commodious place, to take the way to Vaileddolit or to Segobia, as if it had bin don of purpose. For his part hee desired the court should rather go to Segobia than to Vaileddolit, whereas the Knight consule of his affairs, & assemble the states, the which he dissuaded much at this his first arrival, saying, that their spirits were yet inflamed with the forepassed mutinies, doubting not but there would be many rash and impertinent articles preferred, wherefore it was expedient to deferre it for a time, & to suffer those humors to settle: being of great importance, that the people should meet and see their prince at the first with all humility, obedience and feare, which aduice was contemned, to the great preiudice and danger of the realme.

In the mean time there came deputies from Toledo to the king, beseeching him to chuse that citie, which was great, spacious and healthfull, and situated in a fertile countrey, for his first abode, the which would haue bin very pleasing to the cardinal who was archbishop of Toledo: but the Flemish courtiers took no delight to be so far from the sea: wherefore the king hauing giuen good reception to the deputies, he sent them back, making choice rather of the towne of Vaileddolit; but before his coming thither, he would go visite his mother D. Juane at Tordeillas, writing the causes vnto the Cardinal, and to his brother D. Ferdinand, which had moued him thereunto: his resolution seemed full of pietie, but considering the indisposition of this princeesse, it was not needfull to conferre so long with her of affaires, as he did. During the Kings abode at Tordeillas, the lodgings were made at Vaileddolit, where the Cardinal beganne to find that the Flemings could doe more than he in Spaine, for his seruants demanding the lodging of doctor Bernardus for him, being in a wholesome place, and fit for his infirmity, the harbenger Terremonde refused it him, hauing marked it for Queene Germaine, wherein the Cardinal had infinite troublesome difficulties, being not accustomed to intreate, although he obtained it: (it was knowne after wards, that the duke of Alba had bene the motiue of this ynworthy vsage of a man of so great authority;) but as for his traine it was lodged in a village without the towne: and yet he must haue patience, it auailed him nothing to complayne of this contempt and disgrace, which he had neuer tried being in a meane estate, no nor when the kings D. Ferdinand, and D. Philippe were together in that towne, with a great traine of noblemen and knights, and all their ordinary guards, saying, that it was a poore recompence, after so much toyle and sweat, to receiue a wrong in the place of a reward, whereof he blamed the K. officers who were strangers & ignorant of the customs of Spaine. But the worst was, when he receiued letters from the K. by the which he was commanded to attend him at Mojados vpon the way to Tordeillas, where he desired to confer with him, and to haue his counsell in affaires both of his realme and house, to the end he might discharge him of so great a burthen, & suffer him to retire to his own house, to liue in rest, where God would comfort & recompence him, for so many good offices which he had done for the realme, seeing he thought it was not in the power of any man to do it, & that for his part hee would euer remember it, and honour and reuerence him as his father. These letters were written at the persuation of Mote Bish. of Badajos, an affectionat seruant

X x x

to

Assembly of the Estates dissolved by the cardinal
Ximenes at the kings ar-rivall.

Entertainment
betwixt K.
Charles and his mother unnecessary.

Signe of the Cardinals disgrace.

Letter of discharge from the Cardinal
to the King.

Practises of the Flemish courtiers to keepe the king from seeing of the Cardinal

1517

Death of the Cardinal
franc Ximenes
of Cisneros.

Cardinal
Ximenes
is referred by the people and vniuer sities of Al
cala.

9 Disposition of Cardinal
Ximenes.

Bible printed in many tongues.

to the L. of Cheures, & yet much bound to the Cardinall, who having received them, conceiued so great a griefe to see himselfe put backe, as within few hours after he died, his feuer encreasing which he had gotten the day before these strange news: feeling his end to draw neer, he had some little conference with some of his people of the mercy of God, & of the vanity of this world, & forgetting no ceremonies which his order & profession required, he commended his soul to God & to all the Saints, namely to the virgin Mary, to S. Peter, S. Paul, S. Iaguer, and S. Michael, but especially to S. Francis, vnder whose rule he had liued, and to the protectors and patrons of his church of Toledo, S. Eugenio, and Idelfonse or Alphonso. Being thus provided, & with the prayers & suffrages of some priests which assisted him, he ended his daies, leaving a great griefe to many, but it may be the number of those that were glad of it exceeded. He was no sooner dead, but 2 Spanishe captaines Vellido & Collozo, going out of the Antichamber into the chamber where he died, began to lay hand vpon some plate and other things, thinking that all was to be sackt, but they were balmied by the colonel Spinosa, D. Alphonso of Arcellan eile of Aguilar, & other noblemen, who were better taught. His body was imbalmed, and being attired in his pontifical robes, he was laid for a time bare faced vpon a rich bed, whereas euery man came and kist his hands, being insulted thereto by the sound of a trumpet, with promise of pardon for their sins: Then according to his will, he was carried to Alcala of Henares, where he was founder of that goodly Vniuersitie, and there with great honour and funerall pomp, he was interred in the church of S. Idelfonse, as he had ordained, where his tombe is to be seene of white marble, with his Image in his archbishops weed, excellently well cut, enuironed with a grate of yron, wherby are 16 spaces, representing the deeds of this Prelate, artificially grauen. The people of Alcala shewed him small reuerence, for presently after his funerall they went and beat downe and rased the houses and farmes, which he had caused to be built without the towne for Benedict his nephew: and they of the vniuersity and colledge of S. Idelfonse disannulled many things which he had brought in, and chased away the chanon Cardagna, who was treasurer and superintendent of that colledge. Such was the end of this cardinall, a famous man for his great wisdom & iudgement in the government of the affaires of state, constancie in his resolutions, and magnanimity in the execution of his enterprises, seuer, rigorous, and inexorable: a terror to great men, not yielding to force nor flattery, being exceeding ambitious & desirous of honor, the which he shewed in his softer disposition, fit for them that gouerne great Estates. His constitution of body did represent the qualities of his mind, for he was of a great stature, strong & lustie: his pace was graue, his voice strong & firm, his face long and drie, a large forehead without any wrinkles, reasonable big eyes, hollow, but quicke sighted, and alwayes moist, long nosed & crooked like an Eggle, his great teeth stucke out, so as some called him Elephant, & thick lip. His skull being found in the yere 1565 in the vault where it had bin laied, seemed to be all of one peece without any scame: he deliuered his conceptions in few words, & neuer straid fro the purpose, no not in his greatest choler: if he promised to do any man good, he always performed more than he spake: he did seldome vse to iest, yet he took delight to heare them that were quick conceited, & would laugh at them that were pleasant in their speeches: he kept a mad man, who sometimes had bin learned & a diuine, & was delighted to heare him rehearse many passages which he had retained, the which he repeated without any reason, & yet sometimes not ill applied: he would be pleasant with a Spanishe captaine called Maderol, who had made many promises, but done little good in all his life, counselling him to become a monk to do penance for his sins: & in these things he recreated his spirits, being charged with great affairs. Finally, he loved learning, & to heare the disputations of learned men, & oftentimes of yong scholars. This prelat being well informed of the great profit which the world might draw from the knowledge of tongues he did intertain men that were learned in them: & to imploy the in matters fit for his religious profession, & to the end the studious of the holy scripture might tast the word of God fro the original springs, he caused the bible to be printed in many tongues: that is, the book of the old testament distinguished into 3 parts, whereof the first contained the Hebrew text, the second the comon translation into Latin which we vse: & the third the Greeke of the 70 Interpreters, with his translation in Latin. As for the new Testament it contained the Greeke text, & the common translation in Latin, very well corrected: and in the end of the volume, a dictionary of Hebrew words interpreted, very ample & copious: a

959
1517

Men employed to peruse the Bible.

Cardinal
Ximenes
oppress with melancholy

A lower of in justice.

Execution must be speedie after mature delibera tion.

Cardinal
Ximenes, though a friar, yet he was richly apparell
ed.

Discretion in giuing of bene
fices.

11 Buildings made at the charge of Cardinal
Ximenes.

A worke of great labour, impetuous and stately, witnessing the greatnes of this cardinalls courage, who was not daunted with any difficulty. Herein he vied the care, learning, and iudgement of Demetrius Candidot, John of Vergara, Anthony Nebriencia, Lopez of Estuniga, Fernand of Vailledolit, worthy professors in the Greeke and Latin tongues, Alphonso of Alcala a philition, Paul Cornel, and Alphonso Zamora, learned men in the Hebrew tong. These men were very careful to examine the old volumes that were most correct and approued of both testaments, wherein they had no small help and ease by the library of the Vatican at Rome, through the bounty of Pope Leo, who refused not any thing to cardinall Ximenes. The Latin explication of the translation of the 70 Interpreters, was the worke of Demetrius, of Fernand of Vailledolit, and of Alphonso of Estuniga, assisted by some of their disciples learned men, John Vergara was also assisted and called by them to take part of this charge, who interpreted some of those bookes which he was wont to call Sapientiales: as Ecclesiasticus, the which he could not finish as he desired, by reason of his indisposition; for hee had an intent to make large Annotations. The Bible was begun by these men in the yere 1502, who spent 15 whole yeares, with great care and toyle to turne ouer infinite volumes and copies, gathered together from many parts of the world, with wonderful charge, for proofe whereof Gomellius saies, that he had often heard Alphonso Zamora, professor in the Hebrew tongue, affirme, that for 7 Hebrew copies which are kept in the Vniuersitie of Alcala of Henares, were payed 4000 crownes of gold. Being ended by John Brocario of Alcala, it was dedicated to pope Leo, whereof the world hath receiued great profit. This Cardinall hauing his mind continually attentive to great matters, was sometimes oppressd with melancholy, which made him to vnder take things rather through surie than counsell, but very seldome, as the conuersion of the Moors of Granada, and the enterprises of Africa, attempted with too great affection & zeale without any ground. The quarrels which he had with great me with such obstinatio as we haue said, proceeded fro the loue of Iustice, magnanimity & vertue: for he would teach them to liue according to equity. The chanons of Toledo were his chiefe counsellors, without whose aduice he would neuer attempt any thing of importance: he would, as it was fit, that whatsoeuer had bin decreed after mature deliberation, should be instantly put in execution: he censured of mens errors, not by the effect, but by the intent. Although in publike affaires, he were impatient of a reply, & bold speech, yet in that which concerned himselfe, he often indued the liberty of another mans tongue: the which he shewed to Contrera the preacher, who blaming him one day in his presence, for that he being a friar did often weare tables & other rich furrer, he was invited to dine with him, where he commended his preaching, but he excused that which he did reprehend in him, saying, that men aduanced to dignity and great charges, had need of precious ornaments, and rich attire, as well on their persons as in their houses, for that doth breed maiesty in him, and causeth reuerence in subiects. They write that these ornaments were vsed superficially by the Cardinall, for as for his vnder habit and his sleeping, he alwayes carried himselfe according to the Order of Saint Francis: he daily said his prayers, either alone, or accompanied, the doore being shut, that he might not be diuerted. He had great compassion of great persons vnworthily afflicted, and did releue them with mony, as to D. Gulmar of Castro duchesse of Nagera, being chased from her house by her husband, whom he did nourish and comfort in the city of Toledo with as great honor, as the duke himselfe could haue done her, blaming his churlishnes the more, for that he had bin made duke by king Henry the fourth in fauor of this woman, with whom, as we haue said, he seemed to be in loue.

When there was any great benefice void in the church of Toledo, hee gaue it either to the sonne of some prince or great nobleman, or to some one of the learnedest men of Spaine: saying, That nobility brought fauour, and learning authority to the clergie: finally, hee was liberall, and very charitable to the poore, and careful of his household seruants. He spent a good part of his revenues in religious buildings, which preferre his memorie: as at Tordelaguna, where hee was borne the conuent of Franciscan friers, intituled of the virgin Mary, a goodly and stately worke: at Toledo the conuent of Saint John penitent: and one of the like title at Alcala of Henares, two Conuents, one of Franciscans, and the other of Iacobins, in the city of Oran: but above all, the building of the colledge of Saint Idelfonse or Alphonse, in the vniuersitie of Alcalá of Henares is most famous, and the institution of the company, which should be all Diuines. This man was so seuerē, as he had attempted to reduce all the Orders of monkes to their ancient and first simplicitie and puritie. After this prelat's death, D. Alphonse of Arragon archbishop of Saragossa, base sonne to the deceased king D. Ferdinand, came to Tordesillas, to salute the king his nephew, and also to get the archbishopricke of Toledo, if he might; but the lord of Cheures, who would haue it for William of Crouy his nephew, stayed his coming, so as this prince was forced to go to Vailladolid, there to attend the King, who hauing seen him, and complaining to all the noblemen of Spaine, of the wrong the lord of Cheures had done him, he returned into Arragon, frustrate of that which he pretended.

Xxxx ij

of

12 The king hauing caused the Estates of Castille to assemble at Vailladolid, in September 1518, he was declared king of Castille, Toledo, Granado, and other dependances in Spaine; hee receiued and tooke the othe after the accustomed manner, wherein there was some difficultie made by some great noblemen, for that Queene Isabe his mother did yet liue; notwithstanding it past; and hauing there ordaind many things touching the gouernement of Castille, he past into Arragon, to haue alike assembly and solemnity, in regard of those realmes and the lands depending. Being in Arragon he was solicited to send ambassadors to Mompellier, to conferre with the deputies of the French king, and of Henrie of Albrēt, touching the rights of the realme of Nauarre, held and enioyed by him, in the name of D. Isabe his mother, and his owne, by hereditary title, whereof there had bin another parliament held at Noion: whither were sent the lord of Cheures, the chancellor John Saurage, who was of Bruges, D. Ant. of Estuniga one of the priors of S. Iohn, the great commander of Castille, doctor Carnial, with other knights and learned men; but all this conference was to no effect, for he that was in possession, would hold it: besides Arthur Goffier, L. of Bouilli dying, was a hinderance to it. At that time D. Ant. Manriquez duke of Nagera was viceroy of Nauarre, hauing for assistant D. Roderigo of Mercado bishop of Auija, at which time the new king Charles had caused the marshall D. Pedro of Nauarre to be deliuered out of prison, being in the castle of Atienza, & prest him much to take the othe, & to do him homage, as to his king; but he who bare an affection to his master, refused it: by reason wherof he ended his daies in the prison of Simancas. The King being at Barcelone he had news of his election to the empire of Germany: wherefore he went towards Vailladolid, to make preparation for his iorney, & order for the affaires of Castille, which were very confused. But hee was forced to make halt, and to leaue many things vndecided, being aduertised of the conspiracies & leagues betwixt the towns and great lords of the realme, for the defence of the priuiledges and liberties of the country, against the greedines & usurpations of the Flemish counsellors, who gouerned this yong prince: among the which the chiefe was, as we haue said, the L. of Cheures. The King for that he would not be engaged in these Spanish mutinies, with whose humours he was not acquainted, he parted as it were flying away, & imbarcked at the Groin, a famous port in Galicia, leauing for gouernors cardinal Adrian, & the constable. D. Inigo Fernandez of Velasco, to whom he afterwards ioyned D. Frederic Henriques, great admirall of Castille. Being landed in the low countries, he went presently to Auija Chapelle, where he receiued the imperiall crowne, in the yere 1520, being 20 yeres old. The first Act's of his gouernment, were to suppress by mild & quiet means the doctrine preached by Luther, which increased much in Germany. To this end, & for some other matters of importance concerning the empire, he caused the princes and estates to assemble at Worms, wheras Luther appeared hauing a passport, and was heard disputing against doctor Eschius & others, but there came no fruits of it. But in Spaine there grew great seditions and tumults, in the towns and prouinces of Castille, many townes & noblemen complaining of the breach of the lawes and priuiledges of the realme, and of the bad gouernment of the Flemish lords, who by their great couetousnes, had drawne vnto them great sums of money, vnder the kings authority, vsurped the estates, offices & benefices of the realme, & caused a profanation in a manner of all things, as if they had bin in a country of conquest: so as the people being moued vpon so apparent occasions, the excesse and troubles which ciuile dissensions are accustomed to produce, followed soone after.

Coronation of King Charles the first of that name.

Conference of deputies touching the realme of Nauarre.

13 Charles chosen emperor of Germany.

Departure of the emperor Charles out of Castille forced.

14 Ciuile warre in Castille.

Cardinal

A Cardinal Adrian & the constable thinking to suppress this mischiefe in the breeding, made the fire greater, for hauing sent against the of Segobia, Ronquillo Alcaide or prouost of the court, a man of a fower disposition, rigorous in his executions, & proud and insolēt in his threats, hauing made the summations & solemnities required in Iustice, he began to burne, wine, cut & pul vp, take & kil al that he found about Segobia: wherewith the inhabitants of Toledo being incensed, they took armes and went to field chasing away this prouost. They being once armed in one place, the sedition grew generall: Burgos, Vailladolid, Salamāca, Auija, Zamora, Leon, Toro, and other chiefe places rebelled openly, & had many noblemen & knights of their faction, yet they were more led by their owne priuate interests then the publike good. The deputies of all these cities thus mutined came to Auija, where they made a league with the noblemen, the principall whereof were D. Iohn de Padilla of Toledo, D. Anthony & Acugna bishop of Zamora, D. Pedro Giron, of whom mention hath bin often made. Cardinal Adrian had bin already forced to flee from Vailladolid, by the help of a priest, who conueied him away by night, breaking a piece of the towne wall, notwithstanding that D. Pedro Giron & D. Iohn de Padilla had assured him that there was nothing intended against him, & that his innocencie was well knowne. The president and counsellors of the Audiance and Chancery were in like maner fled, of the which doctor Vargas escaped by a funke. The people being masters in all the towns made choice of captains of their owne sort, smiths, belfounders, skimmers, tailors and such like, who forgat nothing to make them detestable, in all couetousnesse, cruelty, and other wicked actions.

B Auija, where they made a league with the noblemen, the principall whereof were D. Iohn de Padilla of Toledo, D. Anthony & Acugna bishop of Zamora, D. Pedro Giron, of whom mention hath bin often made. Cardinal Adrian had bin already forced to flee from Vailladolid, by the help of a priest, who conueied him away by night, breaking a piece of the towne wall, notwithstanding that D. Pedro Giron & D. Iohn de Padilla had assured him that there was nothing intended against him, & that his innocencie was well knowne. The president and counsellors of the Audiance and Chancery were in like maner fled, of the which doctor Vargas escaped by a funke. The people being masters in all the towns made choice of captains of their owne sort, smiths, belfounders, skimmers, tailors and such like, who forgat nothing to make them detestable, in all couetousnesse, cruelty, and other wicked actions.

C At Segobia they did hang the rector betwixt 2 sergeants, thinking to aduise them something for the good of the publike peace: they of Auija did rase the house of Pedro Ponce, for that he would not signe the league with the rest. The constable was chased from Burgos, who with the earle of Alua de Lista and others were pursued by the conspirators with publike Edicts, who had summoned with solemnities and order of iustice, all the princes and great noblemen of the realme to ioine with them, for the defence, said they, of the lawes & liberties of Spaine: in default wherof to proceed against them as traitors to their country. The gouernors seeing this great reuolt, furnished themselves with armes & all other means to defend themselves & to suppress the rebels. Anthony Fonseca being sent Medina del Campo, with a good number of horse, to bring the artillery which was kept in the storehouse of that town, he found such resistance, as he was forced, partly through choler, & partly by a stratagem of war, to set fire in diuers parts of the town, to the end he might draw the people (who were earnest to defend the artillery) to go & saue their houses which were on fire: but their obstinacie was such as they had rather suffer their goods to be burnt, then abandon the artillery to Fonseca, who was forced to returne without it: so vpon this occasion they of Medina ioyned with the league: In which towne there was great store of merchadise of all sorts, mouables & other riches of inestimable value burnt.

The conspirators hauing put their army to field seised vpon Tordesillas, where Q. Isabe (being distracted) kept, her they saluted for their Q. & gaue her a gard of 300 priests, leuied by the Bish. of Zamora in his dioces, whom he commanded to sweare and renounce God, & to looke like fouldiers: and if hee did see any one that did handle his portaise, hee would beate him with a cudgell. The emperor being aduertised of all these miseries, hee wrote vnto the Admirall D. Frederic Henriques, which was then in Cartelogne, to take the charge of gouernor with the rest, & to seek by all means to pacifie those troubles. D. Frederic ioyned with the gouernors with equall authority & did what he could to pacifie al, notwithstanding that the Confederats had taken and spoiled Vniegna, Tordelumes, and Villabassica, lands belonging vnto him, & had sackt his brothers palace, & committed other indignities in contempt of him, and to his preiudice: yet notwithstanding hee went and sent diuers times to the rebels: but the disease required a sharper remedy: for

F In truth there was no more any question to reforme abuses, and correct the faults of the common weale: all were now grown into a furie to ouerthrow the estate. As for the noblemen and knights their owne greedy desires had thrust them into armes. D. Pedro Giron would be duke of Medina Sidonia, and win his cause by the sword, D. Iohn de Padilla promised to himselfe the mastership of S. Jaques, others hauing priuat quarrelles, would breuenged and spoyle their enemies: and as for the Townes, if their first motion had Excesse of Ronquillo prouost of the Court.

Townes conspired.

Insolencie against the Cardinals and the Kings officers.

Tordesillas taken by the conspirators.

Xxxx iij

some

1520

Tordeſillas recovered.Battel of Villa Lara, and defeat of the re-bells.Puniſhment of rebells.

Nauarre.

Pampelone abandoned by the Caſtilians.Beginning of the Ieſuits.Inigo of Loyola and his familie.

some lawfull cauſe, their manner of proceeding, and their forme of demanding, had ſpoyled all, and made them and their cauſe odious: wherefore the war beganne to grow hote: John de Padilla, and John Brano being come to Villapanda, with part of the forces of the League, it ſeemed to the emperours capitaines that an opportunitie was offered, to recover Tordeſillas, and to deliuer Queene Ioane, who was held as a priſoner by the rebels: the which ſucceeded well without anie great loſſe or difficultie, for the place was not ſtrong: There were many of the ſeditious taken there: Tordeſillas was ſackt, yea the Queene and her ſeruants lodgings, yet all was reſtored vnto them againe. It is written, that when they battred the towne, a priſt of the biſhop of Zamoras being behind a loop hole ſlew 11 men with his peece; and to diſcharge himſelfe ſomewhat of this guilt, or to giue ſome eaſe to his ſoule at whom he aimed, at euery ſhot he made a croſſe with his harquebuze: In the end this priſt was ſlaine with an arrow. After this prize the Conſtable and the Admirall who were commaunders for the emperour, marched againſt the enemies, who went towards Toro, with an intent to ioine with their other confederats, who had gathered together a rable of 8000 rascalls out of the townes and diocesse of Zamora, but they were ouertaken neere vnto Villa Lara, and fought with: where notwithstanding that they had great numbers of men, and that Padilla and Brano performed the parts of valiant and hardy capitaines, yet they were defeated and taken. This defeat pacified all tumults, and made them all more quiet. The confederate cities laboured euery one apart to returne into fauour, and did eaſily obtrayne pardon, yea the city of Burgos before this rout had left the ſocietie of the reſt. The biſhop of Zamora hearing of the defeat of his companions, thought to eſcape, but he was ſtaied in Nauarre, and afterwards ſtrangled. D. John of Padilla and John Brano were condemned to looſe their heads: D. Maria wiſe to John of Padilla, fell into the like miſerie, a woman of a great courage, but deceived by the falſe predictions of diuines and forcerers, whom the beleueed: their palace at Toledo, by the ſame ſentence was ruined, and the ſoyl ſowen with ſalt, and therein a pillar erected, for a perpetuall memorie of their rebellion: D. Pedro Giron who had left the other confpirators, by the perſuaſion of his friends and kinſmen (whereof the Conſtable was the chiefe) was confined to Oran, with many other knights. Many men of leſſe note felt the rigor of Iuſtice; and many alſo were pardoned. Thus ended the ciuile warre and ſedition in Spaine, which grew by reaſon of the exceſſe and violent gouernement of the Flemings, who ſuffered the Spaniards to end it, whileſt that they were Iudges of their puniſhments and rewardes, for that the emperour was gouerned by their counsell.

15 Whenas this rebellion in Caſtille happened, the gouernours finding themſelues weak and ill provided of many things, they were forced to vſe the ſouldiers which were in the gariſons of Nauarre, and to draw many peeces of ordonance, out of Pampelone, and places of that realme, which gaue occaſion to ſome well affected to the houſe of Albret and Foix, and to Henry of Albret the true heire of that realme, to haue ſecret intelligences, in Bearn and in Fraunce, in whoſe fauour king Francis ſent Andrew of Foix, Lord of Aſperaut, or Eſparre younger brother to Odet of Foix Lord of Lautrech, who being receiued by them of the faction of Gramont tooke the caſtle of Saint John de Pied de Port: wherefore D. Anthonie Manrique Duke of Nagera finding himſelfe ſurprized, the city of Pampelone beginning alſo to mutine, he left it, and returned into Caſtille, abandoning his houſe to the ſacke of the people.

16 At that time there was in Nauarre following armes, Inigo of Loyola, the firſt author of the Ieſuits, an obſtinate enemy to the houſe of Albret, who whenas the viceroy Manrique diſlodged, remained in the caſtle of Pampelone in gariſon, with the other ſouldiers of the emperour. It hapned that this caſtle being aſſailed by the people, there was a canon ſhot made by them of the towne, at a certaine place, where as this man had both his feet ſo bruised with ſtones which the bullet had ſcattered, as hee fell from the top of the caſtle to the bottome, but being ordained for an inſtrument to this new kinde of plant in the church, he was taken vp, and his life preferred. He was ſonne to Bertrand of Loyola and Ognez in the prouince of Guipuscoa, in the iuriſdiction of Aſpeytia, which in old time was called Miranda of Yraugui. After this miſchance he was carried to his fathers

1521

Studies of Inigo of Loyola.

Firſt Ieſuite.

Self of Ieſuits confirmed at Rome.Cardinall Guidicion firſt patron to the Ieſuits.

Athershouſe at Loyola, which is in the middeſt of the prouince of Guipuscoa, where ſeeing himſelfe maimed and vnable euer after to beare armes, he changed his mind and profeſſion, and quitting the world, he gaue himſelfe to ſpirituall things, following the direction which he had, according to the religion which was then eſteemed amongst men: His firſt religious exploit was to goe and viſit the place of Monſerrat, where hee ſpent nine days; then he gaue all his goods vnto the poore, and retired himſelfe into the mountaines of Manreſa, where hee began to lead a ſolitarie life, for the ſpace of ſeuē months. Afterwards he went to Barcelona, from whence he paſt by ſea to Venice, and finding the pilgrims ſhip ready to depart, he put himſelfe into it, & went to Paleſtina to ſeeke the places of that land whereof mention is made in the holy Scripture: but the father gardian of the Franciscans of mount Sion forced him to returne: and for that hee was but ignorant, he began to ſtudy his Grammar at Barcelona, after which he frequented the vniuerſitie of Alcala of Henares, going alway bare footed, although hee was lame, which maner of liuing many did interpret to be very ſuperſtition: wherefore hee was apprehended, and let goe againe by the iudgement of doctour John of Figueroa, with charge that he ſhould goe no more bare footed: this made him leaue Alcala and goe to Salamanca, where hee was more derided: wherefore ſeeing himſelfe croſt in his ſtudies by theſe perſecutions, he left Spaine and came to Paris, where he heard maſter Peter Faber, and there he remained not long, being vext by ſome and ſupported by others, in the end allowed by maſter Ori, they held an opinion that hee was a holy man, and of a ſcholer he became a maſter, hauing for his followers his maſter Peter Faber, Diego Laynes, John Coduri, Claude Gay, Paſqual Bronet, Francis Xauierre, Alphonſo Sameron, Simon Rodrigues, and Nicholas of Bouadilla, ſtudents in diuinitie, all which ſubmitted themſelues to an Order ſet downe by Inigo, and did vow perpetuall pouertie & chaſtitie. Hauing wrought this in France, he returned into Spaine, honored with the degree of Maſter in the vniuerſitie of Paris, and retired himſelfe to the place of his birth, not to his fathers houſe of Loyola, but to the hoſpitall of Aſpeytia, and would not be knowne: there he began to preach, as well in the church of Saint Sebastian of Soreſu, as in other places of that countrey, with ſo great a concurſe and reputation, as it was (ſaid they) wonderfull, ſo as in the end being diſcouered by a clerke of Nauarre, who had ſtudied at Paris, hee was made knowne vnto his parents, who ſought by all means poſſible to retire him from that begging kind of life, but in vaine. Hee had concluded with his companions abouenamed, to make a voyage with them to the holie Land, wherefore he went to meet them at Venice where the Rendez-vous was: from whence they went to Rome, and ſtayed there all Lent in the yeare 1537, and obtained leaue of pope Paul the third to performe their pilgrimage: whereupon they returned to Venice, but finding that the paſſage was ſtopt by reaſon of the warre betwixt that commonweale and the Turke, they were forced to ſtay there, and by that means the Ieſuits were firſt knowne in Italie, not without great croſſes, from the which they were delineed by the iudgement of Gaſpar of Ottis, who diſputed in their cauſe. Deſirous to be of greater fame, they got leaue to heare in Confession, and ſome of them receiued Orders to ſay maſſe; then they diſperſed themſelues in the Venetians territorie, preaching and doing other workes of their profeſſion, purchaſing great fame, eſpecially with the ignorant, ſo as in the yeare 1538 they came all to Rome, whereto they obtrayned from pope Paul confirmation & approbation of their maner of liuing, and of the ſtatutes and orders of their ſect, by the aid and fauor of cardinall Contareno, and they were receiued vnder the protection of the ſea of Rome, but only vnder voice or acule, referring them for the petition of the perpetuation of their ſect, to cardinall Guidicion of Luca, the which was effected with the more eaſe, for as much as there were at that time in Rome, doctour John of Figueroa, maſter Ori, and Gaſpar of Ottis, who gaue ample information of the life, maners and intention of Inigo of Loyola, whom they had knowne at Alcala, Paris and Venice. Cardinall Guidicion, notwithstanding that hee had a little before ſer forth a booke De non multiplicandis religionibus; not only embraced and allowed them, but became their ſolicitor: wherefore they were confirmed and allowed by letters and bullies, the firſt of October 1540, giuen at Tiuoli, vnder the name and title of the company of Ieſus, with liberty to receiue into their company, being then but threene, the number of three ſcore, by

1521

by prouision. The eleuenth which was retayned into this Order was called Anthony of Araos, borne at Vergara in Guipuscoa. D. John the third king of Portugall, being aduertised of this new brood, by his embassador D. Pedro Mazzeueras, desired to haue some into his countrey: wherefore he caused suit to bee made vnto the Pope, to send some vnto him: For this cause there were sent into Portugall, Francis Xauierre a Nauarrois, and Simon Rodrigues a Portugall, brothers of this Company of Iesus: Simon Rodrigues remained in Portugall, Xauierre past to the East Indies to preach, and there died. In the yeare 1543 they had leaue from pope Paul to increase their number as much as they would, and to receiue all that would enter into the Order: and then in the yeare 1545 hee graunted them all the priuiledges, faculties and graces which they now enioy. Afterwards Peter Fabri and Anthony of Araos came into Castille, and consequently the rest, so as Spaine hath neuer wanted of this brood. After the death of Paul the third, pope Iulio de Monte his successor, did in a manner beginne the first Acts of his papacie, by a confirmation of this Order in the yeare 1550. By the conuersation of doctor Anthony of Araos, D. Francisco Borgia and of Arragon, Duke of Gandie and Marquesse of Lombay, conceived a great loue to this sect, in the which he was the more confirmed by the persuation of his wife D. Leonora de Castro, a Portugall, much deuoted to the Iesuits: so as D. Francisco went out of Spaine with this doctor, who was the first Prouinciall of Castille, towards Rome, where he resolyed to make himselfe a Iesuite, and to leaue his temporall estates, whereunto he was admitted by father Inigo of Loyola, author of that Order. The duke and doctor Anthony being returned into Spaine, the duke made renunciation of the duchie of Gandie, and of his other lands, vnto his sonne D. Charles Borgia and of Arragon, in the Iesuits Colledge of Ognate, where he tooke the habite, and receiued all the Orders: and soone after he would that his second sonne D. John Borgia and of Arragon, should marry D. Laurence of Loyola and Ognez, daughter to D. Bertrand of Loyola nephew to father Inigo, who with the aid and fauour of cardinall John Mouron, did build the Germane colledge at Rome, to instruct the youth of that nation against Luthers doctrine: Before his death he saw sixteene Prouincialls of his Institution and Order, and about a hundred and seuentie colledges, the which since haue multiplied strangely. He died at Rome in the yeare 1556 being threescore and one yeeres old, hee was buried in the chiefe house, and head of that Order, called Sancta Maria de la Strada. We haue seen the abouenamed D. Francisco Borgia a Castilian generall of this Order in our time. There are three sorts of religious in it, one of protest who can hold no goods, the other probationers, and the third collegialls, and it is lawfull for these two to possesse what they will. The Iesuits are not Theatins: for they whom they called Theatins, had an other beginning, and another kind of life; they were certaine gentlemen and others moued with deuotion, who gaue themselves to prayers, singing, and other such works, and were first called of the company of the loue of God, to whom there being ioyned John Peter Carrafa, Neapolitane, bishop of Chieri, and being reputed as a worthy man, the head of those religious, they began to call them Chierins, and then corrupting the word Theatins, these Chierins were in credit in the time of pope Clement the seuenth, who by reason of the sacke of Rome, being retired to Ostia, and there finding certaine Venetian galleys, they past to Venice, and there made their abode eleuen yeares, before that Inigo of Loyola and his companions came there. The Iesuits comming afterwards from Venice to Rome, for that they could not performe their voyage to the holy Land, the people thought that they were the Chierins or Theatins which were returned, and confounded these two Orders through ignorance, whereof there is great difference. This John Peter Carrafa came afterwards to be pope, and was called Paul the fourth. Of the Theatins there are not many other colledges or houses to be found, but at Venice, Rome, Naples, and Paulia. The Iesuits are also called in Arragon Iniguists, of the name of their author, and in Portugall Apostles, but in all other places Iesuits, according to the Popes Bulles and Briefes. This we find in the Spanish Histories of the Institution of the Iesuits, inserted here of purpose, at the time of the rout of Pampelone, in the yeare 1521 where Inigo of Loyola their first Institutor was. There was at that time an ample subject prepared for these Iesuits to practise their charities, and, withall, a fit and pleasing abode for them,

Duke of Gandie becomes a Iesuite.

17
Sect of Theatins differs from the Iesuits.

1521

A them, and other religious Spaniards, at the west Indies by Eernand Cortes, who hauing runne along the coasts of the firme land at this new world, going vp Northward, and there by sundry conquests hauing drawne vnto him many of those Indian people he entered into the country and assailed the city of Mexico, took it, and conquered that realme with an incredible facilitie. It is at this present called Noua Hispania. This great citie which was one of the wonders of the world, by reason of the situation was taken in August this yeare 1521, where the king Moteczuma was slaine, and about a hundred thousand of his subjects.

Mexico at the Indies taken by the Christian.

Returning now to the historie of Nauarre, we say, that as soone as the duke of Nagera was retired, they of Pampelone did choose the signior of Osioien for their captaine, who had serued the catholike king, Monsieur Asperaut pursuing his conquests was met in the Pyrene mountains by some deputies of the valley of Roncal, who yeelded him obedience, and gaue him aduertisement of the estate of the countrie, with whom hee past to Pampelone, and made himselfe master thereof in the name of king Henrie. D. Lewis of Beaumont earle of Lerin desired to come to him, but they refused him a safeconduct for his returne. The lord of Asperaut finding no resistance in the whole realme, he reduced it in few days vnder the obedience of its naturall king, and making vse of the ciuile wars of Castille, hauing good intelligence with the communitie, he past the riuier of Ebro, and laid siege to Logrogne, through a rash and ill digested counsell. D. Pedro Velaz of Guenahad put himselfe into the place, with some souldiers, who resisted the French armie virtuously, they being much fauored by the victorie of Villa Laria, which the viceroyes of Castille had woon against the commons: by reason whereof the Victors aduanced with the Duke of Nagera, who had leuied men from Burgos vnto the sea, making his sonne D. John Manrique de Lara colonell of the Guipuscoans, a yong Lord but fiftene yeeres old: and of the Biscains Gomes Gonsales de Butron, Lord of Muxica and of Butron: which forces being great, forced the French to raise their siege, and repassing the riuier, to returne into Nauarre, the Castilian army following them so neere, as whereas the French sup, the Castilians dined the next day. The armies beeing come neere vnto Pampelone, the Lord of Asperaut being accompanied by many Nauarrois, was of opinion to turne D head, and to hazard a battell, but very inconsideratly: for at that time he was not strong enough to incounter the power which came against him; neyther had he the patience to attend some of his forces which were at Tafalla, with the signior of Ollaogui, and at Pampelone, and a new leuie of sixe thousand Nauarrois, which might haue ioyned with him the next day, or the day after, wherefore being neere one vnto another, after that the artillery had played, when they came to ioyn, the French horsemen behaued themselves woorthily: but the footemen, who were most part Gascois, could not endure the force of the Castilians, but were presently put to rout, which made them to giue the field, and to leaue the victory vnto the viceroyes. In this battell which was giuen neere vnto the borough of Noayn, and the port of Reniega, there died of French E and Nauarrois neere fife thousand, and amongst them D. Charles of Maulcon, and D. John of Saraza, captaine Martin, and Charles of Nauasques, or of Nouailles: the generall also of the French armie being hurt by a man at armes of the company of the Earle of Alba de Lista, yeelded to D. Francis of Beaumont: the Lord of Turnon was also taken, D. Pedro of Nauarre sonne to the Marshall D. Pedro prisoner at Simanca, saued himselfe in France, with D. Arnold of Gramont, D. Frederic of Nauarre, and others in great numbers. Through the fauour of this victorie Pampelone was recovered without any difficultie, by the Castilians: and after their example all the other places of the realme yeelded, except some strong castles in the mountaynes. The Lord of Asperaut was blamed to haue hazarded a battell, being weak and within the realme, without any constraint, but hee excused himselfe, for that hee had discouered a great disorder amongst the enemies, which promised him an assured victory, but he was deceived: it had bene more safe for him to haue stood vpon his gard, contenting himselfe with that which hee had wonne in so short a time, without striking stroke, and not to haue inuaded the lands of Castille: a while after hee was set at libertie, paying tenne thousand crownes raunsome, by D. Francis of Beaumont, against the willes of the Viceroyes of Castille, who

The lord of Asperaut makes himselfe master of Pampelone.

Logrogne besieged by the French.

French retire from Logrogne.

5521
Rout of the lord of Asperaut and the French army at Noayn.

Pampelone recovered by the Castilians.

1521

D. Francis of Eftuniga earle of Miranda viceroy of Na-
uarre.

Admirall of Barines enters Guipuscoa.

Fontarraby besieged and takē
by the French.

Demolitions in Nauarre.

Adrian chosen
Pope.

1522

Maine's impregnable fort taken by the French.

who made D. Francisco of Eftuniga and Auillaneda earle of Miranda viceroy of Nauarre, in the place of the duke of Nagera. This year the bishopricke of Pampelone was voided, by the death of Cardinall Aman of Albier, and Cardinall Alexander Cesarin Romain was aduanced to that place.

19 King Francis discontented with the bad successe of the Lord of Asperants amie, hee resolved to inuade Spaine with a greater power by Guipuscoa, whither hee sent the Lord of Boniuier, Admirall of Fraunce, who at his first entrance tooke the Castle of Beoyuia, into the which he put capayne Beaufils in garrison; then leading his army against Fontarraby, he besieged it, and planted his battery in the most conuenient places. Diego de Vera was gouernour within it, who either through negligence, or want of means, had ill furnished it with victualles, so as the third day of the siege they beganne to want, yet notwithstanding he made some resistance, and endured an assault: but seeing there was no meanes to holde it, hee yeelded the place vpon composition, the souldiers departing with their armes, and their colours flying. This yeelding fell out very happily for the French amie: for had it bene delayed but two dayes, they had bene forced to dislodge, for that there fell such aboundance of raine, as the brookes being swelled in those vallies, would haue carried away both men and baggage. The Admirall Boniuier put a garrison of three thousand Galcoines into Fontarraby, vnder the command of the Lord of Lude, hauing rampared vp the breaches, and furnished it well with victuals. There was sent out of Spaine vnto that frontire, to make head against the French D. Bertrand de la Cuenca, sonne to the duke of Albuquerque, who provided for the towne of Saint Sebastian and other forts of that countrey. About that time the emperor sent a commaundement from Brussels, to the earle of Miranda viceroy of Nauarre, to raine all the wallles and forts of Nauarre to prevent another rebellion; all which was executed, but at Pampelone, Lombier, Pont de la Roine, and at the castle of Estella. It was resolved to fortifie Pampelone, and therefore the monasteries neere adioyning were ruined, and the monks drawne into the towne.

20 Pope Leo dying this year 1521, cardinal Adrian bishop of Lortola, who was then gouernor in Spaine with the abouenamed viceroies, was chosen pope in the 62 year of his age: and retaining his name, he was called Adrian the sixth. The newes of his election was brought him to Victoria, where the viceroies were, full of care for the losse of Fontarraby: passing from thence towards Aragon & Catalogne, he embarked and left Spaine to go to Rome to receiue the pontificall crowne, the which he enjoyed but few daies.

The year following 1522 was taken the fort of Maja, not far from Baione, by the diligence of the earle of Miranda, viceroy, and D. Lewis of Beaumont, earle of Lerin, the which was defended by James Velez of Matran a Nauarrois, with others of the faction of Gramont, a place held impregnable for the situation, the which notwithstanding being extraordinarily prest, was yeelded by the said Madran, who was led with his sonne prisoner to Pampelone, where they died both within 14 dayes. By this prise king Henry was quite spoiled of all that did belong to the realme of Nauarre towards Spaine.

The garrison of Galcoines which were within Fontarraby, was held very short, by them that were at Yruin, Vranfu in the valley of Ojarum in the Renterie, and other neighbour places. There was within the towne a captain called John of Ese, who was newly fled out of Spaine vpon a quarrel which he had with Pedro of Vrdaniuia, seignior of the house of Aranzate: This captain being desirous to be reuenged of his enemy, vnderooke to surprise him in his house, which he knew verie well, being of the countrey, where hee had inioyed the seigniory of Ibarolle: wherefore going one night out of Fontarraby with about six hundred men, he marched with great silence vnto a house called Vrede, where the dogges hearing the noyse of them that past, beganne to bay, so as the master of the house who was a farmer, coming forth in his shirt to see what it was, was taken bound, and carried so farre as Ojarum, where before all things the souldiers tooke away the clappers of the belles, lest being discouered they should giue an alarme. Then going to the house of Pedro of Vrdaniuia, they did inuest it and seke to force it: but hee who was valiant and resolute, and knowing the passages to saue himselfe, escaped. Capitaine John of Ese and his souldiers seeing themselves frustrate of their pray, resolved before the alarme

1522

A larme were giuen in the Countrey, to returne as speedily as they might, and they had bene wise if they could haue effected it: but being desirous of spoyle, they lingered there about certayne packes of merchandize which were come thither from Lyon for Medina del Campo, with a passport, so as the people of those vallies being solicited by the Lord Aranzate, with cries, and other such signes and aduertisements as hee could giue them, assembled to the number of three hundred, whereof some following the French behind, and some getting before them by vnkowne wayes, and cutting off their passage, they fought with them in such sort as they put them to rout and slew about halfe of them, and tooke many prisoners, they loosing but one man, and some hurt.

B John of Ese escaped by the mountaine of Iazquiuell, with few men, and got into Fontarraby: whose goods were confiscate by the Emperour, and giuen to capayne Ambuladi. The Castle of Beoyuia, was of verie great importance for the French, that would make warre in Spaine, for it is the onely passage by the which they may bring artillerie into Guipuscoa; notwithstanding being very ill aduised, they resolved for the sparing of men and money, to ruine it, which capitaine Beaufils hauing begunne, by the commaundement of the Earle of Lude, in few dayes hee sapt and undermined the wallles at the foote, the which hee vnderpropt with piles, which were made hollow and filled with powder, with an intent to giue fire to it, and to ouerthrow all: the which hee hauing done very secretly, as he thought, it was notwithstanding discovered by one of his

C owne gunners, called great John of Liborne, who for some question hee had had with a souldier, was retired to the Spaniards, and had revealed this businesse to D. Lewis de la Cuenca, brother to the generall D. Bertrand: wherefore a great number of men of those vallies, being all souldiers, did presently assemble, and were sodainly led by the said commander against this castle, euen as the French, hauing drawne forth their Artillerie, and all that was within it, did abandon it, and hauing already kindled certayne matches to conduct the fire to the powder and pillars which supported the wallles, which the Spaniards prevented with great diligence, quenching these matches, and so preserved the Castle, whose wallles they did repaire, rampire vp, and fortifie againe, and as a matter of great moment could keepe it well. Ochus of Asia was made capayne of that Castle with an hundred souldiers. The French finding their owne error, sought afterwards to recover it, there being an enterprise made by some gentlemen of the Countrey of Labbord, amongst which were the Lords of Ortubia and Semper, who hauing leued about a thousand men of that Countrey, and ioyned vnto them a regiment of Germans old souldiers, which were in that frontire in the Kings pay, they led them to the passage of the riuer of Bidaso, which diuides Fraunce and Spaine, where they were staied by the resistance which they of the Castle made with their artillerie, and the Commons of the Countrey: whereupon seeking an other foard, and other wayes by the mountaines, thinking to surprize the garrison, they found such resistance of all the Spanish forces, which had bene drawne thither, as they were defeated, and in a manner all

D slaine. This was called the rout of Saint Martial, for that it was giuen on Saint Martialis day, the last of Iune, this year 1522. In the which the emperor Charles returned into Spaine and landed at Saint Ander the five and twentieth of Iuly, from whence hee passed to Vailledolit, where hee heard the ambassadors of many princes, and also the deputies of the realme of Valencia, who came to craue pardon, for that they had ioyned in vnion with the rebells of Spaine, and were the last which submitted, whereof they excused themselves vpon the hard vsage of their viceroy D. Iaques of Mendosa, whom hauing fauourably heard, he comprehended them in the generall pardon, which he caused to be published, himselfe being present, and sitting in his royall throne in view of all the world: hee deprived Mendosa of the gouernement of Valence, by meanes whereof all the

E strong places and castles of the realme, were yeelded vnto him: In that of Xatua there had bene till that time detained D. Ferdinand of Aragon duke of Calabria, sonne to D. Frederic the dispossessed king of Naples, who died afterwards in France: him hee deliuered, and kept him neere him, with honour and fit entertainment: commending him that hauing bin solicited by the rebells to be their head, he had refused it: and in time hee caused him to marry Queene Germaine (who had bene wife to king Ferdinand his grandfather, and

Beoyuia a castle of great importance abandoned by the French.

Rout of Saint Martial.
Returne of the emperour into Spaine.

1522

Rebellion in Majorca.

and was then married againe to the Marquesse of Brandeburgh, who died soone after) to which Queene Germaine he gaue at that time the gouernement of Valencia.

Seeing the troubles ended vpon the firm land of Spain, he had news that the city of Majorca, & the whole Iland were reuolted, at the instigation of a poore Artisan called Calon, wherupon he speedily dispatcht the viceroy with some gallies: who thinking to reclaime them by mildnes, was beaten back by them with their artillery, & forced to go out of the hauen with his gallies, being incensed the more for that he had refused to shew them the letters of pardon, which he said he brought them from the emperour, before they had laid downe armes, and deliuered him the towne. And in this fury they began to fall vpon them which aduised them to acknowledge their prince, and to yeelde vnto his mercie. The Viceroy being fortified with more shipping, went to an other part of the Iland, where hee landed his men: there many of the Ilanders came vnto him, and offered him seruice: hauing mustered his armie, he found that he had about tenne thousand fighting men, with the which seeking to inuest and besiege the citie, the rebelles sallied courageously forth, and came twice to handie strokes, and were twice repulsed within their walles, the which caused great trouble within the towne: for many fainting would haue the gates opened, and make triall of the Emperours clemencie: but the greatest and strongest part, being obstinately desperate, reiected this wholesome counsell with outrages, hanging and cruelly murdering those that were of this aduice, if they could get them, setting their heads vpon the publique places and towers of the towne, a grievous and fearefull spectacle. And then they discharged their rage vpon the wiues, children, goods and houses of them that were absent with all barbarous cruelty. Wherefore they were besieged and battered both by sea and land, so as seeing themselves forced, not able long to hold out, and without hope of any succours, or meanes to escape after that they had indured some assaults, and shewed that they had courage, they yeilded, vpon condition that the people should be pardoned, yet there were twelue reserved at the Viceroyes discretion, the which were deliuered vnto him: among them was Calon the Author of the rebellion, found in a priuie where hee was hidden, who being led so defiled to his punishment vpon an Asse, and his companions following him on foot, they were all pincht with horyrons and quartered, and their heads set vpon the towers and gates of the citie, which payed a certaine summe of money in consideration of a fine, and for the charges of the warre. These troubles being thus suppressed, the Emperour spent some dayes in sports, and would himselfe runne at the tilt, to the great contentment of the Spanish nobilitie, with whom hee got the reputation to bee a good man at armes.

Combat betwixt
two Arragonis

During the Emperours abode at Vailledolit, he granted the combat to two gentlemen of Arragon, and did see them fight with those ceremonies which were then vsed in combats, both in Spaine and elsewhere: the report whereof it may be will not be vnpleasing vnto the Reader; for that now they are left off, and they proceed after another manner.

Peter Toreilla and Ierome Anca (for so the contendants were named) both borne at Saragosse, great friends before and allied, yong and fierie, neither of them being yet fise and twenty yeares old: falling out at play, they had bene already in field, vnaccompanied with their rapiers and cloakes, where it happened that after many thrusts and blows, and neither hurt, either of them hauing very good knowledge in his weapon, Anca with an ouerthwart blow stricke his aduersaries weapon out of his hand, who seeing himselfe disarmed, confessed generously that he was vanquished. But he intreated Anca to do him this curtesie, to rest satisfied with the victorie, and not to tell any one that they had bin in field, as their quarrell was also secret, and no man had bene acquainted therewith, the which he hauing promised they embraced each other, and returned good friends to their lodgings, thinking that not any one had scene them fight. Two or three dayes after Toreilla vnderstood that all the court talked of this fact, wherewith being much grieved, hee blamed Ierome Anca, saying, that hee had sayled of his promise, and that through vanitie, and to dishonour him, he had published that which had passed betwixt them. Anca protested that hee had neuer spoken of it, but one had told him that a Curate of the next

1522

A next village, walking at the time of their fighting about a troupe of his that was feeding, had seen them fight, & had told it, for the which hee was soiry. The Curate being demanded touching this matter, answered doubtfully & seemed to speake all in fauour of Ierome Anca, which did confirme the other in his opinion, that he had broken his faith: so as hee told him resolutely, that he had done at a vnworthie of a knight of honour, and that he must do him reason by arms: who admitting no excuse, he made his petition to the emperour, that he would be pleased to graunt him the combate against his enemy, to make it knowne that hee was a traitor, disloyall and vnworthy to beare the name of a gentleman, and withall hee sent him a challenge. The emperour referred this difference to the iudgement of his Constable Dynigo Fernandes of Velasco, who did what hee could to reconcile them, but seeing there was no means, he put them into the field, with the formalities vsed in those times. In the publique place at Vailledolit there was a plot measured out, which was 50 paces long, & 36 broad, & railed round about. On either side lgg waies without the lists was a scaffold set vp, one on the one side for the emperor, & the other for the Constable, either of them being couered with rich tapestrie, & in them chaires couered with cloth of gold. At the other two ends were two other scaffolds built lower for the kinsmen and friends of the combatants, and ioyning to either of them was a pavilion in which the chapiens should take their armes: the place had bin made very euen and couered with sand, that they should not slip. About 11 of the clock the emperour came accompanied with a great nobility, the marshals of the field and his gards both of horse & foot. Being set in his seat vnder a cloth of estate, they deliuered a golden rod into his hand, the which being cast by him should part the combat. Soon after came the Constable with a graue & settled countenance, being about 60 yeeres old, hee did weare a long robe of cloth of golde, and was mounted vpon a Genet of Spaine, richly furnished, hauing alighted from his horse, hee came and past before the emperour, to whom he made a low obeysance, there marching before him forty gentlemen & a Squire carrying the royall sword (thetted as his Maiesties lieutenant, and after him another Squire carrying the Constables armes and his coat of armes. After whome came other gentlemen pages, or young Squires richly apparelled in blew satten imbrodered with gold and silver. Hauing in this poime gone about the campe and viewed it, he went vnto his seat which was right against the emperor, whose gards did presently compasse in the field without the lists. Then Toreilla the challenger presented himselfe being accompanied by his godfather, the duke of Beiar & Albuquerque, the admirall of Castille, and many other noblemen and gentlemen: hee was attyred in a short luppe of silke, imbrodered with gold, & furred with fables, before whom there was carried a battle axe and a sword, a scutcheon with his armes, & a cassacke to weare vpon his armes. Hauing presented himselfe in this manner before the emperor, hee made him a low obeysance, and hauing done the like vnto the Constable, hee went to the pavilion which was prepared for him. On the other side Ierome Anca entered the lists, accompanied after the same manner, and with the like furniture, except his luppe, which was furred with ermines; the Marquesse of Brandeburgh was his godfather, and hee was followed by the dukes of Nagera, of Alua, and of Benavent, the Marquesse of Aguilar, and of other noblemen and knights, who hauing made the like submissions to the emperor and Constable, hee went to the pavilion which was prepared for him; and the scutcheons and coats of armes of both combatants were carried and planted before the Constables scaffold. During these shewes, the ayre did echo againe with the sound of drummes and trumpets, the which being commanded to cease, the two knights were brought by their Godfathers before the Constable, where a booke of the Gospell and a Crucifix being presented vnto them, they putting their hands into a priests hands did swear that they came to this trial of armes, with an intent to defend a iust quarrell, wherein they would behaue themselves like loyall knights, without fraud, charms, or any enchanted sword, or without vsing the naturall vertue of any herbes, stones, or any other thing, protesting to imploy only the force and dexterity of body and mind, trusting only in God, S. George & the virgin Mary, and with the aduice & counsell of their godfathers, who caused a cofer to be brought before the Constable, in the which were the armes, wherewith the champions should fight, and be couered, the which were weighed ed in his presence, according to the laws & customs of combats, by the which the weight was limited to 90 pounds of the country, at the least. This done, they were chosen & carried to either Pavillion, where the champions did arm themselves in the presence of some that were appointed by the Constable, to wimes that there was no fraud; whilest they were arming, the trumpets and drums sounding againe. The constable went from his seat to dispose of that which was fit within the lists, the which he did with great grauitie & ceremonies: Then he wēt & sat him down at one of the corners of the field, accompanied with 12 knights, sending the like number to the other opposit corner, commanding them that they shold not remoue frō thence before the end of the combat. To either of the other two corners, he sent 3 noblemen of quality instructed in like maner. Then hauing commanded silence, one of the marshals of the field cried out with a loud voice in the emperours name going to euery one of the 4 corners, that it was forbidden vpon pain of death for any one to make a noise whilest the champions did fight, nor to make any signe by deed, voice or word, neither in spitting, coughing, blowing of the nose, neezing or whistling, nor by beating of hands or feet, lifting vp of the hands, nor by shaking of the head, or any motion of the bodie to giue them aduertisement, courage, feare or amazement, nor otherwise to instruct them in what they haue to do, except their godfathers in their charge & duty: And then the two knights entred the field in compleat armor, holding in their hands their batel axes, & their swords by their sides: Peter Toreilla the first, (for that he was challenger) accompanied with his godfather, presented himself before the constable, who demanded of him what he was, & for what cause he was entred so armed: hauing receiued his answer he caused him to put off his head peece to know him, & then he caused him to put it on againe, & sent him to one of the corners of the camp, where he was receiued by the three noblemen, that were plaist there. Then he past to the other corner opposit, & being ser in the midst of the 12 knights that were left there by him, he made the like demands & ceremonies to Ierom Anca, who was also presented vnto him by his godfather, & from thence sent to the other corner right against his aduersary, wher he was in like maner receiued by 3 noblemen. After al this the constable went to his first seat, & then the trūpēts did sound again, which hauing done, the knights which shold fight, & their godfathers sel vpo their knees & praied, which done, either of the godfathers hauing imbraced his chāpion, & exhorted him to fight valiantly, he bad him farewell, & then they retired into their Pavillios. After which, one cried out that they shold let the good champions go. Then they came & affronted one another courageously, fighting a long time with their batel axes, sometimes one reeling, sometimes another, vntil they had broken them in peeces. Being thus vnarmed they had no leasure to draw their swords, they were so neere one vnto another, so as they fell to handy gripes, one seeking to ouerthrow another: But the emperor who would not lose the, cast his rod, in sign that they shold part them, saying that they had done enough, and that he held them both for good knights, wherupon all they that were set at the foure corners, being 30 in al, ran, but they had great difficulty to part them, they wer so incensed one against another, crying & contending for honor and victorie, whereas either of them thought he had the aduantage. In the end the respect of the emperor made them retire, yet wold they not be friends, but threatned one another bitterly, condemning the constables persuasions, who told them that they shold rest satisfied & reuerence the emperours testimony, who had pronounced with his own mouth, that either of the had behaued him self valiantly, & had done his duty, so as their honors were vntoucht. The emperor was constrained through their obstinacy to send them both to prison, frō whence they parted not, vntil they were reconciled, at the least in shew, for they were neuer perfect friends. If of two bad things we must chuse the one, as some think it necessary, the maner of combats practised in the time of our predecessours, wold seem more tollerable then that which is vsed at this day, for in that they made a certain kind of trial of doubtful things. The princes leue, or of his lieutenants was required, who first of al took knowledge whether the cause did merit, that two men of quality and honor shold hazard their liues who might serue the publike in better affaies, or their Soueraigne, or their owne families. If after mature deliberation they held it fit to grant the combate, they came vnto it with great ceremonies, as we haue shewed, witnessing that in those times they made no little esteem of the life of men.

Yyyy

A men. They did carefully procure a certain equality, preuenting surprises, by any aduantage, in armes, strength and dexterity of horse or otherwise: They made them swear that there was no slander in them, but that they came to fight for a iust quarrel, & to defend their honors. The point wherein it did consist in those daies, was to reuerence God, their princes, & the lords of the fee, & to be loyal & true to al men, courteous, quick & modest among friends & valiant & courageous against their enemies in war. If it were known that in this point of honor, any one were falsly blamed, or wronged by deed, with aduantage of time, place, or company, with vnequall and extraordinary armes, or that hee had otherwise iust cause to complaine, they caused speedy reparation to be done of the wrong, as the cause required, either by the lawe, or militarie customes, which did neuer allow the combate when there was any other remedy. Much lesse did they suffer a gentlemā of honor to come to the vncertain trial of armes, with one that was convicted of rashnes or manifest slander. He that was vanquished in the combat was held guilty of that wherof he was accused, or a slanderer & a liar, & if he did liue he was punished ignominiously by degradation, & sometimes by death. The combat was most cōmonly continued or staied according to the pleasure of the prince, or of iudges that were appointed, who most commonly did part the champions before they came to the extremity, declaring them both vpon the place to be good & hardie knights, which did also shew a wise affection to preserve the nobility, to better vses. If any were found so froward & disobedient, as, notable to get leaue to fight in the country of their natural prince, should go vnto some other soueraigne, neere or far off, to grant them a place of combat, hauing fought, they were not to return into their country, for they were held for mutins, yea felons, & guilty of high treason, & there was great difficulty to obtain letters of abolitio for such offences. But in our daies al this is out of vse, & their proceedings in combats is very different. For if it happen that any man offend another without cause or reason, the point of honor is, that he must maintaine his deed, & not giue any excuse; nor confesse that he hath erred, for that were a signe of base cowardise: It were better (saith the point of honour) to be insolent and rash, than to subiect himselfe to that modestie which wold be taken for weaknes in a man that maketh profession of armes. Another that hath taken iest for iniury, or is offended at a free word spoken by his friend, the which in effect is not iniurious, will take it in so ill maner as he will admit of no excuse nor reparation: what must he so little esteem honor? It were better (saith the point of honor) to be quarrelous, froward & vsociable, than to vse such facilitie, & base courtesie derogating from cheualry: there is no friendship that binds, he must needs fight. If the prince or some great officer wil heare, and end their quarrell: they fear those iudgements more than lightning, they fly, they wil be followed, & they fight in corners, whether it be that they are ashamed to discouer the ground of their quarrell, which is most cōmonly so foolish & impertinent, as they would blush to speake of it; or that they are posselt with a thirstlesse desire to shed mā's blood, & with an appetite of reuenge, accompanied with pride & vanitie. It were better (saith the point of honor) to be rebellious & vnciuil, then to submit himselfe to that discipline, for they wold say it were want of courage, & that he wold fly the lists. And thereupon they conclude, according to the point of honor, that it is not in the king to rule it, according to the limitations of his justice; & that gentlemen doe not know any other justice or equity, than the custom of duels receiued among gentlemen, which giues this prerogatiue, priuiledge & authority, to do all, & not to suffer any thing, & to maintain themselves by the sword in this possession, although it be vniust, & vsurped but of late. Thus they are easily drawn to the combat at this day, and they must not seeme to drawe backe vpon any pretext whatsoever, neither of God, the king, nor his edicts: he must goe being called, else he shal be held base & ignoble, & thenceforth shal be exposed to the outrages of him that did challenge him with such aduantage as he shal please: for it were better (saith the point of honor) to be a murderer, than to go to field with one that had refused a challenge. Be they ready to fight, either will make prouision of a long rapier, of an excellent horse, with other such helps which shal be neither visited nor measured: for there are neither godfathers nor witnesses in their combats. Euery one must looke to himselfe (saith the point of honor) & it were better to exceed something in that respect, than to be short; although we may iustly say afterwards, that the honor of the victory belōgs rather to the armes & horse than to the knight. Yet they goe in their shirts, & the point of honor well of the ancients.

Point of honour

Moderne combats and the Maximes of the point of honour
at this day.

1522

wel obserued require, that they run one another through like boars, rather than to slip a side, when the thrust comes, or to seek to auoid it by sensing, & it were better to die (saith the point of honor) then to seem by any gesture or countenance to fear death. It is then a wonder that these men ordained for murther & slaughter, who thinke they are not come into the world but to kill or be killed, should vouchsafe to arm themselves, when they go to the war, & they shold not impute it to want of courage to couer themselves with harnesse, like vnto the Cimbrians and ancient gaules, for there is in a manner the like reason. But behold the most subtil and very quintessence of the point of honour: It is lawful for them that go to fight in duel, to issue a second & a third if they wil, the which shalbe bound to fight against the like number chosen by the other part, & kill them with whom they neuer had any quarrel, yea, their deare friends, at it often happens: It is the law of duels; it were better (saith the point of honor) to be a murtherer of his own soul, than to refuse a knight which doth him the honor to intreat him to second him in his quarrel, bee it iust or vniust. If it happen that the second kills him against whom he fights, he must come & succor his partner, and help him to kill his enemy, although it seeme outrageous to fall two vpon one, who it may be is also sore wounded. These are tollerated murtherers; and it were better (saith the point of honor) so to kill him who thou thinkest hath wronged thee, than to leaue him his life, vnlesse he demand it of thee: For it is the fruit of duels, either to kill his aduersarie, or to brag that he hath giuen him his life. Being returned from fighting, much contented when they haue vanquished, they wil tel wonders of courtesies, done vnto him whom they haue thus slaine: He is dead (wil they say) through his own folly, by his overweening, by his ostinacie, wherein they cannot be gainsaied, for that they see all witnesses and ludges.

If he that suruiues be wounded and dies soone after; he comforts himself in that point of honor, that he hath done himself right by his sword, and that he hath caused his aduersarie to die first. But for the health of their soules, they thinke they haue prouided sufficiently, if going to the combat with an heart vndered with a deadly hatred against their neighbour, posselt with a spirit of reuenge, and a vaine opinion of their excellency, dignitie, and valour, they fall vpon their knees, entring into some Church or Chappell, and pray vnto God heartily that hee will giue them the grace to kill their enemy, or to force him to acknowledge his life from them. They will confesse themselves to a priest or some religious man, they will demand absolution of the sinne which they are going to do, & will giue money to haue masses said for him or them that shall die in this fight. Yet it is the least of their cares: for if they meet with any church man that hath wit and conscience, who seeks by holy admonitions to diuert them from this bad resolution, and refuseth to absolue them, they will say that hee vnderstands not the point of honor, and will goe from him in a rage or will mocke at him. It is not from God that these duellists haue learned or will learne that which doth truly honour Nobility: But they doe rather seeke to instruct themselves in their false point of honor, by the precepts and suggestions of the enemy of mankind, who was a murtherer from the beginning, and who is alwaies delighted in murther & blood. By the instigation & conduct of this godfather, we see them go cherefully to yeeld vp their cursed soules, most of this humor liuing without god, without king, without law, without friendship, & without knowledge of ciuill vertues, hauing for their sole vertue, a violence which they call courage, the which they haue common with brute beasts. If there were euer barbarism like vnto this since the foundation of the world was laid they may iudge which be me, hauing retained some light of reason, & may conclude pertinently, that there is not any thing among human actions in this miserable age, that is more repugnât to the law of god, more absurd in nature, more preiudicial to good gouernment, more in contempt of kings & magistrats, & to conclude more offense before God & man, than these modern duels. Nor that we should allow or giue place to the ancient manner of combats, whereas there is a king, or some other soueraign power, who ought not to grânor suffer them according to the rules of justice wel administred: & without the authoritie of which soueraign power, it is not lawful for any whatsoever to draw his sword, according to the laws of Christendome. Being most certain that combats, in the best form that they were euer practised (if it be not against an enemy that prouokes in open war) are the inuentions of cruel & barbarous nations which are ignorant of piety, justice, and gouernment.

Returning

1522

A Returning to our Historie, wee find this yere 1522, James of Aillon, earle of Lude, gouernor of Fontarraby, being so long disquieted by the enemy, & wanting things necessary for the defence of a town of war, which attended a siege hourly, he aduertised the French king his master of his estate, intreating him to releue him, & to send another gouernor: the which the king performed as wel as he could, for he was otherwise busied, the war being hot both in Italy, & Picardy, betwixt him & the emperor: The marshall of Chastillon was sent thither, who dying at Dax, his charge was giue to the marshall Chabanes, who victualled Fontarraby, in view of the enemy, & changed the garrison, drawing forth the earle of Lude, and making captain Frauget gouernor in his place, who had alwaies had the reputation of a good soldier, but he lost it in this charge. They of Fontarraby hauing a little before made a fallie vpō the enemy which lay at Yrun, it had succeeded ill, in the which they had lost the signior of Chanfarron, & many good soldiers; and after the comming of captain Frauget, they made many skirmishes, most of them preiudiciall to the French.

In the yere 1523, the marshall D. Pedro of Nauarre a prisoner in the fort of Symanca died, whose death was diuersly published: it is most certain that it was violently, & by the sword; the Spaniards impute the fault to himself, saying, that being too much affected to K. Henry of Albrete his naturall Prince, & seeing himself so long detained in prison, for that he would not swear to another, he fell into such despaire, as hee slue himself: hee left one son of the same name, who did then serue the French king in Fontarraby. At Rome Pope Adrian also dyed, the 20 month of his raigne, in whose place Iulio de Medicis was chosen, & was named Clement 7. The same yere the emperor entred into Pampelone, where providing for the defence of his countie of Guipuscoa, he sent the constable D. Inigo Fernâdes de Velasco, with the prince of Oran, who led an army of about 24000 me, by the pace of Beoyua into Bearn, & camped before Saluaterre, the which yeilded, where staying, they made shew that they would conquer the country of Bearn, or attempt Bayone, and so they held the minds of men in suspence. The lord of Lautrec, gouernor of Guienne, gaue good order both for Bayone & Fontarraby, being doubtful what designe the enemy had, who hauing remained 4 daies at Saluaterre, returned into Guipuscoa, hauing done nothing memorable in that voyage, but taken the Castle of Vidaxone, belonging to the lord of Gramont:

D a great part of this army died of cold and want in this voyage. In the beginning of the yere 1524, the emperor leauing Nauarre; retired to Victoria, where he resolved of the siege of Fontarraby, which was begun in the beginning of February, the Constable of Castille being generall of the army, assisted by the prince of Orange, and many other noblemen and knights of name, among which was William of Roccandolphe Colonel of 3000 Germans: the batterie was planted towards Miranda, against the queens bastion, & it was furious & continuall, yet they gaue not any assault, for the Spaniards desired to take it by famine & without the losse of their men: the place was reasonably wel furnished to endure a long siege, yet captain Frauget yeilded it vpon composition, to depart with their armes & baggage saued, & their colours flying, as the Spaniards had done, Frauget excused himselfe, vpon the intelligences which D. Pedro of Nauarre had with the enemies: notwithstanding he was degraded of his nobilitie, vpon a scaffold in the citie of Lion. D. Pedro of Nauarre was sonne to the Marshall D. Pedro, who died a prisoner in the Castle of Symanca, and was nephew to the Constable of Castille, by whome being solicited, he went to emperors seruice. The place was found well furnished of all things, whereunto hauing added other prouisions, the gard and defence thereof was giuen to Sancho Martines de Leyua, brother to Anthony de Leyua, who was then reputed a wise and discreet Captaine in the warres of Italie. Besides the gouernment of that towne, Sancho Martines was corrector of the Prouince of Guipuscoa, the which hath not happned to any one, to haue had the charge of waire and of iustice. Those which haue gouerned in Fontarraby, successively vnto our time, after Sancho Martines, were D. Sancho de Leyua his son; then D. Diego of Caruajal lord of Xodar, & in our time D. John d'Acugna.

In Nauarre the king appointed D. Diego of Auellaneda, bishop of Tuy, to bee Viceroy, gouernor & reformer of the iustice. And then the knights of the faction of Gramont, which had followed the kings of the house of Albrete, returned into their country, & to the emperors seruice, to whom they did swear, as to their king, namely D. Pedro of Nauarre,

Y y y iij

uarre,

Frauget gouernor of Fontarraby.

1523
Death of the Marshall D. Pedro de Aillon.

Emperors entred into Pampelone.

Exploits of the Spanishe army in Bearn.

1524
Siege laid by the Spaniards to Fontarraby.

Fontarraby yeilded to the emperor.

Punishment of Captaine Frauget for the yeilding of Fontarraby.

Diego d'Avellaneda viceroy of Nauarre.

1524.
Grammontes
returne into Nauarre to the emperours seruice.

Francis the French king taken at Pavia.

Worthy Council of the bishop of Osma.

1525

Passage of king Francis being prisoner into
Spaine.

uare, who obtained the dignity of Marshall, which his father had held, and the Marquisate of Cortes, hee was descended from D. Lionell, sonne to king Charles, the second of that name. As for the earle of Saint Stephens, when as he came to the emperours seruice he had the title of Marquesse of Falses giuen him, and the office of high chamberlaine of Nauarre, with other fauors; since which time that realme hath bene held by the house of Castille, in peace, and without troubles.

22 On Saint Mathias day, being the 24 day of Februarie that yeare 1524, the computation of the yeare beginning at our Lady day, was that memorable battaile of Pavia, where the French were defeated, and king Francis taken prisoner by the imperials, whereof the chiefe were Cont Charles of Launoy, viceroy of Naples. Ferdinand d' Aullos Marquesse of Pescara, and Charles duke of Bourbon, who for some discontentment had left France, and followed the emperours party. What were the causes of this great overthrow, and what succeeded after, ye may read at large in the History of France, whereunto I referre the Reader, to auoid needlesse repetitions. The emperor was aduertised of this defeat and prison the tenth of March; the news were pleasing vnto him, as we may coniecture, yet he shewed himself verie modest, shewing no tokens of pride for this great successe. There were two opinions debated in his council, the bishop of Osma was author of the one, to suffer this great prisoner to depart freely, & to bind him vnto him by a frank and brotherly deliuerance; the other was to keep him still, and to draw from him all the profit and aduantages that might be. This last aduice proceeded from D. Frederic of Toledo duke of Alua, & was followed by the emperor, wherefore there were certaine articles drawn and sent with all speed vnto the king, by the lord of Reux, who reiected them, as unreasonable.

Hereupon the Viceroy of Naples perswaded the king not to take it in ill part; if he were led into Spain, to treat himself with the emperor touching his libertie, assuring him that he desired it, shewing him letters from his friends in court. But his intention was in the meane time to lead him to the castle of Naples, and there to attend the opportunitie of a passage, for they were not strong enough at sea for the French, who had Andrew Dorias Gallies at their deuotion; Neither did hee much trust his armie at land, which wanting pay, hee feared would mutine; Besides, he was iealous of the Pope, Venetians and other Potentates of Italie, who were discontented at the prosperitie of the emperor his master, wherefore being thus resolu'd, he conducted the king to Genoa, and from thence to Porto Fino: whereas the marshall of Montmorency comming vnto him with fixe French gallies, without any souldiers, by the commandement of the Queene Regent, the kings mother, he changed his aduice, & hauing furnished those gallies with Spanish souldiers, and ioyning them to those which he had, thinking that he might easily passe, whilst that the French expected his going to Naples, he suddenly bent his course for Spain; & laded the prisoner at Barcelona, before that it was known, or that he had aduertised the emperor and from thence hee conducted him to Valencia: But passing by Tortosa, the king was in great danger among the mutyned Spaniards, who pursued the Viceroy tumultuously for their pay, forcing him with their shot to escape ouer the top of his lodging, the bullets flying nere vnto the kings person. The emperor hearing of his arriuall, comanded he should be put into the castle of Xatrua, a place ordained in old time to be a prison for great men: but the viceroy obtained that he might liue in certain houses of pleasure, about Valencia vntill that he had commandement to conduct him to Madrid. The emperor was resolu'd not to see him before thee had concluded for his liberty, for the treating whereof, besides the archbishop of Ambrun, who was afterwards Cardinal of Tournon, and selua the first President of Paris, he gaue a safe conduct to Marguerite of France, duchess of Alanson, who arriued at Barcelona in September, & passing from thence by Saragosse shee came to Madrid, whether she found the emperor was come to visit the king, who had bin brought almost to deaths doore with a violent feuer.

This had a shew of charity, to comfort him, giuing hope that he should be soone set at liberty, but it was rather a curiosity, that he might visibly see in what estate he was, fearing to lose the fruits of his prize if he should die. It is said, that being in consultation whether hee should see him or not, hee was dissuaded by his Chancellour, who told him, that

G

H

I

K

L

M

if

A if he saw him, and did not set him freely at libertie, the world would thinke that hee had been brought thither by couetousnesse, thrust on with a mercinarie charitie, and a seruile feare, to loose by the prisoners death the price of his ranfome: a noble aduice, and worthy to be obserued. But the duchesse of Alansons preference was the best remedie to recover the king, where she remained almost three monethes: what she effected, and vpon what tearmes the king was deliuered, you may read in its proper historie.

23 These things past in the yeare 1526, in the which the Emperour Charles married D. Isabella of Portugal, daughter to the king D. Manuel. D. Alphonso Fonseca, Archbishop of Toledo, and primate of Spaine, with D. Ferdinand of Arragon, duke of Calabria, were sent to receiue this princeesse, who conducted her with great state to Seuille, where the mariage was celebrated. Of this mariage was borne, the one and twentieth day of May, in the yeare 1527, D. Philip, who succeeded in all the realmes, lands, and seigniories of the Emperour, as well hereditarie as conquered. A memorable yeare, for that by the Emperours armie, consisting for the most part of Spaniards, whereof Charles duke of Bourbon was generall, the citie of Rome was taken and sackt, and Pope Clement, with many cardinals, ransomed, and hardly intreated; the greedie and insolent souldiers not sparing the cardinals of their owne nation, prophaning by all acts of crueltie and excesse, in their disordered appetites, the places and persons dedicated and vowed to religion, notwithstanding that the prince, for whom they made warre, heire of the realms of Spaine, carried the title of Catholike, purchased by his predecessors, for the good offices they had done to Popes and to the sea of Rome. The same yeare king Francis being returned into his realme, he caused the mariage to be accomplished betwixt D. Henrie of Albret, and Marguerite of France, widow to the duke of Alanson, father and mother to queene Ioane, heire to the realme of Nauarre.

King Francis being come from his imprisonment discontented, he entred willingly into league with the Pope, the king of England, the Venetians and Florentines, for the libertie of Italie: But when as he vnderstood the cruelties vsed by the Imperiall armie at Rome, he allied himselfe more strictly with the king of England, vnder colour to free the Pope and the territories of the Church; whereupon the lord of Lautrec was appointed to lead an armie into Italie, at their common charge.

The Emperour being aduertised, that king Francis not onely refused to performe his promise, but had also declared himselfe his enemy, he caused monsieur de Gramont, his embassadour in Spaine, to be put in gard, and the French king did the like to Nicholas Perrenot of Granuelle. These kings sent two kings at Armes into Spaine, namely, Guienne and Clarencious, to proclaime war against the Emperour, but before their arriuall the embassadors were released. They proclaiming war against the emperor, and complaining of the Popes imprisonment, receiued this answer, as some write.

That he might not proclaime warre against him, being by right his prisoner, although he were at libertie, hauing giuen his sonnes for hostages, that not obseruing his promise, which he had solemnly sworne, for that he was hindered by his subiects, he should returne againe to prison, for that he could not by the law of nations, being not yet freed from his oath, protest warre against him. But if he did repent him of this accord, he should returne into his power, and breaking the first contract, the French should recover that which they had held. That he did wonder at the complaints of those kings touching the Popes affliction, as if they were ignorant, that all had bene done without his priuie, and that he had long since giuen commandement the Pope should bee set at libertie. Du Bellai writes, That king Francis talking to Perrenot, touching the Emperours speech, answered, That he was not Charles his prisoner, neither had he euer giuen his faith, but had made a promise by force, being deprived of his libertie: but being now free in his kingdom, he did not know any man that could force him to keepe that promise, neither was he voluntarily bound to obserue that which constraint and imprisonment had made him to promise.

In Spaine the Infant D. Philip, being a yeare old, was sworne and declared Prince of the Asturias, and heire of the realmes of Castille, and the dependances, with the lands annexed, in the towne of Vailledolit: after which the Emperour Charles and D. Isabella had council.

1526

Gouernours

Mariage of the Emperour Charles

1527

24 Rome taken &
sackt.

25
Mariage of king
Henry of Albret

League against the Emperour.

Answer made by the Emperour to the French
king.

Speech of king Francis touching his promise to the Emperour.

Genealogie of Castille.

1528

Genealogie of Portugall.

Portugal.

Voyage of Ferdinand Magel-lanes.Land of Giants who have winter when we have Summer.Straits of Ma-gellan.

had another sonne named D. Ferdinand, who liued little, and two daughters, D. Maria, who was married to Maximilian of Austria, her cousin german; sonne to Ferdinand, and D. Joane, married to D. John of Portugall, grand child to the king D. Manuel: Wherefore I haue thought it fit to retorne vnto his actions, during the three yeares which hee liued after his third marriage, which was in the yeare 1518, who begat of his wife D. Leonora the Infant D. Charles, and D. Maria an after birth.

26 In the discourse of the raigne of D. Manuel, we made mention of two of his discontented subiects, D. Ferdinand of Magellanes, and Rui Fallero, who had addrest themselves vnto the Councell of the Indies in Castille; and demanded leaue and meanes to discover the rich islands of the Molucques, the which they obtained at the coming of K. H Charles, who being at Barcelona, sent them with letters & necessarie provisions, to Seuille, there to prepare themselves for so long and so important a voyage. Ferdinand Magellanes married in Seuille, with the daughter of Edward Barnosa, captaine of the arsenal of that citie; and for that Rui Fallero, his companion, fell madde, he was forced to make his preparation without him, having five ships, that is, the Victorie (the pilot whereof was John Sebastian del Cano, borne at Guetaria in Guipuscoa, he that in the same voyage went about the world) S. Anthony, S. James, the Conception, and the Trinitie, in which ships were two hundred thirtie seven men, souldiers and mariners, with the which he parted in the yeare 1519, from the port of S. Lucar, and passing by the islands of the Canaries, and Cape Verd, he sailed toward Saint Augustines cape, betwixt the South and the West, vntill that he came three and twentie degrees beyond the Equinoctiall, where he found a land whose inhabitants were wild Giants, & of so great a stature, as some were e-leuen, twelue, and thirteene spannes high: which country he called The land of Giants. He stayed in it May, Iune, Iulie, and August, which is the Winter in those quarters. The king D. Manuel was much discontented, that king Charles, his brother in law, had employed these Portugals, and attempted this voyage, to his great prejudice; yet he did comfort himselfe with a conceit, that Magellanes could not performe what he had promised. This voyage of Magellanes was verie difficult and full of lets, by reason of the discord betwixt him and his companions; so as one of his ships, called S. Anthony, returned into Spaine, leaving the rest as farre as the strait or cape, called Eleuen thousand Virgines, fiftie three degrees beyond the Equinoctiall, whereas the nights haue but six houres in the end of October. And they so called this cape, for that they toucht there on Saint Ursulaes day, which is the one and twentieth of October. The fame of the islands of the Molucques, and others which were rich in spices, was so great, and of the profit which might be made there, if they could find meanes to shorten their voyage, as not onely the Spaniards, but other nations, fought out wayes for this traffique and negotiation. Paul Centurion, a marchant of Genoua, going for this cause into Muscouie, gaue Basilus, prince of that country, to vnderstand, that there was meanes to bring the spices into his countrey, by diuers riuers which he declared vnto him; saying, That those which the Portugals brought into Europe, were for the most part corrupted and falsified. The way which he meant, was, to bring the marchandise vp the riuier of Indus, vnto Bater, from whence they must carrie them by land to the riuier of Camu, and from thence by Citraya, and the Caspian sea, to bring them into the riuers of Volga, Oeca, and Mosque. But this passage had bene with greater charge, paine, and danger, than Centurion did conceiue, yea to distribute them after they were come into Muscouie, by Liunia, Polonia, Prussia, Saxonie, and other parts of Germanie.

Ferdinand Magellanes, besides the ship which returned into Spaine, lost another in a storme: with the three others he past the strait which was called by him Magellan, the which is aboue sixscore leagues long, and scarce two leagues broad, the entrie of the which from the North to the South seas, are about two and fiftie degrees from the Equinoctiall: the waters are verie deepe, the shore full of high rockes, and barren, covered continually with snow. In this passage, & for a great space in the South seas, they thought to die of hunger: in the end they came to the island of Inuagula, repassing the line eleuen degrees, which they called Good signe, where they found wherewithall to satisfie their hunger; and from thence they came to the island of Sebut, where they past the feast of

1528

Death of Ferdinand Magellanes.Five islands of Molucques.27
Marriage betwixt the duke of Sany and
D. Beatrix of Portugall.Death of the king D. ManuelVniuersitie of Coimbra erectedColledge of 16 fuites built at Ebora.

This

A of Easter, in the yeare 1521, and perswaded the king of that countrey, called Hamabar, to become a Christian, receiuing victuals and presents from him, with information of the Molucques. In the same island there was another king, enemie to Hamabar, called Calpulapo, lord of Mautan, against whom Ferdinand Magellanes going to fight, was slaine there in battell, the 27 of Aprill 1521. John Serran, who was chiefe piloe of the armie, remaining the chiefe, was soone after taken by king Hamabar, who had been called Charles at his baptism, and put to death with seuentie other Spaniards. Wherefore the three ships parted from thence, hauing but an hundred and fiftene men remaining; and came to Cohol, where they burnt one of their ships: there they trimmed vp the two others, and then went to Bornoy, where they were courteously intreated by the king, Shripida, a great and mightie lord, who releued them with all necessaries: in which countrey they saw great riches and deuises of gold and siluer. Then passing by the island of Cinbunon, they came to the island of Tidore, which is one of the five of the Molucques, where of the other foure are, Terrenate, where, seven monethes before this arrivall, died Francis Serran, a Portugall, kinsman to Magellanes, who gaue him first knowledge of these islands; & he encouraged him to go thither, Mate, Marille, and Maehian, which lye vnder the Equinoctiall, of thera-bouts, verie small, but abounding in riches, being distant from Spaine aboue an hundred and seuentie degrees. The king of Tidore, called Amanfor, although he were a Mahometist, suffered these Spaniards to traffique freely, and was pleased with their arrivall, and C with the friendship of the king of Castille. The discourse of these islands in the time of the king D. Manuel, did cause great controuersies betwixt Castille and Portugall, the Portugals pretending that they were thereby interested; and hindered in their course assigned for their navigation: Yet the king D. Manuel moved no debate, for before that the newes of this discouerie was knowne in Spaine, he ended his dayes, towards the end whereof there happened a great plague, and famine, in Portugall: During which afflictions the marriage was concluded betwixt the Infanta D. Beatrix, second daughter to the king D. Manuel, and Charles duke of Sany, to whom she was sent this yeare 1521, with a fleet of three and twentie saile, of the which D. Martin of Castilblanc, earle of Villanoua, was generall, being accompanied by D. Martin of Acofta, bishop of Lisbon, with D other noblemen, and by D. Leonora de Sylua, and a daughter of the earle of Faro, with many waiting women. The Infanta was then sixteene yeares old and seven monethes. After the retorne of this fleet, about the end of the yeare, the king D. Manuel died, little lamented by the Clergie of his countrey, of whom he had leuied new and vnacustommed subsidies, hauing raigned six and twentie yeares and three monethes, in the three and fiftieth yeare of his age. He was buried in the monastie of Belem, which he himselfe had caused to be built.

D. Iohn, third of that name, fifteenth King of Portugall.

28 His sonne D. Iohn succeeded him, the third of that name, at the solemnitie of whose reception there were present some of the Infants his brethren, D. Iago duke of Bragance, the master of S. Iames, the earle of Tentugal, the earle of Taroca, D. Iohn de Meanes, prior of Saint Iohn, the great master, the marquisse of Toumouo, and Villa Real, with other noblemen and gentlemen of the realme, and the cardinall D. Alphonso his brother, in whose hands the oath was taken. This prince was fat and vnweldie, verie religious, and a louer of learned and valiant men. He was founder of the Vniuersitie of Coimbra, and of the royall colledge of Saint Paul, the which he endowed with great reuenues, and large stipends, for the Regents and Doctors: wherein hee was followed and assisted by the cardinall D. Henrie, his brother, who built in the citie of Ebora the colledge of Iesuites, with professors in the tongues and sciences, both sacred and prophane. The queene D. Leonora, widow to king Manuel, was in the yeare 1522, deliuered of an after birth, named D. Maria, which was not married.

1528

This new king continued the navigation begun by his predecessors with great affection, and had great contention with the Emperour Charles, in regard of the Molucques, whereas the ships of Castille had bene well entertained, as we have said, by Almanzor, king of the island of Tidore, whereas the Castillians stayed five whole monethes, and made a kind of baraine, by the which king Almanzor promised to giue so many cloues for a caine of stuff of red cloth, blew cloth, or linnen, and so proportionably of other spices. The two ships of Castille remaining of Ferdinand Magellanes armie, that is, the Victorie and the Trinitie, divided themselves and disposed of their returne, so as the Trinitie should appeare his countie to Phoama, vpon the coast of new Spaine, which they held to be but a short voyage, and John Sebastian del Cano, with the Victorie following the Portuguese voyage, should returne into Spaine, by the cap Bon Esperance. The Victorie then parting from Tidore in the month of Aprill 1525, with fortie seuen Spaniards, and thirtie caine of stuff of Tidore, they came to Zumatra, in old time called Taprobana, and there passing vnder the Equinoctiall, and the Winter Tropike, they doubled the cap of Bon Esperance, and arrived in the port of S. Lucar de Barameda, in September, having bene about three yeares in this long and dangerous voyage, in the which it is thought that this John Sebastian del Cano made about foureteen thousand leagues at sea. The other ship, called the Trinitie, commaunded by a capitaine called Spinosa, sayling towards new Spaine, was put back by contrarie winds to Tidore, whither Antonio Brito, a capite for the king D. John, was come with five ships of Portugal, by whom the Castillians were taken and spoiled, and carried being fortie eight, to Malaca; so as of five ships which parted with Fernando Magellanes, the Victorie onely returned into Spaine, besides that of S. Antonio which would not follow him.

The voyage of the East Indies hath alwayes bene more successefull for the Portugals than the Castillians; and at that time the king D. John intreated the Emperour Charles, not to suffer his subjects to goe to the Molucques, to auoid the ruine of armies, which are sent to discover those countries: wherunto he yielded (not knowing what Antonio Brito had done to the Castillians that were in the Trinitie at Tidore) vntill that expert men in the Mathematickes and Navigation had decided it. This cause was debated in the yere 1524, at Yelbes; whither came for the king of Portugal, the Licentiate Antonio of Azeuedo, Cotigno, Diego Lopes of Sequeira; Pero Alphonso of Aguaiar, Fransisco de Nelo, Simon of Tabora, and others: and at Badajos, the Licentiats, Aluaga, Barrientos, and Pedro Mamel, D. Ferdinand Columbus, son to the Admirall Christopher Columbus; John Sebastian del Cano; Pero Ruiz of Burgos, & others, for the Emperour. These deputies of either part having conferred many dayes vpon a bridge on the river of Caja, which diuides Portugal from Castille, they parted in greater disorder and confusion than before, the Castillians maintaining, That the Molucques, yea, and the islands of Zumatra and Malaca, with a good part of China, fell in their strait and Navigation, according to the line drawne by Pope Alexander the sixt; and the accord made betwixt king John the second, and king Ferdinand the fift, in the towne of Tordesillas: The Portugals affirming the contrarie, with their reasons.

In the yere 1525 died queene Leonora, widow to king John the second, who was called The mother of the poore, for her great charitie. She had the hospitall of las Caldas, and the monasterie of the mother of God, to be built. In which yere king John the third then reigning, being two and twentie yeares old, married D. Catherina, daughter to king Philip of Austria, and sister to the Emperour Charles, being then eightene yeares old: which marriage was solemnized at Ebora. Of this marriage were borne the Infants following, D. Alphonso, who liued little, D. Maria, borne at Coimbra, in the yere 1526, she was princeesse of Castille, D. Catherina, who liued but a while, nor her sister D. Beatrix, D. Manuel, who in like manner died soone, D. Philip, and D. John, who were borne at Ebora, and D. Antonio at Lisbone.

The Emperour Charles, perswaded by them that had bene at Caja, betwixt Badajos and Yelbes, rigged out seuen ships of Biscaye at the Groine, to seeke a passage to the Molucques, by the land of Bacalaps and Labrador towards the North, if they might find any meaning to make a storehouse for spices at the Groine, from whence they might be distributed.

29
Voyage of John Sebastian del
Cano.

Conference for the limits of the Navigation betwixt
Castille
and Portugal.

Marriage of D.
John king of Portugal, and the Emperours sister.

Castille.
Vntill the voyage of the Castillians to the Molucques.

1528

A distributed into Spaine, France, Flanders, Germanie, England, and other regions: from the which D. John king of Portugal sought to diuert him by intreaties and reasons, offering to pay the charges of the armie, and to giue him many other gifts, which the Emperour refused, persisting still in his resolution: Wherefore these seuen ships parted from the Groine, being commaunded by Garcie Geoffrey of Loaysa, borne at Cité Real, a knight of S. John, who had John Sebastian del Cano for his lieutenant, who were all lost, or went astray, except the Admirall, which came to Tidore, without her generall Garcie Geoffrey, who died at sea. D. Garcia Henriques of Ebora, was then generall for the king of Portugal at the Molucques. In the yere 1528 Fernando Cortez, gouernour and conqueror of new Spaine, sent from the countries conquered by him, two ships, by the kings commaundement, wherof Aluaro of Sahauedra Ceron, was capitaine, to seeke out the Molucques, but he was as vnfortunat as the rest: which made the Emperour to yeeld more easily to an agreement with king John, his brother in law, being prest by other weightie affairs, which called him into Italie, for the Crowne of the Empire, which hee should receiue from the hands of Pope Clement; for which voyage the king of Portugal lent him three hundred and fiftie thousand ducats, in consideration wherof the Emperour engaged, or suspended the controuersie for the Molucques; wherein the Licentiat, Antonio of Azeuedo, deputed by the king of Portugal, hauing negligently negotiated, and left the business almost in the same tearmes as it was at the conference of Badajos and Yelbes, was punished: wherby, in time, the quarell was reuiued betwixt the Portugals and Castillians.

In the yere 1529 Lewis of Beaumont, earle of Lerin, and constable of Nauarre, died there, whom his son succeeded in all his lands and dignities, bearing the same name. The Emperour Charles did alwayes honour him much, acknowledging him for his kinman, for that he was descended, by the mothers side, from D. John king of Nauarre and Arragon.

32 The treatie of Cambray was concluded the yere following 1530, in the which Louyse of Sauoy, mother to the French king, and Marguerite of Austria, the Emperours aunt, had long laboured to reconcile these two princes: By the which the Infants of France were deliuered, in regard of two millions and five hundred and fiftie thousand crownes, payable at severall paiments, as well readie as otherwise, in discharge of the Emperour to the king of England: and it was said, that the king should renounce the souerainie of Flanders and Arrois, and his pretensions to the duchie of Milan, and realme of Naples. That he should marie the queene D. Leonora, and if there came a sonne of this marriage, he should be duke of Bourgondie, with many other conditions, which are to be sene in the said treatie, and here omitted, for that they did not hold. The articles of this treatie being performed, as farre as might be at that time, the Emperour came to Barcelona, from whence he past to Genoua, in Andrew Dorias gallies, who hauing a little before left the French kings seruice, was come vnto the Emperours. From Genoua he went to Bolonia la Grasse, whereas Pope Clement attended him, and there he receiued the Imperiall Crownes, one of yron, which the Emperours haue bene accustomed to receiue at Milan, and one of gold, which he should take at Rome; but the Romans had not yet forgotten the sacke and spoyle which the Spaniards had made. This coronation, which was performed on Saint Matthias day, verie happily for the Emperour, had bene purchased of the Pope, with the price of the Florentines libertie, and the change of their commonweale into a principallie. After this solemnitie the Emperour hauing heard certaine princes, and the embassadours of many Estates in Italie, he tooke his way to Trient, and past into Germanie. Whilst that they were making preparation for the Emperours coronation in Bolonia, he receiued aduertisement, That D. Isabella, his wife, was deliuered of another sonne, whom he would haue called Ferdinand, by his grandfathers name. There was great joy and triumph for this birth both in Spaine and Italie, and especially in Bolonia; but this joy was of small continuance, for he died within few monethes after his birth.

At the Emperours passage into Italie, to his coronation, hee had bene attended on by the gallies of Spaine, of the which Roderigo Portundo was generall, who in his returne backe,

1530
Treatie of Cambray.

33 Coronation of the Emperour
at Bolonia.

Ferdinand Infant of Spaine borne.

Roderigo Portundo defeated and slaine by pirates.

1530

backe, hearing that there were certain pyrats of Barbarie in those seas, the chiefe of which was Haydin Rays of Smima, called Chafe-diuell, which spoyled all men, he resolved to defeat them: wherefore having well furnished eight of his gallies, both with souldiers and slaues, and leauing the other seuen in the island of Yuisa, he directed his course towards Formentana, where he vnderstood the pyrats lay with certaine galliots and foists, but he knew not their number. But as he was of an vndaunted courage, and discoursed with reason, that those small barks of the Barbarians, commaunded by diuers men, and for their owne priuat interests, would rather flie than fight, he did not respect the number of his enemies, but, after the Spartane maner, sought where they were. All which, it may be, had succeeded happily, if he had not aduanced too hastily with his Admirall, the which was boarded, and he slaine by the pirats, before the other gallies could succour him, the which, as they aduanced one after another without any order, they were enuiroed, and fought withall by the enemies: so as of the eight gallies onely one escaped by flight, the rest were taken, and all the Christians slaine, or made slaues. Iohn the sonne of the generall Portundo, was taken prisoner. With this noble spoyle Haydin Rays presented himselfe to Haradin Barberousse, who by the death of Horusco his brother, remained king of Alger, and head of all the pyrats of Barbarie: so as growne confident (being so fortified with gallies and slaues) to be able to attempt some matter of importance; whereon whilest he did meditate, he drew into his companie Siman Cefut of Smima, who was called the Jew, a famous pyrat, who retired with his vessels to Gerbe. He called also another desperat pyrat, called Alicotto of Caramania, who scoured the seas with foure foists, and two gallies, the which he had taken when Florence was besieged, at Montargentaro, where they had laden certaine munition, conducted from Naples, for that enterprise. Barberousse hauing at the least 60 vessels of warre, great and small, had resolved to surpris Cales in Spaine, and to get a rich bootie, by reason of a Haix that was kept there. Whilest that he prepared all things which he held necessarie, to the armie lying at Alger. During this preparation in Africke, Andrew Doria went to sea with a great armie, desirous to purge that sea of pyrats, and to reuenge the wrong and great losse which the Emperour had sustained by the rathnesse of Portundo. Being therefore aduertised, that the Barbarians armie was diuided, and where it lay, he went towards Cercelli, whereas Alicotto remained with 17 vessels; where he arrived so suddenly, as the pyrat had not any time but to vnurnish his vessels, to chase the Christian slaues into a cave, or secret prison vnder ground, and to retire himselfe with his men into the castle, sending messengers with all speed vnto the Moores of the neighbour mountaines, to come and succour him. Doria being arrived, he became master of the town without any difficultie, and of the port, where he tooke two gallies, and seuen galliots, and burnt the rest. He caused a diligent search to be made for the slaues, and finding them, he set about 1000 free. Notwithstanding he lost about 400 souldiers, who going rashly to spoile the towne, were cut in peeces by the Moores which came, and by the Turkes which sallied out of the castle with Alicotto, or else forced to run into the sea, Doria hauing caused his gallies to go from the thore, to the end he might fight for his own safetie, there were sixtie taken & made slaues, with George Palawicino, an Ensign. And this losse which Alicotto made of gallies and galliots, was the safetie of Cales.

Andrew Doria takes many gal-lies of pyrats.

1531 Inundations.

Ferdinand chosen king of Romans.

1532 League betwixt
the Pope and
the Emperour.

The year 1531 was memorable for the earthquake and inundations at sea, which happened as well in Spaine as in Africke and Flanders, whereas many towns & buildings were ruined, and much land drowned, and infinit numbers of ships swallowed vp by the wonderfull spring tides, with the losse of a great number of men. This was at such time as the Infant D. Ferdinand was chosen king of Romans at Coullen, & that Germanie was threatened extraordinarily by Solyman the Turke, who hauing raised a huge armie, entred soon after into Hungarie, with an intent to besiege Vienna, the chiefe citie of Austria, and the rampar of Christendome on that side: to withstand whose power the Emperour, being assisted by the princes of Germanie, went thither in person, which disappointed the designs of that great enemy. He being retired, the Emperour returned into Italie, whereas Pope Clement & he had an interview at Bolonia, in shew to treat of a general Councell, which was not verie pleasing vnto the Pope, although he made shew to inuite all princes: but

K

M

the 1533

A the chiefe end of this enteruiew, was, to make a league betwixt them, and the other Potentates of Italie, for the assurance of their estates against the enterprises of the French. Which done, the king returned to Genoua, where he embarked in Februaire, in the year 1533, and past into Spaine.

34 During these affaires the Castilians continued with great vehemencie, their discouerie of new lands, whereas Francis Bizarro, borne at Trugillo, who had lived long at the Indies, discovered the countrey of Peru, from whence such abundance of treasure hath come: by reason whereof the Emperour made him marquisse of Auailles. He had some time before discovered an island, and in it a towne, which he called Saint Iago. Continuing his course, he coasted along the firme land of Peru, and there planted a colonie, which he named Saint Michael; then entering farre into the countrey, he found a fit opportunitie to doe his businesse, in a warre which fell out betwixt two brethren, contending for the realme of Cusco; whereof the one was called Guscar, and the other Atabalipa. Guscar finding himselfe the weaker, had recourse vnto Pizarro and the Spaniards, who promised to succour him; but it was with an intent to ruine them both. Ferdinand Pizarro was happily come to the Indies at that time, with new forces from Spaine, who hauing joined with the forces of his brother Francis, and the Indians of Guscar, they made a strong armie, sufficient to assaile Atabalipa. He for his part attentiuely to all occasions of warre, did not stay vntill the enemy came vnto him, but went to meet them, hauing in his armie above six score thousand Indians, and gaue them battell about the towne of Catamarca, yett (as somewrite) within the circuit of the same towne, which was verie great; into the which Pizarro had put himselfe, finding it without dwellers; and was there entertained in that time by the Barbarian king, vnder colour of treating friendship with him, but they could not agree. The Spanish captaine had caused Atabalipa to be summoned, and solicited, that he should not disdain to submit himselfe to the Emperour Charles, as his vassall, and to pay him tribute; and moreover, to make himselfe Christian; else they threatened him, that the Pope would deprive him of his realme, and would giue it wholly vnto the Emperour: the which he might well doe (sayd they) for hee was Gods lieutenant on earth, of God, who had made all the world of nothing, and who, to deliuer and saue men from the slauiery of the euill spirit, had made himselfe man, had died vpon the crosse, and was called Christ Iesus. Father Vincent, a Iacobine Monke, was messenger of this summons. To whom Atabalipa answered, That hee did much esteeme and desire the Emperours friendship, and would send him presents, as to his friend; but to pay him tribute; he would not doe it, the kings of Cusco being accustomed to make others tributaries. That as for the Pope, whose power hee did alledge, hee held him for some madde man; seeing he presumed to giue vnto another that which was not in his power, and where he had no right. And in regard of Iesus Christ, and of his seruice, he said, that he had no knowledge of it, and therefore he would not leaue the auncient gods of Cusco; and especially for that he vnderstood by him, that Christ was already dead. He would therefore adhere rather to the Sonne and the Moone, which died not. And touching that which he did assure him, that the Christians God had made heauen and earth of nothing, and finally all the world, he demanded of him where he had learned it; for he thought that the world had euer beene, or at the least many thousands of yeares: wondering much, that the Monke, who was not yett much aduanced in the first hundred of the course of his life, did speake so confidently of such ancient things. Frier Vincent replied, That the Emperour Charles was a great Monarch, whom many kings, as mightie as the king of Cusco, obeyed, and therefore he should not make triall of his force, nor compare himselfe vnto him: and holding in the one hand a Criticke, and in the other a Bible, he told Atabalipa, that that Image had instructed him what the creation of the world had beene, and the booke contained the certaine historie. The king taking this booke in his hand, opened it; and turned it ouer, he smelt to it, and layd his eare to it, hearkening if it spake any thing vnto him; but seeing there was no feeling in it, and that it spake not any thing, he cast it to the ground, saying, That both the booke and Monke mockt him. Wherefore Frier Vincent hauing taken vp his booke, returned to Pizarro, to whom hauing related all, he perswaded him to take some cruell reuenge of the imuered.

Peru disco-

Colonie of S.
Michael.

Z z z z

prie

1533

pietie of that Infidell king. The two armies therefore being so neere, as one might say, G they were mingled within the circuit of the great citie of Caxamalcan, the Spaniards ran vpon the Indians with a great thunder of muskets and artillerie; and the sound of drums and trumpets: wherewith the Indians being not acquainted, were daunted and confounded: Atabalipa himselfe was so amazed, as forgetting the due tie of a generall, not giuing them any signe, nor commanding to fight, he saw them slaine by heapes, neere vnto the place where he was set vpon an high seat of gold, carried on his gards shoulders, who sought to retire him out of the prease, and to flie away with him; but they were staied, and their king ouerthrowne and taken; being abandoned by all his people, most of them escaping by flight.

Atabalipa defeated & taken

By this victorie, and the taking of the king of Cusco, the Spaniards made themselves, easily, masters of all the townes of that great and rich kingdome, and the souldiers were instantly made rich with the spoyle of the kings mouables, and of the noblemen of his traine, with a wonderfull quantitie of gold, siluer, and slaues, among the which there were found five hundred maids and wiues, which did serue king Atabalipa, who for a time was honourably garded, in hope to be set at libertie, for the which he promised to glut the couetousnesse of the Spaniards, whom he saw to be verie greedie after gold and siluer; yea he offered to goe into Spaine, or whereas the Emperour should be, and was perswaded to be baptised. But notwithstanding all this, they strangled him cruelly, and hauing halfe burnt him, they caused his bodie to be laid in a chappell built to that end in the market place of Caxamalcan, for that they would haue all men honor his funerall, excusing themselves of the execution, vnder colour of justice; for that (said they) hee had treacherously made secret leuies of souldiers in the realme of Quito, to surpriue the Spaniards, and to free himselfe by force out of their hands; and also, for that he had put his brother Guscar to death, after the same maner, being their allie. The which he dissembled not, for that (said he) he had attempted to take away his life, to raigne. In the place of him that was dead, there was set vp by Francis Picarro the gouernor, for a shew, another brother of his, called Mangan (others name him also Atabalipa) who discovered vnto them part of the treasures: so as the present fruits of this victorie amounted to many millions, drawne as well out of the kings houses, as out of the Indians tombes, being accustomed to burie with the dead bodie, the most precious things they had: and in like maner from their temples in the towne of Pauca Canu, & in that of Cusco, which is the chiefe of the realme. This great citie of Cusco is situated 17 degrees beyond the Equinoctiall line, towards the South sea, in a temperat region, yet their Winters are somewhat sharp in their season, that is, when we haue Summer, for those people are almost Antipodes to vs, & the cold continues, and is the greater, for that the high mountaines of that country, are most part of the yeare couered with snow. Soone after this conquest of Picarro, James of Almagra, who had a good share in the honor thereof, went and inuaded the region of Chile, or Chiliane, but he found more difficultie than he expected: for besides that his men were in daunger of death through cold, hee found stronger resistance, the people being more warlike than they of Cusco; whom notwithstanding the Spaniards do not represent vnto vs, without dexteritie, or martial discipline: for they witnes, that in their armies they did oblerue a foreward, a battel, & a reeward; that they had scours, and forlorne hopes, which were excellent casters in slings, as in old time they of Majorca were, who furiously began the fight, casting a showre of hard polished stones, as big as an egge, & carrying a targuet on the left arme. Their chiefe battalion where their king was, did consist of men richly armed, with cueraesses quilted with cotton, & boners of the same, reasonably strong to resist a handie stroke, enriched with plates and threds of gold and siluer: and for offensive armes, some had clubs about foure foot long, and the heads as big as two fists, hauing five or six sharpe pikes of mettall; others carried hatchets like vnto our halbeards, which they could handle well. As for their reeward or subsidarie squadrons, to releue the rest, they were all pikes, whose heads were better armed than ours bee. Francis Picarro found the Indians of Peru in this equipage to resist him, it may bee (say they that haue written of his enterprises) to make his conquests more admirable vnto vs: For not confessing that either he or any one of his capitaines made any account

Discipline of them of Peru at the warre.

1533

A of the Indians of the country, whom they had drawne vnto their partie, and joyned with them in the aboue mentioned combat of Caxamalcan and others, they vaunt, that this great king Atabalipa, was vanquished with all that great multitude of men of war which did accompanie him, by lesse than five hundred foot, and an hundred and twentie horse of the Spanish nation, whereof most of the footmen were crossebowes, hauing few harquebuses: yet they confesse that they had some peeces of ordnance, whereunto they attribute some part of their victories, saying, That the Indians were almost dead for feare, seeing these engines spit fire, and hearing the noyse thereof, wherewith they had neuer been acquainted; the which hath some likelihood.

B Atabalipa was sonne to a warlike and valiant prince, called Cusco, who comming out of the prouince of Quito, which is directly vnder the Equinoctiall line, towards the South sea, had conquered by armes from many other kings and lords, those ample regions wherof his sonne was in an instant dispossessed, at the comming of these Spaniards: and hauing there built the citie of Cusco, had called it by his owne name, and made it the seat of his empire, which was about three hundred leagues long and broad, stretching from the South to the West. At his death he left an hundred children, males and females, most of which liued when Atabalipa was defeated and taken. To Guscar (whom some also call Cusco) he had left the greatest part of his conquered countries, and had giuen to Atabalipa the realme of Quito, where he was borne. But Guscar, not satisfied vnlesse he might haue all, did first moue war to dispossesse his brother, wherein he was vnfortunat: for after many unhappie encounters, he was quite defeated, and taken, by Chilicuchima, lieutenant to Atabalipa, by whose commandement, although he were a prisoner in the Spaniards hands, he was strangled: the which did so displease the gouernor Francis Picarro, as he conceived a mortall hatred against the king and his lieutenant, not ceasing vntill he had put them to death; yet after that he had discovered, by their meanes, the treasures of the realme, had seized of a good part of them, and was assured the rest could not escape him. In the distribution of which treasure he did afterwards shew himselfe verie vniust and false, as well towards his souldiers, as to the Emperors master, whom he did frustrate of a good part of his right of the sists. It seemed that God, by this sudden & easie conquest, had prepared D afit subiect for the Emperour Charles to settle a perfect estate at Peru; but his ministers did corrupt it. All things were there according to a mans desire, to execute a great and memorable designe: the which had bin admirable to posteritie, were it in regard of the glorie of God, or temporall commodities, in regard of the riches, and all sorts of blessings, the which heauen and all the elements doe powre downe abundantly vpon that region, but especially for the aptnesse of the people, who were found ciuile and capable of reason, much more than they that had bin first discovered at the islands, or vpon the continent of those Westerne Indies towards the North sea. They did not find them naked, and without shame, but apparelled, both men and women, handsome in their garments, industrious in their buildings, and in all other arts and workes; tillers of the ground, feeders of E pastures, marchants, sociable and courteous, as wel among themselves as to strangers, and religious also, although it were after the Pagan maner: whose imperfections should not be censured with rigor, but excused, with an intention to reforme them in time, by good examples of pietie and charitie, and by justice well and duely ministred: considering that in their religion and maners, they were not more sauage and barbarous than the first ancient Spaniards, before they were ciuiled and instructed, of whom we haue made mention in the beginning of this historie. They did beleague the immortallitie of the soule, & the resurrection of the body, and therefore they buried their dead with honour, and did graue markes vpon their tombs, which did shew the forepassed life of the deceased: into whose tombs they did cast precious jewels, and brought meat and drinke thither, and many times their wiues and seruants did shut them in there, & did willingly starue themselves. They did punish adulterie with death, and did put out the eyes of theeeues. Their childrens children, or some other of their blood, did inherit their goods, and not their owne children, except those of kings. Men might take as many wiues as they would, and did often marie their owne sisters. Thus among the seedes of pietie, humanitie, and policie, they had errors and blemishes, like sensuall people, which knew not the true God nor his justice. The which they did not measure by the perfect rule of nature, but according to their corrupt imaginations and their breeding, destitute of light and good gouernment. Through this defect they did worship the starres as gods, and especially an Idoll, which had its temple in the cite of Pancacami, who spake Oracles vnto them, and from whom they attended all their prosperities. It is the vsuall course of the Gentiles, to whom the mysteries of saluation are not reuealed, which are speciall graces. And had not these poore Perusians, vices in that regard, which were common with the auncient Egyptians, Grecians, Romans, and other such famous nations, who haue beene happily drawne from Paganisme to Christianitie, among whom the world hath scene so many goodly Churches to flourish, by the bountie of kings and Emperours, and by the doctrine, diligence, and exemplarie life of good bishops? But the Spaniards nor their commaunders had no such intent, as their actions written doe witnesse.

Beginning of Atabalipa.

Maners of the people of Peru.

1533

It was sufficient for them to commaund these ignorant people proudly, to make profession of Christians, in assisting at the ceremonies, vpon paine of death, or seruitude. And it fell out often, I know not through what charitie, that many which for feare had caused themselues to be baptised, were by them instantly slaine, that they might haue no leasure to denie it: And thus, they sayed, they procured their foules health. These courses, which could not bee pleasing vnto God, drew his wrath vpon the heads of the Picarrs, and their companions, who made miserable ends: for it was not long before Francis Picarro, and James of Almagra, fell into a great quarell for the gouernment of Peru, and so to ciuile warre, whereof followed their punishment and ruine: A worthie reward for their cruelties and rapes, as wee will hereafter shew. These two men haue beene the chiefe leaders and conducters of the enterprise of Peru, both souldiers, but of obscure and base families: for Francis Picarro was a bastard, borne of an vnchast woman, who had left him at the doore of a church at Trugillo, from whence a captaine, called Gonsal of Nauarre, caused him to be taken, and to be bred vp at a ferme of his in the countrey, like a clowne: But being growne great, he ran away to Seuille, and so past to the Indies, where he got reputation: and being held for the sonne of the foresayd captaine, there came vnto him three of his brethren, by the fathers side, Ferdinand Gonsaluo, and Iohn Picarro, and a brother by the mothers side, called Francis Martin of Alcantara. As for James of Almagra, he was borne at Almagra, but of so obscure a father, as no man euer could leame his name. He was in like manner valiant, but hee and Picarro were both grosse witted, and so ignorant, as they could neither read nor write; fit men to conquer and destroy, but not to edifie and preserue, ambitious, and without gouernement, as they did refuse by their actions. Simon of Alcafaa, a fugitiue of Portugal, was also sent to the Molucces by the Castilians; but through his owne importunities hee was slaine by his men, before hee came to the strait of Magellan.

Beginning of Francis Picarro and James of Almagra.

1534 Muley Hafcen
king of Tunes
dispossest by Barberousse, &
restored by the Emperour.

Virtue fittest to aduance a man.

Barberousse
brethren.

35 The Emperour being in Spaine, he was solicited by Muley Hafcen, king of Tunes, who had beene dispossest by Haradin Barberousse, to restore him to his realme, promising to hold it of the Crowne of Spaine. This occasion was willingly embraced, as necessarie for the good of Christendome, and verie honourable for the Emperour in particular: for Haradin hauing succeeded his brother Horusco in the realme of Alger, he was growne into great fauour with Solyman the great Turke, who had made him generall of his galleys, and with whose forces he had seised vpon Tunes, threatening all the Princes and Potentates about the Mediterranean sea, both Christians and Mahometists. Although we haue formerly made some mention of these two famous pyrats, yet, in my opinion, it will not be impertinent, if we relate more particularly what they were, and by what means they came to that greatnesse wherein our fathers haue scene them: reporting, vpon this occasion, some of their desperate enterprises, vpon the coast of Africke, where they began first to appeare; to the end that by this notable example they which haue fame for their onely object, may know, that neither the nobilitie of the race, nor the vertue of predecessors, nor wealth, nor the seruices of Court, can bring men to great and eminent honours, but their owne industrie and valour: Horusco then, and Haradin, brethren, surnamed Barberousse, were borne in the countrey of Turkie, or Turcomania, which the aunci-

H

I

K

L

M

1534

A auncients called Cilicia, or Tarsis: Some say, they were borne in the towne of Metelin, in the island of Lesbos, whose father was a Christian, but he did not continue in it; a poore pyrat, or theefe robbing at sea: Their mother was a Spaniard, of the towne of Marchena, taken by this pyrat at sea, who held her for his lawfull wife. Their first institution and breeding was in their fathers trade, vnder a pyrat called Camal, and afterwards they put themselues in pay with the Emperour of the Turkes, which was Selim, father to great Solyman. Being sent for a conuoy to a Treasurer, who went to pay the garrisons of Corron and Modon, townes of Morea, they stript him, and fled with the money: with which money hauing armed out a foist, or brigantine, they joyned with Crocut, being then pursued by Selim his brother. He being dead, they fled for feare of punishment, and went to sea: Their first prey was of two marchants ships of Siracusa in Sicile; with which bootie hauing furnished themselues better, it happened, that theeuing with too great assurance, they were taken by Peter Vittorie, captaine of the Popes galleys; but through bad gard, this taker was himselfe taken, and lost two galleys. Being thus fortified, and growne more cunning, they got such reputation, as in a short time Horusco, who was the elder, was acknowledged for head and conductor of all the pyrats vpon the coast of Barbarie, hauing for his lieutenants Haradin, his younger brother, and Scanderraz, of their brother in law. In this fauour hee presumed to surpriue the cite of Bugia, one of the best peopled in Africke, the which was then vnder the protection of the kings D. C Ferdinand and D. Isabella, of Castille, and garded by a strong garrison of Spaniards: but his enterprise succeeded not; for being master of one of the three castles, or towers, which are in that cite, as he fought for the rest, he was repulst, and forced to leaue his prey, with the losse of an arme, so as euer after he wore one of siluer. Hauing sayled in this enterprise, he retired to Alger, the lord whereof was called Celim Beni Tumi, whom he succoured, in shew, against a brother of his, who made warre against him, and then hee slue him in treason, vnder colour of friendship, making himselfe Lord of the towne.

This was no act of vertue, but of hardinesse and policie, the which is much esteemed in this later age. Hauing gotten Alger, he seised vpon the towne of Circele, by the D like meanes, the which is the auncient Carcena. Into this he put Scanderraz for gouernour, and left the gard of Alger to Haradin his brother, and continuing to molest the world, he did also seise vpon the rich towne of Tunes, situated betwixt Alger and Oran, the lord whereof hauing fled into Spaine, hee had perswaded cardinall Ximenes to send armie of Spaniards into Africke, against this theefe, vnder Diego de Vera, who was defeated there, and lost about eight thousand men, as we haue noted in the precedent booke.

Horusco being putt vp with these good haps, he aspired to greater matters, and to make himselfe king of Tremessen, a great and mightie cite, and the chiefe in all Mauritania, sometimes called Cesarientis. To attaine vnto the which, he thought to helpe himselfe E with superstition, to the which the Moores and Arabians are more giuen than all the people of the earth, procuring certaine Morabites (which are religious hermits of Mahomet sect) who (to bring the king of Tremessen in hatred of his subiects) gaue them to vnderstand, That he had secret acquaintance with the Christians, and that they should be all damned if they did not chafe him away: the which they did, with the helpe which Horusco Barberousse gaue them. To couer his designe, which was, to subdue them, he counsellled them to draw a nephew of the kings (whom they had chased away) out of prison, hauing beene long kept in yrons by him, and to make him king; the which they had a will to effect: But this tyrant, seeing them to proceed slowly, and hee impatient and blinded with ambition, slue this young prince, and sought to F seise vpon the cite, in despight of the inhabitants, whereof he slue many of the principals, which was his ruine: for the dispossest king was called home, and had means to recouer his kingdome, with the forces of Spaine, which he obtained easily. He pursued his aduersarie so, as he forced him to flie into the mountaine of Abez, vpon the confines of Bugia, & to shut himselfe in a castle, where being besieged, necessitie forced him forth to fight, where he was vanquished & slain, and his head caried to Tremessen & fro thence stitions.

Moores Super-

Religion a cloak for tyrans.

Z z z z iij

into

1534

into Spaine to the great contentment of the Moores and Spaniards, for he was a subtile & dangerous enemy: Pride growing through prosperitie ruined him: But Haradin gouerned himselfe more discreetly, and did manage his fortune with more honour. Thus we see, that those which hazard themselves in dangerous enterprises, doe most commonly miscarrie, and make such as follow after them wise by their rashnesse, to whom they haue made the way.

Haradin, by the death of his brother, remaining lord of Alger, one of the best ports of all Africke, he was no more held a pyrat, but a prince, and withall a great captaine at sea: so as Sultan Solyman, Emperour of Constantinople, made his Basia and his Admirall, with whose incomparable forces he made himselfe a terrour to all the countries of Europe, Asia, and Africke, which lay vpon the sea; where hauing taken infinit booties, and spoyled many townes, in the end he made himselfe master of the citie and realme of Tunes, in the yeare 1535, by this occasion.

A little before there had reigned in Tunes Mahomet, descended from Abdul Hedi, who was a Moore of Andaluzia, borne at Seuille; he was wise and discreet: and being made by the king of Marroc gouernour of the citie of Tunes, which had rebelled, and had bene taken againe and punished, he following the example of many others, had made himselfe lord of his gouernement, when as after the battell of Muradat in Spaine, woon by the Christians, there was a generall reuolt in Africke, against the Almohades, Emperours, and great Miralmumins of the Moores, and Alarabes at Marroc. This Mahomet, issued from this race, had had many children by many wiues, who seeing himselfe old, and desirous to prouide a successor to his realme after his owne humor, for certaine considerations, he made choyce of the youngest of all, called Hascen, whom hee had by an Arabian woman, called Gezia, and would haue him succeed him to the Crowne. It is this Muley Hascen for whose restitution the Emperour was perswaded to lead an armie into Africke. This jealous prince was no sooner seated in the royall throne, but he put Mamon, his elder brother, to death, and after dispatcht all his other brethren and kinsmen: (these be the fruits of Polygamie, in the followers of Mahomet their Prophet) Arraxide onely escaped, and fled to Bixacara, a towne of Numidia, where, with the aid of certaine Xecques, or lords Numidians, hee gathered some forces together, to invade Muley Hascen; but it was in vaine: wherefore he had recourse to Haradin Barberousse, king of Alger, who hauing receiued him courteously, aduised him to go with him to Constantinople, to informe the great Turke of his misfortunes, promising to present him vnto him, and to doe him all fauour and good offices. Being come to Solymans Court, Barberousse was presently dispatcht with a good number of gallies, well furnished with souldiers, to come to Tunes, giuing it out, that hee carried backe Arraxide, to make him king, who notwithstanding was stayed at Constantinople.

Muley Hascen, a paracide, couetous, voluptuous, iniurious, and a coward, amazed at this great preparation of armes, which came to assaile him, staied not, but fled to his kinsmen by the mothers side, Ismael and Dorar Alarabas, of the lineage of Vled Aixa, which are a member of Vled Tahaya, of those which led a vagabond life in the plaines and deserts of Africke and Numidia: a mightie people, but disloyall, and of no friendship. Finding not such succours there as he expected, he followed the aduice of a Genouois renegado, called Ximaa, which was, to implore ayd of the Emperour Charles: and this Genouois was he which made a voyage into Spaine, who could so persuaide the Emperour, and season his request with liuelie reasons, and infinit promises, as he obtained that which he pretended, which was, To persuaide the Emperour and his counsel, that it was both profitable and necessarie for him to restore Muley Hascen to his realm: Euery one weighing the importance of this businesse, and foreseeing how it might prejudice Italie and Spaine, if the Turkes, which did already hold many ports vpon the coast of Barbarie, should set footing into Tunes, a great and mightie citie, fit for the situation (which is neere vnto the ruines of old Carthage, sometimes concurring in power with the Romans) to make ordinarie and prejudiciall impressions in that State. Barberousse, who had found the place void of souldiers, or Commander, did easily seise vpon the towne, castle, and fort of Goulette, which

Abdul Hedi Remaine of the last king of Tunes.

1535

A which stands on the entrie of the lake which the Sea makes there. But hee did not thinke the Christians had taken this so ill, as hee found by experience, and therefore hee was not so carefull to prouide all things necessarie to preserue such a conquest, against the power which the emperor brought: who as soone as this honorable enterprise was concluded, hee did aduertise all Christian princes, and invited them to contribute men, money, and ships to this warre, whether hee would goe in person. The rendezuous was appointed at the port of Caillieri in Sardynia, whether the emperor came with the gallies of Spain, those of Genoua, and the particular gallies of Andrew Doria. D. John king of Portugal sent him twenty gallies, and one great gallion, vnder the command of D. Lewis his Brother.

B The Pope armed nine gallies at Genoua, at his owne charge, of the which Paul Iustini-an had the command, and Virgilio Vrsino, earle of Angulare had the leading of the soldiers that were in them: And hee suffered him to leuie the tenths of the Clergie of Spaine. The knights of Malta sent foure gallies. All which ioyned at Caillieri, where (before the emperors comming) there arriued the royall gallies of Naples and Sicile, with many gallions and foists, armed by the noblemen of Naples and Sicile, at their owne charge, in which the Marques of Guaft was transported with the old Spanish souldiers which he had drawne out of the garrisons of Italie. Thither also came many round and flat bottomed vessels, carrying victuals, munition, artillerie, horse, and a good number of foot, newly leuied to that end in Spaine, Italy & Germany, so as there was found when this army weighed anchor, three hundred and sixtie saile, carrying besides the Court, the traine of noblemen, and many voluntaries, seuen hundred men at armes, two thousand light horse, and 12 thousand bisloques or new souldiers, five thousand old souldiers, Spaniards, and sixe thousand Italian foot, & seuen thousand Lansquenets, men of experience. These forces being not lesse than forty thousand men, parted with a prosperous wind from the Island of Sardynia, and came to land the five and twentieth of Iune, this yeare 1535, at a place called Porto Farina, neere to the ruines of old Vtica, about sixe leagues distant from Tunes. There order was giuen by the emperor, for the landing of his men; the first were the old Spanish arquebuzies and the Italians, that they might keepe off the Moores, who had shewed themselves both horse and foot, to disturbe their landing, wherein the Marquess of Guaft who was general of the foot, shewed great iudgement, for he wold not suffer the souldiers to leaue their standings and to pursue the enemy, vntill the army were landed with the victuals and munition, and the quarters made and fortified with a Trench: in the which they found great difficulty for that the sand was loose & not fit for that purpose, neither had they any bauiens or other matter to binde it with all. The army being lodged, the emperor called a Councell, where it was propounded, whether they shold first assault Goulette, or goe directly to fight with the enemy in Tunes, which was much more easie than that of Goulette: whereas attempting that fort first, being strong by situation, defended by valiant men, commanded by iudicious captaines, and hauing great store of artillerie, and which did most import, not being able to take their succours from them, neither by the lake, nor by land on the east part, either the action would proue desperate, and they shold consume their forces there in vaine, or at the least they should spend so much time there, as not onely Barberousse would grow stronger in men, & be of greater reputation; but the Christians campe being wonderfully assisted with the violent heat of the Sunne in that region, and vnder that clymat, and, which did more import, the waters which they dranke being halfe salt, in short time being corrupted, would breed a great mortalitie, so as they should be forced rather to seeke to saue the reliques of their army, than to attempt any new enterprise. But the most iudicious shewing how dangerous it was to leaue such a fort as Goulette, with a great garrison, and so neere vnto Tunis behind, that the army aduancing they should be in extreme want of victuals, the which not being able to bee conducted but from the army, the enemies horse being many and venturous, scouring the fields continually, would at the least force the Christians to keep the greatest part of their horse and of their best foot, to gard their victuals which were engaged. It was therefore resolved first to attempt Goulette: which fort Barberousse had furnished with great care: it is a great square Tower, with large rampers and flankers, and is set vpon the mouth or entrie of

Forces of the Emperour at his going to Tunes.

Councell held by the emperor
for the besieging of Goulette.

Goulette the fort.

1535 of the Lake, which extends from it vnto the Citie, and is foure leagues broad: G (Campaña writes that it is twelue miles long, and siue miles broad.) The Citie of Tunes was great and well peopled, but at that time the walles were weake and low, hauing three suburbs open, greater and farre better peopled than the towne, in the which there dwelt many kindes of Merchants, some of the most industrious Artisans, and among them some other rich people, who were delicate and idle. For the gard of these places, Barberousse had about eight thousand good souldiers, whereof he had put a good part into the fort of Goulette (some write they were three thousand men) commanded by Sinan Cefuss of Smima, called the Jew, and Naid, surnamed Chafedinel. The rest were with Barberousse, who had also leuiued great numbers of Moores and Alarabes, both horse and foot, whome hee sent, or led himselfe continually to the warre, and made continually skirmishes to molest the emperours campe, to hinder the approaches, and the batterie which was planted against this fort, the which they must force and take before they came vnto the citie, vnlesse they would bee betwixt two enemies, subiect to the great and ordinarie fallies of either of them, especially of the Moores, who o-uerrunning the cuntry, which was well knowne to them, might hinder the victuals, surprise them that went to forrage, seeking aboue all things water, which is rare in that cuntry, and take from them the commoditie of the sea, if they had gone farre, and left this fort standing, and so had ruined the imperiall armie. Whilest they are busie at this worke, and about siue weekes after the emperours arriuall, Muley Hassen creepes out of his holes, and comes vnto the campe (hauing had a good conuoye sent vnto him) with two hundred horse, or thereabouts, Moores, illattired and ragged, mounted vpon geldings or mares, peasantlike clownes. Hauing saluted the emperour, and kindly receiued by him, they conferred long together by truchmen, but they soone discountred that this Prince had neither friends nor meanes, although hee vaunted that hee had left, not farre from thence, sixteene thousand horse Alarabes, and eight hundred camels laden with victuals and refreshings, of the which they neuer saw head nor taile, assuring impudently that hee had great intelligences within the Towne, with the chiefe inhabitants, who notwithstanding neuer made any signe that they would fauour him.

Thus the winde carried away all the goodly promises, which his embassador had made in Spaine to the emperour, for he kept not any one, were it through inconstancy or impossibilitie. Notwithstanding the emperor continued constant in his resolution, to chase away Barberousse, and to restore this exiled king, to the possession of his realme, for he had made no accompt to be assisted by the Moores, and had bene drawne vnto this enterprise more for his owne priuate interest, then for any other consideration, and therefore he was come well provided. Notwithstanding all the attempts of the Barbarians, Goulette was battered by land with forty peeces of ordnance planted in two batteries, and by sea with about 200, for the galleys being put into squadrons, whilest that one approached to discharge, the other retired to charge their peeces, and so they continued from the break of day vntill noone, whilest that the two batteries at land thundred continually. The which did so ruine the tower, as the greatest part of it falling, it covered or made most of the ordnance, within it vnprofitable: The ruines of the tower had made the way easie for an assault, so as the Spaniards, Italians, and Germanes being put in order, one nation after another, at their time appointed they presented themselves with ladders to the assault with so great resolution, as al the defence of the moors & Turkes was in vain, so as a great part of them were slaine or wounded fighting, neither was the slaughter lesse of them that fled along the lake, or that sought to escape by swimming, for they were slaine by the shot, or thrust through by the Germanes pikes, if they came neere the shore, so as it was reported there died about 1500, and not without the losse of some men of worth among the Christians, yet Campaña writes there were not about thirty slaine. Goulette being taken it was bruted that they had taken 300 peeces of ordnance, & all Barberousse's fleet which was in the chanel of the lake; the number whereof is diuersly reported, some write 20 galleys, 20 gallies, and siue foyfts, others seuentie & two, and some affirme they were 107. Three daies after the taking of this fort Fernad Gonsago came vnto the camp, who hauing certain vessels

Forces of Barberousse in Ta-mel.

Goulette taken by the emperor

1535

A vessels appointed him by the viceroy of Sicile, brought many refreshings, for the which but especially for his owne valour, hee was ioyfully receiued by the emperour, and by the whole army. There grew now some diuersitie of opinions touching the continuance of the warre, some cold stegmatike complexions, were of opiuiou the emperor shold rest satisfied with the taking of Goulette, which was held impregnable, the which hee should fortifie and furnish with a great garrison, and good prouision of victuals to liue and defend it, with a designe to returne the next yere to besiege Tunes, Alger, and the other townes vpon that coast of Afrike. Their reasons were grounded vpon the great difficulties which the army did then suffer, in their drink, whereas the scorching sun did cause great thirst, and did force the poore souldiers to drink the pit water which was verie salt, which bred many infirmities, & many died of it, wherefore seeing the army much diminished by the former enterprises, and hearing that the enemy grew daily stronger, & that he did shortly expect a great number of Arabians, which he had hired, they perswaded the emperor that he might with his honor return into Europe, & prepare, as we haue said, for the next yere. But this was contrarie to the greatnes of Cesar's minde, who discovered with better reasons the weakenes of his enemy hauing lost Goulette; the little confidence the Turkes had in the Arabians & Moores, & the good disposition of the Christian army, especially after so great a victory, the which although it were diminished in numbers, yet it was increased in courage and resolution, so as Barberousse should haue means to furnish himself better for the next yere, & to obtaine greater forces from the Turk, to defend his possession in Afrike, the co-quest whereof (which was not now vneasse, hauing found the enemy in a maner vnprovided) would afterwards proue vnpossible, besides it was not for the dignitie of so great an army, honoured with the presence of the Christian Emperour, to goe away contented with the taking of a Tower. The captaines of greatest resolution and experience were of the same opinion, the which was maintained by Muley Hassen with great reasons, who discourfed particularly of the nature of that nation, of the designes of Barberousse, and of remedies for the thirst, perswading them to the enterprise of Tunes, and of the easinesse to take it; affirming that the enemy would neuer be drawne to a battell, neither had he meanes to keepe the citie many daies: His reasons were beleueed, and although his desire to returne into his realme, with the hazard of another, made him to be the lesse credited, yet the authoritie and will of the emperor, who was the authour of this councill, did confirme it. Barberousse on the other side was wonderfully grieved for the losse of Goulette, so as hee could not forbear to complaine of Sinan the Jew, who might haue escaped, flying away with his men, from so great a daunger, in the which hee had lost many Ianifaries, and other good souldiers. It is written that Barberousse was once in an humour to haue slaine all the Christian slaues that were found there, the which for his better securitie, being diuers thousands, he had already imprisoned in the castle: and that Si-nan the Jew, and others of authority had diuerted him from that wicked and cruell resolution, shewing him, that so foule and brutish a fact, would not onely bee a perpetuall blemish to his name, but also bring him into disgrace with Solyman, who was a generous Prince, and hated all such base and wicked actions, as that would be, to kill people who being in a strait prison, neither had nor could offend him. Being then dissuaded from these cruel imaginations which rage & greefe for his former losse did suggest, he began to pro-uide for the rest, taking councill of such as were about him what was to be done for their common health, with this resolution still, to keepe himselfe close, and to defend the citie, and not to come to battell with the enemy, hoping that in Autumne they should be forced to leaue that coast, & it might be their fleet would be beaten, & dispersed with stormes.
The emperor being not freed from that feare, was carefull to haue the ruines of the fort of Goulette repaired, whereof he gaue the charge to Andrew Daria, with his sea-forces, who caused it to bee clenfed from the infection of dead bodies, which were found there, both men and beasts, and the breaches to be raised: Hee tooke an Inuentorie of all the goods that were in it, where were found (as we haue said) three hundred peeces of ordnance, great and small; great store of armes of all sorts, with an incredible quantitie of victuals, powder, and all other munition, Engines, and implements necessarie for the defence of places.

Ferdinand Gonsaga comes to Goulette to the emperor.

Councill of the Imperialists to continue the warre of Naples.

The

1535

The emperor seeing all things in a readinesse, hee commanded euerie souldier shold carrie a bottle, full of water taken out of the prouision of the nauie, hee marcht that way the twentieth of Iuly. Comming within fve miles of the citie, they found certaine welles of fresh water, which bred great disorder among the souldiers, who were verie greedy to drinke, so as the emperor was forced to come thither in person, to stay the souldiers greedy rage, who desired rather to drink and die presently, as many did, for that the enemy had poisoned the waters, than to suffer a little, & to preserve themselves, at the least to die fighting. Having past this danger with no smal difficulty, they discovered Barberousse armie, who was come forth of the citie, in shew to giue the emperor battel. The number of his army is diuersly set downe: Ylloa writes that he had 70000 moors and Arabians, and 7000 Turkes, whereof two thousand serued on horsebacke, and Guaazzo affirms that he had twelue peeces of ordinance in front: others write that by the report of some Christian slaues, who had seene him take view of his men two daies before, he had 20000 horse, and about 100000 foot, moors and Arabians, besides his Turkes, vpon whom hee did chiefly relie. The two armies being in sight one of another, and it being generally beleued by the Christians that they should fight, their captains fought to incourage them with good words, notwithstanding that they were all verie ready and willing: the prince of Saleme made a speech vnto the Italians, Alarcon to the Spaniards, and Eberstin to the Germanes, and to all the nations the emperor himselfe, who going among them all, promised them a certain victorie, and filled them all with an assured hope, & importunate desire to charge the enemy, who stretching themselves out in length, thought to terrifie, disorder and put the Christians to flight. Barberousse had staied within three miles of Tunes, who began as soone as euer the imperiall armie approached to discharge his artillerie, but without any great effect: On the other side D. Fernand Gonzaga, who serued that day without any charge, but being among the foremost, charged the enemies, and slue a Captaine of the Moores with his lance, making such a slaughter of the enemies, as hee was that day noted about the rest: Hee was nobly followed by others, and the Spanish Harquebuziers did so gall the Barbarians with their shot, as hauing scarce begun to fight they basely fled: neither did Barberousse shew any courage that day, who had no intent to hazard his life and state vpon a battell, but to flie speedily into the Citie.

Battell betwixt
the Christians
& Barberousse
in Afrique.

Barberousse
flies into Tunes.

Christian slaues
seaze vpon the Cassle of Tunes.

There was no great slaughter of the enemy in this action, for that they fled presently, besides the Christians horsemen could not pursue them being but weake, and much lesse might the foot men do it, being tyred with their march in the sand, and with the extreme heat: wherefore the emperor lodged his army that night vpon the place whereas Barberousse had stood in battell, fortifying it with the carts of his baggage, yet standing alwaies ready in armes being so neare his enemy. Barberousse being returned into Tunes, full of disdain for this disgrace, being a proud man, he consulted what was to be done, seeming verie confident to be able to defend the citie: and then he entred againe into a resolution to murther the Christian slaues, and he was againe dissuaded by his own people; God disappoynting so wicked a counsell, to make the Christians victorie more easie, for this pretended crueltie of Barberousse being bruted abroad, it did moue two renegados to compassion, Giasfer Aga, and Meni, the first was borne in Cataro, and was called Vinsenzo, the second a Spaniard, whose name was Francisco, who was much fauored by Barberousse. They opening the prison doores to these wretches, who some write were fixe thousand, some ten thousand, and they hauing broken their chaines, wherewith they were bound, got slaues and such other weapons, & became masters of the Cassle, draping away those few Turkes that were left there in gard, and with all they seazed vpon the treasure, victuals, & armes, which Barberousse had left there: who being aduertised thereof, posted presently thither, seeking first by good words, and then by threats to bele in him, but it was in vaine, they chasing him away with reproches, and the hazard of his life, if he had staied.

All this hapned the day after the Battell, the emperor preparing to drawe neere the towne, when as those slaues fought to make signes vnto him to approach, but the distance would not suffer them to be seene, and yet the emperor finding that there was some alteration, he sent two companies of horse to discover it. In the meane time Barberousse finding himselfe in bad termes, and fearing the inconstancie of the Moores, heeresolued

1535

A solued to leaue the citie, by the gate next the mountaine, and went towards Bona, being followed by seuen thousand Turkes whom hee had perswaded to serue him at need: The Christian army marching towards Tunes, they were met vpon the way by the Embassadors of the citie, who offered to yeeld vnto the emperor, and to receiue what conditions he should impose, so as he would secure them from sacke, wherein some write that Muley Hascen intreated the emperor: so as at the emperours first entrance into Tunes, the souldiers carried themselves mildly; But soone after as some affirme, at the instigation of Muley Hascen, who desired to be reuenged of the inhabitants, which did not seeme to fauour him during the siege, the Spaniards fell to the spoile, vsing all kinde of excessse and acts of hostilitie, as if they had bene in a rowne taken by force, and assault. The Germanes also slue many Moores, and fell to their feeding, being forrie they found no wine in their sellers, for those people drunke not any.

Retreat of Barberousse
from Tunes.

The sacke continued foure and twentie houres, some write three daies, together, with great slaughter, and then it ceased, the emperor commanding euerie man vpon greuous paines, to retire vnto his quarter. They say that this sacke was not much lesse than that of Rome, and that euerie souldier was rich. The Marquesse of Guast guided by a slaue, found thirty thousand dicars, buried in a caue of the castle, wherewith acquainting the emperor, he gaue him them. The emperor lodged within the Cassle which was reasonably well built, and newly accommodated by Barberousse. There were great numbers of slaues found, whereof there were eightie and one Frenchmen, all which were set at libertie, apparelled and sent home vpon the retreat of the army. There was found in it much ancient armor gault & grauen, which some thought were the spoiles of the French armie, which Saint Lewis had sometime led into that cuntry, where hee dyed, and many of his armie, of the bloody flix. The emperor hauing remained some daies within the citie, and conferred diuers times with king Muley Hascen, touching his future gouernment and agreed vpon conditions, according to the which these two princes and their subiects should liue, traffike, and conuerse together, hee returned to the campe, making the more hast to depart, to the end that such as were fled into the mountaines might returne without feare to their houses. The armie was lodged close about a village called Lude, two miles from Goulette, where there past a little brooke of fresh water, whereof the cuntry was much destitute, which was the greatest discomfortie they had in all this warre: from thence they went to the first lodging they had made before the taking of that fort, neere vnto a Tower which they called of waters, which was the common watering place of the cuntry. Thither came Muley Hascen to the emperor to confirm and sweare the articles, which were these.

Tunes taken by the emperor.

- 1 That king Muley Hascen did confesse and would acknowledge, for him & his successors kings of Tunes, that hauing bene chased out of his estate, he had recouered it by the grace of God, and by the arms and vertue of the emperor Charles king of Spaine, who had taken Goulette, an impregnable fort, and chased away his enemy Haradin Barberousse.
- 2 That in regard of so great a fauour, he shold set at libertie, all the Christians of what age, sexe, or condition focuer, that were detained prisoners within his realme, what offences focuer they had committed, without punishment, price or ranfome; and that from thenceforth there should not any of the emperours subjects, nor of his brothers D. Ferdinand king of Romans, be made slaues within the realme of Tunes.
- 3 That it should be lawfull for al Christians to traffike at Tunes, and places depending thereon, stay, inhabit, purchase lands, build chappels & churches, & exercise their religion.
- 4 That the moors of Spain which had received the baptisme of Christ shold not be receiued into the realm of Tunes, if they did not shew letters of permissio from the emperor or his successors kings of Spain, or from their lieutenants, viceroies, or Magistrates.
- 5 That Muley Hascen did resigne vnto the emperor and his successors kings of Spaine, all the right which hee had to any towne of Afrique, places and Islands held then by Barberousse and the Turkes to enioy them in propriety, if they did conquer them.
- 6 That Goulette, and two miles of the cuntry round about, shold remaine in soueraintie to the kings of Spaine, who might put in any garrison, and fortifie it as they pleased.

Articles of Accord betwixt
the emperor &
king of Tunes.

7 That the inhabitants of Goulette, and the territorie about it, & the souldiers of the G garrison should bee free both by sea and land, from all imposts and customes for that which they should buy for their own vse, and if they traded in Merchandize, they should be vsed like to them of the country.

8 That they of Goulette should not bee hindered to receiue the tolles and customes of the kings of Tunes.

9 That to entertaine the garrison of Goulette, the kings of Tunes should pay vnto the gouernours twelue thousand crownes yearly, at two paiments, in August and Februarie.

10 That the fishing for corall and the trade thereof, should be reserued for the empe- H rou, and his successors, kings of Spaine, to dispose at their pleasures.

11 That in acknowledgement of the benefits done by the emperor to Muley Hafseen, hee and his successors should honour the kings of Spaine for euer, as their Patrons and protectors, and for an homage of that protection, they should bee bound to giue them euery yeare sixe faire horses, and twelue exquisite faulcons, the which he should deliuer into the hands of the gouernour of Goulette, the three and twentieth of August, vpon paine to loose fifty thousand crownes for the first time he should faile, and for the second a hundred thousand, and if they should continue to neglect this duty, to forfeit their realme to the king of Spaine, who might iustly dispossesse them.

12 That vpon the like paine the kings of Tunes should not make any leagues nor alli- I ances with any princes or states, Christians or Mahumetists, to the preiudice of the emperou or his successors.

13 That there should no entrance bee giuen, in the ports of the realme of Tunes, to any Pyrats, or robbers at Sea, common enemies, nor to the priuate enemies one of another.

14 Lastly that there should be good, sincere, & perpetuall friendship, & free commerce maintained, betwixt these Princes and their subiects, and right & iustice mutually done.
These articles were sworne and signed in this forme reciprocally in the emperours campe neere vnto Goulette, the thirteenth day of August, in the yere of Christ 1535, and in the yere 942 of Mahumet, the sixt day of the moone of the month Cala. K

King Muley Hafs taking the othe drew out halfe his Cymiter, & touching the blade hee sware by the prophet Mahumet, and by the Alcaron, that hee would faithfully ob-serue all the contents thereof, and neuer breake them: and the emperor sware and promised the same, kissing his right hand, and taking hold of a cloake which a knight of Saint James there present did weare, on the which there was a crosse, he kist it also. And of this contract there were foure copies made, two in the Spanish, and two in the Arabian tongue, respectiueky kept and carried by the officers and Secretaries of these princes.
There was also added to the said articles:

That from that time there should bee a supreme Iudge and Councell in Goulette, the which in the emperours name should iudge without appeal, of all ciuill and criminall causes, where any of his Majesties subiects should be a partie, trafficking or going into any countrie of the realme of Tunes: And in regard of the towne of Africke then held by the Turkes, if it came by any meanes into the power of the kings of Tunes, the emperor and his successors kings of Spaine should dispose thereof as they should thinke good. For wit-nesse to the said accord & articles, there were set downe for the emperor Nicholas Perenot seignior of Granuelle, doctor Fernand of Guevara, and Anthony Peres, counsellors of State; And for the king of Tunes, Aluar Gomeis Mahumet of Tunes, Hamet Gamaza, and Abeder Heymin Maier his counsellors, kinsmen, and officers.

This done Muley Hafs retired to Tunes, and the emperor gaue order for his returne. He had a great desire to set vpon the towne of Africke, which lyes right against Sicile, & was verie comodious, for the Turks which held it, to make enterprises, but seeing Autumne approach, which stirs vp the Seas for Gallies, hee deferred it to an other season. Hee left D. Bernardine of Mendoza, brother to the Marquesse of Mon-dejar gouernor of Goulette, with a thousand Spaniards, of the old bds. He sent Andrew Doria, along the western coast, to learne what was become of Barberousse, and to watch what Emperours retreat from Tunes.

A what he would vndertake, who found that at his dislodging from Tunes he had retired to Bone, and that hauing some notice of *Doria*s approach with forty gallies, he had left the place voyde, whereon Doria leazed without any difficulty; who by the Emperours commandement put a garrison into the castle, and left the towne at the disposition of the king of Tunes, thinking that the Moores inhabiting there would maintaine themselves in peace better vnder his obedience. There is a suburbe at Tunes without the port called Bethelmenara, containing about a thousand households, where there dwelt certaine Christians, called by reason of that suburbe Rabbattins, whose predeceffours had bin brought thither by Ioseph Almanfork, king, and Caliph of Marroc; ruler ouer all Africke, some 300 yeres since. Of those which made profession of the Christian religion, the kings B of Tunes did commonly make the gardes of their persons, for most of them made profession of armes: and carried the countenance of gentlemen; they held lands by homage of the king, and were rich. The Emperour carried some of these Rabbattins into Europe, and did them good. Hee dismissed the infant D. Lewis of Portugall from Tunes, with his galleys, and did witnesse by his letters vnto king John his brother, that in this voyage hee had giuen great proofes of his iudgement and valour, and with this opportunitee he sent some of the noblemen and youth, which had accompanied him, into Spaine.

Barberousse flying from Tunes, being come from the riuer of Maggiordech, one of his chiefe pirates called Aidno of Smime, being very drie, drunke of that water and burst. At C his comming to Bone, he drew 14 gallies vnfurnished out of a neere lake, which had been kept there for the like need, and hauing suddenly caused them to be armed, and all things ready to goe forth, fearing to meet with the emperours armie, he had caused that port to be fortified, but it appearing not, he went towards the East, meaning first to be reuenged of the Christians in some sort: wherefore hauing passed to Alger, and there provided for his affaires, and furnished his army well, he sailed towards the Iland of Minorca, where comming neere vnto the port of Maone, he set vp certain Christian flags which hee had taken the yere before: the Ilanders thinking it to be a part of the Emperours armie, re-ceiued them ioyfully; where afterwards they tooke great spoiles of goods and people: I hee sacke a shippe of Portugall there, and slew Gonsaluo Perelia the captaine after a long D fight: and so retiring with his prey to Alger, he set saile towards Constantinople.

The Emperour hauing dismissed part of his army from Goulette, he passed with the rest into Sicile, where he landed at Trapani, from whence he came to Palerm the thirteenth of September, where he made a solemne entrie: soone after they of the Iland made him a present of two hundred and fiftie thousand crownes, as well for the charges he had bin at, as for the preparation he meant to make the next yere against Barberousse, whom he desired to chase out of Africke, especially from Alger. Going out of Sicile, he past from Messina to Naples, which city he had not seene: in his voyage hee was sumptuously re-ceiued as wel by the whole state, as by priuate princes his subiects, especially by the princes of Bisignuno and Salerno, vntill he came to Naples, where being royally receiued, E that noble citie, the head of that kingdome, would not faile to make an extraordinarie demonstration of their loue vnto their prince; so as on the third day of Februarie one thousand five hundred thirtie and six they resolued in the monasterie of Saint Laurence, the Emperour being present, to giue him a million and five hundred thousand ducats, the which was speedily effected.

During the emperours absence D. Isabella the empress was gouernesse in Spaine as she had alwaies beene, with a councell of state appointed to assist her: by whose aduice and order D. Gutierte de Vargas Bishop of Plaisance caused a flecte of five shippes to be finished, the which had beene long before vndertaken, in the presence of D. John then prince of Portugall, who was come in pilgrimage into Castille. These shippes be-F ing well furnished were sent vnto the Molucques, of the which onely one past the streit of Magellan, which discovered the shoare of that continent, from the going out of the stret vnto Arequipa 25 degrees from the Equinoctiall.

36 After the emperours returne from Tunes to Naples, a new warre being kindled betwixt him and the French king, by reason of the duke of Sauoy, the Emperours brother in law, whom the French sought to spoile of his estate. Hee was not able to resist so A 2222 potent

Bone in Africke taken by Andrew Doria.

Rabbattins Christians at Tunes.

Minorca spoiled
by Barberousse.

Emperour comes into Sicile.

1536
Gift of the realme of Naples to the em-perour.

Shippes sent out of Castille to the Molucques.

Emperours voyage into Presence.

potent an enemy, and therefore he had recourse vnto the emperour for aid; who hauing gathered together a goodly army, consulted with his captains of the maner how he should make warre, whether he should stay in Piedmont, and recouer that which the French had taken from the Sauoiard, of which opinion the marquesse of Guast & D. Fernand of Gonzaga were, who alledged some reasons to maintaine their opinion, or that he should passe presently into Prouence, & leaue such forces to recouer Piedmont as should be thought fit, the which Anthony de Lema and Andrew Doria, did maintaine, but especially the emperour himselfe, who was confident for the enterprise of Prouence, and to that end he made an eloquent Oration vnto his Councell, in these termes.

Oration made by Charles the fift upon his passage into Prouence.

If the war we vndertake, & the enemy against whom we are to fight, were not known vnto vs, & withal, we were not assured in our selues that we should bring this war to a good end, without doubt we should not blame this your councell, or, to speak more properly, consideration; but should rather commend it, and follow it. But knowing that we make war against one that hath broken his faith, a perfidious man, who hauing no regard that the duke of Sauoy was comprehended in the treatie of Cambray hath made war against him, the which he knew to be against vs, we doubt not but God the iust Iudge of a violated peace, and of the breach of faith, will take a seuer reuenge.

I will adde thus much more, that we shall warre against the same enemy, ouer whom we haue bin victorious for these 20 yeares: by which victories (to proue against that which you haue said that we haue wonne, & that they may confesse they haue lost,) we hold still the duchie of Milan, a glorious remembrance, & a rich spoile of our vanquished enemy, the which should giue hope and courage to you that be winners, and feare and dispaire to them. Besides, let vs compare our forces with our enemies, we shall find ours to exceed them both in number and valour: we see no such danger as you pretend, although we diuide our army, passe the Alpes, & go into France to assaile our enemy. But to answer first vnto this, & then to retume vnto our former proposition: It is not vnknown, and we can proue it by examples, how many being afflicted with warre in their owne estates, haue freed themselves by transporting the war into their enemies countries, & haue made conquests of their aduersaries states: But in our case we will rather ground vpon firme and sound reasons, than vpon examples, the which can hardly be found equal in all circumstances. You are of opinion, that before we transport the war into France, we should chase the enemy out of Piedmont, so as there may be no reliques remayning: and we on thother side, induced by many reasons, hold it much better, that passing into France we transport the warre thither, rather than to nourish it in our owne and our friends countrey, and maintaine it in Italie, the which hath bene so many yeares afflicted, and therefore it is reason we should preferue it, and giue it some time of rest, after so great and tedious miseries: so as it hauing felt for these 30 yeares, by meanes of the French, those miseries which do accompany war, let France in like manner tast of spoiles, burning, rapes, let it tast of the feare, terrour, amazement and flight of citizens, let it make proofe of the sacking of houses, desolations, ruines, and the burning of cities. It fittes not to haue the citie of Turin, or the country of Piedmont the reward of our victories, but Paris, yea the very Crowne of France. We haue too long suffered that king, to make war in anothers country, I pray you let vs make him labour to defend his owne dominions, and let vs trie if the French be as much worth at home as abroad. But it may be their nature and disposition is not well known vnto you, whom you haue so often known by experience: At the first charge they are somewhat worth, but after some resistance, they faint, and loose their force: Besides, we haue knowne that king to haue bin of so great a mind (we will not say so rash) as he will hold it a great dishonor to suffer vs to enter and remain in his confines without giuing vs battel: The which if he do, who is there among you that wil doubt of a victory? Hold this for certain, that there is no other means to end the war, but that either he must adde Spaine and the empire, to that which he now enioyes; or we conquer the realme of France to our other possessions: for the effecting whereof we come to seek him in the bowells of his owne realme. We must not grow old here, expecting when he should come, and giue him means to preferue his owne country, from whence he is continually supplied with money, whereby he entertaines his armie here at our cost, who enrich them-

selues

A selues with spoile of those things, which should serue to pay our souldiers. And for that which you feare, that the French king may leuy new souldiers more commodiously, there is nothing more impossible to do; nor more vaine to speake, for that in bringing an armie higher, it drawes new souldiers with the hope of spoile; being accustomed to it, it is no spoile in a Country wonne by the sword; the which without doubt they cannot doe in France: for being kept in Martiall discipline by the king, the respect of the countrey binding them, they will hold themselves for aduenturers, which I shalbe lawfull for them to liue with their owne pay, though hardly: so as few will expose themselves to wounds and death, for the miserable gaine of an ordinarie pay: and if the souldiers will seeke to haue it augmented, they must afflict the people; so as what the enemy can not get by warre, the companies will iniuriously take away, they will spoile the victualles and diminish the treasure, raising tumults, seditions and rebellions; and the rather, if the matter proceed in such sort; as the king himselfe be the cause of this spectacle, wherein wee shall see a manifest example of Gods iudgements. And so hee which hath so often afflicted anothers countrey with fire, sword and spoile, shal be now forced, ruining and burning his owne countrey, not only to beare it, but also to do it himselfe. But me thinks I heare some of you feare, that he wil do that before our army arriue; whereunto he shal be forced. This should not moue you, neither can there be any thing to hinder vs; but wee should abound in victuals, hauing provided for it; so as piercing into the heart of France, we shall haue great abundance, and without any charge. As for your doubt, that the king will gather forces together on this side the Alpes whilest that wee are in France; and this country destitute of souldiers; we assure you that we haue provided him so much worke in other places, as he can hardly bend his thoughts to any other business: for that besides this army which will make him oppose all the vigour and force he hath, and another, which it may be you haue heard of shall be led by Nassau and Rossau, to inuade the confines of Picardy; there is yet a third which should come and ioine with vs in Prouence, the which at the emperres intreaty, our people of Spaine haue leuiod: and to that end we haue sent 23 gallies thither; & one with a particular commission, to informe her of my intention, & of the prefixed time of my voiage: we haue also taken order that an other shalbe made ready, the which during the hottest of the war, passing through Champagne, shall inuade Burgundy, and with the help of some of those two prouinces, which are affected vnto vs, that army will worke no lesse effects than either of the other three: So as the king being thus busied in many places, and with such great preparations of war, hauing no means to leuy at one instant sufficient forces to resist so great a masse of armies, it can not be but on some side we shal pierce into the bowells of his realme, let him prepare what army he can. Let vs not feare to diuide our forces; Let vs leaue what shalbe fit for the siege of Turin, & the rest which we shall lead with vs shalbe able to vanquish him fighting, specially, if (as you haue propounded) he shal think to diuide his forces, to man those places which he meanes to fortifie against vs. Adde (the which you know as well as my selfe) what the French footmen are, whereas they desire to be more esteemed for their horsemens, which indeed they practise more, & proue better; at this time they are much vnfurnished. It is not vnknown vnto you, that at Fossan & Conflans we haue spoild them of 250 horse of seruice; there are 200 now in Turin which can not hope for any better successe: and of the other companies which came hither, halfe of them are consumed with the toile. So as you are not to fight with that old caualerie of France, but with some reliques thereof: Besides, they hauing heretofore wholly relied vpon the German footmen and the Suitsers, of whom they thought to haue what numbers they pleased, we doe assure you that thorough the helpe of God, and our diligence, they shal not haue any, concealing what means we haue vied to cause a good number of them that were with him to abandon him: And from the Suitsers we haue gotten a firme promise (wherein we suppose they wil not faile) not to suffer any one to go out of the country to serue any Prince. Matters standing vpon these termes, let vs continue constant in our first resolution: that we leaue a convenient army for the recouery of Turin, and that we passe into France with the rest, and with such men as shalbe leuiod in Italie, & nothing staid by those difficulties which you haue wisely considered; we may go by the ruer of Prouence. As for the difficulties which you 1536 haue propounded touching the entrance, we will neuer suffer the French to deprive vs of G that honor, to haue endured it more constantly than we. Concerning victualles, there is sufficient provided, which shalbe brought by sea, with the artillerie, munition, and other necessaries, which otherwise would be very chargeable. Finally, the intemperates of the aire, which it seemes you feare in Prouence; hold it not worse than that of Africke, the which our souldiers haue constantly endured. And therefore all duly considered, I donot see why we should rather feare danger, than glorie in this victory, hauing to deale with an enemy who is vnprovided of valiant men.

A a a a ij

Army of Charles the fifth going into Prouence.

After this speech the enterprise was concluded, and preparation made accordingly, they wrote that the emperor had in his army 24000 Germans, 14000 Spaniards, 12000 Italiā & 5000 horse. The marques of Guast was general of the foot, the D. of Alua was general of the men at armes, and D. Fernand of Gonzague, of the light horse. How they entered, & what they did in this enterprise, you may read at large in the French history.

The prince D. Philip of Spaine, being now tenne yeares old, gaue great signes of wisdom and sufficiencie hereafter, to gouerne those realmes, whereunto hee was borne an hereditarie successor. And to make his studies the more easie, they appointed him for his Scholmaster Iohn Martin Siliceo a man not onely very learned, but of an innocent life, whose merits did afterwards make him archbishop of Toledo and cardinal: D. Iohn of E. stuniga or Zuniga, a knight of great wisdom and iudgement, and commander maior of Castille, was made his gouernour: and to giue him an honourable Competitor in all his studies, and a sweet companion in that tender age, two yeres before D. Lewis his cousin, the eldest sonne of Sauoy, had passed out of Italie into Spaine: But this yong prince of great hope died this yeare on Christmasse day at Madrid, to the great griefe of the prince D. Philip, who loued him dearely, and of the whole court, in the 13 yeare of his age.

Lewis prince of Sauoy dies in Spaine.

India, Exploits of the Portugalls.

37 I will now relate something of the progresse of the Portugalls nauigations at the east Indies, and how the Turkes came and besieged them in Diu, a towne which the Portugalls had so fortified, as they neither feared the fraud nor force of that barbarous and inconsistent nation. But the better to vnderstand the war which was brought thither this yere by the Turke, wee will make a repetition of some things that went before. In the yeare 1532 the king of Portugal had sent Nonio d. Acugna generall to the Indies, who hauing a desire to get footing in the realme of Cambaia, hee sent Antonio Silueria with a great army, to discover that riuer, and to informe himself wel what might be expected. This capitaine made great proofes of his valor in that country, spoiling and burning some townes, and striking a great terror into that people of the Portugalls name. It followed after that the Bascha of Egypt, called Soliman by commandement from Soliman the great Turk, who could not quietly indure the Portugalls good successe at the Indies, whereby his kingdoms had receiued so great losse, being disappointed of the nauigation for spices, and other merchandise from the east, the which were brought by the Arabic gulph, vnto the ports of Egypt, and so distributed by his merchants ouer all Europe; he sent 2 Sangiacs, Mustapha and Sasar treasurer of that province to take Aden, a strong towne with a port in the said gulph. Whilest that the Turkes labored to take city, being valiantly defended by the king, it hapned that Antonio Silueria scouring those seas with a fleet of Portugall ships, he heard of the Turkes attempt, and not pleased they should extend their forces beyond Egypt, he bent his course that way, whose arriuall did so terrify the Turkes, being grieued of that conquest, & growne strong by the numbers that were come vnto them in hope of prey, as they dilodged. After which Silueria put the King in mind of the fauour he had done him, and did so magnifie the force & power of king Iohn of Portugal, as he drew him to put himself vnder his protection, so as he should always defend him against the Turke, for acknowledgement whereof he should pay a yereley tribute of 10000 crownes to the king of Portugal, or as they say, Serafini, money of Ormuz: But this Barbarian did not keep his faith long, for Silueria being gone, there came a ship ladē with pepper to the port of Aden, the which he spoiled, & treacherously slue the men. There hapned worse after the Turkes flight, who being 600, and about 1000 Arabians, vnder the same Mustapha & Sasar, and in the same ships, they went to seek their reuenge by those riuers, so as coming to Diu at such time as Nonio d. Acugna the Portugall gouernour was there, with a great armie of Nonio d. Acugna assaults Diu in vaine.

A of aboute 300 sail wel furnisht, with an intent to get that citie, hauing seized vpon a strōg lland called Betelem, not much aboute 7 leagues from Diu, they were a great aide to To. can who was lord of it. These succors (Mustapha hauing brought valiant men, harquebuziers, much artillerie, and himselfe a good souldier), made Nonios attempts vaine, so as being often repulst with losse, he was in the end forced to depart & retorne with his army to Goa, leauing Antonio Saldania and James Silueria with some ships & souldiers at Betelem, for that they should continually annoy the sea coasts of Cambaia, as they did: for the summer following Silueria entred into Diu, and sackt and burnt the towne, with some places thereabouts, for that Mustapha knowing that the Portugalls would not willingly desist from that enterprise, and that they should need greater forces to resist them, he was gone into Turkie, as an embassador for that king, to let the great Turke vnderstand how much it imported him, to take him vnder his protection, & to get footing in those Indian seas, hauing a great desire to chase away the Portugalls, whose power was feared in those seas. But Acugna grieued at the disgrace he had receiued by his retreat, made ready a nanie of 80 ships, in the which were 4000 valiant soldiers, & hauing called James Silueria with his forces to him, he presented himself before Bazaino a sea towne, which the K. of Cambaia did fortified with all industry, but it could not resist the Portugalls valor, who ruined all the fortifications. There came a new gouernour of the Portugall army at the Indies, called Martin Alphonso de Sosa, who made some attempt in Cambaia, & took the castle of Panam by force, the like a conqueror he ran vp that riuer as far as Diu, forcing that lord to sue for peace, and to yield Bazain and the neighbor lland of Salfeta vnto King Iohn.

Bazaino at the Indies taken by the Portugalls.

An. 1535 Badurio K. of Cambaia finding himself ingaged in dangerous wars, he craued aid fro the Portugalls, & gaue the liberty to build a fort at Diu, the which they caled Thomas, for that it was begun on that saints day, & another neer vnto it, which they named S. James, either of them being strōgly walled; this fort was raised in 49 days, whereat the K. wondred. To whom afterward the Portugalls gaue great aid, & recovered for him certein places which he had lost; the leauing Emanuel de Sosa in the fort with 800 soldiers, & good store of artillerie, the gouernour returned to Goa. Soon after Badurio repented him that he had yielded so much to the Portugalls in his realm, so as in the yere 1536 he commanded Timarao gouernour of Diu, that vpon some fained colour he should seeke to build a strong wall opposite to the Portugalls fort, the which being denied him, there fel a deadly hatred betwixt them. The viceroy Acugna, hearing that this king making a shew of friendship, sought to ruine the Christians, he sailed to Diu with a great army, where faining himselfe sick, he drew the ill-aduised king, to visit him in his ship; but in his returne he was slaine by the Portugalls, with some of his people that had accompanied him, in which action there were some Portugalls also slaine, among the which was Emanuel de Sosa capitaine of that fort. It was easie the for the Portugalls to seaze vpon Diu, & vpon the whole lland, where-as they got good store of mony of the kings treasure, abundance of victuals, instruments of war and ships of all sorts. In the beginning of this yere 1537 they began to fortifie the castle better, fearing some new alteration of those Barbarians, knowing how much they were discontented for the death of Badurio, in whose place they presently set a child, his nephew by the sister, whom certain lords of the coutry took the gouernmēt of with great authority, so as the realme seemed to be diuided among many, which was lesse dangerous for the Portugalls: The gouernment of the fort at Diu, in the place of Sosa, who was slain, was giuen to Antonio Silueria, and 600 soldiers appointed him for his garrison, who could not long rest, beeing still annoyed by them of the countrey; fearing moreover that they should be soon set vpon by the Turkes forces, hauing discovered that Badurio a litle before his death, had with rich presents obtained great succours from Ottoman, and that after his death his wife went vnto the Turkes court, and made greater instance: wherefore the great Turke caused a great army to be prepared at Suez, a port in the farthest bosome of the red sea, Soliman the Eunuch, Bascha of Egypt, who had the charge of it, surpassing so many difficulties as it seemed incredible: And hauing caused timber to be cut in Caramania, he made it to be transported wrought to Damietta, and then by the riuer of Nile to Caire, where the vessells being made, and ready to ioyne, they were in the end carried vpon Camels backs to Suez 80 miles. This army as some write, was of 63 gallies, of 26 barks, the Fort built at Diu by the Portugalls.

Badurio king of Cambaia slaine by the Portugalls.

Army of Turkes prepared against the Portugalls.

1537

the which there ioynd 6 galleons, 6 galeots, 2 foists or Olcadi, 26 ships of burthen, and many other small barks, as they might well carry, besides the men of seruice, 20000 soldiers, among the which were 4000 lanizaries, with so much artillery, as they thought necessary for so great an enterprise. Towards the end of Iune, Solyman went from Suez with this army: in his voyage he strangled Zebith Novada lord of that place, by whom he had bin bountifullly entertained: then continuing his course, on the 5 of Iuly, he came to Aden, a famous citie & port, standing vpon the left point of the Persian gulph. Here the Eunuch gaue a new testimony of his treacherous crueltie, for first he craftily sent some of his men into the city, where they were friendly entertained, and then he procured that K. (who we said had contracted friendship with the Portugalls) to come and visit him in his ships, faining himselfe sick, where this king complaining much of the tyranny that was vsed against him, being made acquainted with Solyman's mind, he was presently hung vp at the maine yard, with some of his people which had accompanied him. The army staid some daies at Aden, first sacking the city, & then leauing a good garrison to keep it for the Ottomans, and then they sailed towards Diu, where they arriued the 4. of Septemb. There they found the Portugalls ready to receiue them as enemies, for approaching neere 2 of their gallies were sunck with the Artillery, so as they were forced to retire, and to be more warie in their landing, which they did afterward with the great ordnance to batter the castle. Solyman's army was much augmented, by some lords of the country that ioynd with him, among whom there was one called Coffaro, his mother a Turk, his father a Christian, born in Chio; others say that his name was Cotazaffer, a renegado, borne in Calabria, who had bin very deere to the deceased K. of Cambaia, and had brought vnto him 20000 souldiers gathered vp in the country. They ioyntly besieged the fort both by sea and land; Silueria hauing but few souldiers in regard of the enemies number, & his continuall toile; & with all he had not much poulder for the vse of his artillery; wherof he did aduertise the viceroy being in Goa, crauing succors, and assuring him that they had made what defence was fit for them. There were in Diu, besides the chiefe fort held by the Portugals 2 towers of a reasonable strength, in the one there were 60, in the other 50 souldiers, and being both battred by the Turks (who had treacherously sackt the citie in entring, without respect that they had declared theselues friends) the one was yielded vpon conditions, but il obserued, for hauing promised liberty to the Portugall souldiers, they made them gally slaues. The Bascha did also batter the castle, shewing more furie then iudgement: Silueria defended it with great iudgement & valor, making sallies vpon the enemy, & disappointing all their designs: the Turks, besides their huge artillery had with their pioners raised a mount against the fort so high as they might look into it, & discouer what they did, annoying the defendants much with their shot. But the Portugalls did speedily preuent it, making diuers Trauerfes, imploying therein all their cotton, timber, or whatsoeuer else they had. The Turks & they of Cambaia prest the siege hard, but more by land than by sea, for that they held it weakest on that side, so as battering a tower they made a great ruine, by the which they were in great danger to lose the whole castle, the enemy seeking twise a day to force it, which they continued all the month of October. Silueria did sodenly cast vp a trauers with good flanks, wherby they might brauely defend theselues, making great slaughter of the Turks. On the 20 of October they attempted to take a tower standing towards the sea, for the defence of the Castle by scalado, but they were repulst with great losse: yet the next day they came with 10 gallies, & 33 armed barks, with great numbers of soldiers, to force the tower, but in vaine; for they were not only forced to retire by 50 Christians which defended it, but also flanked by the artillery of the castle, there were in 2 daies about 800 slain, & many vessels sunck. Three daies after at noon day, when they least expected, there was a fally made by 150 Portugalls, who entred the Turks trêches, that were sleeping, with such resolution, as they slew about 260, & so disordered the whole army, as they could scarce put theselues in defence, but seeing the nûber so small, they offered to charge them, yet so late, as they had time to retire into the fort in good order, with the losse of 3 men only, & 6 hurt. Soon after Silueria sent a frigot to Goa, to craue aid frô Acugna, who had already sent 16 galeots, with poulder, march, & some soldiers, but they were not yet come to Diu. At the coming of this second message to Goa, Garcia of Norogna was come to be viceroy,

King of Aden hanged at a mainyard by the Turkes.

Fort at Diu held by the Portugalls besieged by the Turkes.

Sallie of the Portugalls upon the Turkes
at Diu.

Garcia Norogna viceroy
at the Indies.

1537

A viceroy, who took vpon him the charge to prepare a great armie, to succor the besieged, and to fight with the enemy, if need were. Arriuing the 11 of September, and taking vpon him the gouernment, he gaue libertie to Acugna to returne into Europe, but he died in his voyage neere vnto cap Bone Esperance, hauing bin gouernor for his K. tenne yeres at the Indies, with much honor and reputation. Norogna came wel provided from Portugall, for this war, for that they had intelligence of the Turks preparation in Egypt, bringing 7000 soldiers in 11 ships, being at Goa he prepared 12 great ships of burthen, called hulks, 16 galleons, 25 characels, 29 gallies of 26 banks, 15 galeots, and 20 foists, which in all made 117 great & small, but all well armed. The 1 of Nouember, Solyman made his first attempt to force the castle of Diu, but he found a braue resistance. Silueria hauing the night before discovered the Turks intentions by their preparations. At the break of day there approached neere vnto the tower vpon the sea, about 50 barks and 12 gallies full of soldiers & engins, making a shew to assaile it, but it was only to draw their force thither, from the land part, where they meant to make their greatest attempt. But Silueria like a discreet capitaine, knowing the strength of that part towards the sea, brought his greatest force, where there was most need, & where the enemy was likely to vse his greatest force. And so it fell out, for first of all there were 3000 Turks, which presented themselves to the assault, who for an houres space were brauely affronted by the Portugalls, and in the end repulst with great losse: but the Bascha renewed the fight with brauer men, but fewer in number, which did not a little terrifie Silueria, who had seen many of his men slaine in the first assault. He therefore commaunded his lieutenant Roderigo of Araue, who was in the tower towards the Sea, to come vnto him with his fresh band: the which was speedily effected, but vnfortunatly for him, being slain with a shot, in whose place Emanuel Vasconcello was put, being followed by 30 fresh souldiers, for that the enemy omitted no force. Vasconcello carried himselfe brauely, the enemy being vpon the breach, whereas they were come to the sword, & in the end repulst. Hauing had som litle rest, behold ther sallied out of the trêches about 6000 lanizaries, Turks, & others of the realm of Cabaia, which Solyman had chosen & reserved for the last, to ouerthrow the Portugals forces, which were already much weakened; and at the same instant he caused a generall assault to be giuen to the whole castle. The enemy aduanced to the rampires, and the Portugalls made resistance, Silueria went from place to place with a few choice souldiers, and comming where hee saw greatest need, he turned him vnto his company, and said: Ah countrymen, do you not remember that you are the souldiers of Christ, for the confession of whose faith we haue put on these armes, follow me then, & sacrifice your liues gloriously in his seruice, who refused not to suffer a shameful death for our health. And without speaking more words, shaking his sword, he went wher he saw most of the enemies, wheras he made such resistance as after 5 houres that this last assault continued, he made the enemies attempts vaine. At the last night gaue an end to this cruell assault, not without great slaughter of the Mahumetans; they had lost that day, as some write about 3500, besides hurt men, of the Portugals there were 70 slaine, & about 300 wounded, so as they say, there remained only 12 vntoucht. But the numbers of the slaine and wounded are diuersly reported, yet they all affirm, that if the enemy had giuen another assault, they could not haue withstood it, wanting both men & munition, for they had no poulder but what their ordnance was charged with, so as Silueria to prouide for a future mischiefe, caused those peeces which were towards the sea to be drawne away in the night, & to be planted towards the land. But the Bascha seeing his attempts vaine, laied the blame proudly vpon Coffaro, & other Lords of the countrey, who had assured him that the fort was very weake, and not able to make two days defence: moreover he said they had abused him, and not assisted him, with such forces as they had promised him in the beginning, & assured the great Turk in Constantinople, so as full of wrath & shame, he knew not what to resolve, for that there was a bruit of a Portugal army which was preparing at Goa, doubting they wold fight with him both by sea & land, trusting litle in them of Cabaia, who in effect hated him generally, for the sacking of Diu & other great wrongs the Turkes had done them: Besides, they feared that this cruel man hauing chased away the Portugals, would put their new king to death, and seaze tyrannously on the whole Countrey. Whilest they stood vpon these termes,

Death of Norogna
Acugna.

Army of Portugalls prepared against the Turkes.

Assault giuen
by the Turkes
at Diu.

Turkes valiantly repulst at Diu.

1537

the 16 galeots sent by Acugna arrived happily, being come the night after the 2 day of November within sight of Diu, foure miles off from the enemies army, the commanders thought it a politike stratagem, euery one to carry 4 lanthorns, the which succeeded happily; for the enemies thinking they had bin so many ships as they saw lights, and beleueing it had bin the whole army, they lay close and would not hazard to meet them: so as being fauored by the darknes of the night, and the enemies seare, being terrified with the former successe, and the opinion they had of the army, they entred happily into the riuer, which made the port of the castle, bringing great ioy to their friends, who were in that poore estate. The Bascha being first in doubt, was now resolu'd to rise, having no hope to better his condition, whose rising was with such disorder and feare, as it seemed a very flight. Soliman leauing at land about 150 pieces of ordnance as Odez writes, 1000 Turks that were wounded, & another thousand which were gone forth to forrage, all which were slain by them of the country, to reuenge the iniuries they had receiued. The Portugals got the artillery, with some goods of value to repaire the losses they had sustained in those combats. The Turkish army being gone from Diu in this confusion, Soliman reuenged his disgrace vpon those miserable Portugalls, which had bin taken in the Tower, whom he had treacherously kept in prison, causing them to be all murthered.

Turks retire flying from Diu.

The new gouernor Norogna, hearing that his men were freed, that ther was no need to goe with an army to Diu, he resolu'd to secure all things in the prouince, in quieting the peopls minds, the which was easy to effect, through the reputatiō which the Portugals had gotten, in defending themselves against the Turks forces, & by the hatred which they had purchased by their thefts. He therefore made a peace with Mamudio the new K. sisters son to the deceased Badurio. Vpon these conditions, That the Portugalls should be masters of the fort, & port of Diu, but the king should haue half the customs of the said port; & that he might raise a wall right against the fort, but so farre off, as it should no way annoy nor hinder it; which concluded, he provided for the gard of the castell, sending James Sesa for gouernor, in Siluerioes place, who required rest after so honourable a seruice, he had 900 men giuen him for garrison, with all fit prouisiōs. This yong king was not long quiet, but solicited by the ambition of some, and by his grandmother, desirous to reuenge the death of her son, he began to make warre against the Portugalls, vpon a pretext to recouer Bazain, whereof there had been no mention made in the last accord: but it proued a war of no moment.

Mamudio K of Cambisia: and an accord made by him with the Portugalls.

Entervue of the Pope, Emperour, and French king at Nice.

38 After the Emperours retreat out of France, the war being hot in Piedmont, pope Paul considering how many miseries this warre brought vnto Christendome, & fearing and foreseeing the ruine of Italy if it continued, hee procured an entervue of those two princes and himselfe in the towne of Nice, where there was no means to reconcile them: there was onely a truce concluded for ten yeares, of either side the Alpes, both of them holding what they had gotten: the pope hoping during this long truce there would be some means found to conclude a peace. The emperor returning frō Nice towards Spain, he was staid by the weather about Marseilles, where the king sent to intreat him to enter, and to rest himselfe vntill the wind were faire: for the which he gaue him thanks, letting him vnderstand, that he desired they might see one another at Aigues mortes. Whereunto the king consented, and went thither from Auignon, being vpon his returne towards France. The emperor landed, and dined with the king in Aigues mortes, & the king entered afterwards confidently into the emperors galley, where they discouered long together, but what it was few men vnderstood, yet they parted with great shews of friendship.

Emperour and French king meet at Aigues mortes.

1539 Death of the emperesse Isabella.

This yeare one thousand five hundred thirtie and nine, the emperor, the yong prince Philippe his sonne, his two daughters, and the whole Court, were full of sorrow and heauinesse for the death of the emperesse Isabella; she died the first day of Maie being deliuered of a sonne, which followed her soone after, they were both much lamented by the yong Prince, who beganne to feele the heauie crosse whereunto the miserable condition of man is subiect. Shee was carried from Toledo where shee died, with a funerall pompe besitting so great an Emperesse, to bee buried in the royall Chappell of Granado, which honours were afterwarde religiously reiterated in all the Cities subiect to the Emperour her husband, and by King Iohn of Portugall, her brother,

A brother. After her death the emperor Charles remained alwayes a widower, during the which he had a bafe son by a maid whose name and family was concealed: he was called D. Iohn of Austria, whom he did not aduow vntill his death.

1539 D. Iohn of Austria.

39 The emperor being a prince of a great courage and high attempts, embraced many actions, so as his reuenues could hardly supply the charge, wherefore he sought to draw money from the people & towns that were subiect vnto him, by diuers means, by subsidies, impositions, loans and extraordinary beneuolences. Among others he would haue the Castilians make him a present whereunto the Nobility should contribute, without exemption of any, hauing caused it to be propounded in an assembly of the lords & noble men of the countrey, giuing them to vnderstand it was for the charges of the war he made against infidells, whereof the profit and honor was common to them with him. VWhereunto answer was by D. Inigo of Velasco constable of Castille in all their names: That the Nobilitie would neuer suffer their freedoms and liberties to be broken, whereat the emperor was very much discontented; & there hapned at the same time an accident, where by he might see that the nobility of Castille, were not easie to be gouerned as they pleased that councelled him: and this it was. There being a turney held without the city of Toledo, where the court lay, whē the sport was ended, & the emperor desirous to return towards the citie, the presse being great, an Alcaide or Prouost meaning to hasten those that marched before, he strucke the duke of the Infanta gos horse with a riding rod vpon the cropper, he being the chief of the Médofas, & one of the greatest noblemen of Spain, who so suddenly drawing his sword strucke the Alcaide on the head, telling him that he should learn to execute his charge with respect whereupon the dukes seruants would haue slain him presently, but he staid them. The Alcaide being al bloody, presented himself before the emperor, whereat he seeming to be offended, doctor Ronquillo one of the 3 prouosts of the emperors palace, aduanced as if he would lay hold on the duke to carry him to prison: but he was willed to forbear vntill he would receiue as much as the other, and that hee should go and learne his duty better: wherein Ronquillo shewed himselfe nothing obstinate. The duke retired to his lodging being followed by all the pobilitie, leauing the emperor in a manner alone: who dissembled this act, lest hee should cause some trouble in Castille, where they had so freely refused him the donatiue which he had demanded, and D the better to couer his discontentment, hee caused this Alcaide to be put in prison, as hauing exceeded in his charge, sending the duke of the Infanta go word, that he wold cause him to be hanged to giue him satisfaction. The duke came and gaue the king thanks with al humility, sued for his deliuey, had him cured at his charge, and gaue him 500 crowns, wherein he shewed himselfe generous. The emperor soone after passed into Flanders, where he vnderstood that the Gantois were rebelled by reason of subsidies and imposts, which Queene Marie of Hungarie gouernesse of that country had laied vpon them, and discharged his choler vpon that people.

Impositions cause of trouble

Act of choler done by the Infanta go.

Satisfaction done by the emperor to the duke of the Infanta go.

Rebellion of the Gantois for imposts.

The Emperour at his going out of Spaine towards Flanders, he left the prince D. Philip his sonne, his lieutenant and vicegerent there, being then not fourteene yeares old, he was assisted by the same Council that the emperesse his mother had, he took his way thorough France, where he was royally entertained, and accompanied by the Infants of France. Henry Dauphin of Viennois, and Charles duke of Orleans, whom the king his father desired much to see duke of Milan. What passed in his voyage betwixt him and the French, the French historie relates. But the Gantois were severely punished, and kept in awe by a strong Citadell, which was built, furnished and garded at their owne charge: the Emperour being the more incensed for that hee heard of nothing but mutinies and rebellions in all places for want of money: for that at the same time that hee punished them of Gant, the Spanish souldiers which were in Lombardie mutined against the Marquess of Guast gouernour of Milan, for want of pay, but they were pacified by Bernardin of Mendosa had more difficultie to content his mutined garrison in Goullette, being forced to shew his wisdom and to saue both himselfe and the place from their furious disobedience and mutinie, which made him feare that they had some intelligence which the Moores of Tunes or the Turks of Alger, and that they would deliuer

1540

Citadell of Gant built.

Mutinie of the Spaniards in Lombardie.

1541

Rebellion at Gonelle.

liuer the fort into their hands. The duty we owe vnto God, and reasons of State marche not in one ranke in our policies. D. Bernard having aduertised D. Fernand Gonzague viceroy of Sicile, of the danger wherein he was, and had good correspondency with him, he intreated, conured and flattered the Spaniards in such sort as he filled them with hope to receive their pay in short time, holding them in this expectation vntill the coming of the galleys of Sicile, bringing new soldiers to change this garrison: and then it behoued him to lie, and assure them with the most religious cries that might be, that their money was all ready at Messina, to be paid them as soone as they should land, and that the Emperour remembering the good and faithful seruices they had done him, and desirous to reward it, drew them out of that barbarous land, to lodge them in a more pleasant and delightful country where they should be freed from their toyle, perswading them with such good words, as they gave him credit, and embarked in the same galleys: But they were much amazed, that coming to the port of Messina they would not suffer them to enter into the citie, and that they told them there was no money for them, and that they sought to diuide them into diuers garrisons, vntill that the Emperour had otherwise disposed, where one being transported with furie and shame, to haue been thus circumvented, they began to ouerrunne the country, and to spoile houses in open villages, with all the insolencies that might be imagined: they first of all gaue an assault to the towne of Castro real, and had almost forced it: their insolencies were such, as ioyning other mad men vnto them, they were a terrour to all the Island, the viceroy being forced to assemble the nobilitie and commons to suppress them by armes, seeking in the meane time to winne and draw away the heads and ringleaders of this mutinie, so as having won some with othes and promises of impunitie, and hope of pay, he had means to disperse them into diuerse small troups, afterwards he caused the most seditious to be easily apprehended and to be executed by way of Iustice, filling the townes and high waies with gibets well furnished, for examples sake. This seueritie caused the Spanish nation to beare a deadly hatred to D. Fernand.

Punishment of the mutinous Spanish soldiers.

Portugall.

1541 Portugall
not suffer the Castilians to saile to the Molucces.

The Castilians of the east Indies, whereof D. Antonio of Gueuara was gouernor, sent forth in the yeare 1541 a new army to the Molucces, vnder the command of capitaine Villalobos, which arrived safely at Tidore and Gilolo, but hee was as vnfortunate as the rest, which had gone before him, he himselfe with his ships and men falling into the Portugalls hands, hauing retreats and forts in those Islands, and could not indure the Castilians should vnder take that voyage. The like successe they all haue had, which haue since attempted it: whereby it seemed that it was the will of God the Portugalls should inioy them: who haue vsed this nauigation with great honour and profit as well to their owne nation, as to other countries of Europe: hauing made storehouses for that trade, and for the distribution of their merchandise and drugges, in the city of Lisbon, euen vnto the kings palace, vpon the riuier of Tayo, the which are called the house of the Indies. To giue more ornament to the realme of Portugall, the city of Ebora had bene the yere before 1540 made an Archbishopricke at the instance and request of the king D. John in fauor of cardinall Henry infant of Portugall, the kings brother, who was the first Archbishop, hauing the bishop of Silues for his suffragan. So as from that time there were three Metropolitans in Portugall, Braga, Lisbon, and Ebora.

Ebora made an archbishopricke

Castile.

The Emperour hauing settled his affaires in the Netherlands, he went by Metz to Spire, and from thence to Ratisbone, where hee had appointed an imperiall diet, as well to provide for the warre against the Turke, as to bring the Protestants vnder the obedience of the Pope and Church of Rome, which was a faire publique pretext: but hee had other designs for the aduancement of his owne house, which hee did hope to attaine vnto, vnder colour of religion, as it appeared, and vntill at that time this shadow of religion, hee thought to stay the French king from making war (being much offended, for that Cesar Fregose and Anthony Rincon his embassadours, were murdered vpon the riuier Po, going to Venice) by vnder taking the conquest of Alger, for the which hauing assembled what forces hee thought sufficient out of Germanie, Italie and Spaine, hauing seene Pope Paul at Luques, receiving obstinately the wise counsell of Andrew Doria and other great Captaines, aduising him to deferre the enterprise vntill the

Voyage of the emperor to Alger.

1541

A the Spring following (by reason of the season of Autume which would be come before hee should land his men, and the bad disposition of that yeare: but he imbarqued in the port of Luna, and came in view of Alger with about two hundred and fiftie vessels, of the which there were threecore & fise galleys which caried two and twenty thousand foot entertained, with some three thousand voluntaries, and twelue hundred horse, besides the traine of noblemen and captains which did accompany him, whereof the chiefe were D. Fernand Gonzague Viceroy of Sicile, D. Fernand of Toledo duke of Alua, Andrew Doria prince of Melfi, Virginio Visino earle of Anguilara, Augustine Spinola, and Camillo Colonna. Barberousse had left Affan Aga a renegado of Sardinia gouernour in Alger, being accompanied (besides the Moores inhabitants) by many Turkes, of the which there were 800 horsemen, for the defence of the towne, & without it there were great numbers of horse and foot, Alarabes and Africans entertained, or otherwise drawne thither with the hope of spoile: For this vagabond nation doe like vnto rauens or vultures, who by a certaine instinct follow armies, being assured to finde whereon to feede: So this people when they heare of any tumult in the country, they stay not till they be inuited, but flie thither in great troups, as people which haue no other care nor imploiment but to theue, by whom the emperours army was much annoyed in the landing, which was on the East side towards Cape Metafuso, within 7 miles of Alger. They diuided the army into three battallions; on the left hand were the Spaniards with Aluaro de Sande marshal of the field, and with D. Fernand Gonzague viceroy of Sicile, and the duke of Camerino. In the battel where the emperours person was, the Germans marched, and on the right hand towards the sea, were the Italians with their colonels, the earle of Santa Fiora, and other noblemen aduenturers. That day they marched only 2 miles, and staid neere vnto a fountaine that night, hauing still sight of the Moores and Arabians on horse backe, but they durst not approach to charge the Christians; but at night thinking they had bene at rest, they came downe from a neere mountaine on the south side with great cries, & charged the Christians, by whom they were easily repulst with losse. The Emperour at his first landing had sent to trie Affan Aga the gouernour, if hee would yeeld vp the place to his Majesty for reward, and not subiect himselfe to the danger of a mighty and victorious enemy. But the Aga answered with a smiling countenance, that hee was to defend that place against the Christians, as it had bene done twice to their great losse, and some write, that hee grew thus confident, not that hee found himselfe so well furnished for his defence; but through the words of an old Inchauntresse, who hauing foretold the vnfortunate attempts of D. Diego de Vera, and D. Hugo de Montada, had also affirmed that the Emperour of Christendome should suffer great losse there. The next day they marched three miles, and camped within two miles of Alger, in a place strong by nature, being flanked by two torrents which fall from the mountaines, the Spanish foot (whereof the Duke of Alua generall of the horse was the chiefe) took their lodging vpon a little hill, from which the army might haue been much annoyed. The sea being also growne somewhat calme after a great storme, the galleys came within canon shot of Alger, and the shippes drawing neere, they did with great toyle vnship their horses, there being a great skirmish betwixt the Spaniards and Moores vpon the hill. But in the meane time they gaue order to land their victuals, artillerie and munition. Towards night the sea began to swell againe, & there fell such abundance of raine all night, with a cold northern wind, which is dangerous vpon that coast, as both the campe at land, and the army at sea did suffer much, and the enemies imbracing this occasion, thinking they could not be much annoyed with the Christians shot, meant to assaile them at the breake of day. And so the Arabians which were abroad, and the Turkes and Moores within the city being ioynd, made a great attempt on the Spaniards and Italians quarters, towards the mountaine and the sea shoare, the Germans being something more backward: but the Spaniards repulst the enemy valiantly, although they could not vse their harquebuses, & did win much more commendation than the Italians, who keeping a gard vpon a bridge which was vpon one of those torrents, suffered them to winne that passage, so as the enemies horsemen came euen vnto their quarter. Camillo Colonna was that day in gard, who with great valour withstood the Barbarians force, and putting them to flight, chased them beyond the

Disposition of the Alarabes of Affrike.Imperiall army landed at Alger.Italians assailed
by the Turkes
at Alger.

1543

the bridge, thinking it sufficient: But it was the opinion of D. Ferdinand of Gonzagato pursue the enemy, that they of the towne not being able to vse their artillerie by reason of the raine, the Christians in their pursuite might happely enter pell mell with the Turkes, and so sending Spinolaes regiment after them, they pursued them vnto the port of Algier, the which they finding shut, the Turkes went about the wall, and being well acquainted with those places, escaped from the Italians: who retiring encouraged the enemy to fall forth, and to pursue them with great numbers; they being new souldiers, tired with the raine and myre, not knowing the country, and wearied first with pursuing the enemy, they fainted and disbanded, so as the Barbarians made a great slaughter of them, for Assan Aga falling forth with his horsemen, and fresh foot, they were easily put to rout, but some knights of Rhodes, colonell Spinola, count John Francisco de Bagna, with some few captaines and old souldiers, making a stand at a bridge, withstood the enemies force: And yet worse would haue happened considering their great aduantage of armes, vsing arrowes and stones, whereas the Christians could not vse their harquebuses, vnlesse the emperour, who that day, and alwayes performed the duty of a captaine, a sergeant, and a souldier, had not come to succour them with some companies of Germans; whereof the first being put to flight, he with an inuincible mind giuing courage to the rest both with words and action, in the end he repulsed the enemy, and retired his men out of that dayes daunger, hauing lost about 300 men, and 200 hurt, but few men of account: D. Carlo of Lanoye sonne to the prince of Sulmona was wounded. But the fortune of the armie at sea was more miserable, which tost with the waues and windes, had continued from midnight vntill noone the next day, in a hard and insupportable conflict, against the furious violence of those enemies. The ships which had no other shelter, but to commit themselves to the mercy of the raging windes, sought to vnburthen themselves, casting their ordnance or any thing else of weight into the sea, & cutting downe their masts; yet many perished, being either swallowed vp in the sea, or beating one against another were driuen on shoare, to be a prey the Barbarians. With the like misfortune, but with more art, and force, the gallies did strue. Doria, and the other captains of iudgement laboring to preserue them with many anchors, & with the industrie of their oares, they also casting their artillerie ouer boord; but they still finding themselves in exceeding great danger, some hoping to saue their liues at land, cut their cables, and ranne on ground, which was a most miserable spectacle: for the gallies breaking, whilest that the men tired with the toile, being vp to the chin in water, sought to saue themselves, & held it for a happinesse to be accepted for slaues, the Arabians and Moores which stood ready, to make the vnfortunate condition of those Christians more miserable, shewed themselves to be greedy of their blood and death, killing them most barbarously without any mercy. Among which Iannettin Doria Admirall ranne on ground neere vnto the Emperours campe, so as it might well be relieued by his maiestie, who presently sent some companies of Italians, to suppress the furie of the Arabians, and saued that valiant yong man, with the greatest part of his companie. There perished foureteene gallies, some write fiftene after this manner, whereof eleuen did belong to prince Doria, and the rest to Anthony Doria, to Naples, and Spaine; of greater vessels some say seuentie, and some a hundred and fifty, of shippes, carauells, and pinaces. At night it grew somewhat calme, so as in the morning the gallies drew neere vnto the shoare, where they lay first, but towards euening the wind grew high againe, so as prince Doria did perswade them to retire to cape Matauso, holding that place to be lesse daungerous, for that there were few rocks, the which the emperour perceiuing, and seeing that there were no victuals in the campe, the souldiers hauing bene the day before without any meate, he resolved to rise and march that day six miles with his whole armie. The which he had put in good order, for that the enemy was still behind him & on his flanks, yet they durst not charge them; the sick & hurt men being put in the midst of the squadrans, vsing all care to saue them, yet many were slaine by those Barbarians, being so weak as they could not be carried. For wanting all kind of victuall, they had relieued themselves those two daies with the roots of dates which they call palmette, & horse-flesh, some being slaine to that end. They came that day vnto a riuer, which the Moores call Agaraz, the which was so risen with

Shipwracke of the imperiall
army in Algier.

1541

Hunger in the Emperors army.

A with the raine, as it was not possible to wade through, where by reason thereof, and to see if they could get any victuals, they staid that night, and gathering together the masts and yarges of broken ships in that riuer, they made a bridge to passe the Germanies and Italians the next day, the Spaniards hauing found out a foard somewhat higher. The Turkes and Moores of Algier did not pursue the armie any further, and the Arabians did little annoy them, so as within two daies they came vnto their gallies.

B Heere the emperour did somewhat refresh his army, drawing some victuals out of the ships, and then hee gaue order for their shipping, which was on the last day of October. The inuincible and vndaunted courage of the emperour was admirable; who was a great consolation to those afflicted troupes: but in the shipping of the armie there was great pietie noted in him; thinking it impossible that ships shaken with the rage of the Sea, should carrie so much people, hee commaunded that all the horses whatsoeuer should bee cast into the Sea, were they of better so great price, nor regarding the intreaties of their owners, desiring rather to saue the basest soldier being a man and a Christian, than those noble instruments of warre: D. Ferdinand of Gonzaga, staid two daies to imbarke, who coasting along Barbarie towards the East, had a shorter passage into Sicile. The Sea grew rough again, and they staid not long to haue more particuler directions, the emperour hauing giuen order where his troupes should land.

Constancy and pietie of the emper Charles

C There is a memorable accident reported of two ships full of Spaniards, which in the tempest were driuen on shoare neere vnto Algier, the souldiers within them seeking to preserue their liues by being slaues, but the cruell Arabians thirsting after mans blood, refusing to accept them, they made a braue and generous resolution, so as keeping close together, they marcht fighting euen to the verie gate of Algier, where they gaue Assan Aga to vnderstand that they were come to yeeld themselves his slaues, hoping that hee being borne a Christian, would not suffer them to be torn in peeces by the rage of the Arabians, whose liues might be a greater benefit, & so they were preferred by that Assan with more shew of humanity. The gallies which were with the emperours person, running the same fortune recovered the port of Bugia, and there they refreshed themselves a little, and then the seas being somewhat calmed, they sailed towards Spaine, where the emperour landed at Carthage, from whence hee sent to Occagna to visit his daughters, hauing first met with the Prince, D. Philippe, who went speedily to doe his duty, and to reioyce at his returne, who with an inuincible courage, speaking little of his losse, shewed how we should beare the crosses of humane accidents: Prince Doria who yeelded not to any in greatnesse of minde and constancy, being arrived in Italie, where the miserable successe of this enterprise, was already knowne, he did comfort such as came to condole with him for his losse, and sought to comfort him. But the emperours bounty repaired his great losse, for he did not onely giue him three thousand ducats offerely sent for euer out of the fines at Naples, but he also made him Protototarie of that kingdome, which is the fist of the seuen principall offices; the which the prince John Andrew his nephew doth now enioy.

Spaniards pre-
serue their liues generously against the Ara-bians.

Emperour
Charles his returne into Spaine from the pillage of Algier.

Bounty of the emperour to Prince Doria.

41 At the emperours returne from Algier, hee found himselfe engaged in a difficult warre, against the French king, the which would not suffer him to make any long aboad in Spaine. The king pretended that the truce had bene broken, and the first violated by the Marquesse of Guast his lieutenant in Lombardie, by reason of the murder of Eugene and Rinson: which fact being sufficiently verified, he was assembled by him, whereupon the French king, began the warre in many places: In Brabant, and the countie by the lord of Longuenall, and Martin van Rosse in the countie of Luxemburg by the duke of Orleans: The Dauphin Henry was come into the countie of Roussillon, & did beseege the Towne of Perpignan with forty thousand foot, two thousand men at armes, two thousand light horse, and great store of artillerie, one of the goodliest armies the French had of long time drawne together; the which proued to bee of no effect, for that proceeding so slowly the duke of Alua had meanes to put some troupes into the town (which was ill furnished) by land, and D. Bernardin of Mendoza newly made generall of the gallies of Spaine, to supplie it with victuals and all other kind of munition by sea,

41
Warre betwixt
the French king
& the emperour.

B b b b b

so

1542

so as the Prince seeing it was not easie to force, and hearing of great succours G which did aduance both from Spaine and Italie, hee retyred. In Italie the Lord of Langey made warre for the king, and in Picardie the duke of Vendosme: what the successe was, the French Historie will fully satisfie you.

The emperor feeling yet the bad successe of this affaires of Barbarie, and stung by the French in so many places, fainted not: but that which did most trouble him, was the due tie he ought vnto Germanie as emperor: for besides that Sultan Solyman had newly repulst the forces of the empire from before Buda, hee was aduertised that hee prepared to returne, this yeare in person into Hungarie with a mighty armie: and that which toucht him nerer, he vnderstood that by the persuation of the French king, and of Captaine Paulin, his embassador in the East, Barberousse was at Sea, with a great number of gallies and foists, with an intent to inuade his Countries of Naples and Sicile, and to spoile Spaine if hee might finde any opportunitie.

To prevent all these mischiefes, hee went to Barcelone to passe into Italie: where whilst they made the gallies readie for his passage, and that the Souldiers came which should goe with him, hee went into Nauarre, and caused some roades to bee made into the neere frontier of Fraunce, and the Towne of Saint John de Luz to bee burnt. And seeing himselfe thus prest, hee held the support of Henry the eight, king of England, to bee needfull, with whome hee entred into league.

Having concluded together how they should make warre, the emperor came to Genoua with forty gallies, and some troupes, when as Barberousse sackt and burnt the coast of Calabria, and had taken the town of Regium in the streit against Sicile. Then the Turkish armie came to Ostia, which did much amaze the Romanes, but they did only water, and so past, not doing any harme to the territories of the church, which were recommended by the French king, then leauing the riuer of Genoua, hee came to Marcelles.

The French king had sent Frances of Bourbon, duke of Anguien to bee his lieutenant, in Prouence, and to receiue the Turkes armie, who attending Barberousse, and thinking to surpris the Castle of Nice, had like to haue bene surpris himselfe, by Janetia Doris, who watcht for him within the Port, with twentie gallies; for hee, beleuing one, who had laied this double plot, aduentured to goe with some of the kings gallies, whereof foure, which hee had caused to aduance were taken, and hee himselfe, escaped by flight. Barberousse being come, Doris quit the Port and Towne of Nice to the Turkes, who sackt and burnt it, but the Castle held good, being valiantly defended by Paul Simon, a knight of Malta, the place being of itselfe vncaie to batter, and worse to assaile, but after a while they tooke an occasion to leaue the siege. Barberousse retyred with his gallies to Antibio, being much discontented against the French, for the bad prouision hee had found in Prouence, for the warre, for hee saw many necessarie prouisions to faile them suddenly, and that the kings men were often forced to borrow powder, match and other necessities from the Turkes; so as hee grew often into such a rage, as hee did threaten Captaine Paulin to put him in chaines, and to carrie him to Constantinople, there to bee punished as an abuser, and lyer, hauing made infinite promises to the great Turke, whereof hee saw no effect, the which hee had done if the prince of Anguien had not somewhat pacified him with good words. Being at Antibio, he vnderstood that the Marquesse of Guast drew the ordinance out of the sea: After which he went & wintred at Tolon, from whence he sent five and twenty gallies to Alger, with the spoiles which hee had taken, the which they increased with many poore prisoners of either sex, passing along the coast of Cate logne and Valencia, and with a ship and a galley, which they found neere vnto Palamos, which they carried away.

I must speake some thing of Fernando Cortez, who conquered Mexico, from whence hee was

S. John de Luz burnt by the Spaniards.

Barberousse
besieged the Castle of Nice.

Fernando Cortez deprived of his government of Mexico.

1542

A was called being viceroy, by the meanes of some which enuied his greatnes, being accused in Spaine vnto the emperor, and forced to come and yeeld himselfe a prisoner, in theyeare one thousand five hundred and forty: he could not so soone iustifie his innocencie, although hee were in a manner as a libertie following the emperor to the warre of Alger, yet hee had no command; and as one in disgrace with his Maiestie, hee was neuer called to counsell in those dangerous accidents, although hee were a great Captaine, and had bene tryed in greater difficulties, whereof hee had giuen good proofes in all his attempts.

B Hee carried with him indifferently in this expedition, five admirable emeralds, the which hee lost, whose forme and qualitie being held rare and precious, it is fit there should be some mention made of them. One of them which was valued at forty thousand ducats, had the forme of a scy, the button whereof was a great pearle, and the foot of pure golde, the second was like a little bell, the clapper was of pearle verie properly made: the third had the figure of a fish, on the head whereof there were eies of gold, artificially wrought, the fourth was cut like a horne, and the fift like a rose. After the return from that vnfortunate attempt of Alger, he laboured five yeres to proue his innocencie, and in the end had leaue from the emperor to returne to Mexico, and to hold his first honours and estates, but he could neuer enjoy them, for being sixtie yeares olde, hee died in the beginning of December one thousand five hundred forty seuen, leauing an honorable testimony behind him, to haue bene valiant, modest, and religious.

C After the taking of the Citty of Cusco at Peru by Francis Pizarro, the Spaniards went to take the towne of Quito, which was great and rich, and stood in an excellent ayre almost vnder the South line, the which, besides that it abounds in mines of metall, hath great store of quicke siluer of yellow colour as they write. There came other Spaniards from Panama, vpon the heare of this great store of gold which Pizarro had found in that prouince, and they soone made good purchase, though not so great as they expected.

D There came also from S. Iago in new Spain, Pedro de Aluaredo, with a fleet of some ships, thinking to effect some great matters, but Pizarro would not suffer him to make any profit in the countrey which he had discouered, and was his government: wherefore they agreed to leaue his ships with Francis for 100000 crowns, and Aluaredo returned from whence he came. In the yere 1535 the citty of Lima was enlarged, and many dwellings made for Spaniards by Pizarro, he made it the residence for the council of the realme, and called it the kings citty, choosing it for his dwelling, & giuing the government of Cusco to Almagro.

E This yeare 1542 the emperor caused the Prince D. Philip to be sworne future king of Spaine, by the estates of the Countrey, seeking to draw his subjects to giue him good helps for the future warre, wherein hee was well assisted by the treasure which came in those daies from the West-Indies for his fift part, besides a great summe of money which was lent him by Merchants, and others, giuing them assignements out of the ordinarie reuenues of his realmes. He was come to Barcelona, to be neere to Perpignan, or to any other attempt of the French, and there he caused the Spanish footmen to passe, which had been in Sardynia at his returne from Alger, the which hee wold haue remaine vpon those frontiers, if need should require, or be transported elsewhere vpon any occasion. From Barcelona he went with the court to Tarazona, from thence to Tortosa, & then to Valencia, the Prince making a solemne entrie in all these place, where he was entertained with great feasts and pompe.

F After which they past the feasts of Christmas at Alcalá of Henares, whereas their ioy was doubled by the presence of the two Infants, two marriages being concluded at that time; one of the Prince D. Philip and D. Maria Infanta of Portugall, daughter to king John the third, the other of D. Iohn prince of Portugall, a youth of fourteene yeares of age, and D. Ioane the emperours second daughter. They continued in Alcalá with great feasting, vntill the end of the yeare, and then went to Madrid, where hee made his entrie the first day of the yeare one thousand five hundred forty and three, where they made preparation of new solemnities for the future marriage, as also for the warre, the emperor being resfolued to passe into Italy in the Spring.

B b b b ij.

The

Emeralds, five exceeding faire

Proceedings of Pizarro at Peru.

Lima called the kings Citty.

D. Philip sworn future king of Spaine.

Philip prince of Spaine contracted to the Infanta
of Portugall

1543 Marriages of the Prince and Infant of Spaine.

Tremessen rebels against the emperor

Earle of Alca-dette as the enterprize of Tre-messen.

The marriage of prince Philip concluded in winter, was celebrated in March after, with great pompe and state, and in like maner that of the Infanta his sister; the Emperor neglecting nothing touching his preparation for warre, as well against the French, who had the yeare before annoyed him in many places, as also against the Moores of Tremessen, who according to their naturall inconstancie, had inuisiously rebelled. To suppress the which hee had in beginning of this yeare, sent D. Martin of Cardone, earle of Alcadette into Africke with eight thousand foot, and about fiftene hundred horse, what succeeded there you shall heereafter heare. After which having provided a great summe of money, and such foote and horse as should passe with him into Italie, hee gave order for the government of those Realmes vnder the charge of the king D. Philip, to whome hee appointed for his chiefe Councellours, the commander Cowas, and the Duke of Alua; fore-seeing many matters of great importance, and providing for them all with great care, as hee that sought to make his forces greater, to free himselfe from the molestations of Fraunce, and frustrate their praides which they had in Germanie, where they had those Princes readie to make any alteration, being not greatlie affected to the house of Austria: wherefore hee fought to settle the greatnesse of his house, for many ages, according vnto humane wisdom: And therefore hee had matcht D. Philippe his Sonne to the eldest daughter of Portugall, and to the sole Prince of the realme had given his second Infanta, onely with foure hundred thousand crownes dowrie, although his Sonne had receiued double the summe, and for Maximilian, eldest sonne to Ferdinand his brother, hee had reserved his eldest daughter for all doubtfull euent of succession in those great dominions.

In the beginning of the yeare the emperor (as wee haue said) had sent the earle of Alcadette to the enterprize of Mostagan; who going with eight thousand foote and fiftene hundred horse from Oran; in the beginning of Februarie this yeare, neere vnto Tabida, had a skirmish with the Moores, who charged him in thereareward, but it was of no moment. The next day at the passing of a riuer neere vnto Tabida, they found a greater armie of Moores, both horse and foot furnished with good shot, yet the Spaniards marcht in such order, and shewed themselves so valiant, as notwithstanding that the enemy stood ready on the other side of the riuer (which they were to wade through) to receiue them, yet they repulst them with great losse, and aduanced to take Tabida.

Having rested there a while, they marcht on the next day, but somewhat late, towards Tremessen, lodging two leagues from the citie, being continually molested by the Moores, with often charging and flying away. The king was in Tremessen where hee had leuied what souldiers he could both of horse and foot, having entertained about 400 Turkes which were in garrison vpon that coast, so as the next morning the earle did with great indgement put his men in battell, lest that (being farre inferiour in nuber to the enemy) he should be inuironed by so great a multitude, & disordered, being charged in front, flanke, and rere: and therefore he so disposed of his troupes, both horse and foot, as they might fight and succour one another, fortifying his rereward as much as might be, for that he vnderstood they had laied an ambush, and would charge them behind. They had sent the woman and children with their richest mooueables into the mountaines which were neere, to preserve them whatsoeuer should happen; and the king having disposed of his troupes, would not be present at the battell, but attend the euent in a place of safetie. The two armies being ioyned, the Spaniards shewed no lesse valour then was needfull, the enemies foreward being greater then all their army, and although the Moores in the beginning shewed great resolution, & discharged a great volley of shot, yet they did it so disorderly, and so far off, as there was not any one slain, and but three lightly hurt, the Spaniards giuing them no time to charge again, & the horse coming vpon them with great violence: the fight continued about two houres; and the General having placed some loose shot in the head of the foreward, they made a great spoile of the Moores and Turkes; so as in the end the enemy was put to rout on that side, whilst that they fought with great obstinacy in the rereward. Thither the earle sent two companies, who charged with such resolution, on, as the Spaniards taking new courage, & the enemy being amazed, having seen their companions put to rout, the battell was ended (having continued about three houres) & the Christians won the victorie, but there was no great slaughter of the Moores, who desired rather to saue themselves by flight than by fighting obstinately, to giue their enemies any cause to feare a new encounter. The king of Tremessen, who expected the doubtfull euent of this battell, having a signe giuen him by smook that it was lost, he provided for his safety by flight among the rest. The earle of Alcadette did win great honor in this battell both for his valor and iudgement, being worthily imitated by his three sons, D. Alfonso, D. Francisco, & D. Alvaro, the first leading a part of the foreward, & the second of the rereward: D. Alfonso of Villaruolo marshall of the field, D. Martin of Cordoua, D. John Pacheco with other noblemen of marke, were much commended for their prowesse that day. This victorie was won the fift of Februarie, the victor having lost few men, and most of them were slaine with crosbows, whereof there were not aboue a hundred among the Moores, and about fife thousand Harquebuziers. The Spaniards desirous to enter the Towne, the generall sought to stay them that night, fearing the slaughter would be great, or there would be some great disorder committed in the sacke: wherefore he lodged the army without the town, among certain Oliue trees, giuing good instructions vnto the captains, to prevent all dangers which might grow by their too great confidence of the victorie, or the disorders which doe accompany spoiling; as it hath often fallen out, either by the small authority of the generall, or by indiscretion, on want of militarie discipline.

About this time the state of Tunes (which the emperor had conquered and restored to Muley Hascen) fell into great combustions, he having only retained Goulette, with an homage and small tribute for the kings of Spain, as we haue said. The occasion was that Muley Hascen, being desirous to confer with the emperor, had past into Sicilie, with an intent to come vnto him to Genoa, or wherefoeuer he should be at his last passage out of Spaine; after which hee came to Naples, and meaning to continue his course by sea he was staied there some daies by a tempest, during the which D. Pedro de Toledo, viceroy of Naples, receiued a commandement to will him not to depart from thence, vntill hee receiued farther newes from the emperor, who was busied with the warres of France, and would not haue any thing to diuert him. This king as it was reported, had a meaning to demand some forces against the Turkes which held Constantine, a towne within his realme, the which was rich and strong, and did much annoy him; and for that at the time of his passage into Sicilie, Barberousse was at Marseille, hee feared also that in his returne he would fall vpon him.

He thought in like maner that in leauing the countie he should auoid some great accident wherewith the starres did threaten him, if hee remained in Africke at that season, this prince being studious of Astrologie, and too credulous of such diuinations. During his absence, such as loued him not and desired some Innouation in the state, bruted it out that the king was dead at Naples, after that he had bene baptizd; and prest his Sonne Amida, (who had the command of certaine garrisons which were appointed to withstand the invasions of the Turkes, and the thefts of the Alarabes, which did adhere vnto them,) to hasten his coming vnto the Citie, and to seaze vpon the Caffe and his fathers treasure, before that his younger brother called Mahumet (who remained in hostage at Goulette) should preuent him, and make himselfe king with the helpe of Francis de Tovar, then Gouverneur of the fort. Amida did easily credit that which it may bee he desired, and although in the beginning he found some resistance, which was made him by the Manufette of Tunes, (who as it is were the kings Lieutenant general in that Countie) yet in the end hee preuailed, and slue all his fathers friends & seruants, yea, hee abused his wiues and concubines.

The newes being brought to Naples, Muley Hascen was much troubled; & making great hast to depart, he made great instance to haue some forces, the which hee obtained of the viceroy, who suffered him to leue 1800 men, such as were banished & condemned by iustice, to whom impunitie was promised, if they went to this warre; & they had a gentleman of the countie appointed for their commander, whose name was Baptista Lofredo: with which troupe the King did assure himselfe that hee should bee able to surpris his rebellious

King of Tremessen defeated by the Spaniards
first.

1545
Moores 42.

Muley Hascen
king of Tunes
disposeth again.

Moores curious and superstitious.

Sonne disposed of the father.

Amida incestuous.

1545

bellious sonne before hee were settled. Being come to Goulette the Gouverneur G sought to dissuade him from going into the Towne; no nor to approach too neere, before hee vnderstood how the people were affected, and whether there were any men of authoritie of his faction, to assist him: notwithstanding that, some Africanes came to visite him, promising him by ceremonies, orthes (setting their daggers against their throates, according to their manner) to aide him, and to die with him if neede were, whome the gouverneur wisht him not to trust.

Notwithstanding all that Touar could say vnto the king, and to Lofredo, they would needs march towards the towne, but before they came thither, they knew that they had beene well aduised by Touar, for they fell into an ambush which Amida had laid for them, and were charged by so great a multitude of horse and foot, as they had no meanes to saue themselves. In this defeat there were slaine about thirtene hundred Christians vpon the place; the rest with great difficulty recovered Goulette, disarmed (having cast them away) and wounded. Among the which the king had escaped, had hee not beene discouered by the perfumes wherewith hee was annointed according to his custome; whereupon he was hotly pursued and taken.

Defeat of Christians.

King of Tunes taken.
Crueltie of the sonne to his father and Brethren.

Being deliuered to his wicked sonne, hee caused his eyes to be presently put out, the like crueltie hee vsed to Nahasar and Abdulas his younger brethren, who were taken with the king, to whome hee reproached that hee did him but justice, for that he had in like maner made his Vncles blinde, and in the end had slaine them, to raigne. Which being done, Amida renewed with Francis de Touar, all the conuentions and accords which his father had made with the emperor, and did the same homage. The which Touar thought good to accept by provision, applying himselfe to the time, drawing (for that hee would not seeme too carefull of that which had hapned) a certaine number of ducats from the new tyrant; who also deliuered twenty knights, Rabatins of the blind kings gard, who had been imprisoned for that they had shewed themselves too affectionat to his seruice; yeelding vp also the ensignes, which had beene taken from Lofredo, and his body, without a head, that they might burie it after the maner of Christians: And moreouer Amida deliuered into his hands for hostage a sonne of his called Seithen. But notwithstanding all this, Francis de Touar, detesting the fact of Amida, as vnworthie to bee tolerated by the emperor, hee did aduertise Abdamelec one of the brethren of Muley Hasen, (who had escaped with Araxid, and liued then in exile with a Lord of Numidia, called Anensiba) wishing him to come speedily to Tunes, hauing wacht an opportunitie by the absence of Amida, who was gone to Biserte to receiue that rich custome of fishing which was neere. Abdamelec was not sloathfull, but coming secretly to Goulette, hee found meanes to enter into Tunes by night, with a good number of horse which had accompanied him, going directly to the Castle with his head and his face couered, and wrapt in a sheet after the maner of the Countrie, where hee was receiued without any difficultie, they thinking it to bee Amida who was returned from Biserte, but they soone found their owne error, and being amazed L thought to fall to armes; but they that were most forward, were presently slaine, and the rest so terrified, as they yeilded. Abdamelec being Master of the Castle, hee caused many of the towne which did fauour him to come, by whome hee was saluted and acknowledged for king of Tunes; but hee raigned but thirtie and sixe daies, dying of a pestilent burning feuer. Before his death hee drew Muley Hasen out of prison, who receiued this good from him whome hee had persecuted, and retired to Goulette, where hee had left in the hands of Francis Touar, many jewels and mouables of great price, whereof hee gaue him no verie good account. The Tunesians in *Abdamelec*s place, did choose for their king a Sonne of his called Mahumet, being but twelue yeares old, to whome they gaue foure cheefe men for Councellers and Gouernors of his youth; which were Abdulages, who held the dignitie and office of Manufacte, Abdelchirin Manufacte, which is another dignitie, and Xerife, borne at Bugia, a Moore learned in the law of Mahumet, and with them one John Perell, of the order of the Rabatins. Abdelchirin, for that hee was an honest man, was slaine by his companions, who afterwards made a Triumvirat betwixt them, committing all ex-

Amida dispossessed by Abdamelec his vncle.

Disloyaltie of the Regenis to the young king of Tunes.

1545

A cesse and villanie, contemning the kings youth, and promising vnto themselves all impunitie. Among other insolencies, Perel hauing seiled vpon the Serrail, where the wiues and concubines of Amida were, he rauisht them all, which haply was the greatest displeasure Amida received, for those people are wonderfull jealous of their wiues: but he tooke a cruell reuenge, hauing soone after surprisid the citie, with the helpe of his friends and partisans, so suddenly, as the young king had scarce leasure to get into a little barke and flic to Goulette: he caused Perel to be cruelly tortured, and hauing cut off his priuie parts, the instruments of his sinne, he caused him to be burnt aliue in the market place. He put them also to death which had adhered to Abdamelec, and among others forrie Rabatins, whose bodies were eaten with dogs, a punishment which he vsed for them which had committed any haynous offence, causing them to be torne in peeces aliue, and deuoured by his famished dogs. Amida raigned about fiftene yeares after, vntill that Aluch Ali, whom they called Locciali, gouernour of Alger, depriued him, surprising the towne in the yeare 1560, which hath euer since beene held by the Turke, but for some short interruption, whereof D. John of Austria was the cause, as we will shew. As for the poore king Muley Hasen, he caused himselfe to be conducted to Naples, and from thence went to the Emperour to Ausburg, where he reported his misfortunes, and complained much of Francis de Touar, who detained his jewels. The Emperour ended this difference, by a composition made betwixt the parties, and he appointed that Muley Hasen should haue C a pension paid him, during his life, by the Sicilians, and so he was sent back into Italie, and Touar soone after called home from his gouernment.

Reuenge of Amida.

THE

THE 28 BOOKE OF THE Historie of Spaine.

The Contents.

- 1 Birth of D. Carlo prince of Spaine.
- 2 Agreement betwixt Pope Paul the third and the Emperour Charles, to make warre against the Protestants of Germanie.
- 3 Warre betwixt the Portugals and Turkes at the East Indies.
- 4 Mariage of Ioane of Albrecht, heire of Nauarre, with Anthonie duke of Bourbon.
- 5 D. Philip prince of Spaine goes into Flanders.
- 6 Muley Balan, a prince of the Moores, demands succours in Spaine.
- 7 Counsell transferred from Trent to Bologna.
- 8 Sedition at Peru for the government.
- 9 Octauio Farnese excommunicated, cause of new warre betwixt France and Spaine.
- 10 League betwixt the princes of Germanie and the French king against the Emperour.
- 11 Mets besieged by the Emperour.
- 12 Afrique a towne in the realme of Tunes, taken by the Spaniards.
- 13 Birth of Henrie of Bourbon, king of France and Nauarre.
- 14 Birth of D. Sebastian, future king of Portugal.
- 15 Mariage of D. Philip and Marie queene of England.
- 16 Death of queene Ioane the Emperours mother.
- 17 Death of Henrie of Albrecht king of Nauarre.
- 18 The Emperour Charles gives ouer the government to his sonne, and retires into Spaine.
- 19 Truce for five yeares betwixt France and Spaine, soone broken.
- 20 Mariage betwixt king Philip and Elizabeth of France, and a peace concluded.
- 21 Death of the Emperour Charles the fifth.
- 22 Death of D. Iohn king of Portugal.
- 23 Persecutions in Spaine for religion.
- 24 Spaniards defeated in the island of Gelues, or Zerbi, by the Turkes.
- 25 End of the Councell of Trent.
- 26 New bishop in the Netherlands.
- 27 Contentions betwixt the French and the Spanish, for Precedence.
- 28 Oran defended, and Pegnon de Veles taken by the Spaniards.
- 29 Malta besieged by the Turkes, releued by the armie of Spaine.
- 30 Enterwiew betwixt Charles the French king, and Elizabeth his sister, queene of Spaine.
- 31 The Vicerey of Sicile in disgrace.

The

A The Realmes of Castille, Leon, Arragon, and Nauarre, remaine vnitid in D. Philip the second.
Portugal by the death of the King D. Iohn, is gouerned by Queene Katherine his widow, and the Cardinall D. Henrie, during the Infancie of D. Sebastian.

B His yeare 1545 the Emperour had two feuerall aduertisements, the one of great joy and content, the other of much sorrow and heavinesse: He had newes, That the prince D. Philip had his first son born in Vailledolit, the ninth of Iuly, who at his Christening was called Charles, at the which there were great & solemne feasts prepared; but within three dayes after all was turned into mourning and heavinesse, by a strange accident: for the prince's mother, the young child's mother, died, for that (as they sayd) she had eaten something disorderly, contrarie to the state wherein she was; which happened by the negligence of the duchesse of Alua, and the wife of Couos, the high Chauncellor, to whom the care of her being committed, they absented themselves a little, being desirous to see a certaine sight, so as at their returne they found her dead, or dying. The prince felt that force which is vsuall at the losse of so deere a person, yet hearing it with that constancie that was fit for his royall mind; but the loue hee bare her, being a prince's of singular vertues, made him to retire himselfe for a time. Shee was much lamented and wanted of all men, for her great bountie and charitie. She was honoured with a royall funerall pompe: her bodie remained for a time in Saint Pauls church in that towne, in the custodie of the Dominican Friars, vntill that it was carried to the royall chappell of Granado. D. Philip had this sorrow increased soone after with a new griefe, for the death of D. Iohn of Tavera, Cardinall, and Archbishop of Toledo, vnder whose wife gouernement he had bene bred vp from his infancie, so as he loued and respected him much.

The Emperour Charles hauing concluded a peace with the French king, he presently began to imbrace the affaires of Germanie, which were in combustion, by reason of religion, since the preaching and writing of Luther, against the Pope, to whom some princes of that nation, and many townes, did adhere: Which controuersie many graue and religious men did beleue, might haue bene easily reconciled by the Emperours onely authoritie, being assisted by the Estates and Princes of the Empire, without craving any other helpe. But, according to the common opinion, this prince and the Popes were posselt with one humor, to rule absolutely, the Popes aspiring to bee sole Iudges in matters concerning religion, and Charles aspiring to the like soueraigne power in temporall things depending of the Imperiall function, and not to gouerne himselfe by a certaine necessitie, according to the aduice of the assemblies of the Estates, which they call Diets, by the which hee thought hee was kept in awe.

2 Pope Paul and he concurring in one designe, made a league the six and twentieth of Iune 1546, by the negotiation of the Councell of Trent, and they concluded to pursue the Councell of Trent; published the yeare before, and begun in December: and for that the Protestants did not allow of it, nor would not submit themselves vnto it, it was said, the Emperour should force them by armes, and if he entred into any treatie of peace with them, hee should not doe any thing to the prejudice of the Church of Rome. That the Pope should consigne an hundred thousand crownes at Venice, besides an hundred thousand which he had alreadye consigned, to be employed in this warre. That he should moreouer entertaine twelue thousand foot, and five hundred light horse, for six monethes, ouer the which he should appoint a Legat, colonels and capitaines. That the Emperour might for this warre take the one halfe of the reuenues of the Clergie,

1545
Birth of prince
Charles of Spain.

Death of Marie
of Portugal, wife to D. Philip.

1546 League betwixt
the Pope and Emperour.

Designe of the Emperour against Germanie

Clergie, and sell of abbie lands to the value of five hundred thousand crownes: And if any prince should seeke to hinder their resolutions, they should joine their forces together to resist him. This was at such time as the Councell began, whereas they made preparation for warre against the Protestants, both in Germanie, Spaine, and Italie, the Emperours designe extending farther, for his intention was (as it appeared since, and was not then unknowne) That after that he had subdued the Protestants, which made the greatest power of Germanie, he would subiect the Estates of the Empire to his will, that he might keepe the Empire in his familie, and make it hereditarie. And to give some proofe of this absolute power which he did affect, he had made a truce with the Turke, the better to attend this warre, without taking the aid of those princes and States, who had contributed great summes of money, to raise an armie against that common enemy of Christendome. The Protestants had long before made a declaration, That they tooke the Pope and See of Rome for their aduersarie, and therefore they would not haue him for Iudge, accusing him of impietie, sacriledge, false doctrine, and of usurpation ouer the magistrats appointed by God, and of many other crimes. They offered to giue vndoubted proofes to a free Councell, lawfully called, were a generall, or nationall in Germanie. They complained, That the Emperour had often put them in hope, but now they saw themselves frustrat: yea, that contrarie to the decree of the last Diet of Spier and Wormes, where it was concluded, That to prepare the way to so holy an assembly, there should be a conference of Doctors, and men of State of either part, which should bring in writing the meanes to liue in peace and vnitie one with another, attending the determination of such a Councell, and that in the meane time all proceedings against the Protestants should cease: yet they saw the Archbishop of Cologne pursued and condemned, for that he sought to reforme his Clergie; the conference made frustrat by the policie and importunitie of some Monkes; the Pope to vse his absolute authoritie, and all Germanie to be full of armes; their aduersaries picking quarels, with the priuie of the Emperour and Pope, so as they were forced to defend themselves, the which was falsely termed sedition. Vpon which discontents there were many embassadours sent vnto the Emperour, from the Protestant princes, whereof the chiefe were Frederic duke of Saxonie, Elector, and Philip Landgrau of Hesse, who drew after them many princes and barons of great place, their friends, allies, or vassals, with the chiefe Imperiall townes, all which demanded peace, and assurance that it should not be broken by any decree of the Councell of Trent, and a present reformation of the Imperiall Chamber, where there were some of their profest enemies.

Demands of the Protestants.

To which demands the Emperour made dilatorie and ambiguous answers, to win time, to the end hee might draw his forces, which came from all parts, into one bodie: so as they, seeing no other remedie, began also to arme, Ausbourg, Vlme, and other townes of high Germanie, being assisted by the duke of Wirtemberg, came first to field, and fell vpon the subiects of Ferdinand king of Romans, taking Ereberg at the foot of the Alpes; coming out of Italie, with other places. The duke of Saxonie, the Landgrau and their confederats, raised a mightie armie vpon the marches of Franconia, and marcht towards the riuer of Danow, passing quietly through the lands of the bishop of Vitzbourg, and of other Clergie men. The Emperour, who prepared his campe with all speed about Landshut, vpon the riuer of Iler, proclaimed them as troublers of the publicke peace, and guiltie of high treason. Being fortified hee came and lodged vpon the riuer of Danow, betwixt Ingolstade and Ratisbone, hauing receiued tenne thousand foot, and five hundred light horse, from the Pope, led by cardinall Farnese, Legat, and Ottauio his brother, prince of Parma and Plaifance, assisted by many worthie captaines; whereof the chiefe were Alexander and Paul Vitelli, John Baptista and Frederic Sanelli, Iulio Vrsino, Sforce Palinucin, Alphonso of Este, and Ralph Bailloni: And they had brought him out of the garrisons of Italie, six thousand Spaniards of the old Regiments, vnder the command of Ferdinand of Toledo, duke of Alua, Marshall generall of the armie, John Baptista Castaldo, Philip Launoy, Aluaro Sandis, Alphonso Vines, and other auncient and approued Captaines.

Protestants
proclaimed.

Captaines of the Popes armie.

Captaines of the Emperours forces

In

A In this Imperiall armie the cardinall of Ausbourg had the charge of the viqualls. There was with the Emperour, Maximilian, sonne to the king of Romans, Emanuel Philibert, prince of Piedmont, with many princes and noblemen, Germanes. The Protestants armie aduanced, being much stronger than the Emperours; they had two generals, the Elector Frederic, and the Landgrau, with equally authoritie, which, if two generals may be, was the ruine of their armie. They had with them John Ernest, brother to the duke of Saxonie, and John Frederic, his eldest sonne, Philip duke of Brunswic, and four of his sonnes, Francis duke of Lunebourg, Wolfgang prince of Anhalt, Christopher of Heneberg, George of Wirtemberg, Albert of Mansfield, earles, William of Furstemberg, Regrod and Reffeburg, colonels; with six companies of Suisses. The two armies lay nere together for some dayes, and the Protestants offered battell to the Imperials; but the Emperour would none, assuring himselfe, that the enemy could not keepe those great forces long together, and that in the end hee which gets the profit of the warre, hath the honour: besides, hee expected Maximilian, earle of Bure, with foure thousand horse, and ten thousand foot, of the choice bands of the Netherlands.

Two generals
the ruine of an armie.

The Landgrau, who was a resolute souldier, and therefore feared more by the Emperour than all the rest that were in the Protestants campe, made offer to force the Emperour to fight, if they would giue him credit; but the Elector would not yeeld to it: so as these two commanders not concurring well together, lost many occasions. The earle of Bure came to the campe, and many of the Emperours faction in Germanie, spoyled the Protestants lands, whilest they were in the armie; yea some Protestants, being wooon by the Emperour with goodly promises of aduancement, and persuading them, that the warre was grounded vpon other causes than religion. Among them was Maurice of Saxonie, who desirous to get the Electorship, was entred into duke Frederics countrey of Saxonie, wherewith king Ferdinand had furnished him, out of Bohemia and Hungarie, and had by loue, or force, seised vpon all the townes and places of Turinga, Misnia, and other prouinces adioyning, vnder a colour of charitie, saying, That it was to preferre the duke Electors countrey and lands, the which would haue bene ruined, if any other had bene employed by the Emperour in that conquest: yet the Bohemians and Hungarians vsed as great crueltie and violence, as if they had made warre against the Turkes. The Protestants armie being verie great, and not able to draw the Emperour to battell, being in some want of viqualls, but much more of money, the which they were forced to beg from the townes and comminalties, the confederat princes hating no support from the kings of France and England, as they had expected, hauing sent embassadours vnto them with full instructions, touching that which the Emperour practised by this warre, to the prejudice of Germanie, and the neighbour Estates. The heads being also jealous of their owne houses and lands, which they saw inuaded whilest they laboured for the common cause, they thought to draw the warre neerer to their owne commodities, whereupon they dislodged, and marched towards Norling, the Emperour still coasting them.

Heads of the Protestants armie disagree.

Maurice of Saxonie serves
the Emperour.

The townes of Vlme, Ausbourg, and others, holding the Protestants partie, seeing the armie retire farre from them, hauing done nothing of import, they began to think of their estates, and the rather, for that the Imperiall armie increased daily, there being a fresh supply of six hundred men at armes come from Naples, vnder the conduct of John Baptista Spinelli: and the confederats being retired, they made shew as if they would besiege Vlme; one of the richest townes of all Germanie. Being troubled with these considerations, and terrified when as they vnderstood that the Landgrau had left the duke of Saxonie, and was retired home to his house, leaving the whole conduct of the warre to him, and that the duke marcht towards his owne countrey, without any longer delay they sent vnto the Emperour, to make their peace. Vlme was one of the first that obtained pardon, paying an hundred thousand crownes, and twelve peeces of ordnance, with their furniture, and receiuing a garrison of ten companies of foot. Ausbourg did the like, and paid an hundred and fiftie thousand crownes, and twelue peeces of ordnance, and receiued the like garrison.

Protestants
league dissolved

Diuers other towncs yielded also, and in the end the duke of Wittenberg would make triall of the Emperours clemencie: so as being assured of high Germanie, he began to follow the Protestants armie, and came to Nuremberg. The Prince Elector tooke some small towncs in his way, bending towards Francfort, to draw money as well from his friends as from the Clergie; and then he turned towards his countrey, his armie decreasing much, for that many, seeing the Emperour to prosper, abandoned him. He being come into Turinga and Misnia, Maurice dislodged, having put good garrisons into Leipfic and Dresda, which places he onely preferred, for all the rest the Electors recovered, and then he retired to Ferdinand, and they both together came and ioyned with the Emperours campe at Egge, vpon the confines of Bohemia. The earle of Bure was come towards Francfort, with commaundement to enter into the Landgraues countrey, for whom many princes, and among them Maurice, his sonne in law, did sue vnto the Emperour for his pardon; but to small effect, for he had a great desire to haue him, thinking him alone sufficient to raise the Protestant affaires, if they were ruined. Bure tooke Darmst by composition, and then Francfort, where they were in great feare to loose their Faïres, which many of their neighbours did affect. Strasbourg, a great and rich cite, did also compound. The Emperour comming with great speed to the river of Elbe, having found a foord, where the Spaniards did him great service (for the passage was defended by the Protestants armie) he past his troupes, and pursued the Elector, who sought to recover Wittenberg, the chiefe towne of his Electorat, being strong and well fortified: but he stayed him neere vnto the forest of Lochane, the Elector having scarce halfe his forces, for he had not leasure to gather them together, being dispersed: Being thus forced to fight with disadvantage, he was vanquished and taken, being wounded in the face. Ernest of Brünfwic, sonne to Philip, was taken with the Elector: his eldest sonne recovered Wittenberg, being hurt, whither many others escaped from this conflict. The Emperour having this prince his prisoner, used him roughly in speech, and king Ferdinand more. He was giuen in ward to the duke of Alua, who committed him to Alphonso Vines to keepe safely. Within few dayes the Emperour gaue sentence of death against him, the which notwithstanding was reuoked, at the suit of the marquisse of Brandebourg: but to redeem his life, he was forced to vndergo hard conditions. Among others, he did quit the dignitie of Elector, which was giuen to Maurice, with all his lands, by the Emperour, who did confiscat them, as being guiltie of high treason; he and his children promising to obey the Imperiall chamber: such as the Emperour should erect; and for his entertainment, Maurice was charged to pay him a yearly pension of fiftie thousand crownes: The towne of Wittenberg, and the castle of Goth, were deliuered to Maurice, leauing it to his discretion, to suffer Frederics children to dwell in Goth: and as for himselfe, hee should remaine the Emperours prisoner. There were many other sharpe conditions imposed vpon him, all which he signed, and refused but one article, which was, a promise to obey the decrees of the Councell of Trent, the which hee constantly reiected, saying, That he had rather die than yeeld to it: wherefore the Emperour caused it to be raised out. Duke Maurice being now Elector, and having ioyned to his owne patrimonie the inheritance of prince Frederic of Saxonie, he began to be a suitor for the Landgraue of Hesse, his father in law, employing all his friends, as the marquisse of Brandebourg did in like manner, who in the end obtained a promise from the Emperour, to pardon his life, to remitt all other punishments due to rebels, to leaue him his country, with one fort, furnished with artillerie: so as he did renounce all leagues, to the preiudice of him or his brother Ferdinand, obey the Imperiall Chamber which the Emperour should establish, giue him all the rest of his ordinance, pay him within foure moneths 50000 crownes, for the charges of the warre, to deliuer the prisoners which he held, and come and craue pardon of the Emperour.

The Landgraue having accepted these conditions, by the aduice of his counsellors, considering the present danger, he came to Hale in Saxonie, to the Emperour, on the eight and twentieth of Iune, where, before he presented himselfe vnto him, they brought him the former articles to signe: but for that they had added many things which were not contained in those which the marquisse of Brandebourg and duke Maurice had sent him, he Landgraue feared by the Emperour.

Defeat of the Elector of Saxony, and his escape.

Conditions imposed upon the Elector of Saxony.

Constancie of the Elector Frederic.

Conditions proposed by the Emperour to the Landgraue.

A he would not doe any thing, for the which there was great question betwixt betwixt him and the bishop of Arras, who would needs haue him signe it. Among other things, they had added, That the Emperour did reserve vnto himselfe the interpretation of euerie article, and that the Landgraue did submit himselfe to the decrees of the Councell of Trent, for the which he should giue caution.

The Landgraue being prest and threatened, remembering that Brandebourg and the new Elector, had promised to maintaine the confession of Ausbourg, he signed, That he would obey the decrees of a holy, free, and generall Councell, where both head and members should be reformed, as Maurice and Brandebourg would doe. This done, they led him into a hall, whereas the Emperour was set vpon a throne, where kneeling downe before him, and confessing, That he had offended his Maiestie, and deserved punishment, he craued pardon, and implored his clemencie. The Emperour made answer by George Selde, That although he had deserved grieuous punishment, yet vsing his clemencie, and yeelding to the intreaties of many princes and noblemen, whom he desired to gratifie, he remitted the punishment which he had deserved, either by losse of life and goods, or by perpetuall imprisonment. Which done, the Landgraue was carried backe to the duke of Aluaes lodging, where he slept; where, having played late at dice, he was amazed, when as offering to goe away, he was staied, and had a gard giuen him: whereat the marquisse of Brandebourg and Maurice were much discontented, but there was no remedie, the duke of Alba and the bishop of Arras saying, That it was the Emperours pleasure. This proceeding, which the Emperour sought to iustifie by glosses, depriued him of the fruit which he pretended of his enterprises: so easily are mans designs and imaginations ouerthrowne.

3 We must now returne to the Portugals at the East Indies, where the Turkes sought to expell them. They hauing honourably defended their fort at Diu, and concluded a peace with the Indians of Cambaia, in the yeare 1537, whereas the young king Mamudo had succeeded after the death of his vnckle Badurio, into whose fauour Zaffer the Rencgado did still seeke to insinuate himselfe, and to whose wicked practices this last warre is chiefly attributed; deuising still how hee might expell the Portugals, for the effecting whereof he made such secret preparations as hee thought necessarie, drawing men together from other barbarous nations, making of armes, ordnance, and harquebuses: hauing with exceeding charge drawne fise master workemen from Constantinople, and yet they circumvented the Christians, making them beleue, that it was to make warre against the king of Patano, an ancient enemy, which confined vpon them; and yet they sought with great secrecie to incense the lords of the neighbour prouinces, against the Portugals: Notwithstanding they intreated them verie louingly, and obsequiously, knowing that it was pleasing vnto the king. With which policie they had made them so secure and carelesse, as they were wholly giuen to the gaine of marchandise, and to propagate the faith of Christ in those parts. The Portugals then were growne so secure, and had so neglected all care of warre, as whereas Garcia of Noragna had left nine hundred foot in garrison at Diu, there were not then about two hundred and fiftie, vnder the gouernement of John Mascaregna, who had succeeded James de Soza; and which was worse, they had no munition to make fortie dayes defence, and for that the souldiers had wanted their pay, many of them had sold their armes; all which was well knowne to Zaffer, and to king Mamudo, which made their designs more easie, and their hopes greater to be effected from the Portugals. To make their enterprise more easie, Zaffer began to giue it out, That the king had giuen him that cite, and that hee would soone come and take possession thereof. And although it seemed strange, it being one of the chiefe towncs of Cambaia, and brought great profit vnto the king by trade of marchandise, yet it was the more credible, for that the towne was reduced in a manner vnder the Portugals dominion, and many times annoyed by the Turkes, so as it was not so beneficiall to the lord as it had beene, who long before had giuen another strong place, called Sorato, vnto Zaffer, besides many other places which he had either purchased, or gotten by fauour. He writ vnto Mascaregna

Submission of the Landgraue.

Portugals at the Indies.

1547
John Mascarena gouernour
at Diu.

caregna, as a friend, rejoycing, that by the kings bountie he had meanes to be his neighbour continually, and to enjoy more freely the fruits of their friendship: but knowing how distastful new lords were vnto their subjects, he should be forced to come with some numbers of souldiers, to keepe them in awe that should not like of his gouernement in the beginning: whereof he thought it good to aduertise him, to the end that Mascarena should not suspect, that they would not entertaine peace with king John and the Portu-gals. But Mascaregna began, in the end; to fall into consideration of these things, thinking, that these great preparations could not be against the king of Patana (as they had giuen it out) who notwithstanding did not moue; which made him feare that it was against the fort of Diu: Whereupon he did write to D. John de Castro, Viceroy of the Indies, remaining then at Goa: Hee did also write vnto Antonio Sosa, gouernour of Chaul, and to William Meneses, gouernour of Bazain; to let them vnderstand in what a strait the fort of Diu was, and what need he had of helpe; and therefore they two should seek to stop the victuals which should come by sea from that coast vnto the enemies, who stayed not long to enter the towne of Diu, with Zaffer, being then about five thousand, but with such a number of pioners and labourers, for their workes, as some affirme, they were almost thirtie thousand. Most of the souldiers were Turkes and Abissins.

Diu besieged by the king of Cambaja.

Among other aduantages which the king of Cambaja, and Zaffer; his generall in this enterprise, had gotten, this was most important, to haue begun the warre in the beginning of Winter, the which begins, in those countries; when as the Spring begins with vs, a-beut the beginning of March. But Mascaregna knowing with what policie the enemy had wouen this web, and seeking with the like dissembling, to win time, and to prouide for himselfe, he dissembled the jealousy he had of Zaffer's designe: he seemed content with his coming to Diu, and to discover his mind fully, hee sent Simon Feo, a man of great judgement, to visit him, and to congratulate his coming; who, with like counterfeiting, was joyfully and honourably receiued by the Renegado, yet seeking to effect his designes, he began to discover plainly to what end he was come thither. He propounded vnto Feo, That hee would build a wall which should diuide the commerce of the fort from the towne (the which had beene granted at the peace making, so as it were no hinderance to the fort) whereof Zaffer made not any mention; but hee complained, that the traffique at sea was reduced to that point, as the king of Cambaja, to his great dishonour; could not dispose of it, being expelled out of the possession by their violence, whom some few yeares before hee had of courtesie receiued into his realme, to make them partakers, as other strangers, of the trade of marchandise in those countries.

All this being related to Mascaregna by Feo, he found, that the Barbarian desired as much to haue an occasion to fall to open warre, as he sought to auoid it for the reasons aboue mentioned, and therefore he sent again to Zaffer, to let him vnderstand, That whereas by order from the king he would renew some treatie touching the Nauigation, it must bee done with the Viceroy Castro, who being not farre off, would soone resolue, and according to equite: Touching the building of the wall, hee was not to hinder it, perswading himselfe it should be according to the conclusion of the peace, whereof he sent a copie by Feo. The Renegado tooke occasion vpon this writing to breake out into armes, who growing into a rage, tare it, and put the embassadour into prison: Then giuing the Portugals no more respite, hee began to make his approaches; and to assault the fort.
Mascaregna foreseeing all this, had made such provisions as time would giue him leaue, and hauing an especiall care of their want of victuals; he had sent away the weakest women, with the children, and other vnprofitable persons, in two marchants ships, to Bazain and Chaul: and for that the fort was large, hauing seven bulwarkes; and hee so weakely manned, hee diuided his souldiers and commanders, appointing twentie to euerie bulwarke, and the rest where necessitie should require. He had also drawne into the fort many Christian marchants which did traffique in the towne, and did prouide for all things necessarie for a siege.

The

- A The seat of this rocke was in an island where the towne stood, made by a riuier which falls into the sea: (Some haue written, it is Indus, making no difference betwixt Diu and Diu:) That part of the island which lies betwixt the sea and the riuier, makes an angle, and riseth with certaine steepe rockes; there the fort is built: so as on two parts towards the sea and the riuier, it is safe. Towards the citie, besides the strong walls and bulwarks, there was a large deepe ditch, which did stretch from the sea vnto the riuier. Within the riuier, right against the fort, there was a strong tower, not easie to bee battered, for that towards the chanell (which was betwixt it and the fort, whereas the marchants ships lay) there could no enemies ship come in, being subiect to the canon on either side:
B but in the other chanell they had entrance, but in small barkes, the water was so low, and yet the souldiers could not wade through. The Portugals reserued two ships in the great chanell, the which vnder the commaund of James Latta, hauing also armed two smaller vessels like gallies, Mascaregna commaunded they should scour that coast, to stop the victuals and other commodities which came to the enemies:
Wherein Latta shewed such diligence, as in a short time hee had taken fouretee barkes, laden with victuals and diuers other things for the vse of the armie. But Zaffer, who had long before deuised how this enterprise should bee gouerned, and therefore had brought such a multitude of labourers, in one night he caused a fort to bee made vpon a little hill betwixt the towne and the castle; and hauing made C the outward part of stone, many foot thicke, within hee filled it with earth, leauing some loope holes for ordnance. The like hee made in the towne, the which was so high, as it did equall the highest part of the fort, hauing safe parapets: Hee armed the wall on the our side with sackes of cotton, to defend it from the enemies ordnance. This fort being seene in the morning, did not amaze the defendants, being prepared to resist the Barbarians assaults euen vnto the last gaspe, for the honour of Christs name, and the seruice of their king, labouring with all industrie and valour, to frustrate the designes of a treacherous enemy: and then the ordnance of either side began that cruell warre, which did much honour the Portugals name in all the East.
- D To the first fort Zaffer added a second and a third, with the like speed, both towards the sea shore: and for that the ground was stonie and hard, so as they could not well make their trenches, but with losse of time, they aduanced a wall of stone, trauesed in such wise one before another, as whilest they aduanced, they were safe from the ordnance of the castle; and with this art they might easily come within a stones cast. There hee began to rayse a strong rampar of stone, thirteene foot thicke, and behind fortified it with earth, the which they brought from the sea vnto the riuier, and so they enuironed the fort on that side towards the citie, where it might be affaulted: And for that there was a great distance betwixt the first great forts, they made some lesser along the wall, in the which they placed small Corps de gard, to de-E fend the workes against the enemies sallies; this renegado planting ordnance and small shor, with great judgement, to batter the fort continually.
- Hee had a designe also to take the tower vpon the riuier, and thereby not onely make the way more easie to take the fort, but also hinder such succours as should come by sea vnto the Portugals, for being master of that port, the armie which came from Goa, should with great difficultie land any men. To attempt this tower, they had prepared a great marchants ship which they had kept in the hauen, making a sort of wood vpon it; and fortifying it with cotton against the defendants shot, and it was made so high, as being brought vnder the tower at a full sea, it did reach to the top of it: With these and with certaine floates of planks which they thought to F make fast at a low water, they resolved to assault the tower; whereof Mascaregna was aduertised, who feared the successe would be dangerous: Wherefore hee commaunded Latta, That he should come in the night with his two ships, and fire that engine within the port: for being depriued of that ship, they should hardly at that season prouide another, the riuers being carefully kept by the Portugals. On the sue

Fort raised by the Barbarians against Diu.

Ccccc ij

and

and twentieth of Aprill Lassa went with all the silence that might be, to burne this ship, yet he was discouered by the noyse of them that rowed, giuing an alarme vnto the enemye: notwithstanding, hauing but twentie souldiers with him, hee went on to execute his designe, whereas they found another let, for that it was not possible for them to fasten the wild fire which they had brought, vnto the ship: yet hee left not to effect his designe after another manner; for some of them leaping, with great resolution, into the ship, and cutting the cables speedily, they towed her, in despite of the enemye, into the channell vnder the fort, where they burnt it at their ease, making great joy for this happy successe on Easter day.

On the eighteenth of May Fernando of Castro, the Viceroyes sonne, arriued with eight barks, like gallies, who by reason of the contrarie season, could not haue come sooner, without verie great danger, he brought them some small succours of men and munition, promising him, in his fathers name, that they should haue greater succours, as time would permit. His arriual renewed their joy, and taking a view what souldiers they had, they found 450 valiant men, which were better than two thousand hirelings, and gaue hope of a victorie, although their enemies were hardie and resolute, and furnished with all things to annoy them. They did trouble them of the fort with their continuall shooting, and slue many, yet they had made no royall batterrie, with any intent to giue an assault, neither were their defences taken away, as the art of warre required: the which was referred, for that king Mamudio would haue the honour to be present at so important an action: Wherefore, on the siue and twentieth of Iune, he being come into the towne, at the breake of day, there were suddenly three great peeces of ordnance planted vpon the Barbarians trenches, which they called Basilisks, with other small peeces of batterrie, against two bulwarkes, one called Saint James, and the other Saint Thomas, and the curtaine betwixt them. Masoregna had provided for all this, who had not only caused a platforme to be made for the defence thereof, but also, fearing they would vndermine that of Saint Thomas, he caused a countermine to be made, but with exceeding great toyle, by reason of the hardnesse of the stone whereon it stood: vpon which bulwarke he did also plant two great peeces, with the which hee did wonderfully annoy the enemye, breaking two of their Basilisks, and dismounting the third. They continued their batterrie siue dayes against those two bulwarkes, and did somewhat ruine that of Saint Thomas, and they did so spoyle the parapets of Saint James, as the gunners could not stand to charge their peeces: yet for all this they saw no meanes to take the fort, and they were rather fit to consume the besieged at leasure, than to make way for an assault. Afterwards they planted another batterrie against Saint Johns bulwarke, which was weaker, resolving to seeke to force it and the other two, which they found to bee in bad estate: wherefore they began to batter them anew with many great peeces. In the meane time there fell out an accident, which did so terrifie king Mamudio, as, doubting of his life, hee returned to Madaba, and was neuer more seene in the campe; for that a peece being discharged from the fort, slue a kinsman of his, which was verie neere him: Yet Zaffer continuing his designe, hee ruined Saint Thomas, Saint John, and the curtaine, verie much, whose breaches falling into the ditch, they began to make the way euen for the Barbarians to goe to the assault.

They had also rayled in the neerest trench a cavalier, or mount, from whence they might looke into the fort, so as the Portugals could not safely goe to their places of gard, without great daunger: and therefore Masoregna was forced to rayse vp a platforme against it, whereon hee planted fortie harquebusiers, vnder Antonio Pazanna, to driue the enemye from thence, which could not bee done without great toyle, and the losse of many: so as the number of the besieged decreased daily, but they increased in courage and resolution. The harquebusiers vpon the platforme, not performing that which was needfull, they raised another cavalier neere vnto the church, on the which hauing planted a Basiliske, they made such spoyle of the enemies, as no man durst stay there. It seemed the ruines of the bulwarkes were such, as if they might fill vp the ditch to come to the assault; there would bee no great

A great difficultie to force the fort, and therefore with a long and infinit toyle he began to dig certaine trenches to fill vp the ditch: and for that they would not be troubled in the carriage of it, they were couered ouer head with quarters of timber and chaulke layed thicke vpon it, to defend it from fire and shot. Carrying stuffe by this channell, and casting it into the ditch, they made their worke in such sort, as they were not annoyed, nor yet seene by the defendants: for the which they found a remedie, in opening a little doore, whereby they were accustomed to goe into the ditch: but it was stopped vp with the ruines, and it did behouue them to cleanse it, and make vse thereof, the which they did verie secretly in the night, to feed the enemye the longer with that hope. But they in the end finding that their worke did not aduance, and discouering the reason, they drew Zaffer himselfe thither to view the place, and to provide some remedie; a happy accident for the besieged: for whilest that hee went carefully vp and downe considering of all things, putting his head aboue the trench, and leaning vpon his hand, a great shot came and tooke away his hand, and in the top of his head, so as he fell downe dead. Hee being slaine, the armie was in some confusion to name a successeur, so as attending order from the king, he declared that Rumegan the sonne of Zaffer deceased, should hold his place, who in his fathers life time had bene generall of the ordnance. This man shewed himselfe much more carefull and vnderstanding, than either friends or enemies did at the first beleue, so as following euery action without rest, and trying all possible meanes, they rayled vp the cavalier againe with new matter, being halfe ruined, where hauing planted two Basilisks, they made so great a mine, as they stopt vp the doore by the which the Christians came forth, to emptie the ditch, so as they could no more oppose themselves, being tyred by a multitude of their enemies, which came daily in great numbers to the campe, and the besieged decreasing wonderfully; and therefore they had sent another Fregate to the Viceroy, to sollicite him to send them greater succours.

The enemies hauing filled vp the ditch, and torne the bulwarkes of Saint John and Saint Thomas verie sore, they sought to climbe vp, hauing set vp long beames and peeces of wood crosse, like ladders, with such obstinacie, as the vndaunted valour of the defendants was not sufficient to repulse them, vsing many meanes to annoy them, whereof one wrought great effect. They tyed certaine piles together with chaynes of yron, and betwixt euery pile they put pitch, rozen, and other matter to burne, the which being fired, and cast vpon the enemye, it did burne and spoyle them, and at the least did stay their furie, yet neither fire, yron, nor stones, could terrifie them: Seeing therefore that place in great daunger, and the little fort made neere to Saint Johns bulwarke being weake, from the which both it and the curtaine were defended by Antonio Pazanna, with fortie souldiers, hee was commaunded, if need required, to goe and succour D. Fernando de Castro with some of his men; who on the nineteenth of Iulie had with great valour repulst the enemies, which were come in great numbers vpon the breach. But the enemye hauing now made the ditch euen, he resolved the next day to giue a generall assault, going the night before to their temples, and praying with great affection, after the manner of the Gentiles, to their imaginarie gods: Which Fernando Carrual, captaine of the tower vtiles, to their imaginarie gods: Which Fernando Carrual, captaine of the tower vtiles, seeing, hee aduertised Masoregna, that hee might prepare for his defence with such forces as he had remaining. Two houres before day the Barbarians presented themselves to the assault: their greatest force was against Saint Thomas bulwarke, where Lewis de Sosa with certaine choise souldiers behaued the places of least daunger, though with some losse. And at this time the Portugals leaving the places of least daunger, to succour where need required, had left the corner of the fort next vnto the sea with few defendants, where (by reason of the height of the rocks) they did not thinke the enemye would make any attempt: but they (whether discouering it then, or suspecting it before, as it is likely) being not yet day, and the tide being gone had left the water very low, sent some of their most active and resolute souldiers with ladders, who (being three score in number) mounted without discouerie. In the end they were discouered to be not only

Cccc iij

vpon

Batterrie against the fort of Din.Zaffer generall of the armie against Din, slainAssault giuen at Din.Assault generall at Din.

1547

upon the walls, but within the houses, where falling to spoyle, they found some little resistance made by the women who were there remaining, who both there and at the walls, did vse armes, and assist their husbands and brethren in so great danger. Whereof Masfcaregna being aduertised, he with a discreet secrecie (for that he would not amaze them that defended the breach) taking some souldiers with him from places least in danger, went and charged the enemy, whereof some he slue, the rest cast themselves from those rocks into the sea, but few escaped. They fought obstinately at S. Thomas bulwarke, where there were about 1000 of the assailants slaine, and they were so wearied, as they were forced to retire: but soone after, hauing brought fresh souldiers, they gaue a more furious assault than before, and were as valiantly repulst by the Christians: and it is reported for a wonder, that in this cruell encounter there were onely seuen Portugals slaine, but many were hurt. Two dayes after they gaue another assault, whereas they lost about three hundred souldiers, in which Fernando de Castro, and Lewis de Sosa, did win much honor. The like did Francis de Almeida, who hauing the gard of S. Thomas, about noone time, when as other men vse to take their rest, the enemies ran furiously to the assault, the which he with twentie five souldiers maintained valiantly, vntill that some others came to second them, where the fight was cruel for some houres, with great losse to the Barbarians, where they lost 800 men. But the defendants began to be out of hope of victorie, their numbers being diminished by death, and weakened for that many were hurt, and the assaylants on the other side were much fortified, there being come vnto the campe, a supplie of foureteene thousand souldiers, vnder a certaine lord of Cambaia, called Moiatecan: besides, within the fort they had great want of victuals, and many hurt and sicke for want of good feeding. Afterwards the Barbarians began to make mines, with great secrecie, making shew of other approaches; but on Saint Lawrence day, hauing brought one to perfection, vnder S. Johns bulwarke, they made offer of an assault, to draw many thither to defend it; but when they thought it time, they retired without the compasse of the mine, and then gaue fire to it, which blew all that building into the ayre: in which accident there dyed about sixtie valiant souldiers, and men of account, among which were D. Fernando de Castro, the Viceroyes sonne, a young man of great worth, John of Almeida, Lewis Mello, Diego Sotomaior, Aluaro Ferriera, Roderigo Sosa, Lorenzo Faria, John Brandano, George of Almeida, Tristan Sosa, Francis Lupio, and Garcia Ferreira. It is writen, that Masfcaregna doubting of some fraud, when he saw the Barbarians retire, aduertised Fernando de Castro, That he should leaue that place; but he was not obeyed. The Infidels would not loose the opportunitie of this ruine, but suddenly aduanced to enter into the place, where they found foure souldiers onely to make resistance, for that of twentie which were remaining aliuie, the rest were so amazed at this accident, as they could not doe any seruice. In the meane time those foure, more by the assistance of God than any humane force, staid the enemies furie, vntill the coming of Masfcaregna with some choyce souldiers, who repulst the enemy, being fauoured by the approaching night: And in the meane time others labouring behind, they had raised vp a wall of stone, without mortar, sixtene spans thicke, the which they did afterwards rampar with earth: and thus they repaired the ruines of that bastion. They continued their mines in other places, especially vnder Saint Thomas, where the Portugals countermines auailing them nothing, they ruined a great part of it. The like they did to others, and were aduanced into the place, and had gotten footing into Saint James church, from whence the Portugals could not expell them, so as they drew a wall through the middle, and it remained a lodging for them both some dayes.

The Viceroy being aduertised of the progress of this siege, foreseeing their need, sent another sonne of his, called D. Aluaro, with foureteene vessels, who parting from Goa on Saint James day, which was in the month of the vntic height of the Spring, he arrived (notwithstanding the foule weather) at Batim: and for that he knew it would be impossible (by reason of stormes) to come all together to Diu, he gaue order, they should all get thither as they could; so as all of them arrived some or late, as they could worke it out at sea. D. Aluaro de Castro, and Francis de Meneses, arrived the eighth of August with the greatest part, hauing not brought about 400 souldiers, who had much courage, but

A second assault.

A third assault.

Bulwarke of S. John blowne up with a mine.

Succours sent from Goa to Diu.

1547

Lib. 28.

A not so much militarie judgement, as the state of their affaires required. They pretended that standing alwaies vpon their defence, they had lost much, and therefore they should sally forth courageously vpon the enemy, and hinder his proceedings.

The good reasons of Masfcaregna, did somewhat restrain their forwardnesse: when as hearing that the enemy sought to draw two great peeces of ordnance out of one of the ruined Bastions, they held it an insupportable affront, forcing Masfcaregna to giue the leave to sallie forth, who to auoide a greater mischiefe by a sedition, yeelded to this necessarie remedie, to whome he spake after this manner. That it was fit souldiers should be gouerned by their Captaine, and not gouerne him; that they should attend their ensigne, and not take it by violence, as it did behoue a commander and his Councillors, to know how to mannage warre. But you hauing now in a manner laid violent hands vpon me, and presented your selues before me with seditious words and looks, the Maiestie of command is ouer-ruled by an vnreasonable desire, by an indiscreet hope: Go on and God make it successfull vnto you; let them know your valour and the force of your armes: I will be content to follow you, who by right should lead you; & although it be in an vnseasonable time, yet will I be partaker of your toile and daunger. Remember that in going into the enemies trenches, & in fighting, you continue as valiant and resolute as you haue shewed your selues before the fight.

After which speech, when occasion & time serued, he diuided his little army into three small squadrons leauing some few to gard the fort. The first he gaue to Aluaro de Castro, the second to Francis de Meneses, and himselfe remained with the third to succour where need should require: which action was performed with as little discretion as it was begunne: For they were no sooner in the enemies trenches but they began to doubt of the event, and although they did terrifie those that were then in gard, killing some, and putting the rest to flight; yet when as they saw the great squadron began to march from the bodie of the armie, they were so surprised with feare, as they had no care but how to saue themselves by flight, neither could they which had retained more valor, make the retreat without disorder. The losse was great; for among a hundred that were slaine, there were diuers of great worth, as Francis de Meneses, who led the second squadron, Francis de Almeida, Lupado Sosa, and Edward de Meneses sonne to the earle of Feria, who would not be partaker of his companions defect, but making a stand to withstand the furie of the Barbarians, contemning their horrible cries, and fighting valiantly, exhorting the rest both by his words & example, to vanquish with the sword and not by flight, he dyed honourably. D. Aluaro de Castro, mounting vp a wall, had a great blow on the hinder part of his head with a stone cast out of a sling, the which battering his head peece did hurt him verie sore, causing him to fall backward, where hee had bene slaine, if Masfcaregna had not come presently to succour him, & carried him into the fort, as he did all the rest that were wounded. This vnfortunate action, which hapned the first of September, did much weaken that small garrison: yet Masfcaregna fainted not, but provided such remedies for his defence, as time and meanes would giue his leave: The enemy did so ruine the Bulwarks and courtines with his mines, as planting diuers peeces of artillerie in those mines against the Portugals, they did wonderfully annoy them within the fort, wherefore the besieged were forced to labour day and night, and to make new defences, either fighting or working continually, hauing little leasure to eat, or rest, their number being so small.

The Viceroy D. John de Castro had bene aduertised of the death of his sonne, who supprest his particular griefe, vnto great diligence to prouide a remedie for the generall good: He therefore first of all dispatched Aluaro de Almeida with order to gather together those few Portugall ships, that were in those seas, and hauing put souldiers into them to saile presently to Diu, the which bee effected; comming thither the last of September, with five ships and so many men as the garrison was increased to twelue hundred, so as they might with more ease make head against the enemy. Soone after hee sent five other ships from Goa with foure hundred souldiers; and with them many Artificers, and some Architects for the vse of building, so as they grew daily more confident, neither did they feare, hauing heard that a certaine kinsman of Zaffers who had bene

Importunite of some Portugals

Succour brought to Diu.

1547 Victorie of the Portugals at sea

D. John Castro
the viceroy comes to relieve Diu.

beene sent to Caire to leuie men, came sailing towards Diu) to encounter him with their armie, whome hauing fought with all, defeated and taken him with many others prisoners, therest being sunke or disperised at Sea, they returned ioyfull to their Companions. They would not saue one of their prisoners aliue, but beeing slaine, they cast their heads into the current of the riuier, to carrie newes vnto the enemye, except that of Xassers kinsman, which was set vpon the top of a lance. But the Viceroy with all his diligence, could not draw such an armie together, as hee might hope to raise the siege, before the middest of October: so as hauing about seventy ships great and small, hee beganne his voyage, and hauing surmounted all difficulties, being forced by foule weather to stay some daies at Bazain, hee came to the coast of Diu, the seuenth day of Nouember: where hee presently sent for Mascaregna, being desirous to vnderstand particularly in what estate they were, where they tooke counsell how to put souldiers into the fort, and to charge the enemies camp, which being done, Mascaregna returned, and prepared to receiue the succours on the side towards the Sea, where the enemye least suspected it; and hauing planted ordnance in all places, where they might annoy them, they did it in such sort as it did much aduance their affaires, neither did the enemies shew themselves fearefull; but they answered them with the like art and courage, and foreseeing that they meant to charge the campe at one instant, both from their armie at Sea, and their fort at land, they did fortifie that part towards the riuier, with a gard of fiftene thousand Souldiers.

The Viceroy had fore-seene all this, and therefore hee vsed a politike stratagem, on the ninth day at night, hauing drawne two thousand souldiers out of the ships into the fort, hee caused the whole fleet to stand as it were in armes, some holding burning torches, some held two lances, and some an ower in oare hand, and a match light in the other, all men of no seruice, causing the ships to moue but softly, as if they would giue an assault to that part of the riuier, where the enemies feared most, and to gouerne all these things hee had left some captaines, himselfe being gone to land.

All things being readie, the souldiers hauing reconciled themselves vnto God, in the morning they went out of the fort, the Viceroy hauing caused all the gates to bee set wide open, and leauing a gard within the fort, commaunded by Antonio Corigia, they did not feare with fise and twentie hundred souldiers, to goe and charge an armie of forty thousand in their owne trenches. The enemye was verie watchfull of the landing of the Armie, where they most feared the daunger, for that they were perswaded there could not come any great numbers from the besieged, wherefore they had placed the best of their forces on that side, which made the Portugals victorie the more easie. Mascaregna had the fore-ward, with foure hundred choise Souldiers, who beeing entred into the Barbarians trenches, had fought valiantly, and they began to retyre, when as fresh men arriuing, hee had good need of succours, and so they did fight often that day, with an interchangeable inclination of victorie, yet the Portugals aduanced still; and hauing wonne one of their forts; in the end by their exceeding valour and the fauour of heauen, they defeated the Barbarians, and put them to flight, some escaping by a bridge which they had made, ioyning the Island to the firme land, all the rest of what age and sexe soeuer, were made subiect to the reuenging sword of the Conqueror, who incensed with crueltie vsed against them at that seege, and with the treacherie of them of Cambaia, would not suffer any one to bee taken prisoner, except Juan Brito a Captaine of Cambaia, much esteemed, who was in the Viceroyes power. The souldiers hated was so great, as they not onely slue men, women with childe, and infants, but euen their tame cattell.

Rumecano the Sonne of Zaffer (who had the chiefe charge of the army) was found dead, with Audecano a Captaine of Cambaia, who came the day before vnto the armie with fise thousand Souldiers, and Idalecano a Captaine of strange souldiers. They tooke the royall Standard of Cambaia, with many others, they recovered their lost ordnance, and tooke thirtie and fise peeces of the enemies: but the spoile gotten afterwards

Victorie gotten by the Portu-gals at Diu.

A wards in Diu did much enrich the Souldiers. They write that this cruell seege continued eight moneths: there dyed one thousand fise hundred Portugals, and in this last battell onely sixtie, and foure thousand Infidels. The Viceroy hauing taken order for the repaying and new building of the fort, hauing also rewarded the well deseruing souldiers, returned to Malaga.

4 During the warre in Germanie, whereof wee haue formerly made mention, there was a marriage concluded in Fraunce, betwixt Joane of Albret, the heire of Nauarre, and Anthony of Bourbon, duke of Vendosme, a prince of the bloud royall of France, the marriage was celebrated at Molins, in Bourbonnois. This realme of Nauarre was reduced vnto a Province, when as the duke of Alua seased thereon in the name of the king D. Ferdinand in execution of the sentence of pope Iulio the second, and had been alwaies gouerned by Viceroyes and Lieutenants, as wee haue said. In the yeare one thousand fise hundred fortie and two, D. John de Lauega, Lord of Grayal, was viceroy, in whose time D. Ferdinand Aluares of Toledo, grand childe to the duke of Alua, rased the wals of Lombier, which stood vntill that time: D. Lewis of Mendosa, Marquess of Montdejar succeeded the Lord of Grajal in the gouernment of Nauarre, in the yere one thousand fise hundred forty and three; and in the yeare one thousand fise hundred forty and sixe, D. Aluaro Gomes Manrique of Mendosa, entred into the gouernment, and succeeded in the yeare one thousand fise hundred forty and seuen, D. Lewis Velasco, at which

C time this marriage was consummated.

The emperor hauing gotten so great and absolute a victorie, as hee thought he now held the reynes of all Germanie in his hand, he sends D. Ferdinand of Toledo, duke of Alua into Spaine, to persuaade his Son to come vnto him into the low countries; whether he went carrying his prisoners with him in triuph, leauing Ferdinand king of Romans his brother to gouerne the affaires of the empire in his absence, and for that D. Philip, coming out of Spaine, he must leaue some great one there, with the title of gouernor; and to giue that dignitie to any lord of the countrie, it would breed jealousie in the rest, hee resolved to send Maximilian of Austria, prince of Hungarie, his nephew thither, to whome hee had designed for wife D. Maria his owne daughter, with a dispensation from the pope; for they were cousin Germans. This Prince came and imbarked at Genoua, soone after the duke of Aluas departure, being accompanied by the Cardinal of Trent, the yong duke of Brunswike, the earle of Mansfield and other noble men, & arriued at Barcelona, with a prosperous wind, whereas all the chiefe noblemen of Arragon and Castille came and met him; as their Gouernour and Viceroy, and conducted him to Vailledolit, where the marriage betwixt him & D. Maria was solemnized. These princes being married, they gouerned Spain for a time in prince Philips absence, who parted in the same fleet, & in the same vessel that had brought Maximilian. Being arriued at Genoua, he staid there fifteen daies, where he was visited and honoured with gifts and presents, by al the princes and potentates of Italie, and by the estates of the emperor his father. From Genoua he came to Milan, where he had a soleme entrie made him, and then by Mantoua & Trent hee continued his voyage throug Germany & came to Brusselles, where the emperor attended him, who made a progresse with him through all the prouinces of his hereditarie countrie, causing an other feastie to be taken vnto him as to his onely heire.

At the estates of Castille who were held at Vailledolit in the yeare 1548, it was decreed that the emperor should be intreated againe, (as he had beene often) to pay the money which he had borrowed of the king of Portugall, by colour whereof he did not pursue his right vnto the Moluccus, for the which there were deputies sent vnto him into Flanders, who offered him in the name of the estates, to discharge that debt, so as hee would graunt them that trade for sixe yeares, making the landing and entring of Spices at the Groin, as he had formerly ordained; which sixe yeares being expired, the emperor should receiue the benefit of the trade; whereunto he gaue no great care, for that hee would not displease D. John king of Portugall, to whom hee bare great affection.

6 At that time there came vnto Maximilian of Austria, and D. Maria of Castille his wife, gouerning in Spaine, Muley Buafon, a Prince of the Moores, and Lord of Veles de la Gomera in Africke, who had beene brought into Spaine by D. Bernardino de Mendosa

Nauarre.
Marriage of Joane heire of Nauarre to Anthony duke of Bourbon.

Castille.

Prince Philip
goes into Flanders.

1548

Muley Buafon a Moore demands succor in Spaine
Mendosa

1548

Mendoza, generall of the galleys, to demanda succour, against Muley Mahomet Xerife of Marroc, who had expelled Muley Hamet his kinsman, of the race of the Merins, out of the realme of Fez. This Moore was honourably entertained by Maximilian, but touching his chiefe businesse, hee aduised him to goe vnto the emperour, the which hee did, and past through Fraunce, but hee could not obtaine that which hee pretended, notwithstanding that hee offered to doe homage to the emperour, and to pay him tribute for the realme of Fez. Hee knew well there was no great assurance in the promises of those Barbarians, who are naturally disloyall, and that it was in vaine to make any enterprises in Afrike, if hee did not altogether follow it; else it would prooue but a fruitlesse toile and charge. After long soliciting, Buafon returned into Spaine, and made a like sure vnto D. John king of Portugall, who gaue him some succours, the which had like to haue ruined him, but afterwards hee made good vse of them.

Councell transferred from Trent to Bologna.

7 The Councell continued at Trent vnto the seuenth Session, touching the doctrine and reformation of Prelates, and the Pope seeing that Germanie was in such a combustion, as there was no likelihood of any reconciliation, hee thought it expedient for his affaires of Cologne to draw the Councell out of Germany, and transerre it to Bologna, a towne belonging to the church, causing a decree to bee made in the eight Session, as if this translation had come from the motion of the Fathers that were assembled, by reason of the indisposition of many which fell sicke through the bad constitution of the ayre, and the discommodities of the cold and moist cuntry. The Legats went, and were followed by the Prelates and Doctors of Italie, but the Germanes were discontented: wherefore the emperor vpon the complaints which were made, sent his ambassadors vnto the Councell of Bologna, (which hee called an assembly) which were Francis Vargas, and Martin Velasco, to the end the Councell might be fetled againe at Trent.

The Princes and States of the empire being assembled at Ausbourg, did also write verie earnestly vnto the Pope, beseeching him to cause his Legats to returne to Trent, and to continue the Councell there, vnlesse he wold spoile that which had bin wel begun. The Pope referred it to the fathers that were at Bologna, who could not be induced to retract that which they had resolved by a common consent, and as it were (said they) by the inspiration of the holy Ghost.

Interim of the emperor rejected by the Pope and Protestants.

The emperor being discontented at the Popes obstinacie, thought to finde some meanes to reconcile the controuersies in Religion, without attending a councell any longer, for the which hee caused a booke to be made, which he called Interin, containing in substance all the doctrine of the church of Rome, & the ceremonies thereof; and to giue occasion to the Protestants to receiue it, they were allowed to communicat vnder both kinds, and for Preefts to marrie. It was censured by the Pope in those two articles, and was rejected by some of the Protestant Princes: but afterwards the Councell was returned againe to Trent, after the death of Paul the third, vnder Pope Iulio the third.

1550 Sedition at Peru for the government.

8 The emperor being come this yeare, one thousand fise hundred and fiftie, out of the Netherlands, to an imperiall assembly at Ausbourg, doctor D. Pedro Gualca, (being newly come from Peru, where he had commanded foure yeares) came vnto him to giue an accompt of his gouernment, of the fruits whereof hee brought him a great summe of gold, the which did much further his affaires. This man by his wisdom and good gouernment, had ended the sedition and rebellion of the Pizarros in that cuntry, which had continued many yeares much vnpleasing to the emperor; and therefore he was verie welcome: wherefore I haue thought it conuenient to make a breefe relation of the whole action. Wee haue formerly made mention of the quarrell betwixt Francis Pizarro and James of Almagra, either of them seeking to command ambitiously our his companion in that rich cuntry, which they happily conquered with mutuall duetie, and their common armes: wherein they had gotten great honour if they could haue maintained themselves, but they grew into factions, and to ciuill warre, pretending nothing lesse in the end, then to make themselves absolute Lords, and it hapned after many attempts and enterprises, to the preiudice one of another; that Francis Pizarro had bene vanquished in a great incounter, in the yeare one thousand fise hundred and his brother Ferdinand taken, who notwithstanding was soone after set at libertie, yet not without great difficulty.

1550

Having afterwards repaired their forces, and comming againe to fight, the misfortune fell vpon Almagro, who being led to Cusco, hee was there publicly, but vniustly, beheaded, by the commandement of Ferdinand Pizarro, who was a little before his prisoner. The son of James of Almagra carrying the same name, born in that cuntry, of an Indian woman, desirous to reuenge the vniust death of his father, found meanes to come by night into Lima, (otherwise called the towne of kings) where hee surprised Francis Pizarro, and a brother of his, and cut their throates in their owne lodging, and if Gonsaluo Pizarro their other brother had bene there, hee had past the same way, but hee was gone to make warre at Quintoa, in the prouince of Cauclane.

Francis Pizarro murdered.

Gonsaluo, being aduertised of this accident hapned to his bretheren, brought backe his Souldiers, and beganne to make a cruell pursuite against young James of Almagra, and hee on the other side to make head against him, so as the whole Countrie was for some yeares miserably afflicted with these factions, vntill that the emperor sent a gouernour thither with some forces called Vasco de Castro, who did somewhat suppress these seditions, going first against James of Almagra, whom hee besieged in Cusco, forcing the Inhabitants to deliuer him, hee causing his head to bee cut off without any long processe.

Ferdinand Pizarro, (who had put his father to the like death) beeing come at that time into Spaine with great treasure, it may bee for that hee would not bee in Peru at the comming of Vasco de Castro, and giue an accompt vnto him of his actions) was there committed to prison in the Castle of Medina, where sometime after at the instance of the kings Atturney generall, and vpon the accusations which were sent from the Indies, his processe being made, hee was condemned to loose his head; and the chiefe reason was; for that hee had vniustly and rashly put James of Almagra the father to death.

It is said; that through the quarrels of these mutines vnto that time, there had perished one hundred and fiftie thousand Indians, sometimes taking part with the one, sometimes with the other. By the death of the heads it seemed the troubles had bene ended and suppressed, there remaining none but Gonsaluo Pizarro, who kept himselfe close: but the change of the Gouernour made them greater than before. For it seeming to the emperor, or to the chiefe of his Councell, that Vasco de Castro was not fit to gouerne that prouince of Peru, hee called him home, and sent Vasco Nugnes de Velez, in his place, with so absolute and seuerer a Commission, as seeking to execute it, he caused in a manner all the Spaniards that were in that cuntry, to reuolt with the Indians, hauing for the first act of his Tragedie declared all them guiltie of treason, which had carried armes, were it for the Pizarros, or the Almagras, not considering how farre this generalitie did extend, for among all the Spaniards which dwelt at Peru, and the souldiers entertained there since the Conquest thereof for the emperours seruice, there was not any one which had not followed some one of the parties, wherefore there were infinite appellations to the Councell of Spaine, and to the emperor, whereunto the new gouernour refusing to yeeld, and stopping their passage into Spaine, which were deputed to carrie the justifications of so many men that were condemned, they were forced to rebell, choosing Gonsaluo Pizarro for their Captaine, the which he willingly accepted, being already incensed, for the death of his bretheren, but especially for Ferdinand, whom they had beheaded in Spaine, beginning to make sharpe warre against Vasco Nugnes, and them that followed him, in the which a great number of his old Spanish souldiers perished. This new gouernour although hee were vnfortunate in his exploits and enterprises, yet he continued in his seueritie or rather infolency, so as such as were about him, appointed to be his counsellors by the emperor, were forced to lay hold on him, & deliuer him to the custody of John Aluarez; for that he had slain William Suares of Caruajal, with his own had, for some priuat hatred, hauing an intent to send him into Spain by the first wind, as an vnprofitable person, yea prejudicial to the quiet of the cuntry, that he might giue an accopt to the emperor of his actions, but the violence of the rebels, & of their Sentence considered and vniust.

Gonsaluo Pizarro head of the rebels.

1550

Death of the gouverneur Vaseo Nugnes.

D. Pedro Guafca
gouverneur at Peru.

Dexterity of Guafca to win the rebels at Peru.

their commander, Gonsalvo was such after this restraint of the Gouverneur, (they of the Councell disagreeing among themselves) as they were forced with all speede to deliuer him; to gouerne this warre, the which prouoked difficultie, for Pizarro being assisted by Francis of Caruaial, a great Captaine, and an old experienced Souldier, hee then declared himselfe openly against the Emperour, and contended for the Soueraigntie of Peru, hauing made the Towne of Cusco the chiefe of that countrie, his store-house for the warre. Vaseo Nugnes striving to resist them somewhat rashlie, was slaine in an Incounter neere vnto the towne of Quitoa, and his head was carried to Cusco, and there made a publike spectacle, and scorne to all men, a brother of his called Vela Nugnes, being then a prisoner, who had no better fortune afterwards.

To bee reuenged of this rout, John Aluarez, James de Silva, and James de Ceutron remaining heads of the emperours part, vntill there were some other order taken, gathered all the souldiers they could together, but they were also defeated by Francis Caruaial, so as they had great difficultie to mainteine their masters authoritie vnto the yeare one thousand five hundred fortie and sixe, that the Emperour after long deliberation, and by the aduise and choise of his Councell, sent D. Pedro Guafca thither, a clergie man and of the Councell of the Inquisition, a graue, wise, and discret man, to whome hee gaue a more ample power than to any of the precedent Gouverneurs, with the title of President of the royall audience of Peru: parting from Seuille that yeare, he came to Nombre de Dios, notwithstanding that he vnderstood that there was there in garrison Ferdinand, Mexia de Gusman, vnder Pedro Alfonso Hinoiofa, Gouverneur in that Countrie for the party of Gonsalvo Pizarro, who had a little before put Melchior Verdugo, one of the emperours Captaines to rout, and chased him as farre as the fort of Carthagena, which is vpon the North Sea, Hinoiofa remaine at Panama, which is opposit vpon the South sea. It is the narrowest place of all the firme land of the Indies, betwixt the two Seas. D. Pedro Guafca did in this action shew a great resolution, for hee had bene aduertised at the neere Islands of this rout, and that the port of Carthagena was the onely landing place for him, yet hee would needs cast anchor neere vnto Nombre de Dios, which place was held by the said Mexia, with a garrison of eightene hundred Spaniards, where hee sent Alfonso Aluaredo to land, in ioyning him to aduertise Mexia of his comming, and to found him how hee stood affected. The which Aluaredo performed so well, as Mexia and hee parted good friends in effect, though they made shew to the contrarie. For some daies after the President Guafca was receiued honourably into that place, yea, with ioy and content of the whole garrison. Thus this religious man being politike and modest, did for the first fruits of his comming, winne this fort and them that held it, without any tumult or blowes, who thinking himselfe well fortified, began with grauitie and authoritie to sollicite the rebels and their leaders, that they should acknowledge their errors, to repaire the which, hee gaue to vnderstand, that they had nothing to doe, but to imbrace the emperours clemency, and the grace and pardon which hee offered them. Hinoiofa who was at Panama vpon the South sea, had bene aduertised of the presidents arriual, and although he were none of the most obstinate rebels, yet would hee see how hee would carrie himselfe at his first entrie into his gouernment, being somewhat discontented that Mexia had spoken with him without his leaue and priuie, writing in choller vnto him; but Mexia was nothing amazed thereat, but by the Presidents aduice went freely to Panama, to Hinoiofa; what discourse they had, the euents did shew: for Mexia returned as freely as hee went, and presently the President departed, and went towards Panama, where hee wrought so with good words, persuasions and promises, as he drew Pedro Alfonso of Hinoiofa, and all them that were with him to the emperours obedience. They say, that the greatest motiue to make them resolute was, that they saw with the President the Marshall Alfonso of Aluaredo, who had bin a dear friend to Francisco Pizarro. These things succeeding thus happily, the president holding it a great aduantage to haue won Hinoiofa, hee thought it now time to presse Gonsalvo Pizarro, to come vnto himselfe, and to acknowledge his master. He gaue him hope

1550

A of good vsage, if he did obey, if not, he protested his vtter ruine, writing vnto him, and sending him letters in the Emperours name (from whom he had brought many blanks signed) the bearer whereof was Ferdinand Paniaguada borne at Placentia in Spaine. The emperours letters were dated at Venloo in Guelderland the 17 of February 1546, & the Presidents the 26 of September following. Gonsalvo was at the time of this dispatch in the citie of Kings (so called for that the first foundations thereof were laid, the day before the feast of Kings, which wee call Twelue day) where hauing some intelligence of the Presidents comming, hee had called all the heads of his party vnto him, to consult what was to be done; in the end they resolved to send vnto the emperour, and to informe him of the causes of their rising, and to iustifie themselves for the death of the gouverneur Nugnes, and it was concluded, that the Deputies should carry letters from all the townes in Peru, and that they should demand the generall gouernement for Gonsalvo Pizarro: That in passing by Panama, they should informe themselves of the president Guafca authority, and should acquaint him with the cause of their voyage, with protestation, that if hee attempted any thing, or did presume to enter into the Countrey of Peru in armes, before their returne and the Emperours answer, they would resist him by armes. The deputies were Ierome Loyosa Archbishop of the city of Kings, Lawrence of Aldana (who commanded the garrison there) Thomas of saint Martin prouinciall of the order of saint Dominicke at Peru, and Gomes de Solis de Carceres, some of which being suspect to Pizarro (namely the prouinciall) he was glad to be rid of him, and to estrange him from his designs, procuring the bishop of Santa Martha to goe the voiage with them. Thus the deputies being dispatched, they embarked in diuers ships, and sailed towards Panama, causing Lawrence Aldana to aduance, and aduertise them what was done there. In the meane time there was a conspiracie discovered against the person of Gonsalvo, which had bene practised, as they said, by Vela Nugnes, the deceased gouernours brother, who was then a prisoner, following Pizarro, but not in custodie, for the which he lost his head, being publicly executed, to the great grieve both of Spaniards and Indians, who sawe well that this would make the peace more difficult. Lawrence Aldana being come to Panama, and hauing conferred with Hinoiofa, and spoken vnto the president, he was presently wonne by them, he forgat his companions, and took an othe to the Emperour, persuading the president Guafca, to go to field to fight with the rebels, if they giue him not a good answer. The other deputies comming neere to Panama, and aduertised what Aldana had done, did the like, and ioyined with the president: who gaue soure shippes of warre to Aldana, with some souldiers, commanding him to run vp Southerly and Westward, and to trie if he could seaze vpon the port & towne of Kings, there to make a body of all those that desired to maintain the Emperours maiestie, and to giue all hindrances he could to Pizarro: he left a good garrison at Panama, he paid his souldiers bountifully, he made Hinoiofa generall of the imperiall army in field, he confirmed all the other captaines in their first places, and filled them with hopes and promises to haue better: He caused the prouinciall Thomas of saint Martin, a man of great authoritie with the Spaniards, to imbarke with Lawrence Aldana, being fit to fortifie the imperiall party, to whom he gaue many blanks signed by the Emperour, that he might fill them with letters directed to the captaines that were with Gonsalvo Pizarro: He sent D. John de Mendosa into new Spaine, to D. Antonio de Mendosa the viceroy to bring him some succors, and others were sent by him to the gouernours of saint Domingo and other prouinces, to the same effect. Whilest that Pizarro expected newes from Panama, and from his deputies, they brought Fernand Paniaguada bound vnto him, who (as we haue said) had bin sent from the president Guafca vnto him, with letters from the emperour, and had bene slaid by him who commanded in the fort of saint Michael for the rebels: The Councell was assembled to heare the charge and report of this prisoner, but Pizarro suppress the letters. Being heard, al their opinions were nothing but Romones, rebellions, fire and murder, and to conclude that they must keep the Emperours army from entering into Peru: whereupon they sent for Francis de Caruaial who held the second place among the rebels, and was then at Plata: he came to Pizarro with 140 Spaniards, 30 field peeces, and about 400000 crownes, passing by the towne of Kings, they told him that they had discouered foure shippes at sea, but they knew not what they

Gonsalvo abandoned by his chiefe adherents.

D d d d

were

were, nor whither they went: James de Mora gouernour of the fort of Truxillo, was sent forth to discouer them, who found that it was the little fleet of Lawrence Aldana, with whom hee spake in the port of Malabriga, and hearing what had passed at Panama, hee staied with him encreasing his armie with his shippe, and so they went all to Truxillo: from which place Mora was sent towards Caxamalcan, a neere Prouince to draw all them together which had a desire to serue the Emperour, carrying with him many blankes, the which hee filled with good words, assurances of pardon and promises to the Captaines of that Countrie, all which in a manner did abandon Pizarro, who beeing at that time much troubled for the reuolt of James de Mora, thinking to prouide for the fort of Truxillo, hee sent Doctor Garcia de Leon thither, but hee reuolted in like manner, and added an other shippe with twentie souldiers to Aldana's fleet. Gonsaluo Pizarro was then certified to what end Aldana was come into that Sea: beeing full of rage that hee had beene thus abandoned, hee deuised with himselfe how hee might stay the rest, beeing resolute to make warre with all violence. Hee went to field with about a thousand Spanish footemen, and three hundred horse, and a great number of Indians which followed him. The Captaines of whom hee made accept, were Francis of Caruajal his lieutenant (pretending to share the fruites of his victories with him) Doctor Caruajal and Doctor Cepeda, John Acosta, Velez de Guenara, John Torrens, and some others of lesse note. In his armie the Generalls Standard was with the Emperours armes alone, but all other ensignes and cornets had Pizarro's blasons and deuises, testifying that hee termed himselfe King of Peru. Martin Silueira and Alphonso de Mendoza were left to gard the towne of Plata. Anthony Robles was made gouernor of Cusco, and others in other places: all which hee enioyned to send souldiers and money speedily to the campe, and to publish his declarations and patents in their gouernements, that hee was not in armes against the Emperour, but against D. Pedro Guasca, who ambitiously contrary to the Emperours commaundement, had proclaimed warre against him, and assailed him first. All that were surprized going to ioyne with the imperiall troupes were forced to march vnder his ensignes, or to die. Hee caused Peter of Villosa a Iacobin frier, to be put in yrons, for that hee went in the disguised habite of a souldier amongst the troupes publishing the Emperours pardon, which he offered to all those that would returne vnto his seruice: and hee sent John Acosta towards the sea, to hinder the descent of Lawrence Aldana, who had newly withdrawne the gouernor of Guanico, and all the souldiers, and had sent them to ioyne with the troupes of James de Mora, at Caxamalcan, in reuenge whereof Pizarro caused Guanico to be fired. To encrease his miseries, the Inhabitants of Cusco, disdaining to be gouerned by Anthony Robles, a man of no worth, in the night they opened the gates to James Ceaton, who, liuing in the mountaines and woods in great miserie, euer since that hee and his companions had beene defeated, seeking to reuenge the death of the gouernor Vasco Nugnes, had now come out of his holes, vpon the occasion of this warre, which was made by the President, and had put himselfe into the citie with some tattered souldiers, which hee had gathered together, beeing fauoured and fortified by them of Cusco, both Spaniards and Indians; where hee defeated the gouernor Robles, who going towards Pizarro's campe, with most part of his garrison, and one hundred thousand ducats, hearing of Ceatons enterprise, had turned head: They fought within the walles, where hee was defeated, taken and his head cut off, retaining all his souldiers which were appointed to succour the rebelles, by force or faire means. Soas Ceaton finding himselfe fortified with foure hundred foote, and two hundred horse, he led them to the fort of Plata, to chase away Alphonso de Mendoza who had the gard thereof.

Captains of Pizarro's parties.

Cusco reuolts from Pizarro.

Towns & forts abandoned by Pizarro

Cusco being wonne, the townes and forts of Saint Michael, Mercadille, and Procellin, their gouernors, and souldiers, abandoned Gonsaluo Pizarro; all which garrisons went and ioynd with James de Mora at Caxamalcan, Leandro Martinez who should haue garded Arequipa, could not get thither, for hee was raised prisoner by the way by his owne souldiers, who made choise of Jerome Velazquez for their head, and went to Ceatons troupes. Against whom Pizarro marched, causing John Alfo to aduance with those forces he had

A had with him at Quito, but confounded with such ordinarie reuolts, not knowing whom hee should trust, hee beganne to vse crueltie, and without anie other reason then distrust, hee caused some captaines to be slain in his presence, the which did not secure him no more than a new oath, which hee caused the souldiers which hee had remaining to take. Lawrence of Aldana with his fleet of six shippes had come neere vnto the towne of Kings, and had caused three of his shippes to enter into the channell of the riuer, to see if hee could execute the Presidents charge, wherefore Gonsaluo Pizarro marched thither, and lodged his armie neere vnto the shoare, hauing commaunded the inhabitants to bee in armes, and some of them to follow him vpon paine of death. Whilest hee laie there in campe, there passed many messengers and mediators from either part, to come to some composition, according to the Presidents instructions, who desired to end this warre by the mildest meanes that might bee, but it was in vaine; Pizarro could not auoyde his owne ruine, neyther could hee by anie care or diligence stay his men from running to the imperialls campe, which should haue made him resolute to embrace the pardon which was offered him. Euerie day there were somewanting in his campe, notwithstanding that hee put them cruelly to death that could be taken: Francis Brano Lagunas, beeing taken by his horsemen which were sent forth to scout, hee commaunded that hee should be strangled, but at the intreatie of many, especially of D. Agnes Brano, wife to D. Nicholas of Ribera hee gaue him his life, notwithstanding Lagunas fled away, wherewith Pizarro was in a manner madde, and hee grew so furious, as no man durst come neere him vnlesse hee called him. His affaires beeing in these bad termes, all that were in his armie, were amazed and discouraged, but hee himselfe and his owne followers were most of all, whenas they vnderstood that James Maldonado, aduertized by Martin de Robles, that they sought him to put him to death, was fled vnto the enemy, and that Martin de Robles, who had leaue to goe to the towne of Kings that was neere, had gone to horse backe the next day early in the morning; and going forth by the port which leadeth to Truxillo, hee had said openly, that hee went to the President Guasca, the Emperours lieutenant, and that whosoeuer loued his life, and would not die like a traitour, should follow him, and leaue the tyrant Pizarro. The same night Martin Lopes fled out of the campe, and there grew such a tumult, as the souldiers were ready to kill Gonsaluo: wherewith hee was so terrified, as hee dislodged, and went and camped two leagues farther from the towne, giuing the charge of marshall of the campe to Doctor Caruajal, commanding him to keepe a carefull gard that none disbanded, but hee also abandoned him that night, leauing willingly his rich moueables and furniture, where hee had many goodly horses of seruice, and about twentie thousand ducats in coine, and got to Truxillo, beeing soone after followed by manie other gentlemen of name and qualitie: Gonsaluo Pizarro did not beare the retreat of anie one more impatiently, than of Doctor Caruajal, complayning often that hee himselfe had made him reuolt: for that (said hee) hee had made shew to trust more in John Acosta than in him, hauing lately sent him towards Cusco, by the mountaines, to trie if he might recouer that citie which Ceaton had left in the peoples hands without anie garrison, and also for that hee had refused to giue him the daughter of Francis Pizarro his neece in marriage: And it is remarkeable, that beeing in these perplexities, hee sawe with his owne eyes two of the common souldiers flie out of the campe, trusting to the swiftnesse of their horses, crying out as loud as they could, God saue the Emperour, and confound the tyrant Gonsaluo Pizarro. Then hee resolved to dislodge from thence, taking the way to Arequipa, whether hee brought not the fourth part of his men, for most of them had left him by the way, so as beeing come into the prouince of Nascana, hee had not about 300 men in his armie: Hee had recommended the towne of Kings, to Anthony Ribera, Martin Pizarro, Anthony de Lyon, and other Spaniards, whom hee held faithfull vnto him, but whenas they sawe him retired, they called the people into a field without the towne, where they had planted a standard with the Emperours armes, and there they caused the letters of a generall pardon to be published, which they had formerly received and kept, the which was ioyfully embraced by them all: Then hauing taken the othe, they did Crueltie of Pizarro.

Pizarro abandoned by his souldiers.

D d d d d ij

aduer-

aduertise Lawrence Aldana (who lay there by at anchor) that hee should come and take possession of the towne in the Emperours name, the which hee did, leauing the charge of his shippes to John Fernandes, aduertising the President Gusca presently of all that had passed: and that Gonsaluo Pizarro was gone from thence some eight dayes iourney, with a small traine. As for John Acosta who had bene sent to Cusco, he had like to haue bene slaine by the way, by Paseco, Sotomaior, and other conspirators, who escaped and came to Aldana.

Acosta being freed from this daunger hauing caused some of the conspirators which he had taken, to be strangled, hee came to Cusco, and was let in (for there were no souldiers in the towne) there hee reformed the gouernement, displacing those Magistrates which Cenon had made, and substituting others, leauing a sufficient garrison vnder the command of John Vasco, Taxia, and with the rest of his troupes hee went to seeke Pizarro towards Arequipa; but hee was not farre gone, before that they of Cusco had changed all that he had done, and restored Cenon's old officers. Cenon who went to Plata, drew vnto the Emperours seruice Alphonso de Mendoza with all his souldiers, and then all together beganne to follow Pizarro, to see that hee should not escape out of the Countrey of Peru, all the townes beeing in a manner reduced (some hauing expelled, and some hauing slaine their gouernours with their garrisons) and vnwillingly acknowledged the Emperour and the President Gusca his lieutenant generall, who vpon the newes of this happie successe, went from Panama by sea, with five hundred Spaniards, old souldiers, and great prouision of armes, and munition: he came neere vnto Tomben, whither Embassadours and Deputies came vnto him from all partes, to offer him men, money, obedience and seruice in such abundance, as hee had reason to countermaund the succours which hee had demaunded of the vicerey of new Spaine, and of other gouernours of the Prouinces of the west Indies. From thence hee sent Hinoiosa to Caxamalcan to command the troupes, which were there assembled, and himselfe came with the armie to Truxillo, appoynting them all a time to come in the valley of Sanfaua. Gonsaluo Pizarro beeing come to Arequipa, hee found not any creature there, for all were gone to ioyne with Cenon's troupes, who aduanced to fight with him, the which hee did, but to his owne losse: for hee was defeated, and forced to flie, hauing three hundred and foure score souldiers slaine vpon the place, with some captaines, and almost as many taken prisoners, with which Pizarro fortified his army, distributing them among his bands: and of his part there were onely one hundred men slaine. By this good successe some others were induced to runne the same fortune with him, he promising them great recompences: so as holding his forces to be sufficient, hee returned towards Cusco, with an intent to fight with the imperiall army, wherefoeuer hee should find it, the which beeing assembled in the valley of Sanfaua, there were found to be sixteene hundred harquebuziers, five hundred pikes, and seuen hundred horse Spaniards, whereof the captaines were Peter Alphonso of Hinoiosa, commaunding in qualitie of Generall, Aluaredes marshall of the campe, Doctor Caruial, Pedro of Vlloa, and other Captaines: Gabriel de Roias was master of the artillerie: The leaders of the horsemen were Pedro Cabrera, Gomes of Aluarado, John Samedra, James Mora, Ferdinand Mexia, Roderigo Salezar, and Alphonso Mendoza, all which had revolted from Pizarro. The President had for his counsell, the Archbishop of the towne of Kings, Thomas S. Martin, provinciall of the preaching friers, with many others. Peter Valduia gouernour of the Prouince of Chiliane, came and ioyned with his armie, a man of great experience in matters of warre, worthe to be opposed against Francis Carnual, who was the most redoubted captaine the enemy had; and in the end vnfortunate Cenon came and ioyned with them, with about fortie horse. Being all together, they marched towards Cusco, whither they vnderstood that Gonsaluo Pizarro was come with his army. The Countrey by the which the imperials did march, was rough, defarr, and without victualles, so as they suffered much, vntill they came to Andaguara, where the Countrey is peopled, and furnished with victualles and other commodities: wherefore they stayed long there, for that they would not be consumed with trauell, and the tediousnesse of the winter, if the enemy should Victorie of Pizarro.

Army imperiall pursuing Pizarro.

A should seeke to prolong the warre, the which he might easily doe, hauing the towne of Cusco, and the river which passeth by the valley of Seguifagrane at his deuotion. In the Spring time of the year, one thousand five hundred fortie and eight, the President caused his army to dislodge from Andaguara, and crossed many narrow passages of the mountaines without any difficultie, and many rivers, whereas Pizarro might haue annoyed them much, if hee had not bene negligent, and then came and lodged vpon the declining of the hillies: in a discommodious place, aboue the valley of Seguifagrane, in the which Pizarro was camped; who wanted not any thing, hauing the towne and river behind him at his commaundement; whereas the imperials suffered much hunger, cold, and other discommodities: yet notwithstanding the President did forbear to fight; being aduertised that a good number of the Spaniards that were with Pizarro, did but watch an oportunitie to abandon him, and to revolt, which he desired might be before they did fight, that he might haue the weaker opposition. But they could not temporize long in that bad lodging, whereas the cold which was great in that season, did so benumme the souldiers, as they could scarce hold their armes; and also for the neerenesse of the two armies which were daily in skirmish; so as they were forced to come to a generall battell, the which was soone ended. For the ordnance was scarce discharged, but many of Pizarro's armie disbanded openly, among which were Doctor Cepeda, Garcilazo de la Vega, and Alphonso Peres Hita captaines; and all the souldiers which remained at the rout of Cenon, went away in one Squadron to the imperials, which made the rest retire and to flie the battell, some going towards the citie of Cusco, which was five leagues off, and others to other places: they that were most affected to Gonsaluo, and most guiltie remained about him, who being foure in number, were of opinion to cast themselves into their enemies troupes, and to die fighting valiantly, rather than to be led bound to an ignominious death; but Gonsaluo told them, that seeing Fortune had turned her backe, it were better to die Christianlike, acknowledging their faults, than to perish like pagans in such vanities. Being then enuironed by the imperiall horsemen; he yielded his armes to Pedro de Vlloa, great Prouost of the armie, who led him before the President, by whom hee was much blamed for his obstinacie, yet hee shewed himselfe nothing deiected, but answered resolutely to whatsoeuer was demaunded. Being giuen in D gard to James de Cenon, he was for some daies well and modestly intreated, not suffering any one to disquiet him either in word or deed. All the other Commanders were in a manner taken that day, either with Gonsaluo, or in the pursuite, except Francis Carnual, who was afterwards found and deliuered by his owne souldiers, being hidden among the reeds in a moore, thinking to renew the warre if hee might escape. All the rest were somewhat lamented, but not hee; for hee was exceeding cruell, and the chiefe author of Pizarro's rebellion; and it was said that by his inhumane counsell, Pizarro had caused about sixe hundred gentlemen to be murdered, and thrice as many good souldiers, Spaniards, with an infinite number of Indians; and that he neuer was at the death of anie one, but he did reuile him with all the opprobrious words he could inuent. The rebelles E campe remained a prey to the imperials, whereby they were greatly enriched: and to preserve the citie of Cusco from sacke, and to containe euery one in his duetie, and to preuent reuenges, which do commonly follow ciuill victories, Ferdinand Mexia, and Martin Robles were sent thither with two companies. Afterwards the prisoners processees were formally made. The chiefe of the rebellion were condemned to die, as guiltie of treason. Gonsaluo Pizarro had his head cut off, the which was for a time set in the market place in the citie of Kings, for a publike spectacle with this Inscription. This is the head of the Traitor and Tyrant Gonsaluo Pizarro, who being rebelled, and hauing taken armes in the realm of Peru, against the most mightie Emperour Charles the first, his prince, was vanquished fighting against the standard royall in the valley of Seguifagrane, and hath bene thus worthily punished. All his goods were forfeited: his proud palace which hee had built in the citie of Cusco was ruined, the soile sowed with salt, and a pillar erected with a table containing the sentence of his condemnation. He died constantly retaining his accustomed proud lookke, he was royally attired in silke imbrodered with gold and pearle; which the executioner had. His bodie put into a coffin was honestly buried in Cusco. Francis Carnual D d d d d iij was Defeat of Pizarro.

Death of Gonsaluo Pizarro.

1550 was executed in like manner with nine other captaines, but their bodies were quartered and hung in the high wayes. Many also of the most seditious were hung vpon trees on the high wayes. The President hauing thus punished the chiefe mutines and rebelles, hee caused a generall pardon to be published in Cusco so all the rest, forbidding any one to reproach the fault hereafter, vpon paine of death.

This victorie was wonne the ninth day of Aprill, one thousand five hundred fortie and eight, happie doubtlesse for the Emperour, for if Pizarro had wonne it, Peru had bin lost for him, and Spaine deprived of the treasures of that Countrey, which are great and incredible. The President found himselfe much troubled when hee came to reward such as hee had drawne from Pizarros faction, to whom he had made great promises, for there was not any common souldier but he held himselfe worthy of a gouernement: and he could not please them all, but he supplied this defect with store of ducats, which abound in that golden region. Then hee beganne to settle some order in regard of the Spaniards, which were feudatarie Lords ouer the Indians, how they should carrie themselves to the Indians their subiects. He erected a Parliament or royall Audience in the city of Kings; to the which any man that was grieued might appeale, and giuing hope to them that remayned at Peru, by the aduertisement hee said he had receiued from the Emperour, to haue a Viceroy very soone hee had them farewell, and went away in December one thousand five hundred forty and nine, carrying with him about two millions of gold for the Emperours part. He came from the city of Kings to Panama, where hauing rested some dayes, hee went by land with his baggage to Nombre de Dios, vpon the north sea, where he arriued happily: For, had hee staid alittle longer at Panama, hee had bene in danger neuer to haue seene Spaine more. For that certaine other rebelles led by Fernand and Pedro Contreras (whose father was Viceroy of Nicaragua) came and seized vpon Panama, thinking the President had bene there, and spoyled it: and missing him, they pursued him, thinking to finde him vpon the way, and to stripp him of his treasure, making an attempt to enter into Nombre de Dios, but they were repulsed by the garrison and the Inhabitants. The gouernors and garrisons that were neere made a head, and went to field, and disperfed them in some encounters, in one of the which one of the Contreras was slaine, and the other lost, so as hee was neuer more heard of.

This second reuolt did somewhat stay the voyage of the President D. Pedro Gasca, who embarked in July 1550, hauing suppressed two importaunt rebellions at the West Indies, beeing followed by a great number of noblemen Spaniards, who were rich in gold and siluer of the spoiles which they had taken, or for recompences in these seditions; he arriued happily at Saint Lucar of Barameda, and from thence went to Seuille, where hauing rested some dayes, hee passed into Germanie to the emperour, whom hee found at Ausbourg, by whom hee was graciously receiued and honoured for his good seruices, who in reward thereof some moneths after made him Bishop of Valencia which fell void.

But let vs returne to that princes affaires in Germanie, and what hee had to treat of at Ausbourg, whereas all things did succeed according to his desire, the negotiations of great Kings being like vnto other mens, seasoned with sweet and sower, by him that gouerns the whole world, and for the good of men, who else would forget him if they should alwayes prosper. This mightie Emperour, a Conquerour and wife, according to the world, and the common opinion of all men, finding after much toyle, by a hard and preiudiciall experience, that hee was farre from that which hee pretended to doe for the good of his house, by armes and force, against the libertie of the Electors, and the Estates of the empire, hee sought to attaine vnto it by the meanes of some conuention, and therefore hee did presse his brother Ferdinand to resigne vnto prince Philip his sonne his right and dignitie of King of Romans, whereupon they grew to a great quarrel, to pacifie the which Mary Queene of Hungarie their sister, was forced to returne to Ausbourg, from whence shee parted alittle before: he pursued this resignation by all the meanes and policie hee could, for that it was the next infallible steppe to bring D. Philippe to the empire, but Ferdinand would neuer yeelde to it, thinking that if hee made Emperour solicited D. Ferdinand and to forsake the dignitie of King of Romans to his son Philippe.

Contreras other rebels.

this

A this daungerous alienation, all his sonnes (hauing a good number) should remaine without estates and meanes, wherein hee had reason. Hee had sent into Spaine for Maximilian his sonne to come to the diet, beeing a milde and courteous prince, and very pleasing to all Germanie. D. Philippe hauing sayled to be king of Romans, parted from Ausbourg, and tooke his way towardes Genoua to returne into Spaine to gouerne it.

Peter Lewis Farnese Duke of Placentia and Parma, hauing bene slaine the yere before by his owne subiects, some thought by the Emperours procurement, for that Fernand Gonzague gouernour of Milan, did instantly seaze vpon the towne of Placentia, Ottauio Farnese his sonne, distrusting the Emperour his father in lawe, hauing married his base daughter, and seeing himselfe contemned by the new Pope, hee sought support and protection from the French; whereat pope Julio was so offended as hee thundered out a sentence of Excommunication against him, by the which hee declared him fallen from his estate, giuing it in prey to the Emperour: whereupon D. Fernand Gonzague spoyled the territorie of Parma and the French sent succours to Duke Ottauio, which caused a new warre betwixt the Emperour and the French king.

This warre beganne in the yere of our Lord God, one thousand five hundred fiftie and one, by meanes whereof the Germanes freed themselves from manie violences, which had bene offered them both in generall and in particular by the Emperour, beeing made proud with his victories, which hee sought to make all men feele, as well Catholikes, as Protestants, vnder diuers pretexts, of some to be satisfied for the charges of the warre, which hee said hee had made for the libertie of Germanie; of others by the waie of chastisement, for that they had reuolted, wherein hee said that he proceeded mildly, quiting much of his right to ease and spare them. By this meanes there was neyther towne nor countrey, estate nor condition of men, amongst the Germanes, which were not vexed by taxes, and by sower speeches and threats, if they presumed to tell him of his duetie, or to put him in mind of his conuentions and promises. Finally, hee would haue all depend vpon his owne will. Thus he heaped vp a great treasure; and they say, that hee had wrested from the Princes and Protestant townes, about five hundred peeces of great ordnance, wherewith he did furnish his places and forts in Italie, Flaunders and Spaine. In these discontents the Towne of Magdebourg vpon Elbe, which had bene proclaymed and streightly besieged, for that it resisted his Edicts, was now more slowly prest, so as they had meanes to free themselves vpon honest conditions, Maurice Duke of Saxonie thinking it best to compound this warre, hee beeing the chiefe of it, and to attend the deliuerie of the Landgraue of Hesse his father in lawe, whom hee had brought the Emperour, vpon a promise, that hee would not detain him prisoner, and yet hee kept him, and carried him vp and downe as it were in triumph: Whereupon hee often besought the Emperour to haue regard vnto his honour, which was engaged, and seeing him make no accompt to set him at libertie, hee entred into league with Albert of Brandebourg, the Landgraues children, and others, and all they with the French King, who marched speedily with a great armie towards the Rhine, giuing it out, that it was to restore the Germanes his good neighbours, and auncient friends to the French, to their true and first libertie, which was taken from them by Charles of Austria, tearing himselfe Emperour. The Protestant Princes went to armes also, and committed great spoyles in Germanie. But that warre was ended by the deliuerie of the Landgraue, and by some things that were granted or promised to the Protestants.

The French King beeing come neere Strausbourg, and hearing of this accord made by Duke Maurice without him, hee returned discontented, retayning for his charges and paynes, Metz, Thoule, and Verdun, Townes belonging to the Empire: And the Emperour finding himselfe bound to recouer them, hee stayed not, but came and layd siege to Metz in the beginning of winter: What the successe was you may read in the French historie.

The

1550 Returne of prince Philip into Spaine.

9 Ottauio Farnese excommunicated, the cause of new warre.

1551 Extortions of the emperor vpon
the Germans

Magdebourg deliuered.

10 League betwixt
the prince of Germany and the French king
against the emperour.

1552

Metz besieged
by the emperor

The fathers being yet at Trent, Maximilian of Austria with his wife D. Maria of Spaine passed there, being returned out of Spaine, who crossing from Barcelona to Genoua, had beene in some daunger, being pursued by the gallies of Fraunce, whereof Leon Strossy was generall. A little before hee had entred into the port of Barcelona, and carried away some vessells which had beene prepared for Maximilian's passage, whereof the imperials complained, saying that there was no open warre.

Port of Barcelona sailed by Leon Strossy.

Whilest the Emperour toyled both mind and body in Germany, betwixt the storms of the Councell, the Protestants, and his owne affections, being also entred into a new warre against the French king: the Turkes and pirates of Afrike spoiled the coasts of Naples and Sicile, whereof Spaine was not free. The chiefe Leader of these theues was Dragut Rais (whom others call Orgus) who had surprized the towne sometimes called Aphrodisium, and in our time was named Afrike by vs, and Mehedie by the Moores, belonging to the realme of Tunes, sometimes a rich towne opposite to Sicile. This Dragut had succeeded Barbarousse in boldnesse and policie, and was bred vp vnder him; of a poore gallee boy, hee grew a noble pirate: hee had beene taken about the Iland of Corfica by Iustin Doria, and made a gallee slave; but after some time he deliuered him for a small ranome, to the great prejudice of Christendome. Being growne more insolent than before, he committed infinite spoiles vpon Sicile, Calabria, Naples, and the coasts of Genoua and Spaine, and thrust on with the like ambition to the two biethren Barbarusses hee would haue a retreat for the safety of his thefts, and be also called Xec or King. Whereupon hee surprized this towne of Afrike, which was then well peopled and of great traffike: by the wealth whereof he made himselfe fearefull to all the coasts of Italie and Spaine, and of late scouring the Tyrene Seas, whilest that the gallies were busie to passe and repasse the princes D. Philippe and Maximilian, had sacked and burnt Rapallo. So as the Emperour was daily importuned to chase him out of that dangerous nest, who commanded D. John de Vega, viceroy of Sicile, and Andrew Doria prince of Melfi, the chiefe Author of this enterprize, to gather an army together with all speed for this action. Many voluntaries came to reuenge the publike and priuate wrongs, and to win honour, but especially with the hope of spoyle, which they thought would be very rich, for besides the great booties, which Dragut brought, he had with large rewardes drawne many merchants thither, and namely the Iewes which were expelled Spaine and Portugal were retired to that towne. Andrew Doria soliciting the preparation of the fleet, whereof hee was generall, the Emperour hauing giuen the charge at land to the viceroy of Italie: and for that he thought that before the whole armie should be ready to goe into Barbarie, this cunning pirate might doe some harme vnto the Christians, he therefore aduertized D. Bernardin de Mendoza generall of the gallies of Spaine, to stand vpon his gard on that coast. Hauing then receiued three gallies from the duke of Florence, foure from Malta, and three from the Pope, with those of Naples and Sicile, making in all foure and fiftie gallies, well manned both with souldiers and mariners, in the end of Iune they bent their course towards the towne of Afrike: hauing viewed it, and burnt some vesselles belonging to the Moores, it was resolved first of all to take Munisterio a little towne neere it with a castle, the which hauing few inhabitants, Dragut had fortified with a good garrison of Turkes being to bee feared that whilest they were at the siege of Afrike, he might annoy them continually from thence, if the pirate who was then abroad should make his retreat thither with any number of vesselles, as hee was pretended to doe, neither was hee out of hope to succour them. The towne was taken with small toyle, but finding it a worke of more difficultie, to force the castle, being brauely defended by the Moores and Turkes, they caused D. Garcia de Toledo generall of the gallies of Naples to land, who battering the Castle with eleuen peeces of ordonaunce, made a breach, the which they defended long, but in vaine, for in the end they were all slaine or taken prisoners: the Christians hauing lost about three score of their best souldiers, besides a cannon breaking in one of the gallies, it split and suncke, yet they saued all the men and furniture. Then they turned towards Afrike, Doria hauing furnished himselfe with munition at Goulette, and sent to leuie more men in Naples

Dragut a famous pirate.

12 Afrike a towne in the realme of Tunes taken by the Spaniards.

Munisterio in Afrike taken by the Christians.

Aples and Sicile: and then did D. John de Vega passe, hauing left his sonne D. Aluaro to gouerne the Iland. They spent some time about this new prouision, so as the Turkes within Afrike had more leisure to fortifie themselves, both with men and all other necessaries: which made the siege tedious and difficult to the great losse of the Christians, for that Dragut hauing an intent to draw the army from that enterprize, spoiled the coasts of Italie, and burnt some weake places, doing the like at sea to the Merchants; so as Bernardin of Mendoza had worke to defend the coast of Spaine, whilest that this pirate annoyed the Ilands of Majorca, Corfica, and Elba: but this could not remoue Doria from his resolution, who held it an vnprofitable thing to spend that summer in running after Dragut. The Christians fleet being returned well furnished to besiege the towne of Afrike, and the situation and strength thereof being well obserued by Vega and other capitaines of experience, there were diuers opinions among them, for the difficulties that were propounded by one and other. The towne stands vpon a long tongue of land, right against Sicile, being three miles in compasse, it lookes towards Malta, and Gerbe, and is enuironed by the sea on three partes, the fourth being to be attempted by land, and therefore it was so secured as it could not be battred with anie armed vessells, but on two narrow flanks, the rest of the channell being so shallow, as no vessell of anie burthen could approach; so as they found this enterprize more difficult than they did at the first conceiue it. They held the wall towards the firme land to be well fortified, with five towers of equall distance, and a great raelin in the most eminent place, the which did come farre forth, and was well flanked. The question then was, on which side they should batter it, for to attempt it by sea they held it impossible, for that none but small gallies could come neere it: some would haue the raelin first battered by land, for that it would annoy them much that should goe vnto the assault, if they should batter the curtine: And others maintained that it was more easie to make a breach in the Curtine, and hauing battered the defences which flanked it, to secure themselves with it, and with some trauesse: for that it was not the custome of warre to attempt a place where it was strongest; but weakest: with this aduice they planted their ordnance, and beganne to batter from the breake of daie vntill night, finding that old wall more hard to ruine than they expected: wherefore hauing viewed the breach, and finding it not sufficient, they left it to make another: And in the meane time they had so battred the defences of the raelin, as the defendants could no more vse them, and the rather, for that the Spaniards were so farre aduanced with their trenches, as they ouerthrew any that shewed themselves with their small shot, so as they thought they might well attempt it there by scale. They had already retired their ordnance from their first batterie, holding it fruitlesse, and wholly relying vpon their second: wherewith the Generalls were much grieved (not well agreeing among themselves) knowing what a blemish to their reputations, and a losse to Christendome their retreat would bee: wherefore they laied hold of that course, which was held to bee the onelie meanes to take the towne: They had spent great store of munition in their batteries, and beganne to be scant; and therefore they were fully resolved to scale the raelin, and to make a diuersion towards the sea, the gallies should at the same instant make an offer to assaile the towne on that side. Wherefore on the second daie of Iuly the Spaniards of the regiment of Sicile, gaue an assault to the raelin, with great courage and resolution, and entred it, where they might haue preuayled, if they of the gallies had come forwards with the like courage, or at the least with that order that was set downe: but hauing shewed themselves too late, they made no diuersion, and they that had entred the raelin, were repulsed with great losse: which successe did wonderfully afflict the whole campe, not knowing what course to take to saue their honours, so as there was small hope in this siege, through the disagreement of the Commaunders, either of their seeking to execute his charge apart, whenas the situation of the place required an vnion both of minds and forces.

Situation of the
towne of Afrike

They wanted souldiers by their continuall skirmishes, the Moores and Turkes defending it with an vndaunted courage; they wanted munition, and were shortened for victualles, hauing none but what came from Sicile, which could be in time provided.

Assault giuen
in vaine at Afrike.

1553

It was therefore resolved to send Marc Centurione to Genoua for new men, who brought in tenne gallies twelue hundred Spanish foot, which were giuen him by the gouernour of Milan, and some munition from the common weale of Genoua, and the Duke of Florence; which fortified the campe and gaue them courage to make new enterprises. They were aduertised by a Moore, that Dragut being retired into Barbarie, was resolved to relieue them by land, who hauing made the Moores his friends, by his great bounty and valour, gathered a great number of them together, which ioyned to seuen hundred Turkes, hee thought might worke some good effect, who making often attempts, and they of the towne fallying out at the same instant, did much annoy the Christians, till in the end many being slaine in a furious skirmish, and many more hurt, hee dispaired of euer doing good. It was not without losse to the victors, who had manie slaine, and of great valour; amongst which was Fernando de Toledo: Some say hee was gouernour of Goulette, and others, marshall of the campe to the Spanish foot. Matters being thus bettered within the campe, for that after this attempt, Dragut had retired himselfe to Gerbe, to attend the ruine of his nest, they resolved to make triall of their last force, and not suffer themselves to be surprized with the fall of the lease, which vpon that coast would hazard the losse of their flecte. They concluded therefore to make three batteries, two by land, and one by sea, with a caualier or mount made of timber and earth, and set vpon two gallies, whereon they might plant some peeces of batterie.

*Dragut seeks to releue the
towne of Afrike*

This being brought vnto the wall towards the sea, wrought a wonderfull effect, and so did those at land, for that vse had taught them better the nature of that place, where they had made many attempts and spent much munition. On the tenth day of September they came to the assault with great resolution and good order in all three places; where they found very great resistance, but it was first entred by the sea, where they found the wall weakest, and therefore had made the greater breach: they wonne it foot by foot, and in the end many of them being retired into the raelin to make their last resistance vnder a Turke, which was their leader, they neuer gaue it ouer, vntill death; so as the slaughter was great: There were manie prisoners taken, some say aboute tenne thousand, others but seuen thousand. The wealth was not so great as was expected, for that euer since Dragut was Lord thereof, it was nothing but a retreat for theeues and pirats. The prisoners were carried into Sicile, whereas the women and children were sold good cheape, the men that were fit for labour, were distributed among the gallies. The viceroy caused the breaches and ruines to be repayed, and left a garrison of Spaniards there, vnder the commaund of D. Aluaro his sonne. Whilest that the armie remained there for the finishing of the fortifications, they had a cruell storme, which continued foure daies, and did them much harme, after which they returned all home safely to the great ioy of all Italie, for this victorie. Muley Hascen the dispossessed king of Tunes died at this siege. Soone after the Viceroyes returne, it was resolved in the Emperours counsell, that the towne of Afrike should be rased, as a place lying too farre off, of great charge, and hard to be kept.

*Birth of Henrie Bourbon King of France and
of Nauarre.*

13 This yere one thousand fise hundred fiftie and three Ioane of Albret the presumptiue heire of Nauarre, was deliuered of a sonne, and he was named Henrie, who should ioyne the rights of Nauarre to them of the house Bourbon which made him apprehend the Crowne of France.

Dragut after the losse of the towne of Afrike, being retired into the Iland of Gerbe, hee aduertized Sultan Solymán of his losse, who retained him into his seruice, and honored him with charges. Doria being aduertized in the Spring, that Dragut was gone to Gerbe, whereas by a long narrow channell, hee entred into a poole, where hee might at ease trimme his gallies, and goe out to his theeuing at pleasure, Doria's armie came sodainly vpon him and besieged him, who to defend his vessels had a Tower which garded the channell, and withall, hee had built a Bastion to couer him. Notwithstanding they must in a short time haue all perished with hunger; both hee with his Turkes, and the Moore which was Lord of that Iland, who being loath to breake his faith, would not yeelde him prisoner to Doria, yet hee perswaded him

Dragut besieged at Gerby by Doria escapes cunningly.

1554

A to finde some meanes to escape, else they should bee all famished, for that the Iland was but little, barren, and had small prouisions to liue withall. Being then forced by necessitie, hee set all his Turkes, Moores, and slaues to worke, who beganne to make a channell in a lower part; the which hee continued daie and night vntill hee came vnto the sea, neyther was hee discovered by the enemies. And so in the night time hee escaped this imminent daunger with admiration, Doria being much discontented that the Turke had circumuented him with such a stratageme, and moreouer that in his retreat hee had taken two of his gallies: but not so satisfied, pursuing this pirate, hee lost seuen more, which were cast away in a storme, with the death of about a thousand persons. The Turkes armie being then at sea, and Dragut ioyned with it, being in all a hundred and fise gallies, and thirtie other vessels, they entred into the streight of Messina, and tooke the towne of Augusta in Sicile, which in auncient times was called Megara, from thence he landed in the Iland of Malta, and attempted the strong Castell of Saint Angelo in vaine: then comming to the Iland of Goze, they sacked it, and carried away many slaues. Finally he came into Barbarie, and tooke Tripoly from the Knights of Malta, hauing held it forty yeeres.

And now Doria's gallies lost.

There was some discord betwixt Amida King of Tunes, and D. Lewis Perez gouernour of Goulette, who pretended that the Barbarian after the vsual manner of the Moores had broken his faith with the Emperour, touching the accord made with Muley Hascen, when he was put in possession, and therefore he annoyed him much: so as Amida fearing worse, made a new accord, and bound himselfe to giue euerie yere vnto the Emperour twelue thousand crownes, to pay the garrison of Goulette, and moreouer fiftene Barbarie horses, and eightene faulcons, to furnish wood for the vse of Goulette, to release all Christian slaues within his realme, and not to suffer anie more to be made, and finally, that hee should not receiue anie pirates, but should aide and defend the Emperour with all his forces against any one that should seeke to offend him.

Amida a King of Tunes makes a new accord with the emperour.

The marriage of D. John prince of Portugall, sonne to King John the third, and of D. Ioane the Emperours daughter, was consummated in the yere one thousand fise hundred fiftie and foure, the which confirmed the friendship and alliances betwixt their houses and states. But this yong prince who was not fully seuentene yeeres old, dyed within a yere after his marriage, leauing the princeesse his wife with child, who eightene dayes after was deliuered of a sonne, whom they named D. Sebastian, King John and Queene Katherine hauing not any more children remaining: D. Ioane being risen from her child-bed, went into Castille to gouerne the realme in the name of the Emperour Charles her father.

*1554
Portugall.*

14

*Birth of D. Sebastian
of Portugall.*

The Emperour finding himselfe much broken and troubled with many infirmities, made his will about that time at Brussells; committing in the meane time the execution of many things to his sonne D. Philip, for that which concerned the affaires of Italie: And as for Flanders and the Countries adioyning, he himselfe with Queene Marie his sister, widow to Lewis king of Hungarie, would gouerne.

15 This yere a marriage was concluded betwixt D. Philippe prince of Spaine, and Marie Queene of England, for the effecting whereof the Prince made preparation to go into England, hauing foure score great shippes and fortie carauells, in the which, besides the noblemen and knights which did attend the Prince, with their ordinarie traine there were foure thousand foote, Spaniards to defend the flecte, and to serue in Flanders, in the warre against the French: he tooke shipping in Biscay hauing a prosperous wind, leauing for gouernesse in Spaine D. Ioane his sister, who (as we haue said) was in the beginning of the yere, left a widow by the prince of Portugall. About the midst of Iulie hee came within sight of Hampton, where there was a flecte of fixe and thirtie shippes, some of the Queenes, some of the low Countries attended to gaide him, it being dangerous sailing vpon that coast; there came from Southampton a shippe royally appoynted, being followed by tenne others, which were sent by the Queene to receiue the princes person, and his whole Court, in the which were many noblemen of England land sent to that end, and to present vnto him the order of the Garter, which he received with a ioyfull countenance, and put the garter on his left leg. Hee would not haue anie go into the ship with him, but the duke of Alba, Ruy Gomes de Silva, Antonio de Toledo and Pedro Lopes, the first was his lord steward, the second lord chamberlain, the third master of his horse, and the last a steward also; but afterwards other noblemen and the whole court landed, with their furniture, which continued three days. During the princes stay there, he was entertained with all the state that might be desired, from thence he went to Winchester, where the Queene attended him, and where the marriage was celebrated. On the 25 of that month, there was first read the renunciation of the emperor his father, by the which he resigned vnto him the realme of Naples, & then the articles of the capitulation made in regard of that marriage. The Emperour would not, neyther did the English thinke it fit their Queene should marrie with any one that had not the title of a King, so as the realme of Naples was assigned vnto him, and soone after the Duchie of Milan. Whereupon the Marques of Pescara was sent to Naples, to take possession in his name, which ceremonie was done the 25 of Nouember, with great solemnity in the presence of cardinall Pacheco, then viceroy, and of the prince of Bisignano, who was created Syndic of the city to that end.

Marriage of D. Philip and Marie Queene of England.

1555

Philippe made king of Naples.

Death of pope Iulio the third.

Death of pope Marcell.

Pope Paul the fourth.

Death of queen Ioane the emperours mother.

Death of Henry of Albret king of Navarre.

Gouernors of Navarre.

Death of D. Pedro of Navarre Marquisse of Cortes.

In the yeere 1555 died pope Iulio de Monte, hee was of a quiet disposition, louing his people, but irresolute in his greatest affaires; which grew of a desire he had to be friend both to the French king and Emperour, who hauing not that art that was requisite to reconcile their old quarrels, hee found himselfe often deceived in his designs, and was not beloued of any of them. He was succeeded by Marcell Cernin of Montepulciano, cardinall of Sancta Croix, a man of a verie good life, giuing great hope of his good gouernment; but hee died within three weekes after his election, confirming a common opinion in the people of Rome, that the Popes which change not their name, die presently. His successour Iohn Peter Caraffa cardinall of Ostia, failed not to change his name, whom they named Paul the fourth; hee was called Chietin or Thietin, of the name of an Order of religious men, whereof hee had bene the Author, at such time as hee was Bishop of Chieti or Thieti in Abruzzo, he was also surnamed the Warrior.

16 The same yeare Queene Ioane mother to the Emperour died in the towne of Tor-desillas, hauing bene alwayes troubled in her senses, and distracted, since the death of king Philippe her husband, vntill that she was threecore and fiftene yeeres old: this princess troubling her selfe infinitely for that she thought she was condemned, and that they kept her as a prisoner, this ambitious humour of command would not suffer her to take any rest, so as this sharpe and violent humor of melancholic, which she had as it were by inheritance from the Queene D. Isabella a Portugall, wife to D. Iohn the second King of Castille her grandmother, was continued and augmented in her.

17 Henry of Albret king of Navarre died about that time at Pau, in the fiftieth yeare of his age. He ordained as the Kings his predecessours had done, that he would be buried in Pampelone, whose bodie was layd at Lescar in Bearn. To whose possessions, and right to the realme of Nauarre, Ioane of Albret his onely daughter succeeded, being married to Anthoine of Bourbon duke of Vendosme. This realme detained by the Emperour, was in the meane time gouerned by Viceroyes: about the yeare one thousand fife hundred and fiftie by D. Barnardin Cardenas duke of Magueda, in whose time D. Philippe prince of the Asturias, and heire of Castille, Arragon &c. was sworne prince of Viana: and in the yeare one thousand fife hundred fiftie and two D. Bertrand de la Cueva duke of Albuquerque took vpon him the gouernement; it is hee that was in Guipulcoa whenas the French held Fontarrabie. By him there were certaine light enterprises made vpon the frontiers of France, and vpon the towne of Saint Iohn de Lus in the precedent warres, and by the diligence of the said Duke of Albuquerque, the prince D. Philip was declared king of Nauarre with the emperours consent, by the Estates of the Countrey, being assembled at Pampelone, in the yeere one thousand fife hundred fiftie and sixe. About this time D. Pedro of Navarre Marquisse of Cortes, and Marshall of the realme of Nauarre, died at Toledo, leauing for heire to his possessions D. Ieronimo of Nauarre, in fauour of whom her husband D. Iohn de Benanides, was made marshall.

The

1555

A The warre had bene verie hot these last yeares betwixt the French and the imperials, vpon the frontiers of Artois and Picardie, and in Piedmont; the which had extended into Tuscaine, whereas Peter Stroff, who commanded the French forces, was defeated into battell by the Marquisse of Marignan Generall for the emperor. Sienna had bene long beleeged by the Imperials, and defended by the French, but in the end it was yeilded, and made subiect to the duke of Florence. But the French notwithstanding this had successe in Tuscaine, began to grow strong in Piedmont, and seemed to threaten the duchie of Milan, where there wanted a Gouernour, D. Ferdinand Gonzague being called in Flaunders to iustifie himselfe, as hee did, of the flaunders wherewith hee was taxed by D. Iohn de Luna a Spaniard, Castell of Milan and the Chaunceller Tauerne. Ruy Gomez de Silva embraced this occasion, who being much beloued by king Philip, and finding the duke of Alba to be a great competitor in his Maiesties fauour, hee had practised long by all the policies of a Courtour to send him from Court, besides hee was suspected to fauour them that did molest Ferdinand Gonzague, to the end that being called thence, the duke might haue meanes to bee sent thither, with a large authoritie, the which succeeded according to his desire for the warre increasing in Piedmont, and ill managed by them that commanded, the king resolved, the emperours Councell being also of that minde, to send the duke of Alba, to reduce it into some better estate. But he would not accept of that charge, which indeed was great and weighty, if hee might not haue such authoritie giuen him, as hee might gouerne with honour, and hope of good successe. Wherefore hee obtained a title, which was neuer before graunted to any of the emperours Ministers, passing with full power and authoritie to gouerne the realme of Naples, and the duchie of Milan, as well in peace as in warre, and to gouerne all as if his Majestic were there in person. And for that hee knew how weake the forces were in Italie, for want of money, before his departure he would haue great prouision made both from the lowe countries, Spaine and Italie; so as with an opinion to doe great matters, not onely by the same of his authoritie and valour, but by the great sum of money which was assigned him, he gaue order for his speedy passage beyond the Alpes. Hee sent Commissions before to haue men, artillerie, munition, victuals, and pioneers in a readinesse, and himselfe came in post the twelfth of Iune to Milan, the successe of that warre you may read in its proper historie. The duke of Alba hearing of some alteration intended vpon the confines of the realmes of Naples, was invited to goe thither (notwithstanding that the king had already sent Bernardine of Mendosa thither, with the title of Lieutenant, in the place of Cardinall Pacecco, who went away hearing of the dukes arriall in Italie) making Iohn Baptista Castaldo his Lieutenant in the state of Milan.

Sienna leset her libertie.

Duke of Alba sent Viceroy into Italie.

Emperour Charles resignes the Gouernment to his son

18 The emperor this yeare one thousand fife hundred fiftie and fife, broken with toyles of the world, and willing to free himselfe of so great a burthen, and to satisfie the desire of his sonne king Philip, to whom although he had giuen the title of King of Naples, and afterwards of duke of Milan, yet the gouernment remained at the disposition of the emperours councell, he resolved to renounce the absolute gouernment with the titles of those realmes & states, except the empire, to the which his brother Ferdinand should succeed. So calling his sonne into Flaunders, he made this renunciation with great ceremonies, in the town of Brussels, the fife and twentieth day of October in a great assembly of the Nobilitie, Prelates, and deputies of townes, the Queene of Hungarie, and Maximilian the emperours sonne in law, with some other princes being present, but all Spaniards, officers & others of what qualitie soeuer, were put out of the hall, and not any suffered to stay, but such as had busines, or had bene called. So as from that time all matters were handled by the said kings Councell, and he was called both king of Spaine and Catholike. But before the resignation of all his realmes and estates in this honourable assembly, he gaue these instructions vnto his Sonne for the better gouernment of his estate.

E e e e

The

The instructions of the emperour Charles, when hee re- signed his estates, vnto his Sonne Philip.

I haue resolued (most deare son) to come now to the point of resigning into your hands the full administration and absolute gouernment of al my estates & realms, as I haue often told you; wherefore my pleasure is, that against the morning you giue order for the performance of this act with all due ceremonies: you shall also giue order with speed, by sending messengers into euery part, that both gouernors, inferior magistrates and people, acknowledge you (as in duty they are bound) for their superior, yeelding you due obedience, & that al persons (except such as are subiect to the empire) take the oath of allegiance. The like oath I will haue the generals of armies & al the commanders of martiall forces take, that they may from henceforth in the point of loyalty depend vpon your selfe & no other. The more rare this president is of princes which haue bin content to resigne their estates vnto their successors, the greater are the signs not only of my loue to you, but of the assurance I haue of your good inclination, & my great care to see your estate settled. I could defer this act (as most princes doe) vntill my death; but hauing a desire rather to imitate the smaller number of fathers in this point, I haue chosen willingly by this act in my life time, to make my selfe superior, rather than a companion to any. It is a weak trial of the valor & resolution of a prince, to subdue kingdoms by force, in comparison of conquering himselfe, being thus far content not only to bridle al ambition & desire of rule, but to submit himselfe to a certain kind of obedience. Against this course, sensuality doth striue with all her force, and in exchange of al worldlie satisfactions which are enjoyed by the prerogative of absolute authoritie, setteth before our eyes the rigor of the laws, to which as to a common bounder, princes (setting their authoritie aside) must leuell all their actions, as well as priuat men. To blind our vnderstanding farther with like vailles, the same sensuall consideration stirreth vp by way of admonition a prouident forecast of diuers inconueniences whereinto many fall, that haue made themselves subiect to the will of other men, by the diuersitie of their conceits and censures, the which by the corruption of the care of priuat interest are apt to swarue from the right rule of integritie. It may be that some will be terrified with this common supposition; that princes which are once possessed of authoritie may resigne it at their owne pleasures, but they must resume it at the pleasures of other men. Yet fatherly affection hath preuailed in me more than all these zealous considerations, and querie also in some part, for finding my selfe now aged (which may bee accompted greater in regard of my sickely estate) my satietie of glory in this world, and wearinesse of toile; finding moreover that by my continuall trauell vnto this day, I could not satisfie in any part the duetie which belongeth vnto the profession of a Christian; I find my selfe inflamed with a most earnest desire to free my selfe from so manie troublesome incommbrances, and then retire my selfe to a meere religious kind of life, and more fit for a Christian. On the other side the consideration of your age, being now ripe and fit for gouernment, together with the expectation which you haue gotten in the world by managing the greatest affaires of Spaine with great iudgement, do moue me the rather to proceed in my resolution. Being moued by all these good considerations, I haue thought it fit to lay this weighty burthen vpon your shoulders, and to ease mine owne, which time and trauell haue now weakened and disabled. I do confidently hope that the subjects of al my prouinces shall haue cause to thanke God first, and then me, for this resolution, in respect of the gracious vantage they shall receiue at your hands, succeeding in my place: neither is it hurtfull vnto your selfe, that by his occasion during my life, you shall settle your selfe more firmly in my dominions.

It remaineth then (my most deere Sonne) that with the same tender and fatherly affection which hath moued me to this, I put you in minde also, that aboue all things you set before your eyes, the feare of God, which ought to be the ground of ciuill gouernment, and so to frame (as much as in you lies) the hearts of your subjects, keeping carefully in mind that which wee cannot prouide (by reason of this short & transitory life) by any other means, more worthily & more honorably, then by leauing vnto the world

when

A when we are gone a good report of our commendable actions. Persuade not your selfe (deare sonne) that because the prerogative of commanding many estates giues great satisfaction and libertie in this world, which euer flattereth the sense of man, that it is not in like manner accompanied with many crosses, and often intermingled with a kind of subiection, either by the restlesse ielousie with which the mindes of Princes that demeane themselves disorderly are tormented, or in respect of the continual care which they take for the preleruation of their estates. Deceiue not your selfe in beleeuing that the regiment hath any kind of proportion with those mightie burthens which are imposed on you by my giuing place; for whereas Spain is a realme of ancient succession, and therefore firme and secure, the estates of Flaunders, Italie, and Germanie, are more strange vnto you, besides they are more variable and troublesome in their owne disposition; and their opportunity of crauing aide from Princes which are mighty & busie which confine vpon their countries is more dangerous. Ad hereunto that many kingdoms bring many cares, for euery smal addition (where the burthen was sufficient before) putteth al things out of order, euen as a stomacke which hath once receiued what sufficeth nature, euery superfluous bit causeth an indigestion & surfet of that which shold serue for sustenance. He makes a great tryal of himselfe that gouerns one state well, but to gouern more than one well, is almost aboue the force of man. No man can at one time attend diuers actions, for euery ship must haue her proper pilot, euery armie his general, & much more doth euery estate craue a particuler gouernor. But the greedines of man hath so much exceeded these prefixed boundes, & forced reason with such violent assaults, as the greater princes are the more desirous they are to get. It is now held basenes, not onely to depart from any thing already gotten, being more than enough, but not to seek by al means to increase it. But seeing reason is so far ouermastered herein by sensuality, and that our age is wholly disposed to ambitious designs, I wil forbear to spend any more idle words, in perswading you to that, the contrarie whereof is generally obserued. I wil rather yeeld this libertie to the worlds abuse; with this excuse notwithstanding, that either all, or the greater part (and especially those that are accompted generous) do the like, and would euer do, if opportunity and means were answerable to their desires. But yet I require you with all loue, that you endeavour

D by all means to correct this common error, and aspiring humor in your selfe, aiming at a greater good, which is, to gouern wel those subjects that are vnder your command: the which is honorable to the world, & acceptable in the sight of God. To this end I must let you vnderstand that the liues of princes stand like glasse before their subjects eyes, who looking daily into the same, as the liuelie mirrors wherunto they should endeavour to conform their courses with al obedience & loyalty, they discern more easily the good & bad that is therein exemplified: wherefore how circumspect and powerfull fouer princes be, they must not thinke that their actions can bee concealed from the world; for although during their own liues they may sometimes seale vp their subjects mouths, stay their tongues and restrain their pens, yet soon after they wil breake out with greater violence, & inueigh

E more bitterly against their honors. Wherefore let your carriage be such towards your subjects, that in respect of the great care they find you haue of the, they may the better like of your directions, repose themselves vpon your wisdom, & liue securely & contentedly vnder the protection of your valor, for that the mutuall affection & loue betwixt the prince and his subjects, doth vndoubtedly spring from this root. Remember alwaies, that it is fit that he which gouerneth a state, shold be as vigilant & carefull of the quiet & safety thereof, as a shepheard is of his flock, or housholder of his familie. To giue a certaine rule concerning this point, I would haue you to vnderstand that all the cares which princes take of their estates are referred to the consideration of one of these two times, that is, either of peace or war, betwixt which two al our actions are spent, and therefore it is wisely said, that the maiesty of a prince hath as great need to be assisted with a council of great policie & wise fore-cast in time of peace, as of a great and strong armie in time of war. Wherefore a princes whole care & course ought to be in the first time to haue a respect to his subjects quiet & content, and in the later to their securitie, from whence groweth satisfaction on both sides. And men without al question are more securely gouerned with good intreaty vnder a voluntarie subiection, than by inforced seruitude, and more firmly kept in obedience

E e e e e j

ence

ence by loue than by violence. A Prince should euer prefer the leauing of his dominions to his successors by meanes of the peoples loue, lesse absolute & more durable, than by their feare lesse durable, yet more absolute: It is feare that holds the subjects loyes, and brideth their insolent desires, but no longer than some fresh occasiō is offered to shake this seruile yoke from their necks, and to settle their loyes and loyalities vpon some other mightie potentate, who shall bee both willing and able to protect them from all wrongs, which being once done, they will neuer be willingly drawne to their first obedience. It doth also often happen that the secret hatred which proceedeth from feare, inforceth them without any respect to make attempts for their deliuerie. Some hold that the best way for a prince to keepe his people quiet, is to keepe them poore: but in my opinion they stray much from the path of policie: The reason is, for that euerie hope or likelihood of bettering their estates vnder other rulers, moueth them to lay newe plots, and to desire innouations. I doe as little allow of their policie, who to diuert their subjects from practising any alterations: hold them in continuall action, especially if their employments be barbarous and base; for besides that it breakes their hearts, experience doth teach that for desire of ease they will affect alterations, for as the end of feare deserues reproofe, so the meanes that leade therunto are also reprooueable. How much the way of winning the peoples loue ought to be preferred before the course of keeping them in awe, may easily appeare by a due consideration of the causes from whence these affections haue their beginning: The causes of the peoples loue are justice, gracious vsage, and fauours, all which deserue praise: The causes of their feare are grieuances, ill vsage and oppression, which merit blame. Looke what the cause is, such is commonly the effect, whereby it followes necessarily, that as out of loue is drawne a regiment more firme and stable, though more moderate, so out of feare proceedes a kind of power more absolute in shew, but yet lesse durable: the like proportion holdes in the peoples hearts, for where they loue there is all satisfaction, mirth, sweeter conuersation and dutifull respect, but where they feare, there is suspicion, strangenes, discontent, quarrels, melancholie. Out of the impressions which feare breeds wee can expect no better fruits than hatred, but from that deuotion which loue kindleth assured confidence, whereupon we ground the common prouerbe, Loue is among kinsfolkes, and feare among enemies. The parts which beside respect of Religion, are required in a Prince for the better gouernment of his estates, & settling in his subjects hearts a loue, and reuerent respect both of his person & state, are chiefly three, Faith, Iustice & Continencie: Faith makes him intire in all his proceedings, and a man of his word, for without it no man would giue credit either to his practises or promises: Continencie makes him to be reuerenced with respect, and imitated with commendation; it giueth him an excellent aduantage in a large field, correcting feuerely the faults of subjects that offend in that degree, the which he could not doe without blushing if himselfe were culpable: Iustice teacheth a prince how to reward the good and to punish the bad, to giue euerie man his due, to restraine men by correction that are apt to erre, & to encourage others by rewards that are desirous to deserue wel: besides it makes the princes bloud, his honor, and his estate secure, without which vertue no force is able to keepe the subjects faithfully affected to their Soueraigne, for it is the propertie of all people when as they neither find reward of good deserts, nor punishment of offences, to grow first into distrust, & then into despair, which passions corrupt their minde, hauing once gotten the mastery. Wherefore let the due consideration of what is iust and honest be alwaies preferred in all your princely purposes, that being once settled in the subjects hearts, that iustice is duely admistrated, they will euer remaine satisfied with your direction, especially if besides this fauour, they liue in abundance, hauing free traffike to all parts, and quietnesse of minde, for men toile and trauell during the course of their liues, not only for their Princes & superiors, but for themselves and families. Doubtlesse, to maintain the people in abundance of all things necessarie for the preservation of their liues, is not only commendable in a prince, but doth worke great effects in winning the hearts of men, the which may be easily provided for, by a carefull fore-sight of the times of dearth, making diligent prouision for necessities in due time, so as the benefitte may who-

M

A lie redound to the peoples ease, and not to the princes gaine, by inhaunsing of prices and preferring of priuate benefite before publike content. A prince may alwaies hold himselfe rich when as his subjects that liue vnder him, are rich; for vpon any extremitie he shall bee frankly releued by their beneuolence: good vsage setteth their loyes, and bindeth their deuotions. Experience teacheth, that fauours of this kind are neuer forgotten, that a small consideration in time of need winnes more vnfaigned loue than greater benefites when there is plentie: And that those fauours haue alwaies had deepest impressions in mens gratefull thought, which concerne maintenance and the preservation of life in time of necessitie. It is sufficient for a prince in this cause of prouision, to take order that hee lose not by the bargaine, or if hee desire to gaine something for the releefe of other charges, let it bee no more than an honest merchant with a good conscience may gaine, for to these bounds may the politike prouision of princes ayme, but no farther, either in respect of honour or authoritie. If a Prince will bee beloued of his people, hee must giue them cause to thinke that hee loueth them, assuring himselfe that their thankfulness must grow from his desert, their loue from his prouidence, & their content fro the peace and securitie which they enioy vnder him, and that according to the fruits of fauour which the people reape by the Princes policie, they frame themselves to liue contentedly, vnder the gracious shadow and protection of his princely wings, relying vpon his wisdom and carefull gouernement. C being in it selfe both burthen some and odious, they would soone take some new course to settle their quiet and securitie by some other means, freeing themselves from all cause of feare, which (as I haue said before) is lesse durable, and lesse secure, and therefore lesse pleasing to the state of a Christian Gouernour. Let no Prince imagine that with solempne shewes and publike fights alone subjects are delighted and pleased in their own conceits, for those things are not acceptable, but whe as their minds are satisfied in matters which do import them more. Vpon this ground and to the same end I must also aduise you in any case to vse that moderation which is fit in charging the people with tributes or any other kind of impositions, for albeit that States cannot bee ruled without some kind of releefe, in respect of the manie occasions and excessive charges wherewith Princes are D burthened in times of peace, but much more in time of war, yet vnto euerie thing there belongs a meane, which in all occurrents is the perfect rule of humane actions, especially those which any way grieue the subjects hearts, considering that euerie princes power is grounded vpon their conformitie to his directions and vniforme assent to serue and honor him: wherefore this meane must be sought out with all care, & being found it must be put in practise with great temperance; and worthily preferred before all other courses, seeme they neuer so commodious and profitable. If the continuall toile of warre hath inforced mee at anie time to holde a heauie hand ouer my subjects in this kinde, I protest this course was alwaies against mine owne liking. Touching this point of obseruing E of a prince, whether they be publike or priuate, are raised two waies, the first by augmentation of the old, the other by addition of new, for vnto these two heads all the inuentions to get money which are put in practise by the princes of our age may be reduced.

In like maner the waies by which mony may be drawn from the subject & others, are voluntarie or forced. The voluntarie may be contained in the sale of customs, offices, and other like alienations of commodities and rents. That which is forced may in like maner be exemplified in such taxes and ordinarie tributes, as are imposed vpon the people with out recompence: the first hath in it a kind of sweetnesse, for that it is feldome vrged by necessity: wherefore it is requisite to limit the other kind by this, and when necessity requires rather to sel offices & rents, than to inuent any new graciūces to the people. I haue many F times resolved with my selfe to deale after this maner, but haue euer bin diuerted by occurrences from bringing into my state that custom of selling of offices, and making magistrats for life, which is vsed in the court of Rome, for it is a matter of great import, & a means to bring a sudden gain into the princes purse, for the next vacatiō, either by remoue, imploiment, or death, yeeldeth as much or very little lesse than the ordinarie rent, which by their

E e e e iij.

their accompt is to bee answered. No doubt this was a course of great confidence, and of especiall commoditie to the superiour, as may bee gathered by this reason of experience: That the Popes in how great poueritie fouer they finde the Church at their first entrie to the Sea, yet they neuer want meanes to procure money after the first beginning of their government.

It is true that in the Court of Rome, as it should seeme, the sale of Offices, which haue annexed vnto them ordinarie administration of iustice, brings not so great danger vnto the State, as it would doe in other Realmes; for that auarice is not the chiefe obiect in that place, of mens intents, but rather hope to raise themselves to greater honour from this ground, and access to all times vnto the Pope, vpon this occasion, which carrieth with it many other especiall comodities. But the Princes of the world may in like manner deuise to set ambition in the eye of Officers, as the obiect and end of their offer to buye Offices, by rewarding such as carrie themselves well with great honours, and disgracing those that shall deale otherwise. By this meanes you may change the object of your Officers, from couetousnesse to a desire of rule, and to supply the humours of authoritie, which is alwaies accessarie to Ambition.

The second meanes to seeke reliefe from the subiect (which I termed forced) is heauie and odious, yet by the good discretion of Ministers which deale in those affaires, and by the presidents of other countries lying neere about, where they are oppressed by their Governours, this griefe may bee much qualified. The Prince in this case may doe much good vnto himselfe, by giuing easie access vnto his person when occasion doth serue; for hee must take a fit time to acquaint them with his occasions, hee must seeke in some sort to free himselfe of their hard conceits, and ease the other part by fauours of another kinde: hee must iustifie his actions in the iudgement of the world, eyther by prouing the cause of this grievance to bee verie vrgent, or colouring the same so cunningly as it may at the least appeare so, or endeavouring to send some away satisfied, if it bee possible. This not voluntarie, or forced way, is subdiuided into two other parts, into perpetuall burthens, as customes, or temporarie: as subsidies: and this later at the time of the first imposing, makes people to grieve for a while in respect of the paine which pincheth them, but this grieefe cannot long endure, for that one instant, and one payment freeth them, especially if the prince make protestation of his vnwillingnesse, and with all make apparent to the peoples meane capacitie; the necessarie cause that vrgeth him thereunto. The other kind is farre more grievous and offensive, albeit in time the people grow better acquainted with that course, and beare it as well as they can, for that there is no remedie. Sodaine impositions, although they seeme grievous at the first, yet by a prince whose lineall succession is not well settled, ought to bee preferred, as portions which are more sharp and yet more quicke in operation, are before those that are more gentle, yet long and tedious in curing the sicke; and the rather in this case, for that Princes colers are suddenly replenished. Aboue all things you must haue a great care, that during the leuie of this aid, your Officers adde nothing to the burthen, either by extremitie, discurtesie, or demand of fees, for we find daily that by such extraordinarie extortions, men are more incensed in respect of the wrong and violence, then with the principall, which is disbursed for the satisfaction of their Soueraigne. The subiect is much impouerished by this hard course, and yet the Prince reapes no benefit thereby; nay, when hee shall haue need to craue a new supply and aide from them, hee findes them more feeble and lesse able to relieue his wants. Rents increase by raising new impositions vpon occasions, by bettering the trade, by reducing forfeitures to the princes pleasure, by limiting all necessarie charges; and cutting off such as are superfluous. The field of raising new rents is exceeding large, yet the prince is bound to walke in it with all possible respect, so farre as it comportes the peoples grievance: hee must especially abstaine from imposing of heauie customes vpon such things as his subiects are enforced to send abroad, as Sicile doth graine, and the Realme of Naples wine and Silke. The like consideration is to be had of things brought in from foraine parts for the supply of other wants at home: for vpon

As vpon these two reasons experience and time hath grounded the ordinarie traffique that holdeth betwixt countries for their naturall necessities. Wherefore in these causes princes ought to haue a care that their reuenues may bee answered in a meane, rather than by excesse; for the more moderate customes are; the greater store of needfull things are brought home vnto our doores, in respect of the great gaine which marchants make by selling at the second hand; and for the like respect the greater store of superfluous things are transported by the subiects into foraine parts. By this meanes the rent is rayfed farre about the measure which a great imposition would yeeld: The people want no foraine commodities for their reliefe, and yet their purses are filled by the vent of superfluous things at home; so as they may be the better able both to satisfie their princes custome, and contribute also vpon such reasonable occasions as shall occur in policie: vpon other things which are rather brought in for wantonnesse and pleasure, than for necessarie vse, a more weightie imposition may bee layed, for the estate (which may well forbear these losse commodities) is not dammed thereby, if some, to satisfie their humors, will needs buy, it skilleth not though they pay somewhat deerer for their fantasies. Besides, some are discouraged sometimes with the great price, which otherwise would acquaint themselves too much with the pleasures which make men effeminate. Princes that seeke to increase their old rents, by raising of their wonted impositions, must be careful, that they doe it rather with a limitation of the customers commoditie and gaine, that leuies it, than with the peoples losse, that answers it: for a grievance in this kind were in effect as ill as any other imposition. There must be a care also taken, that a conuenient respite may be allowed the subiect for the payment of his taske. As for example, if the prince haue need of money in Summer, then to seise the subiects the Winter before; for they are apt to take the time of this delay for a kind fauour. This leuie of money must be put into the hands of ordinarie officers, and not to appoint any new to disquiet them, or to rife their wealth, vnder colour of seruice to the State; for such parts are most hateful vnto them. But, as I sayed before, a prince ought first to consider, whether it be possible by selling or ingaging some part of his reuenues, to supplie the vrgent occasions of his estate, before hee seeke to helpe himselfe by the purse and sweat of his subiects: for otherwise, as the wiser sort perceiue that, whatsoever they doe or say, they shall bee still forced to contribute to their superiour; that on the one side their old burthens are increased, and on the other, all meanes cut off, by which they might haue vent for their commodities; all traffique either ouerthrowen, or much decayed, by the which they were wont to releue their wants with foraine commodities, it is not possible but they will eagerly desire an alteration, and attempt it by all meanes possible. Touching this point of molesting the subiects with impositions as little as may be; it importeth much, that they be agreeable to the nature of the countrey where they liue; that the people may beare the burthen more easily; for from those places which yeeld nothing but men, princes may not demand money. England yeeldeth an example of this kind; for on that side which lyeth next to Scotland, they seise not their borderers. You your selfe may draw some money out of Spaine, Germanie, and Flanders, when occasion doth serue, but out of Italie both men and treasure. Moreover, when you impose any burthen, it is not amisse to set the rate in the beginning high, that the people may hold it as a fauour, when as, at their request, it is brought to some reasonable tearmes. They may be eased also, by admitting their excuses which they make in respect of time, and giuing eare with patience to that which they are able to alledge for some tollerations; you must alwayes haue a care to leaue them satisfied in some sort, at the least to comfort them with kind words; and make them capable of the just cause that moued you. You must lay before them the times, the reasons, and the occasions which inforce this course, providing alwayes, that all gracious dealing may be thought to proceed from your selfe; and whatsoever is offensive, sharpe or odious, referre it to your officers. You must moreover haue an especiall care, that all profits so dearly purchased with the peoples groanes, be brought to your owne hands, and not employed on distributed to the priuar vse of persons that are put in trust to gather it vnder you. It importeth also your estate very much (decreit soine) to keepe credit with the marchant, which will alwayes succeed happily; so long long as you assigne vnto them conuenient commodities, in consideration of their bonds, G and maintaine them euer in securitie, especially with the state of Germanie you must take this course, for the holding them thus ingaged in your estates and realmes, by reason of their interest and bonds, without erecting of any sorts, which they detest much. You may no lesse assure your selfe of that Estate which is of great importance in Italie, than the French king held the Florentines tied vnto him by the trade of Lions, as wee haue found by plaine experience. Now seeing it is not possible that a prince of many estates and countries (should alone be able to gouerne them all, nor any one of them (all things considered) it is requisite that this defect be supplied by the meanes of ministers and deputies, that may helpe to support so great a burthen: Vherupon it followes of necessitie, H that to chuse such as be worthie and sufficient in all respects, is a matter which doth much import the State; wherefore I will speake vnto at large of this matter, to the end you should not want a rule to know them, and imploy them in the seruice of the State. I would haue you consider, that the properties belonging to worthie ministers are these:

First and principally, wisdome and vnderstanding how to manage their affaires that are committed to their charge; secondly, loue to their superiour; and lastly, vertue in themselues: to the end that by wisdome they may haue knowledge, and by vertue disposition to execute the trust: for otherwise, either through ignorance they shall not know, or by frowardnesse refuse, or through malice grudge, to discharge their duties. These are the qualities without the which the prince cannot relye vpon their worth, nor the peo- I ple be pleased with their actions. But as there is great difficultie both in finding out and observing such, so experience doth teach, that all princes which haue been serued by men of such sufficiencie in these degrees, haue ruled happily, with great contentment to their subiects, and eternall glory to themselves, notwithstanding that they haue themselves bin somewhat dissolute: for what made the name of the Emperor Iulianus immortal, besides his profound knowledge, but the great worth of his counsellors & ministers, both in peace and war; for by their helpe in both seasons he effected great matters. Doubtlesse it is an argument of great wisdome in a prince, when as nature hath not enabled him in the first kind of perfection, which is, out of his owne sufficiencie to rule the State, yet at the least to marshall himselfe in the second ranke, which is, of such as imploy men in their seruice K that are capable, for thus they draw the quintessence of many pregnant wits to their own vse, and grow to vnderstand more than a number that know by themselves: as foure eyes must needs see more than two, by the course of nature. But wee may hold that prince vnfortunat, which resteth in a third proportion, being neither able of himselfe, nor willing to giue eare to others that are more sufficient. A prince can neuer want meanes to replenish his owne Court with men fit for his seruice, if he will be carefull to seeke them out where they are, esteeme them, and acknowledge their defects, by good effects. Let him rather make the first motion, and not deprive himselfe by daintinesse of a worthie seruant:
for that prince is rather proud than politicke, who perswadeth himselfe, for that his treasures are greater than other mens, therefore euerie man should creepe before they L call, especially the wise and vertuous, who many times carrie minds as haucie as princes, and in that respect desire not to submit their liberties to the will of any man, preferring the freedom of a meane fortune, before the golden fetters of a prince that either knowes them not, or regards them not. The reason is, for that wisdome and vertue are in themselves a kind of superiouritie, or rather the verie true superiouritie it selfe, for that we see that Empires, treasure, fortunes, fauours, and naturall ornaments, are subiect to corruption and change, by alteration of time, or accidents, as it pleaseth God to dispose: But the riches of the mind, such as wisdome and vertue are, can neuer be diuided from the partie that possesseth them. The minds of honest men are much estranged, when they find how little their superiors esteeme them, preferring a wicked and lewd M person before a loyall heart, a flatterer before a faithfull minister, a man puffed vp with vnderfered fauours, before him that seeketh to purchase grace by desert, an idle drone before a painefull officer. Those princes erre exceedingly, which want iudgement to conceiue, that vertue cannot bee valued, that it deserueth more than any one can giue: that all fauours which a prince bestoweth vpon worthie seruants, are both honourable

A rable and profitable, and that a prince cannot imploy his treasure with greater gaine by interest in any trade, than by rewarding such as are both vertuous and politike. Nothing can bee made more plaine, nothing can be found more necessarie; considering how impossible it is, that any prince should either winne great honour, or achieue great matters, without able ministers. Beware you erre not in this point, but seeke for worthie seruants, and retaine them in your seruice with all honour and preferment, setting this downe for a Maxime, That in a matter of importance a resolute and wise Counsellor shall stand you more in stead with his sound aduice and iudgement, than your legions of souldiers with their armes, or whole mountaines of treasure in your cofers.

B Doe not beleue, for that a prince is wise and vigilant himselfe, he therefore needs not any able ministers; nay, you may obserue, that the greatest princes of the world haue always sought to draw vnto them the greatest number of rare men. Who was euer attended on by a greater number of this qualitie, than Cesar? whom I hold to haue bene the greatest prince that to this day, both in peace and warre, hath either ruled ouer prouinces, or commaunded armies. It seemeth rather, that these proportions and qualities are linked together with an indissoluble knot, that when the prince is valiant and wise, so are his officer, when the prince is faint-hearted, so are his ministers.

C If we allow a grounded excellencie in the prince, it is to be presumed, that the same can neuer brooke an insufficiencie in those that attend on him, whereas the weakenesse of the princes iudgement cannot be capable of his seruants excellencie. From hence our common prouerbe taketh his first originall; Like will to like: Equals are most apt to content in loue; and hee that will ghesse probably of the disposition of a stranger, whom hee knoweth not, must consider with whom hee keepeth companie. Consider of this poynt of imployment and election with an especiall care (my most deere sonne) and herein it shall be sufficient for you to imitate and follow me, your father, a-longe, who during the course of my life haue induoured to haue about me men of greatest esteeme, both for counsell and execution. To the care which is to bee had in respect D of them, for their vertue, wisdome, integritie, and loue, I would haue you also for your owne part bee carefull to imploy such persons in the affaires of Italie, as are best acquainted with their humors, and are most futable to the conditions of that State; providing that they may bee thoroughly instructed in those points, without respect of any priuate interest, or speciall loue or bond to any. The like course I would haue you take in Spaine, and your other Estates, especially in chusing the leaders of your armies; for vndoubtedly the fitnessse of your ministers for those places which they hold, is a matter of verie great importance in all actions of gouernement. We read of Hanibal, That he was most fortunate at land, yet verie vnhappie in all actions belonging to the sea. And how many doe wee find in generall experience, which are E exceeding fit for the nature of one people, and vnfit for another. Sometimes wee meet with persons absolutely wise, and that carrie themselves with great commendations in all places, and at all times, and vpon all occasions that are incident to their charge; but wee find them rare: of others that are onely fit for speciall affaires there is no great plen-tie in the world, and therefore they must bee imployed in that facultie wherein they are held most sufficient to serue: for it is a matter of no small importance, to make choyce of such a minister to any end, as is found most excellent in his owne profession.

Make your speciall choyce out of diuers ages, and diuersitie of gifts, for so shall you bee sure to light on those that are most fit. Bee carefull that vnder your most F trustie and most sufficient Counsellors, some may bee trayned and instructed for the seruice, when their date is at an end, least otherwise the fortune of your great gouernment seeme to be bounded within the terme of their continuance; for priuat persons haue their periods, but policies in States well gouerned should be perpetuall. Let the Romans serue for an example in this case, who to preuent the danger that might grow by committing the burthen of direction to one onely man, assigned by way of succession (in case he

he should perish that had the chiefe command) sundrie gouernors vnto euerie armie. In any case beware you do not lay your most important causes in a time of danger, vpon the shoulders of such persons as were neuer made acquainted with affaires of equall weight: When any such occasion doth happen, your safest course is, alwaies to preferre the judgement of your eldest counsellors, who speake out of experience.

Aim not at honor in the choice of your counsellors; respect those of a middle age, where gifts are answerable: for as the yonger sort is commonly euer credulous and bold, so others that are neuer called vntill their later daies, are suspitious, incredulous, irrefolute, and commonly leaue the world before they can be made fit for their calling: but they that haue made prooue of their sufficiencie for the space of many yerres, and vpon verie dangerous occasions, waxing white headed with the toile of seruice, and the cares of gouernement, ought euer to be reuerenced and respected, as a necessary wrett to turne the jarring strings of disagreeing humors at a counsell board, to perfect harmonic. I would also haue you in this point of imitating the militarie discipline of Rome, to make a medley of your counsell, betwixt wise old men, and yong men of great hope: for such a speare, like vnto that of the Pithagorians, consisting of so many sundrie parts, as treble, meane, & base, will yeeld that sweet consent which is to be wished in all policie. By this meane princes shall not need to make their musicke of one string, they need not build vpon one hope, nor addit selfeluces to one certaine qualitie: for many times among those that are young of yerres, we find persons old of vnderstanding, and among aged men, counsellors that haue Greene heads, and flourish both in wit and fortitude. In this case, such young men are accounted old, and such old esteemed yong: The middle sort are to be marshalled on either side, as their conditions and qualities incline to one or other, more or lesse; for ministers ought not to be respected for their yerres onely, but for their judgements, manners, and conditions in the execution of their charges. And yet, besides these ordinarie objects, according to the age and qualitie of euerie one, seeke also to haue knowledge of their natures and priuat affections: for it is not sufficient for a generall that conducteth an armie through any country, to haue a generall Idea of the country in his mind: but it is requisite he should haue a particular knowledge of the country it selfe, whether it abound with water & other necessarie prouisions, or be in want, which first of all causeth a dearth, and then ruine. A prince must euer presuppose, that although the quicke conceit of some ripe heads, makes them soone to take instruction of a new charge, recommended by superiors, and to grow fit for the managing thereof, the greater part notwithstanding is for a time vncapable, and during that time may commit disorders, and offend the subiects in their customes, priuiledges, and rights: which, seeme they neuer so sleight, either in respect of themselves, or of any other accidents of lesse account, yet must they needs be valued according to the rate which they had in generall opinion, and the great disturbance which is bred by want of obseruation; for small spatckles may kindle a great fire, if they be not quencht in due time, with moderation.

Now that you may the better know who are the wise and worthie ministers, that deserue imploiment in your estate, you must vnderstand, that true wisdom may be gotten by foure meanes especially: The first is, by experience of occurrents in the world; wherefore it is said, That they which practise much, must needs learne much: And this kind of wisdom our auncestors exemplified in their owne kings, the Greekes especially in Agamemnon and Menelaus: who by varietie of matters put into their hands, and by occasion of that which by their accidents and consultations they generally vnderstand, may easily grow wise, and learne (as the proverbe faith) at the charges of other men. The second meane is, by the instruction of histories; for thus they come to knowledge both of actions and reasons, in times past; they marke their applications and effects, and thereby setting downe rules vnto themselves, for the direction of their owne affairs, not onely purchase honor and reputation by their knowledge, but wax great by the toile of other men. Of this kind we may find paternes both in Solon and Socrates. The third course is, by traueling into diuers countries, and by obseruing the diuersitie of lawes and policies: for this particular collection of foraine wisdom, may be sensibly applied to particular occasions of their owne. And this kind of wisdom is ascribed vnto Vlisses by Antiquitie. The fourth

meanes

A meanes to attaine vnto it, is, by long life: for although a man should learne but one good lesson euerie yere, yet time, at length, would make him generally wise. Neslor may stand in this degree for a faire president, of whom it is plainly said, that he vnderstood very much for that he had liued very long. And I cannot see how a young man may be capable of any of the other three first kinds of wisdom, both for that he cannot in a short time gaine so great experience, as is necessarie to this effect; and moreover, youth wanteth that well seasoned consideration that is requisite: neither are a few yerres sufficient for men to traue, well, and to obserue that which breedeth judgement. Lastly in respect of the defect and want of time, he cannot draw a true picture of that apprehension which old age hath gathered. I denie not, but by the meanes of some prudent ministers & counsellors, a young prince may attaine to all foure kinds at once, if he retaine about him a conuenient number of men, wise in their degrees, and not onely vse their counsell in his great affaires, but with all regard follow it.

Wherefore there ought to be great regard had in the choice of these men, especially to chuse wise men, which by way of instruction and historie, can conceiue, especially with any small experience of the affairs of the world, and the benefit of their many yerres, which is the most secure, and least deceitfull mixture of these kinds of wisdom, that can be limited; saying that those persons which are best furnished with all these kinds, ought to be preferred before all others. The wisdom of ministers, ought to be referred to the same two times we haue formerly spoken of, of peace and warre, whereunto all the considerations, forecast, and prouisions of a prince, ought to be directed.

The goodnesse of ministers and officers, which is the second part that is required in them, may be judged of by the good name which they do carrie, and by their good behaviours. A man is said to do well foure waies, by chance, by cunning, by the beginning of the habit it selfe, and after that by vsage and practise, if it be fully perfected. Good workes done by chance, or to a cunning end, are distinguished from those that are done at the first beginning of the habit, for that they neuer spring from any vertuous intention, as the other do, though both may be indifferently accompanied with good effects. And for that the secrets of the mind are hard to be discovered by the judgement of man, for that God alone doth see the inward part of our hearts: wherefore men do greatly erre in making vse of them, being impossible to attaine to a perfect knowledge of those persons, but by a continuall obseruation of their actions with speciall care. In the first kind, which is of things done well by chance, it is not possible there should be any good intention, for that the patient neuer thinks of that he hath in hand. Much lesse in the second, where all is directed to a cunning end, for that malice bears the sway. The third and fourth degrees, where men either begin a vertuous habit, or haue attained it, the intent is alwaies good; yet the effects and operations of the third doe not alwaies fall out so happily as of the fourth: for the third proceeds sometimes from a sence not fully sedled, nor thoroughly corrected by the restraint of reason, & raines of vertue, which onely ruleth their intents, and accompanieth their actions, else there should be more difference betwixt the members of this diuision. They that by cunning will seeme vertuous, in respect of endlessse feare least their ill meaning should be brought to light, standing in the mid way to the marke which is common to all men, like a bow drawne from the other extreame, they are heauie, melancholie, and full of doubts, vpon euerie rumor of the vulgar sort, they cast false shadowes of suspicion, linger in mistrust, and affright themselves with fancies: their daies are troublesome, their nights vnquiet, their cares infinit, and therefore our Saviour might boldly say, He parietes fesses. But they that are sincerely and intirely vertuous, relying onely vpon their bountie and worth, liue in continuall peace, with content of mind, and without all feare of oppression. It resteth in the will and power of the prince himselfe, to encourage faithfull ministers to shew their loue and dutie to their superiours, either by binding them by rewards and fauours, or by contenting them with honour and authoritie, or by setting them with such commodities and pleasures as they most affect, or by setting their inclinations to deserue well, in offering occasions whereby they make prooue of their fidelities: For as it is most proper for mans nature, to proceed with courage where they find their seruice thankfully rewarded vpon iust cause, so princes are apt to trust vpon upon due triall of their ministers integritie. But the way to make them constant and sure against all assaults, is, to tye them, not with any single bond, but with all these together, if it be possible. Let no prince thinke, that it is more safe, in consultation touching his affaires of Estate, to trust domesticals, and such as are most deere vnto him for other ordinarie causes, but lesse able to aduise, before others that bee farther off, so as they bee more fit, onely of feare to seeme more vnthankfull to the first, and deprive them of their due: for the end will be, that by this opinion hee shall preferre men of no worth nor vnderstanding, before others that are more sufficient and necessarie; which is the most absurd and sencelesse error which hee can commit, touching this point of election of ministers. I would haue all other considerations of riches, fauour, and all other gifts of fortune, yeeld in your esteeme to vertue and worthinesse: for where a prince finds qualities agreeable, it is his part to thinke how to enrich and aduance them; for the meaner their estates are whom the prince shall raise to high degrees, the greater shall their bond appeare, and the more sincere and firme their duties and affections. In rewarding your seruants good deserts, I would wish you to endeavour as much as you may to gratifie them according to your desires, and to haue an eye to their owne ends: for some seeke ease onely, and abundance of commodities belonging to this life; others hunt after honour and authoritie; and some couet satisfaction in other kinds, according to their seuerall humors, or as such fauours either are indeed, or at the least are held by them most suitable to their conditions and qualities: without respect of these affections of men, a prince should often loose the thanks which bountie expects: for many desire rather to fast than to be crammed against appetite. Among other rules it shal not be amisse to note, that nothing bindeth loue more firmly, than when a prince bestowes a benefite out of his owne free choice, without the instance or soliciting of any fauorer. The first we must ascribe to the fauour of our Soueraigne alone; the second we may diuide betwene the prince that giueth, and the friend that moueth it. Some haue commended and allowed a distrust and disagreement betwene ministers of State, as if it were the best meane to acquaint a prince with the truth: but this course was neuer pleasing to my humor, neither could I euer find how so bad a cause as discord, could euer produce any commendable effects in a princes seruice. A kind of emulation is not amisse, so as it tend onely to incite honourable minds to shew themselves more worthie of the princes fauour, to deserue better in his seruice, and to be fit for a better place when time shall serue, as we read of two of Cæsars Corporals: but in no wise let it grow to malice or dislike; for the prince may neuer shew more fauour to one than to another, as it falleth out sometimes, for that it will not be possible alwayes to keepe the ballance euen, but the partie which receiueth lesse is tormented with ialousie, fretted inwardly with spight, blinded with disdain, and all, in the end, turneth to the prejudice of the princes seruice, and the publicke action.

1555

Among these, and out of these, ought the prince to make choice of a sufficient number to serue him in the place of counsell, and imploy the rest in other seruices belonging to the State: for being guided by their aduice & counsell, he can hardly erre, but may rather rest assured, that his worthie acts shal purchase honor & immortalitie to his name; wherefore strue to abound in these rather than in any other treasure whatsoeuer: and feare not least facilitie, in being led and directed by the aduice of worthie men, should rob you of the honor which belongeth to your rare deserts; for that the chiefest commendation is not ascribed vnto him that either giueth counsel, or hath charge to execute, but vnto the prince, vpon whose resolution all depends, and who out of his judgement and discretion, assignes to euery man that part for which he is most fit, in his owne opinion: for although there may be aptnesse in the timber, yet to make choice of the best for building, and imploy it to the best vse, shewes the skill of a good workman. Besides, if the prince, out of a jealous and suspicious humor, be mistrustfull in this point, how easie a matter is it at all times, vpon diuers colours and pretences, to change, alter, or deferre his resolution, so as whatsoeuer they inuent shalbe ascribed to his own perfection. A prince can neuer want occasions to sound their opinions, and to make profit of their deep judgements, without imparting the secret of his purposes to any one of them.

My meaning was to discourse with you about this point of chusing able ministers, at large,

1555

A large, for that, in my opinion, the weight of this subject required no lesse: wherefore I repeat it againe, That a prince can neuer become great, nor maintaine his greatnesse, without the seruice and assistance of sufficient counsellors & officers: And therefore (my most deere sonne) I require you carefully to open both your eyes and eares in this respect, and to be diligent in searching out the qualities of men, for your better instruction: All offices, administrations, and gouernments, which are giuen for a short limited time, are most secure from those suspitions & jealousies which long continuance in office and authoritie doth breed; being impossible, in so short a space, to make parties, or to procure followers. And although this course be not alwayes free from those dangers and discommodities, which are incident to gouernors, who either want experience, or acquaintance with state; yet a moderate exchange ought, in my conceit, to be preferred before a perpetuities: for the people (be the gouernors neuer so religious and just) feelee a kind of safetie at the least, and as well in this point as in others, delight, in change; vsing the same as a counterpoise to that irksome loathsome which groweth out of the continuall vse of any one thing without alteration.

Let your maner in giuing audience to suitors be easie, liberal, and ordinarie, whereby not only the subject is pleased with the same, reputing this access as a restorative, for that it giueth them opportunitie to ease their grieuances by their superiors fauour: but on the other side it maketh the prince more wise, when euery day by this means he cometh to the knowledge of new accidents, new impressions, & new opinions. The prince also cometh to vnderstand all the affairs, humors, passions, and plots of his own subjects, and their interest, which is, as I said before, one kind of wisdom. To this end therefore, and for a thousand other good effects, a prince ought to visit all his estates often, but in such sort, as many progresses and extraordinary charges which belongs vnto them, may not be burthen some to his subjects, and a blemish to his owne authoritie: for things that are accounted excellent, if they be made common, they loose a great part of their estimation in the eyes of the world. If their progresses be seldom, in like maner, they giue some suspicion of neglect, and carelesse regard of the peoples good; they giue encouragement to deputies and magistrates, to follow their own humors: and moreover, they make their subjects despaire of all hope of refuge to the princes presence, and of recourse to the same in time of necessitie: for, as I said before, this is a meane to ease the subject, and to curbe the magistrat. In giuing audience, let your care be to send euery man away with some satisfaction, or at the least with good liking of your affabilitie. Heare such as offer you petitions with patience, and answer them with compassion. Prouide alwaies, that the power of those that are most mightie ouersway not the right of them that are miserable; haue no respect of persons, but looke only to the justice of the cause. If any man appeare before you in a rightfull matter, who is otherwise ill spoken of, regard not at that time his conuersation, but his complaint, not what he is in life, but what he speaketh. Now to the end the parties which haue recourse vnto you, appealing from your officers, or charging them with corruption, may be more thoroughly conuincd by due prooffe, and more easily induced of themselves to confesse their faults, stretch out your hand as farre as in honor you may, in granting them new Iudges, or Commissioners, who together with other ordinarie officers, will be more carefull to carrie themselves vprightly in such offices as are assigned to their cares. The way to plant a firme resolution in your officers, to deserue well, is, to reward them bountifully that haue shewed their worth: for by this meane, by the discharge of his duties in a meane place, he will endeavour to be held worthie of an office of more esteeme: notwithstanding there is great reason why the prince, vpon these occasions, should haue due respect to the credit and honour of his officers, and to vse such moderation in this kind, as without wrong to the plaintifes, their reputations may be tendered. Examining weightie causes with deliberation, but be carefull to giue quick dispatch to matters of small moment, especially if they concerne persons that are in miserie. Vse the like expedition in matters concerning poore men, orphans, dowers, churches, education, maintenance, charges left, tutorship, debts, and such like charitable causes, of which you are in conscience bound to haue an especial care, and to protect them in necessitie. That here can neuer prosper where such causes are neglected, for that God which makes no difference

Ffff

rence

The generall Historie of Spaine.

Lib.28.

rence of persons, but assureth vs, That he will alwaies haue one eare open to the sorrowfull complaints of simple soules which suffer wrong, will punish kings and magistrats for their contempt euen of their Christian subiects. I would exemplifie this danger by some speciall example of Gods iustice in my time: but the verie ground of charitie set downe in a word or two, may serue, and for the rest I leaue you to the tendernesse of your owne conscience, and the counsel of your Confessor. The like course must be taken with tradesmen, artificers, marchants, and husbandmen; for these kind of people can neuer follow the court, nor without ruine to their estates, spend their goods, labour and time about suits: for it were better to be speedily dispatcht with some losse, than to be tired with a world of Proctors, Aduocates, and Notaries, in hope of getting all; considering how much the losse of time, in regard of their trade, importeth them. Whatsoever may be ended at one hearing by your selfe, dispatch: what you are not able of your selfe to rid, recommend it by way of tables and memorials in other affaires. It shall not be amisse, for quicke dispatch of causes, to assigne to euery officer his particular taske; for otherwise it were not possible for one man to run through all. In case of necessitie the prince may commit his office, for his owne ease, to his faithfull ministers, in imitation of the knife which in old time was v-sed in the sacrifice at Delphos: for there was such a fashion deuised for the reliefe of poore men, which could not long attend without great losse, as one man alone was able by the helpe of its many parts, to serue all the priests. In criminall causes, where there is question of life and death, and other capitall punishment, proceed benignely with seueritie, and seuerely with benignitie, according to the state and qualitie of the cause. Applie your senses to the circumstances of the person, time, and place, the manner, and such like considerations. Be content to imitate the rule of Lesbos in this case, which was apt to bend according to the obliquitie of the subiect vnto which it was applied by art: So must princes follow occasions, if they will rule with commendation. This is not to make difference of persons touching the right it selfe, but to iudge of right with wisdom and discretion, according to the sundrie indifferences that are aptly offered; proceeding notwithstanding, where we find the like respects in all degrees concur with like consideration: for the people are not grieved with setting downe any resolution, how grievous fouler it may seeme, but diuersitie of punishments for one and the selfsame fault, where no certaine reason can be found of the diuersitie. If any conceiues this counsel to be in any sort repugnant to this Maxime, That all lawes should be equall, inflexible, vnchangeable, &c. hee must be answered, That it is onely vnderstood of the dead letter of the law which as it euer speaketh and resolueth in one manner, so ought it in respect of it selfe, to be indifferently interpreted and executed: But there is another reason of the liuing law, which is the prince and his ministers, especially touching Commissions which bee receiued from him: for they ought to execute the dead letter of the law with such respect and moderation as hath bene mentioned before, so as they bend it with equitie, but breake it not with wilfulness: Wherefore there is a certaine power giuen vnto the prince about the lawes, and by the rule of conscience which is imprinted in the heart of him or them that are set vnder him, the cause is qualified according to the reason of the circumstance; for rigor is not alwayes right: neither may we say, that they rule best, which vrge the letter without respect to the reasons; that rather follow the words of a text which is mute, than the due consideration of a quicke interpretation, which is more sensible. Provided alwayes for the preservation of Maiestie, and maintenance of lawes. That howsoever it may please a prince out of his owne conceit to dispose, in oueruling any matter, with respect either of the person or time, augmenting or abating the reward of any good desert, or punishing of any fault, the same be not drawne to consequence, or enforced as a precedent to those that shall liue after him. They that gouerne know better how to moderate these cases, than the lawyers that plead; and many things are incident to politicke direction, which neuer come within the compasse of an ordinarie Aduocate. Contenti- on betwixt husbands and wiues, masters and seruants, parents and their children, neigh- bours, kinsmen, friends, and such like, conjoynd in the strait linke of ordinarie officers, ought rather to be ended by a friendlie arbitrator, with spare of charges which belong to suits, than by a seuerer iudge, who decideth all things by extremitie. The best course for a prince

Lib.28.

The generall Historie of Spaine.

1055

1555

A prince is to censure causes by due circumstances without partialitie, and that the diffirence which shall appeare betwixt his moderation and the written law, may rather seeme to arise out of a right in equitie, than an error in affection. I would haue all the courts of justice offered rather in compassion than rigor or cruelty, vnlesse there be a notable example to be made for the terror to the multitude. In all kinds of rewards be bountifull aboue the common course, and alwayes chuse rather to leaue a light offender (whose crimes are not manifest) unpunished, than to condemn an innocent, or to leaue a peece of seruice vnrwarded, at the least with fauourable words, with praise and cause of hope, vntill time and opportunitie may yeeld a more ample satisfaction. Be carefull that compassion & facilitie in remitting punishments, be tempered with such a reasonable meane, as is neither to encourage men to offend, nor giue occasion of many errors which grow by too much lenitie. Let it suffice, that your subiects liue vnder you with industrie, and as becommeth men without giuing scandall or ill example to the world. Proceed not to that kind of curiositie which makes many rulers to inquire & search what men doe in the most priuat and secret places of their houses: this humor is many waies offense, for both it breedeth trouble to the prince, and oftentimes great harme to the party, without desert. Though some be not absolutely chaste, yet so they be found wary in auoiding all cause of scandall & manifest offense, the prince hath reason to refferre the judgement of the secrets of mens hearts vnto
God, and the correction of secret sins to his diuine Maiestie: for where our eyes can no way pierce, there is no reason that our hands should execute. Keepe one eare alwayes open for the aduerser parties beware of softning your judgement, especially in causes of justice easeth her of her burthen. In those occasions a moderation shold be had in such regard, as neither the subiect be induced by too great facility to attempt any practise of vnlawfull action for the furtherance of his intent, nor discouraged by too great rigour for expecting reason at your hands; for both extremities are dangerous. Whilst that you are in choler, or haue made your selfe a prey to any other passion, or respect of priuat interest, be verie carefull neuer to giue sentence, or at the least not to put the same in present execution, least afterwards appeales be made vnto your selfe from such vnjust sentences and executions; by the parties that are wronged, when you are come vnto your selfe. You may read in histories, of a poore woman that appealed from king Philip, being transported with passion, to the same king Philip, qualified with a due consideration: and of the penance which was injoynd by S. Ambrose to Theodosius, after the massacre of Theffalonica.

Touching the orders of your familie and Court, I haue discoursed with you at other times, out of which you may draw rules for the direction of those affaires: be alwayes mindfull that your guards be entertained about your person, according to the wonted manner, rather to set forth the maiestie of gouernment, than in respect of danger of your life for euident necessitie. Touching the wearing of your apparel, there is no doubt but princely garments, fit for your estate at certaine times, doe both grace your person, and strike a kind of awe into the peoples hearts: Notwithstanding to fute your selfe ordinarily more plainly, & according to that fashion which is most generall, doth win great loue, as I haue observed by mine owne experience: for nothing pleaseth the subiect more, than to note sometimes a carelesse contempt of those outward complements, in which some princes set their princelie felicitie. The like consideration must be had touching your diet, and other necessarie things belonging to your person and your Court, with a carefull regard, that neither hatted be purchased by excess, nor contempt by too great equalitie.

To the time of peace likewise belong diuers kinds of workes worthe of a princes care, which draw the subiects eyes to admiration, and his heart to thankfulness. In this degree we marshall whatsoever princes either build or repaire for the peoples good, as adornning cities, amending highways, repaying bridges, making riuers nauigable, charges in bringing waters, in repairing of churches, hospitals, guild-halls, publike places, and towne walls, taking order for the reformation of abuses in religion, Vniuersities, Col-ledges, and iudiciall places, in limiting the fees of Counsellors, excluding auarice from courts of conscience, and corruption of magistrats in the bringing vp of orphans, marriage of poore maids, and redemption of prisoners. Blessed is the heart that thinketh on those things, and the hand that putteth them in execution; for by this meanes the subiect shall not onely be prouided for in the common course of life, but the pleasures and commodities of persons, places, and conditions, settled in happinesse: Yet in these cases also care must be taken, that the people be not ouer burthened; for it is all one to them, whether oppression creepe in by this or any other meanes, which they cannot remedie, and where the people themselves are vrged to an extraordinarie charge, they hold not the prince to be an author, but an executioner. To the time of peace also belong many considerations, prouisions, & forecasts, concerning war, to the end that whatsoever accident happens, the prince be not taken altogether vnprouided on a sudden, or driven to seeke shelter when the storme is imminent. But to auoid confusion about these times, I must warne you, for a conclusion in this point, that as an honorable peace is the end of war, so must your peace be gouerned by such great discretion & diligent foresight, as the war may also be secure to the state when it happens. I come now (my most deere sonne) to discourse with you of some points belonging to the time of war, whereon it standeth you in hand to thinke aduisedly, as wel in consideration of your present estate, as also for the increase thereof, whensoever just occasion shalbe offered. To these ends of preservation and enlargement by way of counsell and aduice in time of peace, and of armes in time of war, a prince ought wholly to addresse himselfe, and neither spare paine, diligence, nor danger, in any enterprise, that enable him to attaine them happily. A prince ought to be more heedful to looke into the accidents & occurrences of war, than peace; for that war aboundeth more with vnexpected actions, with disorders not foreseene, and when they happen, for the most part, are irrecoverable: A gaine, for that war is lesse restrained by the curbe of ciuile lawes and officers than peace, depending commonly vpon the will of him that is most powerful, as most commonly it is kindled by a greedie desire of one to raigne about the rest, and is afterwards maintained by the feare of a necessarie defence: both which affections are so forcible in the mind, as they will rather constraîne you to make the satisfaction of your will the object, than to looke into the means whereby you may compasse it. These cares and preparations for war, are most necessarie for princes & potentates, whose vnquiet estates are often troubled by foreine enemies, who lay plots to annoy them. These and such restless neighbors giue euery day just occasion to be offended by them. This is your case, who being seated betwixt the power of the Turk, & the jealousie of Christian potentates, could not designe a matter of any great effect, though you gaue your selfe to rest. But let not this scruple greatly trouble you, for that discontinuance of professing armes, wil in time do you more harme, than the maintenance of your reputation by them can any way trouble you. Experience doth teach, that all men feare to incense an enemy who hath his armes readie drawne to strike. Besides, as men wax old with time, so states are weakened with sloth, and in effect consumed by the canker of idlenesse, whilst that others that cōtend with martial enemies, are not onely maintained in health, but augmented daily more & more in force and vigor, as mans bodie is by exercise. Vpon the laying downe of armes, & discharge of troups, the subiects grow wanton, and wild at home, finding so great a part of their wonted burthen eased: and this we daily see, that hauing bin long accustomed to this pleasing ease, you shall hardly bring them again in awe, to haue the patience to endure your impositions, & their former franknesse and readinesse to supplie your necessities. On the other side, the multitude of souldiers tainted with the libertie of ambition and other humors of camp, wil hardly frame themselves to lead an honest sober life at home, which hath often bin the cause of tumults & vprores in monarchies. Besides, I cannot see how a prince that ruleth many estates, can euer settle any resolution to liue in peace, in respect of their ambition & greedinesse that are about him, their emulation and jealousie that are equal to him, and their feare and suspicion that are vnder him: For they that are of the first sort dispose themselves to giue occasion of offence, out of a desire to subuert the estates of other men; the second, to settle their own fortunes; and the third, to prevent oppressions & injuries: wherefore it is wel said in our prouerb, that he which cannot take hard measure at the hands of other men, must keep them low that are most apt to offer it. It is therefore necessary for a prince, especially being possessed of so many estates as you are at this time, to dispose your selfe effectually to a care of such things as belong to warre, whereof hauing fit occasion

A to discourse at this present with you, & taking my beginning from the chiefe parts thereof, I say, That this care standeth chiefly vpon arms, forts, and garrisons, vpon order for prouisions to be made for them, knowledge of the qualitie and conditions of States, & of the people that inhabit them. The care of an armie consisteth in the setting downe of a certaine and conuenient number, and in giuing good orders and directions for their manner of fight. The number must be such as will suffice for any braue attempt their Leader will vndertake. The rate will fall out fitly, if no error be committed either in too much or too little; for too little will not serue, and excesse is euer a cause of confusion. Opinions haue differed exceedingly concerning this point, but the best and most expert agree, That an armie consisting of 30000 foot, and 4000 horse, is sufficient for the execution of any worthy enterprise. The reasons that are brought for prooffe hereof are many, & of great force; for this proportion is reasonable, neither superfluous, nor wanting. According to this proportion an armie may be better disciplined, it may be better entertained with pay, and supplied with victuals and all other things necessarie. It is more easily repaired after some great losse, either by sicknesse, or any other accident, and it may be better employed and maintained in all places. The people that receiue them find more ease in their charges. A prince may better stand vpon his gard with such a force, and a victorie gotten by a reasonable number is more honourable. To conclude, it is in all respects most agreeable to the manner of service in our age, as they can best iudge that haue often had prooffe thereof by their owne experience. Whereas huge armies are, we see few come to fight, and therefore a lesse number might serue the turne, as it did the Romans in their warres in many countries, when as they brought multitudes of men: As it serued Alexander in ouerrunning Asia, and might, perhaps, haue serued Hanibal against the great forces of Rome, if either he had receiued due supplie from home in due time, or could haue made the souldiers which he was driuen to leaue in other countries, as resolute as his owne, which was not possible. The Romans during the state of the commonweale, afterwards the Emperours, and the Turks at this day brings greater forces to field. To which presidents many answers may be giuen, especially, That this both was and is done rather for a kind of glory, to extend their forces ouer all, than for any other need of helpe in war: for an armie so proportioned, as I haue said, is sufficient of it selfe for any notable attempt, as may be proued by many effectual reasons: for hardly shall you find a place whereas a greater number than I haue mentioned, can be put in battel, by reason of impediments which grow by ditches, riuers, lakes, mountains, woods, & such like, whereas a reasonable armie may escape them by the conduct of a discret General. This proportion is to be kept exactly by such princes as resolute and are euer inforced to stand vpon their gard, & keep their forces in a readinesse, whether their occasion be offensiue or defensiue: for by this meane they shall be able to beare out the charge, and dispose at all times of their companies, as aduantage shall be offered. The Turks policie is worthy to be imitated in this point, who notwithstanding his great numbers, hath drawne the resolution & glory of his forces to his Ianizaries alone, which are a certaine number, and more easie to be satisfied. These standing fast, the rest are kept in order by that means, whereas otherwise it were very difficult to content all the companies. In the same respect Cesar gaue most honor to the tenth legion, but with another kind of moderation & respect to the rest than the Turke vseth. Some thinke, that in respect of many occasions to diminish the prefixed number, either by drawing some into garrisons, or by employing them otherwise, or by some accidents that may fall out, an army should consist of a greater number of sufficient men: but to one that hath the perfect skill of warre, this number doubtlesse may suffice, so as the companies that are withdrawn for other seruices be instantly supplied: for thus shall the number & the armie be the same, as the tenth legion was euer one and the same, notwithstanding accidents. Neither would I haue you to perswade your self, that by often changing armies wax weak, but rather, if supplie be quickly made, more gallant & more courageous: for thus we reape the benefit of those forward & resolute men, which being newly come, are far more ready to hazard their liues, for that they know not what the danger means, nor haue not the consideration & stay which time brings: on the other side the valor of old souldiers is more thoroughly refined by experience. By this meanes also the readie wayes are opened, to recompence and honour those that defense well, and for correction and infamie for such as deserue otherwise. These meanes G are most expedient for the maintenance of armies in the field, and there is no doubt but every one of those that are valiant and tried, will exceed ten that want experience in any enterprise. Next to the proportion of the number, I could wish you to be prouident in setting downe good rules for the campe, which ought chiefly to be grounded vpon conscience, in obseruing those things which belong to religion, and leading an vpright & honest life. Next to this you must dispose your souldiers minds to dutifull obedience, and due respect, not onely to their Generall, but to their commanders. The best meanes to ground this respectiue awe, is by encouraging with hope, & rewarding vpon good deserts such persons as are chiefly noted for their forwardnesse, and disgracing others that are otherwise affected. The first attempt of mutinie must be presently corrected; for the remembrance of sharpe punishment will sticke longer in a souldiers mind, than any earnest exhortation of a Generall. Out of these meanes of preparation springs a disposition in all men of valour, vertue, and obedience. Besides the ordinarie exercises of the campe, to keepe their minds from idlenesse, and their bodies from sloth, you must provide, that by parties made, and shadowes of true fight indeed, the profession of armes may grow familiar vnto the souldiers, and they made fit for any sudden attempt. Moreover, it is fit to dispose the minds of commanders, as well in campes as garrisons, to commaund with judgement, and to serue with discretion: In the souldiers likewise willingness to obey, and a readinesse to execute; the which may the more easily be effected, if order be taken that the captaines account the souldiers their companions, as Cesar called them Commilitones in this respect, and take an especiall care of them in all things that belong to their profit, reputation, and loue. And souldiers for their part, the more courteously their Leaders in-treat them, the more humbly they ought to obey their commands. An armie being thus provided for, in that which concerneth the proportion and discipline, you must employ your care effectually in setting downe good orders touching fights; for without great care you may not hope for any prosperous successe in martiall affaires, nor presume of any vi-ctorie. I know that circumstances alter rules sometimes in all professions, and in those most of all; notwithstanding Maximes grounded vpon reasons and experience, will make a man more apt to take his best aduantage. Surely it would seeme a labour worthie of so great a prince as you shalbe, to vse all possible diligence to find out a better way than that which is vsed among the Christians of our time, whereby an armie may be often releued, and come to trie the fortune of the fight: so as the first ranke being forced to retire, it may not fall vpon the second, nor the second vpon the third; but that they which are behind aduancing to releue the first, being tired, & forced to recoile, may performe that seruice without disorder, in such sort as the first may no way hinder them: for although the first be enforced to retire, yet the other that are fresh, making vp the bodie, by stepping into their places, may come to handie strokes with their enemies. Herein consisted the chiefe perfection of the Roman discipline, and hereof, among my notes, you may find many strange conceits, for that I had an earnest intent, if time and leasure would haue giuen me leauie, to haue set downe some plot, and made this ground one of the chiefe labours in respect of warre with the Turkish Infidels. But in respect of my continuall affairs, and being euer turmoiled with endlesse businesse, I could neuer effect what I intended, nor applie my mind intirely to this singular inuention. It may be that God hath reserued the credit of this stratagem to you, wherein you may be somewhat assisted by that brieue collection which I haue made for memorie. Surely it is a great disorder, and a foule discredit to the Leaders of our time, that all the force and power of a mightie armie should consist vpon three or foure of the first ranks of the battell. This error groweth from the defect of our rules in the marshalling of our battels and squadrons in a direct line, euery man in particular, and all the ranks in generall, standing one directly behind another: for in a direct line it is not possible to giue the first any meanes to retire, but they must disorder them that follow. Wherefore for an introduction to a better methode than hath been hitherto practised, it shal not be amisse to put those three bodies into which an army is diuided, namely, the forward, battell, and reeward, into three squadrons, so placed one to anothers side, as they may meet together in forme of a triangle.

The

A The first Squadron must represent the point, the other two the sides, for being thus dis-ioyned & disseuered by art, it is an easie matter to bring forward the second to fight with out disturbance to the first, and the third without trouble to the other two: Thus coming to succede their fellows side long in continual fight against their enemies, another aduan-tage wil arise, which is, they shall trie the fortune of the field thrice in one encounter. I doe assure my selfe, that from this beginning men may proceed to a more perfect knowledge how the squadrons themselues being also diuided into lesser squadrons might one retain another by the same proportion. A man may aime at such a mysterie by orderly degrees, for the matter being so intangled, as experience doth teach, it were no more possible to bring this than any other art at the first inuention, to perfection in an instant.

B It is the labour of a beare to licke mishapen fruit to fashion, and of a Lyon to bring militarie rules to certaintie. The want which men may iustly find in direction of an army at this day, proceedeth farther yet, for they put the best and most resolute souldiers in the formost ranks, who being forced to giue backe, they cause all the rest by their example to doe the like, as if it were lawfull for them to imitate their actions and thoughts. In some sort they may be excused in their imaginations, yet wee see that from this error doth commonly grow the ruines of all Companies. The Romanes were farre more discreet concerning this point of marshalling their men, for the first front was made verie strong with yong men of great force, whom they called but a third C part of their old and best souldiers were mingled with this head-strong youth, both to defend them, & to temper the. The second Squadron, to the which they gaue the title Primarij, consisted of two parts of old soldiers only & a third of yong. The third was ancient old soldiers called Triarij. By this means neither the second depended of the first which were yong for the most part, nor the third of the second in which were also some yong. Besides, the first incoûter was alwaies very furious by the forwardnes of yong spirits, who the lesse they knew of danger in this kind, the more resolute they were and aduenturous: experience doth teach that to withstand the furie of a fight, we cannot make our head better than of yong men, so as they may be tempered with a third part of old; the second shall be better gouerned, and the third more furnished with valour, Iudgement and consideration. Such ought the distribution of our forces to bee in this age. Wherefore let no man D presume to prefer any before this discipline of Rome; for it is verie likely that they which with such prosperous and long continuance of time made the onely true profession of armes, marshalled their forces in this manner, would euer haue forsaken it, if there had not beene some speciall cause; and therefore we may rest assured that they had reason on their side; for prooue whereof I note that when soeuer those Phalanges came to ioine with the forces of Rome, being ordered as we haue said, they neuer sped happily. The reason will appeare plainly by comparing both disciplines, for the Greekes by marshalling the best men in the formost Squadron, had a meaning to put valour and resolutio into the rest which could not be expected generally of all the companies, the greater part E being a multitude void of experience, & guided onely by their sence: whereas the Romanes had as well regard to preparation of minds, so as it was not hard to bring those that were guided by sence to execute things with good consideration: wherefore it was sufficient that onely bodies of men were assigned ouer to the corporall whome Scipio left with Ph-phax, the better to braue the foot of Carthage, for albeit at the first they were lightly esteemed by the enemy, yet by a course of good discipline, they became afterwards the meanes whereby the Romanes conquered. Euery man is able to consider with him selfe to what great vse this forcing of bodies by good order was, and how much it was esteemed at the first. It were fruitlesse to say that those rules can hardly bee now obserued with any hope of good successe, for that artillerie is crept into our warres; F for if those squadrons had in those daies, and would haue (in case artillerie were not in vse) an aduantage ouer our men, considering that this aide is common to both sides, it followeth that the perfections of those squadrons remaine in the same aduantage which it had and should haue without artillerie. Besides it is euident to sence that those collateral Squadrons, are not in halfe the danger of great shot, that ours bee, which are ranged this day by a direct line: for a volley of shot comming from the head of one battell

1555

battel to another, scoureth throug al the ranks. Let vs ad the deceitful vse of late artillery and chiefly to offend the bodies of men in field. But for that the final shot may be made to play with great aduantage, where those squadrons are close, & other rules of that Romane discipline carefully obserued, you shall seeke out particular instructions among my notes: And moreouer what fit considerations may be vsed in the choise of commanders to an armie, what moderation should be obserued in causing the common souldiers to depend vpon their Generall, & other commanders put in trust by him; besides other means for the setting of your best securitie.

I will now passe vnto other things which come into my mind to aduise you touching the carriage of your selfe in this time of warre: but by the way I must once againe put you in minde with great earnestnesse, that this care of finding out the best way of marshalling your forces in the field, ought in reason to bee one of the chiefest that you must embrace, as well for occurrents of warre, as to make your name immortall among all nations. Your fleets at sea ought in like maner to haue their particular respects, touching which there feldom chanceth any cause of innovation. The chiefest cares, that all necessarie employments that belong to Nauies, be alwaies in readinesse: That the vessels be rigged, augmented, and employed euer in some seruice for the state, so far as is conuenient with securitie. Aboue all things settle those affaires in such a certaine course, as your gallies and other shipping may bee properly belonging to your selfe, or to the state, and not to your captaines, officers, or other priuate men, for hauing reposed the whole weight of your fortune and reputation vpon the safegard of those vessels, they will not easily or willingly be brought to hazard them where the smallest daunger shall appeare. The charge of getting ships of price into their hands, together with the difficulty of repairing and supplying them in case they should miscarrie by any mischance, doth make men so fearefull of the worst, as oftentimes a publike opportunitie is lost, while priuate respects are tended. By taking of this order you shall bring all men to depend vpon your selfe, and you shall neuer need to depend vpon any: I speake not of the large allowance which will be made by officers, when they serue themselves for their owne commoditie. Cause your forces to be viewed and surueyed, & their munition to be reuiued & repaired: where you find the rate superfluous, abate, where too scant, augment it. Auid extremities in any wise, either of too much or too little; discretion must be the measure of these considerations. Be carefull alwaies to furnish your places of strength, with sufficient gouernours and trustie garrisons. Let your number rather offend in excesse than want, for of both there is lesse danger in an ouer-plus, both for that the onely valour and resolution of the souldiers hath often supplied the weaknesse of the place, in respect whereof the Romans euer trusted more to the courage of their men, than to the strength of the place; as also in respect of those that fall sicke and die, or runne to the other side, or are cut off by any other means, so as the whole number is neuer scene to fight at one instant: fortifie your selfe with sure forces against the enemy, with your tents pitched, trusting rather to forts raised in the field, than to the situation of townes. On the other side when you beginne to quarrell and inuade, you must rather assaile your enemies by the help of forts, and sconces, built of purpose to annoy him, than seeke to win his places of strength, with losse of time, and an intollerable charge. This course is secure and certaine, as the other is deceitfull and dangerous: whereof you shall find further profes among my notes for memorie.

Touching the maner of erecting forts with speed and little charge, and the best meanes to settle a wauering estate, the best way is to marke aduisedly the whole position and situation of the place, and to fashion out of it the frame that shall be fit; applie your industrie to the plot of nature, with such certaine reasons and vndoubted rules, as both the whole may answere to the parts, and the parts vnto the whole in due proportion and workmanship. Thus must you proceed from one estate vnto another respectiuelly, standing alwaies thus far resolute touching the rules of fortification. That although no place can be impregnable, yet it shall bee sufficient that ours be such as the enemy shall haue small hope to win them, either in respect of long time, or the great expence which such a labour will require, being threatned by many misfortunes & disadvantages.

1555

A tages. The prouisions of war consist in victuals, artillery, munition, supplies and coine, which altogether in effect import no more than an abilitie to mainteine continually so great a force of trained men, as out of the same an armie (when great need requireth) may be drawne by the Soueraigne, or forces sufficient in all respects for the vses aboue mentioned. Hereupon followeth, that a prince, who either resolueth or is inforced to stand vpon his owne defence, must think vpon a kind of warre with which he may be able to rule both the charge and weight that goes with it. Wherefore I had a meaning to set downe a certaine order in my armies, which might be sufficient to bring this to passe, but I could neuer find any fit opportunitie to put it in execution. My intent was first to leuy a gallant army of Flemings, Spaniards, and Italians intermixt; being thus assembled, I meant to keep them euer in one estate, either in warre against the Turke, or some Christian Prince, which I could not auoid without great danger, or great dishonour: Then I did thinke it good to capitulate with this armie, that all booties of great matters belonging to the publicke state, as artillery, munition and such like things, being gotten either by the sacke of Townes or spoile of the Countrie, should be properly referred to the princes chamber, the rest left vnto the souldiers. Notwithstanding I resolved to bind the Souldier to sel & deliuer vnto the Princes officers at a reasonable price set downe, all victualles, garments, household-stuffe and other goods pertaining to their necessarie vses or their commodities. These things I would haue kept in store vntill the Souldier should haue need of them againe, with some conuenient profit vnto my selfe. By this prouision both Prince and Souldiers should be supplied, but the souldier most: for besides the comfort of receiuing ready money at all times for that they get, they shall be also sure of all necessarie things at an easie price. If we compare it with their losse, who buy all things from the Merchant, or the stranger who still followeth the campe, it ought not to offend the Souldier, that his Prince should draw some little portion to his owne releefe of that vnmeasurable gaine which otherwise would be diuided among cormorants. I thought moreover that it would proue profitable to the souldier, and safe for the Prince, if a certain officer were appointed in the campe, into whose hands the souldiers (being imployed in any dangerous seruice) might confidently commit their money or the pillage of best price with full assurance: that in case it chanced to them otherwise than well, all should be deliuered to their heires or to such persons as they would appoint; imitating in this point those captaines which to be the better assured of their souldiers, take vp money of the officers in presse to pay the companies. Caesar vsed the same policie, and thereby was free from all feare, either of the officers, whose credit he had by this means ingaged, or of the souldiers whose pay was alwaies ready. Besides other obligations, a reasonable gain might be afforded after so much in the hundred by the yere vnto the soldiers, who being assured of a sure place where to leaue their armor or their stocke vpon any dangerous employment, & that their contracts and directions touching those things shall be faithfully performed, whatsoeuer happen vnto themselves, they will hold it for a greater aduantage to leaue their substance in a trustie hand, rather than to carrie it about with them. If any chance to die without heires in blood, or limitation, in warre, who should succeed him; the goods may iustly be assigned to the Princes chamber, as wee see by the ciuil Law, the prince inheriteth their estates that die without any certaine heires. It may be ialousie, (which the baser sort is euer apt to conceiue of the princes policie, to enrich himselfe) may discourage some, supposing vnder euerie bast to find a secret hooke, vntill that experience hath cleared the clouds of this false imagination, wherefore the way to breake this ice, is to appoint a certaine number of the chiefest of the campe, whome we may most boldly trust, to beginne this order, and to bring in their shares; for who is either so suspitious or foolish, be he either priuar souldier, captaine, or Colonell, that had rather carrie all his goods about him, in continual hazard both of enemies and boores vpon euerie sinister accident, than leaue it in safety, and with some aduantage to themselves, or to their heires who may recover it. It may be said that prouision for the carriage of these things will be chargeable, but that may be holpen by another meanes, if the souldier out of the gaine and interest of his goods laied downe in trust, be bound to answere it, for that the goods doe still remaine his owne, and the charge is satisfied with ouer-plus. Touching these carriages, you shall find a modell and memorie memoriall among my notes, for the priuate souldier is greatly eased by this new inuention, hauing nothing to care for but his armes and himselfe, so as the whole campe in generall should be more light: besides the greatest part of the treasure and goods of value belonging to the campe should rest euer in the princes hand, so as he might vse them for the furtherance of his attempts in warre, as wee see the proofe of things left by like trust in the hands of merchants. Thus by the money which shall remain in the princes hands, by their decaie without heires, either by descent or disposition of will, of such as were the right owners of the same, and by the gaine which doth accrue vnto the prince by selling victuals and other implements at the second hand (but yet to the souldiers ease, in respect of that which he should pay vnto the merchant or victualler for the like, the prince may make himselfe more able to maintein a mightie armie long, as you shall discover more particularly by my notes. But as I haue said before it is expedient that with this the provision of valiant souldiers able leaders, and good orders doe concur, although the vulgar sort doe accompt money to bee the sinewes of all warre. I haue oftentimes had cause to iudge of this comparison, and therefore may be the better beleued in setting downe a difference: It is a strength where other parts more needfull are cleare, but a fillic sinew where the chiefe members are disordered. Allow me those abilities and politike provisions in a princes armie with perfection, whereof I spake before, and no doubt but the warre will maintaine it selfe: for we cannot find that a wortheie Generall and leader of a good and well directed armie, euer wanted courage to beginne, or meanes to maintaine the warre, as well with pay by meanes of pillage and such other gaine, as with victuals euen out of the enemies countrie. Besides, a prince may alwaies keepe his troupes in heart, by putting them in hope of honour, profit and all kinds of reward, when time doth serue, although provision for the present bee scant, so as they know the princes ability and fortune to bee sufficient to performe his promises. Then may the Prince, imitating the Romans, repose greater trust in souldiers that are both valiant and well affected to his gouernement, then either in deepe trenches, or places strongly fortified: I meane, such a Prince as either hath a will or is enforced against his will to hold his sword alwaies in his hand, and to looke for hard measure. If all the charges of warre should bee drawne out of a princes coffers, it were not possible it should continue long. To prevent this inconuenience, it seemeth good to some, to haue the warre made to a profitable end, but it is not verie easie as I thinke to giue an instance of this aduice, considering experience doth teach, that by offensive warre the countrie is ruined, the people spoiled, and the prince impouerished, and in a defensive warre, of what qualitie soeuer the gaine be, men may not expect that it should answere the charge that doth grow thereby. Imagine that this inconuenience may bee eased by good counsell, and applying batterie to the chiefe places onely, which either by their wealth, or the releefe which others bring in by their meanes, may yeeld satisfaction and recompence for any charge, without being forced otherwise to fight in vaine, or for the opening of a passage which is already giuen you, into the enemies state: yet it cannot bee denied but for many other respects, and in sundrie other cases, the warre, which without such a kind of releefe is no way tolerable, by meanes thereof is made secure and free from all dangers and disorder of any moment.

1555

Now for that supplies are necessarie for the maintenance of a continuall armie in one and the selfe same estate, I thinke it verie requisite for the seruice of your campe, that throughout all your realmes and estates, the which in your choise are fittest to set out men, a particular muster bee taken, and a Register precisely kept of all the youth that are able to beare armes, so as it may bee done without offence to the people, or incensing the hautie hearts with rage and malice against their Soueraigne. As I said before, your tried Souldiers must bee kept in practise, least their spirits grow dull and their bodies vnable by sloth and discontinuance, so would I wish those young souldiers were trained by sufficient leaders, that they may be the better able to serue when they are called for. In this generall muster especiall choise ought to bee made of such men as by nature are giuen to the warres, and apt of their disposition.

1555

A sition, that are in good estate to liue, and especially that haue families, for of such a man may looke for better proofe, and relie more on, for that they haue somewhat to lose at home, they esteeme their reputation, and feare shame and punishment more, the which they that haue lands and goods to answere for their good behauiour, cannot so easily auoid as they that haue nothing: Besides they are encouraged by a respect of bloud to a care of their owne houfes. These persons may in no wise be drawne out of families, that haue but one man in them, or so few, as the pressing of one man may indanger the whole familie for want of food, but you must presse them where they may be spared without danger, and encourage them besides with the hope of credit, and commoditie to bee gotten by their merits in the campe, for otherwise wee see that being brought with discontentment to the field, their deserts proue according. Thanks be giuen to God, you are soueraigne ouer many great realmes and great estates, in which you may raise such martiall troupes without offence, as they may not onely bee sufficient to defend, but to offend others if you liue in vnion of good correspondencie, with your friends and kinsmen of the house of Austria: by this agreement you shall settle your owne power, and become a comfort and support to those that loue you, and a terror to such as enuie you: On the other side assure your selfe that discord among neere allies, will blemish your authoritie, put heart into your enemies, to make designs against your greatnesse, and so distemper your friends, as they shall not be able to resolute which way to bend their affections. Standing thus vnited, you shall haue great opportunitie (besides the Italian & Spanish forces) to dispose of the Germanes, as your need shall require, the which is a martiall and a verie honorable nation. I know that this mixture doth oftentimes cause disorders in a campe: but yet by one that knoweth how to temper this light discord with a moderate emulation, they may be employed to most excellent and rare effects, in respect of the great difficultie and almost impossibilitie that euer they should ioine or agree together in offensive mutinies, distractions and disobedience of any kind. I cannot forbear to report vpon this iust occasion what I haue often aduised you of before, that you respect with all due regard your cousin the king of Bohemia, to the greatnesse and inestimable value of whose mind, the greatest empires are too narrow bounds; and doubtlesse vpon euerie fit occasion, you shall see effects answerable to this conceit which the world hath of his worthinesse. Beleue this confidently, that there is more good to bee expected from the loue which springeth from consanguinitie (although that sometimes causes of vnkindnesse may arise, than from the fairest shewes and greatest professions of good will that can be made by any stranger. Now for that all offences and vnkindnesse are most bitter, growing among persons that are neere in bloud, if they be not quenched in due time: to prevent a greater inconuenience, cut off all iust occasions on your side, setting downe this lesson for a rule, that it is an art more wortheie commendation to yeeld in some sort to those that are allyed, to continue their affection, than to end quarrels & vnkindnesse with other persons, by inforcing them to yeeld to our authority.

B But to conclude my counsell touching the care, which must bee taken of this trained youth, is, that it may alwaies serue as a Spring to supply the armie: for the better pleasing of their humors, and winning of their loues, it shall be fit to priuledge them with a libertie to weare weapons, especially on those daies that are appointed for their exercises, and to make the best shew they are able of their forwardnesse. I would also haue them graced with some speciall fauour, as occasion serues; and exempted from all seruile burthens in Countries. Then would I wish you wholly to direct your care to a due consideration of your estate in general, and of the countries in particular vnder you: Look vpon their condition, situation and qualitie, consider both of their abundance and wants, and of sufficient meanes to liue, as water, wood and graine, that supplie being made from other places that haue greater store, all loue and kindnesse may be entertained among people that are subiect to one Soueraigne power. Though policie did not prescribe this care, yet christianity would challenge it. Cause plots to be drawn of al their greatest riuers, mountains, streits & passages, that by repairing vnto your map vpon any accident, that shall happen, you may dispose of things with greater certainty. Be careful not onely to know the dispositions & humors of the (which is very necessary for great princes) but also their alliances and and factions, whereby you shall be alwaies able both to bridle their vndutifull affections, and to prevent their practises, if they breake out into extremities. The balance of authority is in your hands, all credit comes from your selfe, & therefore gouern the scales with some moderation, so as that side may be heauiest which is best affected to your party. Provide against all dangers, & serue your tum by all such opportunities, as may further your intention. If any countrie doth liue in danger of an enemy, that doth frontier vpon them, secure them in such sort by captains, officers, & garrisons, as they may be freed from feare of al wrong. To be short, I would haue you cast vp an euen reckoning, & make a iust accept of their inclinations, their power, their wants, their store, their agreement, their diuisions, their alliances, their habits, their customs, their affections, their dependances, their affinity, their comodities, & their discōmodities, that by easing one & charging another, you may turn al things to your best content. Then wil it be time to turn your eye to the like consideration of their accompt. In this point you must resolue with ripe iudgement and great care, making fit proportions by comparing sundry circumstances of persons, places, times, natures, customs, neighbours, officers, adherents, and other accidents, as are incident to so strong a knot of ciuill policie. These things being vnderstood and wisely pondred by him that hath the helme in hand, there is no doubt but he may euer march vpon a firme ground in any enterprise he takes in hāds for in knowing our own & our enemies strength, in weighing circumstances with an equall hand, & being able to apply the best aduantages, that wisdom & experience can find, to profitable vses, consisteth both the hope & hap of victorie. I know that diuers courses must be taken according to the diuers qualities of the nation, & the situation of the countrie. Touching the first, whether it be peopled, or scant of men, armed or naked, valiant or cowardlie, pleased or discontented. Touching the second, whether it be full of mountaines, valleyes, plaines, woods or riuers, whether it abound with victuals and al other commodities that are fit for war, or is barren or beggerly. Aboue all things be sure you neuer be drawn into quarrels, with any mighty potentate for the reliefe of such as rather burthen than ease, indanger than helpe your estate, which else may turn to your great disaduantage. Besides these rules, I wold prescribe a nūber more of like effect, the which long experience (the mother of true wisdom) hath imprinted in my heart, which other men pethaps which go more by ayme than by art make small accompt of. War ought alwaies to be vnderaken vpon a iust quarrel, and directed to no other end than to a safe & honorable peace which cannot be purchased without wars. In war he that spendeth most in accompt, spendeth least in want; doubt of this opinion who list, my selfe can warrant it. It is not good to enter into a quarrel without forecast, how to make it good, but after it is once begun, there is neither dalliance nor delay without danger. To him that hath best skill & vnderstanding how to manage war, it will maintein it selfe, so as good order may be taken from the first beginnings, and the prooffe of euerie peece of counsell that experience maketh good, may serue for sound direction in other things that happen afterwards. Let prouision of all things be made in the best kind, & euer with an ouerplus, for in that which is left can be little losse, & although there were, yet there is no proportion betwixt it and the dangers that may grow in weakening braue attempts with scarcitie. Let al your proceedings & inuentiōs tend to victory, for that is the final end of the art of war, to which men attaine with seasonable prouisiōs, discreet orders, & wise gouernment. In the beginning wisdom, diligence, & warines is required, courage in the pursuit, & a constant resolution vnto the end: you must euer giue the first assault, rather then attend vntil you be set vpon: And although your fortune shold be so bad as to be preuented in this course, yet must you seek by al meanes to diuert that force by the great aduantage that is gotten by making warre vpon some other princes countrie, or doing some good peece of seruice to stay the frowns of fortune. Repose not the only staie & hope of your martiall proceedings cyther vpon your companies of horse by land, or your fleet by sea, for they are things without fence or reason; & we see that at sea the greater number preuaileth cōmonly, besides the deceits & vncertainty of the sea. But touching these instructions thus scattered and other considerations to bee obserued in the whole course of war, I wil refer you to my noates which wil giue no smal light, how to demean your self vpon all occasion, the which (considering your present estate) are likely to happen.

1555

I will

1550

A I will now speake first of the warre against the Turke, as that which I hold to bee of greatest importance, most certaine, and most dangerous, as well in respect of your profession and faith, which ought to bee preferred by a Prince of your religion and conscience before all other ends, as also the Turke is the mightiest enemy, that either at this day you haue, or are like to haue. You may assure your selfe that he is a certaine enemy, not only through the malice which he beareth to your self and faith, but by the grounds of his owne politike, or rather tyrannous estate, which presse him to bee alwaies readie and in armes to withstand all attempts. It is hard for him to worke any great effects in Hungary, as well in respect of the long course of the riuier of Danow, and of the champagne country, as of the situation of Vienna, and the neighbourhood of Germanie. In other places likewise his next neighbours are either mightie or troublesome, and such as in processe of time may bee more easily brought vnder than at this instant, standing alwaies with their swords drawne to defend their liberties: They are not like vnto the Sophie, whose deepe wisdom and great valour makes his forces to bee feared more than the greatnesse of his owne estate: But God knoweth whether his next successours will be able to supply the want that is found in his fortune. In other places the borders are not all inhabited, for they lie waste most commonly vpon the greatest parts of the dominions and realmes that are possessed by this tyrannie for these respects: And for his foueraigntie vpon the sea side, besides the discord and diuision which is among the Christian princes of our age, there is no doubt but hee shall be drawne to turne his whole forces vpon the Ilands, and your estates in Italie. It is not probable to thinke that hee will breake with the Venetians before hee breake with you, for doublelesse hee will imagine, that in warring against Venice, your forces will come in to aide: but beginning first with you, it may be hee will hope that the Venetians will remaine reuters. One reason may be giuen in this respect, which is, their discontinuance from all exercise of armes for so many yeres: Another, for that commonweales consisting either of popularitie or peeres, in respect of the long life which they presume to be most certaine in their estates, and their hope of preferment from degrees of good to better, which is euer greene, do euer trust more in the aduantage of time, and such accidents as may fall out in the changes and alterations of the world, than in anie warre that is attempted by great Potentates, and will either not at all take armes, or so late, as they had done better, not to haue meddled. Moreouer, hauing already fastned their tallons in his sides, and put a sharpe bitte into his mouth, by the possession of the Ilands of Cipresse and Candie, it is likely they will stand long vpon their gard, before they will hazard themselves to offend or defend any man. Adde hereunto that the estate of Venice standing wholly vpon merchandize, they can not forbear the trafficke they haue in the Turkes Dominions: Now wee see that the Turke is by little and little growne proud, hauing multiplied your daungers by the greatnesse of his power, which is now so aduanced to the toppe of Fortunes wheele, as wee may rather hope that it will breake with its owne burthen, or that it may be weakened by policie, or warre, than looke for an ouerthrow by some miracle from heauen, or by the power of Christendome, for as men are sinfull, so God is iust.

No doubt but the Turkish Empire hath a period, but in Gods fore-knowledge, not in mans fore-cast, and therefore vntill wee chaunge the course of our euill liues, wee striue in vaine to moderate the plagues of his deferred indignation. I know many haue bene of the mind, and are yet at this day, that it is impossible for anie Potentate in Christendome, to set downe any course by his owne force to keepe vnder this aspiring miscreant. And therefore by a generall league and combination of all princes this worke must be effected. Notwithstanding, when I consider by the light of long experience what poore effects haue issued from this deuice, and what fraude doth often lurke amongst such consorts, I am of opinion that you should wholly relie vpon your owne strength: and before the attempting of anie famous enterprise, examine what your owne estates are able to performe, and then those which your neighbours and allies haue promised. I haue found, and you haue reason to remember how the French king carried

G g g g

carried himselfe concerning these occasions vpon a causelesse ieaousie, and a priuate spleene: men will haue humours whilest they mannage the affaires of this world: your wisest course is to provide that they may not preiudice you. The way will be more easie by conferring the good will and affection of your allies of the house of Austria alone. But for the full accomplishment hereof with commendable effects, you must resolve according to the proper and true meanes, which are, wisdom and infallible conclusions out of the grounds of long experience.

The first point is to consider aduisedly what kind of warre may most auail you, to defend, offend, peruert, or diuert. Touching a defensiu warre, my opinion was alwayes to haue it absolutely excluded, for what is it else but a laying of our selues open to a manifest consumption of strength from time to time, not without great hazard of the whole in a short space, or by long delays, as things fall out, and with despaire of any satisfaction or restitution. This kind of warre hath bene generally held by all men of experience that made profession of armes, to be the most vnprofitable and most dangerous of all the rest: but whenas men are inforced thereunto by necessitie. An offensive warre which reason perswadeth to be made against him in Greece, both in respect of our inferioritie by sea, and for many other reasons which concur, I hold it very hard and in a manner impossible to be brought to any good effect, seeing that diuersions are so easie and commodious vnto him: for as it is impossible to make preparation for such a warre, without discouerie, great charge and losse of time, so the Turke will plainly foresee our designs, and frustrate our executions. The warre which wee call preuentiu ought to be esteemed the more fitte, for that the multitude of souldiers which the Turke carrieth alwayes with him to maintaine his owne designs, and to frustrate our purposes, is infinite. The course of diuersion can auayle as little, presupposing that offence goe before which I haue specified: whereupon I may conclude, that none of these simple kindes are for your good: I might proceed and discourse particularly, and according to their severall termes and differences touching euerie one of these; but by the strengthening of this discourse with sundrie other reasons of importancie that concur, it will appeare that out of the conclusions of these severall kindes, there ariseth a mixt kind of warre, most fit for your occasions: for seeing there is no remedy but you must haue warre against the Turke as I said before, since wee can neither make a warre meere offensive for the reasons I haue set downe, nor ought once to thinke of a preuention without ports, wee must presuppose that such a warre may be defensive in act, but offensive in proesse, yet simply neither offensive nor defensive, according vnto the speciall rules and notes of both in simple termes.

Let this warre thus tempered goe forward with a wise care to diuert, and so by little and little it will take a safe course to preuent; and in the end prooue meere offensive to the enemy. But before I come to exemplifie this paterne, and set downe my plot, I must put you once againe in mind, that in making warre against the Turke, you must relye more vpon stratagems and the Art of warre, than in multitudes of men, watching all opportunities, his troubles and incumbrances in other warres, his losses and ruines by them, the partialities which fall out oftentimes betwixt the successours of the State, and the diuisions amongst themselves: All these things may induce a better knowledge how to make our partie strong, but aboue all things bind vpon Gods fauour. But for that this fauour ought to be procured, partly by such meanes on our side, as are incident to the discretion of reasonable men, you must vnderstand, that nothing can be more expedient for you, than agreement and intelligence with your friends of the house of Austria, as on the other side proportionally it standeth them in hand, for the better effecting of any enterprise, to be firmly vnited vnto you, and to acquaint you with their purposes. These things provided for, you may easily come to the knowledge of the true course which it behoueth you to holde in maintaining this kind of warre: for if by any fit occasion which shall be offered, the Turke being either engaged in other warres, or his estate declining at home, you shall see reason to beginne the

A the quatrell, and to preuent his resolution. You may doe it best towards Hungarie, making your vncle now designed Emperour, acquainted with your intent, keeping the warre out of the champane Countries, and farre from the riuer of Danow, whereof the Turke standeth in great neede, in regard of his carriages for such an armie: Besides, forcing him to passe by places which are not fit for his great troupes of horse and multitudes of foote, there is no doubt but you may hope for a verie happie end of your designs. But in case not any one of these occasions be offered, yet you may procure one by your owne discretion, making the yeere, wherein he maketh his preparation to serue your turne, by temporizing warily and frustrating his designs by delays and shifts, according to the circumstances and aduantages which shall be offered.

The next yeere when either hee doth not, or pethappes can not so speedily aduance, or arme his troupes as hee desireth, in respect of the great provisions hee is inforced to make, then would I haue you to aduance, and to fortifie that part of the Countrey which you haue gotten before that hee can be readie to impeach your courses vpon the frontiers, and defend it with the like resolution. Again, vse the matter in such sort, as when hee begins to casiere his companies, and to retire his forces, you may be ready to renew the warre, and thereby force him to make a new defence. By this meanes you shall inforce him to continue his great armie still in pay, which hee is not able to indure, or else to bring such meane forces to field as hee may be easily dealt withall, and by consequence change the manner of his warre, which were no meane step to an honorable victorie, for thereupon setting downe a new and discreet course for direction, you may presume of a most fortunate successe. Wherefore you haue reason both to graunt and offer all kinds of aid, both of men and money, I meane to the King of the Romanes, who shall fitly serue your turne, to keepe the ballance euen, till you finde a fitter opportunitie. And for that wee know, that vpon anie worthy peece of seruice the Turkish forces are verie apt to shrinke, for that they relye wholly vpon their strength, being also apparent that this blow must be rather giuen by stratageme than by force, it shall not be amisse to touch those meanes which are likely to aduance our purposes: you must be very carefull to drawe them into streit places, where the warre for want of carriages and other necessarie provisions may proue D verie cumbersome, as both I haue specified before, and experience hath taught in the warres of Albania. Again hee must be encountered with so strong an armie of foot, as it may be able to withstand his troupes of horsemen. Which in respect they are for the most part vnarmed, might be easily effected. It is a point of especiall consideration also to put forth a squadron of choice men to entertaine the Ianisaries in fight, from the beginning vnto the end of the battell, leauing in like manner conuenient forces to incounter the rest of his armie: for whereas the manner of the Turkish discipline is alwayes to reserve the valour of the Ianisaries for the last supplie and recourse to victorie, when the rest of the armie shall see that they haue bene charged from the beginning of the fight, they will, no doubt, be much troubled with this alteration, E and the Ianisaries themselves amazed and disordered with a stratageme vnlooked for. It cannot be objected, that this deuice will serue but once, for in truth it will force them to forsake that course for euer, when they shall see their policie preuented, by which they haue many times preuayled against the enemy. It cannot be denied but by meanes of this provision Haniball more than once defeated the Romane Legions, and the Romanes themselves vsing the like stratageme against the Latines, in the verie bowelles of their owne estate during the time of their dissensions and warre, obtained victorie. Aboue all things bend your care to stirre the people to rebellion against their Gouvernours, by good vsage, exemption &c. This may be brought F to passe more speedily, by removing camps, and erecting forts in the Countrey, both for defence and offence, than by places inhabited, as you may find set out at large in my Memorialles: I haue there set downe the meanes to make them speedily, and with small charge, the true reason by which they may be brought to good effect, and the way to hemme in, to cut off, and to subdue securely with good provisions, the forces of any great estate, with very few of them; as we find that Cesar himselfe dwelt in France, by the report of his Commentaries. The least beginning of good successe, will presently draw downe the Turke, to make warre against them, where you shall bee best prouided to incounter him: for it standeth him in hand to be ialous (as hee is) of that reputation in armes, and opinion of superiortie about all princes, which hee hath hitherto held, for feare of disorders and reuolts, which euerie little declining of his fortune might cause in his mightie estate, by reason of the discontent wherein the people lye in respect of his tyrannous gouernement.

You haue likewise to consider of your warres with the crowne of Fraunce, the which are of great consequence in respect of the solide and vnited forces of that realme, and the coniunction and league which they may easily continue with other Potentates of Christendome, and chiefly with the princes and states of Italie, for the ialousie wherein they lye of our greatnesse. But besides that point whereof I warned you before, speaking of the danger that is in leagues, and the small effect that comes of them, you haue besides this one secure and sound prouision in readinesse at all times for your further comfort in this verie case of France, that so often as you shall assault that king within his owne dominions, which is not hard to doe, considering in what manner his realme is enuironed on euery side, you shall be sure to draw him backe, and so diuert him both from Italie, and from other enterprises. Surely the French king warreth in Italie to his great aduantage, as well in respect of the peoples disposition to innovations, as of the great gaine he sometimes makes by one only attempt, in comparison of his small expences: we should haue scene the prooffe not many yeares since, if the French could haue made vse of that aduantage which they held at Cerisoles, or at the taking of Cassal, after the great overthrow which immediately after the reuolt of Siena the Turkish fleetere gaue to ours in the Sicilian sea. Besides, the Italians are so much grieued, being curbed by Milan, Naples, and Sicile, as they are glad of any oportunitie to weaken our suspected forces, and doe willingly offer themselves to any one that will promise to ease them of their burthen, and to set them free, not foreseeing that the French, if they were once masters of the like forts within the body of the state, would be as much, or more offensive to their liberties.

The warre of Piedmont will make the French king wearie in a short time, if you inducetur to fight hand to hand as they do: for by a custome which they haue long obserued, to leaue no enimie behind, you shall verie easily bring this to passe, if you hold some strong towne well fortified against their force, proceeding there from hand to hand as you find occasion: If they diminish or abate their armie, increase yours, so as you may be able to take some place of importance, which being weake you may fortifie. Thus by the helpe of places, and of so great an estate on your backe, you may make warre in winter. And to these ends if you be prouoked by occasion, I had once resolved for their speedie riddance and dispatch to cut off their passage out of France to Turin, raising two or three forts betwixt Turin and the Alpes: for when they shall be forced to maintaine a mightie garrison, and their prouisions on this side the Alpes cut off, it would be hard for them to furnish themselves with sufficient store of victuals and munition out of their owne countrey. In assaulting the French King at home, there are two kinde of warre which promise prosperous successe: the one is by the commodity which you haue to draw your forces sooner together, and to enter into the heart of his Countrey, where you shall find abundance of victuals and other things to maintaine a sufficient army. Before the French king come into the field, I would haue you seeke to make waie for your selfe, and so to aduance, enlarging your owne course, and cutting off your enemies best oportunities by forts built in the Countrey, as I aduised you before speaking of your warres against the Turke, which course Cesar himselfe obserued, when he made warre in that country. Sometimes oportunitie may be given either by the declining of the aduerser partie vpon some braue attempt of yours, or by your good successe and their misfortunes. Whereupon you may so preuaile as afterwards you may lay plots to compass that which is not yet conquered. Diuisions may happen in the countrey, and a thousand other accidents, especially in this age, when as loue and charitie so decay, whereby an enterprife begunne with

A with iudgement, may be greatly furthered; wile men must not disdain to goe forwards by insensible degrees, for so goeth the Summe about the world; for it is impossible that a kingdome of such strength, and at vnion within it selfe, should bee at one instant swallowed vp by anie foreine enimie. But if the least part which is one, bee drawne from them, and added to a stronger part than their owne, the oddes will grow within a while to be so great, as they that find the want will smart for it. Surely, if I had vnderstood the reason from the first beginning of my proceedings against Fraunce, which I haue learned since by long experience, and the consequence of manie braue attempts which I haue made against this realme, vndoubtedly I would haue brought some rare effects to passe: But it may bee that God hath reserued that for your greater glorie. One onelie difficultie is to bee thought on in this case, which is, that the French may sooner enter into Italie by certaine months, considering the season of the yeere, and forwardnesse of the Countrey, than wee can enter into Fraunce: But this aduantage must be prevented by another stratageme: for as soone as you find that the King hath entred into his charge, and made his prouisions, deuise to trouble him in Fraunce with so sufficient an armie, as hee may bee constrained to increase his forces on that side; and so giue ouer all other intended enterprises. It is needlesse to set downe anie other rules for your proceeding in this course, so long as you are Lord of the Lowe Countries, and firmly vnited to your friends and allies in Germanie. Against this mischiefe I find two certaine remedies, the one by entertaining the French King in Italie, and assaulting him in France, at one instant: The other in making shew to be readie, and to set forward in so good time, as hee shall haue other matters to thinke on than his attempts against Italie. You shall easily attaine to your desired end, in proceeding after this manner, as well in respect of the ialousie which the King in his absence hath of that estate, as to auoid the daunger that may follow, if hee leaue his frontire townes behind his backe enuironed both with forts and troups, as Cesar dealt at Marseilles, making warre against Africanus and Petrens. By this meanes smaller forces may serue your turne, and all the brauerie and terrour which the French intended in their coming forward, shall turne to your aduantage; and hauing an other armie ready to aduance, you shall be master of the passages and force him to abandon that garrison which hee left enuironed with your forces vpon the frontire.

D The other way to inuade France, is to set vpon the frontires, and then goe forwards; but this requireth too long time, and serueth rather to diuert the French Kings course from Italie, than to feede our hope with gaining by the match, in respect of the little likelihood to winne anie great townes vpon the frontires, for the French king is mightie, and will come armed to rescue rather than leaue it in daunger: Besides, the winning of a towne by batterie, requireth a long time, and a wanton charge. It is verie true that the difficultie may be recompensed in some sort, by making choice of such places as import the cause wholly, or in the greatest part; but of all these waies the first hath most valour, and is most likely to prooue successfull. I remember well, that when I assaulted Fraunce towards Landerley, my intent was to haue entred into the bowells of that

E Reake, before the coming of the Suissers, but after that I had made some staie about the winning of certaine townes vpon the frontire, the facilitie that I found in preuailling against the first that were attempted by my forces, made mee to change my mind, and to ingage my selfe there, with an assured hope that I might with the like successe go through with the rest, before the King should be strong enough to march: but being staied there longer than I either thought or expected, the King had oportunitie to make himselfe stronger with ease, to defend himselfe with greater securitie, and to constrain mee by force to retire, and to yeelde to an agreement which was then made rather (to tell you plaine) to colour my retreat, than for anie good effect that followed.

F Now if in making warre against France you should preuaile in your attempt, to the which (for that it were against the skill of Armes) I can not beleue you will be euer drawne without great likelihood of victorie; you must labour effectually to bring it to that point: Pursue your aduantage in such sort as I haue said, for by this meanes the king being forced for the most part to supplie his wants from countries farther off, before hee shall be ready with new forces, you may come vpon him with a fresh enterprife: But if the worst should happen vnto you, (which God forbid) you shall alwaies haue leisure to repaire your strength, and so much the more freely, both for danger and all other inconueniencies, if you can put off the hazard nere to the point of winter, so as the credit which he getteth in that action may not further his affaires in Italie: To these ends a gallant armie consisting of a reasonable number, shall auaille you more than huge multitudes. And against France also you may greatly strengthen your estate, by maintaining a continuall number of foot, to match their ordinarie troupes of horse, as you shall find it set downe more plainly in my Reports, with full consideration of all accidents, augmenting your proportion against the Turke, according to the rate wherein he exceeds the French king and others, princes of Europe, in force. It standeth neither with your iudgement nor skill, in any of these cases which I haue set downe, to giue your first onser vpon anie place which requireth long time, great forces, & excessive charge before it can be won, vnlesse you be first sure of some secret intelligence within the towne, or priuie to some great defect or want which pincheth them, whether it be of men, munition, leaders, victuals, and such like necessarie things which they can not forbear; or haue some certaine knowledge of the vnsettled humors of the people, or of some chiefe magistrates, or of diuision within the bodie of the state it selfe, so as you may assure your selfe before the cardes be dealt, to win the great rest by setting it vp.

Ggggg ij

worst

These occasions ought not at anie time to be neglected, vnlesse you meane to abandon the due consideration of the Art of Warre, for otherwise the enemy gaineth too much time for the preparing of his forces, and brings his desires to passe; whereas on the other side, it is hard to maintaine an armie long with victualles and other prouisions at a siege without making some roome at the first for the passage of his conuoyes. I remember well that I once vndertook an enterprise against Prouence in France, my Rendezvous was at Marfeilles, which was the cause that my hopes were made frustrate, and my charges lost, and withall, my retreat was exceeding dangerous: And which is worst of all, the eyes of Francis the French King were opened by this meanes, so as hee plainly discovered the dangers of his realme, and forthwith sought to settle himselfe at Turin, and to make his residence in Piedmont where the French did afterwards make warre to their best aduantage, discouraging the ready meanes of diuerting all attempts on that side against France, besides the credite which they got by the action with the States of Italie.

If they had knowne (as I haue said) how to vie this prosperous successe to their best aduantage, I doubt not but they had often put all the estates you holde thereabouts in danger: Seeke therefore alwayes to assault the French King in his owne Realme, and to preuent his first attempts, for otherwise you cannot when you will ridde your hands of him, by making a diuersion from Italie, if hee may be suffered to put in his foote, for then the difficultie of repairing your armie with supplies of Spaniards, considering the situation will be verie great, wherein all consisteth, for they being defeated by anie mischance, it giues great encouragement to the States of Italie, to laie new plottes, especially the Venetians whom euery little blast doth easily awake. Persuade not your selfe that your dearest friends in Italie, seeing your power decline, will euer adhere to your misfortunes with the hazard of their owne estates, but rather secretly reconcile themselues to him that hath the vpper hand, and follow the Victors good fortune. I would not wish you to applye your whole care about the recouerie of Siena, which will be hardly effected, I graunt the Duke of Florence hath bene jealous to that State, considering his opportunity to annoy them, both by neere neighbourhood, and the power of his authoritie: This plot if it might take effect, will bee a notable president to all States, and make them warie how to intermeddle against your power: And which importeth your cause most of all, you shall by this meanes cut off all intelligence betwene the French Kings forces, and the States of Italie, who finding the French settled within the heart of their Countrey, will be more apt to ioyne with them in friendship, and reliee vpon their strength, rather than when they see them farre off in Piedmont; and much lesse if they can bee drawne on this side the Alpes, whereas their fauour cannot bee commodious, nor their displeasure dangerous. It shall also much a-

uaille

A uaille in your dealing with the Crowne of France, to bee fully informed of the humors and affections of all such persons as are in greatest fauour with the King, or that stand for the best offices; thrust your hand secretly into all their competitions, and drawe the strongest partie vnto you with all the Art you can: for neuer can the Theater of publique Actions afford more fauourable shewes in your behalfe, than when it shall bee moued vnder hand with inuisible deuises. If euer Fortune fauour you so much, as that either by alliance, or anie other kind of agreement, you shall bee able to remooue the French out of Piedmont, wincke at all other things. Doe the best you can where-by the Realme may bee induced to desist from armes; so shall you bee secured from tumults and many other kindes of crosses, which are more dangerous, and not knowne to euery man; if afterwards anie occasion be offered of doing your selfe good, forbear not to lay holde of it. Thus shall you euer be most secure concerning causes which belong to Italie. This is the ground vpon which in the end it behoueth you to settle the strongest sinews of your foreine power, and therefore haue alwayes an eye vnto it with an aduised consideration.

The reason is not all one for the French to bee now put out of Piedmont, and as if they had neuer held it, for in the opinion of the world it will be more disgrace vnto them, than the winning thereof before did yeeld them profit. Wherefore in all your capitulations and agreements let your eye leuell directly at this end, and your plottes of policie aime alwayes at this marke. For belecue me son, and I assure you out of my long experience, that Piedmont alone will benefit you more, than if on that side which lies next vnto Flaunders, you had bereft him of the third part of his owne kingdome. Seeing then wee are entred so farre into the State of Italie, and engaged in the highest mysterie of State, wee must proceed a little farther in this politique discourse. I will tell you once againe, that by the life of this one arterie the pulse of all your great power doth beate. This waie your eyes must bee euer bent and open to all opportunities: First I would haue you vse all deuotion and curtesie to the holie father, and the apostolike Seas; I would wish you to bee verie kind to the members of the same, as the Cardinales, Bishoppes, Prelates and other of the Clergie belonging to the Court of Rome. Be euer readie for the defence of them and the Catholike profession. In all elections of Popes, D see that you labour not by anie vnchristian, vnlawfull, and indirect meanes to preferre anie of those Cardinales that are your especiall friends: Striue not to make one rather than an other, so as all Competitors bee wortheie of the place, for in these sacred actions the holie Ghost doth worke: And it is better to submit our likings to the prouidence of God, which turneth all things to the best, as wee may vnderstand by that which is recorded of Mathias in the Text, than to follow humours or respect particulars.

There is no question but anie of them may bee wonne by due respect, and admit they should become strange, yet after you haue sought to reconcile your selfe into their fauours by such meanes as are prescribed you by the holie Ghost, hauing your territories included in the midst of theiur Countrey, you can neuer want the choice of manie meanes belonging to the world; by which for your last refuge, when there is no other meanes, you may insinuate your selfe more easily into their good opinions: I meane either by alliance with their chiefe friends abroad; or bestowing pensions and sundrie curtesies vpon such persons of the Clergie as they most affect at home, with a thousand such like complements, as may pleasure them daily, without anie hinderance to princes of your qualitie. This is the waie to make the Pope your friend, though at the first hee were elected by a faction of Cardinales which depend not on your affection, for hardly shall you find anie hawke so haggard but hee will prey vpon all apt aduantages: F Hereof you must haue an especiall care, the end whereof is the general good of Christendome, rather than anie respect of your owne priuate interest; though manie perhaps doe not so much regard those bonds which ought to moue them simply to make a Pope, as they doe the profit when a Pope is made to their purpose.

The territories of the Church lie (as we may say) in the very heart of Italie, but so inuironed with yours, as they may serue for a garland: if Siena were once recouered, they should should then be compassed in on all sides with your forces: So as the way which you shall take, according to the rule set downe before, shall be made more easie by your diligence, and the fauours which you meane to bestow: shall more readily bring forth those good fruits which you desire among them. So long as goodly men are preferred to that Sea, there is no doubt but charitie, religion, & care to keep the seamlessse coat of Christ vntrent, will moue them both to tender and deserue your loue: If men delighted more with worldlie honours should hold those places (which God forbid) yet would they be alwaies glad to make a friend of one who they are not able to incounter with hospitalitie, besides his deuotion to the popes theselues. The curtesies which you may likewise vse to the cardinals your speciall friends, wil much fortifie this warie & discreet consideration. Apply your care first time to time to win many friends among the cardinals, as well old as yong, the which may be easily effected, in giuing the preferments & such dignities as they desire. The like course I would haue you hold with the Bishops & other prelates of that Court: but haue a care to deale most bountifullly with such persons as are most inward with his Holines.

Above all things ground your selfe vpon the conscience and equity of your demands, in dealing with the cardinals & other friends; but in cases that require grace and fauour, see that you rely vpon the bountie of the Pope himselfe, lest you be deceiued of your expectation. Sticke not to afford all commodities out of your estates to the court of Rome, with a bountifull and a willing heart, & if necessity inforce you to breake with the Pope, yet vse the matter with such temperance and warinesse; as the world may rightly vnderstand the reason: and acknowledge that the cause of this stratageme grew not from your desert, but that you were inforced thereunto for your owne safetie: Religion is the bond of loue, and therefore nothing is more contrarie to hope and expectation of good successe, than to leaue an ill opinion in the minds of men of your affection towards those that hold the place and credite of Gods ministers.

In matters pertaining to accõpts in general, conforme your selfe at all times with obedience & humblenes to the certen & infallible determination of his Holines, & howsoeuer causes of vnkindnes may arise, yet let the world see your religiõ is vnchangeable. Touching the Venetians you may easily take order, if you find it good for your selfe to continue in the league with the, being (as I said before) so disposed to rely wholly vpon time as they wil wander between these vaine & idle expectations, suffering theselues willingly to be drawn on from day to day, & consuming still with a soft fire of ambition till at length they become a prey to some martial power without any great difficulty. Moreover the Turke, hauing shut the from Corfu, wil soone bereaue the of Cipres & Candie, & restrain them much: And considering that the trade of Venice standeth wholie vpon merchandise, you may neuer vndertake anie enterprise vpon hope of their assistance, especially against the Turk, if it be not at such time as they are very lowe, and you in great prosperitie; and yet euen then also it might be thought that ielosie & feare of your good fortune wil work more in their suspitious conceits, than any other due consideration, or respect whatsoeuer. Experience hath taught that these mean conceits, whose humor is to apprehend more than anie can containe, lose more by emulation than they get by policie; but whensoeuer you haue cause to break league with them, assault them first, & with all celeritie, for as they do lie in wait to worke vpon the first aduantage that their neighbors miseries doe afford, so states which haue often had prooffe of this strange inclination, look warily to their attempts, & hold no stricter league with the than stands with their owne necessities. If then you shall begin to plie the lustily before they can haue leisure to combine with other states, or make prouision for war, a matter so long neglected by their sloath, as it will appeare they haue quite forgotten their first alphabet; & as in popular estates fear breedeth infinit confusions, so may you make your profit of their ignorance. If this be doubted of, you can desire no plainer prooffe, than their want as well of carriages, as of policie in letting slippe so many braue occasions as these late yeeres haue offred. It seemes that they presume out of their sloathfull humor to maintaine their dignitie by certaine quiet ordinances, and sober institutions made by their gowne men: & herein fortune hath bin more fauorable to them, but yet it may be said without offence or error, that common weales so qualified, doe neither know nor vnderstand in what sort to vse their power to their best benefit.

This

A This weaknes being found, in setting first vpon their estate, I do assure my selfe, that with that sodaine alteration, and many other troubles and disorders that will ensue, you may bring some great enterprise to passe, before they be awaked from sleepe, or resoluẽd among themselves what to spend, or whom to relie vpon, what Leaders to imploy, or haue reuiued their old discipline or manner of making warre so many yeeres neglected in their gouernement. Their couetous desires to cut off all cause of charge in time of peace, their ignorance in training men that may be fit to serue when need requires, their want of leaders in the bodie of their owne estate that may withstand the violence of any mightie potentate, that maketh head against their force, will alwayes giue aduantage to your policie, in taking the first start of them: you may boldly imagine that by this means you shall inforce them to their owne defence, whereas if you giue them leisure to beginne the warre, and to assault you first in the realme of Naples, they might doe great harme, in respect of their kind vsage towards them, and their ciuill gouernment which is yet fresh in memorie. If you find no likelihood that they will fall to their defence, inforce them what you may, and seeke to preuent their purposes by meanes of diuision in some good sort, for herein consisteth the greatest aduantage of your actions. I must now let you vnderstand that in seeking to assault them first, your greatest care must be by all means possible to thrust into the verie centre of the State, for hauing forced them to put garrisons into all the strong places which they hold, it is not possible they should bee able at the same time to keepe the field. In the meane time you cannot but find some great want in one or other of their forts, either of leaders, garrisons, prouisions, or payes; you may find out the struiuing humors that are set a worke by faction in generall, or of persons discontented in particular. In any one place that your fortune shall be to take, vse your happy beginning as an extreme to further good, and leaue a president and encouragement to others, by your princely dealing with those, so as they may more easily bee brought to yeeld vpon reasonable conditions and honourable offers made to Burgers, Leaders, souldiers &c. with other meanes which circumstances, time and place shall present to your discreet consideration. If you be once master of the field whatsoeuer is not strong will remaine at your deuotion, or they shall be inforced to come to field, where they can not long continue their garrisons being provided: for hereupon a battell must ensue, which in respect of their long discontinuance of armes, and want of knowledge & experience of the seruice of these times, will be greatly to their disaduantage, and disgrace, so as they may be diuerted first from the realme of Naples, which is one of their best hopes, when they may approach without opposition.

Be carefull also that no other prince in Italie grow too potent, although he seeme to depend wholly vpon your crowne; for in this case you must be no lesse careful to contain those which make shew to be your friends within reasonable bounds, than to keep downe your enemies; holding it for an infallible ground, that they which make profession to follow you, and are most forward in your seruice, would be the first (vpon the least disaduantage and declining of your fortune, and hope to better their owne) that would turne vnto the other side. But as the many diuisions and factions in Italie doe make the labour hard, to keepe that which you now hold, as sometimes it happened betwixt the States of Greece and the Romans, you must euer presuppose this principle, that the Estates of Italie desire about all things to see a Duke settled at Milan, and a King at Naples; to this end tend all their practises, for that is a meanes to weaken your incroching power, and withall to free themselves from forreine seruitude: The reasons are, for that with petie princes they may treat at all times vpon euen hand, with you they promise faire in ielosie, and perseuere in dissimulation. Againe, a Duke of Milan, or a King of Naples, which had no more estates than that alone to build on, would feare and hope with them, and euer tie himselfe to them in a firme league of friendship, against forreine forces for his owne securitie, which is the strongest bond.

But with you they neither dare enter into league, lest thereby you should grow more strong, nor warre, lest with an ouer-match you should weigh downe their policie. Besides, a doore well kept is a defence for all that liue vnder one rooffe, and in one familie. The Venetians about all wish for this, because they might haue great choice in setting setting downe their plottes, and more helpe at their need. The Pope hath also bene asapt as others to combine and practise to this end: but your best remedie against this humour will be to take aduantage of the diuisions and factions which happen daily among themselves, and to maintaine by continuall action, your reputation in armes, holding good intelligence in euerie state, appointing able and sufficient ministers to attend the Pope; by fishing with a golden hooke where the streames are troubled. As for Italie you need not feare anie daunger, if you can deuise to keepe them from combining craftily within themselves, and especially with the French King on that side the Alpes, which is not hard to doe, for him that standeth euer watchfully vpon his gard, and hath in his head discretion to see, and in his hands meanes to preuent their purposes. The safest course as I haue aduised you before, is to nippe off the first buddes of ambition before they ripen to your preiudice, or feed to the hazard of your gouernement.

1555

These briefe notes (my deare sonne) I thought good to leaue with you, as certaine grounds and principles, whereunto you may resort for resolution of doubts as occasion shall be offered. I am not ignorant that many circumstances may change the rules, but yet the reason of them well obserued will direct you, in what fort to deale, howsoeuer fresh occasions may inforce you somewhat to digresse and varie from my former obseruations. Touching the manner in particular of fashioning your policie, both in time of peace and warre to the best vse, with extraordinarie plots for the performance of greater actions, rather sensibly conceiued in my head vpon likely grounds, than warranted by certaine prooffe during the time of my flourishing in the world, I referre you to the compleate discourse which shall euer witnesse both my loue to you, and my trauell for your happinesse. For a conclusion of this point, I charge you by the interest which by nature I may claime, and by the duteie which by the lawe of God you owe me, that in all enterprises you set the rule of conscience before your eyes, and what stratagems and policies soeuer you vse to attaine vnto your desires, yet let the ground and end be iustifiable in his sight who weigheth all things, not by humane passion, but by his most holie ordinance.

Be kind in naturall affection to all the branches of your honourable house: Continue league and friendship with your ancient allies: Preuent the first beginning of your enemies attempts: Beware of sugred words, where reason maketh you to suspect ill deeds: Be sure of sound aduertisements from cuerie state: Be iust at home, and bountifull abroad: so shall your end be futable to your entrie, and both to that vnfaired with which your fathers loue affordeth you. I will neuer cease to pray for your good successe: in you it resteth to proceed in such a courie as praise may sound your purposes.

D. Philip the second of that name, and 23.

King of Castille &c.

1556

Among other aduertisements which the emperour had giuen vnto the king D. Philip his sonne, he had exhorted him much to make a peace with the French, and to keepe it; Mary Queene of England did also affect it, being desirous to haue him by her to haue some issue: whereupon they entred into treatie, and there was a truce concluded for 5 yeeres, by the which it was agreed that euerie one should remaine in possession of that he held. By this truce which was both profitable and honourable for the French, Ottauio Farnese duke of Parma returned into fauour with king Philip. But soone after the Pope falling in quarrel with the king of Spaine, touching the Colonna's whom he had excommunicated, and deprived of their goods, as rebells to the Church, hauing made his nephew John Caraffe duke of Paliano, & giuen vnto his son, but yet an infant, the castle of Caui, belonging to Marc Anthonie Colonne, with the title of Marquesse; the D. of Alba viceroy of Naples, hauing commandement from his master to presse the restitution of the Colonna's to their possessions, had protested that he would do it by force, who (hearing that the Caraffes did fortifie Paliano, vpon the confines of the realme of Naples) sent the erle of Santalento to the Caraffes, exhorting them that they would not attempt a thing so preiudiciall to his Maiestie, and that they should doe all good offices to pacifie the Pope, and to 19

Truce betwixt
the French and Spaniards for five yeeres.

Breach betwixt Pope Paul the fourth, and the king of Spaine.

A take away the occasions of these tumults, seeing that they might expect more from the King of Spaines bountie, by quietnesse, than from their vnle, by such dangerous and not durable Innouations, which could not produce any thing but warre and ruine. The Earle complained also in the Duke of Albas behalfe, that his Holinesse had vsed all them sowerly that were friends to the Emperour, and to the King of Spaine, and that hee daily gaue new occasions to thinke, that his heart was estranged from them, for that to wrong the fauorites, friends, and dependants of the house of Austria, without respect of anie, was a signe of much hatred which was borne them; and small accompt that was made of them: besides arming and leuying new troupes daily, the which were sent vnto diuerse places of the frontire, and finally causing a fort to bee built vpon the confines of the realme of Naples, and employing men therein, that were suspected to the house of Austria, did shew plainly that hee had done them wrong, or meant to wrong them, and then defend it by force. But this was against the quiet of Christendome, seeking to ouerthrow the hope of a generall peace, which with great toyle was lately grounded vpon a truce: and to receiue into Rome, not only the enemies of his King, but open rebelles, was nothing else but to approue their treacherie, and to haue an intent to vse their counsell or seruice to preiudice his Maiesty, seeing they were so familiar, in his Court. The which hee should beleue hee could not long endure, beeing of so generous a mind, and of so great power as hee needed not to feare anie man; and if hee had endured vntil that time, it was onely in respect of the holie Sea, desiring peace about all things, whereunto the Pope should bee more inclined than he, in regard of his dignitie and charge.

The Pope answered pertinently to euerie one of these points, shewing that it was not fit for anie man, much lesse for a Catholike King, or his ministers to seeke (vpon anie colour whatsoeuer) to hinder the Popes authoritie ouer his subiects, that he might not take knowledge of their offences and punish them, for the respect hee should beare to anie Potentate: and that hee (although that the King of Naples were feudatarie to that Sea) tooke no care for that which was doone in that kingdome, much lesse should hee with such vehemencie seeke an accompt in Rome of the Popes actions, who was a free and absolute Lord: But touching that which was spoken of armes and soldiers, it was neither in that citie nor anie where else, a preparation to warre, but for the safetie and defence of his person and State, seeing that hee had cause to feare secret treason, and that which they could not doe by poison, they would seeke to effect by the sword, and they that could not deprive him of his life, would with ignominie spoile him of his estate, hauing before his eyes the example of Clement the seuenth by his too great trust. And as hee could not altogether blame his Maiesties royall conceptions, so hee could not excuse the malice of some of his followers, who haue thought therein to please him, whom hee also blamed, for entertaining anie hard conceit in the Kings mind, causing him to suspect his Holinesse actions and his nephews, so as happily he had commaunded him to send some troupes vnto the frontires of the territories of the Church, vnder Bernardin of Mendoza, and that they had made other demonstrations nothing conformable to the peace, which the Duke seemed to desire, according to the intent of the King his master. Touching enemies and rebelles which hee saied he had receiued into Rome, hee answered, that hee might well know, that that Citie had bene alwayes a common Countreie, wherewith the King should not be grieved: Besides, the Duke of Alua, who made all this noyse, should consider how much the Pope of Rome was reuerenced and respected by him, seeing that hee had receiued and fauoured Marc Anthonie Colonna, who had bene excommunicated by him, with all those that should receiue or assist him. And as for the Kings well taking of it, it was well knowne, and of what power hee was, seeing that hauing scarce taken in hand the gouernement of his Realmes, hee would haue soueraigne Princes respect his Maiesties fauorites, the which hee entertained in other mens estates: But notwithstanding hee did hope that God would fauour the iust cause, and that beeing forced to take some other resolution, hee trusted to find them that would helpe the oppressed.

1556
Earle of Santalento at Rome to treat
at accord.

Duke of Alba
complaines of the Popes actions.

Answer made by the Pope to the duke of Al-bas complaint.

1556

Truce broken betwixt France and Spaine.Cardinall Car-raffa legate in France.Duke of Guise sent into Italie.John de Luna sies into France.Charles resignes the empire to his brother.

But after this they fell to open armes: the Pope apprehending the preparations which were made by the Spaniards in the realme of Naples, had recourse vnto the French King, and to the forces of Fraunce, the ancient refuge of Popes oppressed. This was an occasion to breake the truce, and to bring Fraunce and Spaine againe to armes. There had been a league made by the procurement of the cardinall of Lorraine (before the conclusion of the truce) betwixt the Pope, Henrie the French king, and the Duke Ferrara, whereof the Duke should be generall in Italie, in qualitie of the Kings lieutenant. Cardinall Carraffa the Popes Nuntio was sent into France for Legat, who brought a sword vnto the king, in signification of warre, at whose instance there were three thousand foot appoynted to bee sent to Rome, whereof part were speedily imbar- ked in those gallies which brought this Legate to Marseilles. The Pope hee stood vp- on his gard, entertained captaines, and gaue commissions to leuie men, causing the pla- ces about Rome to be fortified. The duke of Alba seeing the French king engaged in this quarrell, entred in hostile manner into the territories of the Church, where hee tooke many places, and brought his army neere to the gates of Rome, which made the Pope to importune the French King for succours. Afterwards hee tooke the towne of Ostia, and the castle; the which had wonderfully amazed the Romans, if Peter Stroffy had not bene, who since his defeat, being no friend to the Spaniards, had liued in Rome, and had accompanied Cardinall Carraffa into Fraunce, and returned with him to Rome by the kings commaundement, who imployed himselfe wholly for the Carraffes who had all the authoritie, wherefore hee was verie pleasing vnto them. By his industrie and va- lour, Ostia with some other places were recovered from the Spaniards.

The king desirous to releue the Pope, sent Francis of Lorraine Duke of Guise into I- talie, as the Popes souldier, with whom, and with the Duke of Ferrara hee had made certain conuentions, for the entertainment and safetie of the armie, consisting of twelue thousand foot, French, Suisses, and Grisons, and two thousand horse, with the which he passed the Alpes in the heart of winter.

About this time D. John de Luna was in Flaunders, who (as wee haue said) had been called thither touching Fernand Gonzague: hee seeing himselfe very seuerely handled by the Kings ministers in that businesse, seeking a strict accompt of him of the munition of the castle of Milan, being accused to haue imployed it to his owne priuate vse, hee re- solved to flie from Brussels, who comming into Fraunce, was graciously receiued by the Christian king, and an honourable pension given him for his maintenance. Hee wrote from thence to his sonne Diego, that hee should deliuer the castle of Milan (where he remained in his fathers place) to whomsoever his king should commit it, and that nei- ther hee nor his brethren should euer swaue from his seruice. And so it was deliuered by way of prouision to Alonso Pescioni, by order from the catholike King, and afterwards to Alonso Figueroa, who was sent Castellan thither, fearing the danger.

The Emperour Charles having the last yeare made a resignation of all his realmes and dominions, shewing a rare President of his fatherlie loue, and of a wise and temperat mind, hee resolved also to write vnto his brother touching the gouernement of the Em- pire, and leaving the gouernement of his states more free vnto his sonne, retire himselfe, and spend the remainder of his life in a free and quiet contemplation. Wherefore on the seventh day of September this yeare one thousand five hundred fiftie and sixe he sent do- ctor Salas into Germany to his brother Ferdinand with a resignation of the gouernement of the empire with the Crowne, Scepter, and other Ornaments; pretending, that be- ing vnable to vndergoe that burthen, by reason of his age, and the infirmities which did afflict him extraordinarily, hee perswaded the Electors to confirme the said Ferdinand in his place, being yonger, stronger, and more apt to beare the burthen of such an empire, to whom there was giue by the prouidence of God, for a naturall enemy the Turk, who was mighty & alwaies watchful, the which was now most to be feared, for that he heard he was making a great preparation for war. He did write particularly to euery one of the electors touching that busines, & a very familiar letter vnto his brother, recommending his son vn- to him, that he would direct and assist him in all occasions, with his counsel & help. On the 14 day of the moneth he went from Gaand into Zeland, his ships attending him at Fleissingue

Lib.28.

Fleissingue, but for that the wind was contrary, hee was forced to staie many daies at Zuyt- bourg a village betwixt Fleissingue and Middelbourg, which turning faire, hauing taken his leaue of his sonne, and giuen him his blessing, and imbraced all the Princes and Noble- men, hee tooke shipping with his two sisters Mary widow to Lewis King of Hongary, and Leonora first widow of Portugal, and then of France, who would needs accompany him in this voiage.

He came in a eleuen daies to the coast of Spaine, and landed at Laredo in Biscay, where before that he receiued any of those Noblemen that came to doe their duties to him, hee kneeled downe, and gaue God thanks, for that in the last yeeres of his life, hee had suffred him to come and die in that country, which had alwaies bene most deere vnto him, and by whose meanes he knew he was come to the hight of that honour and greatnesse: And then imbracing those Noblemen and Grandos of Spaine very louingly, hee past by Bour- gos to Vailledolit, whereas his Nephew Don Carlo was, to whom he gaue many good in- structions, putting him chiefly in mind of religion and Iustice, where resting some daies, and leaving his sisters there, that he might haue no let to attend the life which hee had pro- pounded, he retired himselfe to the Monastery of Saint Iust of the Order of Saint Ierosme dela Vera, neere to Placentia, a desert place, in the Prouince of Estremadura. Here, with foure seruants onely to serue him in his necessity, hee past his life in continuall contempla- tion, giuing great almes and doing other good deeds of charity, for the which hee had re- ceived a hundred thousand ducats yeerely out of his great possessions. Pope Paul the fourth hearing of his resignation, was much troubled, thinking that the Emperour could not doe it, seeing it was necessary, that beeing desirous to leaue off that degree, whereunto hee had bene aduanced by the Popes authority, hee should resigne it into the Popes hands; whose office it then was to write vnto the Electors to provide one that were worthy of that dignity, who was to obtaine the ordinary confirmation from him, wherein Ferdinand afterwards found some difficulty.

Queene Leonora being in Castille shee had a great desire to see the Infanta, D. Maria of Portugall her daughter, who remained at Lisbone, wherein there was some difficulty vp- on the point of honour and conuenience, whether the mother should goe into Portugal, or the daughter into Castille, so as the Emperour was forced to write somewhat sharply vn- to the king D. John. In the end the daughter came to see the mother in the city of Badajos, which was the last time of their meeting.

The king of Algier with the helpe of an army at sea of Turkes, of two and forty gallies, and many Moores at land, did much annoy the coast of Afrike, and in the end came to O- ran thinking to take that towne from the Spaniards. Being incamped there the seventh day of August, and viewed it where they might plant their battery, they beganne to cast vp trenches about the wall, planting some peecks to batter the castle of Alchaizer, but it was very indiscreetly done, for they lay open both to the attillery of the fort, and to that of the port Tremisene, so as very many of them were slaine. Whereupon they were forced to make new rampars, and to find out a better seat for their lodgings, the which were on e- uery side discovered, their army being great, for besides 12000. Turkes, there was an infi- nite number of Moores, both horse and foote. They staied there some daies before they resolved to batter it, for that they could not find a conuenient place, but that they should be wonderfully annoyed by the ordnance from the fort, which standing high discovered the country round about, and shot into their trenches. In the meane time the beseege- falld forth dayly to skirmish, and carried away the honour in a manner alwaies: and al- though there were not about two thousand souldiers in the whole garrison, which were diuided in Mersalcabir, the castle Alchaizer and the towne, yet the Earle of Alcaudete the Gouernor sent them continually forth to annoy the enemy. But the Moores resolving in the end to batter it, and come to an assault, on the fifteenth day of August they beganne to batter the castle in two places, where they themselves receiued the greatest losse, for be- sides many others, all their gunners were slaine, so vnskillfully they had planted their bat- terie, so as at night they withdrew it, knowing that all their endeavors were vaine. The next day the Turkes began to retire towards the sea with dishonor, making all possible speed to get into their gallies, which lay at Sorzet, and the Moores on horse-backe sauing them.

1556 Charles the fifth passeth into Spaine to a solitary life.Interview betwixt the mother and the daughter.Oran beseeged and valiantly defended.Turkes and Moores fle
from Oran.

1556

themselves by flight. The reason why they received no more losse by the Spaniards in their retreat, was for that they heard thereof late, when as most of them had recovered their galleys, or were fled away on horse-backe.

There was some slaughter made of the Moores that were footmen, but the greatest part of them were pardoned, for that being of the country, the Spaniards would incense them as little as might bee, notwithstanding that they were treacherous and of no faith. The Earle tooke some of their baggage which the enemies had left behind them for hast, with one peece of Ordnance, and if they had had three or foure hundred launces to follow then suddenly, few of the Turkes had escaped, for that they were all in a confusion, and most of them without armes. This sodaine retreat of the Turkes at the enterprise of Oran, eased the Catholike Kings army of much toyle, hauing beene many daies doubtful, whether they should goe and releue this towne, or carry the Spaniards into the Realme of Naples, to the Duke of Alua.

1557

After all the broiles in Italy, betwixt the Pope and the King of Spaine, and the taking and retaking of many townes, in the end both parties seemed to incline vnto a peace. The Pope being a man of a small discours and ignorant of his owne affaires, fearing to be abandoned by his foraine forces, which hee could not entertaine but with great charges, which his means would hardly supply, suffering himselfe to be gouerned by men which deceived him, and applied all to their owne priuate posits, with supreme authority, men of no faith, and which had many practises; hee therefore yeilded to their persuations which did mediate a peace betwixt him and the King of Spaine, amongst which were the Duke of Florence and the Venetians, desirous to diuert this warre, which could bring nothing but spoiles and ruines. The Duke of Guise lying neere to Rome had newes of the battaile of Saint Quentin lost by the French; wherefore hee perswaded the Pope to take some course for himselfe for that hee should bee forced to returne with his army or the greatest part thereof into France, to succour that Realme, which he saw in apparent danger.

Pope yeilds to treat of a peace.

King of Spaine desirous of peace with the Pope.

King Philip did in like manner write vnto the Venetians, shewing how weake the Popes hopes were growne, yet he offered all honourable conditions of peace to his Holinesse, referring the composition to the Iudgement of their common-weale, if the Pope and Viceroy should disagree: Hee did also send commaundement to the Duke of Alba, that hee should procure a peace with all conditions; and so as his friends and seruants might not bee oppressed, hee should accept any accord from the Pope, with whom hee meant not to bee any more in disgrace, and that hee desired no greater fruites of the victory which hee had newly gotten, than to be at peace with his Holinesse. The Duke was then ready to inuest Paliano, but the Cardinall of Santafiora continuing to negotiate this peace, had often sent Alexander Placidi his Secretary vnto the Viceroy, to let him vnderstand, that the Pope at the intreaty of many Cardinalls, had yeilded to a peace, and sent him these conditions.

That the Pope was well pleased to receiue Philip king of Spaine, and the Duke of Alba into fauour, pardoning all the iniuries they had done vnto the Church, so as the Duke with all his troupes did within tenne daies depart out of the territories of the Church leauing the townes and forts taken in that warre free vnto the Pope: and that hee in like manner would cause the Duke of Guise to depart for France within tenne daies. The Duke of Alba although he knew the king his Masters mind, and were himselfe desirous of peace, yet would he make vse of the occasion, and haue it with all aduantages: And therefore hee answered the Cardinall, that those propositions were to be propounded to men that were vanquished, and not to victors: But if the Pope would haue peace with the king of Spaine, he should accuse his owne iniustice, for spoyling the Colonnes, and his error hauing imprisoned so many of his Maiesties vassalls and seruants; making warre against him, and calling in the French to preiudice his states, for the which hee should craue pardon: a proposition which shewed rather the pride of that Nation, than the mind of the Prince, to whom it was no small blemish.

The Caraffi seeing the present danger, & doubting the vast designs of the Spaniard in this great prosperity, according to the which they doe commonly guide their passions, either insolent

Duke of Alua
answers touching a peace.

1557

A insolent or dejected, they perswaded the Pope to retire into Fraunce, or to some other place of safetie, leauing garrisons of Frenchmen in all the forts belonging to the Church, to kindle such a fire in Italie, as neither the Spaniards nor their partisans should euer bee able to quench. But the Pope who naturally did not loue strangers, and had receiued small seruice from the French, reiected it as a desperate Councell, yet being resolu'd rather to imbrace any partie than yeilding to the Viceroy's propositions, to do a thing contrarie to his mind and dignity.

At such time as they treated of this accord, the Viceroy (the more to terrifie the Pope) began to aduance with his armie towards Rome, with an intent to giue an assault to the Citie, and then retyre, yet it was giuen out that hee had a meaning to take it, but his designe was made frustrate by the vigilancie of the Caraffi. The duke hauing relation from Palazzo and Moschera (two of his Captaines, whom he had sent in the night to view the citie) that giuing a sudden assault towards Port Maior, with the helpe of some peeces of artillerie, it might bee easily forced, hee remoued with the armie, and staid at Colonna, where the sixe and twentieth day of August at night, hee caused his armie to march in this order. The light Horsemen were in the foreward, hee made a great Squadron of all the Spanissh foot, which serued for the battell, and the Dutch had the rereward, and on their flanks they had other troupes of horse. And for that they were in some doubt of the French which were at Tiouli, they sent some troupes of horse and foot on the right hand to stay the enemy, if they should haue any notice of their enterprise. Hee then sent about three hundred before with ladders, and other instruments to climbe vp, and to breake open gates if need were, that being brought by some neere way neere vnto Port Maior, they might giue a sudden assault, and being seconded by some horse which were neere them, they might enter the Citie, and keepe a port vntill that the rest of the armie arriued.

Duke of Alua
goes to assault
Rome.

The order was that they should present themselves vnto the wall about the seuenth houre of the night, but there falling a small continuall raine, the waies were so broken, as being constrained to take a longer course, it was breake of day before they arriued, so as being discovered by some of the Countymen, they aduertised them of the citie, which made them retyre speedily, leauing their ladders against the walles, and many cloakes wherewith they had couered themselves from the raine, yea, and some armes, but the slackenesse of the enemy in the pursuit was the cause that there were not about fise and twentie or thirtie taken.

Cardinall Caraffi had intelligence by the Secretary Placidi, when he came from the viceroy, that the armie began to rise; whereupon hee doubted they would assault Rome, or Tiouli, and take the French vnprovided, so as hee gaue them warning ouer night, and hee himselfe (not making it knowne to the Romanes, in whom he had no great confidence) wach all night with the duke, and was in armes, doubling the sentinels wher as they most doubted the enemy. Ascanio de la Corne, who commanded the horse that went to second the 300 foot, seeing the lights about the wall, and the gards in a readines, held the enterprise to be discovered. And to confirme this opinion, foure light horsemen went forth carelie to get some bootie, they thinking by reason of the darkenesse of the night, the number to be greater, and that they had laied an ambush, whereupon they retired.

The duke of Alba comming neere vnto Rome, and seeing his men had not done any thing, thought that they stood readie within to receiue them. And for that he vnderstood by certaine spies, that Stroffy had led foure hundred Horse and twelue companies of Gascons the euening before out of Tiouli, it confirmed him in his beleefe, that they were entered into Rome, hauing notice of the Spaniards comming, wherupon he caused the armie to retire to Colonna from whence it came: without doubt if hee had but attempted it, Rome had beene taken and sackt. The citie was so ill garded, as a lesser armie would haue forced it, for that the Romanes were enemies to the Caraffi, for the wrongs they thought they had receiued of them, and of the foul-diers that were within the citie; of the which the Gascons did not spare their goods to be sackt.

Rome in danger

H h h h h ij.

nor

1557

nor honors, & the Gemmans, enemies to the Pope, spoiled the church & altars. The Pope considering of these things, & lamenting the miseries of the time, being forced to countenance and not to punish those wretches, who called themselves defenders in name, but in effect were destroyers of that miserable citie, beganne to bee fully resolved to peace, and the rather for that hee did visibly see the danger wherein hee was, being certified that the Citizens of Rome had resolved, that if the duke of Alba returned, they would send to capitulate with him, and open him the gates vpon honest conditions.

The duke of Guise, and Peter Stroffy entred into Rome after this tumult, who talking with the Pope, aduised him to accommodate himselfe vnto the time, as wise-men doe commonly. They laied before him the vnfortunate losse of the French king, whereby there was no hope of any greater succours, and that hee should remaine without a Generall, for that hee was to returne speedily into Fraunce, which would bee no small prejudice vnto him, for that his Nephewes, who were to gouernethe warre, were of small experience, neither would they belecue them that vnderstood more in that art, but intreated them ill, keeping backe their entertainment, so as seeing his holinesse without money, and without Captaines, they did not thinke the warre could continue long: wherefore they counsellled him to make the speediest and best accord he could with the king of Spaine. The Pope gaue an attentive care to the free speeches of these Noblemen, and resolved to make an end of the peoples miseries, wherefore he called the embassadour of Venice vnto him, intreating him to goe and informe that Senate of the estate of things, and to exhort them in his name to make some good accord with the imperials.

After manie treaties, in the end a Peace was concluded by the Cardinals of Santafiori and Vitelli; and afterwards by Caraffa and the duke of Alba, who met together at Cavi. And so by either of them hauing full authoritie from the Pope, and the king of Spaine, the following accord was published the 14 day of September.

Peace betwixt
the Pope and
the king of
Spaine.

1 That the Pope should receiue from the duke of Alba in the name of the king of Spaine, the submissions that were necessarie to obtaine pardon from his Holinesse, but afterwards the Catholike king should send a man expressly to that end. And so his Holinesse should receiue the king into fauour, as an obedient Sonne, admitting him to all the graces of the holy church, like vnto other Christian Princes.

2 That the Pope should renounce the league contracted with the French king, and remaine a Neuter, louing them both equally, as his Sonnes.

3 That his Maiestie should cause the townes and Cities demanteled, which had bene taken and held since the beginning of the warre, to bee restored, if they did in any sort belong vnto the Apostolike see.

4 That the ordinance taken on either part in that warre should bee restored.

5 That his Holinesse and his Maiestie should forgiue all offences that had bene done them, and remit all spirituall and temporall punishments, graunting them a generall pardon, with restitution of their honors, dignities, faculties, and iurisdictions, whereof they had bene deprived, in regard of that warre. From the which were excepted Marc Antonio Colonna, Ascanio de la Corgna, and other rebels, the Popes vassals, who should remaine in the same censure and disgrace, during the Popes pleasure.

6 That Paliano should bee deliuered into the hands of John Bernardino Carbone, sonne to the Popes Cousin, but faithfull to both parties, deliuering the fort as it was at that time: and that the said Carbone should sweare fealtie to the pope and king of Spaine, and to obserue the articles concluded betwixt the Cardinall Caraffa, and the duke of Alba, hee hauing the gard of Paliano, with eight hundred foot, which should bee paid equally by the Pope and king.

Besides these there were (as some write) other secret articles concluded betwixt Caraffa and the duke of Alba, concerning Paliano and that duke.

During these broiles betwixt the Pope and the king of Spaine, the warre was violent vpon the frontiers of Artois & Picardie: where the duke of Sauoy being general for the king of Spain, entred with an armie of 40000 men, hee besieged S. Quentin, defeated and

S. Quentin taken.

A and tooke the Constable which came for to relieue it, and then tooke the towne: after which the duke of Guise was called home out of Italie. 1557

The duke of Sauoy hauing taken Castelet, and some other places in Picardie, dissolved his armie: after which the French king hauing raised a great armie commanded by the duke of Guise, hee tooke Calis, Guines, and all the land of Oye, from the English in the heart of winter. Soone after the Marshall of Termes went with an armie into Flaunders, where hauing taken Bergues and Dunkerke, and besieged Grauelin, hee was charged by the earle of Egmont, his armie defeated, and hee himselfe taken. After which rout the French king leuied new forces, and came and camped about Amiens: And king Philip on the other side being nothing inferior in forces, lodged neere vnto Dourlans. Whilst that these two mightie armies which lay so neere one vnto another, held all the world in expectation of some bloudie battell, God inspired the hearts of these two great Princes with a desire to quench this warre without effusion of blood, and to preferre an accord before a doubtful victorie: wherefore their Deputies being assembled in the Abbaie of Cercampe vpon the Marches of Artois, hauing propounded certaine Articles, a peace was more easily concluded at Castell Cambresis, vpon the newes of the death of Marie queene of England. The conditions were:

Calis taken.

1558

Marshall of Termes defeated.

*Peace betwixt France and
Spaine.*

1 That king Philip being a widower, should marrie Elizabeth eldest daughter to king Henric.

2 That Marguerite of Fraunce the kings Sister, should bee giuen in marriage to Emanuel Philibert duke of Sauoy, and that in consideration thereof, all his country, townes, Castles and iurisdictions of Sauoy and Piedmont should bee restored, except the townis of Turin, Quier, Pignerol, Chiuas, and Villanoua of Ast, which should continue three yeares in the French kings hands, and that in the meane time the king of Spain should retaine Ast and Vercell.

3 That all the Townes and forts which had bene taken in these last warres, should bee restored on either part, whether they did belong to those kings, or to others which had followed their parties, and namely the Island of Corfica to the Genouois, Montferat to the duke of Mantoua, and the towne and castle of Bouillon to the bishop of Leege.

4 That they of the house of Longueuille should bee put in possession of the countie of Saint Paul, and the king D. Philip of the countie of Charalois, the Soueraigntie referred: but there was no mention made of the Siennois.

5 That the two kings should doe their best endeouours to entertaine the peace of Christendome, and should procure the continuance and ending of the generall council begun at Trent.

This yeare one thousand five hundred fiftie and eight, queene Leonora sister to the Emperour Charles the fift, died in Februarie, at Talaberuela three leagues from Badajos shee was first wife to Emanuel king of Portugall, and then to Francis the French king, shee was honoured with a royall funerall pompe: And in September following, the emperour Charles ended all his toiles, and past to a better life in the monasterie of Saint Iust, where hee had remained two yeares: his bodie was left there to bee afterwards buried in the monasterie of Saint Laurence, which king Philip his sonne did since build with great charge and state, in remembrance of the victorie gotten against the French, and the taking of the Constable on Saint Laurence day, the tenth of August. Hee left an immortall fame of his valour, more than any of his predecessors had done in many hundred yeares before, for that in him all those vertues might be seene, which are to bee desired in one, that should gouerne his people wisely, and command armes and manage warre iudiciously: He was verie religious and pitifull to the poore, wherein he seemed rather prodigal than liberal: In his eating, drinking & apparel he was very temperate & modest, so as he might wel be a president to any priuat man, as well as to great princes, in the practise of that vertue: He had a care of justice, to haue it duly administered, although the continual wars wherein he was afflicted made him to endure many defects: Hee not only spake the language of euery nation

*Death of Queen
Leonora.*

21

*Death of the Emperour
Charles the fift.*

*Praises of the Emperour
Charles.*

H h h h h iij.

on

1558

on where hee commaunded in Europe, but also those that were not vnder his gouernment, for hee spake the French and Sclauon tongues readily. In other things hee was not learned, but eloquent, shewing great grauitie in his speech. It seemed that his good fortune did strue with vertue to saue him: Hee was prompt in execution, and constant against any apparent danger, little esteeming death. Hee was so accustomed to the toyles of warre, that vntill hee grew aged, it seemed no trouble vnto him. Hee liued eight and fiftie yeares sixe moneths and sixe and twentie daies, his funerals were celebrated with great pompe throughout all the cities of his realme, yea, throughout Christendome, euerie one seeming both in publicke in and in priuate, to be partakers of this generall losse.

In December after, king Philip his Sonne caused his funerall to be made at Bruskills with great state and pompe, where all his most glorious enterprises were represented. Spaine this yeare besides the losse of two such great Princes, was not a little annoyed by the Turkes army, which going from Prouence, landed some men in the Island of Minorca, beyond the port of Maone, and there, after some difficultie and losse, they tooke Cittadella, where there were not aboute fise hundred men to defend it, of whome there were aboute foure hundred slaine, the Turkes disdainig that they were forced to batter it, and to giue some assaults before they could take it. And so valour which is wont to be admired and respected of the ennemie, did now cause a contrarie effect in the hearts of these barbarous and cruell men, and hauing spoyled the towne and the whole island, they returned with many prisoners into Prouence.

Armie of Turke
in Minorca.

Death of D. John
the third king of Portugal.

22 A little before the emperours death, D. John the third of that name king of Portugall, died at Lisbon, to the great griefe of his subiects, by reason of the infancie wherein hee left D. Sebastian, the heire of the Crowne. Hee was a stately and beautifull Prince, and of haucie enterprife, hee continued the Nauigation of the Indies, with great happinesse and reputation, and made the name of Christ to be knowne to many barbarous nations. Hee made many leagues with the Potentates of the East and South to abate the Turkes power, yea with Tamas king of Persia, to whome hee gaue succours of men, artillerie, and all other munition for warre, teaching him and his people to warre after the discipline vsed in Europe, that they might annoy the Turke: yet he was blamed, that to spare money, he had caused many forts in Africke to be rased which the kings his predecessors had won with great charge and losse of men. Norwithstanding, he left manie monuments and marks of his pietie, according to those times: for in fauor of him, the Pope made Miranda Portalegra & Leira, bishopricks, and the citie of Eborā an archbishoprick; he reformed many Abbaies, taking away the superfluous reuenues of the rich, and giuing them to the poore: Hee made an vniuersity at Coimbra, increased the citie of Lisbon much, the which is the greatest and best peopled of all Spaine, and by the persuation of the Clergie received the Inquisition into Portugal, being vntill that time reiecte by his Predecessors, by reason of the abuse: Hee was a verie great fauourer of the Iesuites: and dyed in Iune, in the Palace of Riuiere, in the fise and fiftieth yeare of his age: hee was interred at Belem.

1559
Caspille.

Mariage of king Philip with Elizabeth of France.

King Philip being at Gand, hee sent William of Nassau Prince of Orange, and D. Fernando Aluarez of Toledo, duke of Alba (who had left Italie and his charge to the duke of Seffe being sent in his place) into France, to sweare and confirme the articles of the peace in his name: and the duke of Alba had an especiall commission, to make the matrimoniall promise of the king of Spaine to Elizabeth of France, according to the accord, and to solemnize this act, as it is vsual for great Princes that are absent. This was celebrated at Paris in Iulie one thousand fise hundred fiftie and nine, but the feasts and ioy of this marriage prooued momefull for thark. Henry was hurt with the splinter of a lance, and died as you may read at large in the Historie of France. Before his death he wold haue the marriage of his Sister Marguerit with the duke of Sauoy consummated, which was a great content to that poore prince dispossest of his state, who feared much that the kings death which was vndoubtfull

1559

A full, would be a great crosse vnto him. King Philip (after the consummation of his marriage, by the duke of Alba) sent Ruy Gomez de Sylua vnto his queene, with a rich diamond, valued by some at eightie thousand crownes, by others, at an hundred and fiftie thousand, with order, that she should prepare her selfe to goe into Spaine the next yeare. And hee finding himselfe freed from troubles, and hauing disposed of the affaires of the Netherlands, appointed gouernours for euerie prouince, and ouer them Marguerite of Austris, his sister, duchesse of Parma, he tooke shipping at Flessingue, in September, and arriued at Laredo in Biscaie, verie happily: for he was no sooner landed, but there did rise so violent a storme, and such contrarie winds to that navigation, as, had hee bene at sea, he had bene in verie great danger, or, had he bene in Flanders, he could not haue parted in six monethes. They persuated him, that his presence in Spaine was verie necessarie, for that by their acquaintance with the English and Germans, many of the Court, and other Spaniards which had followed the warres, seasoned with Luthers opinions, had spred them there: to root out the which the Iudges of the Inquisition sayd, that they were too weake, the king being absent.

King Philip returns into Spain

23 Being arriued, it was his chiefe care to haue a strict search made for them that had any ill conceit of the Romish religion, and to haue them rigorously punished: so as that yeare there were two hideous spectacles presented, one at Vailledolit, and another at Seule, of people of diuers conditions, sexes, and ages, condemned to be burnt aliuie; among which there were some of noble families. Some sayd, it was a secret plot betwixt the two kings of France and Spaine, at the conclusion of the peace, for hee of France had begun the like persecutions within his owne realme, and with his owne officers first. The Archbishop of Toledo, the chiefe Prelate in Spaine, was much suspected to decline from the Romish Church, wherefore he was put in prison, and his rents sequestred.

Persecutions in Spaine for religion.

This yeare the Roman Sea was voyd, by the death of Pope Paul the fourth, being fourescore and three yeares old; before his death being duely informed of the villanies of cardinall Caraffa and his brethren, being his nephewes, hee banished them out of Rome, and deprived them of all their dignities and offices. The cardinall lost his place of Legat at Bolonia, the duke of Paliano the command of the armes and of the gallies of the Church, and the marquisse of Montabello, the gard which hee had of the Popes person, and of the palace. This Pope was succeeded by John Ange de Medici, a Milanois, and was called Pius the fourth: at his first comming to the Sea he caused cardinall Caraffa to be put in prison, and strangled there, and the duke of Paliano, the earle of Alife, and other of his predecessors kinsmen, to be beheaded, being convicted of many crimes. He did intimate the Councell of Trent, which had bene left off since the yeare 1552, but it began not vntill the yeare 1562.

Death of Pope
Paul the fourth

During the warres of Europe, Asia and Africke had not bene at peace; for that famous pyrat Dragut hauing gotten the island of Gerbe from Solyman that was lord thereof, whom he caused to be hanged at Tripoli, giuing the place to another lord, for a tribute of six thousand crownes, and yet soone after hee deprived him: but those people, notable to endure his tyrannie, tooke armes against him, and sought to make a new lord. Tripoli had also bene taken eight yeares before by Dragut, from the knights of Saint John, who to reuenge that disgrace, sought to recouer it this yeare. The people of Spaine desired nothing more, than to keepe vnder the Moores and pyrats of Africke, who being neere vnto them, may easily trouble their navigation, and annoy the Southern coasts: Wherefore it was not difficult for John Valette, a French man, great Master of Malta, to persuaue the Catholike king, and the Councell of Spaine, to send an armie to the conquest of Tripoli, from whence Dragut and other pyrats did daily annoy the Spaniards. Dragut was much hated, not onely of the Christians, but also of the Moores, ouer whom hee vsed most cruell tyrannie, seeking by treacherie, or by open force, to kill the chiefe Commanders, and to make himselfe lord of their States: Among which the king of Garuano was the chiefe, from whom hee had taken a great part of his estate: and for that he was of great force, hee was reuerenced among his people,

Tripoli besieged by the Christians.

ple, almost like a Pope among the Christians; wherefore it seemed hee might helpe G much in this enterprife, against this famous pyrat, if (as hee had made offer) he would shew himselfe fauourable. Valette being encouraged by his offers, hee began to treat with the duke of Medina Celi, then Viceroy of Sicile, and afterwards in the Court of Spaine, by the Commaunder Guimaraes, his embassadour. At the first there was some difficultie, the king being in warre against France, but a peace concluded, hee resolved to attempt the enterprife of Tripoli, sending Guimaraes with his resolution, and letters of Commission to them that should haue the execution thereof. Hee carried letters to prince Doria, That hee should with all speed make ready the armie, being now mid Iune; who being verie old, and vnable to beare armes, gaue the charge thereof to H John Andrew Doria, being his lieutenant, writing vnto him into Sicile. The duke of Sessa had commission in the State of Milan, to make ready two thousand Spaniards for that seruice: and Aluaro de Sandy to go thither in person with the footmen that were vnder his charge within the realme, and with the two thousand Spaniards. The Viceroy of Naples had order to send two thousand Spaniards of the regiments of that realme; and the Viceroy of Sicile had the title of Generall in this action.

Guimaraes hauing performed all these Commissions, in the end hee came to Mefina, the seuenteenth day of Iulie. Euerie man was carefull to execute his Commission, and the great Master, to whom the king had giuen the chiefe care to manage this enterprife with discretion, and to asist it both with his counsell and force, laboured by all meanes to get the armie forth, that they might performe some worthie action before Autumne: But they had so many crosses, as the nauie could not possibly get out of the port of Saragosse in Sicile, before the first day of December. There were leuiued for this enterprife by Sandy in the State of Milan, besides those men aboue mentioned, two thousand five hundred Italians, all old souldiers, and three Companies of Germans, which had remained there since the last warre, commaunded by Stephen Leopardi: and so all these souldiers were sent to Genoua to imbarke, where they had many difficulties, and the Spaniards mutined, so as Sandy and Lorenzo Figueroa had some difficultie to pacifie them with foure payes: then putting them into certaine ships, the fift of October they went to Mefina. K

Of the two thousand Spaniards out of the realme of Naples, the Viceroy would giue but five hundred, hee fearing to leaue that coast without a good gard, for that the Turkes armie, being fourescore sayles, was then at Velona; breeding a doubt in the Christians, where this tempest would fall: But in effect it was by Solyman to keepe our men from the enterprife of Barbarie; for that the great Master hauing some monethes before sent two foists into Africke, to discover, one of them was taken by Dragut, whereby he vnderstood the Catholike kings preparations, and his designs: so as hauing but five hundred men in Tripoli, hee suddenly hyred to the number of two thousand Turkes and Moores; writing thereof to Constantinople, whereupon hee resolved to send forth this fleet. Moreover, there were leuiued within the realme twelve Companies of Italians. In Sicile also there were twelve Companies, among the which, as in those of Naples, there were many banished men, who were fierce and warlike, but verie mutinous. L

All these men, being aboue thirteene thousand, were commaunded by valiant captaines: John Andrew Gonzaga, sonne to Fernando, was Colonell of the Italian foot leuiued in the State of Milan, and Marshall of the campe to all the Italians that went in that action: Luigi Osorio was master of the campe to the Spaniards of Sicile: Bernard Aldana was master of the ordnance, whereof they carried great store, both for field and batterie: Peter Velasques was Commissarie generall of the armie, and the Commaunder Charles Iesters, was Colonell of five hundred harquebusiers, sent by the great Master, beside foure hundred valiant knights in the gallies, of that Order. There were in Sicile of gallies, three from the Church, whereof the charge was giuen by the Colledge of cardinals (the Sea being voyd) vnto Flaminio of Anguillara, thirteenth of John Andrew Doria, payed by the king, seuen of the realme of Naples, gouerned

Numbers of Christian Armie going to Tripoli.

A ned by Sancio Licua, tenn of Sicile, commaunded by Berlingbery Requesens, foure from the duke of Florence, vnder Nicholas Gentile, five of the Order of Malta, and one galliot, five of Anthony Doria, commaunded by his sonne Scipione, two of Bandinello Sule. To these were added two galliots of the duke of Medina Celi, the Generall, one of Lewis Osorio, and one of Frederic Staues: so as they were in all foure and fiftie, besides eight and twentie great ships, of the which John Andrew Gonzaga was Generall; two galleons, one of Malta, the other of Cicala, with five and thirtie brigantines and frigates: so as they reckoned in all an hundred and nineteene yessels. They carried great store of munition for the warre, and victuals to feed 30000 men foure monethes.

B There was some difficultie to imbarke the Spaniards of Sicile, mutined, for that there were many monethes pay due vnto them; but Fernando de Sylva, marquisse of Fauara, being left lieutenant by the duke, satisfied them with two monethes pay. Going from Mefina to Saragosse, in October, they stayed there many daies, by reason of the contrarie winds. Their long stay there did much prejudice them, for it not only bred a sicknesse among them, whereof there died aboue two thousand, but also many fled away, especially of the Sicilians. The first of December the gallies parted from Saragosse, with great hope of a prosperous voyage, the ships sayling towards Cap passero, being towards night, with an intent to goe to Secci di Palo; who hauing left the ships behind, and a contrarie wind blowing in the morning, they were forced to returne againe into C Saragosse. The gallies fearing if the contrarie windes should grow great, it would breed them great danger in this long voyage, being much before the ships, they resolved to get to Malta. Here the gallies, with the Generall in them, and other men of account, were honourably entertained by the great Master, for some dayes, the winds being still contrarie to their intended voyage. It was then resolved, that two and twentie gallies should returne into Sicile, to bring the ships to Malta; most of which arrived after some difficultie: Five of them stayed vntill the fift of Ianuarie, and three vnto the twelfth, among which was the galleon of Cicala, which running to Cap passero, was there spoyled by the Sicilian souldiers that were in her, who killing their commaunders, fled away. The like happened vnto a ship which carried Sicilians also, of the which Vincenzo Castagnola was captaine, who was not slaine by them, but verie cruelly intreated. Some dayes before there arrived seuen Companies of Spaniards, sent in three ships by the Viceroy of Naples, to fill vp his number of two thousand, according to the kings commaundement. There came in like manner a galleon with many refreshings from Sicile, and great store of munition.

They were haunted still with that infectious sicknesse in Malta, whereof many dyed, giuing in the beginning apparent signes of the vnfortunate successe of this armie. Thus the secret judgements of God doe often make mens counsels and resolutions vaine, the which in regard of the cause are held good, but are not approved by his diuine prouidence; it may be to confound the wisdom of men, but without doubt for our offences.

E In the yere 1560 Isabella, or Elizabeth queene of Spaine, was conducted into Spaine, to the king D. Philip her husband, being accompanied by Anthony of Bourbon, king of Nauarre, with other lords and ladies: she was receiued at Roncevaux by the cardinal D. Francis of Mendosa, bishop of Burgos, D. Inigo Lopez of Mendosa, duke of the Infantazgo, and many others, who conducted her to Guadalajara, where the marriage was celebrated. At that time D. Gabriel de la Cueva was Viceroy of Nauarre, in the place of D. Bertrand his father, deceased, who gaue the new queene a stately reception passing by Pampelone. The same yere the prince D. Charles, sonne to king Philip, was sworn, and acknowledged to be true successor in the realmes of Castille, Nauarre, Arragon, &c. after the accustomed manner of Spaine.

F But to the returne to the warre of Barbarie. The Catholike kings nauie stayed many dayes at Malta, by reason of the contrarie windes; so as in the beginning of the yere the Generall (although he were perswaded by the great Master to stay vntill the weather were better settled) commaunded the armie to imbarke, and about the middest of Februarie he came to the island of Gerbe; where hauing discovered two ships of Alexandria,

1560
Queene of Spaine conducted into Spaine

1560

Alexandria, laden with marchandise, lying within the chanell, they tooke and spoyled them: but they vsed no diligence to take two vessels that went with oares, which lay more within, the which afterwards were no small hurt vnto them. Dragut was there with seuen hundred Turkes and Moores, on horsebacke, and three thousand foot, being then in quarell with the Xec, or lord of the island, who also had good numbers of Arabians and Moores, and expecting aid from the Christians, was continually in armes against his enemies.

Christians army
at Gerbe.

Dr. gut held that part of the island which was towards the chanell, hauing kept those two vessels readie to send vnto Constantinople, or to flie away, if necessitie forced him, hauing no hope to escape on the other side, whereas the Xec lay with his forces, especially if all the Christians armie were landed, whereof a part went to land, to fetch fresh water, being led by Aluaro de Sandy; where skirmishing nine houres together, during their watering, they receiued no great losse, and slue many enemies: In the retreat Aluaro was shot in the flanke, yet could they not possibly take any one prisoner, to be informed of the state of things: which was afterwards thought to haue stayed the victorie, and to haue ruined their enterprife, when as, by the taking of the two galliots, Dragut could not possibly haue escaped, after which the taking of Tripoli had bene casie, neither should hee haue had meanes to send to Constantinople, to aduertise them of the state of things in Barbarie, and to procure an armie. It was knowne afterwards, that there was great store of money and jewels, which Dragut sent by Pluccialy the pyrat, vnto the Bassa of the port, to procure succours from the great Turke: so as if they had taken and burnt them, they had obtained a happie victorie; the which was not done, partly through the negligence of them that commaunded, and partly by the great diligence of the enemy, who would not haue the Christians know what past in the island, for that there was not any creature living found in the two ships, all being fled to land. In the morning before day the Christians parted with their armie, neither could they put any to land in a fregate, to discover the state of the island, the Moores were so careful to defend the shore.

Occasion of a victorie lost by the Christians.

Christians slain
by the Turkes
in watering.

Two dayes after there came eight gallies to Gerbe, the which had stayed at Malta for some prouision, where landing vnadvisedly to water, they were charged by the Turkes, who slue an hundred and fiftie good fouldiers, and tooke some prisoners, among which was capitaine Pedro Vermudez: and of the chiefe of them that were slaine, were foure Spaniards, Adrian Garzia, Alphonso de Guzman, Pedro Vianega del Rio, and Francisco Mercado: which disorder did much trouble the Generall, being now at Secco di Palo with the whole armie; and they were all much discontented, to heare afterwards, that a fregate of the knights of Malta, passing neere vnto Gerbe, had bene told by two Renegadoes, that Dragut was there, and that Pluccialy was gone with two galliots to Constantinople: And, which was worse, the armie was forced to stay some dayes at Secco di Palo, by reason of contrarie windes, being an hundred and fiftie miles from Tripoli, where drinking fresh water digged in those sands, but of a pestiferous qualitie, it brought a pestilent infirmite into the armie, whereof many dyed. In the end a South-east wind arising, it did hinder their course to Tripoli, and staying there infinit numbers dyed, through the corruption of the ayre and water, this pestilent disease increasing daily, hauing wasted a great part of their munition, and broken the Admirals ship by the mariners negligence, hauing also lost two smaller ships laden with victuals, at Chercheny, they had not many men in the armie for this enterprife, expecting footmen from Naples and Sicile, and the Galeon of Cicala, two galliots, and some ships, which had bene kept backe by contrarie windes. Wherefore they resolved to returne, and to land at Gerbe, where they arriued the two and twentieth day of March, and on the seuen and twentieth Aluaro de Sandy, Marshall generall of the campe, landed with their men, and some field peeces, to lodge in good order, neere vnto certaine wells of fresh water, two miles from the castle, towards the West. At their landing *Aluaro*s nephew died of a pestilent fever, carrying his name; a young man of great hope: he was much lamented by him, and the whole armie.

Christians army
land at Gerbe.

Ha-

1560

Hauing at night made three squadrons of all his men they lodged neere. Sandy not thinking it fit to goe vnto the wells, for that hee found by many coniectures that the Moores had receiued them as enemies, wherefore it would bee dangerous, if lodging late, they should bee charged by the enemy. At night the Xec sent two men with a sayned Embassage, intreating the Generall to goe to Tripoli, for that hee had bene receiued quietly by his subjects, who would take it ill if the Christians should remaine in that Island; but in effect they came to discover the campe. They were entertained vntill the morning, and then an answer was giuen them, that they had landed at Gerbe finding the winds contrary to goe to Tripoli, but yet they had done it willingly to put the Xec in possession of the Island, before they went to Tripoli, which they intended afterwards. They therefore desired to see him well settled, to buy refreshings with their money, take water, and as soone as the windes were faire, goe for Tripoli. In the morning hauing put all their men in battaile, they marched towards the wells, being sixe miles off, the souldiers hauing indured much that night for want of water, hauing not brought any out of the gallies, so as they marched with great thirst, Sandy being careful least at their arriual, disordering themselves hauing a great desire to drinke they should bee charged by the Moores, and receiue some great losse. They marched in three squadrons: in the forward went the great Commander, with the knights and souldiers of Malta, and with the Germanes and French, which were not in all about two thousand.

Andrew Gonzaga commanded the battaile, consisting of three thousand Italians, and in the reere-ward were three thousand and siue hundred Spaniards: And of either side they were couered with a wing of three hundred shot, leauing in the midst a conuenient space for the baggage. But if they came to a battaile, one of these wings was to ioyne with the forward, and the other with the battaile; hauing marched a while, they were staied at a certaine bogge, by a field peece: Sandy with the shot which were towards the shore, aduanced to recover the wells, which hee found had bene spoiled by the Moores, and filled with stones and sand, so as hee was forced to send for Pioners with tooles to cleanse them: neither did the Moores yet shew themselves, being an apparent signe that they had an intent to charge them in their lodging, so as they marched in good order, forbidding any man to disband vpon paine of death. Then they met with foure Moores of Authority sent from the Xec, with a designe to view the army, but with an excuse of a friuolous Embassage, where they were entertained with good words, whilst that the army aduanced toward the wells, and then were dismist with a generous answer from the Generall: That seeing the Xec could not come vnto him, being staied by his people, that hee should rest satisfied, and that hee would soone bee with him in his castle, reiecting their proposition, that the Duke should aduance with foure horses onely, as the Xec had done, that they might parle together. Yet for all this the Moores, who lay two miles off, couered with a little hill, did not moue, seeing the order of the Christians army to bee verie firme, wherefore they did forbear vntill they lodged, imagining that hauing endured much thirst that day and the night before, they would in their lodging fall into a confusion with a desire of drinke. Which did not follow by *Aluaro de Sandy*s great care who caused them still to keepe their ranks: Notwithstanding that Colonel Spinola hauing too eagerly aduanced to entertaine a great skirmish, was in great daunger with some Harguebuziers that were with him. But the Marshall foreseeing this danger, had sent capitaine George Ruiz with two hundred Harguebuziers of Sicile behind certaine walles to fauour their retreat. The Moores attempted also to breake the ranks of the Christians in other places, with great courage and readinesse, but with little losse that day, onely capitaine Ruiz being hurt in the shoulder with a lance, died within few daies after.

The skirmish ended two houres before night, and the Christians lodged, hauing caused the wells to be clenfed during the skirmish.

The day following they fortified their lodging against the enemy, and the gallies were sent for to furnish themselves with water; but three daies after they went forth in battaile, to goe and fight with the enemy, which did not succeed, for the Moores with their Xec,

Order of the Christians army
at Gerbe.

1560

Xec, did often intreat the Generall to receiue them for vanquished, offering to bee subiects to the King of Spaine. Having first taken hostages, Michel of Baraona a Colonel was sent with two companies of Spaniards to take possession of the castle, and the next day the Generall entred, with the chiefe of the army, the Moores shewing themselves very obsequious, bringing abundance of victuals vnto the campe. The Arabians Mahamidi were also paid with their Xec, who had faithfully kept the passage of the bridge, as they had beene appointed at Secco di Palo. They afterwards held a Councell, how they might keepe that Island at the kings deuotion, the which they held to bee verie necessarie, for by that meanes they should take a retreat from the Turkes and Moores which did robbe vpon those seas, and withall they should secure Sicile, Sardinia, Malta and other places, and to that end they should build a fort, making vse of the castle to keepe their victuals and munition, and for some wells: besides hauing their materials neere, with other commodities for the speedy doing it.

Fort built in the Island of Gerbe.

On the seuenteenth of March the army began to lodge about the castle, where they had appointed to build a fort, Antonio Conste being Ingenger, assisted by Bernardo Aldano and Sanchio de Liema, within two daies after the worke beganne, it being diuided amongst the Nations after this manner. Being to make foure Bulwarkes, the charge of one was giuen to Andrew Gonzaga, and to the Italians, an other to the great Commander, and to them of that order, the third to Andrew Doria, and them of the gallies, the Generall reseruing the fourth for himselfe, so as within few daies it was put in defence. But neither the ayre nor the water were healthfull for them that were not accustomed vnto it, so as many died daily, and more fell sicke, which was a lamentable spectacle. There was an hospitall provided, and the bishop of Majorca who was also gouernour, did what hee could to preferue the souldiers. They had newes that they prepared an army at Constantinople; and the great Master of Malta doubting some danger called home the great Commander with his Gallies and men, the which parted from Gerbe the eight of Aprill, leauing the charge of supplying that Bulwark to Pedro Vryea, for that they made great hast to leaue it defensible, the Duke resoluing to imbarke, being verie carefull to furnish it, although that all things did not succeed according to his desire. The king of Caruano came to visit him, and there past great kindnesse betwixt them, but the Xec would by no means meet him, yet hee came once halfe a mile out of the castle to treat with him, being accompanied with a great number of Moores. The Generall was earnest to haue store of victuals brought from the ships vnto the campe, but they that were interested seemed to haue small care of the publike good. There were two thousand foot Italians, Spaniards and Dutch appointed for the gard of this fort, with fifty horse vnder the Colonel Michel of Baraona. There was order giuen to haue the Xec take the oth, who should aduance the armes of Spaine. And then hee resolued to part with the army in the beginning of May, but hee was staied vpon some controuersie growne betwixt the Christians and the Moores, vpon a light occasion; but it was wisely pacified, and some that had most offended punished.

Xec swears obedience and tribute to the
King of Spaine.

The same of the army increasing, and the solemnitie performed the fifth of May, a mile from the campe, in the presence of Monreal the Generals Secretary, and some of his gentlemen, the Xec did swear vpon the Alcaron to bee faithfull to the king of Spaine, to pay euery yeere sixe thousand crownes, foure Estriges, foure Lanerets, foure Falcons, and one Camell, and in like manner the Moores, that were with him did swear vassalage and fealtie vnto him. Then order was giuen to imbarke the army, wherein they were verie slacke and negligent, vntill that there came a message from the Great Master to the Generall, assuring him that the Turkes gallies being foure score and siue had parted from Gozo on the eight day of that month at night, with an intent as hee did coniecture to relieue Tripoly, and then to seeke out the Christians army, hearing that it was vnsumished of souldiers, and out of order. Then euery man desired to bee at sea, so as the confusion was great, and their opinion diuers, but most concurred to go presently to sea.

The Generall went to Iohn Andrew Doria being not well recovered of a great Infirmity, to resolue of all things, leauing a charge with Aluaro to haue his men readie, so as returning at night he might not stay; Doria being resolued to put to sea, and hauing giuen order

1560

A order to the ships to follow him, he left a gallie called the Contesse, for the duke to imbarke in, being light, and well furnished with slaues, thas all things being ordered, hee might goe and joyne with the armie. The Generall would not omit any dutie that night, being before the twelfth day, but hauing giuen good instructions to the gouernour of the fort, he spake with great efficacie to the souldiers which remained, assuring them, That the armie at sea being in that accident in greater daunger than the fort, it was fit he should be where the perill was most apparent, entertaining them after this manner vntill the day began to breake, when as he with Sandy came vnto the fregate which should carrie them to the gallie that was gouerned by the Commander Guimerano. But hee made
 B a signe vnto him with his hand, that hee should retire to land, for that the Turkes armie began to appeare, with an intent to charge the Christians. After Doria's resolutions to get out of those shelles, there arose a contrarie wind, which did hinder him: so as the Turkes Generall hauing cast anchor but sixteene miles from Gerbe, the night before, hauing sent Cara Mustafa gouernour of Mitelen and Vduccialy to discouer, he vnderstood in what confusion the Christians were; being readie to depart, hee then resolued to set vpon them at the breake of day: with which resolution hee came on with a prosperous wind, when as Scipion going forth with a squadron of gallies for the gard, hee was so suddenly surprisid by the Turkes, as hee had no time to aduertise the armie: so as euerie man being amazed by this sudden accident, they had no other care
 C but how to flie, but it was done with that confusion which a sudden feare of an ineuitable daunger doth vially bring. Iohn Andrew Doria distrusting his Admirall gallie, for that it was old and heauie, hee resolued to draw neere to land, being forced to recover the fort in a barke, being a mile off: the gallie was presently abandoned, and left in the slaues hands, who being at libertie, carried it to the enemy. It was a miserable spectacle to see that mightie armie scattered in an instant; some one way some another. There were seuen gallies which fought to saue themselves in the channell of Gerbe, where most of the men leaping into the water; although they were farre from land, sought to saue their liues by swimming; so as all the shore was full of men.

24
Armie of Christians miserably lost at Gerbe.

D The Marshall Sandy ranne thither with a great troupe of shot and pikes, to defend them that came to land, for that the Moores, being treacherous and inconstant, had presently changed their minds, and slue and spoyled as many as came vnto their hands. The Generall to auoyd this other mischiefe, sent word vnto the Xec, by the king of Caruano, and the Infant of Tunis, That hee should forbid his Moores to annoy the Christians, putting him in mind of his faith formerly giuen. But they prepared to flie also, fearing the Turkes, pretending, that they went to gather together some Arabians Mahamidy, with the which they would retume, and fauour the Christians; wishing them not to trust the Moores of the island, who were not well affected to them. That morning there were nineteene gallies fell into the enemies hands, with the Admirall, the rest saued themselves in diuers places, by flight, the which was attributed to the courage and good counsell of the Commander Anthony Maldonato. The great Master had called home his gallies to Malta, as hath beene sayed, to provide for the daungers of that island; but afterwards hee sent backe three, vnder the command of Maldonato, who in this confusion going to sea, was followed by many gallies, relying vpon the skill of this knight, the which succeded happily. The duke and Sandy stayed vpon the shore, to defend those poore wretches which came from the gallies, from the Moores, giuing them clothes and armes, which were prepared for them that should defend the fort.

The same day they held a Councell vnder a tent, where were the Generals Iohn Andrew Doria, D. Aluaro de Sandy, and the Commander Guimerano. Doria said, That it was necessarie for them to depart speedily, whilest that the enemy was busie in giuing chase to the gallies, which he meant to doe in a fregate, carrying them to Malta, or into Sicile, to gather together the disperfed gallies, and to arme others, to make head against the Turkes armie, if hee should seeke to annoy any place of the kings. Sandy did counsell the duke to goe to attend his chiefe charge of Sicile, the which was now in great danger, and if he did it not he should faile much of his duetie: but for his part, he would remaine in Gerbe, being thereunto bound both by the duetie of his charge; and the seruice he ought vnto his king, seeing there remained about three thousand, besides the appointed garrison, some of which escaped from the gallies, and some were neuer imbar- ked, being sicke, and not fit for the warre, and yet they were to be respected as Christi- ans; besides, there being many which had followed him in the action, it was not fit hee should seeke his owne safetie, and abandon them.

These with other his reasons were allowed of, and it was resolved; they should depart that euening about Sunne set, in nine fregates, some other knights and officers follow- ing them: but a contrarie wind stayed them that night. But the next day there, hap- pened another disgrace: for the Generall meaning to keepe the Turkes from the shore, whilest they pursued the gallies that retired into the chanell, hee caused the artillerie of the fort to bee mounted; among which was a Culuerin, which being overcharged, brake; and slue some that were neere vnto the Generall. The losse was exceeding great in those gallies that were taken; not onely of the vessels, and of many souldiers that were in them, but also for that there were many men of account slaine, or taken prisoners: among which were Flaminio of Anguillara, Generall of the Popes gallies, Sancio de Leus, Generall of them of Naples, Berlingheri of Requesens, of those of Sicile, the bishop of Majorca, Gaston de la Cerde, the Generall sonne, with others. But at the Turkes returne from the chase of the gallies, they prepared to fight with the ships which were full of souldiers, being five and twentie; all which they tooke with- out any difficultie. Some write, there were aboue 3000 men taken in the ships & gallies, and drowned, seeking to flie to land. The Viceroy of Sicile, and John Andrew Doria, elca- ped, and came to Malta, and from thence to Sicile, hauing first given order, that a fre- gate of aduice should bee sent to them that were in the fort at Gerbe, of their safetie, and that the Commaunder Guimerano was sent into Spaine, to informe the king of this accident, and to intreat him to send D. Bernardin de Mendoza, Generall of the gallies of Spaine in Sicile, to ioyne with such as were escaped, and to make the bodie of an armie, whereby they might succour the besieged at Gerbe. They of the fort were verie joy- full of these newes; and Sandy, who was made Generall by the duke, confirmed them with many good reasons, that they should vndoubtedly expect it, omitting no paines to fortifie the place.

Pialy Bassa, who was Generall of the armie, resolving to take the fort, did write to Dracut (who, a litle before the Christians had come the second time to Gerbe, was gone with all his horsemen to Tripoli, to defend it) That he should send, or come with all the forces he had, to besiege Gerbe, sending him also prouision of victuals, and munition for that enterprife. The Bassa landed his souldiers, and began to fortifie his lodging neere vnto the wells where the Christians had camped. Sandy did not thinke it conuenient to make often sallies, hauing no great store of good men, and too many that were vnprofitable, which was his greatest trouble, hauing neither victuals nor water sufficient for a long siege. But he resolved to draw it in length, for many respects, hoping that they should be releued, it importing his Maiestie much, not onely for the losse of the fort, but also of so many good souldiers, and capitaines of qualitie, which were there exposed to apparent danger. The Bassa hauing all the garrison souldiers of Barbarie, with other necessaries, made his approaches neere vnto the fort, where they were daily in skirmish, about cer- taine wells, where the Christians kept a gard without the fort, but in the end they tooke them from the besieged. The Turkes prest them with their trenches, and prepared a great batterrie against the fort; but their greatest miserie was, that by the losse of their wells, and the great heat in those Southern countries, many bega to die of thirst, hauing but little wa- ter which they had reserved in vessels; for the water which they drew out of the wels was so salt, as it did cause thirst, and not quench it. Sandy seeing how much it did import to be thus kept within the fort, and to be deprived of water, he resolved to make a great sal- lie, and to chase the enemy from their trenches; the which had bene successful, if the

Turkes campe
about the fort at Gerbe.

wells left by the Christians at Gerbe.

souldi-

A souldiers had kept the order prescribed them. There were forth six hundred Italians, and as many Spaniards, all harquebussiers, with an hundred Germans, pikes, who falling forth by two ports, should come and ioyne together, cloy the ordnance, and kill all that should resist, expressly forbidding them to fall to the spoyle. These were others also stood readie to succour where they should require. At the break of day they went forth, killing many of the enemies, with which charge Dracut himselfe was hurt: they cloyed three peeces of ordnance, took some Ensignes, and were masters of the tren- ches: but forgetting the order, was given them, some being too bold, aduanced so farre, as they could not be rescued by their companions, and some too greedie, fell to spoyle; B whereby they were in such disorder, as the Turkes embracing the occasion, turned head, and charged them, striking such a terror into them, as they basely fled. There were ma- ny men of worth died fighting valiantly, among the which were the earle Gabieno Angui- sola, capitaine Carlo d'Aro, and some others. The Turkes pursued them that fled euen vnto the fort, where the artillerie from the bulwarkes made a great slaughter of them. But the want of water, through the losse of their wells, was of such importance for the be- sieged, as without doubt it was the cause of all their miseries, and in the end of the losse of the fort. They were forced to make their bread with salt water, their victuals were ve- riefalt, being prouision taken out of the ships, the season of the yeare in that climat was exceeding hot, their toyle great, and continuall, so as their thirst increased as their water C decreased. Those poore wretches, to sie the occasions of great thirst, eat litle, so as they grew so weake, as they could not endure the insupportable toyle of warre, but di- ed without remedie. Many seeing that they must die of thirst, fled to the enemy, and although they knew well, that they went to a perpetuall slaueerie, yet they ranne when they had any opportunitie, to giue themselves vnto the enemy for drinke, and to no other end.

They had not much water remaining in their cisternes, and that which they digged within the fort was salt, like vnto the sea water: whereupon a Sicilian, called Sebastian du Polere, offered to draw a good quantitie daily by Alambick, and to make it fresh: Sandy promised him a great recompence for this inuention, and caused the Germanes to make D eighreene Alambicks, hauing no more matter to worke with; but they could not draw aboue five and thirtie barrells a day out of their wells, which was a small prouision for so many thousands of thirstie persons. The salt water being distilled, was so sweet, as tempering it with the well water, it made a pleasant mixture: so mingling the water of the wells, the distilled water, and that of the cisternes, together, the Generall di- uided it among the souldiers, giuing a double portion to them that carried armes. The diuision of this drinke was verie strange, whereof the gouernour of the fort had the chiefe care, being a matter of great importance, and therefore it was distributed in a place where there was a good gard, whereas the souldiers past in order, hauing a sponge hanging at a line, the which being put into a tub of water, he tooke it and sucked E as much as was allowed him.

The Turkes continued their workes, and had aduanced their trenches euen vnto the fort, and the souldiers ran daily vnto them, yea they who had the charge not to suffer o- thers to run away, were the first that went themselves; and some were so villanous, as they had plotted to set fire on the powder, and to blow vp all. Some affirme that there were fif- teene hundred which had fled to the enemy, whereof there were many souldiers of known valour, and some nobly borne, but not nobly minded, selling bodie and soule to sit the want of drinke. The Turkes fought to win the fort by mines, batterrie, and assaults; and the besieged repulst them valiantly. In the end of Iune D. Alvaro de Sandy hauing viewed the prouisions carefully, and finding that they had no wood for six dayes, which was F most necessarie to distill their water, and that they had not sufficient of cistene water left, to serue the souldiers three dayes, they being aboue a thousand, seeing matters redu- ced to that extremitie, he called the capitaines and chiefe officers to counsell, hauing first appointed that the souldiers should haue double allowance both of meat and fresh wa- ter alone, with some litle wine which had bene reserved for them that were wounded.

Iiiii ij

He

Thirst encreased of in the fort of Gerbe.

Salt water made fresh by Alambicke.

Resolution of Aluaro de Sandy for their last refuge.

He spake vnto them at night, letting them see to what estate they were brought, and repeating in what manner they had defended themselves with judgement and valour, against the violence of their enemies; and that seeing themselves now vanquished rather by hunger and thirst than by armes, he knew not a more honourable resolution, than to put that generous course in practise, which in most desperate cases hath giuen a glorious victorie to braue and resolute souldiers. They therefore concluded that night to make a gallant sallie, and to charge the enemies, who least dreamt of it. In the morning, two houres before day, there went forth at the port towards the sea, six captaines with three hundred men, being chosen out of all the nations, and hee himselfe followed with the chiefe of all his men, leauing some behind to gard the fort: of those that he led hee commanded some to remaine in the reeward, with certaine captaines, and to kill all them that should disband. He commanded the foreward to goe directly to the Bassa and Dragut's tents, he himselfe chusing to assaile the great tent, where there was a great corps de gard. With this order they sallied forth with great resolution, some marching towards the Generals tent, and some towards the other: They past three trenches valiantly, to come vnto the tents, and Sandy defeated the corps de gard, where making a great slaughter, he put all into confusion: but hee found himselfe suddenly abandoned by his men, meaning to aduance, not any one remaining with him but Marotto, the Sergeant Major, and captaine Peruccio of Nizza, of the which Marotto was soone after wounded and taken prisoner, and yet he fighting still with the enemies, being followed by Peruccio, who had offered to conduct him to the gallies, in the end hee freed himselfe, and recouered a gallie, whereas hee neither found victuals nor clothes, being all wet: wherefore he sent a messenger vnto the fort, to will Iohn d'Alarcone, the Treasurer, to send him clothes, and some prouision for the souldiers of the gallies, with some oares, to the end they might conduct him, by the chanell, into the fort, exhorting all them that were yet remaining to defend it safely.

The newes of their Generals life was some comfort to the captaines and souldiers, but they began presently to despaire of all helpe, but by some accord with the enemy, hauing water but for two dayes drinke. There were many Christians dyed in this sallie, but most men of command, the rest being either fled vnto the enemy, or gotten vnto the fort. The Treasurer Alarcone went vnto Sandy with prouision, and yet they could not part that day, the gallies being battered continually by the Turkes artillerie. They within the fort were so full of confusion, as they knew not what to resolve, and although there were some captaines which did encourage them to attend the Generalls returne, yet the feare of the greater part was such, as they forced the rest to yeeld, to another resolution; and they had alreadie set vp a flag on Spinolas bulwarke, in token of a parley: whereunto the Turkes made answer with the like signe. Whereupon three captaines with an Ensigne went vnto the campe: but the Turkes seeing no flag of truce set vp in the gallies, as well as in the fort, Pialy commanded that they should assaile them both by land and sea. Sandy being surprised with this v unexpected furie, he with captaine Clement disposed the souldiers as well as they could for their defence, finding in them a great willingness and resolution: but seeing afterwards that they made no shew of hostilitie in the fort, and that the Moores, Turkes, and Christians seemed to bee vnited, they also sought to escape, so many flying away, as Sandy had not about thirtie men remaining with him; at which time Dromex Ares, a renegado of Genoua, captaine of the Bassas Admirall, came vnto the gallies prow, who spake vnto Aluaro in Italian: My lord, you can no longer defend your selfe, fall not therefore into the hands of these base people, but yeeld your selfe, and chuse a better partie: I will not yeeld my selfe to thee: nor to any other, answered Sandy, but I will goe with thee, if thou wilt promise to bring me vnto the Bassa: The renegado promised him, and receiuing him into a litle boat, being ouer laden, it sunke, and they were wet. Being then conducted to the Bassas tent, hee receiued him with honour, and discoursed much with him touching his defence: but he refusing to accept of any offer vnworthie the name of a Christian knight, was conducted to Constantinople, and presented to the great Turke.

D. Aluaro de Sandy taken prisoner by the Turkes.

Sandy

Sandy seeing the captaines which went forth to capitulate; he blamed them, foretelling them, that they should not haue any thing obserued, as it fell out: for hauing agreed, That all the officers should come forth freely, with five and twentie souldiers in a companie, they were most of them put to the sword, and the rest taken prisoners, onely they had libertie which went forth to capitulate. The fort was spoyle, but the gaine was small. The Generall Pialy hauing stayed there eight dayes with his deer, he went and made a stately entrie at Tripoli; then returning home, he was forced by contrarie winds to stay in a port of Sicile neere to Sarragosse: where some Turkes, going to water, they receiued much losse by the horsemen which garded the coast.

Fort at Gerbe
taken by the Turkes.

The next day Lewis Sahamedra went vnto the Bassa with a safeconduct, touching the ransom of prisoners, lamenting much the miserie of those noblemen he found there, and wondering at the smiling countenance wherewith Sandy entertained him, who shewed himselfe like one that was neuer altered by the crosses or smiles of fortune. The Bassa gaue him good hope of ransom; but the wind growing faire in the morning, he weighed anchor, and went on his voyage: Comming to Constantinople, he entred in great triumph, causing the prisoners to be carried to his house: In which Aluaro de Sandy shewed againe his generous mind; for some shewing him a bathing house, a place appointed for many slaues, he refused to enter into it, letting the Bassa vnderstand, That it was no fit lodging for him: and the Turke (not without wonder at the greatnesse of his mind) commended, that he should haue chambers appointed for him. They were all presented with great solemnitie before the great Turke, who stood behind a window to see them, they all refusing to accept any visiting conditions, that were offered them by the great men of the port. Sandy was carried to the tower of Mamero, whereas those prisoners which once enter, doe neuer, or seldome, come forth. Sancho de Licus Berlingheri, and others, were sent to the tower of Pera.

Pialy Bassa enters Constantinople in triumph.

After this great losse, new miseries pursued some of them that escaped: for D. Lewis Oforio, and the vicont of Cigale, being come into Sicile, hauing bought a Turkish gallie which had bene taken from Pluccialy the pyrat, a renegado of Calabria, it was taken from them by the Viceroy, in the port of Messina: Whereat these two captaines being much moued, they meant to passe into Spaine, to complaine vnto the king, going in two of their vessels; but they were set vpon by a gallie and two Turkish foists, and taken almost without any resistance. Cigale was led to Constantinople, with Scipio his sonne: the father dyed there, and the sonne denied Iesus Christ, from whom came that famous Cigale, who was a Bassa in our time. The Commaunder Guimerano hauing the reputation of a great mariner, was made Generall of the gallies of Sicile; but at his first going forth with seven gallies, hee was incountried by Dragut, neere vnto the island of Lipari, hauing eleuen gallies well armed, who tooke him with his seven gallies, and led him away. Among the prisoners was the bishop of Cattanea, of the house of Caccioli.

1561

In the king of Spaines countries of the Netherlands, they of the reformed religion increasing mightily, notwithstanding the rigorous Edicts which had bene made by the Emperour, the Council of Spaine thought it fit to bring in the Inquisition to suppress them, appointing certaine Inquisitors of the Faith, who should haue a care that no forbidden bookes should bee read, nor kept in their houses, and that no man should dispute against the Romish religion. But the king hauing promised, That hee would not charge his subiects with such an intollerable yoke as the Inquisition was, and the Inquisitors finding that they could not by any meanes put it in practise, they sought to bring it in by a couert meanes, vnder colour of making new bishops in the country; to effect the which cardinal Granuelle sent doctor Sonnus to Rome, as you may read more at large in the Historie of the Netherlands.

New bishops in the Netherlands

This year 1561 the king of Spaine made great instance at Rome, to haue libertie from the Pope, to dispose of some of the renthes of the Clergie of Spaine, which amounting to a great summe yearly, he meant to applie to the good of Christendome, and especially of his realmes of Spaine, arming a great number of gallies more than had bin accustomed to defend those coasts, being continually annoyed with multitudes of pirats, who had their

King of Spaine sought to prepare a great fleet with the revenues of the clergie.

1561

their retreats in the ports of Barbarie: And as many of the noblemen of Spaine shewed themselves readie to contribute out of their owne reuenues, to so good and necessarie a worke, so the Pope did not refuse to gratifie the king, but stayed his resolution, for that he would not displease the Prelates of Spaine, who did not seeme verie willing to beare this burthen; and the Pope desired more at that time than any other (when as they sought to draw the Councell againe together) not to giue them any great distast.

1562

The warre beginning to grow hot in France, for matters of religion, the Protestants being in armes, after the massacre of Vassy, the French king craued aid from the Pope and king of Spaine, who were verie willing to giue him the best succours they could. The Pope, on the sudden, could not send him aboue two thousand foot, and two hundred harquebusiers on horsebacke, vnder Fabritio Serbelloni, his nephew, Generall of his forces at Auignon: who finding himselfe too weake for them of the Religion that were in that countrey, demanded new succours, and had two companies of lances sent him: but the Catholike king offered to send tenne thousand foot, and 3000 horse, of the which the French accepted 3000 Spaniards, and 3000 Italians; but they came late, after the battell of Dreux.

King of Spaine
sends succours into France.

D. Carlo prince of Spaine grieuously sicke.

The prince D. Carlo, sonne to the king of Spaine, appointed the sole heire of so many realmes, playing at Alcala de Henares with some young yowthes, his play-fellowes, hee fell vnfortunatly downe the stayes in the palace, where they stood playing: in which fall hee was so hurt in the head, as the Physicians dispaired of his life. In this mournfull accident the king referred his fatherly affection to the will of God, writing into all his realmes, That they should with their deuout prayers procure the princes long life, if it were for the glorie of his diuine Maiestie, and the good of his subiects. Some write, that hee was strangely cured by the bodie of Saint Diego, who dyed some hundred yeares before, a religious man of the Order of Saint Francis; the which the king caused to bee brought into the princes presence. This bodie was kept in a shrine of yron, which Henrie the fourth of that name, king of Castille, had caused to bee made, and layed in a chappell built in honour of him. This shrine being brought and opened in the kings presence, they found, with great admiration, that the bodie was nothing corrupted, nor a haire diminished, but breathing forth a sweet saour; where causing the princes bodie, halfe dead, to be layed vpon it, he began presently to amend, and within few dayes after recouered his perfect health. But euery man hath free libertie to beleuee it, if he please.

This yeare, besides the kings priuat sorrow for the dangerous sicknesse of his sonne, hee had a publicke discontent for the losse of some gallies, neere vnto the port of Herradura. D. Bernardin of Mendosa, some call him John, was Admirall of the fleet of Spaine, who was readie with two and thirtie gallies, well furnished, to make an attempt against the Moores; but they were surprised with a cruell storme, and in the end three were swallowed vp in the sea, of the which the Admirall was one, where Mendosa was; and the rest were driuen into the neere harbours verie much shaken: of the three there was not any living creature saued, and of the rest there dyed verie many: so as some write, they lost two thousand persons, others five thousand. The which, with their former losse at Gerbe, was verie grievous to the house of Mendosa: for the same yeare Indico, brother to this Mendosa the Admirall, sailing from Genoua towards Spaine in a gallie, it was so tost with contrarie winds, as the mariners not able to help themselves, they were swallowed vp; so as Mendosa's bodie could neuer be found, yet the bodie of the gallie, and of the rest that were dead, were recouered.

Bernardin, or John de Men-dosa drowned with some gallies.

1563 Council of Trent.

The Prelats being assembled againe together this yeare 1563, they began to persecute their sessions, and it ended in December, hauing continued almost eightene yeares, but with many interruptions, nor without the protestations of many princes and Christian States, of some pretended nullities, as well in the manner of their proceeding, as in the substance of their decrees. But among all the questions, that of Precedence betwixt the kings of France and Spaine, was vrged by their embassadours with great vehemencie; and in the end it was sent by the Fathers to Rome, to be decided by the Pope, and the Consistorie.

These

1563

A These two great Princes hauing both at the Countsell and in Rome, where they attended a definitiue sentence, their partisans that were affected, and others which discoursed without passion, many pertinent reasons were produced on both sides, both by word of mouth, and by writing: whereof for that it concerns this subiect, I will make a brieue repetition.

The Spaniards said, that take it how they would, were it for temporall or spiritual matters, Spaine was of greater dignitie than Fraunce, and that it was in a manner iudged by law, custome, and the opinions and authoritie of the most learned, that the kings of Spaine should haue the prerogatiue for their excellencie and nobilitie, and for their merits to mankind, and especially to the Church of Rome. Antiquitie (said they) in these matters imports much, whereof Spaine retaines the vndoubted markes: for since the first peopling of the earth, the name of Spaine hath beene famous to the world, and preferred in that nation since the time of great Hercules Oron, or his next descendants which haue raigned there, and hath neuer beene extinguished, whereas the name of the French is new.

26
Controversie
betwixt the French and Spaniards for precedencie.

Markes of the antiquitie of Spaine.

The Spaniards by the consent of all men, are descended from Tubal one of Iaphets children, which his posteritie hath called Tuball, of whome the mountaine Iubalda, called by Geographers Idubeda, retaines the name: But the Celtes and Gaules to whome the French haue succeeded, or (to doe them more honour) with whom they are in a manner incorporated, haue their beginning from one Samoteus, who according to Berosus was the younger Sonne of Tubal. The situation of Spaine adts to her dignity, it holding the first place in the Geographicall maps: but if the greatnesse of the countrey giues power to kings, and that they are valued thereby, who knowes not but that Spaine is much greater than France, whereof the kings of Spaine doe yet hold a good part in Soueraigntie? It is, vnquestionable, that euer since there were kings of Spaine, their dominions haue beene larger then those of France: it is apparent in the raigne of the Spanish Gothes, who did not onely hold at one time Spaine bounded by the Spanish seas, and the Pyrene mountains, but also the countrey of Languedoc, vnto the river of Rhosne, and that which is now of the realme of France beyond Garonne, and moreouer in Afrik a great part of the countrie: The greatnesse of the empire of the king of Spaine at this day is different, who holding the best part of Europe, with many places in Afrik vpon the Mediterranean sea haue discovered a fourth part of the world, vnknowne to the ancients, and thereby enriched the rest with temporall commodities, as it hath done that new world with spiritual blessings, causing those barbarous nations to bee instructed in the knowledge of God. To which new regions the monarchies of the ancients cannot bee compared in greatnesse; much lesse the empire of Fraunce at any season. And to increase their greatnesse, wee may adde vnto these reuenues the rights which they haue gotten to the empire of Constantinople, not onely as successors to the earls of Flanders, but by contracts made with the Paleologues, expelled by the Turks, & in like maner to Ierusalem, which euery one holds to be, the chiefe in dignitie among al the Christian realmes. The gifts of nature are also verie considerable, where there is any question of the preheminance of realms and countries; wherein Spain excels France without contradiction: for there is no Region in the world more temperate than Spaine, nor better indowed by nature, be it in fertillitie of the land, in bountie of the fruits, or in any commoditie it doth produce, and as for the men, they are a fine both of body and mind, industrious, warlike, and fit to commaund, as the world hath found by experience. Spaine hath bene alwaies knowne to be a nurserie of good souldiers, and the mother of great Captaines, and wee need not doubt, but that Hannibal (who made the Romans to sweat and tremble) if hee had any magnanimitie and courage, hee retained it from the instruction and breeding hee had in Spaine in his youth. Spaine hath in former

Tubal father to
the Spaniards.

Situation of Spaine.

Greatnesse of
the king of Spaines domi-
ons.

Right of the kings of Spaine.

Fertillitie of the land of Spaine.

Emperors and Popes, Spaniards.

Nobilitie of the kings of Spaine.

F times giuen vnto Rome a Traian, an Adrian, two Theodosius, all emperours, valiant and tryumphant, with many holy and learned Popes, guiders of the church, among the which Damasus was great and admirable. As for the Nobilitie of the kings of Spaine which raigne at this day, it is incomparable, for they be successours to the kings of the Gothes, and allyed to them in blood, and as it were graft iuto the stockes of the famous families of the Balses and Hamales. But to draw their Genealogie neerer and more personally,

Authors

1563

Authors agree that they descend from the Merouingians and Carouingians, the founders of the estate of the French, whereby it followes that they haue right vnto the realme of France, so as they cannot be taxed of fraud when as they shall seeke to settle themselves there to aduance their monarchie. If you consider their prowesse and victories, wee haue no need to go beyond our owne age: for the emperor Charles the first king of Spaine, hath alone wonne more famous victories, than all the other princes of Europe. The French are witnesses to their costs, and that mightie and fearefull Germane Nation, which hee subdued in lesse than tenne moneths, and brought all the Princes, Towns and states of the Germane empire vnder his obedience: he repulsed the Ottomans forces both by Sea and land, and conquered the realme of Tunes in Afrik. But it is verie remarkable, that notwithstanding any warre which Spaine hath endured since it was freed from the Romane yoke, being invaded by the Gothes, Moores, Arabians, and other nations, yet the Spaniards haue alwaies preserved their libertie, and retained their manners, their language, and their religion, and haue drawne others vnto it, with whome humane changes haue made them to liue and conuerse. Seeing then by antiquitie, nobilitie, largenesse of dominions, power, victories, generous actions, and finally by all that may purchase greatnesse and temporall dignitie to nations and their kings, Spaine is to bee preferred before all; it followes, that the first place is due to the kings of Spaine before all other Christian kings, and by consequence before him of France. But for that the question of this precedence hath bene mooued in a generall Councell and disputed before the Pope and the sacred Senate, it is no lesse requisite to set down the testimonies which Spaine and her kings haue of the spirituall fauour of God in his Catholike Church, wherein they shall bee found to exceed in graces, and spirituall gifts, the kings of France, and all other kings, and their realmes, as also in deuotion and merits to the Popes, and to the Sea of Rome, the onely iudge of this controuerse. It is certaine that Iesus Christ hauing finished the worke of mans redemption, and ascended into heauen, Spaine among all other Pagan nations was first aduertised of this great benefit; as also by signes and wonderfull prodigies, shee had the first feeling of this comming and birth: for the Spaniards had first of all this credit to see the Apostles personally among them, and to heare the Gospell preached by them, and to beleue, the which is confirmed by many graue and faithfull authours, and by the ancient and vndoubted traditions of the churches of Spain, saying that S. James had been sent by the Apostles to the Spaniards, had preached among them, and made many disciples, who returning to Ierusalem, had led some with them, who assisted at the third General Councell, (whereof mention is made in the fifteenth of the Acts of the Apostles) and had their voices there, this holy Apostle being president: who hauing bene put to death by Herod Agrippa, and his bodie cast vnto the dogs, it was gathered vp by the said disciples, and transported miraculously into Spaine: and by their peaching infinit families had bene conuerted, where afterwards many receiued the Crowne of martyrdom, whose memorie is famous in the church: the authoritie whereof commends euery man to beleue that the virgin Mary being liuing, appeared to Saint James in the Citie of Saragosse before hee parted from Spaine, exhorting him to cause that church to be built, which is there dedicated to her, which is the most ancient of the Countie, and it was not long before the Princes of the Apostles, S. Peter & S. Paul came into Spaine, where with an incredible zeale in a manner all the people were conuerted, vnto the Asturias; wherof Torquatus the Asturian, was one of the first to giue testimony of their constancie in the faith, for the which he was executed at Rome. The Prelates of Spain, were at the first councels, especially at the first at Nice, wheras Osius that famous bishop of Cordoua signed the decrees thercof, before Nicasius bishop of Gaule: The church of Rome is beholding to this Osius a Spaniard, for the donation made vnto it by the emperor Constantin, who had bene instructed by him in the catholike faith. After this sacred general councell, there were many others held in Spain, of the which that of Illiberi in Granado is famous, wheras Helene the emperors mother was with her grand child Constantin. But since there haue bin frequent Councells in that nation, namely in Toledo, during the Goths raigne, where the kings did assist, & shewed themselves ready to execute their decrees. There is no contradiction, but the Spaine first instructed in the Gospell.

Virgin Mary seene in Spaine.

Councells in Spaine.

1563

A but the kings of Spaine were made Christians before them of France: the memorie of king Ricardo is and shall for euer be honourable, who chased Arianisme out of Spaine, & did persecute heretikes, of which Catholike Princes the kings of Spaine which raigne at this day are true successors, for that they suffer any one within their dominions to speake against the holie Catholike Apostolik and Romish church. To maintain the which without blemish vpon earth, there is nothing like in all the Christian government to the inquisition of Spaine, exceeding in holie feruencie and profitable rigour all the inquisitions of other kingdomes and estates. These the lawes and constitutions of Popes are receiued, reuerenced and practised, the which are not in France, whereas the Canon law is abrogated, and whereas they haue often rebuffed Popes and Councells, censuring their decrees, which are irreprehensible, vnder color of certain pretended liberties of the French church wherof their kings make themselves protectors to the prejudice of the sea of Rome. The first princes which opposed themselves against the spoiles of the Moores invading Spain, abandoned by the defeat & death of king Roderike the last of the Gothes, haue been holy & wel beloued of God, wherof there are most autentik signs in many places. To D. Garcia Ximenes first king of Sobrarbre, the deliuerer of Spain, was giuen fro heauen for his arms a red crosse vpo a green tree in a field argēt. D. Inigo Arista one of his successors, by the like fauor received a crosse argēt in a field Azure. Many miracles are reported to haue hapned at the Christenings of kings of Spain: Some of the haue cured the kings euil, & many haue expelled diuels. In the citie of Lebn, is kept a holy standard brought from heauen by S. Siffidorus, one of the Patrons & protectors of Spain, in the which there is painted a bishop on horseback, holding in one hand a crosse, & in the other a sword, vnder which the kings and catholike princes of Spain fighting against the Moores, haue obtained many victories. By the constancy of the kings of Spaine, especially of them of Castille, who haue neuer varied in religion, since king Ricardo aboue mentioned, they haue had the honor to root the Moores out of Spaine, & to cleanse the countie of those blaspheming Iewes. In acknowledgement of which graces, they haue alwaies freely giuen the first fruits of the conquests and glorious victories which they haue obtained against Infidels to Popes and churches, building more goodly abbies, Cathedrall churches, Monasteries and Colledges, than any countie in the world, and giuing them large indowments, wherof that of Toledo is a strange president, for the archbishop hath about 300000 ducats of yearly rent, besides that which concerns the church & chapter, & the rich dignities & Prebends, the reuenues of which archbishoprick exceede the ordinarie of many kings. In Spain, the Ieronimitans haue had their beginning, with the order de la merced, of the redemption of captiues, & many other orders of holy knights, which haue been a terror to the Moores and Infidels. But aboue al, the Iesuits are a worthie brood of Spaine, courageous defenders, & aduācers of the Catholik Apostolik and Romish religion cherished by the kings of Spaine, in fauor of the holy Sea, and continually entertained by them, & sent into all the parts of the world, to make war with their spiritual armes, whilst that they did valiantly, with their

Ricardo a Catholike king

Inquisition of Spaine.

Kings of Spaine Saints. Armes from heauen.

Church of Toledo.

Iesuits first bred in Spaine

Name of Catholike.

Preiudice done to the kings of France by the Councells

Against these reasons the French and their partisans maintained, that the French king should haue the precedence, not only for that they had been long in possession, but also by right, hauing wel deserved it, and for many reasons answering those which the Spaniards had objected. The ambassadors of France complained much that the fathers of the Councell had done wrōg vnto their king, in admitting of this action, although they had surceased, and

1563

Testimonies of the prehe-minences of the kings of France and would not decide in the which they should have rejected, having also allowed them of Spaine to sit along our ranke, by way of provision, untill that the Pope and the Consistorie of Rome had determined, calling thereby in question the precedence of the kings of France, over all other Christian kings, the which had beene for many yeares practised, & confirmed by the Iudgement of Popes, and the testimony of the most famous Lawyers, and ancient writers. For, Saint Gregory, the Pope saith, that the king of France doth as much exceed all other kings as a Royaltie doth a privat man. Pope Stephen the third saith, that the French nation shines above all others. Baldus doth maintaine, that the kings of France carrie the crowne of liberty & glory above all other kings; That they are as the day star in the middest of a cloud coming from the South, which cannot be darkened. That the banners of France march first, over the which no other king can pretend any advantage of honor. Boniface of Vitalianis an Italian, Auditor de Rotæ, Sniderus a Greeke author, & many others have left in writing, that whē they named a king simply, it was meant by him of France. Besides, the ranks of Christian kings is seen in the Registers of the court of Rome; and in those which they call provincials in all the Cathedral churches, in which the king of France precedes, & they of England & Spain are set after. That it was unworthy after these holie & learned iudgements, to bring it again in questiō; & they held it, for an insupportable iniurie to the kings of France, who in effect are not subject to the Popes iudgement, nor to any other iurisdiction in this matter, nor in any thing that concerns the rights, preheminen-ces & prerogatives of their crown, which they were to maintain by the means which God had given them: whereupon they made a sharpe inuectiue in open Councel against the Pope, by reason of some former opinions he had declared at Rome; yea they did taxe him bitterly, for that he did challenge vnto himself all power about the Councel, suffering nothing to be determined but what had bin allowed by him at Rome: That he shewed himselfe too vnthankful & ynjust to France and to her kings, who had alwaies bin benefactors to the holy Sea, seeking to put them from their lawfull rank, and cruel to all Christian people, in that he rejected the iust demands of all Catholike princes which was, a necessarie reformation of the maners of the Clergie, & of that which was corrupted in the discipline of the Church, & especially of the abuses of the court of Rome. That instead of bread of health, he gave Scorpions, sowing discord betwixt the kings of France and Spaine, vnder colour of these importune precedencies, tending to cause a pernicious warre in Christendome: wherefore they said, that reseruing the reuerence that was due to the holy Sea of Rome, wherein France and her king meant to continue, they could not acknowledge Pius 4 for a common Father, nor true Pope, but for an vnlawfull vsurper of that dignitie; they protested nullity of the acts and decrees of the Councell, which were but repetitions of that which Pius had set down; declaring that they had comandement from the king their master to retire, with all the Prelates of France, least by their presence they should seeme to allow of his attempts against the dignities of the kings of France, the priuiledges of their crowne, and the liberties of the French Church.

People an incorruptible
Iudge.

People com-bended under the Gaules.

The Partisans of the French nation both at Rome and at Trent discoursed at large both by word & writing: seeking to satisfie the curious multitud (which it may be is the most in-corrupted iudge in such cōtrouersies.) And for that the Spaniards wold bring their nation from Tubal, one of the neere descendents of Noah, they to pay them with the like money, laied for a foundation of the antiquitie of the French Nation, that the Gaules and the French were one nation, and one people, issued from Gomer, grand-child to Noah, and that this nation of the Gaules did extend from the riuier Tanais, vnto the Western & Atlantik Ocean, in which circuit at this day is contained Spain, France, Germany, Polonia, Russia, with the Gottike & British Ilands; and these people were generally called Gommerians & Gaules, a name taken from their progenitor, Gomer, who was also surnamed Gal, which signifies escaped from the waters, that is to say, the Deluge. But since to distinguish their groups & members, as they dispersed theselues, they took other names, as of Galates, Albins, Theutōs, Germās, Cimmeriās, Cimbres, Cicabrians french &c. drawn frō their aduētures or the situatiō of the regions where they lodged, or frō the princes & captaines which did lead the: yet the name of Gaules hath bin alwaies retained by them which haue held the country on this side, or on the west part of the riuier of Rhin, for a perpetual marke of their antiquity,

1563

A antiquitie, taken as is said, from the deluge, that all the foresaid people were in old time of the same maners, that is to say, free, open, warlike and conquereous; courteous to their friends, fierce to their enemies, vsing for a long time one language, taken at the diuision of Babell, which was the Teutonick, more pure at that time than it hath beene since, by reason of the mixture of nations: And thereupon the Gaules which dwelt on this side, and the Germans or Teutons, which remained on that side the Rhin called Brethren: That the inhabitants of Spaine at this day could not attaine to this antiquitie, although they say they are descended from Tubal the brother of Gomer, for Gomer Gal was the eldest of Japheths children, as they are set downe in the holy Scripture, and Tubal was the fifth, who made another branch, the which came but late into Spaine, hauing taken another way. That one Iberius issuing from him, had giuen the name to Iberia Asiatika, which at this day is the Countrie of the Georgians, from whence out of doubt the Iberians Spaniards are come; but long after the Deluge: And that on the other side some wandring troups came into Spaine vnder the conduct of one Sepherad, whose descent the Rabins bring also from Gomer, of whom there is no other record, but that hauing crost Asike, which was held by the posteritie of Cain, hee had entred by the strait into Spaine; and that he had called that continent by his name Sepheride, turned since into Speride, and in the end into Hesperide.

Iberians Spaniards.

C Morgouer (said they) that the names of these two stemmes or fathers of nations are verie considerable in this question of antiquitie and nobilitie, being most certaine, that in all the names of these first men, there was something mysteriall and propheticall, which gaue a note vnto posteritie. But the word Gomer signifies a man perfect and finished, and Tubal signifies seed, which begins to spring. There is an honourable mention made of Gomer, and his descendents in all authors, as giuen to religion and sciences: And if wee shall beleuee Berosus, as wee haue him at this day, and drawe the Gaules from one Samotheus brother to Gomer, hee commends him to haue beene the wisest man of his time: whereas there is no worthy mention of Tubal, to ground nobilitie on. When as the Scripture speakes of the children of Tubal, it puts them in the ranks of D mercers, pedlers, & horse courfers, frequenting the Tyrians saires & markets. The Spaniards themselues say that Tubal and his people were first seated in Iberia Asiatika, from whence they without doubt came, which haue peopled the greatest part of Spaine, who were therefore called by the Greekes and Latins Iberians, which is the true and most ancient name which we find of that region of Europe, which wee call Spaine, which name was brought from Asia. Before this transmigration of the Spaniards or Iberians out of Asia into Europe, the Gaules, who were also called Celtes, had run beyond the Pyrenees, and being as it were in possession of Spaine, did this honour to the Iberians that were new come, to giue them passage through Gaule, and a dwelling beyond the mountains: and although that afterwards growing insolent against their benefactors, there grew contention and warre betwixt them, yet they were reconciled, and thence comes the name of Celiberians, a people famous in the war, with whom the Romanes had to do in Spaine, the which were long subject to Princes and Captaines, Gaules and Celtes, whereof the name of Brigus one of their ancient kings (which word is of the ancient Gaule) makes mention: and the names of Celtriques and Callaiques or Galliques haue beene for many ages preferred among the people of Spain, whereas now the Countries of Portugal, and Galicia are, for assured testimonies that the Celtes and Gaules had been seated in Spaine before that euer the Iberians Asiatikes had set footing there. As for the name of France or French, which their nation carries now, they were agreed that it was new, but with all they maintained that it was most honourable, for France signifies fierce and valiant, free from all seruitude, active, noble, and an honest man; and for that they had giuen it to the nation of the Gaules, not conquered by them, but rather freed from the tyrannie of the Romanes, and of the barbarous nations which did spoile it, it did nothing derogate from the antiquitie and nobilitie thereof, nor to the fraternitie which they haue alwaies had with the Gaules, seeing that both these names are still in vse, and common to the Nation, that of Gaule and Gaulois being much vsed in solemne acts both spirituall and ciuill.

Ezechiel 27.

Name of Spaine
come out of Asia

Name of France or French.

It

It is certaine that Gaules is as it were the generall name, and French a particular, so as the Spaniards in the search of Antiquities cannot find any other, but that the French being somewhat dispersed from the bodie of the Gaules, by the violence of the Romanes, who prest them; and to whom they would not yield but by extremitie, were in the end whited againe vnder one. Crivine; whereas by their vertuethey erected a realme in Gaule, of the French familie of the Merovingiens: And they may read in Histories that the Romanes possiding Gaule, found alwaies them of that nation, dwelling vpon the banks of Rhin and Meuse; whereas now bee the Provinces of Cleues, Juliers, Gueldres, Holland, Zeland, Frizeland, and the neighbour Countries, knowne to all Authors by the name of Sicambrians, who were hard to maninge, alwaies contending for their libertie, vntill they had freed themselves from the yoke and tyrannie of the Romanes, which Sicambrians of the Rhin did afterwards take the name of Frances or French; and haue imparted it to others: So as wee may by good proofes conclude, that when as in the time of the emperor Valentinian, the Sicambrians French erected a realme in Gaule, that they were no new people, but of the same nation, whereof a number became more eminent than the rest, not for any desire to rule over them, but in hatred of the Romanes tyranny, and to repulse the Bourgongnians, Gothes, and other barbarous Nations, which spoiled the Countrie, and held their brethren in seruitude.

Having freed them, and ioyning all in one bodie, they erected this French monarchy, which hath exceeded all others in dignitie and valour, adding to the name of Gaule that of France, in honour and remembrance of their deliuerers, who held the Scepter and Soueraignie as due vnto them; but the Belges, Celtes, French, Acquitaines, and finally all the Gaules made the bodie of the estate, vnder one common bond of ciuill libertie, one honouring another by mutuall courtiesies, for as the Gaules had reuerenced the French armes which had freed them from seruitude and oppression, so the French for their part, had receiued with honour the ciuilitie, lawes, and religion of the Gaules, & made an equalitie of free right betwixt them.

The Spaniards haue no memorie to brag on, for as Pharamond made warre in the lower part of Gaule Belgique, Spaine was then a prey, and torne in peeces by diuers cruell and barbarous nations, hauing neither feare nor courage to resist them. The Gothes beganne to shew themselves on this side the Alpes, and to frame a royall estate in Gaule, making their seat at Tolousa, but they held it not long, for the French sent them soone beyond the Pyrenées, to contend with the Vandales, Alanes, & Sueues, who had already wholly subdued Spaine, and hauing diuided it among them, fell to iarre about their portions, at the coming of this Gothike nation, who had no cōformitie nor acquaintance with the Spaniards, as the Sicambrians had with the Gaules, but was a meer stranger & anemie, seeking nothing but spoile. The Spaniards hauing beene conquered by the Gothes from the Romanes, and the aboue named nations, they fell out of one seruitude into another, which continued about one hundred and twentie yeares; and their condition was very miserable from Wallia the Arrian king vnto Ricaredo the Christian: for all that time was a meere conquest full of desolations and ruines, without any forme of good gouernment, whilest that the raigne of the French Gaules was settled in pietie and justice, and did prosper in armes, subduing the Bourgongnians, forcing the remainder of the Gothes which were on this side the Pyrenée mountains, to goe to their companions in Spaine, and rooting out the rest of the Romanes in Gaule. Ricaredo and some other kings following him held some better order in their gouernments, and made lawes grounded vpon naturall equitie & justice, the which are at this day in price: There past some raigins in this nation, in the which the princes being made Christians, did willingly take counsell in spirituall things, of the Clergie in national counsels which were often held, and namely at Toledo.

In like maner the Clergie did reuerence the royall authority, and did freely receiue fit orders for their estate, in temporal things: & we must confesse that whilest this harmony lasted, the Spaniards & their affairs did prosper: but when their Counsels were conuerted into assemblies of the states (where also the Clergie would euer haue most authoritie) when as instead of treating of the doctrine of Iesus Christ, and the due dispensation

Sicambrians are French people of Gaule.

Spaine a prey to the Barbarians.

*Abuse of Counsels
in Spaine.*

A of his heavenly blessings among Christians, studying to refute errors with knowledge and charitie, and to reclaim the manners and affections of men, to the rule of true Iustice. By holie Constitutions they did handlow with contention the preheminences of Prelats in their diocesses and iurisdiccions, disposed of the estate of Kings houses, of the honours and offices thereof, and of the gard of their persons, reconciled quarrelles among great men, and dealt in other such worldly affaires, all vnder the authoritie of Counsells, whereby all was corrupted, euery man forgetting his ranke, in the end they found proud and obstinate Kings in that State, who in disdain of the impertinencie and exccesse of such pastors (and for their cause of religion it selfe) abandoned themselves to all vice and impietie, so as God to punish them gaue way to the Moores and Arabians, who entred into Spaine, and made such a spoile, as both Clergie and Laie men, King and Subiects, Noblemen and Clownes, finally all degrees smarted many yeeres. That from these lamentable calamities the defenders of the Spaniards preheminance and of their kings, seeke I know not by what Art to draw glorie, saying with ostentation, that their nation hath alwaies preferred (among the Gothes and Sarazins which haue ruled ouer them) their Language, Religion, and Libertie: wherein they shew themselves verie vaine; for as for their libertie, the Histories shew the contrarie, neither had they kept their religion pure: And as for their language, they of the French partie said, that the Spaniards had vrged it to no purpose, yea if they would consider it well, they should find, that it gaue them no grace, but did rather blemish them. If they will say, that in

C Spaine they neither speake the Gothike, Arabic, nor Africane tongues, they must also adde that they speake not Spanish there. The French doe freely confesse that the true Languages of the Gaules and French are not much vsed now in France. Doe wee not know that either of them spake the Roman tongue in those daies? for hauing beene long subiect to the Empire of Rome, they were forced to learne the tongue, and to vse it by an expresse Lawe, as all other people did, which were subdued by this proud Nation.

This Roman tongue was retained both by the Spaniards and French to this day, yet mingled and corrupted by other tongues: but there is one notable difference, which giues the aduantages to the French, which is, that although they haue some words and tearmes remaining of the Roman tongue, yet haue they very few that are merely strange, but are of the old Sicambrian, German and Teuton tongues, which is the common language of the French, and of all the auncient Gaules, whereas that which the Spaniards vse at this day, consists of the Roman, Gothike, Arabic, Moorish, and African tongues, a perpetuall note (vnlesse they change it) that they haue serued the Gothes, Moores, Arabians, and Africans; the which is yet fresh: And therefore it appeeres that the Gaules being deliuered from the Roman yoke, by the French their Country men, hauing made one body, and one people, haue since preferred their language better and more generously than the Spaniards: and (which doth more import) increasing still in power, dignitie and good gouernement, they haue alwayes maintained their estate and libertie, keeping any other nations from supplanting them either in al or in part, were hee Christian or Infidell, and therein they doe much exceed the Spaniards, who haue suffered themselves to be controlled by the Infidell Moores about 800 yeeres.

And whereas they thinke to extoll Spaine by reason of her situation, about all the regions of Europe, for that say they, it represents the head in the Geographical Maps: they answered, that it was a fruitolous induction, grounded vpon the speculation of children and idle persons. That in truth Spaine makes a chiefe part of Europe, but that proues not that it is the best part. If in the description of Authors it be set before France, that giues it no preheminance: for by this reason Ireland should be preferred before Italy and Spaine it selfe, for that Ptolomie and other Cosmographers after him set it first in their geographical descriptions.

And for that there was no contradiction but to the greatest Princes greatest honours are due, they were agreed vpon this point: But the French said, that the honourable greatnesse which consists in dignitie must not be measured by the greatnesse of his dominions, nor the multitude of his subiects, as the Spaniards would doe. That seeing they did confesse that the Realme of Ierusalem, which did neuer equall the fourth part of

K k k k k

Spaine,

*Moores the scourge of Gods
 iustice.*

Vanities of the Spaniards.

Argument taken from the situation of Spaine vaine.

1563.

Dignitie and greatness of Spain: wherein it consists.

The Spaniards
Empire is a charge to it self.

Spain hurtfull to all Christen-dome.

French always benefactors to
the Spaniards.

Spain, should be preferred before all Christian realmes if it were standing, they shew plainly that this greatnesse which gives preheminance, doth not consist in quantitie of ground, but by pietie and iustice, by the valor & vertue of kings, and of their subiects, & by their bounty, they and their estates increase in reputation: In all which it is very apparent that France hath the better. But discoursing of this greatnes which consists in quantitie, they said that the number of realmes which they reckon within the continent of Spaine, is a vanitie and euident signe of the weakenes of that nation and of their shame; witnessing that Spaine hath bene dismembred into many parts, which hath not hapned in France, since it was a realme, in the which they might haue made a dosen better realmes than those of Arragon, Granado, Gallicia, and the Castilles, being reduced to their ancient limits, the other foreine estates, where they commaund, are no profitable accessaries to Spaine, as Sicilie, Naples, Sardynia, the Netherlands, nor the Indies: These members lie too farre off, and doe more trouble than aduance their kings affaires. Let the Spaniards then heape together all the realmes, duchies and counties which are of the iurisdiction of Spaine in Europe, and let them adde thereunto Peru, and new Spaine, and for an increase let them bring their pretended rights to the Empire of Constantinople, and to the realme of Ierusalem, France will alwayes ballance all this euen as a small bullet of gold; and will equall in weight a greater masse of other mettall. This greatnesse, said they, of that Spanish Empire, is too new to be esteemed, and too yong to presume to goe before Fraunce; the which is venerable for his lustie age, and hath maintained her Crowne about 1200 yeeres, with so great honor, as it were follie to repeat the attempts of her feudataries and vassals, the which shee hath happily calmed and quenched. This Spanish pride, glorious but of late, is too delicate to stand of it selfe, the which time will discover. This arrogant presumption is like vnto the gourd, which being growne in few nights, aduanced it selfe before the Pine tree which had indured many a sharpe winter, but it withered away with the first wind, the Pine standing firme and immouable.

But as for the commodities which the Spaniards say that the greatnesse of their kings Empire brings to the rest of Christendome, they answered, that it was quite contrarie, & that there was no nation in Christendome but complained of the wrongs & injuries they receiued from Spaine, neither was there any one pleased with any good was brought thence, vpon which teames France stood. The commodities, said they, which people receiue one from another, proceed either from meere liberalitie, or by way of commerce and traffike, or else casually, and as it were by reflection of that which a nation doth for it selfe, which notwithstanding redounds to the profit of their neighbors. They know not in France, what the Spanish liberalitie is proceeding from charitie. The commerce and traffike which these two nations haue together, doe without doubt incommode France, and cause a dearth of visualls and other commodities, besides it doth daily withdraw the labouring people & Artisans (which are said to be the riches of a country, being inticed with the Indian gold) which hath course in Spaine. And it were difficult to find a president of any deed or enterprise of the Spaniards, which hath turned to the profit or ease of the French. But what benefits and good offices haue not the Spaniards receiued of the French nation? since the time of the Gothes raigne in Spaine, these people being alwayes in the pawes of some tyrant, the French were forced to goe and deliuer them. Vpon this occasion King Dagobert passed the Pyrenes, chased Suintilla, a disordered and cruell man, from the royall throne, and settled Sizebut a good prince. Lewis 8, and his son S. Lewis, to the end they might not diuert the weak kings of Spaine from their warres against the Moores, they did charitably dissemble the wrongs, and the affront which (said they) was done vnto them by D. Berenguela, wife to D. Alphonso 9 king of Leon, when as she seized vpon the realme of Castille, the inheritance of her eldest siter D. Blaunch mother of S. Lewis, causing her son D. Ferdinand to be inuested, the French being busied in greater affaires. They will say, they haue made warre against the Sarazins, the vsurpers of Spaine, when they threatened to invade Fraunce, and the other regions of Europe; That they haue staied them with their owne forces, and in the end expelled them: It is their custome to bragge, but they cannot giue the lie to so many worthe Authors of all nations, and to their owne Annales which shew the contrarie. The French are not so malicious

1563.

A litious to deny that the Spaniards haue not caried themselves valiantly in many incounters against the Moores, holding their country and houses, but to say that they alone had subdued them, that were not fit. Let them for euer thanke the French, who haue giuen them the means: Let them acknowledge, that to attaine vnto their deliuerie, the French made the way, and brought the ladder, mounting with them, yea before them: where vnto they had neuer attained without the French. Did not Charles Martel prince and gouernor of the French defeat the barbarous Africans, when as being masters of all Spaine, they passed the Pyrenes, presuming to deuoure France? Euery man knowes that in two memorable victories, which he obtained against them, the one in Touraine, the other in Languedoc, he slew about 400000, by which routs they were so weakened, as the petie Kings of Spaine, who had begunne to lay the weake foundations of the realmes of Ouiedo, Leon, Arragon, and Nauarre, in the mountaines, had some leifure to fortifie themselves. The same Martel, did not he keepe the country of Cattelogne with the forces of France, whereof he made a bulwarke against the Sarazins of Saragosse, Valencia, & those that were lodged in the neere countrie of Nauarre? They would gladly deface the memorie of so many painfull voyages and worthy exploits done for them by the French during the raignes of Charlemaine and his sonne Lewis, who did so long keep the Moores on this side the riuer of Ebro, that the Asturians and Castillans might on their side aduance against the Barbarians, for that it may be they would blush at the report of these things whereof we cannot speake but to their great dishonour. They should remember, & can not dissemble it, that D. Alphonso 2 of that name king of Leon and Ouiedo, surnamed the Chast, for that (although he were married) he would not haue any children, seeming to haue a desire to recompence Charles the great for so many good offices which hee had receiued, inuited him to come into Spaine, vpon a voluntary promise, that he would cause him to be acknowledged by his subiects, for the lawfull successor of his estates: then hauing lightly changed his opinion by the perswasion of his courtiers, hee did forget both Gods honor and his owne, making a league without any scruple with the Moores: whom hee did arme against the French, being vpon the way, for that said the Spaniards they would not subiect themselves to a stranger. This was the cause that the French armie receiued a notable rout in their retreat. The French being incensed at this bad vsage, beganne to neglect the affaires of Spaine for a time, which gaue meanes to the Moores to increase their power, and to settle themselves for many yeeres, God letting them know by this seuer and long punishment, how much he was displeased with their treacherie & ingratitude, the which shewed a manifest contempt of religion: Notwithstanding the French did not forbear to succour the Spaniards many times at their great neede. Read the Annales of Spaine, you shal find, that King D. Alphonso the first of that name in Castille, and the 6 of Leon (it is he which took Toledo from the Moores, and vnitd it to Castille) was vertuously assisted by great troups of French, led by the Earles Raymond of Burgundie, Henry of Bezanfon, and Raymond of Toloufa, who purchased him the surname of Braue, by reason of many goodlie victories, obtained against the Moores attributed to this king, although that most were done by the French, and their commanders, to whom he was not vnthankfull. For in requitall of their vertues, he married all three to his owne daughters. Raymond of Bourgundie left vnto his sonne D. Alphonso Raymond the Royall scepter of Castille, by the right of his wife D. Pyrraca: and Henrie of Bezanfon was the stemme of the royall house of Portugall. The same Spanish Histories make mention, that at the siege of Saragosse, in the yeere of our Lord 1118, being held by the Moores, D. Alphonso the seuenth, who called himselfe Emperour of Spaine, for that he held all the Christian Realmes in that country, had in his armie the earles William of Poitiers, Rotron of Perche, with them of Cominges and Bigorre, the vicount of Lauedan, the bishop of Lescar, with many other French noblemen and knights, by whose valour the citie was taken, & made the chiefe of Arragon, and many routs giuen vnto the Infidelles. It was not by the sole forces of the Spaniards, although they were all vnited, that the famous battell of Muradal was won: it were too great ingratitude, or senselesse malice, not to acknowledge it, the which their owne Writers doe witnesse, that in the army of king D. Alphonso the fourth of that name in Castille, there were about 100000 straggers, & most French:

Treacherie and ingratitude of
the Spaniards
to the French.

Generositie of the French to the Spaniards.

Kkkkk ij

and Interprists of the French for the publike good of Christendome

and in like maner at the battell of Salado, at the siege of Algezires, and such like actions, it is most certaine that the Kings of Fraunce, and they of Nauarre, who then came from the French, neither spared men, nor treasure, no not their persons, witnesse Philip of Euxreux king of Nauarre, who died at Seuille or Xeres. They did confesse that the Spaniards predecessours had fought valiantly against the Moores, according to their means, but it was for themselves, and their owne priuate commodities, and to return into their houses, the which did not much concerne the profit of other christian people. Whereas the French without any priuate designe, moued with the only zeale of religion at the simple persuation of Popes, and at such time as they did assist the Spaniards, haue enterprized most holy and difficult warres, against all the forces of the East, drawing vpon them the warrelike nations of the Turks, Arabians, Chaldeans, Egyptians, and others of Mahumets sect, from whom they took the city of Ierusalem, all Palestina, and Syria towards the sea, erecting a realme there, which they held and defended valiantly, to the good of all Christendome, wherein the Spaniards cannot say that they gaue any aide; and yet they intitle themselves Kings of Ierusalem, and aspire to the Empire of Constantinople, which estates haue cost Fraunce so much bloud, so as they haue no reason to quit their rights, beeing grounded vpon a donation and inuestiture of the Empire of Constantinople, made by Pope Leo the tenth to King Francis the first, and to his successors, when these Potentates had enteruieu at Bolonia.

Discomm. tries
by the discorde of the west Indies.

Experience doth teach vs daily, to what vse the forces and treasure of the Kings of Spaine are employed, and of what import they be to the state of Christendome. The nauigation of the west Indies, and the possession of those great and vast desarts seeme verie honourable and fruitfull vnto them, and they make great ostentation of the gold, siluer, and pearle that comes from thence. These things, which are not worthe to be put in the ranke of things to be wished for by vertuous men, seeme to giue content, and to bring some ease to this common life, the which we passed more sincerely, and it may bee more commodiously before the discouerie of these countries. In one respect they are verie auaileable for the Spaniards and their kings; for they are as it were sinkes and common sewers, to draine away and confine all their banished men, bad husbands, bankrupts, infamous persons, and finally all men that are hurtfull to their other subiects, for with such men the west Indies are for the most part peopled. Moreover, it is certaine, and it doth plainly appeere to those that consider things rightly, that all other regions and states of Europe, yea and Spaine it selfe are hurt in many respects: for since the plentie of Indian gold, all things are more deere and impaired. By this metall which passeth currently with the armes of Spaine, Inuention and Industrie are made dull and sleepeie, and thereby Truth and Honestie are corrupted. By this Indian gold, the Kings of Spaine, who were wont to entertaine friendship with other Potentates their neighbours, are now growne full of contentions. They entertaine many souldiers, and make continuall leuies, beeing neuer without quarrells, so as they and their subiects are in continuall troubles; as it happens alwayes to those, who to afflict others, loose their owne quiet and rest. By this gold the Kings of Spaine presumed to haue away made to a monarchie in Europe, and haue engaged themselves in vnecessary warres vpon diuers pretexts, which haue kept backe the Christians forces, whilst that the Turke got Hungarie, and made other lamentable breaches into Christendome; and by this holie or cursed gold, Charles the fift Emperour or King of Spaine, made warre against the Germans, vnder colour of religion, though the true cause was to force them to suffer the Empire to be hereditarie in his house. Hee vanquished them, but not without the aide of other Germans, corrupted with his gold, hee triumphed ouer all the princes, estates, and townes of the Empire, and thought hee had attained to the height of happinesse; but behold Henrie the second the French king, staies him suddenly, with the valour of his Armes, accompanied with iustice, and maketh him desist; hearing that the French army approached neere vnto the Rhine: the Germans receiued this good turne at that time of the French their friends, neighbours, and brethren, to recouer their libertie and the dignitie of the Empire. A worthe and fresh example, to shew that Fraunce precedes Spaine in qualities which giue splendor and dignitie to Kings: that is, in valour accompanied with iustice, and in a charitable

Germany freed frā seruitude by the French.

A protectio of the oppressed: & that true riches consist in sufficiēt, which is always found in France. But who could forbear to smile, to heare the scorching aire, & the drie & barren ground of Spaine preferred before the milde and temperate climate of Fraunce, whereas the Spaniards seek reliefe in all their necessities, as euery man knowes: what good comparison can be made of the men and fruits which Spain produceth with them of France? whereas so many religious, actiue and ready wits are bred, such goodlie and nimble bodies, so curteous and pleasing in behauior, of such inuincible courages in all great and difficult enterprises? whereas so many great captaines were borne, who planted colonies throughout all the world: a nation which hath made the Turke to tremble, hearing only the name of Franc or French, which hath furnished so many Popes & soueraigne pastors to the Church, and so perfect, as the Spaniards cannot compare with them, be it in regard of their vertue or number: which hath produced so many great emperors, fathers of nations, & amplifiers of the Christian religion, sons to so many noble kings, & of so great antiquitie, as no others can attaine vnto it. Let the kings of Spaine glorie of the families of the Balibes and Hamales reigning among the Gothes, itall nations, which haue brought nothing but miseries and ruines into Europe, where in the end they themselves haue bin ruined and exinct, but that the Spaniards would now make them liue againe amongst them: But that they are defended by issue male, frō the Merovingians or Carlouingians as some of their feede chroniclers suggest, & they themselves vant, ther is not any but they that speak it, & their profes are very obscure & vain, and subiect to many inuented fables.

C The princes of the familie of Austria, from whence the kings of Spaine at this day are descended, are issued (as the French said) from the earles of Habsbourg, the which Earle-dome was a verie small thing in that part of Germany, which is now called Ergow, amōg the Suiffes in the yeere 1272. This place of Habsbourg, wherof they intituled themselves earles, is now a ruinous castle, & hath often changed master. As some report, it was one Rapat or Ratboth which layd the first foundations, as also of the Abbey of Murre, where they find some charters, from the which they haue drawne their genealogie since this Rapat vnto Racul or Rodolphus the fift of that name among those Earles, who was chosen emperour of the Romans, at such time as there was a great schisme among the Germans; & they found that this house had bin first brought into credit by a bishop of Strausbourg, brother or neere kinsman to the said Rapat. They also shewed by the testimony of some writers, that this Rodolphus Earle of Habsbourg was so poore, as he was forced for a time to serue as steward to Ottocaire the titularie king of Bohemia, and that afterwards ayming at the commodities of the Church, he did insinuate himselfe into the fauor of an archbishop of Mentz, whom he did accompany in a voyage which he made to Rome, and was so gracious with him, as at their return, finding the princes of Germany strangely diuided into factions, for the imperiall dignitie which had bin void about 25 yeeres, this archbishop caused Rodolphus to be chosen K. of Romans, by his credit which was great, and by means of the princes contentions, who would not yield one vnto another, & by the same fauour he was easily confirmed by pope Gregory 10, who was then at Lion, at a generall Council. Rodolphus hauing attained to this dignitie, employed himselfe happily to pacifie the quarrels of Germany: and as he was politike, he neglected no occasion to aduance his owne affaires, manning his good fortune in such sort, as he caused the duchies of Austria, Sueuia, Stiria, and Carinthia to fall into his house, with the realme of Bohemia for a season, and the Landgrauiat of Alsacia, with other lands and fees of the Empire, the which fell void during the said troubles, most of the which haue remaind to his posteritie. So by these vnexpected euents, and contrary to all mens expectations this house of Habsbourg grew famous, as God doth sometimes raise the poore, and make of a Sheepheard a King, when he pleaseth. There was some light (saied they) vnto that time of the house and familie of Austria, issued without contradiction from the estates of Habsbourg, but whereas Writers seeke to draw their auncestors from the Princes of Austracia, of the French race of Merone; It is a meer vanitie & rashnes for the, to wander through the desarts of these turbulent times, where there is no path, nor way to lead them to the knowledge of such auncient beginnings. For the ground whereof, they suppose one Siegebert, (who it may be neuer was) frō whom they would draw the families of the Erles of Habsbourg,

Beginning of the Kings of Spaine issued from the house of Austria.

bourg and others: and they say that he was sonne to Theodebert king of Austrasia, he that was dispossessed of his estate, and slaine at the instigation of Queene Brunhild, by Theoderic king of Burgondie, (he being grandmother to these 2 princes. That Theodebert and all his sonnes being slaine, except Sigebert, who having escaped the massacre, was sent into high Burgondie, beyond Mount Lura, where he begat sonnes and daughters, and that his issue was dispersed into diuers families of Germanie: but the French maintained that this pretended Sigebert was fained and fabulous, as doth appeare by the best French writers, who say that Brunhild her selfe slue all the sonnes of Theodebert, casting her selfe a little one, being in his swathing cloths, against the stone, whose name was Mcrouce, Theoderic his other grandchild being also poisoned by her, & she punished by Clotaire king of France, hauing also rooted out the vnlawfull race of Theoderic, he vnitied the realmes of Austrasia & Burgondie to his crowne: afterwards hee gaue Austrasia with the title of a realme to his son Dagobert, who comming to that of France, inuested his sonne Sigebert, who dying king of Austrasia, left one onely sonne called Dagobert in the garde of Grimoald Maior of his palace, who sent his Pupil into Scotland, where hee caused him to bee made a monke, and soone after died, and then hee caused his owne sonne Hildebert to be crowned king. But the French to reuenge this disloyaltie, brought an armie against him, slew Hildebert, and carried the father to Paris, where hee died in prison. Since which Austrasia and Burgundy were governed by Maiors of the Palace or Viceroyes, vnto Pepin, who was crowned King of Fraunce, by reason of the idlenesse of Childeric the last king of the race of the Merouingians, not by fraud nor violent vsurpation, and much lesse through the fauour, approbation, or counsell of any Pope, as some say, but by the election & consent of the princes and estates of France, and therefore with a more iust title (if there be any comparison) than that by the which the kings of Spaine doe now hold the realme of Nauarre: for it is a fundamentall right which neuer dies among the French, to haue libertie to choose their kings (provided alwayes that they goe not out of the masculine line of the bloodroyall) in case of some great incapacitie, or for some other important accident, which concerns the publike good, and preferuation of that crowne & state: which nation among other good humours cannot endure a strangers commaund, no not of their owne princes, when they seeke hatefull alliances elsewhere, and that contemning the honors and sweetnes of their owne country, they affect the manners and fashions of strangers: whereof Charles of France duke of Lorraine made trial, after the decease of king Lewis the 5 his nephew, before whom Hugh Capet was preferred, being also a prince of the blood, but not so neere: whom the French reiected, for that he was wholely giuen to the fashions of the Germans, which are much more tollerable to the French than those of the Spaniards, who seek at this day to pretend a right vnder fained genealogies, to quarrell for the crowne of France, it opportunitie serue: whereupon they did conclude, that if their auncesters could not indure a prince of France Germanized, they should hardly euer accommodate themselves with princes of the German race, but Spaniolized, yea transformed into meere Spaniards, both by nature and education, if they should prooue directly that the house of Austria come from the Earles of Habsbourg, were descended from the Merouingians and that pretended Sigebert. They added moreover, that if the historians of the house of Austria could prooue, that their fained Sigebert had bene in the world, and could trace out his posteritie directly to Philip King of Spaine now reigning, yet could they not make it appeare, that either he or Theodebert his father were capable of the crowne of France, by reason of the vncertainty of their blood, for that queen Brunhild reported that Theodebert was a supposed childe, and that hee was not brother to Theoderic, nor son to king Childeric of the blood of France. Moreover, they demanded of these curious searchers of the rights of the house of Austria, where these princes descending from the pretended Sigebert were hidden, whenas the scepter of the French was transferred into the familie of Charles Martell to Pepin, and then to Hugh Capet: why did they not shew themselves then, or at the least make some solemn protestation to preserue their pretensions & rights to the crown of France, if they thought they had any. For they might haue done it safely, especially since that they of Habsbourg came vnto the empire and were growne mighty: but it is strange that neuer any prince of that race opened his

A mouth, nor imploied any Chronicler to colour this imaginarie title, no not the emperor Charles 5, who wanted no ambition, seeking to lay hold of it by force only, and the right of conquests. D. Philip his son is the first of his family that talks of this antient Merouingian nobilitie, & hath begun to cause instructions to be drawne to entertain his greedie desire to deuour France, imploing also with the like designe the alliances made by them of his race with the blood of France, by mariages, thinking thereby to maintain in the house of Spaine some hereditary pretensions to the realm of France, if he had no other support. The which in good termes of Law is called, to slaunder or to cauill, which is when one contends for that which is notorious: for euery man knows that the realm of France is no inheritance, but a succession of the males, by reason of the blood, and that it respects not the women, being contrary to the inueterate custome of the French. Thus the French and their partisans refrained the Antiquity & the Nobilitie of the kings of Spaine, & brought them to the house of Habsbourg in Germanie, saying notwithstanding that they of Habsbourg and Austria haue great reason to commend the alliances contracted by mariages with the house of France: for if they haue drawne any lustre from the Germane empire in Rodolphus the first, and other Emperours of their familie, they haue made it perfect by the mariages which some of them haue contracted with the Princeesses of the blood of France: witnesse the Emperor Maximilian, who hauing married the heire of Burgondie, had so great lands and possessions by her, besides the companie of a noble ladie, as he made a waite thereby for Philip his son, and his descendants to attaine vnto their greatnes.

C But comming now to the chiefe points, which should be decided in this question propounded in a generall Councell, which are, the pietie and religion of people & their princes; and their duties and merits to the church of God, and to his ministers. The Spaniards (said they of the French partie) tell wonders and miracles vpon the relation of their Writers, and their Spanish traditions: That if God hath giuen preheminance in these things to their nation, it ought to be allowed and confirmed among men, yea in ecclesiasticall assemblies. They bragge that they first saw and heard the chiefe Apostles in their country, and that they had beleueed the Gospel before all other Gentiles. Hereof they giue no better prooue than the French might doe, if they should say that these great lights S. James, S. Peter, and S. Paul going into Spaine had passed through Gaule, going by land rather than by sea, desiring to profite more, as it is likely, according to their duties and commissions, and that in passing they had preached and made Churches. That by this probable reason the Gauls had bene instructed before the Spaniards, and had seene the Apostles first. As for the Apostles disciples, it is most certaine that Gaule did see the first, & the most renowned, according to good Authors, the which was Crescentius disciple to S. Paul: and if we shal beleue traditions, Lazarus, who was raised from death by our Sauior, came & preached at Marfeille, Nathaniel in Berry, & Denis Arcopagita at Paris. There haue bin counells in Gaule since the time of pope Victor, about 180 yeres after our sauior I. Iesus Christ, whereas that great doctor Irenaeus, gouernor then of the church of Lion, did preside. And there is an Epistle yet extant written before that time by the Martires of Viennia vpon Rhosne, & from the of Liö, to comfort them of Galacia & Phrigia in Asia, during the persecutions of the Emperor Commodus. As for the Councell Elibertin (that is Eliberris) that neither the time nor the place where it was held are not verie well quoted by them that haue written, and it is probable that it was not in Spaine, but rather at the foote of the Pyrenean mountaines, vpon the strait of Gaule, where there was also an other good towne of the same name, reduced to a village in the time of Constantine the Great: the which was called in regard of the portion which hee had giuen to Constantine his eldest sonne, in the which Gaule and Spaine was comprehended, to which two great provinces this place confining was commodious: but admit (said they) it had bin held in Spaine, it would no more aduance the Spaniards cause, thā the counells of Arles that of the French, assembled in a maner at the same time, to compound the controuersies of the Bishops of Afrike, by the authority imperial of Constantine the great, in whose empire & long before, Gaule was full of goodly churches, at Arles, Viennia, Lion, Autun, Treues, Angers, Poitiers, in Berry, Auvergne & elsewhere, which were furnished with learned & catholike Pastors, famous by the writings of the learned that were neere that age, the which are come

Counells in Gaule.

1563

Kings christened in France before them in Spaine.

Heresies in Spaine.

Marriages pre-sane of the kings of Spaine.

Churches of Spaine governed by French Prelates.

Riches of the clergie of France

vnto vs, and that Synodes were as frequent then and some ages after in Gaule, and more then in Spaine, but they were all nationall, or called vpon some priuate subiects, where if they beleue that the kings, Gothes, comming into Spaine did assist, we may beleue that the kings of France haue done the like in their country. But to maintaine as the Spaniards doe, that the kings of the Gothes reigning in Spaine, were Christians and Catholikes before them of France, there is no ground, vnlesse they will say, that the Arrians were Catholikes and Christians: with which vice all the Gothish kings in Spaine were infected vnto Ricaredo, who was conuerted by the catholike Doctores, among which was Nigith of Narbona, and hee abiured Arrian heresie, at the third Councell of Toledo in the yeere 589, a whole age after the conuersion of Clovis king of France to the true Christian faith; in the which the kings of France, and the French in generall haue always persisted, vnlesse they will impute to the whole nation the priuate blemishes of some, which will be found trifies in regard of those which haue bene raised in Spaine, for the which it hath bin often troubled, as by the heresie of Basilius & Martialis mentioned in S. Cyprians epistles, wherof the one was bishop of Legio Gemina, & the other of Emerita, & that of Priscilian a Spaniard, which was condemned at the councell of Burdeaux, and him selfe with other his confederats executed at Mentz: and in like maner by that of Felix: the which shews that heresies haue been lesse countenanced in Gaule than in Spaine.

But leauing these old things, seeing that prioritie of time doth not carrie it, being said, That in the kingdome of heauen the first are many times found last; it is requisite to know, how both Spaine and France haue governed themselves for matter of beleefe and godlie works during these later raignes. It were not fitting for the French to contend of the holines of the kings of Spaine, who did rise first after the inuasion of the Moores; nor to dispute if their Armes came from heauen, whether S. Isidores standard be true or a fiction, nor in like maner the graces and gifts which they maintaine to haue been in some of their princes, to cure diseases, and to cast out diuelles. For by the same grounds they beleue that Charlemaigne & Lewis 9, kings of France, are Saints, and their feasts are celebrated by the Church, that the flowers de Luce of gold, with the holic oyle are gifts from heauen, and that it is most apparent the Kings of France cure the Kings Euill, which things the French would not haue any man call in question. Wherefore let them be allowed of eyther part without prejudice to their rank: but (said the French) the Spaniards should shew themselves hollow hearted, if they should deny that they had not been often retained in the true doctrine, and instructed in the exercises of Christian religion by the Prelats, and Doctours which France hath sent them from time to time, whilst that the nobilitie of Spaine, and their Kings also, defiled themselves with the too familiar conuersation of the Moores, when they were not in armes, alying themselves vnto them by marriages, as D. Alphonso 5 of Leon did, who without scruple gaue his sister D. Theresa in mariage to Abdala the Moore king of Toledo: and another Alphonso 6, of that name at Leon, and 3 of Castille married Caida a Moore. They will not make any doubt, that by the diligence of D. Bernard Archb. of Toledo a French man borne, and other clergy men of the famenation which did assist him, the exercises of the Romish seruices was brought into that Church, instead of the Musarabic, which they had vsed in Spaine vnto the yeare 1086. Wherefore the exercise was called Gallican. And they must confesse, that for want of worthy men to gouerne the churches of Spaine, the said D. Bernard was constrained to furnish his bishopriks of Braga, Ozma, Siguenza, S. James, Segouia, Palenza, Valencia, Zamorra & others, with Prelats which he had brought from France, in his returne from Rome. And that another Bernard of Agen succeeded him in the archbishopricke of Toledo: all learned and holic pastors, and so reputed in their owne Annales.

The kings of Spaine haue built store of monasteries and churches, & do entertain many orders of religions, wherof the heads be in Spaine, & haue giuen the first fruits of their victories to popes as to Christs vicars. The French contradicted it not, seeing by the effect that the prelats & clergy men of Spain are very rich: but wil they say that they are poore in France, whereas they finde by a true computation, that of twelue parts of the lands they hold seuen, and receiue the reuenews, besides the tithes, the deuotion of good men, and other casualties? And as for the heads of religious orders, it is well knowne that the

chiefe

1564

A chiefe and most auncient are in France much honoured, and that the kings of France, and other princes of that nation, haue not onely giuen the first fruits of their victories to Popes, but they haue giuen them whole realmes.

Whereas the Spaniards brag that by the discouerie of the west Indies, they haue increased the number of Christians, and gotten a new world vnto the church: The French confesse, that doublelesse this designe in the beginning was royall, and that the respect wee owe vnto princes, and Christian charitie doth bind euerie man to beleue, that such was the intention of the catholike kings D. Ferdinand and D. Isabella, whenas they first gaue meanes to Christopher Columbus to vndertake this voyage: but they maintained that there were neuer Commissions worse executed, nor more maliciously diuerted than those by the Spaniards which haue bene sent since to the Indies, and that in all their gouernement there is not any shew of good zeale nor of true religion. If they will say, there are many religious men of all Orders, and especially Iesuites, well entertained, they replied, there were many reapers, seeking haruest to feed them, reaping where they had not sown: That so many religious men went not thither daily to instruct the Indians, but to gather the fat of the earth. That it was well knowne there were few naturall Indians left at the west Indies, and that the Spaniards, as well souldiers, as farmers, and officers of the mines, had slaine and murdered them by millions, and did seeke to root out the race of them, vsing them like brute beasts, and causing them to burst vnder the burden of an insupportable labor, in searching into the bowells of the earth to find gold, & into the depths of the sea to draw forth pearles. It is not the way to increase the number of Christians, and to get a new world vnto the Church, to captiuate so many poore soules so tyrannously, and to take away their liues without reason, against all humanitie, by such cruell, vile and miserable seruices. That these things were not spoken at random, nor inuented; for the cruelties vsed vpon these poore Indians, had bene verified by good informations made by the commaundement of the Emperor Charles the fift, vpon the complaints which had bene made by certaine good religious men, who were eie witnesses of those insolencies, but yet there followed no great reformation: Finally, that great number which liue there in religious habits, vnder a colour of deuotion, be at leisure enough, hauing no cure of soules, wherewith Spaine and other countries of that iurisdiction on this side the seas, are overcharged, and cannot well entertaine them without the west Indies; and that is the chiefe mark of religion which they can shew in regard of those Indies. For it is neither pietie nor charitie which drawes them thither, it is couetousnesse and an insatiable greedines of gold, which entertaines this nauigation; and without doubt this traffike will cease, the memorie of those places, and the name of Iesus Christ will be forgotten, if others than the Spaniards do not raise it, as soone as their mines be dried vp, as they are in some places, and therefore abandoned.

As for the Inquisition which is an other great trophie of the Spaniards reputation with the Church and Christendome, for that (say they) it keeps both great and small in obedience: whereunto the French answered, that it is hatefull to the best Catholikes, & to all men of honour in Spaine, by the report of those which haue frequented that countrey; for that it is iniurious vnto them, and by extreme rigour doth seeme to note them with infamie, making the world beleue, that they are not Christians, but by a seruite constraint. Besides, the abuses which are daily committed, to fill the treasorie, & to enrich the Inquisitors, and their ministers & spies, by fines and confiscations, procured vpon fained & supposed crimes, make it vnprofitable in it chiefe duty, which is to maintaine the puritie of doctrine, & holines of maners; and therefore this Inquisition practised after the maner of Spaine, is abominable to euerie honest man. That many haue held this bridle necessary in former ages in Spaine, where there was a great medley of nations, & of diuers religions, which made many to beleue what they thought good of the diuinitie, yea vnto our fathers times: in the which (as it is related in the historie of the wars which were in Italie during the raigne of D. Ferdinand the fift, and of the emperor Charles his graundchilde) many of the Spaniards which were slaine in any encounters or battelles, being stripped, were found circumcised: but it may bee the nation beeing now somewhat settled and resolu'd in the religion of Iesus Christ, it seemed high time to moderate this

sharpe

Excesss of the Spaniards at the Indies.

Inquisition of Spaine iniurious and abusive.

1563

sharpe rigour of the Inquisition of Spaine, and that it should be practised with more charity and modestie, if it had no other end, but the glorie of God, and the health of mens soules. That in France the vse is more free and sincere, to edifie mens soules, and nor to ruine them, and that the French had no need of such spurres, for there was no nation that did more willingly obey the Sea of Rome. The kings of Fraunce haue alwayes shewed themselves most deuout; they reuerence the Popes and their authoritie: the holie Decrees and Constitutions of lawfull Councells, are in great recommendation with them, reseruing the dignitie of their estate and crowne, which bindes them to be protectors of their clergie, & of the immunities & liberties of the French church. It is an article of their duty, office, & roial charge. These are old rights without dispute, wherat the sea of Rome was neuer offended, but when as it hath bin held by some, who forgetting all fatherly duty towards France, would adhere too much to the passions of their enemies: yet notwithstanding the kings of France haue bin alwayes ready defenders of the church of Rome, & benefactors and deliuerers of Popes, and their sole and safest refuge in all afflictions. And therefore they do rightly carry the surname of Most Christian, since the time of king Clovis, yea of the eldest son of the catholike church, the which can not be disputed but by inconsiderate rashnes, nor suppress but by ignorance or malice. That the Spaniards did not defend his Holines predecessors from the insolencies of the six gouernors, lieutenants to the emperors of Constantinople in Italie: nor from the violences of the Kings of Lombardy. It is not by any benefit of the kings of Spaine, that they are lords of the citie of Rome, & that they enioy so great a country, and so many faire townes. That they are not the forces of Spaine which haue chased the Sarazins out of Sicile and Calabria. That the goodlie realms of Naples & Sicile are not come vnto the church by the bounty of the kings of Spaine: but the French made them these rich presents, and haue maintained the in it. That it was a princessse of the blood of France, which gaue vnto the popes that which they hold in Prouence: That Spaniards hands are more accustomed to ransom Popes & cardinals, and to spoile, burne & destroy the patrimony of S. Peter. Finally, the church of Rome must acknowledge all her bountie vpon earth to come from the French nation, and from their kings, & ground vpon these new & vndoubted titles, the rights & possessions of her lands and seignories, & not colour them with a donation from Constantine, nor fro the fauour of such a mediator as Osius bishop of Cordoua might be, the which haue no ground but vpon Spanish reports which are not autentike. By these benefits, by the continuall obedience, & by the ready succors so often tried, the dignity and preheminance of the crowne of France should be maintained at Rome, in the Councell, & in all places, so much the more iustly & necessarily, for that by long acquaintance, it hath bin made as it were essentiall & substantiall with the Popes dignitie, so as for the support thereof, they haue no need but of the crown of France, to resist the attempts of her bad children, which are frequent & dangerous. Moreouer, if they should presume to put the kings of Fraunce from their ranke, it could not be done but very difficultly, & by a forgetfull & very hatefull ingratitude, which doth not besit the holie Sea, & could not in their opinions fall into the Popes thought, who did then preside. Concluding, that for the best and most wholesome expedient for Christendome, he should containe himselfe in his pastoral office, which is, to iudge of causes concerning the faith, religion & the discipline of the church, & to abstain (specially during the general assembly) to enter into knowledge of a controuersie, which is meely temporal, in the which soueraigne princes doe not willingly acknowledge any other Iudge but their owne swords, & so leaving euery one in his possession, to admonish the king of Spaine, to giue peace vnto the Church, and not to trouble the Councell, nor the publike peace.

Rule of Most Christian.

Office of Popes wherein it consisteth.

Question of precedence vnae. gided at Rome.

Thus did the French maintaine the precedence of their king, with their naturall freedom and vehemencie against the pretensions of the Spaniards & their partisans: but the Pope to whom this controuersie was sent, would not take vpon him to iudge it, but left it vndecided, as it is at this day, which made the impatient spirits of the Spaniards to pursue this question, & to maintaine their pretended rights of priority, by writing, wherof there are great volumes printed, with priuiledge from their kings, which the French doe not trouble themselves to answer.

The

A The yeare following 1564 the Acts of the Councell were confirmed by the Pope at Rome, in the open Consistorie of Cardinales, yea against the aduice of some fathers, who held this confirmation to be needlesse, and all Christian princes were commaunded to cause the Decrees thereof to be published and obserued. At these last Sessions of the Councell, D. Claudio Ferdinand of Quignones Earle of Luna, was embassador for the king of Spaine, to whom by reason of this difference there was a place appointed apart, out of ranke, by prouision and without prejudice.

This yeare D. Iohn de Benauides marshall of Nauarre died, and at the same time there died also D. Francis of Nauarre, Bishop of Valentia, who was brother to D. Pedro of Nauarre, the last marshall of the bloud royall descended from D. Lyonell. The interest to this Realme remained in Queene Ioane of Albret, widow to Anthony of Bourbon, by whom she had two children, Henry and Katherine: In the meane time there were Viceroyes or Lieutenants for the King of Spaine to gouerne it, and about that time D. Gabriell de la Cueva left the gouernement of Nauarre, to the Licentiat D. Michel Ruis of Otalora, Regent or President of the Iustice in that Countrie, and passed into Italy to gouerne the state of Milan, but D. Alphonso of Cordoua and Velasco Earle of Alcaudete, who had bene gouernor of Oran, and had defended against the Turkes which held Alger and the Moores, was sent thither for viceroy, where at the end of 3 months he died, yet hee caused an assemblie of the estates to be held at Tuddele, where it was concluded to make an Vniuersitie in that towne, that the Nauarrois might haue meanes to studie, and not goe out of the Country. After the Earles death D. Joseph of Gueuara came to gouerne the Realme of Nauarre. And in the yeare 1565 D. Lewis last earle of Lerin of the house of Beaumont, and Constable of Nauarre died, leauing one onely daughter and heire called D. Brianda de Beaumont, who was married to D. Diego de Toledo, sonne to D. Ferdinand Aluarez de Toledo duke of Alba; who in her right was Earle of Lerin, and Constable of Nauarre. D. Ieronima of Nauarre, widow to the marshall of Benauides, being married againe to D. Martin of Cordoua and Velasco, brother to the Earle of Alcaudete, she brought him the title of Marquesse of Cortes, and the estate of Marshall of Nauarre.

Nauarre.

Vniuersitie at Tuddele in Nauarre.

The Pope hauing delayed, during the Councell, to satisfie the king of Spaines demand, touching a subvention from his Clergie toward the maintenance of his war, the king sent Lewis d Auila great Commander of Alcantara to Rome, to sollicite the dispatch of this supplie from the Clergie, towards his preparation, which was graunted to be 400 thousand ducats yearly for five yeares onely, giuing him hope, that if they might see a good effects, they would continue to assist him. And the king hearing in what estate they stood for matters of religion in Fraunce and Flanders, fearing some alteration also in the state of Milan, he caused this embassadour to demand leaue of his Holines, that he might with more seueritie restraine the curiosity of his subiects, & their liberty in matters of faith, the which he might do, bringing the Inquisition into those prouinces, according to the custome of Spaine. And for that he had seen what an alteration it had caused some yeeres before in the realme of Naples, and that being a remedy of great violence it could be easily applied, he sought to attemp it first in the state of Milan, for that he doubted that as the Netherlands being so much altered, would make some great resistance, so in like he did hope, that when they should see it plared in the duchie with good effect, they would be moued by their example. The Pope not onely seemed difficult to yeelde vnto this demand, but the whole colledge of Cardinales protested that it was a verie dangerous thing, not only for fear of some insurrection in the beginning, but also that in processe of time the ministers of the office might conuert their extraordinarie authoritie to their owne profit, so as not onely a bad conscience, but great wealth might bring anie man in danger both of life and honour. Notwithstanding at the kings great instance the Pope did gratifie his Maiestie, and presently the duke of Sesse gaue them of Milan to vnderstand how desirous the King and the Pope their countrymen were, to see that important busines of the faith firmly settled in that duchie. But the gouernor was not willingly heard by them, who seemed resolute not to subiect themselves to such a seruitude, saying that they would send embassadors both to the Pope & King, whereupon the duke of Sessa promised to write and dissuade his Maiestie, as he did.

Clergie of Spaine help the King with money.

Inquisition of Spaine attempted at Milan.

About

1563

Princes of Au-stris goe into
Spaine.

About the end of this yeare there came two sonnes of Maximilian King of Romans into Italie, Rodolphus and Ernestus beeing much desired by their uncle in Spaine, that they might spend some yeares in that realme, and know the great men of his court, but above all to be bred up with prince Charles, who did trouble his father, for that hauing much wit, hee could hardly be gouerned: some saying, that this froward disposition, grew by reason of the hurt hee had in his head. These two Princes beeing called by the Catholike King, and sent willingly by the father for diuers respects, arriued in Decer ber (beeing accompanied by manie German Barons, and by the Cardinall of Augusta) in the state of Milan, being feasted in many places.

The King of Spaine hauing beene disquieted, for some alteration which had beene growing among the Moores, who since the taking of the realme of Granada, had liued dispersed in those countries, and were suspected to haue intelligence with the Moores of Afrike and with the Turkes, and that they practised some notable rebellion: wherefore it was thought fit to disarme them, and to forbid them to haue anie, vpon grievous penalties, yea they that were become Christians of that race, shewing themselves not to be found in the Faith, retaining much of their first breeding. About the same time news came vnto the King, that Dragut had beene seene at Sea with some thirtie gallies and galeots, in the which hee had many souldiers with twentie peeces of batterie, whilst on the other side the King of Alger went by land with tenne thousand foot Moores, and some Turkes, and Renegados to besiege Oran, the which they brought to great extremitie for want of victuals, so as they could not haue held out many dayes when as the kings fleet arriued to succour them. The King hearing in what extremitie the besieged were, wrote first into Italie, and into all parts of his dominions, where there were anie gallies, that being presently furnished with victuals, men, and munition, they should come to Barcelone, where he meant to make his fleet vnder the command of John Andrew Doria, and then send it to succour Oran. Doria and the kings other ministers went from place to place to gather them together, the viceroy of Naples sent 25 gallies to Barcelone, vnder the conduct of Sancho de Leyua: Doria staying somewhat long, the King feared hee could not come in time to succour the besieged, and therefore hee gaue the charge vnto D. Francisco Inigo de Mendoza, (others write that it was D. John de Cordona.) Doria arriuing, was much discontented, who hauing satisfied the King with good reasons, went as a priuate man in this action, giuing the command of his gallies to his brother Paganio. There met in the port of Barcelone 34 gallies, and some of Spaine, that were repaired since the last shipwracke, so as in all they were about 40 which bent their course towards Afrike, whereat the Turkes and Moores were so amazed, as they presently vpon sight of them, set saile, and the armie at land fled to their houses, abandoning their artillerie and baggage very basely, so as in an instant they were freed from that great danger. Some write, that before the army arriued, they fed only vpon horses and asses, so as they must either haue starued, or yeeld vp a very important place. The Admirall pursued them in their flight, and took 25 galeots and 3 great Morisco ships, forcing the rest to cast their ordnance over-board, that they might be the lighter to sie; yet they threatened to return the next yeare with forces from the great Turke.

The catholike King had made great preparation of shipping to defend the coasts of his owne kingdoms from the inuasions and spoiles of Pirates, who hauing a retreat at Pegnon de Velez, might easily set vpon the shippes which passed from the strait of Gibraltar into diuers other parts. This rocke stands almost in the midst of the gulph of Velez de la Gomera, which was sometimes called Bedis or Bilis. And for that in former times Spaine was much annoyed thereby, for that from this rocke which is very high, and diuided by a small distance from the land, they discouered the shippes a farre off at Sea, comming from Spaine, so as the Pirats, who had their galleots and frigots ready below, went forth with advantage to meet them, fought with them, and spoiled them, King Ferdinand resolved to fortifie that place, to restraine those theues which retired into the port of Velez, whither he sent an army, where they built two castles vpon that rocke, putting into them sufficient men and ordnance to gard them: The which the King of Fez seeking afterwards to recouer from the Spaniards, they were repulsed with great losse, and

Oran besieged and well defended.

Pegnon de Velez how situated.

1564

A and it was kept for the Spaniards, vntill that in the yeare one thousand six hundred and twentie, it was betrayed by a Spanish Souldier, who brought in the Moores to bee reuenged of his Captaine that had taken away his wife.

King Philip to recouer this place, being verie prejudicall to their nauigation, caused a fleet to be made readie of about one hundred and 30 saile, among the which there were about forty ships of burthen, Galleots, and lesser vessels, with one great Galeon of Portugal: There were eightie and seven gallies, that is, two and twenty of Spaine, eleuen of Naples, ten of Sicile, eight of Portugal, twelue of Doria, eight of Floréce, three of Sauoy, sixe of Marc Antonio Colonna, three of Malta, and foure of Marco Centurioni. There was in them about ten thousand Italians, Spaniards and Dutch, among the which were many Noblemen and Gentlemen voluntaries; the chiefe, besides the General D. Garcia de Toledo, were Francisco Baredo, who commanded the ships of Portugal, Sancho de Leyua those of Naples, the Lord of Plombin the duke of Florence galleyes, John Andrew Doria his owne, Marc Antonio Colonna, Chiappin Vitelli commander of the foot of Tuscaine, Hanibal Altemps with his Germans, Fernando de Sylua and others.

C They came not to the port of Malaga, which was appointed for the Rendez-vous, vntill the end of August, and then the army parted, meeting with the aides of Portugal: being all vnited together, they arriued neere vnto the port of Velez, where they had some trouble to vnship their ordnance and men: for the rest they had no great difficultie, for the Moores and Turkes fainted, when as they saw the artillerie (planted in two batteries) began to annoy them, the which would soone haue ruined that fort being but small, & therefore they studied rather how to fly than to defend themselves. So, in the night the greatest part of them escaped in barks; there remained about 25 who yeilded. The Moores came down in great troupes of Horse, and did skirmish with the Christians. The general Toledo hauing taken this place, furnished it with all things necessarie, & left a garrison in it of 800 Spaniards. After which they consulted if they should vndertake any thing else, this conquest seeming but smal in respect of the great charge; & they propounded that of Bugia, but considering that the season of the yere was far spent, being in the midst of Septem. & that their men had endured much at sea, especially the galley-slaues of Tuscaine, being vnacquainted with those seas, & the Germans who were much wasted, so as they held it not fit to ingage themselves in an action which would require time, whereupon they returned with their galleyes to winter, and D. Garcia de Toledo went to be Viceroy of Sicile.

King Philip remembring that the emperor Charles his father had sent Ferdinand Magelanes in the yere 1519, to discouer the Moluques and other Ilands thereabouts, some of which were more plainly discouered in the yere 1542, he gaue order this yeare to D. Lewis de Velasco viceroy of Mexico, to make ready a great fleet, with the which entring into the South sea, and sayling towards the west, he should discouer those places better, whereof they had yet but a generall knowledge, which they held were inhabited by good sensible men. But for that the preparation was long, and the charge great, they parted not till towards Christmasse. The fleet being commanded by Velasco sailed towards the Moluques, he had with him Michel of Legaspo, who by order from the king should be gouernour of the first place he should discouer & hold worthie to leaue a garrison and to plant a Colony there. They therefore found out Tendaia or Tendain, Punel, Bohol and Pauligen, all which foure in honor of the king were called Philippine: they also set footing in the Iland of Luzon, which is bigger than all the rest, being more towards the North, where the city of Maniglia is built, by the which the whole Iland is also called. It was not difficult for the Spaniards to become master of those places, for that they of China hauing abandoned the gouernement which they had enioyed, there was not any Lord, but they that had most power, did tyrannize ouer the weaker. They found the Countrie fertill, and abounding in many things necessarie for the vse of man; but it was a verie commodious dwelling for the great traffike of gold, silke, and other rich Merchandize, which they had with them of China, wherefore they planted diuers Colonies in a short space, finding the inhabitants inclined to ciuilitie, especially in the Iland of Luzon, and the citie of Maniglia, Michel Lopes of Legaspo, remained Gouernour of those places, where hee dyed twelue yeares after, with the title of Adelantado.

L1111

The

Armie sent against Pegnon de Velez.

Ilands of Philip
pina discouered

1565

Malta besieged by the Turkes.

Description of Malta.

John de la Valette great master of Malta

Turkes army at Malta.

The king of Spain being aduertised of the great preparations the Turke made at Constantinople, to send a great fleet to Sea, gaue order for the fortifying of those places which were most in danger. But Solyman's intent was to attempt Malta, & it did behoue king Philip to defend & preserue it, for the interest of his neer estates of Naples & Sicile, this Iland lying verie comodiously to annoy them, if the Turkes should take it and keep it as he might easily do, by the care and diligence of the kings of Algier & of Tripoli, mightie Pirates, & his tributaries, who are alwaies in armes, & ready to furnish it vpon any sudden occasion; besides his own means which are great: whereof hee might make there a good staple, or store-houise for his warres against Europe.

The Iland of Malta is a great and spacious rock, about 60 miles in compasse, lying betwixt Sicile & Afrik, from the which it is about 50 leagues or 200 miles distant, & from Sicile 60 miles, or 15 leagues, accompting 4 miles for a good league: towards the North, it looks to Cap Passaro in Sicile, and on the South to the towne of Tripoli in Barbarie. This rock is couered some six foot thick with earth and no more: it doth yeeld excellent fruits, feed some cattel, brings hony & cotton which is the inhabitants wealth; it hath many ports & landings, which are reasonably safe for their ordinary trade, but not to receiue any great fleets. The names of the chiefe are Marfamuffet, Marfa Scala, Marfa Sirocco, Cala S. Georg, & Cala of S. Paul: Marfa in the Moors tog signifies a port, Cala is a shore or strand. The citie is almost in the midst of the Iland, carrying the name thereof, being inhabited by them of the countrie, but the aboad of the knights who are Lords thereof, is about the port of Marcamuffet towards Sicile, whereas the sea makes many small gulphs leauing tongues of earth or rock betwixt both, where they are lodged and well fortified. Vpon one of these points which made a passage to one of the gulphes, was built a fort called S. Herme, which kept that entrie, & defended the Maltois gallies which lodge within the gulph: right against it on the other side towards Sicile is the castel S. Ange, the which was strong & wel furnished, commanding towards the Sea: vnder it was the Borogh (where the knights were lodged, and there make their assemblies) wel walled and flanked, to the which is ioyned an other Castell called S. Michael. John de la Valette was at that time great master of the order, French by nation, a man of great courage & wisdom, who being well aduertised of the furious tempest that threatned him, made all prouisions necessarie in such a danger: he sent for all the knights of his order to come to Malta, he had recourse to all Christian Princes for aid; he caused the Borogh and other places of the Iland to be viewed and fortified; he bought armes, munition, victuals & al other things which hee held necessarie to defend a great seage. Wherein the Princes of Italy did assist him liberally, and the Viceroyes of Naples and Sicile, had commandement from the king of Spaine to aide him: especially D. Garcia de Toledo of Sicile had charge to keepe the gallies of Sicile and Naples in a readines, with whome should ioyn the gallies of Spaine, the Popes, the duke of Florences, those of Genoua, and the duke of Sauoy, and make a sufficient power to hinder that seage.

The reason which made the Turkes to vndertake this enterprife with so great preparation, was a surprize attempted by the great Master of Malta vpon the town of Malacoe in Morea, which the ancients called Epidaurum Limeria, but it succeeded not.

The 28 of May, in the yere 1565 this great armie of enemies came to the Iland of Malta, about the port of Marfa Sirocco, being in number 145 gallies, 8 Maones, which are vessels which do both saile and row, hauing 5 men to euerie oare, but they are not so big as the galleasses, many foists & galleots, with a number of ships and vessels to carrie artillerie, horses, victuals, powder & al prouision for war; with which Dragut's forces should ioine and the gallies of Algier, of Vluccialy, and of all the Pyrats in the Mediterranean sea, vpon the coasts of Afrik, Asia, the Ilands of the Archipelagus, and other places; all which were sent for to come & serue there vnder the great Turke banner, vpon great penalties for the that should faile. Pialy Bassa had the chief command at sea, it is he who chased the Christians from the Iland of Gerbe; and Mustapha Bassa was generall at land. At the arriual of this armie the great master had with him 500 knights of his order, men of resolution and experience, & 8000 soldiers, as wel of the Iland, as others leui'd in Italie, and some companies of Spaniards & French: whom he distributed into the citie, the castel of S. Ange, the forts

1565

A of S. Herme, & S. Michel, the Borogh & other places. D. Garcia being doubtful whether the Turke would set vpon Goulette by Tunis, sent a supply of 700 old soldiers, Spaniards, thither, besides the ordinarie garrison that was entertained. At the Turkes landing, which was somewhat difficult, for that the ports were small, & the banks of the Ilands steep, they were incoverted by some knights & soldiers, who slue many, but they retired soon, for their number was but small; hauing in this skirmish lost Nicholas Delbene, and two other valiant knights. But the Turkes landed at this first time 30000 fighting men, some Ianisaries, some Spachi, who serue comonly on horseback, but at that time they had bin imbarcked as footmen, hauing with the great store of ordnance for batterie, among which there were Basinies, whose bullets weied about 120 pound. At their landing they disarmed al their gallies, except some 60 which they kept for their gards, and came & lodged before the fort of S. Herme, by the aduice of Pialy, who desired to take the port of Marfamuffet, the which was covered with this fort, that he might lodge his gallies which lay dispersed in diuers parts of the Iland, for want of commodious ports, and therefore exposed to many dangers. The camp being lodged & fortified with a rampar, & a fort of earth which they suddenly cast vp, S. Herme and the other places were diligently viewed, the which cost many Turkes and Christians their liues: In the end there was a batterie plated against S. Herme, the which plaied furiously, & was often changed & renewed and many assaults giuen & valiantly defended. The commander Broille was within the place, but he was changed by reason of his age, & Monferrat an Arragonois substituted in his place: Broille had behaued himself valiantly, yet the Turkes had won a Ravelin which was without the fort, where they fortified, & filling the ditch which was betwixt both, they gaue rash and desperat assaults, not making any spare of their men. They cast the yards of their gallies vpon the breaches to serue the Assailants for bridges, they had deuises to couer their shot when they went to an assault, and they planted many ladders, but all was in vain for a time, for the defendants ouerthrew or burnt their engines, & repulst them with great slaughter, so as seeing how difficult it was to take this fort, they were doubtful whether they should leaue this place, and discharge their rage vpon the rest, into the which all the victuals, cattell and other commodities of the Iland were drawn, especially into the citie, which was not farre from the fort of S. Herme, where the inhabitants had fortified themselves with some troupes of horse & foot, which had bin giuen them for their gard, commanded by the knight Mesquile a Portugal, who made many sallies & attempts to diuert the Turkes, who for their part repulst them roughly into their town: for there was not a hamlet nor house thereabouts, where they had not planted a gard to stop their courses. Hauing spent many daies about the fort of S. Herme, Dragut arriues with a great troupe of Turkes, in 12 gallies & 3 galleasses, the which did much incourage the beseegers, for he was in great credit among them. He did not allow of their beginning to make war by the siege of this strong place, the conquest whereof would be long, & difficult, wishing they had first attempted the citie, where there was more hope & more spoile, but it was now too late said the Bassaes, wherefore the batterie against Saint Herme was renewed, & diuers new assaults giuen, the which were more obstinately obtained than before, with the losse of 4500 turkes, & Dragut himself was mortally wounded in the head with a stone which was driuen by a great shot, whereof he died soon after; which made the Turkes retire. There was also come vnto the camp Aluc Ali, whom we call Vluccialy, a renegado of Calabria, who afterwards was made king of Tripoli in the place of Dragut, a great soldier. During these attempts in the Iland of Malta, the great master foreseeing that in time he might be vauquished by the Turkes force, which increased daily by new supplies, & contrariwise their men decreased by their continuall assaults and skirmishes, so as in the end their number would grow verie small, he sent often to Messina, where they made slow preparatiō to relieue the, to acquaint D. Garcia with their estate, & in what danger they were to lose S. Herme, & afterwards the whole Iland, beseeching him to make haste, but he neither answered his request, nor the necessity which prest the, for D. Garcia besides that he was tedious & graue after the manner of Spaine, he esteemed himself too weak to make any attempt that might auail the besieged, saying that he must gather forces together consisting of many peeces, according to the time & will of the that did contribute, the which was true, wherefore the Turke hath a great aduantage ouer vs, hauing having alwaies a great nūber of vessels armed belonging to himself, having no need to beg or borrow them of any other, as we do, with great charge & losse of time, the which is verie preiudiciall in warre; whereas the Turke hath the assignat. ons of his treasure certaine which may not be diuerted: and in this war of Malta, he had an extraordinarie advantage, Rofa Sultana his best beloved, being dead a little before, he had left a great masse of treasure to be especially imploied in war against the Christians, for to helpe her soule. D. Garcia besides his naturall slownes was growne into a conceit, that it was good to suffer the Turke to waste & consume themselves in the Iland of Malta, about those places which he held to be strong and well furnished, and that hee should come time enough to assaile them, when they were weakened with hunger, which did already presse them, and with other discomforts which follow long sieges. This was to make war by discourse, but in the mean time he held his arms a crosse, which is against the rules. With much pressing & importunitie, he did hazard some gallies to put certain knights and fouldiers, which came late, into the borogh of Malta, the which attempting often, some entred, and others were many times forced to return from whence they came. He also sent to sea to cut off the victuals that went to the Turks army. The two commanders were not very sory for Draguts death, whom they hated deadly: wherefore to haue the honor to haue taken the fort of S. Herme without him, they doubled their batterie with 32 Canons, with the which they so ruined the fort as the defendants lay open, & then presently they gaue a generall assault both by land and Sea, the which was so cruell and bloudie, as they were forced to yeeld. Thus the fort of S. Herme was won by the Turkes, the which had cost the liues of 10000 of their men, & 20000 canon shot, in diuers batteries and assaults. All that were found liuing in it, were put to the sword, & among others, 30 valiant knights, who had bin refused by the Ianifaries to draw a ransom from them, but others comming in murdered them cruelly: they found 24 canons & culuerins within the place, with some remainder of munition, which they imploied against the other forts. This losse was greuous to the great Master, & to all those that were with him, their number being much decreased; for they had lost about 1500 of their best men, & among them many knights. Wherefore the rest being grown mercilesse, hearing what cruelties the Turkes had shewed to them of S. Herme, they resolved not to take any more to mercy, & so it was ordained by the great master, who had resolved to dy with all his company, but to sel their liues dearly vnto the enemy, despairing in a maner of all succours from Italie. But these desperate men were somewhat reuiued by the vnexpected coming of Hen. Parisot the great masters nephew, who brought him about 500 good soldiers, with some knights; they had bin 14 daies at sea, before they could find an oportunitie to recouer the Iland, the which they did in the end on the 29 of Iune, landing at a place called Pietra Negra, from whence they slipt without discouerie into the cite of Malta, and were from thence conducted with a conuoy to the Borough, & receiued there with great contentment & ioy. Some of this new supply were put into S. Michels fort, which they thought would be presently attempted. The losse of S. Herme being vnderstood in Sicile, many made offer to D. Garcia to hazard themselves to lead succours to Malta, through the Turks gards, the which could hardly be effected by sea; for hauing taken S. Herme they were masters of the entrie which went vnto the Bourg, vnder castel S. Ange. Iohn Andrew Doria was confident, that with ten gallies he wold land as many men as he could carry in some part of the Iland, & lead them himselfe into the Bourg: which D. Garcia would not suffer, for that hauing not any newes of the gallies of Spaine, (which was his best excuse in his dilations) he wold not hazard those he had, which were for the safetie of Sicile, & the realm of Naples. The Turks hauing clesed the ruins of the fort which they had won, they lodged 300 Ianifaries in it, & then they planted 60 canons in six seueral batteries at la Grotte, Corazsin, Mandrassé, at Santa Maria du Secours, at Santa Marguerita, & elsewhere, making so wonderful a thunder, as they were heard into Sicile beyond Messina, assailing the Bourg, and fort of S. Michael both together, by sea and land, but it pleased God so to strengthen the beseege, as they had alwaies the better against the Turks since the taking of Saint Herme, who in the end did not fight but with an obstinate despaire, battering the houses of the Bourg, more than to make a breach to enter: their powder began also to wast, for at their comming to this seege, they had lost a great

1565

S. Herme taken
by the Turkes.

Batteries made by the Turkes
at Malta.

1565

A great ship at Sea, in the which were sixe thousand barrells of powder, with six hundred Ianifaries, and they had sent into the Leuant to haue new, with other things which they wanted. In the meane time Hassenking of Alger, son to Banherauffe, came vnto the campe with seuen great gallies, many foists and other vessels, carrying many Turkes and other good Souldiers, for whose welcome Maistapha seeking to doe some extraordinarie exploit against the fort of Saint Michael towards the sea, and against the Bourg by land, was repulst, and lost about fide and twenty hundred Turkes; some were drowned with their barks, and some were slaine with the canon and the sword: at which charge there dyed also about two hundred Christians, and many were hurt: yet the Turks faired not for all this, but increased their batterie against the fort and Bourg, ruining the flanks & courtines, and leauing the beseege almost naked to the shot of the canon, from whence notwithstanding they could not take any thing, although they did assaile them fiercely by all meanes and detiers, casting bridges made of their maine yards, ouer their ditch, & vpon their ruines, as they had done at Saint Herme, with many other inuentions, all which were ouerthrowen by the Christians, who couered themselves as well as they could, but they could not prevent the death of many of them: among others Henric de la Vallette Parisot, the great masters nephew was slaine: but there hapned an accident which did much fauour the beseege, the noise of the canon was so great, as they of the cite being some seuen miles off, heard it as easily as if it had bene nere them, which made them C resolute to sallie forth with all the men they had able to carrie armes, both horse and foot, and came and charged a gard of two thousand Turkes, which was set towards the Sea; the which cast forth so great a crie, as their companions which fought at the breaches being amazed, fearing that some great succours were arriued and came to compass them in, retired in disorder, leauing about fifteen hundred of their men dead vpon the place, and they of the cite had meanes to retire themselves before they were discouered. In the end newes came of the so much desired and so long expected succours, for D. Garcia, being aduertized that thirtie and seuen gallies were parted from Spaine, with fouldiers, to come and ioine with him in Sicile: hee resolved not to stay their comming, making his accompt that if they found him gone, they would stay in his place and assure Sicile and D Naples at all euents. Hee commaunded that all the Ships laden with Souldiers which attended in diuers ports of Italie, should come to Messina, which was the Rendez-vous for the whole army, which being met, the question was how they should lead these succours, wherein there appered many difficulties to men that were not aduenturous like vnto D. Garcia and his Spanish Councell. Hee had gathered together some twelue thousand good fouldiers, and fiftene hundred voluntaries of the nobilitie of Italie, who were desirous to shew themselves and to winne honor, but they wanted gallie slaues and mariners for such a number of vessels, whereof the Turkes had double the number: so as there was no meanes to assaile the enemies fleet at sea; and to land men in any part of the Island, to make the bodie of an armie, and to giue battell vnto the E Turkes, they feared also in this Councell to doe it vnseasonably, not knowing what forces the Bassaes had yet remaining, hauing vnderstood that, as well at their first landing, as afterwards by those that came from Barbarie, and the Pyrats which had ioyned with them, they had had vnder their enignes about fortie thousand men of Mahumets sect. They feared also they shold want victuals in a small, barren & ruinous Iland, and to carrie with them, there was also danger how to ebnuey it safely: and they fell into the difficultie to be forced to fight, hauing a conuoy, with disadvantage, against a greater number of enemies.

Being in these dangerous speculations, in the necessities of warre, which require speed and hazard, there was a Spaniard called Andrew Salezar presented himselfe, hee F was an old polittike capitaine, and could speake the Turkish language, who offered to goe as a spie into the enemies Campe at Malta, and to bring them certaine newes. Whereupon hee was sent with two gallies of Malta, which were then at Messina, who landed him in so commodious a place, as hee got into the Ctie without any encounter, where haning remained some time, he went disguised into the Turkes campe, & there liued among them some daies where he discouered the estate & necessities thereof, & then returned.

L1111ij.

returned in safetie to D. Garcia, to whome hee reported that there was a great amazement among the Turkes by reason of those succours, that the Souldiers were tyred with those troublesome seeges, and that there were many sickemen; that their numbers were not so great but tenne thousand fresh men might winne an honourable victorie, and that they kept guard onely by night; for the Basses fearing these succours, they caused euerie night two great Squadrons of gallies to goe about the Island, the which going from the port of Marcaussiet, one on the right hand, & the other on the left, they met on the backside thereof towards the west, and passing on made the round and came to the same port, where they remained, all the day after and stirred not. Vpon this report the fleet went forth, with an intent to land their men in the Island, and hauing recovered the citie, to march in battell against the Turkes. John Andrew Doria was sent before to giue aduice vnto the great master, but hauing contrarie winde the fleet was forced to put to Sea, and was driuen to the Island of Fauignana, about two hundred miles from Malta, and then it returned, toucht at Sicile, sailed towards Goze, and in the end came to the about mentioned place of Pietra Negra, whereas the men were landed, and in their landing they layed vpon euerie souldiers backe a bag of biscuit, weighing about fifty of our pounds, besides their armes, with sufficient shot and powder, and so they marcht in three battalions, two of Spaniards vnder D. Aluaro de Sandy, and one of Italians, vnder Chiappin Vitelli, and all vnder the Marshall generall of the field, Ascanio de la Corne, towards the Citie of Malta, where after two restings, they arriued, the Maltois going forth to meet them with horses, and cattell to ease them of the burthens which they did beare.

Succours come to the Island of Malta.

This done, D. Garcia returned into Sicile, and passing in view of the enemy, hee caused euerie one of his gallies to discharge three peeces, to busie the Turkes, that they should not goe to encounter the succours, or to diuert them from giuing an assault to Saint Michaels fort, if they continued; wherein doubtlesse hee erred, for if he had gone away and not giuen them this aduertisement, they had not made any hast to imbarke, and had undoubtedly bene surprisid, with great aduantage to the Christians, and the gain of their artillerie and baggage, the which they shipt presently vpon the discharge of D. Garcia canon. They had a will to retire, but it should haue bene after a generall assault, being resolu'd to giue it the same day they had this aduertisement, or the next. The Basses were in a manner resolu'd to fight with the succours, not thinking them to be so strong, but hauing sent five hundred of their men forth to skirmish with them, they were almost all slaine, and the rest of the armie fled to their gallies which they had drawne out of Marcaussiet, and other places, and ioyned together towards Cale of Saint Paule with such disorder, as many were drowned being prest by the Christians.

They retired towards the Leuant: where some said, that D. Garcia lost a goodly opportunity, for hauing furnished his Gallies with new Souldiers, & being come to Siracusa, he saw this Turkish armie retyre close together, & neuer followed them. His excuse was that he had not souldiers enough to fight with them, and therefore hee returned to Malta for his Spaniards, where hauing manned fiftie of his best gallies, hee directed his course after the Turkes armie, hoping it would diuide it selfe, and that hee might get some bootie, but he returned empty handed to Messina; sending shipping to transport the Italians and the rest of the Spaniards, which he had left at Malta, into their Countries, but some of them were cast away in a tempest. Thus Malta was deliuered in time, for they that defended it were reduced to extremitie by a great disorder which seemed to bee in the Councell of Spaine, so as the blame ought not to be attributed solely to D. Garcia de Toledo, if it had bin taken, for if he shewed himselfe slack, and of a small courage to succour the besieged, and if hee were not faithfull in the dispensation of the treasure, as some would accuse him, the irresolution of king Philips Councell, and the malice and crosses of his enemies in Court, did bring Sicile, Naples, and all Italie in danger of ruine if the Turkes had deprived him of this assured rampar. But God fortified the great Master, his knights and souldiers, and all the people of the Island, arming them with patience, courage, and constancie, for by human, reason they had bin all lost. They that did aduenture to come out of Sicile, & to enter into the Bourg, haue their share in the honor, neither are they that brought the succours to be excluded. The constancy of the great master, the resolution of Parifot his nephew, the

Retreat of the
Turkes armie
from Malta.

A the vndaunted courage of Romegas, the brauerie of Bartagan, a Nauarrois, Monferrat, Miranda, and others which defended the breaches, the willingness of John Andrew Doria to succour them, if they would haue suffered him, the resolution and good conduct of Ascanio de la Corne, of D. Aluaro de Sandy, of Chauppin Vitelli, and other capitaines of the succours, and their souldiers, are remarkable in this warre: the which continued foure monethes, from the middest of May to the middest of September, whereas three hundred and thirteene knights lost their liues honourably, 3600 souldiers, and about six thousand of the people, men, women, and children. The Turkes spent about fourescore thousand canon shot, and lost at the least thirtie thousand men. The great Master after the retreat of the remainder of their armie, gaue God thanks for this deliuerie, and in like manner the Princes and Estates which had assisted him; but he was not without great apprehension of the returne of the Barbarians, fearing hee should not be able to resist them, by this former experience: so as it was often propounded to abandon the island, and not seeke obstinately to repaire and keepe those lamentable ruines: for except the castle of Saint Ange, and the old citie, all the rest was reduced to powder. But in these difficulties their generous resolutions were comforted, encouraged, and assisted, as well by the Pope, the duke of Florence, and other Princes and States of Italie, as by the king of Spaine, who among other provisions appointed three thousand Pioners, which hee caused to bee leui'd in Sicile and Naples, to repaire the ruined forts, and also to begin the new citie which was already projected, and had bene traced out vpon that peece of ground, at the point whereof had bene the fort of Saint Hermite, and which diuides the port of Marcaussiet from that of the gallies of the religion. This new towne was called Valette, to be a memorie to posteritie of the vertue and valour of that great knight John de la Valette, who liued not long after his worthie exploits in the defence of this siege: to whom there succeeded Peter de Monte, who was Admirall of the Order, and had behaued himselfe valiantly.

Valette a new towne built in the island of Malta.

The gouernours of Prouinces, with the Nobilitie of the Netherlands, subiects to the king of Spaine, seeing the generall discontent of all men, tending to a lamentable confusion, they besought the duchesse of Parma, their Gouvernesse, to prevent these inconveniences, which grew from the crueltie of the Edicts and rigorous persecutions, from the new bishops, and feare of the Spanish Inquisition: Whereupon they resolu'd to send one into Spain, with ample instructions, to acquaint the king with all those inconveniences, and the apparent danger. The earle of Egmont had that charge, hee went into Spaine, he told the king, That mildnesse was the best meanes to prevent this mischief; and was sent backe with hope and promises conformable to his instructions; which gaue great content to the Netherlanders at his returne, but the effect proued contrarie, and their hope was turned into despair: For this yeare 1565, in December, the king signified his pleasure to the Gouvernesse, by his letters, what hee would haue obserued in the Low Countries, touching matters of religion. He commaunded, That all Edicts made by the Emperour his father, or himselfe, touching matters of religion, should bee duly executed: That the Inquisitors should bee fauoured in their charges, for the good of religion, it being his pleasure that the Inquisition should be put in practise: And lastly, That she should assist the bishops to haue the Councell of Trent settled: all which was contrarie to that which he had promised to the earle of Egmont, and to the expectation of the poore Netherlanders. And for that the Inquisition was the cause of so great troubles, and the shedding of much innocent blood, I haue thought it fitting the subject of our historie, to relate it somewhat particularly, as it is now practised in Spaine, and its beginning.

Earle of Egmont sent into
Spaine.

F D. Ferdinand and D. Isabella, kings of Castille and Arragon, hauing wholly subdued the Moores and Sarafins of Spaine, and being assured of them, they suffered them to liue quietly vnder their obedience, paying a certaine tribute, liuing but a toying life for them that were of a free condition, but yet tollerable, seeing they were not questioned with for their religion. But as all things in this world are inconstant, and subiect to change, king Ferdinand was perswaded to chuse some men that might look into the superstitions and infidelities of these Moores, least in the end the Iewith and Mahometane religion

Beginning and progresse of the Inquisition.

The generall Historie of Spaine.

Lib.28.

ligion should suppress the Catholike: whereupon hee employed himselfe with great zeale to religion. Wherein he was so happie, as, in testimonie of his pietie, he was honoured by the Pope, as well for himselfe, as for his successors, kings of Spaine, with the title of Catholike, which Gregorie the third had in the year 1230 given vnto Alphonso king of Castille. Whereupon many of the Moores, Sarafins, Africanes, and Iewes, were either forced to confesse Christ, or to abandon the countrey: so as many thousands retired themselves into Africke, and other places. But they that desired rather to liue in Spaine with their wiues and children, did either willingly, or by constraint, quit their religion, and were baptised. But the Spaniards finding afterwards of what force the opinion of a diuinitie grauen in the hearts of men is, be it good or bad, true or false, and how hardly it is rooted out, they being bred vp in it from father to sonne, they did forbid the Iewes the exercise of their religion; and as they could not sincerely forget, nor leaue the said exercise, the Spaniard had recourse to persecutions (but with some forme of justice) to root them out: But king Ferdinands meaning was, to draw them to religion by instruction and doctrine, which should conuict them in their errors. And as the Order of Saint Dominike was then newly instituted, and they were called Iacobins, being then in credit for their pietie, sinceritie, learning, and zeale, before all other Monkes, Preachers, and Doctors, the charge of matters concerning conscience and religion, was committed to them. And although there were some forme of Inquisition before, yet was it confirmed by these Iacobins, who seeing that they could not conuert the Iewes neither by prayers, perswasions, nor preaching, they tooke the materiall sword in hand, to force them to the Christian religion; holding, That any thing which is practised (especially religion) although it be by force and constraint, turnes to a custome, which growing auncient by succession of time, is allowed by them that did not feele the first constraint and rigour. This sword which the Iacobins vsed then, and continues to this day in Spaine, was the cause that they said the Inquisition began in the time of D. Ferdinand king of Arragon, for that this manner of reclaiming them was more rigorous than the first, against the heretikes, whom they called Marans. Thus the Iacobins were the authors of the Inquisition, which the king allowed, and Pope Sextus confirmed. The king had reason to doe it, to root out the cursed doctrine of the Mahometans and Iewes, who committed great impieties in Spaine.

These Iacobins for the institution of the said Inquisition, were called defenders of the Christian religion. Their first Commissions extended but to Iewes and Mahometists, but since they extended their authoritie ouer all in generall, calling themselves Inquisitors of hereticks, to persecute all them that did not punctually obserue the orders of the Church of Rome. Whereby in the end they did purchase such hatred, as king Ferdinand was forced to set learned Clergie men in their places, who before had bene fauourers of this Inquisition. But least the Iacobins should take this deprivation ill, the king gave them authoritie to be present at the deliberations and judgements of the Inquisitors of the Faith: so as the examination of such as they call heretikes, is at this day taken by them. And although the said Inquisition were not so rigorously executed in those dayes, as it is now, yet in some parts of Spaine the Spaniards themselves would not receiue it, for the Estates of Arragon opposed themselves against it (yet reuerently) first by words and admonitions; but when he sought to force them, they fell to armes, and would by no meanes receiue it, the Estates considering that it would be prejudiciall to the liberties and priuiledges of the realme: so as they did not receiue it without great force and effusion of blood of either side, as appeared by the death of M. Epile, who being sent with commission from the king to settle it, was murdered in the Cathedrall church of Sarragoffe, the chiefe cite of the realme of Arragon.

Experience hath taught vs what men these Inquisitors bee, who by their wickednesse peruert all; against whom no lawes, priuiledges, statutes, nor customes of the countrey can preuaile; proceeding in all things against the accused according to their passions, be it right or wrong, by all cruell executions vnworthie of Christians, obseruing no ordinarie course of justice, but presuming to deale both with ciuile and criminall causes; citing sometimes before them men of grauitie and authoritie, noblemen and gentlemen, for Iacobins first Inquisitors.

Iacobins loose the title of Inquisitors.

Inquisition resisted by the Arragonians.

Inquisitors what they be.

The generall Historie of Spaine.

1021

Lib.28.

A trifies, vnfit for children. When any one is accused, they send a Sergeant (whom they call a Familiar) to cite him to appeare personally before the holy office of the Inquisition; whereunto he must of necessitie obey. If he denies that wherewith he is charged, they suffer him to goe to his house, but one of their flies followes him, who obserues his countenance: if he finds by word or shew, that he hath any bad impressions, they declare it to the Inquisitors, who make a new Proces. When as the accused appearing at the day appointed confesseth freely, or by intricate examinations (to make him forget his first answers) they draw any thing from him, the accuser, or flye, is hidden behind the hangings, to heare if he confessed the truth. If he be a towne dweller, they send him home to his house, if he be a stranger, they send him to prison. Then they write vnto the curat or bishop of the diocese where the accused is resident, to the end (say they) they should not rashly lay hands vpon the sheep of a strange pastor, sending him word, that they haue one of his flocks in their prisons.

He that hath a dwelling house in the towne, being sent for againe, and committed to prison, they demand of him the keyes of his coffers and closet, to deliuer them to a publicke Notarie, who must take an inuentarie of all his mouables, writings, jewels, or what else is in his house: which inuentarie is deliuered into the hands of some rich neighbour, who keepes it vntill the end of the Proces, all the said goods being forfeited to the king, if the accused be condemned: for their custome is (although the sentence be not capital) to make a prey of his goods, declaring the accused to bee vnworthie to enjoy any of them. The accused being once in prison, the keeper searcheth him if he haue no knife, papers, or any other thing, stripping him to his verie shirt. Eight daies after the Inquisitors will the Gaoler to aduise the prisoner to demand audience: whereupon the poore man intreats him to aske it for him, the which, after much pressing, he promiserh, and in the end, after some delayes, doth it. Being come into the Auditorie, he intreats them to dispatch his Proces: then they admonish him to discharge his conscience, and to acknowledge his faults, promising him all fauour and mercie, so as he will conuert. If hee confesseth, he is not freed therefore, and if he doth not confesse, they send him backe to prison, and tell him that they will dispatch his Proces. It is in vaine for him to demand audience againe, neither will they tell him whereof he is accused, but he must diuine it, seeking to conuict him by his owne confession. Then they bring him againe before the Inquisitors, who tell him sharply, That if you will not otherwise discharge your conscience, you shall be deliuered into the Attorneys hands, who will intreat you after another maner, by torture. But when the craftie admonitions of the Inquisitors cannot shake his constancie, then they haue recourse to another practise. They cause a crosse and a booke which they call the Messall, to be brought, whereon they will haue the accused to sweare: if he refuseth, he is conuicted, if he sweares, they inquire first of his countrey, kinsmen, profession, companions, and other such like things, from the which they draw great arguments: but they that are well aduised will answer nothing, if they haue not first scene the informations whereof they are accused. In the end they giue it him in writing, to defend himselfe by his Aduocate, who undertakes his cause, after that his Proces is in question, according to the custome (the which is only to get money from the poore prisoner) on the third day after the Inquisitors send for the prisoner with his Aduocate; then they commaund him to speake the truth, seeing in that Auditorie they require nothing else: If he doth not confesse, then they send him backe to prison. In the end they acquaint him with the depositions, but doe not name the witnesses. But if any man will charge him with any thing, the prisoner, if he be well aduised, will inquire of the qualitie of the person which hath beneie heard against him: When as the prisoner can diuine of his accuser, and doth remember with whom he hath discoursed of religion, they grant a confrontation with him. They that are best aduised demand a copie of the conclusion, to make answer thereunto by writing: but if there be two witnesses, they judge to death, or otherwise: one witness alone is sufficient to put him to the racke.

The kings Attorneys is his aduerser partie, and the witnesses be his accusers. Two or three dayes after the prisoner hath bene called before the Iudges, his Aduocate comes and declares vnto him the chiefe points whereof he is accused, and doth propound vnto him the Manner of the Inquisition proceeding.

the most pregnant reasons, and the testimonie of his accusers, to vnderstand if they bee true or not. He wils him to consider what the witnesses may be, to the end he may take exceptions against them; giuing him some daies of respite, to call to mind what his enemies may be, that haue witnessed against him; if he cannot coniecture who they be, he is conuicted, if he doth name any, they doe not tell him they be they, but his Aduocate doth secretly aduertise him, and they aske him before the Inquisitors, what he can reproach against them. When as the prisoner will iustifie himselfe, and can proue that he hath alwayes beene a friend to Churchmen, that he hath obserued all Popish ceremonies, that he hath frequented Masse, gone often to confession, honoured the crosse, and images, and that he is contrarie to that which his accusers haue depose (the which he must commonly doe within nine dayes) his cause is much bettered; but no justification will serue if he wants authenticke witnesses. Afterwards some Iacobine Friars, or Doctors of Diuinitie, examine him of his faith, interpreting his answers according to their owne fantasies. If he hath said well, in their opinions, they iudge him free, but not without losse and prejudice.

Proceeding to the torture.

When they haue sufficient matter, as they thinke, to condemne a prisoner to be extraordinarily rackt, they lead him into a caue through many doors, where he finds the iudge with his assistants set, being all masked with blacke cypers, the executioner presents himselfe in a caslocke of blacke linnen cloth (such as the Spaniards weare the Thursday before Easter, when they whip themselves) with a blacke hood ouer his head and face, hauing but two holes before his eyes; being thus attired to terrifie the prisoner, as if the diuell himselfe should torment him. Then doth the Iudge admonish him to tell the truth, protesting, that if otherwise any member of his be broken through torture, the fault shold lye vpon himselfe. Then they strip the poore prisoner naked, hauing nothing covered but his priuie parts. After which they make a signe vnto the executioner, what torture hee shall suffer, the which he is often put to, sometimes in one sort, sometimes in another, vntill that he confesse. If he continue constant, and confesse not any thing, they carrie him into a church, where there are Chirurgians, to put his joynts againe in their places, the which doth double his torments. The patient being in this miserable estate, they wil him to confesse, where if they find of what religion he is, confessing himselfe, there is a Notarie hidden, to write his confession; for they make him speake with a lowd voyce, the priest telling him, that he hath power to deliuer him out of the Inquisitors hands. Sometimes poore men, deceiued with these words, confesse things which make them punishable. Whereupon the Inquisitors giue it out, That this prisoner hath confest much, and accused some of his companions, although there be no such matter: wherewith some being terrified, come and accuse themselves, before they be called in question, to reconcile themselves to these Inquisitors.

Proceeding of the Inquisition
to execution.

Two daies before that sentence is to be giuen, they send for the prisoners which are condemned to die, whom the Inquisitors command to declare vnto them all their goods mouable & immouable, and that they conceale not any thing: to the end that they that are in their houses be not taxed of theft, or that they themselves by the will of God do not fall dead to the ground, like to Ananias & Saphira, who fell down dead at the Apostles feet, for that they had concealed part of their goods. On the day of execution (the night before they that will being confessed) the officers of the Inquisition bring them in the morning, the Sant benita, which is a kind of mandillion, whereon are painted great heads of diuels, and on their heads they weare a miter of paper, whereon is painted a man sitting ouer a fire, which a diuell doth kindle, & torment him. When they lead him to execution the schoole boyes go before singing Lettanies. Those which are condemned to die, follow them with two Sergeants of the Inquisition, & some Monks and Iesuites, which exhort the people. The Chanons and priests of Cathedrall churches, abbots, priors, & other of the clergie, assist at these executions. The Aduocate fscall, & the Attumey generall, are on horseback, with one that carries the banner of the Inquisition displayed, being of crimson damask richly imbrodered, hauing on the one side the name & arms of the Pope which confirmed the Inquisition, & on the other the name and arms of D. Ferdinand king of Arragon, & on the top of the banner a siluer crosse gilt. The Fathers Inquisitors of the Faith, and all the officers

Pompe at an execution of the Inquisition.

A officers are there also on horsebacke. This troupe is followed by a great multitude of people, which come running in great troupes from farre, to see this feast, vnto the field, where there are two scaffolds made, one for the accused, the other for the Inquisitors; whereas one makes an oration in praise of the Inquisition, and condemnation of heresies: which being ended, they pronounce with a lowd voyce the sentences of these poore condemned men in order, beginning with them that haue the mildest sentence, and the easiest punishment. After the publication of these sentences, the Inquisitor Major sings the Collects of Oremus and Quasumus, for them that are conuerted, praying God to shew them mercie, and that they may perseuere in the Catholike Romish Faith vnto death.

B This done, all the Clergie sings Miserere mei Deus, &c. which ended, the Inquisitor Major sings certaine verses, and all the other singing men answer him in Musicke. Then the Inquisitor sings absolution, by the which the penitents are absolved from the sinne of heresie, but not from the pecuniarie fine, the which is executed without mercie, yea against all right and equitie. This absolution being giuen, the Inquisitors cause them to sweare vnto the people, That they will liue and die in the Faith, obedience, and religion of the Romish Church, and that they shall defend it and the Inquisitors against all men, hazzarding their bodies and goods against them that shall offer to resist them: and moreover, that they abjure all things contrarie to the doctrine, institution, and ceremonies of their Church; and will defend with all their power the said holy office, with all the officers or Sergeants, calling them all to witnesse, for assurance of the oath which hee had taken.

C If there be any Churchman among these conuerts, which hath deserued lesse punishment than death, he is degraded onely by words: but if hee be condemned to dye, then they degrade him as followeth. First they put on him his priests habit, as if he were to say Masse, whereof he is presently disrobed, the bishop (being in his Episcopall robes) vling certaine ceremonies vpon euerie peece they take from him, with words directly contrarie to those which they vse in giuing the order of priesthood: then they scrape the ends of his fingers, his lips, and his shauen crowne, with a peece of glasse, or a rasor, to take away the oyle wherewith he was annoynted at his consecration. These ceremonies are publicly done in the view of all the world. When the sentences are pronounced, D and the priest degraded, the temporall officer receiue them that should die, according to the judgement of the Inquisitors, and brings them to the place of execution, hauing Iacobines, Iesuites, or others crying in their eares, to diuert them from the Faith which they haue confessed: but when as the Inquisitors vnderstand, that they are not truly penitent, they deliuer them into the hands of the secular power, beseeching them to intreat them mildly, and not to breake any member, nor to shed one drop of blood: and to the capital sentence they insert: Seeing the paine we haue taken to conuert this man from his errors, is vaine, we deliuer him into the hands of the temporall magistrat, to be punished according vnto law and iustice, yet we intreat, in case that he acknowledge his errors, and turne, that they shew him mercie. But the officer proceeds, and causeth them to be burnt aliue, being tied to a priest by the Inquisition.

Degrading of

E stakes. Such as are not condemned to die, are carried backe to prison, being constrained to looke vpon them that haue dyed constantly: but the next day they whip some through the streets, some are condemned to the gallies, some to perpetuall prison, or for a time, and others to carrie the Sant-benita during their liues, or for a season: but if any of them fall into a relapse, there is no more hope of mercie. And after this cruell maner the Inquisition of Spaine is practised.

30 This yeare there was an enteruiue betwixt Charles the French king, and D. Isabella his sister, queene of Spaine. This princeesse parting from Madrid, came by Arealo, Medina del Campo, and by Vaileadolid, to Burgos; in all which places she had sumptuous and stately entrees made her: then continuing her journey, shee entred into Nauarre by F Tudela, Valterre, Caparosa, Tafalla, and so to Pampelone; and passing from thence to Huerta, Araguil, and Alsalue, the last place of Nauarre, shee came into Guisufcoa, whereas the gentlemen and people did her all the honour they could; for shee found deputies well accompanied in nine seuerall places, to kisse her hand, and to make her those offers which subiects are accustomed to doe vnto their Queene. The Duke of Anjou, her brother, went to Hernant to meet with her, and passing by Saint Hisperise of the Inquisition.

Enteruue betwixt the French king &
the queene of
Spaine.

The generall Historie of Spaine.

Lib. 28.

Saint Sebastians, la Renterie, Ocarson, Yrum, and Vranfu, they came vnto the riuier which diuides France from Spaine, where there were boats prepared, into the which the queen mother came to receiue her, and led her vnto king Charles, who attended her on the other banke, at the end of the bridge. After their imbracings and complements, they went all towards Bayone, with a great traine of lords and ladies of both realmes. The queene mother and her three children marcht in one ranke, she holding the right hand, the queene of Spaine next her, the French king joyning to his sister, and the duke of Anjou on the left hand. She stayed at Bayone seenteene dayes, and at her returne the queene mother did accompanie her vnto the riuier, and the duke of Anjou vnto Segure. The cause of this enteruiue was knowne by many effects which followed: with whom the duke of Alba was sent, with full authoritie from his master. This princeesse of France hath left vnto king Philip her husband two daughters, D. Isabella, and D. Catharina. The Spanish histories say, that she was brought in bed of her eldest daughter on the twelfth of August 1566, in the royall palace of Segouia, who was named D. Isabella Clara Eugenia; and was baptised by the bishop of Rossano, the Popes Nuntio, by reason of a contention growne betwixt the Archbishop of S. James, and the bishop of Segouia; the Archbishop saying, That hee ought to Christen the kings child, being chiefe chaplaine of the kings house, and that all that concerned the Spiritualltie in the kings palace, belonged to his charge, the bishop on the other side maintained, That this act belonged vnto him, for that it was done in his diocesse.

D. Garcia de Toledo in disgrace.

31 There were great complaints made in the Court of Castille, against D. Garcia de Toledo, Viceroy of Sicile, where he had many enemies which taxed him of arrogancie, malicious negligence, and neglect of all good occasions, yea he was accused to haue retained three hundred thousand crownes, which were sent him for the war of Malta, and the last prouision thereof, and that he had suffered the remainder of the Turkish armie to escape, who fled in disorder (said his ill willers) whom he might easily haue defeated. He fought to purge himselfe of these imputations by his friends, and sent Alphonso Ruiz, Secretarie of State for that realme, expressly out of Sicile; but his disgrace increasing, he was forced to come in person. He was there discharged by the king, and sent home to his house, being deprived of all his offices and estates. D. Iohn de Austria was made Generall at sea, and the marquisse of Pescara Viceroy of Sicile.

THE

Lib. 29.

THE 29 BOOKE OF THE Historie of Spaine.

The Contents.

- 1 Troubles in the Low Countries.
- 2 Tumult made in Spaine by the Moores of Granado.
- 3 Scio taken by the Turke.
- 4 Duke of Alba sent Gouvernour into the Low Countries.
- 5 Sentence of condemnation against the Netherlanders.
- 6 Imprisonment and death of the prince of Spaine, and of the queene.
- 7 Charles Archduke of Austria sent from the Emperor Maximilian into Spaine.
- 8 Causes which moued the Moores of Granado to rebell.
- 9 Mariage of the king of Spaine with his neece the Emperours daughter.
- 10 Rights of the Seignourie of Venice to the realme of Cypres.
- 11 League concluded betwixt the Pope, the king of Spaine, and the commonweale of Venice.
- 12 Famagusta yielded to the Turke.
- 13 Battell betwixt the Christians and Turkes at Lepanto.
- 14 Duke of Medina Celi sent to succed the duke of Alba in the Low Countries.
- 15 Enterprise of Tunis made by D. Iohn of Austria.
- 16 Tunis and Gonlette recovered againe by the Turkes.
- 17 D. Sebastian king of Portugal goes into Affrike.

Towards the end of the last yere Pope Pius the fourth died, in whose place was chosen Frier Michael Gislerti, of the Order of S. Dominicke, cardinall Alexandrino, and he was called Pius the fifth. He had bene bred vp in diuers charges of the Inquisition, and therefore he sought to aduance it being come to this dignitie. The people of Rome knowing him to be of a sower and seure disposition, were somewhat troubled at his election: which being reported vnto him, We hope in God, said he, so to behaue our selfe, as they will bee more grieved to heare of our death, than they are now at our creation. But the king of Spaine rejoyced much at this election, commending the authours thereof. He did obserue him with great reuerence, commanding all his ministers with whom the Pope was to treat, not to oppose themselves against his Holinesse just demands. And this yere Bartholmew Camoiano, Archbishop of Toledo, being called in question by the Inquisition of Spaine, for misbeliefe, requiring to be judged at Rome, as his Holinesse should determine, he being not well satisfied with his Spanish judges, the king wold not refuse him to the lord of Camoiano, who was sent vnto him to that end, notwithstanding that it was against the priuiledges of the Inquisition in that realme: wherein the cardinall Sanxisio being sent the yere before by the Pope, to judge the cause, could not preuaile, the Spaniards seeking to maintain their iurisdiction, and to determine it absolutely. Norwithstanding the Archbishops person was granted to Camoiano, who was caried prisoner to Rome, with his Proces which had bene begun there.

1566 Election of Pope Pius 5.

Archbishop of Toledo demands in question by the Inquisition.

M m m m m

Pope

1566

Caraffas process reviewed.

Pope Pius the fift hauing beene made cardinall by Paul the fourth, a Caraffe, in requitall of this fauour, being aduanced to the Papacie, he caused the proces of cardinall Caraffe, and others of that house, which had beene executed by his predeceffors commandement, to be reuiued, restoring the familie of the Caraffas to their honor and fame.

The Pope persisting in his accustomed rigour against them that did seeme to decline from the obedience of the Church of Rome, did not faile, after his assumption, to admonish all Christian princes to obserue the decrees of the Council of Trent, and did quicken the diligence of Inquisitors in all places: But he had no need to reiterate his commandements in that point in Spain, where they had for a long time vsed hard persecution against them whom they called Lutherans, whom king Philip was prest to root out in other places of his obedience, especially in the Low Countries, and to publish this Councell, which was ended so fauourably for him, as it was rather called the king of Spaines Councell than a generall.

Causes of ha-red b' twixt
the Spaniards
and Flemings.

Between the Spaniards and the nobilitie of the Netherlands, yea betwixt these nations there reigned an inueterat hatred, since the Infancie of Charles their king, which grew as well by the diuersitie of manners, as by occasions which sprang from charges in Court, being alwayes accompanied with enuie, and many times with attempts of courtiers one against another, abusing the fauour of their princes: For the Flemings had been in great credit with the Emperour, and had made their profit of the commodities of Spaine, yea against the lawes of the countrey, during his raigne: And at this time in the Court of king Philip his sonne, the Spaniards had the aduantage, and were in most credit. From this spring grew the priuat dislikes betwixt the duke of Alba, and other noblemen of Spaine, and the earle of Egmont, prince of Orange, and other great men who had the chiefe governments and charges in those hereditarie countries of king Philip. Of whom they thought they might well be reuenged (as reuenge is sweet and pleasant to men of that sort) by reason of the publication of the Council of Trent, and the obseruation thereof, and of the Edicts which they called Placards, which the Emperour had made in regard of religion, containing many articles of extreame rigour, in imitation of the Inquisition of Spaine, whereof notwithstanding at the instance of the Estates of the Countrey, he did moderate much of the rigour, and, giuing ouer the government, he did admonish D. Philip his sonne, to intreat his subiects living vnder diuers climats, according to their naturall humors; letting him vnderstand, that it might be auerit was necessarie for Spaniards, but that the Netherlands must be gouerned with a certaine familiaritie and mildnesse. Against this good and wholesome aduice king Philip had other counsell as soone as he came into Spaine, being animated as well by them of his Councell that were about him, as by Anthony Perrenot, cardinall of Arras, who concurred with the king and them in that point, to settle a soueraigne absolute power ouer that nation, and to take their priuiledges from them: whereof they had made some triall by the creation of new bishops, without the consent of the Estates. Wherein he found great opposition, as we haue formerly shewed, and as you may read at large in the Netherland Historie, to the which this subiect doth more properly belong.

Resolution in Spaine touching the gouernment
of the Low Countries.Charles prince of Spaine unpleasing to his father.

Most of the provinces of the Netherlands being in combustion, it was bruted, That the king of Spaine would goe in person thither, carrying peace and mildnesse with him: but the chiefe of them that fauoured religion, were soone aduertised of a contrarie resolution taken in the kings Councell, which was, That the king would not come among them, but that the duke of Alba should be sent with a great armie, to enter the countrey in hostile manner, as you shall heare in the following yeare. King Philip was doubtfull indeed, whether he should goe in person into the Netherlands, but he knew not well to whom to leaue the gouernement of Spaine, in his absence, being due to D. Charles his sonne, whom he trusted not: for whether it were for want of vnderstanding, as the brute was, or that he had too much, as hee presumed, his father had conceiued a bad opinion of him, which some of his Counsellours did feed, for that it seemed vnto them, that this young prince, both in his words and actions, did come them, or at the least did not esteeme them, as they desired. Aboue all, the Inquisitors were no friends vnto him, as you shall heare.

2 Whilest

1566 Tumult made in Spaine by the Moors of Granado.

2 Whilest they consulted in the king of Spaines Councell, how to punish the Netherlanders, the Moores of Granado were called in question, being pursued by the Clergie, and accused of many crimes, especially of secret impietie, as retaining in their hearts the precepts of the law of Mahomet, & hauing their exercises secretly in their houses, although that publicly they aduowed themselves to be Christians, went to Masse, and to other offices and ceremonies in the parishes where they dwelt. Their spleene was chiefly against the inhabitants of the Albaizin, which is a quarter within the citie of Granado, being then peopled with a great number of families of that nation, who were rich and well accommodated; being people which imploied their time in the trade of marchandise, in making of silkes, and in many gainfull trades: and among them there were some knights, professing nobilitie and armes. Moreover, in other towns, and in the countrey and mountaines of Granado, and thereabouts, there were aboue an hundred thousand other families of Moores of diuers conditions, some rich, but most labourers and shepheards, living vnder the protection of lords which enjoyed the castles, fees, and seigniories, to whom they paid rents & dueties, as subiects, descending from them that remained in the countrey since the realme of Granado had beene conquered by the kings D. Ferdinand and D. Isabella, who had promised in capitulating with the last king of the Moores, That they and their successors might remaine there with all assurance and libertie, and not be forced in their religion, obseruing the lawes in generall, and paying the rights and tributes to the king, like to his other subiects, yet the same kings breaking their promise by the perswasion of some Prelats, they would force them to be baptised, and receiue instruction in religion, by reason whereof they fell againe to warre against them that dwelt in Alpuxarra, a mountaine countrey, rough, and of hard access, joyning vnto the sea, the which after many hard encounters, with diuers euents on either side, was ended by another composition: by the which it was concluded, That they that would be Christians should remaine in the countrey, and the rest should passe into Barbarie, whom they should furnish with shipping for their passage. They that remained were called Madejares, and they that passed were tearmed Moores Andaluzes, by the inhabitants of the provinces depending vpon the realmes of Fez and Marroc, whither they retired themselves. Norwithstanding, D. howsoever the Moores which remained in Spaine behaued themselves, they were still hated, and held to be vile and abiect persons by the Spaniards, who called them, in reproach, New Christians, and in stead of making them receiue the religion of Iesus Christ gently, they tormented them both in word and deed; which the magistrat could not remedie, or, it may be, would not: for the Clergie, who are exempt from answering before any ciuile magistrat, and haue their justice apart, being wonderfully fauoured in Spaine, were they that committed the greatest infolencies against them: yea these poore wretches were continually troubled to giue an account vnto the Inquisitors of their actions, and to vse all meanes possible to obtaine some rest of them that were ordinarily in the countrey: But their superiours, and the Prelats which were of the Councell at Court, gaue them no rest; so as since the time of D. Ioane the Emperours mother, queene proprietarie of Castille, Arragon, &c. and the Emperours raigne, there had many seuered Edicts beene made against them, and strange restraints in their conuersations and manner of living, whereof notwithstanding they had suspended the execution, at their humble suit, and protestation of their innocencies, purging themselves reasonably well of all the imputations wherewith they were by them charged.

Moors ill is-treated in
Spaine.

At this time in the kings Court and Councell, all the old accusations against the Moores were reuiued, and to set an order to the content of the Inquisition, and the Prelats which pursued them, there had beene Commissioners deputed, which were D. Diego d'Espinoza, President of the Councell, who was afterwards made a cardinall, D. Fernanado Aluarez de Toledo, duke of Alba, D. Anthony de Toledo, Prior of the Order of S. Iohn, D. Bernard de Borea, Vicechauncellor of Arragon, the bishop of Origuella, D. Pedro of Defa, of the Councell of the generall Inquisition, the Licenciat Mechaca, and Doctor Velasco, Auditors, or Councillors. These hauing met, made an Edict containing many articles, wherof the chiefe were: That all Moores, new Christians, were commanded to leaue their Commissioners appointed to order the Moors.Edict against the Moores

Studiers.

M m m m m ij

Ara-

Arabike or Moorish tongue, and to vse the Spanish; and therefore they should send their children to schooles which should be erected for the vulgar Spanish tongue, and to the masters which should be appointed to teach them. That they should keep no books written in the Arabike tongue in their houses. That they with their wiues & children should be bound to assist at seruice in their parish churches, on Sundayes and other festiuall dayes celebrated by the Church. That on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, they should keepe their doores open in the day time, and to a certaine houre of the night, and suffer them to enter to see what they did. That they should keepe no other armes but their swords, and if any were suffered through fauour to haue any, they should be markt by the gournours. That all Moores, men and women, of what age and condition soeuer, should leaue their Moorish habits and attire, which they had been accustomed to vse, and attire themselves like other Spaniards. That they should leaue off the vse of bathes after their manner, and their Moorish daunces, which were vndecent, lasciuious, and scandalous to Christians. That the Moores residing in the Albaizin should not sic into the villages and iurisdiccions of other lords: for thereby the decrees of justice were made void. There were other articles contained in this Edict, confirming the former old ordinances made against them, or newly inuented, with rigorous penalties vpon euery one. This Edict being signed by the king, and put into forme, D. Pedro de Deza was dispatcht to be President of the Chaucerie of Granado, being injoynd to cause it to be executed from point to point, according to the forme and tenor thereof, without delay or fauour, not respecting the admonitions of any whatsoeuer. All the Commissioners were of this opinion, except the duke of Alba, who aduised them to proceed in the execution thereof article after article, after some pause, and not all at one instant. And soone after the duke parted to goe into Flanders, to gouerne there according to the seuer and injurious instructions which he carried with him, and those which he procured to be sent vnto him.

Scio taken by the Turke.

3 During these troubles in the West, the great Turke Solyman seised vpon the island of Scio. The Bassa Mehemet, vpon a priuat grudge hee had against the inhabitants of that island, thinking that by their helpe a slaue of his was fled, and had carried away a good summe of gold, hee perswaded Solyman to make it subiect, making his owne priuie respect an apparent reason; saying, That many slaues fled daily away by their fauour and aid; and besides, they were spies to obserue what was done at the port, and in those seas, giuing aduice to Christian princes, and especially to the king of Spaine, the chiefe of that nation being Genouois, and confederats with the said king. Moreouer, he pretended, That they ought two yeres tribute, often thousand ducats a yere, the which had happened by the fraud of their Agent, who kept in Constantinople. The Turke was not verie well provided that yere at sea, for his losse had bene verie great before Malta, whereas hee had not onely lost many men of commaund, and especially that famous pyrat Dragut, but also the best of his forces: And his gallies were so weakened, as he could hardly draw fourescore gallies with some galliots together: Yet for that hee would with the shew of a great fleet diuide his enemies forces, he yielded to Mehemet's perswasions, commaunding him to annoy the Christians where they might most conueniently, after the taking of Scio. This island lyes in the Archipelagus: it is almost an hundred miles in circuit: about two hundred yeares since it was taken by the Genouois, and giuen to the Iustinians their citizens, for their charges, who afterwards had the inuestiture from the Paleologi, paying a certaine rent, which was increased to tenne thousand ducats, by Mahomet the second, king of the Turkes. Thus they had liued at libertie vnto this time, without any annoyance, being gouerned in forme of a commonweale, the gentlemen hauing the chiefe command. Pialy, who was Generall of the fleet, directed his course thither, where he arriued on Easter day in the morning, and landed vnder a shew of friendship. Then with a practise he drew the gouernor of the towne aboard the Admirall, with 12 men which were euery yere chosen to be moderators of publike businesse: These being staid by him, the publike palace and the fort were presently seised on by the Turks, who carried away all the chiefe men, and appointed another forme of gouernment for them that did remaine, depending vpon the Turkes Empire. Pialy leauing that island, failed towards the Adriatique sea, which put the Venetians into a great ieaousie.

King

A The king of Spaine vnderstanding that there was no feare of Malta for that yere, hauing a great fleet & an armie readie, commanded they should attempt Alger. Wherefore they began to send certaine ships laden with souldiers, artillerie, and munition, towards Malaga, whilest that Garcia de Toledo prepared the gallies, to passe with all their power. It happened notwithstanding, that those ships were taken by certaine galliots of Alger, which kept those seas. This losse was of such importance, as it disappointed the resolution for Alger.

Losse received by the pyrats of Alger.

4 It had bene resolued the yere before in the Councell of Spaine, that the duke of Alba should go with an armie into the Low Countries. This Spring he was dispatcht away with an ample comission, or rather with an vnlimited authoritie, the which was pleasing vnto him, for the hatred he bare vnto the Netherlanders. As for his armie, there was commaundement giuen to the dukes of Alcala and Terranoua (the one being Viceroy of Naples, and the other of Sicile) to send into the duchie of Milan the old regiments of Spaniards which they had in those realmes, and in Sardinia: and commaundement was also giuen to Gabriel de la Cueva, duke of Albuquerque, gouernour of Milan, That hee should not only haue the regiment of Lombardie in a readinesse, but also the light horsemen, increasing their companies from fiftie to an hundred; and that Lopes Zapata, and Sancio d' Auila, should raise two more, besides two of harquebusiers on horsebacke, Spaniards, leuiued by Pedro Montagna, and Gonsaluo Montero. The king had also giuen order in Germanie, that Alberico, earle of Lodron, should raise a regiment of 12 companies of foot, and 300 in euery companie, according to the custome of that nation, & in the countie of Bourgondie there should be leuiued 300 lances, and 100 harquebusiers on horsebacke. Francisco d' Ibarra was victualer generall, and D. Garcia de Toledo had charge to transport in his gallies the said Spanish footmen, vnto the ports of Genoua, that they might be readie in Lombardie at the duke of Albas arriual. This order being taken in Spaine for the voyage of Flanders, and new souldiers (whom they call Besognes) being sent into Sicile and Naples, to supplie their places that should goe in that action, in the beginning of May the duke of Alba embarked at Carthage, in the gallies of John Andrew Doria, and of the duke of Florence: he carried with him seuteene companies of Spanish foot, to fill vp the garrisons of Lombardie, from whence he drew the old souldiers, making also choise of foure companies of these new souldiers, to lead with him into the Low Countries. He arriued late at Genoua, hauing bene troubled with a feuer vpon the way. He mustered his army betwixt Alexandria and Asti, where he found 8800 Spanish foot, and 1200 horse, Italians, Spaniards, and Albanefes: and the foot were thus diuided; of the regiment of Naples 3230 in 19 companies, vnder Alphonso Villoa their colonell; in the regiment of Sardinia (in the which the foure companies of Besognes were put) were 1720 men in ten companies, commaunded by Gonsaluo de Bracamont: the regiment of Sicile was of 1620 souldiers, in ten companies, vnder Iulian Romero; and that of Lombardie, being but 1200 foot, in ten companies, was commanded by Sancio de Londogno. There were seuen companies of horse, Spaniards, whereof fiue were lances, and two harquebusiers, three of Italians, and two of Albanefes, all light horsemen. Besides these troupes, and their capitaines, he led with him many men of knowne valour, to imploy them in this seruice, and to aduance them to charges as they should fall: among which were his base sonne called also Fernando Aluarez, who was a knight of Saint John, and Prior of a rich commaunderie, also Chiappin Vitelli, marquisse of Cetona, Gabriel Serbelloni, a knight also of Saint John, Sancio d' Auila, Girolamo de Salinas, John of Epuccia, and Andrew de Salazar, one of which foure last was Castellain of Pauia, the other of Portercole; the third of Piombino, and the last of Palermo. And besides these, hee led with him Paciotto de Vrbino, an excellent Enginer; hauing gotten him from the duke of Sauoy, whom hee then serued. Hee made his sonne Fernando Generall of the horse, Vitelli was Marshall of the field, and Serbelloni (besides the charge of the Artillerie) was made Counsellour at Warre. How hee entred into the countrey, and what his proceedings were, that Historie doth relate at large. After which they hauing certaine informations sent them in to Spaine, from the duke of Alba, and the aduice of the holy Inquisition taken therein, all the lay people of the said countries, both noblemen, gentlemen, townes and

Duke of Alba sent into Flanders.

Armie led by the duke of Alba into the Low countries.

M m m m m iij

com.

1567

comminalties were by the kings sentence condemned as heretikes, or fauourers of heretikes, or in some other sort guiltie of high treason in the highest degree, without exception of estate, qualitie, condition, age, or sex; except some which were particularly named in the information, which made the inhabitants to flie into diuers other countries.

This yere, in May, there was great ioy and feasts in Spaine, and in all the kings dominions, for the birth of his second daughter, who was baptised, and called Katherine.

1568

Obiectio against the prince of
Spaine.

But whilst the warre grew hot in the Low Countries, there happened a tragical accident in the royall house of Spaine. We haue before made mention how that D. Charles was in disgrace with the king his father: the cause (as the Spaniards say) was, for that he was viciously giuen, and that he spake ill of the present gouernment: that he had a meaning to attempt against the kings person, and to raigne in his place, hating him, for that he had often reprehended him, and threatened him, for his disordered courtes: or, if that succeeded not, that he would steale away, and flie secretly, with some of his confederats, into Italie, or somewhere else, and trie, by confusion and tumult, to depriue the king of his Estates. That he carried himselfe arrogantly, and incompatible to them that had the chiefe offices in Court, and that he disdained all those that were appointed to attend on him, yea hee would outrage and strike them. The Inquisitors expected no good from this prince, neither did the kings Councell, of the which those that were then most hated of him, were D. Ruiz Gomes de Sylua, a Portugal, the earle of Feria, and D. Antonie de Toledo. The king was aduertised by them of many particularities concerning the princes carriage, and entertained in dislike of him. By their counsell the king resolved to come from the Escoriall to Madrid, where the prince was, and to take him in his bed.

Enemies to the prince of Spaine

They came, and found the chamber doore so well barred, as they were forced to breake it open. The prince hearing the noise, leapt out of his bed, and seeing the king his father, hee was much troubled, beginning to crie out, What is the reason that you will kill me? The king willed him that he would pacifie himselfe, and that he should goe againe to his bed, telling him, that what he did was for his good. They seized on his sword, and some say that hee had a pistoll charged and bent: He complained, that they meant to bind him, as if he had beene madde. His chamber and clothes were searched,

6 Imprisonment of the prince of Spaine.

and they left no instrument of yron, wherewith he might hurt himselfe: all his papers and writings were carried away, among the which there were found many copies of letters written to some princes, full of complaints of hard vsage which hee receiued from the king, whom he accused of crueltie and bad gouernement in his affaires, and it seemed hee did inuite them to assist him, by compassion, making great promises vnto them. His whole designe was also discovered by certaine remembrances which were found, being resolved to escape away in the gallies, which should passe into Italie, whereby they might easily see whom he loued, and whom he hated in Court, whom he trusted, and whom he would employ in his enterprises. Hee had beene seene some daies before, to discourse long and verie earnestly with D. John of Austria, Generall at sea; and it was thought, that having acquainted him with his designes, hee reuealed them vnto the king, which made him resolute to put him in gard. The earle of Feria, and D. Ruiz Gomes, had that charge, who watcht him carefully in their turnes; and hee was serued by two gentlemen, who carried no armes, and vpon the passages to his chamber there were guards, who would not suffer any other to goe vnto him. This continued some dayes: but the king who obserued all that hee spake, caused him afterwards to be put into a strong tower, giuing the whole charge and care of him to D. Ruiz Gomes: it was the same prison whereas king Francis had beene kept. There hee attempted many times to kill himselfe, as they said, and being preuented, hee forbore to eat any thing eight dayes together. The king aduertised all the noblemen, townes, and comminalties of Spaine, of this imprisonment, that they should not take it ill, letting them vnderstand, that it was for the good and quiet of them all, forbidding them all expressly, not to speake nor mediate for the prince. He imparted as much to the embassadours, and did write vnto their masters.

Designes of the prince discouered.

The emperor Maximilian being aduertised of this fact, imputed the cause to D. John, and 1567

A and was offended with him: for he meant to make the prince D. Charles his Son in law, & (if this accident had not happened) to haue consummated the marriage within few daies, as the fathers had concluded: & he was so much discontented, as hee would haue called home the Princes Rodolphus and earnest his Sonnes, who were bred vp in the Court of Spaine, but the king D. Philip would not suffer them to depart, but sought to pacifie the Emperour with reasons, either true or probable. But in the end he persuaded him that the cause was most vrgent and iust to assure himselfe of his Sonnes person, whome hee should loue and spare if it might be, hauing at that time no more Sonnes. Whatsoeuer was the true cause of the Sonnes detention by the father, being not well manifested from Spaine, the prince D. Charles the presumptiue heire of so many realmes, dyed in Iulie; some say he was poisoned, other s write that he was strangled by foure slaues: He was buried in the Monasterie of *S. Domini*ke, the royall at Madrid, whereas the king D. Pedro the cruel had beene interred. Peter Mathew in his French Historie, writing of the life and death of king Philip the second, he sets downe a formall proceeding of the father against his Sonne in this action: the which for that this subiect is so rare and memorable, I haue thought good also to insert.

Death of the
Prince of Spaine

After the Princes restraint, as wee haue said the king (saith hee) propounded to his Councell of conscience, what punishment a kings son deserued, that had made leagues against his estates, and conspired against his fathers life, and whether hee might be called in question? His Councell laied two remedies before him, both iust and possible, the one of grace, and the other of lustice and punishment, shewing him the difference betwixt the mercie of a father, and the sinceritie of a king, saying, that if by his clemencie he did pardon them which loued him not, hee must of force pardon that creature which should be most deare vnto him. They desired him to imitate the emperour Charlemaigne, who imputed the first conspiracie of his Sonne Pepin against him, to the follies of youth, & for the second he confined him into a Monasterie, protesting that he was a father not a king, nor a iudge against his Sonne. The king answered that by the law of nature he loued his Son better than himselfe, but by the law of God the good and safetie of his subiects was to be preferred. Moreover hee demanded, if knowing the miseries which the impunitie of his Sonnes offences would breed, whether he might with a safe conscience pardon him, and not be guiltie of these miseries. Whereat his Diuines shrunke in their shoulders, and with teares in their eyes said, that the safetie and health of his subiects ought to be dearer vnto him than his sonnes, and that hee ought to pardon offences; but such crimes should be suppressed as abhominable monsters. Hereupon the king committed his Sonne to the censure of the Inquisitors, commanding them not to respect his authoritie, no more than the meanest within his kingdome; and to regard the qualitie of his Sonne, as if he were borne a king, making no distinction thereof with the partie accused, vntill they found that the excesse of his offence would no more admit of this consideration, remembering that they carried in their soules a liuelie image of the king, which had iudged Angels, and should without distinction iudge kings and the Sonnes of kings like vnto other men; referring all vnto their consciences, and discharging his owne.

Mathews upon the death of Prince Charles

The Inquisitors, for that he was charged to haue practised with Castillon Admirall of France, the prince of Orange, and other enemies of the Romish Religion, declared him an heretike, and for that hee had conspired against his fathers life, they condemned him to die. The king was his accuser, and the Inquisitors his iudges, but the sentence was signed by the king, which done, they presented many kinds of death in picture vnto the prince, to make choise of the easiest. In the end he demanded if there were no pitie in his father, to pardon him, no fauour in his Councell for a Prince of Spaine, nor any wisdome to excuse the follies of his youth when as they told him that his death was determined & could not be reuoked, and that all the fauour was in the choise of the easiest death, hee said that they might put him to what death they pleased: that there was no choise of any death, seeing that they could not giue him that which Cesar held to be the best. These words deliuered with passion, were followed with a thousand imprecations against his fortune, against the inhumanity of his father, and the crueltie of the Inquisition; repeating these words often: O miserable Sonne, of a more miserable father.

Iudgement of the inquisitors
against the Prince of Spaine

He

He had some daies giuen him to prepare himselfe for death. One morning foure slaues entred into his chamber, who awaking him, put him in mind of his last houre, and gaue him some time to prepare himselfe vnto God: He start vp suddenly and fled to the bed post; but two of them held his armes, and the third his feet, and the fourth strangled him with a cord of silk. Many hold that he died of letting blod, his feet being put in warm water. But Campana in the life of Philip 2 writes, that being in prison he fel verie sick, by reason of his disordred diet, and drinking too much cold water, wherewith his stomack grew so weake as he could not digest any meat, which the Physicians could not helpe so as hee died (as he affirms) of this sicknes, verie religiously and penitenly, to the great griefe of the king & the whol state: & moreouer he writes, that the king being much perplexed for this great losse, retired himself into his chamber with two seruants, & wold not giue any audience, & then for many daies into the monasterie of S. Ierome, a mile without the town, sequestering himself of al affairs, writing only to princes & potentates, & causing his secretaries to write vnto all his realms & states of the death of his deare & only son. Thus writers discourse diuersly of the death of this Prince: the which I leaue to the iudicious Reader to beleue what he shall thinke most probable.

Death of the queen of Spain.

Within foure months after the death of the Prince D. Carlo, the Queene D. Isabella his mother in law died also, being broght in bed of her third child before her time, the Physicians hauing ignorantly caused her to take too much Phisick, fering some other infirmities; this was the brute of the court of Spain. But in France they had reason to think that the life of this princeesse was shortned like vnto that of D. Charles, by some notable malice, & by the same instruments. For they to whom D. Isabella did belong in bloud, had been verie carefull to auer the causes & maner of her death, but not so resolute to call it in question, as Clouis sons were to reuenge the iniurie done vnto their Sister in Spaine, where she also had bene married.

Turkett.

As for the Prince, it was verie comon in Spain, that the great hatred the king bare him, grew rather from the suggestions and reports of others, than from his own misdeeds, for by nature he was neither giuen to any odious vices, neither was he offso harsh and fower a disposition as commonly great men of that countie be. It is true, that D. Charles kept his grauitie to courtiers, that he shewed himself verie ambitious, & too desirous to manage affaires, and to be imploied; and was giuen to some kindes of pleasures. Such as would excuse him, said, that it was seemly and befitting his ranke to be graue, being the son of so great a king, sworn prince and acknowledged for successor to such rich and great estates, and also that it is the first lesson & most recommended instruction of fathers in Spaine, to their children, to shew themselves graue in their words & actions, & that it was a comendable thing especially in the that were of great houses. If he were ambitious & desirous of honor, they were affections incident to princes, & were so necessarie in them that were to gouerne people, as if any had not these motions in them, they were the lesse esteemed, both in Spain and elsewhere. If he desired to know & learne by practise how estates should be gouerned, and justice duly administred, that it is a thing wherein kings children should be bred from their youth, & practised therein all their liues, and that it is the nature of all men well bred, feeling the seeds of vertue in their minds, to aduance it by their actions; wherein all men know that vertue doth consist. And yet all these things commendable in other men, were blamed in Prince Charles, by them who (it may be) would not haue their misdemeanors discovered by the Infant of the house. As for worldlie pleasures, they be, said they, appetites which doe commonly accompany yong noble men, especially being bred vp in the idleness of court; vices which are tollerable in many of mean condition, & therefore were lesse strange in great men: but, said they, there was no better means to diuert this prince from delights which are superfluous and hurtfull, than to employ him betimes in the gouernment affaires; what greater bond, said they, had the king his father to his subiects, than to fashion his onely Sonne, (hee that should raigne after) to command wel, & to make him knowe both by reason and experience what the due tie of a king is, both to God and men, that they be not as dum Idols among their Councillers, hauing not iudgement to discern the good from the bad. The thing wherein the Prince was most to be blamed, was an inconsiderate rashnesse to attaine vnto his intentions, and could

Disposition of the prince D.
Charles.

Ambition a vice of great men.

Vices common to yong Noble-
men.

A could not obserue time nor fit occasions to make his pursuit. The which they thought proceeded onely from the heat of youth, which might easily haue been corrected by conuerfing with men of state, if hee had bene accompanied by some men of respect, wife, and willing to moderate these fumes which did rise through the heat of youth. And they complained that the meanes that might haue made D. Charles a vertuous Prince, were hindred by the practises of the kings bad Councillors, who also for his part had shewed himselfe too credulous, & in the end blind in that action, by some secret iudgement of God. These were the ordinarie reasons of temperate spirits, who thought affaires of state might well be managed, and not stray from pietie nor humanity. Adding, that admit the Prince D. Charles had bin found inflexible to all proofes of reason, so as hee had been held incapable to raigne, yet should they not haue taken away his life. That there were Monasteries in Spaine, whether they might haue sequestred him, and sought by the conuerfation of some good religious men, to draw him to a contempt of worldlie greatnesse which perishest, and to the contemplation of heavenly things, and the life to come: whereof both Spaine and other Countries could furnish the like examples.

considerations of the Councill
of Spaine.

But the Councell of Spaine consisting of Clergie men and secular, did not like of these old maxims in matters of consequence, and especially they that had more particular knowledge of that which past in the kings house, did greatly apprehend what this triumphing crowne would come vnto, if king Philip dying, it should fall into the hands of such a man as D. Charles his Sonne was, whom they held to bee vnable to vndergoe so great a burthen; & there was great probability that this prince had both his bodie & his spirits, weakened since his fall at Alcala of Henaes, whether hee was gone to pay a vow after a long quarren ague, by which fall his braine was somewhat crazed, so as his iudgement did sometimes faile him, not being able to containe himself with the respect which he ought vnto the king, and to them that had the honour to be of his Councell.

D. Charles
prince of Spaine vnable for so
men.

Moreouer, whether it were by accident, or by some defect of nature, the facultie of generation was in a manner quenched in him, so as he was held vnable for women: the which did also import the state. All these things gaue a great apprehension to the chiefe of the kings Councell, being guided by worldlie wisdom; the which could not suggest a better expedient than to berid him, and to find out some fit meanes to effect it. It is certaine that the beginning of the kings hatred to his sonne, was through jealousie of state, taking an occasion for that the Prince seemed verie desirous to goe from Court, and to bee employed in forein expeditions, at the least to accompany them that were sent with charges, to the end, said he, that hee might learne. Whereupon they presently made D. Charles a monster of ambition, who would presently seaze vpon the Prouinces, and take away the kings crown & life to raigne: & yet on the other side they taxed him that he was dull and wanted iudgement, contradicting themselves, for such actions are not attempted by fooles and madmen: the which the king should haue duly considered; but nor doing it, hee did blemish his house with the most fatal misfortune that could happen vnto it, for hee did so readily receiue these suspitions, and did so graue them in his heart, as he detested his Son, & he neuer saw him, but he sent him away with sower vsage and threats: and that which did most trouble the Prince, some of the Councillors and mignons of court, presumed (in imitation of the father) to contemne him. He gaue them a great aduantage ouer him, for that when as the Marques of Berghen & the Lord of Montigny came to court, being sent fro the estates of the Low-countries, to present their petition vnto the king touching the breach of their priuiledges by the Cardinall of Granuelle, hee became a solicitor for the, being moued as hee said with the zeale of iustice, and hatred of ciuill wars, which hee foresaw and detested, blaming them openly which perswaded the king and his Councell thereunto, saying that they were practises of insatiable and cruel yultures, who would gorge themselves with the losse of the kings subiects.

Zeale inconfi-
dent of the prince
D. Charles.

By these free speeches vsed often when as they treated of the warre of Flanders, and against the Moores of Granado, whereas religion was made the pretext, at the pursuit & by authority of the Inquisition, D. Charles made himselfe odious to them that were the moouers, giuing them great meanes to confirme the king in the opinion wherewith they had seasoned him, that he sought all meanes to trouble the state, & to make himselfe pleasing

*Inquisitors show persuns of Prince
Charles.*

sing vnto the Netherlanders, that he might haue a refuge there, and by that means begin to make a breach in the Crowne of Spain, adding with all to season their imputations, that he was a fauourer of Heretikes, so as hee was sharply and disdainfully reprehended, and namely by the Inquisitors, the which did wonderfully incense him: so as being vanquished with impatience, and griefe, he presumed one day to enter boldly into the priuy Councell chamber, with admiration of all them that were there, but especially of the king, who did preside, for he feared to see or heare some impertinencie from his Sonne in that place where he neuer had access, nor was not then called. Hee demaunded of him with a seuerer countenance, what hee had to say, and what had moued him to come thither. It is said he, my Lord, to beseech you to giue me leaue to aske you one thing, and that it will please you to satisfie me before the lords that are here present.

Virtuous admonition of a Son to a father.

The king who feared to heare some importune curiositie, sought to dismiss him instantly, telling him that hee had other places to heare him, and that hee should retire for that time. But the prince insisted, saying that it was onely to know if he tooke him for his Sonne, and lawfull successour: what demands of a Sonne are yours? said the king; yea you are my sonne, and depart in the name of God. Seeing then, replied the Prince, that I am your sonne, and that by nature I shall one day succeed you in the gouernment of your realmes, I beseech you take it not in ill part, if in this honourable assemblie, I let you vnderstand that I haue not yet found that you haue thought of my future condition: for you bred me vp as a stranger, giuing me neither cause nor means to bee instructed in matters of gouernment, or justice, importing the good of your subiects, hauing not yet libertie, being of this age, to come where it is treated, nor to conuerse with such men as you employ, who rather seeke to estrange me; which giues me iust cause to complaine vnto you, and to beseech you my Lord to consider thereon, and to excuse mee: and then hee departed. Hee was then full two and twentie yeares old.

This action ministred matter of discourse to them of the Councell, whereas there was no good concluded for Prince Charles, for that the opinions of his enemies, which were the greatest number, swaied it, and the king continued in his conceit that his Sonne was a franticke young man, without iudgement, and that hee had an intent to invade some Countrie, to put all into Combustion, for which cause hee desired to be employed.

Speech of the Prince to the Duke of Alba.

The Prince not content to haue made this bad triall of his fathers inclination towards him, hee continued his course, hearing that the duke of Alba had beene appointed to goe to bee gouernour of the Low-Countries: for hauing sent for him, hee told him that hee desired nothing more than to goe from Court, intreating him instantly to assist him in so honourable and reasonable a desire, and to get leaue from the king that hee might goe with him, whome hee did reuerence as a great Commander in the warre, and one of the greatest statesmen in the world, in whose Schole he should thinke himselfe happie to take instruction.

The Duke vsing many complements, seemed also to desire it, saying that he could not receiue a greater honour than to commaund vnder him in that troublesome charge, where hee might assure himselfe of his humble seruice and assistance, yet hee gaue him some admonitions, knowing well how the king stood affected towards him: therewith hee was discontented. This being auided (for the Duke of Alba, what shew soeuer hee made, had no will to be troubled with such a Scholer) hee adrest himselfe a while after, to increase his miseries, to D. John of Austria his vncle, who it may bee had more ambition in his head than he, to whose designes which were great, those of the Prince D. Charles must needs bee preiudiciall, yet hee discouered himselfe freely vnto him, being Generall at Sea, saying, that hee would steale away, and passe with the Gallies into Italie, perswading D. John to assist him, but hee deceiued him; for hee presently aduertised the king, which made him to cause him to bee watcht, and his actions to bee obserued.

But behold, the Queene was engaged in these miseries: The prince in all his afflictions had often recourse vnto his mother in law, who being mild and courteous, willingly

*D. John de Austria
contrarie to Prince Charles.*

lingly heare his complaints, did pittie him, comfort him, and sought by all meanes to reuue his hopes, perswading him to vanquish his passions, and to yeeld vnto the rigour and choler of the king his father, and to let time moderate them with patience, the which past not from the Queene without some free inuectiues, after the French maner, against them that were enemies to her and to the Prince, threatening one day to be reuenged on them that were authors of of her crosses, and namely against D. Ray Gomes, and a Confessor of the kings, who posselt him about all others, and were the chiefe practisers of these Tragedies. The which was reported vnto them, for they had spies euen in the Queenes Cabinet, by whom they were aduertised, and the king by them, of all the speeches which past betwixt the prince and her. They fearing that by the force of coningall loue, shee should put some consideration into the kings heart, by the which hee might bee moued to examine this businesse with iudgement, and that discouering their bad offices, hee should take reuenge, they resolved to presse the princes ruine, and to draw the Queene into the same hatred, that the king had conceiued against the prince his Sonne.

Practisers of the court of Spaine.

These men wrought so by their practised and coloured reports as they drew that heart already vlcered into a deadlie eia loue of his wife, flandering her with loosefnesse, adding that crime to the impression which they had giuen him, that she fauoured the princes designs, tending to open rebellion against God & the king. Moreover to omit no imposture which might serue to transport this king beyond the bounds of humanitie and reason, they let him vnderstand, that, by the reports of Phisitions and women attendants, vnto his Confessor, who made relation, and to whose words he gaue great credit, there appeared on the bodie of this Prince certaine markes and spots, which shewed an impuritie and corruption of the blood, which might infect the kings person, if hee did accompany with her, and so disperse it selfe into all the royall familie, which was to be auoided.

All which passions together, were of such force with the king, as he beleued the Inquisitors (without whose aduice there is nothing of importance done in Spaine) and others which were of that Councell, perswading him that it was lawfull & expedient to make away the prince his son, and the Queene his wife, and the child shee went with, which they held to be a son, but it proued a daughter, whereof they caused her to be deliuered with drinke. This Historie was thus reported to queene Catherine, dowager of France, mother to D. Isabella, by such as she had imploied to vnderstand the truth thereof, & by some which had serued the prince D. Charles when he was committed to prison, who retyring themselves into France, she would heare.

*Inquisitors
chiefe of the Councell of
Spaine.*

The suspicion the king had of the loyaltie of queene Isabell his wife, was not for the prince his Son, as many haue beleued: for he was (as wee haue said) insufficient for women. And although he would be idle in speech, and that there were found among his papers some notes of his owne hand touching that subiect, yet carnall pleasures were the least of his desires, and as for the Queene there was nothing more modest in Spain, by the report of Spaniards themselves, who haue written bookes. But it hath beene verified by credible informations, that her ill-willers which sought her ruin, made vse of the notable malice of a French gentlewoman, one of those which was suffered to stay with her, when as soone after her coming into the countrie, they did order her household, and limit her traine. They say that this vnworthie woman (for that the Queene had giuen away a place which was void to one of her companions, hauing promised it vnto her) to be reuenged of her Mistres, had giuen it out, that she had been indiscreetly and scandalously familiar with the Marquess of Poza, who according to the custome of Spain, termed himselfe seruant in shew to her that had bene preferred before her.

Treacherie, a diueltish reuenge

This coming to the kings eares, was easily beleued, for hee was already in some doubt, hee being informed by some wayward spirits, that this Marquess who was of the house of Rojas, being a gallant knight, did talke more familiarly vnto the queen than any other, & entertained her with pleasant discourtes, whereat shee did laugh after the maner of France, more freely than it seemed fit for their Spanish grauitie: This wound being now again toucht, the king sought an occasion to haue this Marquess apprehended, commanding him to keepe his house being in Madrid, where going one night

Death of the Marquesse of Poza.

night forth to visit his mother, and an vnkle of his that was a bishop, rettyring verielate home in a night-gowne and slippers, being accompanied by two pages which carried torches before him, he was set vpon by men vnknown, and slaine vpon the place. There were diuers opinions concerning this murther, but most thought it was done by the kings secret commandement, although hee seemed to bee much offended: For there being a great sum of money promised by proclamation to them that should discouer the authours and doers of this murther, there were many bills set vp in the Portugall tongue, declaring that it was the king himself which had caused the Marquesse of Poza to be slaine: challenging him, by way of mockerie, to pay the money which hee had promised, but they had not set to their names.

Hereupon there was great search made, and some Innocents taken, and so cruelly tortured as they died: being onely suspected for that they were Portugals. The Queene soone after the death of the Prince D. Charles, began to find herselfe ill, with accidents and apparent signes of poison, whereof notwithstanding shee did in no sort doubt, but tooke light remedies, as one that was with child, by the order of such as had bin accustomed to giue her phisick. The businesse proceeding slowly contrarie to that which they expected, the king hauing one night discoursed long with her touching her infirmities, hee told her plainly that she must take some strong purgation, and that his Phisitions (who by his commandement did looke vnto her) had told him that they despaired of her life, if shee tooke no other phisicke than that she vsed. But as shee tooke no delight to change her vsuall maner, nor to be phisicked by any other than her owne, trusting aboue all others in an Apothecarie of hers borne at Blois, she excused her selfe vpon her being with childe, saying that shee thought it was a Sonne, for that shee found herselfe otherwise disposed then she had bene, and that they must consider well thereon. But being much prest by the king, shee said vnto him that shee would doe what hee pleased, not thinking that what they intended was so readie.

Burearely the next day in the morning they brought her a drinke, a bole and tablets, all of one composition as they said, but so varied in form, to the end she might take that which was least distastfull vnto her. Shee tooke the poison, not distrusting any thing vntill she felt her selfe opprest with great pangs, which made her be deliuered of a daughter, that was some fiue moneths olde, after which shee had vomitings and strange voidings which quencht all the force and vigour that remained in her. Being neere her end, the king came to visit her in a mourning weed, seeming to be much afflicted; whome she comforted, and among other words, shee said vnto him, That shee reioyced that she was going to a quiet kingdome, not subiect to alteration, as worldlie states be, that shee did not craue pardon of him, knowing in her conscience that shee had neuer willingly offended him. Shee recommended her wiating women and some French officers, whome shee had not meanes to recompence for the seruices they had done her, and in the end of October, on Saint Francis eue she dyed, Christian like. She was lamented of all Spaine, where they did beleue that this Princesse was a Saint, she was assisted in her sicknesse for matters of conscience by the Cardinall of Espinosa, Inquisitor generall, D. Bernard of Fresueda bishop of Cuenca, the kings Confessor, Frier Dominicke de Chaus, another of the kings Confessors, who had also bene to the prince D. Charles, and others: She was interred in the Monasterie of las Descalsas built at Madrid by the Infanta D. Joane, Mother to D. Sebastian king of Portugall. The Gentlewoman which had slaundred her, and was the cause of her misfortune, was married in the Countrie, and died there: the lady of honour serued her daughter D. Isabella Clara Eugenia: the rest were sent backe into France, from whome they vnderstood these particularities.

A notable example of the praictises of Princes Courts, of the vanitie and instabilitie of worldlie greatnesse, and of the miseries wherein kings plunge themselves by suspitions and bad impressions lightly receiued, and especially how they stray dangerously from the dutie which they owe to God and nature, when they enterlace religion with their human policies to countenance their actions. Whilst the duke of Alua seeks to afflict the towns of the low countries by strange & intollerable impositions, exacting the tenth penny

Speech of the Queen D. Isha- bell dying to the king.

A penie of all marchandise that was sold, and the twentieth penie of euery mans estate. He began to quarrell with the Queene of England, pretending that shee had staied a great summe of money, which was sent by sea out of Spaine into the Lowe Countries, the which (said the Duke) did belong vnto the King of Spaine his master, whom she should intreat with all brotherly loue. Whereunto the Queene answered, that shee was duely informed, the said money did belong to certaine Merchants of Genoua, and hauing then occasion to vse it, shee would staie it for a time, and pay them reasonable interest. Despes Embassadour in England for the Catholike King, made great instance for this money, but he could get no other answer. Whereupon the Duke of Alba did presently arrest all the English merchants, with their shippes and goods that were at Antwerp, or within his gouernment. Whereupon all commerce was broken betwixt the king of Spaines subiects, and the English, who left the trade to Antwerp, and carried their goods to Hamborough. The Queene of England published a declaration of her proceeding in this businesse, complaining that the Duke of Alba had dealt vnjustly with her and her subiects; but all this could not procure any restitution for the English Merchants, who had letters of reprisall granted them against king Philips subiects, to recouer the losses which they had sustained by these arrests, both in Spaine and the Lowe Countries. The English Merchants became men of warre, and so many went to sea, some with a desire of gain, and others with hope to recouer what they had lost, as not a shippe could passe betwixt Spaine and the Lowe Countries, to the ruine of many poore men: whereof great complaints came to the Court of Spaine. The Duke of Alba seeing what a breach he had made betwixt those two States, to the prejudice of his masters subiects; seeking to repaire the error which he had committed, he sent Christopher d'Assonville, a Counsellor of Estate, to the Queene of England to reconcile this quarrell; but shee refused to heare him, vnlesse he came from the king his master, and had letters of credit, signed with his owne hand: but coming from the Duke of Alba, her Maiestie sent him to treat with her Councell; which hee hauing no warrant to doe, returned without audience. Yet shee let him vnderstand, that although shee found her selfe much wronged, shee would not take Armes vnlesse the Duke of Alba began. The like shee wrote to the king of Spaine, complaining of the Duke of Alba's presumption. Soone after, the Duke sent Chapin Vitelli Marquis of Cetone, with some others, to demand the money, and to free all arrests of either side, but they effected not any thing: whereupon the Duke sold all the English mens goods that were vnder arrest. These were the seeds of warre betwixt the two Princes, which continued vnto their deaths, to the ruine of many of their subiects, especially Spaniards and Portugals.

The Princes of Germanie hearing what cruelties and spoiles the duke of Alba and his Spaniards committed in the Lowe Countries, they prest the Emperour Maximilian to deale in those matters, betwixt the king and his subiects there; yea to take knowledge thereof as Emperour: saying, that without doubt the Prouinces which are beyond the riuier of Escut, towards the East, were of the Imperiall Iurisdiction; as those that are on this side were of the soueraignie of France. But the Emperour did not thinke it fit to vse his Imperiall authority, but prayers and intercessions. Whereupon he sent the Archduke Charles his brother into Spaine, vpon colour to aske the king of Spaines aduice for the mariage of his two daughters: and withall hee had giuen him ample instructions to treat with him touching the affaires of his Netherlands, and to intreat him by all faire meanes, to grant a generall pardon to his people there, and to call home the duke of Alba and his Spaniards, assuring him that in so doing, he should be obeyed: but if he did persist in that cruell persecution, they would be releued both with men and money from Germanie, the which he could not preuent.

The Archduke came to Genoua, where he imbarke in the duke of Sauoys gallies, and was receiued by the king of Spaine with great honour: his embassage was very pleasing touching that which concerned the mariages of his two neeces, for he found the king disposed to marrie the elder, the which had bin appointed for the vnfortunate Prince D. Charles his sonne. And as for the second, which the Emperour desired to match with the king of Portugall, who was yet very yong, hee had a promise from king Philip to employ himselfe

Nnnn

himselfe

Quarrell betwixt the duke of Alba and the English.

Englishmen and their goods arrested in the Lowe Countries and Spaine.

Queen of England refuseth to heare the duke of Albas
Embassadour.

Charles Archduke of Austria
sent into Spaine

Treatise of mariage.

himselfe to haue the French king marrie her, although he had already demanded the other; and they were entered into treatie, by the means of the Cardinall of Guise and Espinosa. But as for the affaires of the Netherlands, the Archduke could not obaine any thing in fauor of them that were banished, nor of the poore prouinces afflicted. For making relation vnto him of the speeches held by the Princes Electors to the Emperor, and that they pretended he had a right of protection ouer those people, and that hee should make himselfe iudge of their quarrels, as depending of the Empire, it did much incense the king, who answered, that the Germanes were much deceived in their conceptions in that regard, and that he had sufficient right and power to shew that he was a soveraign Prince, and did not acknowledge any other superior on earth. He knew well that the duke of Alba had vsed some excessse, but he was wont to say, that he had rather loose all those Prouinces, with others, than to haue rebellious subiects, especially in matters which concerned religion.

Thus the Archduke was dismissed, hauing receiued a present of 100000 crownes, to helpe him to furnish his frontier places against the Turke, with many iewels of price. And he had commission when hee came into Germanie, to doe the ceremonies of their contracting, in his name, with his future Spouse. Returning by Italie he did visit his sisters and neeces, the duchesses of Ferrara, Florence, and Mantoua, and then he came vnto the Emperour, to giue him an account of his negotiation with king Philip, whom hee had left engaged in a warre against the Moores of Granado, almost as difficult as that of the Netherlands.

Wee haue formerly made mention of the discontentes of the Moorish nation, dwelling in the mountaines, plaines, and valleyes, and in some of the good townes in the countries of Granado and Murcia; which was by reason of the contempt they were in with the naturall Spaniards, whom they call old Christians: among whom they liued in continual vexation, especially by the Clergie, and officers of the Inquisition, and also by them of the Iustice, which was not equally distributed vnto them. But that whereof they most complained, was the kings Edict, whereof we haue made mention, tending to alter their manners, their apparell, and their language: whereof the President D. Pedro de Desas was appointed to see the execution, with the assistance of the Gouverneur Domingo Lope de Mendoza marquisse of Mondejar, and the aduice of the Auditors & Counsellors of the Chancery in the Parliament of Granado, and of the Archbishop if need were, wherein they found no small difficultie.

To begin therefore by gentleness, the President gaue charge to Alphonso de Horosco, Chanon of S. Sauior, which is a Collegiall Church in the quarter of Albayzin of the citie of Granado, beeing in a manner wholly inhabited by Moores, to persuaide them to receiue the Edict, yea to demand it themselves: but hauing imparted some copies vnto them, they rejected it, sending vnto the President and Gouverneur, George de Basca Proctor general of that nation, and Francis Nagues Muley a knight, one of the most auncient among them, to intreat them to deferre the publication of the Edict, vntill they had acquainted the king with their reasons, and the inconueniences that might growe by the execution thereof. But notwithstanding all their sayings and allegations, the Edict was proclaimed the first of Ianuarie, 1567; and to shew the diligence of officers, all the baths and hot-houses of the citie were instantly forbidden, and most of them beaten downe: yet they vsed some moderation, for that during the yeare 1567 there were not any penalties leuiued of them that did infringe it. In the meane time they sent their deputies to Court, where by the meanes of some noble men, they procured audience of the Councell; and there were some of opinion, that if they would haue the Edict stand in force, the execution should be suspended, as it beene in the time of the Emperour Charles, and of his mother. The Cardinall of Espinosa was of another opinion, and brought all the rest to concur with him; which was, that the Edict should be speedily executed in all points, and the penalties exacted vpon them that should not obey. There was among the new Christians, some that were descended of the blood of the auncient kings of the Moores, the which were honoured in Spaine, & well respected in Court; among which, D. Alphonso of Granado Venegas laboured by good perswasions to hinder this rash execution,

3
Moores.
Causes of the rebellion of the Moores of Granado.

Council of the Cardinall Espinosa.

A cution, but he was willed to desist, for such was the kings pleasure. So as all the Moores of the citie, townes and mountaines of Alpuxarra, of the boroughs and villages towards the Sea, were brought to despair, apprehending this strange alteration, euen in their language & habites, which perswaded them that they were thereby reduced into seruitude, and confusion of their houses and families: for this nation is verie curious to keep remembrances and registers of their families as by a tradition of their ancestors, after the manner of the Arabians and Iewes. And then began to appeare the distrust they had of them, all the Moores hauing beene commaunded by proclamation to keepe themselves within their dwellings and parishes, and for all them that were come out of the villages into the Albayzin to depart: the which was grievous vnto them, for that the inhabitants of that place being most Marchants and Artisans, they had need of many labourers and workmen for their ordinarie works, which they did usually draw out of the Countrey, and of their owne nation. They saw that the marquisse of Mondejar had leuiued 300 souldiers for the safetie (said he) of the towne, and to haue better assurance of the Moores residing there; if any one of them did owe any thing, he was presently subiect to arrest, and in like manner they that were cautious for any other, and by this means the prisons were full: The officers of iustice vnder colour of seeking for such as hauing no meanes to pay, were retired into the villages and mountains, they entered into the houses where they laid they were hidden, & committed many insolencies, yea they sought out old actions, for the which the Moores had compounded with their parties, and drew them into new suites. Finally, C as soone as they heard that this Edict was resolved in court, this nation was so basely respected by all the old Christians, both clergie and others, as euery man presumed to vex & oppress them, esteeming them no better than brut beasts; wherefore seeing themselves reduced to that miserable estate worse than if they had bin common slaues, & yet fearing worse, they concurred all in one mind to reuolt. Those of the Albayzin who had more to loose, incited the rest to begin, & they expected meanes from them of the Albayzin, and counsel how they should behaue themselves, for they were men of vnderstanding, ciuill, and better experienced in the world, than the inhabitants of the mountaines, whereas the force lay, but they needed counsel: yea there did ordinarily couerfe among them thieves, banished men, and such as were condemned by iustice, who desired nothing more than D to see some disordered sedition. There was a bold audacious Moore dwelling in the Albayzin, his name was Farrax Aben Farrax, a dicier by his trade, yet he said he was descended from the Abenxaraces sometimes famous knights among the Granadins. This man was as a trumpet to stirre vp the rest, he went & came to the mountaines, townes & villages where the Moores dwelt, & carried them aduice and aduertisements, how they should gouerne themselves in a generall reuolt, which was intended the 1. of Ianuarie 1568, the same day that the city of Granado had bin yeelded vp to the kings D. Ferdinand and D. Isabella, but being impatient to attend, he called before the time a troupe of thieves disguised after the Turkish manner, & made them to enter into the Albayzin by certain places where the walls were low & full of holes, on Christmas eue at night, when making a great noise, he awaked E them, shewing an ensigne displayed inuiting them to come with their armes into the street, for the time (said he) is come that we must shew our selues men of courage, for that there were a good number of Turks arrived in Alpuxarra, which were come to fauor them out of Barbarie. This alarme did trouble all the other quarters of the town, for that they were in ieioultie touching the execution of the Edict: for otherwise they had not bin moued, being no strange thing to heare a noise in the Albayzin, the Moores being accustomed to make all their sports with tumults. Notwithstanding all this, Farrax could not draw any one out of his house, they thinking he had been drunke, but they cried to him out of their windowes, that he should go sleep, and that they had nothing to do with his follies. This F troupe of thieves had walked vp and downe all the night, and no man durst goe & view them. In the end Farrax led them to the place from whence they came, and they were not followed: the next day it was said they were thieves that were come to spoile. There were some informations taken, and there was an order made that there should be gardes throughout the citie, whereunto the Moores should contribute. The suspicion increasing, and some insolencies being done to them of this nation, they came vnto the Presi-

Farrax Aben
Farrax first mo-tine of sedition.

1568

dent, beseeching him not to suffer them to be outraged, protesting that they neuer had will nor thought to rebell, that there was no reason to intangle them with other mens crimes, with whom they had no intelligence, and for caution of the innocencie of the Inhabitants of the Albayzin they offered, if it pleased him, that 200 of the chiefe amongst them would yeeld themselves prisoners: the which being at the first refused, was afterwards accepted, when they had somewhat discovered that they were all conspired together, and that they had intelligence with the Turkes of Alger, by a packet which was surprised: where there was found a book and letters which discovered much of their practises.

Superstitions among the Moores.

Among these people there were certaine fantastike and frantike spirites, which dispersed certain prophecies among the people, which they said were old, by the which they had a deliuerer promised them, who should deliuer them from the oppressions of the Christians, the which indeed were great and intollerable, to men whom they made beleue were free, and that they enioyed the Lawes equally with others. This nation thus tired, superstitious by nature, and nothing instructed in the Christian religion, had a suddaine desire in this persecution to call backe Mahomet. and to abhorre the name of Iesus Christ, whereupon they fell into open rebellion against the King and his magistrates, and the first murders which they committed vpon the Christians, were certaine Clerks yong prebendaries, which came from Vlcarr in the Alpuxarra, to Granado, to passe the holydaies there, as they had vsually done euerie yeere, and passing by the villages, they made good cheere, vnder colour that they did belong to the Iustice. Of the which they dispatched some, and then they did set vpon a troupe of 50 souldiers of the garrison of Adra, who went also to Granado with the like insolencies, whom they slue in a manner all. The marquisse of Mondejar, who was gone to Court to aduertise the King of the estate of the affaires, returned with commaundement to suppress the rebellion by armes, and the gouernours, lords, knights, townes and comminalties thereabouts had charge to assist him. Wherefore hauing taken aduice of the magistrates of the royall Audience and others of the citie, and especially of the archbishop, hee prepared himselfe to set vpon them that were already risen in confusion, and without order; but there being among them the abouenamed Farrax, one Daut, and Ferdinand of Cordona, and De Valor, a knight of the Moores, who said that hee was of the royall race of Aben Humega, descending from the prophet Atahomet, they assembled at Bresnar in the Alpuxarra, to make election of a head, where after much contention, they did choose this Ferdinand, to whom hauing giuen the title of a King, he called himselfe Muley Mahomet Aben Humega. Farrax, who would gladly haue bene, and had in a manner promised it himselfe, could not attaine vnto it, but was content to be Alguazil maior, which is the second dignitie, like to that of Constable. This Aben Humega was verie wel known in the city of Granado for his vanitie and other vices, which decreased not in this great aduancement. If we consider wel (by the report of such as had seene this war) the number of them that had rebelled, the expectation that infinite others would rebell, being of the same mind, if they had well managed the meanes which they had gathered together, as of Churches and Christians houses which they spoiled, the neerenesse of the kings of Fez and Maroc, and of the Turkes of Alger, together with the bad agreement which was betwixt the gouernours and the royall Iustice of Granado, and the neighbour provinces, who contended without all reason, touching their manner of proceeding against these mutines, euerie one seeking to make vse of his office, and to fill his purse with so many goodly confiscations, & rich preies which fell daily. Without doubt there was matters in this warre sufficient to haue ouerthrowne the Crowne of Spaine, if it had bene managed by men of more discretion and iudgement than Aben Humega, and Farrax Aben Farrax.

Aben Humega made king of the Moores rebellers.

It is not to be imagined what insolencies they committed in the first furie of their raigne. They slew all Christians males about ten yerres old that they could get, especially clergie me, with all Iudges & officers of iustice; the womē & children they made slaues, they spoiled churches & fired them with most of the houses, yea their own: so as they made the boroughs & good villages inhabitable, & in a short time grew sauege, liuing among woods and rocks, where they made their retreats, being almost inaccessible, drawing their wiues

and

1568

A and children after them, and abandoning them vpon any difficultie or let, without any feeling of loue or charitie. He might teame himselfe happie among the Spaniards, who beeing surprized in his house by Aben Humega men, did meet with some Moore of his acquaintance: and truly there were some, though very few, who moued with compassion, did hazard their liues to saue Christians, from whom they had receiued some pleasure, the which is not strange among reasonable creatures, seeing it is often seene among brut beasts. Farrax Aben Farrax hauing had charge to gather together the gold, siluer, and moueable goods which had bene abandoned to the spoyle, to make a stocke for the warre, and to buie armes in Barbarie (whereof they had great want) he committed so many insolencies and thefts, as afterwards he was not employed in any businesse, neither durst he shew himselfe before king Aben Humega, who hauing past like a violent stream, or rather a lightning by Locrin, Lanjaron, Orgiba, Pugneyra, Ferreyra, lubiles, Vxcarr, and other places of the valley of Sierra Neuada, hee was confirmed king at Andarax, whereas he made Aben Zigu Alcaide or Capitaine, and Michel de Roxas his father in law his Treasurer generall, and Hernando Caguer one of his Lieutenants or Marshalls: it is hee who saued most of the Christians from slaughter, and spared their goods in this warre. This tumultuarie king seeing himselfe followed, hee threatned the citie of Almerie, hee made Salobregna to wauer, with other maritime places, whither the mountaines and the valleys stretch, and in like manner all that coast which is vpon the declining of Sierra Vermeja, vnto Gibraltar and Maruela, so as in lesse than fiftene daies this mischeife ran aboute sixtie leagues, and the law of Atahomet was openly profest among them. Then the Moores dwelling in the Albayzin at Granado were in extreme danger, there beeing a great garrison, and souldiers comming thither daily from all parts: and (that which moued the Granadins to choler and compassion) many men and women came naked thither, hauing escaped the cruell hands of the Moores, for in all places both champane and mountaines, the old and new Christians had their dwellings mingled, but the Moores were more in number, and stronger. The Moores about Salobregna contained themselves long, for that their feat was not strong, as within the mountaines, neither did they reuolt, but through the violence that was done them by the kings souldiers, and by his Lieutenants, who were most insolent and disobedient to their Commanders in all this warre.

Farrax Aben Farrax disappointed.

Salobregna and Motril are vpon the sea, where there growes much good wine, the riches of the inhabitants. In the citie of Almerie neere vnto them were aboute fixe hundred families of the Moores, who did not stirre, and were preserued by the Gouernour: notwithstanding that, one Marc Ramir a Moore, with some other indiscreet men thereabouts sought to murder him. The Lords of villages, who had no houses of strength, did wisely to retire themselves, for whersoeuer they were the weaker, they were set vpon and slaine: as it happened to D. John Zapate, who sought to make it good in the Church of Guejares de Fondon, where he was forced and burnt with 150. men.

The Marquisse of Mondejar, and he of Velez, raised either of them an armie, by order from the Councell, and invaded the Moores, one by Granado, and the other by Baza, the Marquisse of Zenete bending towards the sea to Almerie. These two Commanders neuer ioyned during all this warre, although they came neere together vpon the declining of the mountaines that were betwixt them, which were in a manner plaine towards the West, for they were of very different humors; D. Lewis Fajardo marquisse of Velez was proud, ambitious, impatient of all superioritie, and bloodie: and hee of Mondejar was milde and courteous, seeking rather to persuade, than to force the rebels: the marquisse of Velez was suddaine in his exploits, he of Mondejar was staied, and did not aduance without great deliberation, and therefore he was taxed to be slowe, and to regard his owne priuate interest, for that he was Lord of many places in those mountaines, and other parts of the countrie, which were vnpeopled by this warre, to the preiudice of his rights and reuenues. The first lodging his campe made beeing gone to field; was at Alendin, and from thence to Padul, which is the first borough of the valley of Lecrin, hauing with him the nobility and the troupes of Granado and Andalusia: he of Velez, that of Murcia, Baza, and the neighbour places. In the absence of the marquisse of Mondejar Dispositions of the marquisse of Mondenar, & he of Velez, Generals against the Moores.

Nnnnn iij.

the

the Earle of Teudille his sonne commaunded in Granado for martiall matters, beeing lodged in the Alhambra, the Castle and royall Palace there. At Dureal a league from Padul Laurence d'Auila was lodged with the bands of seuen. Townes of the iurisdiction of Granado, and Gonsal d'Alcantara with a company of horse, making as it were the forward. They were charged in the night by a multitude of Moores, whereof Michel de Granado de Xaba was the chief, thinking to disorder them, but the souldiers made it good, and repulsed their enemies, of whom there were two hundred slaine, whereat Aben Humcia was in such a rage for this bad successe, as hee had a desire to cut off Xabas head. These two marquesses were not sole Commanders of the warre in that Countrey, for cuerie Gouvernour or Capitaine of a place would make enterprises of his owne head, imparting nothing vnto them, nor attending their commaundements, for euery man aimed at spoile. D. Garcia de Villaroel gouernour of Almerie went to field to surprize a troupe of Moores, which were assembled at Benahaduz, and threatened to besiege Almerie, whom he disperfed, and slue many of them, among other Brahen Casis their capitaine. There was with D. Garcia, D. Alphonso Habis de Vanegas a Moore, of the blood of the auncient kings of Granado, who had bene solicited by the rebells to be their King, the which hee reiected, and persisted faithfully in the seruice of king Philip.

Alphonso Habis de Vanegas a faithful Moore

The marquesse of Mondejar passing on into Alpuxarra, tooke the pace of Tablado by force, a place of importance for the passage, being betwixt two mountaines, where hee built a bridge ouer a very deepe valley, the which being broken, or kept, they cannot go from the one to the other, but must fetch a compasse of foure great leagues. The gard of this bridge was committed to Pedro d'Arroio with certaine companies, and then the armie marched towards Origiba, the which was abandoned by the Moores being amazed. Many women and children were freed, and they that had defended the Tower of that place seuentene dayes, where the Moores had giuen diuerse assaults, and reduced them to great want of victuals. There was the like deliuey of prisoners with the gaine of some booty made at Poqueira, where Aben Humcia had lodged with a great number of Moors, but they durst not stay. There they had newes that the garrison which they had left at Tablado had been surprised and cut in peeces with their Capitaine, who was found yet panting amongst the dead, two daies after, whenas the marquesse recovered this passage againe, without the which they cannot come nor goe from the campe to Granado. D. Alphonso de Reynoso was left there to keepe a more carefull gard, and had expresse commaundement to staie the souldiers which retired with their bootie without leaue: The greatest disorder which hindered this warre, was the disobedience of the new leuiued souldiers to their Commanders, who longed still to be at home when they had gotten any spoile: and it was a hard matter to stay them, for they had no pay. The Moores in like manner were without discipline, being ignorant of warre, and nothing apt to armes, yea most of them were vnarmed, labourers, shepheards, and Artisans, who could cast stones, and handle slings well; their captaines were not much more skilfull in their charges and duties, but being once acquainted with the Turkes they recovered Crossebowes, and harquebuses, and did learne to vse them. Their greatest feare in Spaine was, that they should haue intelligence, with the Turkes of Alger, and the Moores of Barbarie their neighbours, the which they could not preuent. The marquesse of Mondejar pursuing Aben Humcia, hee brought his armie to Pitres de Ferreira, whereas Ferdinand Caguer made offer of an accord, and continued it vpon all occasions; for hee was the least desperate among all the Captaines of the Moores. At this place of Pitres, the Moores fought and slew many of the marquesses men, but they presently left the place, and retired to lubiles, whereas Aben Humcia committed great cruelties, euen vpon the Moores of that place, who did not sodainly satisfie his desire. There was an old castle which they had rampired, with an intent to make it a fort, and their store-house for the warre, and had carried most of their spoyles thither, the which notwithstanding they could not defend: for although the greatest part of their forces were there, yet they had not the hearts to fight, and being to dislodge, they were readie, beeing pursued, to kill a great number of Christians, prisoners, of all ages, women and children, whose husbands and fathers they had slaine before, but some that had more humanitie hindred it; their retreat was to Vercheul.

Defeat and death of Pedro d'Arroio of the Moores.

A cheul. This miserable troupe of women and children came and presented themselves before the Marquesse, hideous, leane, bare, and halfe naked, praising God with teares for his comming and their deliuerance. The Moores which kept the castle fledde also; where they found three hundred men, and a thousand and fise hundred women, who were in like manner set at libertie: but it was vnhappy for many, yea for most of those poore women; for the campe beeing lodged; hauing placed most of those women in a Church, and such as could not enter beeing laid before it for that night, it happened that a disorderd souldier comming about midnight among them, sought to take away a maiden to abuse her, who being staied and defended by the other women, one of them drew the souldiers sword and hurt him: this villaine leauing his hold, began to crie out to amnes, saying, that there were Moores disguised and armed among those women which had hurt him in that manner; whereupon they came running in disorder, and without any further inquirie, discharged their peeces vpon these poore creatures, so as in a manner all they that were before the Church, were either slaine or sore hurt, those within it were preferred by the shutting of the doores: in the meane time the captaines came, and caused the massacre to cease. The truth of this fact beeing knowne, the marquesse was very much grieved, and caused many of these murdering souldiers to be hanged; and then he sent the rest of the women and children with a conuoy to Granado, where they receiued them, and gaue them great almes. This pittifull spectacle increased their hatred against the Moores dwelling in the Albayzin, whom they distrusted much, for they were held to be ten thousand men able to beare armes; and therefore the Earle of Teudilla, to be better assured, lodged souldiers in their houses: whereof thinking to complain, they were sharply reprehended; so as they repented that they had not reuolted when as Farrax did sollicite them.

Excesse of a disorderd souldier.

Moores of the Albayzin in great numbers.

Exploits of the marquesse of Velez.

Whilest that the Marquesse of Mondejar employed himselfe vertuously, to chase the Moores and their king, who were in the mountaines and strong places of Alpuxarra, hee of Velez with such men as he had, gathered together in the territories of Valencia, Murcia, Baza, Lorca, and other neere places, entred into the realme of Granado, by Tauernas, hauing fise thousand foot and three hundred good horse, and came and charged a troupe of Moores, who had fortified themselves at Guccijs, vnder a diuellish capitaine called Gorri: who, in vewe of the marquesse campe, caused many Christian men to be beheaded, whom he had kept prisoners, to expose them as a spectacle to them that should come first to assaile him; and then he dislodged without fighting.

The Christian armie marching towards Filix to besiege it, they were preuented by D. Garcia de Villaroel gouernour of Almerie, who would haue the honour to free this place, presuming that the Moores which held it; would abandon it as soone as they should see him approach, thinking it to be the marquesse his forward: but he was deceived, for hee found them ready to make head against him, beeing many; wherefore he retired with all speed to the marquesse his campe, to whom hee made his excuse; and gaue him to vnderstand, that among these Moores, there were Turkes come out of Barbarie to succour them: and then he gaue him a conuoy to returne vnto Almerie, from whence he might not long bee absent. The marquesse passing on, found the Moores which were come forth in battell, to incounter them which came to discouer them, and beeing come to fight, they found they were not those whom they sought, and knowing that it was the marquesse of Velez, who was a resolute man, and was called among them, Ybilis Arraezel Hadit, that is to say, a deuill with an iron head, their courage was somewhat quailed, yet they did fight, and did rallie themselves thrice together, but in the end they were forced to quit the place, and retire to the mountaines, hauing lost about seauen hundred men, and among them some women, which had fought desperately, three captaines, Fuley, Tezi, and the sonne of Porto Carrero de Xergal, where two of his sisters, maidens, died also. On the marquesse de Velez side, there were both slaine and hurt, but they did not publish the number.

Incounter at Filix.

The fort of Filix by this retreat was wonne, where they found much good stuffe, gold, siluer, filkes, pearle, victualles, and a great number of women and children Moores;

Moore, whom they had abandopd, wherewith the souldiers being enrich, they disbanded by troups to carrie their booties to their houses; wherefore the Marqueffe was forced to retire to fortifie his armie. They of Guadix defeated a troupe of Moores at the same time at Deyre, most of which had come out of the Marquifate of Zenete: they slue 400 men, and tooke about 1000 women & children, with great spoiles. The chief of this enterprife was Pedro Arias d'Avila, and they said it was one of the best exploits of all this warre.

King Aben Humeia being pursued by the marqueffe of Mondejar, and was then at Vxixar, a place situated in the middelt of Alpuxarra, the which he had fortified as an assured retreat, and had about him 6000 men; yet at the approach of the marqueffe, this man who was neither valiant nor of any commaund, retired with his troups to Palerne. Fernand el Cagner continued still his practises of peace, so as he had conference with Ierome d'Apont and Iohn Sanchez: And D. Alphonso de Granado Venega, wrought uppon the marqueffe word and promise, as he drew Aben Humeia to a parle with him, but at the noise of some shot inconsiderately discharged, hee was so amazed, and fell into such distrust, as he fled away, neither was it possible to bring him backe againe; and in this perturbation he slew his father in law Mibel de Roxas, and caused some other chiefe Moores to be slaine, saying that they would haue betrayed him: he put away his wife, and swore that he would not leaue one of the familie of Roxas aliue, the which did purchase him many enemies, and he blemished his reputation more, when he abandoned the fort of Palerne, and all that hee had, retiring into the most desert places of the mountaines. The marqueffe being come to Palerne, he took the mother and sisters of the base king, with many other women of qualitie Moores, and set free a great number of Christians that were captiues, & from thence hee led his armie towards Andarax. That of the marqueffe of Velez being somewhat repaired, was then at Ohanes, neere vnto the other, where there were many Moores gathered together, whom hee did fight withall, and disperst: and it was thought that the two armies should haue ioyned, and that the marqueffe of Velez should haue bene sole commaunder, whereunto hee did aspire, and the souldiers desired it, but either of them went his course. The marqueffe of Mondejar returned to Vxixar. One of the goodliest booties of this warre, fell into the hands of D. Garcia de Villaroel, and of D. Francisco de Cordona, being ioyned with the forces of Almerie, and others whom they led against the Moores, who had fortified at Inox, in rockes that were almost inaccessible: for hauing dislodged them they found to the value of about 500000 crownes: but the diuision of this prey bred great dissention among them.

Profit was the matter they chiefly aynted at that went to this warre, except the Marqueffe of Mondejar, who tended to peace, and to saue the Moores that were reuolted, soliciting them rather to acknowledge their faults, and to shew themselves worthe of pardon, than to ruine them by armes, and therefore hee was not pleasing to the souldiers. Hauing led his armie to Guajares of the iurisdiction of Salobregna, whither many Moores had retired themselves, and fortified among the rockes and precipices (which were they that first receiued the Turks and Moores that came to succour them out of Barbary) hee sent to discover them, but to their losse that went, being in a manner all slaine; those of name and qualitie were Lewis Ponce de Leon, Augustin Venegas, Gonsalo de Oruena, the visitor Ronquillo and Iohn de Villaroel: being charged, the next day they made great resistance, but at night they retired, leauing their old men in that lodging, with many women and children, whom the marqueffe (being incensed with the losse he had the day before) caused to be slaine in his presence, contrary to his manner. The rockes, woods, & caues (being vnurnished of all prouision for victualles) were no fit places to entertaine great numbers of Moores, who had such great troups of women, children & slaues with them, as if they had bin prest by arms, hunger & cold, with other necessities, would haue forced them often to haue changed their lodgings; & they that came out of Barbary might easily foresee, that the end of their reuolt must needs be death or captiuitie: seeing they had no means to prouide better retreats to keepe their goods, wiues, & children, nor any good fort neere vnto the sea, with victuals and artillery to maintaine a siege at all euents, and in the meane time to refresh themselves there, & to retire such as were wounded, & to repaire themselves

Aben Humeia
killes his father in law and other Moores.

Bootie taken from the Moores

Defeat of Christians.

crueitie of the marqueffe of Mondejar.

A themselves after any losse: war is maintained by this means, & when there is question of any accord, it is concluded with better conditions. These defects being knowne, was the cause that the succors which they had frō Afrik, being al volūtaries, were weak & came slowly: & they that came once to see it, were soon distastd, & being once returned came no more, & dissuaded others. Finally, there appeared no other end in this nation, of their reuolt, but to powre forth their malice in reuenging themselves most cruely vpon the Christians which they met, for the wrongs and iniuries which they had receiued, killing, burning, and murdering without iudgement or foresight of that which might happen, and then they died content, without either loue, or naturall affection to their wiues and small children, whom they made to trot after them like beasts, and vpon the least crosse they did abandon them without griefe. This warre had continued three moneths, when as king Philip by some good inspiration considering the desolation of the countrie, and the innocencie of many small infants which could not distinguish the right hand from the left, he made a declaration, that his meaning was not that men children vnder tenne years old, and women vnder eleuen should be reputed slaues, commanding them to receiue all Moores that would submit themselves to his mercie, and forbidding them to offer any violence to those that had contained themselves in peace. By these means many being forced by hunger and other discommodities, submitted themselves; who being ioyned to deliuer vp their armes, they brought old crosse-bowes, halfe pikes, and such like weapons, broken, and of no vse: and when they demanded where there other armes were, C which they vsed in encounters, they said that the strangers, and such as would not submit themselves had taken them away. Notwithstanding these good orders set downe by the king, the souldiers being insolent and couetous, did them infinit mischeifs, carrying many away, especially women: not onely out of villages, but of those which they found in the citie, euen in view of the magistrates, the which all men of honour blamed and detested; yea many strangers which frequented in the citie of Granado, for the commerce, said, that it would be a hard matter for Spaniards to make the Moores good Christians, seeing they shewed in their actions, that they were not so themselves, and that there was more inhumanitie in their behauiours, than in the most barbarous Pirats of Afrike.

D Aben Humeia hauing taken some breath, resolved to continue the warre, sending to intreat Plucyaly to giue him some succours. In the meane time, hee and Fernand Cagner came sometimes in the night to solace themselves with them that were reduced, and who had safegards to remaine in their houses; whereof the marqueffe being aduertised, he meant to haue them watcht and taken: but they had some notice thereof, and stood vpon their guards. They did foresee that the Spring being come, the warre would bee more difficult, both for that the Moore should find themselves lesse incommodated in their holes and sauage retreats, as also for that the sea would be more nauigable, and easie to passe the Moores and Turkes out of Barbarie, which prepared to come to their succours; wherefore the marqueffe of Mondejar sent D. Alphonso de Granado Venegas to Court, to acquaint the king with the estate of those affaires, and to tell him what prouisions he thought necessarie to end those warres; and that if it pleased his Maiestie to come vnto Granado, it may be it would be of more force than any other thing, and that howsoever, hee must cause the sea to be kept, and the passage to bee stoppt. The king thinking that his presence was not so necessarie, was counselled to send D. Iohn of Austria his brother thither, the respect of whom would make the Commanders agree better. The which being concluded, commaundement was giuen to D. Lewis de Requesens great Commandeur of Castille, who was then Embassador at Rome for king Philip, being also Lieutenant at sea vnder D. Iohn, that hee should come with the galleys into Spaine, and bring with him the regiment of old souldiers which were at Naples; that being ioyned with D. Sancho de Leua, hee might stoppe the passage of the Turkes and Moores which came out of Barbarie.

As soone as it was knowne at Granado, and in the countrie where the warre was, that D. Iohn of Austria was appointed lieutenant for the king there, all the captains of towns & castles, & those that were in the armies, with their souldiers, fought to make worke for D.

Iohn

Moores vnna-turall.

Pardon for the Moors proclaimed.

Insolencie of the king's souldiers.

1568

Disobedience and insouciencies of Christian souldiers.Defeat of Christians.

John, committing all excesses, by spoiling, ransacking, and murdering: for they thought that D. John would have better discipline observed in the armies. D. Aluar Flores, and Antonie d'Aula of Madrid, vnder colour of going to surprize Aben Humeia at Valor, whither they said he should come in the night to a certaine marriage, they spoiled all the places where they past, notwithstanding that the Moores which inhabited them had safegards, and made them the best cheere they could. Being come to Valor, they found not Aben Humeia, but they did ransome all the Moores of that place, notwithstanding that they had submitted themselves to the kings obedience, carrying away their wives and children as slaues, in contempt of the Kings Proclamation. In their returne they were charged and defeated, and the prisoners rescued. There were lost about a thousand souldiers with their captaines, whereof the Moores sent to make great excuses to the marquisse of Mondejar, offering to yeeld vp the armes which they had taken: the marquisse answered them, that they had done well, and that they should doe so to all them that should offer them violence, against his Maiesties protection and safeguard. Diego Gasca a cholericke captaine, being incensed that they of Turon had slain leuen of his souldiers which had gone forth to teale, led his companie thither to disarme them, and to be reuenged: searching in a darke caue of a house, where there were certaine Moores hidden, he was slaine; whereupon his souldiers spoiled and set fire of the borough, slue a hundred and twentie Moores, and carried away the women. A Curat of Tortijos being grieued to see the Moores of the mountaine of Filabres liue in peace, for they had not reuolted, he led certaine leud persons with him, who surprizing them on a suddaine, spoiled them: others did the like at Bayarca, and at Picena, whereas they slue three of the marquisse's gards, being sent thither to preferue them: but as they retired, carrying away many women and children, and much cattell, the Moores which had escaped, and had giuen the alarme to their neighbours, crost them in their waies and slue them all.

At Granado hatred did so transport some of the Iustice, as they suffered the prisoners in the gaole to be armed, to kill the Moores of the Albayzin, who had put themselves in to prison, as hostages in the beginning of the troubles, as wee haue said, to whom they carried swords and other weapons secretly in the night, and bruted it abroad that Aben Humeia had intelligence, with the Moores of the Albayzin, to surprize the citie: and afterwards in the night they cried to armes, for that towards Sierra Neuada, they had seen a fire, to answer a signe which had bene giuen out of some house of the Albayzin: whether it were true or not, the people ranne to the prisons, where finding the Christian prisoners armed, and in fight with the Moores, who had no armes, ioyning with them they slue a hundred and tenne, which were of the chiefe and richest Moores of the citie: yet they durst not set vpon the Albayzin, for that in euery house there were souldiers lodged, which were not of that partie. It was said, that some of them that were murdered, were found circumsised, which made the Atturney generall demand confiscation of their goods, whereby their wives and children were deprived. It was thought for certaine that this excess had bene committed by the instigation of the superiours. A good part of the Alpuxarres was in a manner pacified, but the captaines of the garrisons which were there, and in other neigbbour places, as at Almerie, Salobregna, and such like forts, gouerning themselves, as hath bene said, committed such cruelties and thefts indifferently vpon the one and the other, attending the coming of D. John of Austria, as they that had laid aside armes, and submitted themselves, reuolted againe, and ioyned with Aben Humeia, who became so strong and glorious, as hee bragd that he would not onely defend the mountaines, but also besiege the citie of Granado.

D. John d'Austria made his entrie the sixt of April, 1569, being accompanied by the marquisse of Mondejar, by D. John de Carnaial, D. Tello Gonsall d'Aguilar, Gonsalo Chacon, the Earle of Miranda, with many other noble men and knights: the marquisse of Velez would not bee there. Before his lodging there presented themselves about foure hundred women, widowes, and many poore orphans, Christians, which had bene in the Moores hands, crying and lamenting in most miserable manner, and demanding iustice and reuenge for their fathers and husbands which had bene murdered, so as they could hardly make them retire; but it was done of purpose. The Moores dwelling

1569
D. John de Austria comes to Granado.

1568.

A in the Albayzin deputed some vnto him, to make their innocency knowne, and yet they were ill intreated; but especially, they made great complaint of the massacre committed of their kinsmen in the prisons, as it were in the kings bosome, into the which they had willingly put themselves. D. John heard them, and made shew that this act displeased him, comforting and assuring them. He had a Councell appointed him, whereof were the Duke of Sessia, the marquisse of Mondejar, D. Lewis de Quixada President of the Councell of the Indies, D. Pedro de Desá President of the royall Audience of Granado, and the Archbishop of Granado, in cases of conscience: all these resolved how they should proceed in this warre. The marquisse of Mondejar persisting in his opinion, said, that they must drawe the Moores to the Christian religion by instruction and good examples, and to the Kings obedience in doing them iustice, and that they should end the warre by some good accord: hee held it fit they should drawe them out of the mountaines, and places of strength, and giue them dwellings in the champane countrie; or if they left them in their auncients habitations, they should place good garrisons there at their charge. The President Desá said, that first of all they should cleanse the citie of Granado of the Moorish nation, and to send them with their families to dwell farther off, to the end they should not aide the rebels, as they had done secretly, with armes, counsell, and other things, and that they should take exemplarie punishment of some that had slaine Christians, and spoiled Churches, and begin first with the inhabitants of Albuuel, a place from whence the Moores were releued, with victuals and other commodities. Most were of opinion, that they should continue the warres, and that occasions would giue them necessarie and fit aduice. There were three regiments leuiued vnder Antonio Moreno, Hernand de Orunna, and Francis de Mendoza of Alcala de Henares. There was order taken also for the gouernment of the townes and forts, by new Election, or confirmation of those that were in charge, all being commanded to containe their souldiers, and to obey the ordinances vpon great paines. The marquisse of Velez, who was not come to D. John, sent him a note what he had done in his diuision, and what hee thought remained to be done: hee had staid with his armie at Terques, and had a designe to march toward Andarax, but D. John sent a Post to stay him. He had begunne a fort at Rauaha, the which was ouerthrowne by the Moores, who slue him, a hundred and threescore souldiers, and tooke an Ensigne; whereat D. John was very much discontented. Aben Humeia was aduertised of all the consultations and resolutions which were taken at Granado, by them of the Albayzin, and accordingly made provision for the warre, and for those places which hee had an intent to defend. Hee also made three regiments vnder Hanon de Cucujar, Futey de Lautera, and Zerxa de Cuair, Captaines Moores. Hee made his store-house for the waire at Oigiba, hee appointed a market at Vxixar of Albereta; whither they did bring victuals and marchandise, and marchants came from Tetuan in the realme of Fez, to sell armes and other commodities. He made Rio d'Almansora Gouernour of that Quarter which ioyned vpon the Marquisate of Zenete, and Jerome Malech of the frontier of Quadix and Bafa. At Poqueira and Ferreira Diego Lopes Aben Aboa, vpon the frontier of Oigiba Michel de Granado Xaba, on the iurisdiction of Luxar and Marchena Sierra de Filabres Gadoi, and of the river of Almerie Aben Mezquenui was gouernour, in the valley of Locrin, and the frontier of Almunexar, Salobregna and Motril, he placed Gironcillo and Rendal for gouernours: to all which hee gaue Letters Parents signed by himselfe, and with a royall seale. There were of his priue Councell, Don Ferdinand el Caguer, Dalay Moxarraf, Calderon of Vxixar, and Hernand Habagui: Farrax Aben Farrax was in disgrace, and came no more in the Kings Presence, who had threatened to haue him hanged as a thief.

F Besides these provisions, Aben Humeia did hope to bee fortified by the Xeriffe Abdalla king of Maroc and Fez; and by Flucially gouernour of Algier, whom he did sollicite and intreat, making them great promises, and assuring him that hee should bee succoured by the great Turkes armie, which charge Flucially had taken vpon him. Hee beganne the warre against Don John by the taking of Peca, whither hee ledde five thousand men, but hee could not take the Castle; and there were

Counsellors about
D. John of Austria.Aduice of the Marquisse of Mondejar.Aduice of the President
Desá.Defeat of Christians.Captaines and Counsellors to the Moorish
king.

1569

were many light skirmishes made on either side. The great Commander who had charge to bring the galleys, and the regiment of Naples into Spaine, had drawne together 24 galleys, in the port of Genoua, with some other vessels, & went to sea in a doubtful time, contrarie to the aduice of the Mariners; for that (said he) they had need of him in Spaine: but he was no sooner at sea, but hee was ouertaken with so furious a tempest, as some of his vessels perished with their burdens, and the rest were so dispersed, some into Sardinia, some into Sicilie, and some else-where, as all that preparation proved vnprofitable. The great Commander was by chance cast vpon the Island of Maiorca, and so he past from Palamos into Cattelogne, so as the passage was open for some daies out of Barbarie into Spaine.

Shipwrecke of the great Commanders fleet.

Defeat of Moors.

Armie of Aben Humeya defeated.

Pegnon of Fre-giliana taken by the great Commander.

The mountaine of Bentonis is in the countrie of Veles Malaga, vpon the sea towards the South, a countrie fertill in wines, which they transport into England, and Flanders; by which traffike the inhabitants were rich: most of which had their beginning from Moores, and they did reckon 22. Burroughs well peopled and inhabited: the which had not risen, vntill that vpon certaine reports the officers of Iustice began to vex them; saying, that they were aduertised they had commerce and intelligence with Aben Humeya: Canilles of Azeitunes is in this countrie, a strong place and of importance, belonging vnto the Marquesse of Comare, and there is a certaine Rocke, called Fregiliana the old, whither a good number of Moores were retired, and had there fortified themselves: whom Arenalo de Cusao de Veles would go and assaile, but he was repulst with the losse of most of his men.

The Marquesse of Veles being at Verja in the country of Almerie with a good strong armie, Aben Humeya who had ten thousand men, and among them some Turkes, came and charged him courageously, and forced the first gards and lodging of his campe, putting all into disorder: the which was repaired by the diligence of souldiers well disciplined, who recovered their places of armes, and repulst this violence of the Moores valiantly, killing about a thousand and five hundred as they retired in disorder. There were among the Turkes of Aben Humeyas armie, many which carried girlands of flowers vpon their heads, saying, that they were sent thither to reuenge Mahomets Martyrs.

The Marquesse had about twelue thousand fighting men, and being lodged at Adra, he had commandement to enter into Alpuxarra, where hee came to fight with the Moores at Vxicar, and then he charged Aben Humeya at Valor, who was not much weaker in number then he, yet he was put to rout; but the Marquesse was presently forced to retire: for the mischiefe was, that as soone as the souldiers had taken any spoyle, they stole away to carrie it to their houses. Through this disorder there remained not three thousand men in his campe. D. Antonie de Luna sackt Albunuela, according to the aduice of the President D. Pedro de Desfa, where he made a great spoyle of goods, and tooke about a thousand and five hundred prisoners. According to the ancient custome, the kings of Spaine should haue the fift of all the spoyle, but they made him bad reckonings. The commander of Castille came in the end to the road of Veles Malaga, with such Spanish foot as he could bring out of Italie, and did presently inuest Pegnon de Fregiliana: there were some good Captaines with him, D. Pedro and D. Martin de Padilla, D. John de Cardenas brother to the Earle of Miranda, D. Pedro de Zuniga, with others. The Moores which were lodged there, in a manner without armes, defended themselves notwithstanding courageously, and at the first assault slue Pedro de Sandoval, and four hundred souldiers, and wounded double the number: but the Spaniards continuing their assaults with great obstinacie, in the end they forced it, and of foure thousand Moores that were within the place, there were neere two thousand slaine, the rest escaped, casting themselves desperately downe the rockes, and many women with them, leaping downe the precipices like goates, hauing their infants tied at their backs. There were women slaine in these combats which made head against the assaillants as courageously as if they had bene old souldiers. There was also found within the fort three thousand foules, old men, women, and children, with much cattel, and great store of bootie.

The riuer of Almanfora is also a good and fertill countrie; but the Moores which dwelt there had not rebelled, vntill that they were forced by the insolency of the souldiers,

who

whb sought nothing else but to make them disobedient, by some opposition or defiance, against their insolencies and villaines.

This riuer takes its beginning from a fountaine called Fuen Caliente; and falls into the Sea a league from Vera: Veles Rubio and Veles Blanco are in this Countrie, which is great, and hath many habitations bordering vpon Baza, on the North side, it hath the Sea vpon the South; full of old Castles and strong by situation: There entered into this Countrie in Iune foure thousand Moores, of the rebels, to counter-uaunce them that would reuolt, and to rout out the rest. First they came to Porcenia, where they found not any Christians of the inhabitants; for being aduertised by a certaine Priest, they were fled away.

Jerome Malache and Hernon of Cucillar assailed the Castle of Seron, which did belong to the Marquesse of Villena; this place, that of Oria, and las Cueuas had hold good, all the rest being reuolted. Seron being besieged, D. Antonie Henriquez, brother to the Lord of that place, attempted to relieve it with five hundred foot, and sixtie horse, but hee was chased away, lost two hundred men vpon the place, and scryed in rout. In this charge the Moores got great store of armes, whereof they had good need.

Diego de Aluarez, who was Captaine of the place went forth to seeke succours, but he was taken, the which being knowne to the besieged, they yielded to the Moores, who slue one hundred and fiftie men that were within it, and made eightie women slaues. D. John de Austria furnished Veles and Oria, and gaue the charge to D. John de Hara. And for that they were out of doubt, that the Moores which inhabited in the Albayzin, and other parts of the citie, gaue intelligence to them that made warre in the Alpuxarres and other places, they put them out of the Towne the three and twentieth of Iune. All were gathered together in the royall Hospitall, which is a great building, made by Queen Isabella of Castille without the citie, and there a Register was taken of their houses & goods, which they left to their great grief, for they were very well lodged, being men of means; and they were dispersed into Andalusia; the which bred a great confusion in their affaires. Aben Humeya came neere vnto Almerie, threatening to besiege it, he made many skirmishes about it, & towards Safobregna; but he had not one peece of Ordnance. Hee wrote vnto D. John de Austria, intreating him to send him his father & his brother who were prisoners in Granada, and in a manner threatening him, but he did not much regard it.

To hasten the Turkes succours, without the which no enterprise could succeed well; hee sent Ferdinand Habaqui to Alger, whereas Vlucially made a proclamation, that all men that would might goe freely to this warre, and many presenting themselves, hee staied them, to carrie them to Tunis. Yet hee pardoned all malefactors and banished men: and of this sort of people Habaqui ledde foure hundred Marquetuziers with him, vnder the commaund of a Turke called Hosein, and of a brother of his, who imbarked in eight foists laden with munition and armes. Hosein who was an aduancing souldier, cunning, and politike, visited the riuers of Almanfora, and of Almanor, Sierra Filabres; and all the Alpuxarres; hee found meanes also to enter into the Citie of Granada, hee was at Guadix and at Baza without discourie and then returned into Barbarie, laden with presents: for hee promised to goe to Constantinople, to make report vnto his Lord what hee had seene of the oppressions and miseries of the Moores in Spaine. Aben Humeya had a designe vpon the towne of Vera; being commodious for the Turkes descent, but it was releued by them of Baza; He ouerranne the Countrie; burnt Cueuas; and spoyled the gardens of the Marquesse de Veles Lord of that place, hauing about ten thousand men in his traine. But while he doth these exploits with more presumption and vanitie to his own then hurt to the enemy, seeking his pleasures without respect of person, letting them know that his will was a Lawe, certaine Captaines were offended therewith, whereof hee that was most incensed was Diego Aluarez, whose cousin Aben Humeya held by force for his Concubine, both hee and the rest calling to minde the manie cruelties which hee had committed, namely the murder of Michel Bonar; his father in law, of Raphack Arcos, and other Moores of name: whereupon they conspired to kill him

Ooooo

and Insolencie of the Spaniards

makes the Moors reuolt.

Some taken by
the Moores.

Moores put out of Granada.

Turkes comes to succour the Moors in Spaine.

1569

and to doe it with more colour, they published certaine letters which hee had written to D. Alfonso de Granado, and other negotiators of peace, the which they had kept and opened, accusing him that hee would abandon the Moores, and betray them. They did also counterfeit a letter in his name, directed to Aben Abou, commanding him to kill the Captaine of the Turkes, that were come out of Barbarie to his succours: upon certaine reasons they shewed this letter vnto the Turkes, whereat Aben Abou was amazed, who thought verily that hee had written them, whereat the whole company being incensed, they went to Andarax (where hee was with his Concubine, who was acquainted with this plot :) there they tooke him, and strangled him, publishing in an assemblie of the Captaines the causes of this execution, the which they disguised in such sort, as it was allowed by them, choosing in his place Diego Lopez Aben Abou to raigne ouer them, a cruell man, but hee had more iudgement and gouernment than the other, so as D. John de Austria had more cause to thinke seriously of the affaires of the war. Hee gaue the charge of the Riuer of Almerie, Bolodui, Almanfora, Sierra de Balsa, and Filabres, and of the Marquissate of Zenete to Urbane Malech and to Xoabi; and Sierra Neuada, the land of Velez, the Alpuxarres, and the Valley of Montotojo of Granado, to Elascien de Guejar. Hee sent presents to Vlucialy, and to the Mosti of Constantinople, to keepe him in grace with the great Turke, and to bee a meane for some succours: he made a regiment of foure thousand men for his gard, whereof a thousand should be alwaies in gard. At his election he found tenne thousand men in the armie, and among them fix hundred Turkes.

The Marquesse of Mondejar at that time left the affairs of Granado, & went to Valencia, where he was appointed viceroy, in which charge he continued not long, but past to Naples to gouern there with like dignitie. The duke of Sesse was chief of the armie which the marquesse was wont to lead, who releued the Garrison of Origiba, which Aben Abou the new king besieged, and kept the pace of Lantjaron, where there was a great skirmish, the which continued long, through the Turkes valour, in the which there were many slaine of either part. Origiba was abandoned by the commandement of D. John, who sent the Captaine of that place with his men to Motril.

In the Dukes armie, there were many Noble men of marke, as Pagan Doria, brother to John Andrew, D. Gabriel, and Lewis de Cordona, D. Lewis de Cardane, and others, which armie was appointed to cense the Alpuxarra. In the other part whereas the marquesse of Veles made warre, D. John would commaund in person, having Malech and Xoabi to make head against him. In these Christian armies there were certaine courageous Monkes marching in the head of the troupes, who held a Crucifex in one hand and a naked sword in the other.

The Moores attempted Galere, a strong place of situation, belonging to Eurigue, a league from Guescar, and tooke it. They went to besiege Oria, but they of Lorca their neighbours (who were alwaies good souldiers) came thither, then foure hundred Moores, raised the seige, and carried away foue Ensignes. Malech marcht with the bodie of his armie by the riuer of Almanfora, D. John led his by that of Xenil: this Riuer runnes by Piulllos, and enters into an other called Aguasblancas, which together passing by the village of Cene, runne towards Granado; and betwixt these two riuers is the Mountaine of Guejar, one of the descents of Sierra Neuada, in the which there kept about foure thousand Moores vnder the Captaines Xoabi, Choconeillo, Macox, and Moxixar, who ranne euen to the gates of Granado: D. John made them lodge and retire farther into the mountaines of Sierra Neuada.

Farrax Aben Farrax was among the Moores that were at Guejar, in poore and miserable estate, of whose aduentures it is fit to make some little mention. Being in disgrace with king Aben Humeis, and put from all affaires, his miserie had brought him to that despaire, as hee was ready to yeeld himselfe to the Marquesse of Mondejar, who without doubt had put him to an exemplarie death: being in suspence, and having changed his minde, hee thought it better to yeeld himselfe vnto the Inquisition, thinking that making his accustomed submissions, he should haue his life saved at the least. There was a

Moore

Death of King
Aben Humeis.Aben Abou chosen
king of the Rebells.Galere taken by the Moores.

Moores defeated.

Farrax Aben
Farrax, his miserable estate.

1569

A Moore with him which had beene his companion in the art of dying, to whom hauing imparted this his designe, exhorting him to doe the like (for hee was no lesse culpable than he) he liked well of it, and was content to go before to treat with them of the Inquisition for them both. Farrax hauing instructed him, being to depart that night, and therefore they were retired into a valley couered with wood to keepe their businesse more secret, after that he had discoursed long, & reiterated his instructions to this Moore, he fel a sleep in the wood, the other seeing him fast, thought that he should make his peace better if hee slue him, and being resolu'd, hee tooke a great stone wherewith he gaue him so many blowes vpon the head, face, and bodie, as hee left him for dead, and then he went as it is to bee coniectured to Granado.

B Farrax being thus pittifully handled, remained two daies neither dead nor aliue in that Vallie, whereas two Moores passing by, found him, whilest hee yet breathed, and not knowing what hee was, but onely finding that hee was a Moore, they laied him for pittie sake vpon one of their horses, and carried him to Guejar, where hee was lookt vnto and cured; but hee remained so disfigured as his visage had scarce any shape of a mans, and in this estate hee followed the troupes, liuing of almes, being known of few men. This was the reward of the chiefe authour of the Moores rebellion.

Returning to Aben Abou: he had a intent to gather the Oliues vpon the riuer of Boldui, hauing sent a number of Moorish women thither, with a gard of eight hundred souldiers; but they were no good gardians, for being charged by the Marquesse of Velez, they fled with the losse of two hundred of their men, slain vpon the place, and all their women were taken. Guescar was also relieved by the Marquesse, who slue about fiftie hundred of the Moores. Winter broght many discommodities both to the one and the other, yet the Marquesse of Velez held Galere alwaies inuested; but seeing in the Spring that D. John would come and besiege it himselfe, he retired: for he was so ambitious as he would haue the honor of euerie thing that was done where he was. The body of D. Johns armie which was inteded against the fort of Galere, was made at Guescar, D. John being at Balsa, which is 7 leagues off, where he prouided for all things necessarie. Galere was but a borough without any wall, but seated among rockes which couered it, being enuironed with

D deep precipices, the which the Moores by traucses and barracadoes had made in a maner impenetrable, and in these deep bottomes the riuer ran, whereas they of the Borough were forced to fetch their water; and to the end they might goe thither without danger, the Moores had made a way like a wall, and by this meane they did water safely. There were three thousand Moores and Turkes to defend this fort. The church without the borough had a high Tower, which serued them both for a watch and a Citadell. D. John brought his armie thither, and hauing made there batteries, he presently took this church by one of them. But when he came to the Borough, there was great difficultie to batter it, by reason of the rockes which did couer it. It was so well defended, as the Spaniards were many times out of hope to take it: but obstinacy staied them, and made them to continue their

E assaults furiously, so as in the end they took it by force, being fauoured by three mines, which plaid happily to the great losse of the besieged, who abandoned the place, & sought to escape by the rockes and precipices; there were 2400 Moores and Turkes slaine, and a great booty taken of gold, siluer, and other moucables, with great store of come. There were many women Moores found there, but for that the Souldiers lingred after them, D. John caused them all to be slaine in his presence. There were 4500 Christian women and Children set at libertie, as well those of the Borough, as others which they had brought from Oria, Castileije & other places thereabouts: This victorie was dearly bought, for D. John of Austria lost many men, but the number is not specified; but of captaines and men of mark, there were slaine at sundry assaults, Martin de Lorite, John de Magueda, Baltazar

F de Aranda, Alfonso Beltram, Charles and Frederike of Antillon, D. John d' Castille, D. Anthony d' Gouernas, Abarca and others. Of wounded were Pedro d' Padilla, Pagan Doria, the Marquesse of Fauara, D. Lewis Henriques, D. Lewis d' Auila, D. Pedro de Sotomator, D. Diego Vazques de Atugna, Bernardin of Quixada, with many Lieutenants and Ensignes. This place being wonne, D. John sent to view Seron, but hee lost above fise hundred men. D. Lope de Figueroa master of the Campe, was charged in another place

O o o o o j.

Defeat of Moores.Galere besieged and taken.Women Moores masacred.Spaniards of account slaine at Galere by
the Moores.

place by fixe thousand Moores, led by Habaqui and Malesh, who got armes to arme aboute a thousand men. Lewis de Quixada was wounded there, whereof hee dyed soone after: D. John had a shot on his Caske: but it was of good prooffe.

1570

The duke of Sesses armie entred the Alpuxarres, in March one thousand five hundred and seentie, by Padal, to goe vnto Orgiba. The Moores chiefe strength was at Andarax with their king Aben Aboo, who had set good gards at Lanjaron, and in the West quarter were Rendal and Macox, two Captaines, with foure thousand Moores. The duke had diuers skirmishes about Lanjaron, which the Moores held, but in the end they abandoned it. After which hee led his army to Albacete of Orgiba. In these incounteres there was a Turkish Harquebuse taken, the Canon wherof was ten spannes long, carrying a bullet which weighed an ounce and an halfe.

The Moores which were in the Castle of Velez of Benandalla seeing themselves inuaded by the Dukes armie, they corrupted some Souldiers of his campe, who suffered them to escape with their women and what else they could carrie away. But being in a place of safetie, they returned vnto the passages betwixt Velez and the campe, where they spoiled and slue many passengers, and so recompensed themselves largely of their losses. The fort of Lontegi was also taken from them, but some troupes going from Aben Aboos campe, charged a conuoy which came to the dukes campe, and carried away many beafts with their burthens, and had made spoile of all, if they had not been relieved in time.

Conuoy defeated by the Moores.

The two armies coasted one another for a time amidst these mountaines, skirmishing vnto Campuxan, the Moores bending towards Subiles, and the duke to Portillo and Vixar. The duke had in his Campe about eight thousand men, Aben Aboo had twelue thousand. The duke to discharge his armie of many vnprofitable mouths, as souldiers that were hurt, whome hee sent to Guadix to be cured, with some women and children, whome hee had rescued from the Moores, and a good number of Moores prisoners, sent away the Marquesse of Fawara, with a thousand foot, and one hundred horse to gard them, and to bring backe certaine horses, and mules laden with victuals to the campe: but the Marquesse fell into an ambush which Piceni and Martel de Zenete Captaines among the Moores had laied for him, where hee lost all his baggage, and eight hundred of his souldiers, the which fell out vnprofitably, for the dukes armie was in some extremitie for want of victuals, and therefore fought to passe to Adra, being alwaies coasted by the Moores, who began to growe souldiers vnder this new king. D. John of Austria had better successe: for he fought with Habaqui, who was come with seuen thousand Moores to raise him from Seron, and defeated him. At that time Ierome Malesh one of their best captaines died of sicknes. Throgh the fauor of this victorie D. John took Seron and Tyole; he chased the Moores from Porchena, and then marcht towards Andarax, to seeke out the Moores king with their armie: betwixt these two armies there were many skirmishes with diuers euents.

Christians defeated by the Moores.

Moores defeated by D. John.

In the meane time king Philip came vnto Cordoua, being very desirous to haue this warre ended in one sort or other: for hee was aduertised that the Turke had great designs vpon Italie, and for this cause had broken the peace with the Venetians, the king being solicited by them and other Potentates in Italie, and by continuall letters from the Pope to ioyne in league with them. Wherefore being forced to fend his gallies, hee must of necessitie send his Brother D. John, whome hee was desirous to aduance. The Moores who were also aduertised of these things, and therefore out of hope to be relieved by the Turke, who had other enterprises in his braine, desired, no lesse than the king, to enter into some treatie of peace. The Gallies and Foistes of Barbarie came no more to succour them: three galeots which had discharged, come armes, & Arabian books, Alcarons and other, in the road of Dalias, had bin discovered and taken by the inhabitants of the countrie: seuen other galeots or foists being come to the same coast with souldiers, which Hassena Turke brought out of Barbarie, they returned vpon a false brute of peace, which had bene spread abroad, both the Moores and the Christians being desirous of rest. Besides, enuy, disloyalty, and other vices raining among the Moors caused a diuision among the, some of the captains hauing bin sent into

Afrike,

Afrike, laied there, and would no more return; many of the common people did the like king Aben Aboo, and others which held good were solicited and tempted by promises, that they should receiue all fauour and good vsage from king Philip, and they were well pleased also to keepe their pillage, so as they yielded to enter into treatie, but there was no cessation of armes. Habaqui and some other knights of the Moores were at Pond of Andarax, where hauing conferred with king Philip deputies they made an accord vpon these articles.

That Habaqui in the name of D. Diego Lopez Aben Aboo, and others of whome hee had power, should kneele at D. Johns feet, and demanda pardon of king Philip. That they should yeeld vp their armes and Engines. That they should bee receiued into grace, and all that was past forgotten. That they should not be wronged by word nor deede, nor molested by the Inquisition: That they that were reduced should bee sent withall securitie with their goods, wiues and children, to such places as should be assigned them to liue in, for they must leaue the Alpuxarres. According vnto this accord a submission was made by Habaqui to D. John at Padules, and the Ensignes being deliucted D. Alfonso de Granada wrote to Aben Aboo, to giue him better assurance, passing by Alcolea where hee found Xabibi they went together to Cadiaz, where hee was well entertained by Aben Aboo and Habaqui, and hauing had much conference vpon the assurance which D. Alfonso had charge to promise them, such as they should demand, they proceeded so farre in their accord, as most of the Turkes that were in the army were dismist, and sent home well satisfied.

Treaty of peace with the Moores.

But after D. Alfonso departure, many of these Moores considering better of the importance of this reduction, began to distrust, passing into Barbarie and returned not, and for that they had left Aben Aboo in mind to retract, they did sollicite the Turkes and Moores of Afrike, not to forbear to succour them of Spaine, whereunto they found many Lords among the Moores verie willing, So as in a short time there came many vessels to that Coast, bringing souldiers, armes and munition from Barbarie. The which confirmed Aben Aboo, and others in the resolution they had next to put themselves into the hands of the king of Spaine, nor of his Lieutenants, beginning to hate and curse them that had dealt in this traitise, and especially Hernand Habaqui.

Moores after the accord reuolted.

This confusion among the heads did so amaze the common people of the Moores, as they came in great troupes to yeeld themselves to the kings mercie, and to his Gouvernours and Captaines, who had commandement to receiue them, and not to suffer any outrage to bee done vnto them. Others that could escape did more willingly passe the Sea, for they did not submit themselves but through hunger, and by an opinion they had conceiued that they could not prosper vnder their heads, nor bee freed from their miseries by them, seeing they were continually in discord. The armies were still on foot during these Ambiguities, yet somewhat neglected and weak, for they still expected when they should bee dismist.

The Duke of Sesse brought his armie before the Castle of Fer, which was a store-house of Turkes to succour them, and took it: D. Sancho de Leua did also take certaine foists. The Captaines of places ranne wheresoeuer they heard there were any Moores in armes, which made many to hasten their reduction. Many souldiers being disbanded did not forbear the Moores that had submitted, but did spoile them and make their wiues and children captiues, to keepe them, or sell them, for slaues, to prevent the which, they vied all diligence to draw them from their ancient habitations to liue farther off in places assigned them according to the accord, and certaine diuisions which had bene made. The more to incite the Moores to submit themselves, the President D. Pedro de Desá wrote a letter of exhortation to the nation of the Moores, in the Arabian tongue, as if it had bene some Morabite or Hermite of the law of Mahomet, who perswaded them to barken to a peace, and to free themselves of so many miseries, causing many copies thereof to be made, the which being dispersed among that nation, did hasten the reduction of many. Habaqui seeing that Aben Aboo wet back, & that the party was much diminished, being diuided among themselves, went to D. John, & told him with great assurance that if he wold giue him

O o o o o iij.

fiuc

five hundred shot, hee would bring Aben Aboo bound vnto him: D. John would not giue him any men, but hee caused eight hundred Crownes to bee deliuered him, to leue them where hee should thinke good, and to performe what hee had promised.

Habagui being resolute to imploy himselfe for the performance of the accord, came to Vercheul where his wife and children were, to haue them prepare themselves, for hee meant to take them from thence, and to carrie them to Guadix: passing by Iessen; hee saw certaine Moores walking idly vpon the place, of whome hee demanded proudly why they staid to goe vnto those places which were assigned them, by the treatie of peace. To whome they answered, that they attended the commaundment of Aben Aboo. And I tell you (replied hee) that if Aben Aboo be so tedious and vnwilling, I will lead him to D. John of Austria bound at my horse taile. These words were told to Aben Aboo, by some one of these Moores, whereat being much incensed, hee sent one hundred and fiftie Turkes, which he had reserued for his garr, and two companies of Moores, in whome hee trusted, to goe and take him at Vercheul. Habagui hearing a noise in the night, got out of his lodging, and beganne to flee away, who without doubt had escaped, had not his white Turban discouraged him a farre off, which was the cause that they pursued and tooke him.

Being brought before Aben Aboo, hee reproacht him with his presumption and proud threats against him that was his king; telling him that hee knew well hee was a Traitor, and that hee sought to make his peace apart with the Christians and bring all the rest of Moores to the slaughter, or slauiery: whereupon hee caused him to bee presently led into a secret place, and there to be strangled by his household Seruants, and then hee caused his bodie to bee bound vp in a fagot of reedes and to bee cast into a precipice, where it remained many daies, and no man knew what became of him.

Being rid of this man, hee sent into all places where the Moores were not reduced, to aduertise them that they should not submit, putting them in hope by counterfeited newes of succours by the Turkish armie, and other such meanes, yet hee did not leaue to write to D. Alonso of Granado, and to D. Fernand of Barrades, the Mediatours, that hee continued still in the same minde; but the effects shewed the contrarie, for a brother of his called Galipe hauing bene defeated, as hee went towards Ronde and Bentomis with two hundred Souldiers to maintaine the Moores of that quarter in rebellion, they vnderstood all his practises, how hee did sollicite the Turkes and Moores of Affrike: That hee made an accompt to haue twelue thousand men; that hee made prouision of come; that hee had put eight hundred men into Pitres, and that hee fortified himselfe and prepared for warre. Finally to free them from all doubt, being prest by letters from Hernand de Barredes, and by mouth by Hernand Valles de Palacios, who was sent expresse vnto him, to make declaration if hee would ratifie the Capitulations; hee answered plainely, and after a proud and disdainfull maner, that they were deceived who thought hee would put himselfe into the power of Philip, or trust to his promises: for the Moores of those times had sufficient proofes, besides those which their predecessors had left, in what maner the kings of Castille were accustomed to keepe their faith. This being reported, the king commaunded they should continue the warre with all violence, and not pardon any Moore that was armed, but preferue them that were quiet. The duke of Arcos had the charge to presse them of Ronde and of Sierra Vermeille. The great Commander was to enter againe into the Alpuxarres, whereas many defended themselves. But in the end the Moores finding that their head was destitute of means and Counsel, most of them submitted themselves, and Aben Aboo found himselfe so abandoned, as he had no care but how to saue himselfe in Barbary, being resolu'd neuer to trieking Philip clemency, flying from caue to caue, & from rock to rock betwix Vercheul & Treuelles, which are the roughest parts of those mountaines, hauing scarce 400 men which followed him: being notwithstanding like a troublesom thorn, whereof the king desired much to be free. VVhe as it pleaseth god to take away all difficulties, wherewith men are troubled

Boldnes of a Moore.

Habagui strangled.

Warre renewed with the Moores.

A troubled, he suddenly raiseth occasions, and can giue v unexpected ends to great affaires, many times by meanes instruments. There was a Goldsmith at Granado, called Barrero, a pleasant man, and well knowne to the Moores and Christians dwelling in the Alpuxarres, where, before the warre, hee was wont to goe and sell rings of gold and silver, and other toys of his trade, and tooke in exchange from them silke, pearles, and other things. Barrero returning to his wonted traffique, vpon the reduction of some burroughes in those mountaines, hee came to Cadiar and to Vercheul, at such time as the capitaine of the garrison, called Galas Rotulo de Villa-Real, hauing taken certaine Moores, theues, of Aben Aboos traine, was readie to haue them shot: One of them knowing Barrero, came and saluted him, and reported his misfortune vnto him, intreating him to bee a meanes for his deliuerie. The Goldsmith knew this Moore, and demanded newes of Aben Aboo, who were about him, and his chiefe counsellors. The prisoner told him what he knew, and that his most familiar friends were a Secretarie of his, called Bernardin Aben Amer, and a capitaine whom they called Seniz of Vercheul, but he gaue most credit to Aben Amer. Barrero, who in former time had bene verie familiar with Aben Amer, thought it fit to write vnto him touching the reduction of his master, asking the Moore if hee could find meanes to carrie a letter and not be discovered, and hee would cause him to bee set at libertie. The Moore did promise and sweare it: Wherefore Barrero hauing acquainted capitaine Rotulo with his enterprise, hee intreated him to keepe this prisoner vntill his returne from Granado, whither he would goe and aske leaue to conferre with the Secretarie of Aben Aboo, whom he had knowne long, hoping to draw him to persuaade his master to yeeld. The great Commander gaue him leaue to write and conferre, and being returned to Vercheul, hee dispatcht this Moore with a persuauiue letter to Aben Amer. This messenger could not so passe the rockes and caues of Vercheul, but hee fell into the hands of Seniz men, who led him to their master. Being examined whence he came, and whither he went, hee answered, That he had escaped the hands of the capitaine of the garrison of Vercheul and Cadiar, who held him prisoner. Seniz not beleeuing him, threatened to racke him: wherewith being terrified, hee sayed, That in truth hee was a prisoner, and that hee knew not what it contained, and so hee gaue it him. Seniz hauing read it, was verie well pleased, saying vnto the Moore, That it was happie for him hee had fallen into his hands; for if hee had gone to Aben Amer, he would haue hanged him as soone as he had giuen him this letter: That hee meant to send him backe to him that had written it, willing him to bee faithfull, for hee should bee well rewarded. This poore Moore being glad, promised to doe any thing that hee should commaund him.

Seniz and Francis Barrero met at a certaine place appointed, and concluded betwixt them, That Barrero should returne to Granado, and bring a generall pardon in good forme, to all those that had bene in armes since the treatie made with Habagui, in the which Aben Aboo should bee expresse named. These letters were dispatcht with all fauour, wherein nothing was omitted. Barrero hauing brought them, and deliuered them to Seniz, it happened that Aben Aboo was aduertised of this conference, wherewith hee was much discontented, and came in the night with a small traine to the caue where Seniz retired himselfe, leauing his people a little way off, in a passage vnder the rocke, keeping two Moores onely with him, whom hee made to stay at the entrie of that naturall caue, which was in the top of the mountaine of Huzun, a boue Vercheul and Mecine of Bombaron. Hee demanded verie disdainfully of Seniz, Who had giuen him leaue to treat with the enimie? You, answered Seniz, and it is in consequence of former conferences, the which, I tell you, wee must continue and end; and therefore let vs not loose the opportunitie to recouer king Philip fauour, and let vs not through bad counsell seeke our own ruines: putting instantly into his hand these letters of pardon, the which Aben Aboo reiected, crying out, That it was nothing but villanie and treason, offering to goe forth to call his men. One of them which hee had left at the entrie of the caue would haue come in, but he was put

Practises of a Goldsmith to end the warre with the Moores

1570

Aben Aboe
king of the Moors slain.

put backe; and throwne downe a Precipice, the other fled; and hee himselfe was G stayed to reason with him; but he was in such a rage, as hee would not heare any thing: so as Seniz, seeing his obstinacie, resolved to kill him, and lifting up a long harquebuse which hee had in his hand, hee gave him such a blow on the head, as he overthrew him, and then he and his men stabbd him with their daggers. They which attended him, being aduertised by the Moore which had fled, That they had slaine his companion; and that he thought they had done as much vnto the king, retired. This done, Seniz sent to aduertise Francis Barrero thereof, and that hee should send a moyle to carrie the kings bodie to Vercheul; the which was done, and Seniz invited to come with all assistance to the garrison, where hee was entertained; and much made of by Leonard Rosulo, H brother to captaine Galas, then absent; and then hee and Barrero went vnto the citie, whither they caused the bodie to be carried, where they had a joyfull entrie made them.

Troubles of the Moors specified.

The head of Aben Aboe was put in a cage of yron, and set ouer the citie gate which looks towards the Alpuxarres: The bodie, being quartered, was hung vpon the high-ways. After which there was not any Moore found to make head; all layed aside armes, and submitted themselues to the kings mercie, according to the generall pardon which was graunted to Francis Barrero. But they were all drawne out of the mountaynes, and the townes of Granado, and thereabouts, and sent into plaine countries, and more accessible, to inhabit; as the Emperour Trism did with the auncient Spaniards, who were accustomed to rebell often, vpon the assurance of their townes and castles built vpon the edge of the mountaynes, the which he caused to be rased, and commanded by an Edict, that they should not build any more but in the plaines.

Thus ended the warre of the Moores of Granado, in November 1570; having continued neere two yeares, verie daungerous and difficult, being rashly caused by the ill vllage of them that they call old Christians in Spaine, by the importune pursuits of the Clergie and Inquisition, and by the bad administration of justice; and infolencie of the ministers there of; and no lesse inconsiderately entertained by the impatiencie of the Moores, and augmented by their obstinacie and ignorance, which suggested wicked and monstrous conceptions. The charge and losse was great, for there was about siue millions of crownes of the kings treasure spent in this warre. The interest of priuate men, and the spoyle and vnpeopling of the countrey, was incalculable, in the which about thirtie thousand Christians lost their liues. As for the Moores that were slaine of all ages and sexes, the number cannot be said; for a great realme might haue bene peopled therewith. If they had bene intreated with more mildnesse and humanitie, without doubt they might easily haue kept them in obedience, and by little and little might haue made them leaue that which was vnpleasing or scandalous in their manner of liuing; and as for religion, they should bee instructed with more care and charitie, causing that injurious contempt which is ordinarie in Spaine and other places, of them that are newly come to the knowledge of Iesus Christ, to cease, being vnpleasing vnto God.

9

Marriage of king Philip with his niece.

King Philip being somewhat freed from cares by the end of this warre with the Moores of Granado, hee would haue his marriage consummated with Anne of Austria, his neece, daughter to his sister and to the Emperour Maximilian, for the which he obtained a dispensation from the Pope, according to the vse of that holy Church. She past through the Low Countries, and was receiued by the duke of Alba at Nymeghen with great honour, who conducted her to Brussels, and so to Fleissingue, where she embarked in October, and within eight dayes arriued happily in Biscaye, being accompanied by the Archdukes Albert and Wenceslaus, her brethren, being verie young. Shee was receiued there by the cardinall of Seuille, whom the king had sent thither to doe that office. The king entertained her at Segouia, with that state that was befitting the greameste; then passing on to Madrid, whereas the widow Queene of Portugal met them, they were married with great solemnitie.

The king of Spaine (as wee haue said) was solicited to enter into league with the Pope

1570

King of Spaine
sends his galleies
to assist the Venetians.

A Pope, and the Venetians, against whom Selym the great Turke, picking a quarrell, had declared warre. And for that the danger of this warre required aid, the Pope sent a Nuntio into Spaine, which was Lewis Torres, clerke of the chamber, with speciall order from him to draw the king into this league, but about all, to craue the assistance of his gallies for that present yeare; that being ioyned with them of Venice, they might goe and make head against that mightie fleet which the Turke had sent to sea. The king knowing how much it did import himselfe and the whole state of Christendome, being moued with many speciall considerations, hee graunted his gallies, which were then readie in Italie. Wherefore he sent a speciall commission to John Andrew Doria, That according to the Popes pleasure he should go; as head of those gallies, to Messina; but he gaue him no direction, that hee should goe from thence to Corsu, to ioine with the Venetian armie, and with the Popes gallies, which were commaunded by Mars Antonie Colonna, and that hee should leaue the command of all vnto Colonna, being lent by the king vnto his Holinesse: the which being not well specified, was a great prejudice to the armie that yeare. But the businesse of the league being treated of in the kings Council, with great deliberation, was not so easily concluded, notwithstanding that Torres, and Leonardo Donata, a Senator of great worth, sent from the State of Venice into Spaine, did sollicite it verie earnestly: but the importance of the businesse, the ordinarie disagreement which is found in all Councils consisting of men of diuers complexions, and the naturall slownesse of that nation, made those embassadours to spend many monethes in vaine, and did somewhat coole the ardent desire the king had to satisfie the Pope and that Commonweale, as he did afterwards shew by the effects.

But to come to the cause of this warre. The Turke had sent a Chaous to the Venetians, that they should, without delay, deliuer vnto him the island of Cypres, which did belong vnto him, as hauing succeeded to the rights of the Emperours of Constantinople, the kings of Ierusalem, and of the auncient kings of Syria and Egypt, the which (said hee) they had gotten away. The which hauing refused, he denounced war against them, wherein they had great difficulties, being surprised, for that it was before the succours came which they had begged from the king of Spaine, the Pope, and other princes, who performed not their promises but verie late, after the losse of Nicosia, and all they had in that island; euerie one selling the succours which hee had promised in balancing the interest they had to oppose against the Turke, and seeking to contribute with some aduantage for his owne particular. But the next yeare there was a league made, as you shall heare, by the which D. John of Austria, the kings brother, was chosen to be Generall of the confederats armie against the Turke.

The enterprize which the Turke made vpon Cypres, and the battell at sea, which happened vpon this occasion, is memorable, and merits a particular relation in this historie of Spaine, for that the power and meanes of king Philip did much auaille, and D. John of Austria, his brother, had the honour to be Generall of the armie at sea, and woon a famous victorie.

The island of Cypres was in truth a remainder of the Empire of Constantinople, and of the realme of Ierusalem, erected by the French in their holy warres, and came by the gift of Richard king of England, who had conquered it from the Emperours of Constantinople, or rather by purchase or exchange, to the famous house of Lusignan in France, who enioyed it some generations. Among the kings of this familie, there was one Peter the first of that name, who was valiant, and went into diuers parts of the world; but for some tyrannies, and by the conspiracie of his vnchaste wife, who was of the house of Aragon, he was slaine by his subiects: to whom Peter the second succeeded; in whose time there grew great contention, with notable murders, betwixt the Consuls of the Venetian and Genouois, nations trafficking in Cypres; and the Consul of the Genouois was by his commandement cast out of the windowes of his palace, in fauour of the Venetian: wherefore the Genouois being then strong at sea, sent a great armie to Cypres, sackt the island, and seised vpon Famagosta: falling to an accord, the Genouois carried James the kings vnkle with his wife, away in hostage. Peter being dead, James was deliuered, and reigned in Cypres, and vpon some rights, caused himselfe to bee crowned, and called and a realme.

Cypres an island

Lewis of Sauoy
king of Cypres.

10
Right of the Seigniorie of Venice to Cy-pres.

Tyrannies of the nobilitie ouer the people
in Cypres.

Usurpations
upon the religion of Malta.

called king of Ierusalem and Armenia, although that he possessed not any thing. His son G named James, for that he was borne at Genoua, which they call in Latin Ianna, succeeded him, who was taken by Melech Sala, Sultan of Egypt, to whom he paid for his ransom 125000 ducats of gold, and a yerely pension by way of tribute. After him John his sonne reigned, a man of no value, who, among other wifes, had married one of the bloud royall of the Pa-leologni, named Helene, by whom he had a daughter called Charlotte, who was married to a prince of Portugal: he tooke the gouernment from his mother in law Helene, and there-fore she caused him to be poisoned. Charlotte tooke to her second husband Lewis of Sauoy earle of Genoua, and seeking to raigne, a bastard brother of hers, called James, opposed himselfe, saying, the women did not raigne in Cypres.

This quarell being debated before the Sultan of Egypt, who (as superiour of that realme which payed him tribute made himselfe Iudge) gaue sentence in fauour of James, and put him in possession, chasing Charlotte and her husband out of the island. This James married with Katherine Cornari, a Venetian, who was adopted by the Seigniorie of Venice for the daughter of S. Marc, and had an hundred thousand ducats for her dower. This James, being the second of that name, dyed in the yeare 1473, lea-ving the queene his wife with child, having ordained by his Will, that his after birth, if it were a sonne, should bee heire to the realme. It was a sonne, and hee was named James the third, being acknowledged and crowned by the nobles and people of Cy-pres, for their king, as soone as hee was borne; but hee died at the end of the yeare: and then there grew a diuision in the realme for the Regencie and gouernement thereof, the which was ended by a resolution taken by the Estates, That the wi-dow Queene should raigne and gouerne with the counsell of eight men that should bee chosen; the which continued fiftene or sixteene yeares. Considering after-wards with what difficultie they should maintaine themselves against the enterprises of the Sultans raigning in Egypt, and in all Syria, the Queene and the Councell ha-ving againe assembled the Estates and the feudatories of the countrey, they conclu-ded to make donation of the island to the Seigniorie of Venice, which was rich and strong, and had meanes to defend them, sending the Queene to Venice, to signifie the decree, and to carrie this goodly present, in the yeare 1489, where shee remai-ned: and then they sent onely a Lieutenant, and certaine officers, for the Seigniorie.

Thus this donation is found written in the Annales of the Cypriots: But others say, that when as king James the second was dead, the Venetians being aduertised, that he had ap-pointed the infant which should be borne, and the mother together, to be heires vnto the realme, and the one if the other failed, the Venetians sent some of their Senators thither, as tutors to the king, and at the intreatie of the Venetian queene, who had a desire to quit her right vnto the Seigniorie: and that this young king being dead within the yeare, she retired her selfe to Venice. Howsoeuer it were, they enioyed it about fourescore yeares. Although that this commonweale be famous for their wisdom in the gouernement of their Estates, yet they had in time suffered the nobilitie of the countrey to vsurpe cer-taine authoritie ouer the common people, which exceeded, so as their condition did not differ much from slaues, for they were beaten, sold, and slaine, at the pleasure of great and couetous men, without mercie: the which had bred a desire in the people to change their master. Whereunto they adde another quarell, which was often made vnto the Senat by the great Master of Malta, That some priuat men among them had appropriated vnto themselves the Commaunders of the Order of S. John, in that island, and had made them hereditarie to their houses, whereof they gaue them no satisfaction. Which had made the great Master, la Valette, to countenance an enterprife, which was made to take that island from them, and to make a Maltois borne king there, who had his beginning from Greece, named Basilic, much fauoured by the great Turke, and who for his valour and merits had bene made by him Vaiude, or Prince of Transilvania. But the matter be-ing discovered, it was disappointed, and quenched, by the punishment of some, and a better guard set; and yet they did not suppress the tyrannies of the nobilitie ouer the poore people. Who for that cause did still animate the Turke to send an armie into Cypres, with assurance of good successe; for he should find the inhabitants of the coun-try

Armie of Turke
in Cypres.

Nicosia ill provided.

Resolution of a gentlewoman.

Famagosta besieged.

A Musafa his declaration: This was then the cause which had moued Sultan Schih to make this conquest this yeare, the which hee coloured with his old rights of Ierusa-lem and Egypt, and other such vanities, sending forth his armie (after the returne of his Ghaous Gahal from Venice) to inuade this island, where they landed a great num-ber of Turkes, horse and foot, in April, a port called Salmes, finding no resistance, so as within few dayes they were about fourescore thousand fighting men: for the trained bands, the Tymariots of Syria, Egypt, and of Natolia, which were nere vnto the sea, and in like manner the higher prouinces, euen vnto the river Euphrates, had bene com-manded to come vnto certaine ports, whereas thirtie gallies which Osli Bassa had left after his first landing, and some boats to barrie horses, went to receiue them, and to trans-port them into the island: The which continued many dayes, and the Venetians could not hinder it; notwithstanding that they had sent about an hundred and fiftie saile to sea, vnder the commaund of Agome Zane, who lay about Corfu and Dalmatia, which was opposite, there being an infectious disease fallen among their gallic slaues and souldiers that were newly leuied, and not accustomed to the sea, whereof a great number died; As Richard John, Andrew Doria being come with fiftie gallies of Spaine and Seile, and Marc Anthony Colonius with the Dopes and others, hauing commandement to fight with the Turkes armie, before they landed in Cypres, they joyned with that intent with those of Malta, which were in the island of Candia: but they vsed such delays, as the Turkes had landed in Cypres, and besieged Nicosia, battered and taken it before they weighed anchor, or had any newes of their taking thereof, and being aduertised, there was then no question to fight with them at sea, but rather to land, and to giue battell to the Turkes; but the parties were not equalle. Wherefore Doria Colonius, and the other Commanders of the succours, tooke counsell to retire into Italie, the Commanders of the Venetian fleet consenting themselves to keepe their ports, and other islands: yet they suffered much in this retreat by tempests, in the which the Venetians lost eleuen gallies, and Marc Anthony Colonius two, whereof the one, being the Admirall, was burnt with lightning. They had fortified Nicosia seasonably well, but it was ill furnished with men of defence, although it was full of people, for they made an estimate, that there liued in that cite about foure-score thousand persons, but there were not fiftene hundred souldiers, and verie few horse of the nobilitie of the countrey: yet they maintained the siege fure and fortie dayes as well as they might, but they neuer made sallie nor skirmish, as is vsual when a towne is invested by an entrie, for as being battered, and an assault giuen, it was not forced, but in a manner taken without resistance. There was a great slaughter made of all them that were found in armes; but there were more made slaues, and the towne was abandoned to the spoile, whereas the Turkes found an incredible wealth. About all, the Turkes had a great bootie of faires women and maids, among the which there was a gentlewoman, who for despight to see her selfe reduced into seruitude, had the courage to set fire on the pow-der in a ship into which she and many others were put, so as they were all burnt, and two other vessels that were joyning vnto it.

Musafa, who was General of the Turkes armie, hauing taken Nicosia, he left Musafa Bassa with 4000 men for the guard thereof, and then he marcht with his armie towards Famagosta, the onely place that was fortified in the whole island, the which was held to bee much richer than Nicosia, and therefore it drew so many Turkes thither from all parts, as by the common opinion there were at this siege about 200000 men. He made his first lodg-ing three miles from the towne, on the 18 of September. There was no hope to win this place by threats or promises, wherein they vsed great art: They found greater difficulties in their approaches than they had done at Nicosia, they of the towne falling forth, & skir-mishing with them continually. But in the meane time they had receiued aduertisement, that the Christian armie was joyned in Candia, which made the Turkes feare, that they would soone offer to succour Cypres, & that they would land an armie: so Musafa going to counsell with Piali and the other comandars, it was resolved, That Musafa should fortifie his lodgings at Famagosta, & then passe to Nicosia, to repaire the ruines, and aug-ment the garrison; & that Piali should go to sea with the fleet, maintaining the reputation of of the victorie gotten at Nicolsia, and the honour of the great Turke with a new victorie at sea; but they were soone after aduertised by two frigates, That the Christian armie being come to Castellazo, and hearing of the success of Nicolsia, were returned to Candie. Whereupon their fleet alfortumed, to give better order for their affaires, both for the wintering of their men at land, and for the better of the fleet to Constantinople, ready besiring to enter triumphantly into that citie with the spoyle gotten in Cypres, where he arrived the sixteenth day of December.

1570

King of Tunis expelled by Muscibaly.

In this time, Muscibaly king of Alger had fallen into warre with the king of Tunis, who (as we have said) was feudatarie to the king of Spaine; and being come to fight, Muscibaly was victor, and the other dying away, with great difficultie, recovered Goulette, with his wife and foines; and the enemy being favoured by this occasion, and by the inconstancie of the Moores, made himselfe lord, without any toyle, of the citie of Tunis, and of Biscay; the which did afterwards draw the king of Spaine into a new warre, to restore him to his realme, flying to his Majestie for aid, as his father had done to the Emperour Charles the first.

1571

League concluded between the Pope, the king of Spaine, and
the Venetians.

The king of Spaine desired to satisfie the Popes desire, and to avoyd tediousnesse in the conclusion of the league, had referred the treatie thereof to Rome, giving the charge in his name to Antonie Perrenot, cardinall Granvelle, and to Francis of Toledo, cardinall Pacheco, joyning with them Johnde Zuniga his embassidour at Rome. In the end, after many difficulties, the league was concluded the twentieth day of May, with these articles: That the king of Spaine should furnish an hundred gallies, the Venetians should arme as many, and the Pope (under whom marche the other princes and potentates of Italie) should enter for their part, That they should entertaine fiftie thousand foot, and foure thousand and five hundred horse, and with this power they should goe and assaile the Turke in his owne countrey, but especially in the island of Cypres. That towards the charge of this armie and the equippage, the king of Spaine should contribute a moitie, the Venetians a third part, and the Pope a first; and if the Pope should not be able to furnish it, whatsoeuer should be wanting the king should beare three fift parts, and the commonweale of Venice two: and that D. John d' Austria should be General of the whole armie.

Cardinall
Alexandrino sent Legat into
Spaine.

After the conclusion hereof the Pope sent cardinall Alexandrino his Legat, into Spaine, to treat with the king as well touching the execution of the league, and some other private businesse, as to goe into Portugal, to procure aid from that king. The king of Spaine received him with great honour, and treated with him touching the execution of the league, seeming to be resolved to bend all his forces against the Turke: and therefore he commaunded D. John to stay in Italie, after that yeares navigation, to be more readie with the armie in the Spring, and that his ministers at Rome should resolve in euerie occasion concerning the league, as they should thinke best, without expecting any new order from Spaine. From thence he past into Portugal, to treat in like manner with the king D. Sebastian concerning the league. This young prince was bred up in generous thoughts to purchase much glorie by making warre against Infidels, and therein to exceed his predecessors, having in himselfe a naturall disposition to warre, an able bodie, and practised in those painefull exercises which belong vnto warre, having bene alwaies laid before him, by the Iesuites which instructed him, That all his enterprises should be for the sole benefit of Christendome, they had made his mind as religious as his owne nature and the exhortations of his noblemen had made him warlike; so as hee did not thinke or reason of any thing but of warre. And for that the example of his predecessors did represent vnto him in his sleepe the honourable victories and glorious conquests they had made in Africke and the East Indies, hee in like manner directed all his thoughts to that end.

Disposition of Sebastian king
of Portugal.

The Legat Alexandrino finding him in this disposition, did easily draw him to enter into this league against the Turke: who not onely promised to send his gallies well appointed, to the Christians armie, but he would also annoy Solima with another great manie at Suez, and other places held by the Turkes in the red sea, and in the golph of Persia: and more.

1571

A moreouer, the Pope desiring to breake the marriage betwixt Marguerite of Valois, and the king of Nauarre, he gaue commission vnto the Cardinall to moue this marriage vnto the King of Portugal, the which would haue bene somewhat difficult, if the king had not bene much deuoted to the Pope, who at his intreatie layed aside a strange resolution; which was, that he would not heare speake of a wife, because he would not be held effeminate, to the great griefe of his grandmother, his vncke, and the wisest of his Nobilitie, who desired to see some issue of him, and the succession of the realme assured. In the end he was content to take this French ladie, neither desired he any other dowrie, but a generous resolution in king Charles to enter in the league. Matters beeing thus settled in Spaine, the Cardinall, according to his commission, past thorough France, for the league and marriage, but he found no meanes to effect either: whereupon he returned into Italy.

King of Portugal content to take Marguerite of Valois to wife.

Don John of Austria being much pleased with this honorable charge, came from Spaine to Genoua, where he stayed not long, but arrived on the ninth of August at Naples, bringing with him from the Court, the great Commander of Castile, with the title of his Lieutenant, and chiefe Councillor, Fernando Cariglia, Earle of Pliego, his chiefe Steward, D. Francisco d'Ibarra, D. Pedro Velasco, D. Michell Moncada, Gil d'Andrada, Carlo Spinelli, who had followed him as an aduenturer against the Moores, with many others. With these there ioyned the Dukes of Parma and Vrbino, Don Antonio Carrasa, duke of Mondragon, the Marquis of Carrara, D. Pompee of Lanoy, Vincencio Carrasa, Prior of Hongary, the Earle of Sarno, the Marquis of Auila, Paul Iourdain Vrsin, the Earle of S. Fleur, Afcanio de la Corne, and Paul Sforza, beeing in Naples, Cardinall Granuell, the Viceroy, who in that action had the authoritie of Legat, deliuered vnto D. John the Standard, as General of the Church, the which the Pope had blest, who solicited his departure towards Messina by many embassages, where the whole fleet should ioine, and whether Marc Antonio Colonna was gone long before with twelue gallies of Florence, armed by the Pope, and three of the Order of S. John.

Noblemen with Don John in the army.

But to returne to the sege of Famagosta, Mustapha sought by all meanes possible to get the counterscarpe, the which was valiantly defended by Marc Antonio Bragadino, and Astor Baglioni, the one having charge of the gouernement, the other of the garrison, but in the end the Turkes wonne it. About the midst of May, they planted five batteries, and had made ten forts. They had in the beginning aduertised the Seigneury of Venice in what state they stood, who sent them a supply of seuteene hundred men, with victuals and munition by Marc Antonio Quirini, who past valiantly through the Turkes guards, and returned: these succors were commanded by Lewis Martinengo. The Turkes continued their batteries with great obstinacie, and had giuen foure assaults, where the besieged repulst them valiantly, but with great losse of either side: the besieged having held out till the 20 of Iuly, beeing now prest with great hunger and want, the number of their souldiers beeing diminished to eight hundred, and those much tyred; most of the Grecians beeing dead, either with fighting, or with the continuall toyle. Beeing terrified with so great miseries, and out of hope of any more succors, some of the chiefe of the citie besought Bragadino, that he would incline to some accord, seeing he had made so good proofe of their faith and constancie in that sege: No man would euer hold them vnworthie of commendation, if (after they had endured so many assaults, and suffered so much penurie, with want of munition, after the losse of so many souldiers and citizens, and finally, beeing without all hope of succours, they had provided at the least, for the liues of their children which remayned, and for the honour of poore miserable women: that he would not in recompence of their deuotion, which they had alwaies shewed to the common-weale of Venice, be the cause of the totall ruine of their citie, and suffer their wives and children, who had spent so much blood, and offered their bodies to death for their seruice, to become a shamefull prey to their Turkish lust, there remaining no hope of health, but by the meanes of some accord: That it was a thing worthie of a wife Nobleman (as he was) to chooseth the least of euils: And last of all to remember, that it was held a brutish crueltie, and no valour, to runne headlong to a certaine death, where there is no hope of life.

Speech to Bragadino at Famagosta.

Ppppp

Braga-

Brigadino knew that their request was just, and that their extremities were great: yet forcing his owne nature, and desiring to preserve the realme, which depended wholly vpon the losse of that place, he did not thinke it possible that the Senat would neglect so weightie a businesse, and not send the succours which had bene promised. Wherefore hee would not yeeld to their demaund, but fed them with good words, putting them in hope of present succours, dispatching a fregat presently into Candie, to aduertise the Seigniorie of their extremities.

12 Famagosta yeelded to the Turkes.

In the end of Iulie the Turkes gaue an assault which continued fise houres: but the besieged seeing there was no meanes to endure another, hauing but seuen barrells of powder left, they began to treat of an accord, and hauing made a truce the first of August, the next day they gaue hostages of either side. The conditions were:

That the citie should be yeelded to the Turkes, the persons, armes, and goods of souldiers and citizens being safe, who might remaine there, and liue in the laws of Christ, and not be wronged in their honours nor substance.

That such as would depart might haue free passage into Candie, and three yeares respite, and that the souldiers should be garded by the Turkish gallies, that no outrage should be done them, and that they might carrie with them fise peeces of ordnance, and three of their best horses.

That they should not make any Mosques of their churches, nor charge the citizens with any carriages or tenthes.

Mustafa signed these conditions, and the souldiers began to imbarke in the gallies and other vessels which the Turkes had sent into the port, and on the fift day at night Brigadino hauing sent the keyes to Mustafa by cont Nestor Martinengo, he went himsele in person with Astor Baglioni, Iohn Antonio Quirini, Andrew Brigadino, cont Lewis Martinengo, with other Commaunders of great worth. Mustafa receiued them, in shew, with great honour, and causing them to sit downe, hee discoursed with them of diuers things, at last he said, That the Christians which had imbarked to goe from Famagosta, the night before they meant to passe into Candie, and to other places belonging to the Venetians, had cruelly and treacherously slaine all the Turkish slaues which they had, and that three had escaped with great difficultie out of the citie, to aduertise the Bassa thereof: And therefore he had giuen order, that the Turkes should not goe out of the haven with their vessels, before they had good caution for their securitie, that they should not be slaine, or made slaues in Candie, or any other place. Whereunto Brigadino answered, That it was not in the accord to giue any hostages, and therefore he meant not to doe it, denying absolutely that there were any Turkes slaine, as he had said. Mustafa was much altered with this answer, and made a signe with his hand, that he should come neere him; then he caused his interpreter to speake certaine words vnto him in his eare, which were not heard, nor yet Brigadino answer: but he seemed more furious than a Tigre, and striking Marc Antonio vpon the head, he and all the rest were presently taken, being all vnarmed: for it is a custome among the Turkes, that no stranger comes vnto them with his armes. Then causing them to be led out of the tent, he caused Astor Baglioni, Andrew Brigadino, Iohn Antonio Quirini, Lewis Martinengo, and the knight del Haste, to be cut in peeces in his presence, one after another, Marc Antonio being reserved for a more horrible death. Cont Hercoles Martinengo being there in hostage, was sau'd by one of the Bassas Eunuches, who tooke him for his slaue. The souldiers which were in the campe, to the number of three hundred, were all slaine, and those that were imbarked were made slaues.

Men of worth treacherously put to death by Mustafa.

Death of *Marc Antonio
Brigadino*.

Two dayes after Mustafa entred into Famagosta, and hauing caused Brigadino eares to be cut off, when hee was taken prisoner, hee made him to bee set vpon the maine yard of the Admirals gallie of Rhodes, to bee a spectacle to the Christians that were there in captiuitie. In the end hee caused him to bee set vpon the pillorie in the market place, and there to bee stayed aliue by a Iew; this lord shewing still a noble resolution, and full of Christian pietie, neither did hee, during all his torment and disgraces which they did vnto him, shew any signe of feare or basenesse, still reproaching that traitor with the breach of his faith euen vnto his

A his death. Then hee caused him to be quartered, and one of them to bee set vpon either batterie: his skinne was stuf with straw, and hung at the yard of one of his gallies, being first a miserable spectacle to all the coast of Soria, and then to Selim in Constantinople. Thus after threescore and fiftene dayes batterie, and many assaults, the Turkes hauing spent an hundred and fiftie thousand shot of great ordnance, Famagosta was taken.

D. John of Austria came the foure and twentieth of August to Messina, being receiued by the two other Generals, Colonna and Veniero, with great honour; where, all the forces of the league not being yet arriued, he called the two Generals, with some others of greatest judgement in martiall affaires, to counsell, to resolute what they had to doe: but for that their opinions were diuers, it was ordered, that they should set them downe in writing, with their reasons; but the resolution was deferred vntill the arriual of the rest of the gallies. On the first of September Iohn Andrew Doria arriued with twelue gallies, hauing imbarke Germanes and Lombards at Spetie, after whom came the marquisse of S. Crux with thirtie gallies from Naples, and the next day Quirini and Canale with threescore from Candie: soone after there came some ships from Naples laden with men and munition, and some gallies from Palermo, conducted by Cardona; but some other vessels could not come so soone, being left to imbarke three thousand Italian foot, and 2000 Spaniards that were at Oranto. There were at Messina the eight of September twelue gallies of the Popes, 81 of the king of Spaine, with twentie ships of burthen (some say twentie fise) one hundred and eight gallies of the Seigniorie of Venice, six gallasses, and two ships; three gallies of Malta, and three of the Order of S. Lazaro: so as there were in the whole fleet two hundred and seuen gallies, six gallnasses, and two and twentie ships, besides foists and other smaller vessels, and in them at the least twentie thousand fighting men, with victuals and munition sufficient. Those that had chiefe charge in this armie, besides the Generals, were these, Ascanio de la Corna was Campe-master generall for the king of Spaine, the earle of S. Fiora was Generall of the Italians, the Colonels were cont Paulo Sforza, the earle of Sarno, and Gasper Toraldi; the Colonels of the Dutch were the earle of Lodron, and Vinciguerra of Arco: And of the fleet, D. Iohn Andrew Doria was Generall of his owne gallies, which the king paid, D. Aluaro de Bassan, marquisse of S. Crux, gouerned them of Naples with the like title, D. John of Cardona them of Sicilie, and D. Cesare d'Amalos the ships: Gabrio Serbelloni was Generall of the ordnance. The names of the rest of the Commaunders I omit to auoid tediousnesse.

D. John of Austria comes to Messina.

Number of Christians fleet
at Messina.

The Pope sent Iohn Paulo Odescalco to Messina, to hasten their departure, and to enrich them with many indulgences, being to fight against the enemies of the holy Church. Then after a solemne procession they went againe to counsell. There were many things propounded, whereon they discoursed long with great judgement; but in the end the exhortations of Colonna, and of the Venetian commanders, made D. John resolute, who had a desire to do something worthe of himsele, and the expectation which was of that great fleet, to goe and fight with the enimie. Wherefore they parted from Messina the 16 of September: at night they came to S. Johns ditch, where he gaue order how they should saile, staying there the next day for certaine vessels which had staied behind for some necessities, & also for D. Giles d'Andrada, whom D. John had sent some daies before to leame some newes of the enimie, by whom he vnderstood, that they were gone towards Valona: but to be duely informed of his course, the same knight was presently sent backe againe. The Venetians were verie desirous to aduance, fearing that the dangerous time for sailing drawing neere, there would some storme arise, and make all their attempts fruitlesse for that yeare. After some foule weather and contrarie winds, they came to Cape S. Maria, hauing first met with a fregat, who brought them newes of the great need they of Famagosta had of present succours, and withall he did certifie them of the state of Candie, and that the Turkes armie was gone towards the gulph of Lepanto. Being come to Corfu on the 25 of the moneth, they were troubled to see many of their gallies behind, besides those that the marquisse of S. Crux had caried to Oranto for 3000 Italian foot, & the regiment of Spaniards in Naples. They wanted also their ships, who were sent before with Resolution of the Christian armie

souldiers, and other necessities, parting from Messina a day before the rest of the armie, G but being hindered by foule weather, they could not come in time to the battell: within two dayes the galleasses and some gallyes arriued, the which had bene separated from the armie by storme, or by some other accident. And for that some were not of opinion to fight with the enemye, Veniero feared some accident, which might disturbe all, and make Don John to alter his resolution, and therefore pressing their departure, he had caused great store of come to be put into the galleasses, to be sent to the succour of Famagosta, having not heard any thing of the losse thereof. It was bruted, that Caracossa was gone with 18 gallies to Valona, to fetch Biscuit: wherupon Colonna and Veniero persuaded Don John, not to lose so goodly an oportunitie; for going to encounter his enemies diuided, wheresoeuer he hapned, he should obtaine a certaine victorie. Don John was not auerse to that resolution, but he desired to be better certified than with rumors, and vncertaine reports; and therefore it was resolved, that Canale should go before with two good gallies, to learne some certaintie of the enemies Fleet. But he was stayed vpon the arriual of foure gallies, which by contrarie winds had bene separated from the rest; they assured the Generalls, that there was not any vessell of the Turkes at Valona: for that hauing past thereby, they had not scene any. Whereupon some thought, it was but an artificiall invention of such, as desired they should fight with the enemye. D. John being at Gomenizze, a great port of Epirus, they were aduertised by Giles d'Andrada, that he had heard for certaine at Zante, that the Turkish Fleet was entred into the gulph of Lepanto, as a place of safetie, that they might supply their wants, and to resolve what they had to do, sending their sicke and vnprofitable people to Corone, for that Caracossa hearing of the coming of the Christians into those seas, was gone to aduertise the Generall Aly. There Doria having commandement from the Confederates, tooke must of all the vessels, obseruing every thing carefully, for that their opinions were diuers touching their fighting with the enemye.

Commander of Castile dissuaues them from fighting with the Turke.

The great Commander of Castile, who was of great authoritie with the Generall, gaue aduise, that they should not hazard a battell without some great aduantage, whereof the hazard and danger was very great, not onely for the losse of so great an armie, but K for the great ruines which would ensue: for that Sicile, the coasts of Calabria and Apulia, yea of all Italy and Spaine, would, in this case, be made destitute of all gard and defence: so as they did not see what assured hope of gaine might ballance the reasonable feare of so great a losse; protesting, that what he sayd, was no more for the priuat interest of his King, than of the other Confederates, and especially of the Venetians, who as nearest to the enemye, might thinke to tast the first fruites of this dangerous counsell. It is sometimes to be held a great victorie, to hinder a mightie enemye, from doing any thing of importance, as they should do, in curbing the pride, that yea of the Turkish armie, growne bold by so many victories, hauing many gallies, and so well furnished, as it was to be presumed, both of souldiers and slaues, being in its owne country, where they had great Garrisons continually in pay, and had of late reduced so many Christians into seruitude in the Venetians countries.

He added, that by the example of all famous Captaines, both ancient and moderne, from whom they are accustomed to draw secure instructions in militarie actions, there was no course held wiser for them, that had the weaker power, and are in danger of the greater losse, than in delaying an enemye, to attend some aduantage to oppresse him, and tyring him, to make his attempts vaine.

The condition of things were not equall, neither should they hazard so much vpon a most doubtfull fortune, onely with a designe to fight with the Turkes forces M at sea, seeing the gaine would be small which they could promise themselves, by that hoped-for victorie; being as easie for the enemye to returne the next Spring very strong to sea, although he were vanquished, as it would be hard for the Confederates to repayre so great losses, if God, for the sins of Christendome, should suffer them to be overcome. Wherefore, I beseech you, my most noble Lord, set before your eyes the inestimable losse which may happen to Christendome, by the ruine of this armie, if in nothing else, but of so many noble Captaines, and valiant souldiers, which

A which we may boldly say without blushing, is the flower of all the martiall men of Christendome, of whose counsell and valour, I may truly say, depends the health of the best part of Europe; and so by consequence by the losse of them, the means to resist the Turkes power now would faile vs, and all hope to vanquish him hereafter. I will not forget to offer to your consideration, how dangerous it is for the winds and sea, the time of the yeare being so far spent, and that to go and spend any time in seeking of the enemye in this dangerous season of Autumne, were to tempt fortune doubly. There may be infinit examples produced, but the remembrance of the last yeare is so fresh, as wee need not to seeke farther: and you must vnderstand, that he which in time recouers a safe port with his shipping, makes it knowne what counsell is most profitable, if an vnfortunat chance happen. B But who can judge, if going so farre into the enemies countrey, to fight with him, being much weakened either by our losses in fighting, or by foule weather, whether we can with safetie recover our owne ports: without doubt, in this case few would be faued, being knowne by experience (a dangerous doctrine of rash men) what bad counsell it is, to follow a mightie enemye, and to fight with him in the midst of his owne strength.

Both the Venetian Generalls opposed themselves against the opinion of the great Commander, so did Ascanio della Cornia, S. Fiora, and Serbelloni, but especially the Generall Colonna, who sought to infringewith apparent reasons, and with the Popes authoritie, whose expresse commandement was, to find out the Turkes armie, and to fight with it. He C said, That he could in no fort yeeld to the opinion of Requesens, being a new proposition, and contrarie to the articles of the league, where it was chiefly propounded to make an offensive warre, and he taught them how they should still stand vpon their defence; which was nothing else, but to confirme the enemye in the opinion which he had conceiued of the small valour of the Christians, whereby he was growne more insolent. The confederat princes, said he, haue had a speciall care in their conuentions, to doe any thing that might daunt the pride of this enemye of Christendome, and that he should sensibly feeble the valour of Christians. He will neuer feare any such power, if we, measuring all forces by the compass of humane discourses, dare not promise vnto our selues any thing from the help of heauen: and yet let vs remember that we are the souldiers of Christ, that we fight for D Christ, and that being vnited vnder his banner, we need not feare that he will euer abandon vs, if we shew not our selues distrustfull. But I will not lay the foundation of all our hopes vpon the miraculous helps of heauen, whereby I should seeme to confesse, that humane force were not able to encounter, yea to vanquish this enemye. I should seeme to want judgement, to counsell a battell without constraint, and with apparent disadvantage, and to tempt the pleasure of God with the dangerous euent of a battell. Our armie then, in my opinion, is not so weake, nor the enemye so vigorous, that matters should bee brought to that despaire, seeing that we haue here about 200 good gallies, better appointed (according to the opinion of men of judgement) than the Turkes, the which would equall their aduantage of number, if the same be true, that the Turkes haue three E hundred vessels. For gathering these vessels from diuers parts, they haue, to make a number, assembled euery small barke of pyrats, fitter to steale, & run away, than to fight. Wee must thinke that our souldiers do exceed the Turkes in valour, who often with many thousands could not resist hundreds of our, and now, it may be, are not inferiour vnto them in number, if we shall wel examine the qualitie of their vessels and ours: and therein also we wil vse your authority, who maintain, that we haue the flower of all the souldiers of Christendome. And to what end then serues this multitude of gallies, these numbers of noblemen and souldiers, and so much treasure wasted, onely to goe neere the enemye? nay, not to approach neere him, but to terrifie him with the fame of our forces, and seeing that he doth not flie, we to retire our selues into safetie. But if that be not to be thought on, yet F to keep him from proceeding any farther in Cyprus, nor to annoy any more those miserable coasts, those vnfortunat islands which be subiect to the fire & sword of their barbarous cruelty. But we are to attempt more, to reuenge so many injuries receiued from them, so as the religious arms of Christians being as it were awaked from a long sleep, may be employed in those actions which shalbe held worthie of their ancient glorie. And contrariwise, what greater imputation can there bee vnto the name of Christians, than after two

1571 such preparations within few monethes, not to dare to looke the enemy in the face? G What hope will there then remaine to deliuer the realme of Cypres? What will the world say of vs? Oh let there neuer any thought of such feare come into our hearts:
 let vs not shew our selues so weake: let vs not so little esteeme the forts which are held by the Catholike king, and the Commonweale of Venice: that in case any vnfortunate successe should befall our fleet, they should be a prey vnto the enemy. Princes were wont to repose all their safetie in armies by land, or in fleets by sea; but since that they haue found meanes to secure their countries with ports and frontire places well fortified, they haue not much esteemed the losse of a battell at land or at sea, touching the conquest of anothers dominions, for that the defence within walls is so long, as that prince which was a looser may repaire his forces, and come againe to fight with his ad-uersaries. We haue now in hand the example of the realme of Cypres, the which although it be farre from their lords forces, yet two forts, and those not very wel furnished, haue made resistance aboue a yere, and there is yet hope to preserve it, sending some small succours. And shall we feare, that so many strong places vpon this gulph, and vpon the coast of Naples and Sicile, shall be in an instant deuoured by the Turkish armie, if any sinister fortune should befall our fleet, which God forbid. But if we (my Lord Commaunder) shall runne into such apparent daunger, being at sea in these tempestuous times of August, why will wee secure our enemies from the like daunger, when as they after that imagined victorie, will faile ouer (being farre from their ports) the Mediterranean and Tirrene seas, in that dangerous season? And if you shall say vnto me, That in the Spring they will attempt some conquest of importance, I will answer, That our forts, and the countrey which lyes most subiect to daunger, shall be the better fortified. And for prooffe hereof, this mightie Turkish fleet, although it hath not bene a ny way hindered this yere by our gallies, what matter of importance hath it attempted?
 yea in Candie, and in these seas, they haue receiued great losses, comming neere vnto fortified places. But let it suffice to haue hitherto discoursed, to shew that the daunger is not so great, nor so apparent, in case we should loose a battell. Let vs now come to the consideration of the importance, and necessitie we haue to giue battell, and then of the certaine hope of the conquest, if we be victors. It is impossible to bridle and tame the insolencie of the Turke whilst that hee is lord at sea, the which hee will alwayes hold himselfe to bee, when as our nauie shall not dare to affront him with sufficient forces, and that it is all one to flie the enemies sight, and to feare to receiue some harme:
 but that feare doth not onely leaue him the possession of the sea free, and doth increase his boldnesse with his force, but doth quite discourage the subiects, and giues them occasion to attempt things verie prejudiciall to the commonweale. Let vs then goe and seeke this armie, to daunt the pride of the Turks, and to giue courage to the Christians: hauing found it, let vs fight with it, hauing a firme confidence both in the helpe of heauen, and in our owne forces, that we shall vanquish them. Let vs perswade our selues, that the reputation of the Christian name, and the honour of our princes, cannot be otherwise maintained; for that being knowne that they haue two yeaeres together prepared so great a fleet, with their incredible charge, and giuen it out, That they would fight with the Turks, if we should retire with such apparent signes of feare, I doe not see how we can auoid a generall imputation, either of want of gouernment, or of extraordinarie cowardise. It is re-quisit then by all the reasons of warre, that for the importance of this action, and to auoyd shame and dishonour, we should trie a battell, for that the losse thereof cannot be so preiudciall as the Commaunder faith, and by a victorie we are to expect a great conquest, if we will presently imbrace the occasion, & reape the honorable fruits of so great an aduenture. For it is apparent, that all the Turkes dominion is gouerned by most cruell tyrannie, & that his subiects (whether you wil make an attempt vpon Albania, Morea, or Soria, yea and in Thrace it selfe) as soone as they shal heare that his forces (who oppresseth them vnder the heauie yoke of barbarous seruitude) are ouerthrowne at sea, wil attempt some inno-uation, if they shal but see the Christians ensignes: so as the Turks seeing the enemy not only round about them, but euen in their houses, they will find themselves in a verie hard condition, & what remedy shal they find to escape, but they must endure themselves to be trium-

A triumphed ouer by many Noble victories? It is not any vaine hope grounded vpon desire, that makes mee to speake thus, seeing it is certaine that the Christians in those Countreys which I haue mentioned are more in number than the Turkes, and although they bee vnarmed, yet are they not without courage, so as being armed by vs, they will doe great seruice in any thing that shall bee attempted.
 Besides, those coasts hauing not of many yeaeres scene a Christian Nauie, and not sufficiently fortified for such dangers, what resistance can they make against our victorious armie? If these great hopes should make vs resolute otherwise than the Commaunder hath propounded, should we not doe it the rather, for that it is the chiefe intent of your king and my Lord to free Christendome from the oppression of the Barbarians, & then to assure the Spanish Seas from the continuall spoiles, of Pyrats, Turkes, and Africans? But his Maiestie shall neuer attaine to either of them, if their forces at Sea been not first subdued: neither can they bee subdued, if wee doe not hazard a battell:
 wee haue no hope to bee stronger at Sea the next yere than this, but rather to decrease both in number and courage, hauing twise performed so little, if wee shall resolute as you aduise vs: what then remains to bee done, but that being forced wee proceed with an assured hope, not of one, but of many worthy victories, and finding out the enemy, fight with him, like the souldiers of Christ? So may it please his diuine bountie, to abate their arrogancie, and to confound this their mightie fleet, the which I assure my selfe cannot bee soone repaired, if there bee the flower of the Turkes forces, as well of Capitaines, as of priuate men, as wee suppose. But if our Princes, as hee pretends, loosing the battell, should with all lose the best of their forces: why shall not wee with the same argument augment our hopes, our en-mies being so much afflicted, for that our Princes exceed them much in men of command; and for Sea causes, I dare affirme that the State of Venice hath more valiant Capitaines than the Turke. Let vs not for Gods sake so much distrust our owne forces, as our hearts should bee surpris'd with amazement, and that deprived of all generositie, yea, of pietie and Religion, wee should hold the enemy in that degree, and so basely esteeme of our selues, and of the dignitie of the confederate princes, hauing in a D maner no faith, that the supreme power which hath giuen them these forces, will also preserve and increase them; with their ruine that are his cruell enemies, for the propagation of which faith we haue put on these armes, the which being guided by his victorious hand, must needs yeeld glorious trophies, both in life and death, if wee will not defraud our selues of this certaine hope.

D. John was in the flower of his age, and retaining that generous and warlike minde of his father, hee inclined to his Councell, who with so many reasons propounded, so honourable a party, and worthie of such a prince, notwithstanding that the command had bene giuen him by his brother as a Schoolemaster or guide: and with this resolution hee caused the Navy to bee diligently viewed and furnished, and gaue order how they should goe forth in battell. But, there fell out an accident which had almost ouerthrowne the whole action, and deprived them of immortall glorie. Some of the kings Souldiers being placed in a Venetian Galley, they fell to quarrell with others that were in the same galley, so as there were some hurt & slain. Veniero the general sent some officers with his admirall to bring the offenders vnto him, but they being distempered receiued the admirall with iniuries, wherewith Veniero being much incensed, hee caused the offenders to be apprehended, & wold haue two of the with their captain Anticatro hänged at the main yard. After which Paulo Sforza their Colonell, going to speake with Veniero, he wold not hear him, threatening him that if he did not depart, he wold turn his ordinance vpon him & sink his boat. D. John was wonderfully discontented with the generall Veniero's actiō, holding himself much wrōged; for that he had not referred the iudgement to him, as it was fit, but had chased away Colonell Sforza, whome hee had sent, with threatnes and disgrace. The whole armie was suddenly in a mutinie, the Spaniards seemed to prepare themselves to reuenge, and the Venetians stood vpon their gard. But Colonna with great dexteritie (although hee held himselfe wronged therein by Veniero) sought to preuent this growing mischief. Barbarigo laboured in like manner, who with great eloquence
 and

Veniero incensed against the Spanish Souldiers.

D. John discontented with the Generall Veni-ero.

1569

and iudgement, so pacified Colonna first, and then D. John as they were content to G preferre the generall good of Christendome, before their owne private respects; yet they would not that Veniero should treat any more with them concerning any businesse, neither as a publike person, nor as a private, but that Barbarigo should supplie his place vntill they had further order from Venice. The third of October they went forth in the same order that they should fight, and bent their course towards Cephalonia, where they had newes that did much trouble them, for that by a fregate dispatched from Candie, they had letters brought them from Marino Caualli, wherein was related the losse of the Realme of Cypres, by letters intercepted in a Galeor the which were sent after the taking of Famagosta from the generall Mustafa to Aly. H whereof they presently sent aduice to Venice. Comming to Val d' Alexandria, which was the ancient Samos, they returned againe to Councell, where hearing for certaine that the Turkes were in the gulphe of Lepanto, they resolved after much disputation, to goe to the mouth of it, and not meeting first with the Turkes, to set vpon two forts called Dardanelli, to force the enemy to fight, or with the losse of their gallies to runne to land: with this resolution they parted the first of October, and came to the Ilands called Curzolaes, where early in the morning they had view of the Turkish armie, which came out of the mouth of the gulfe in good order. The generrall Aly had bene informed by Caracossa, who had gone to discouer the Christians, with what intent they failed that way, in what order, and how many vessels they were: so as opening at that instant the great Turkes letter, which by his order should be red as soone as the enemies fleet approacht, they saw it was his mind they should fight, and ruin the Christians forces. The Commanders of the Turkish Navy being very resolute to incounter the Christians, and to shut them vp in the chanell of Cephalonia, being small, wher-as Caracossa had viewed them, had newly fortified their army with tenne thousand Iani-faries Spahies, & voluntaries, which Mehemet Bes had broght, with great store of victuals & munition, and 100 Sangiacs & Alobei, which are men of title, a degree vnder a Sâgiac. But the Christians parted from Cephalonia, and Val d' Alexandria, towards the Curzolaes, where the sea is verie streit, & full of shelves, & rocks, which the Turkes took for an aduantage.
 Thus both armies were resolved to fight, & were put in baret in form of a Croisiant. In the K right wing of the Christians armie where fiftie and three gallies, whereof John Andrew Doria had charge, hauing before him two Venetian galleasses, and at his backe the admirall galley of Sauoy, in the which was the duke of Vrbino. On the left wing were the like nûber of gallies & galleasses, commanded by Augustin Barbarigo Proueditor general for the Venetians, being assisted by the admirall galley of Genoua, in the which was the prince of Parma. Betwixt these two wings was the bodie of the battell, consisting of 70 gallies and two galleasses, and in the midst or center thereof, the three generalls with their royall gallies, D. John in the midst, Sebastian Veniero generall for the Venetians on the left had, and Marc Antonio Colonna general of the Popes gallies on the right: behind the, as it were in the reereward, where D. Aluaro Bassan Marqueffe of Saint Cruz with thirty gallies: and in the front of them was D. John of Cardona with eight gallies as a forlorne hope. On the L other side Aly opposed against John Andrew Doria 96 gallies commanded by Vlucialy, against the Proueditor Barbarigo, he set 55 gallies vnder the charge of Mehemet Bei and Si-rocco, and Aly himselfe with Portau Bassan (who was general of the land forces) were in the midst against D. John with 96 gallies, and the rest of the gallies were appointed in the reere to succour them, with many foistes and brigandins, to passe from place to place with the Generals commandements. D. John went in person to view the armie, being accompanied by Lewis de Cardona and John Soto: hee was in white armour, hauing in his hand a Crucifix, going from place to place in a most swift fregat animating the souldiers, and telling them, that they had not him for their Captaine and leader, but M that great God alone, whose humane shape, being dead vpon the crosse, to saue the whole world, they saw in his hands. Hee put them in minde that they did fight for the the great God of victories, to whome all humane powers yeeld obedience: that hee was their Generall and their guide, and the gouernour of euerie mans actions; promising to euerie man that day an honourable and glorious victorie, whereof nothing could deprive

Order of the christian armie.Order of the Turkes army.D. Johns speech to the armie.

1571

A deprivethem, vnlesse they distrustd to obtaine it. His words were short, but deliue-red with such efficacie, as it made all them that heard him weepe for ioy, who with a presage of their future successe, beganne to crie victorie, wherewith hee was much contented; and so hauing saluted the Generall Veniero verie courteously, reioycing to see that reuerent old man of seuentie and fve yeares old, in an action where hee must fight as well as command, hee retyred to his galley: and then hee set vp the standard of the legaue, which was a Crucifix in a red field, in signe of battell. Whereupon Aly did presently discharge a canon, and D. John answered him in like manner. John Andrew Doria did an act of iudgement, stretching forth his right wing into the sea, & gi-uing meanes to the rest to doe the like, to the end they should not be compassed in by the Turkes gallies, who were in all places more in number, the which did auaille them much.
Barbarigo, Anthony Canale, Marc Anthony Quirin, and others which did assist him, kept as neere the land as they could, so as they could not bee charged in flanke but onely in front, the which Sirocco and Aly a renegado of Genoua sought to doe; and when they were put to rout (which began among the enemies which Barbarigo had in front) hee kept them that they could not escape, and made a wonderfull spoile of them.

The battell of Lepanto.

The fight grew hot, and the Canon of either side plaied furiously, wherein the Christians were somewhat fauoured by the wind, the which in the beginning being in their faces, changed instantly as the battell begunne, and carried the smoake into their enemies eyes. In the beginning the two Generals Gallies, of D. John and Aly Bassa affronted one another, about the which the combat was very hot. In D. Johns gallies there were foure hundred Harquebuziers and Muskietiers, vnder D. Lope de Figueroa their Commander; in the prow were D. Michel de Moncada, D. Bernardin de Cardines, and Salazar, Captaine of the Citadell of Palermo; in the midst were D. Francis Zapate and Lewis Carrillo; and in the poupe D. John, with the great Commaunder of Castille, the Earle of Plego; D. Lewis de Cordova, Roderigo de Benauides, *D.
 John de Guzman*, D. Philip de Heredia, Ruy Dias de Mendoza, and others. In Aly Bassas galley were foure hundred Ianifaries, shot, and some Archers tryed men, who fought verie valiantly against D. Johns Spaniards, who entred twice into the Turkes Admirall, and were valiantly repulst by them, Aly being succoured by diuers others gallies which were about him; but such was the resolution of the Christians, as they became masters thereof, Marc Antonio Colonna arriuing, in whose galley was the Commander Romeias, who wanted neither iudgement nor courage. Aly Bassa was slaine, and in a manner all that were in his galley; his head was cut from his bodie, and presented vnto D. John, who caused it to bee set vpon the end of a pike for a spectacle to encourage the Christians to pursue the victorie, and to daunt the Turkes, who began then to faint. John Andrew Doria was also Victor on his part, but some said that hee might haue done better if hee had list, for hee suffered Vlucialy to escape. In these actions there is no man troubled but such as are in them, the rest speake at pleasure. The most furious combat was in the left wing of the armie, whereas the Pro-ueditor Barbarigo commaunded, who left scarce any one of the enemies gallies, but was broken, sunk, or taken. This wise and valiant Captaine was shot into the eye with an arrow, whereof hee dyed. Portau Bassa fled away in a boat seeing Aly slaine and the battell lost. Caracossa Gouernour of Valona a famous Pyrat, was slaine by Honorat Gaetan, Captaine of one of the Popes Gallies. The valour of Martin de Padille was great; who with his onely galley tooke three of the enemies. It was an horrible spectacle to see the Sea dyed with bloud, full of dead Carcasses and peeces of gallies.
 Many sought to runne themselues on ground, but they were preuented by the Venetian gallies: many Turkes cast themselues into the Sea, thinking to saue their liues by swimming, but they fainted and perished before they got to land. It was the greatest victorie that had bene at Sea in many ages. The battell continued eightene houres, wherein they spent some part of the night: there died about fve and twentic thousand Turkes, and almost all the Commaunders: others write that there were fiftene thousand Turkes slaine, and seuen thousand Christian; and some write thir-teene thousand. There were taken and carried away one hundred and seuentene gallies,

Aly Bassa slaine

Victory of the Christians.Number of the dead.

gallies, and thirteene Galleots, and many were sunke, the number whereof was unknowne: there were some thirtie and nine gallies, galleots, and foists which escaped and came to Lepanto, which reliques Vlucially had charge to conduct to Constantinople, yet they were so ill handled, as hee was faine to leaue sixe of them behind. They tooke one hundred and seuentene Canons, and two hundred fiftie and eight small peeces of Ordnance: some number three thousand eight hundred fortie and sixe prisoners, and some 5000, among which were the two Sons of Aly Bassa. Sirocco gouernor of Negrepont was taken, but he was so wounded, as he died soone after: his wife, who was exceeding faire, was also taken prisoner. There were 15000 Christian slaues set at libertie. The Christians, besides priuat men, lost 14 Captaines of gallies, and sixty knights of Malta, and aboue eight thousand that were hurt: of men of name, there were slaine Augustin Barbarigo the Prouiditor, with fiftene other gentlemen of Venice: D. Bernardin de Cardine a Spaniard, Horatio and Virginio Vrsini, with diuers others: and of wounded D. John himselfe, the Generall Veniero, Paul Iourdain Vrsini, the earle of Sancta Fiora, Troilo Samelli, and Thomas de Medicis. They found in Alys galley two and twentie thousand peeces of gold, called Soldamini, and in that of Caracossa forty thousand. The whole prey was diuided at Port Caligiero, some wrote at Corfu, to euerie one of the confederates according to the rate: the king of Spaine had of six parts three, the state of Venice two, and the Pope one; and all the captaines and souldiers were commended and rewarded for their good seruice. After which D. John, Marc Antonio Colonna, and D. John Andrew Doria, retired to Messina, whereas they found that the Marqueesse of Pescara the Viceroy was newly dead, hauing frequented women too much. Marc Antonio Colonna went to Rome, & the great Commaunder of Castille with him, to treat with the Pope touching the next yeres seruice for the league, and to goe to his gouernment of the duchie of Milan, which the king had giuen him after the death of the duke of Albuquerque. This victorie was wonne the seuenth of October 1571 without any further pursuit, for the opinions of the commanders depending of sundrie masters were diuers, and also for that the season of the yeare was too farre spent.

Duke of Alba
sends to treat with the queene
of England.

The duke of Alba being incensed against the Queene of England, for that she had staid his money, and as hee thought fauoured the Rebels of the Netherlands vnder hand, he studied how to crosse her, and to cause some troubles in her Countrie, and to giue the better forme to that which had been begun by his praefises, hee sent Chiapin Vitelli vnder colour to treat with her of the composition of reprisals, and restitution of that which had beene taken from king Philips subiects, but hee gaue him secret instructions against that state, if hee might conueniently effect them. There was no meanes to come to any accompt for the spoiles which were taken by the English from any of the king of Spaines subiects or adherents, for that they were either waisted by priuat men, or else the truth could not be verified. Wherefore Vitelli was sent backe with good words, and could doe nothing in that respect. And as for the enterprises whereof hee had charge to conferre with certaine Noble men discontented with the present gouernment, hee could not worke any thing; for during his aboad in England, hee was carefully obserued, yet the Pope had his Spies and Negotiators in the countrie, and did sollicite king Philip to help to depriue the queen both of her crowne and life, and that the Roman Catholikes, and such as vnder that pretext desired innouations, might be the Masters. To effect this, they had need both of men and money, but especially of a stranger to bee their leader, such a one as the duke of Alba, whome they held to be fitter than any other. The king whither through importunitie or willingly, being full of other affaires yeelded, and it happened that Chiapin Vitelli after his retorne from England, comming into Spaine to craue leaue of the king, for that he was called into Italie, by some princes, vnto whome hee was bound, was stayed, and sent backe into Flanders with instructions to the duke of Alba, to entertaine the praefises of the malecontents of England: but this froward and disdainsfull man, being incensed for that they had refused him the gouernment of the Netherlands for D. Frederic his sonne, and that the duke of Medina Celi was sent to succeed him, he contemned and ouer-threw all that praefise, where without doubt he might haue done much harme.

14
Duke of Medina Celi sent to succeede the Duke of Alba in the lowe Countries.

Newes

A Newes being come to Flesingue that the duke of Medina Celi, was arriued neere vnto Ostend with forty vessels, they sent forth twelue Ships of warre, who tooke diuers of them, and the duke was forced with twelue more to fly to land in a cocke boat. Hee thought at his comming thither that all troubles had beene pacified: but seeing that there was more confusion than euer, and greater ruines than hee could repaire, he excused himselfe for not accepting the gouernment, and demanded leaue to retorne; the which was some dishonour to the duke of Alba.

Duke of Medina
Celi refused the gouernment of Flanders.

This yeare the king of Spaine being iealous of the French king, least hee should aid his subiects of the Netherlands was verie ireresolute in giuing aid vnto the league, his Ministers in Italie propounding new enterprises in Afrike, as well for the hope which the king of Tunis gaue them, as to free the coast of Spaine from that neast of Pyrats. The which did much distast the Pope, hee beeing verie desirous to see some better fruits of their victorie, and that the league might continue inuiolably, with the like conditions that it was made. Whereupon the kings Ministers were forced to discouer vnto his Holinesse the feare they had of the French, least they should countenance his subiects in the Low Countries: but the Pope being assured of the contrarie by the French king, hee grew discontented against the Spaniards, as if they had inuented it, to reape all the benefit they could of that warre, transporting it into Afrike, notwithstanding the iealousie increased; and although they made C prouision of all sides, to send forth a mighty armie, yet they proceeded coldly and found many delaies.

Difficulties in pushing the victorie against the Turke.

Pope Pius being newly dead, although the Pope did shew himselfe very desirous to maintaine the league, and did solicit it earnestly, yet it required much time; and the Spaniards being discontented that they could not draw the armie against some places in Afrike, from whence they received great annoyance, were slowe in execution this yere. Yet after many delaies, D. John general of the league could not auoid it, but granted two & twenty gallies to the confederats, and sixe thousand foot to be distributed among their gallies, himselfe remaining at Messina, with the rest of the armie, to succour where his Majesties occasions should require, if the French should shew themselves enemies. D There parted then from Messina Marc Antonio Colonna, with the gallies of the Church, and the knight Gild' Andrada, whome D. John had made Commaunder of the king of Spaines two and twenty gallies, and being ioyned at Corfu with James Foscarin, who was newly made general for the State of Venice, Veniero being dismiss, in fauor of D. John they thought to haue some certain intelligence of the enemies fleet, being come forth vnder the comand of Vlucially, who was much made of & esteemed by Selim for those poore spoiles which he got of the knights of Malta, being a signe that hee had fought and vanquished, although his companions in the battel had bin defeated, and forced to flie: who like a politick & couragious Captaine, did so sollicite new prouisions of an armie, shewing that the losse was not so great as the amazed multitude did esteeme it, as hee put his Lord E in better hope. Hauing drawne all his forces together, he had a fleet of two hundred gallies, galleots and foists, with fise galleasses, with the which they sailed towards Maluagia. The general Colonna, who in the absence of D. John held the first place, & Foscarin, hearing where the enemy was, after consultation, they went to fight with him, hauing 140 gallies 23 ships, six galleasses, and thirty smaller barks descouering them as they parted from Dragoniere; but for that the wind was contrarie, they could make no vse of their galleasses, which kept them from fighting. But Vluciallys fleet being more in number than in force, he thought it sufficient to keep the enemy that yeare from attempting any matter of importance, and not to hazard a battell: and therefore still in his retreat he made a shew as if he wold fight, with which art he fled from them with reputation. At that time D. John F had a resolute answer from the Catholike king, that he might ioine with the army of the league with all his forces, and attempt some thing against the Turke, what they should thinke most fit: whereof hee had aduertised the Generals at Corfu, at such time as they had resolved to goe and affront the enemy, so as they thought it not fit to stay and attend him, as hee desired. But Vlucially beeing retired, and the Generalls beeing come to Capfali vnder Cerigo, there they had letters from D. John, who

Number of the
Turkes Armie.

who called them backe to Zante; and then to Corfu, whether after many difficulties they brought the armie: but D. John would not willingly free the generals, especially Colonna, for that they had not attended him, whereupon their resolutions against the enemy fell out crossly; but Foscarin and others laboured by all meanes to pacifie that disdain: and they made a new resolution to goe against the enemies fleet, which they vnderstood lay in the port of Nauarino, and some vnder Modone.

The Christians had sayled as farre as Striuali, when as D. John de Cardone, being sent to discover the enemy, gaue them that aduice, which made them resolute to hasten their voyage that night, so as they might bee vpon the enemy before day; the which was better deuised than executed, for they arriued so late, as being first discovered by the Turkes, they might retire with all their fleet, vnder the fort of Modone, and defend themselves long from the Christians armie, who sought by diuers meanes, but alwaies in vaine to draw them out of the fort to fight. They resolved, for that they would not remaine there in vaine, to beseege the Castle of Nauarino, a place of fame, hauing given the charge thereof to the prince of Parma, but with weake prouisions, where hee preuailed nothing, they beinge soone relieved by land with many horse and foot, by the garrisons thereabouts.

Hauing staied in those seas some daies, being in October, and fearing an Autumne storme, and the kings Gallies beginning to want biscuit, they were constrained to depart: the which did much discontent the Ministers of the State of Venice, for that they had spent that time, wherein they had designed great enterprises, without any fruit, but with incredible charge. The Navy then returned towards Corfu, leauing the passage free for Fluccialy to retire to Constantinople, at such time as hee beganne to feare the euent. D. John hauing retyred to Sicile, and from thence to Naples, Marc Antonio Colonna, and Doria went into Spaine to relate vnto the king what had bene done that yeare; and Colonna to free himselfe of some imputations laied vpon him by such as did malice his greatnesse, wherein hee did preferue his honour, and returned into Italie with great reputation.

After the arrest of the English Merchants, and their goods both in Spaine and the Low-Countries as you haue heard, the English sought all meanes to bee reuenged of the Spaniards. Some vpon their owne coast, and others went vnto the Indies: Among which Master Francis Drake, who was then a man of no great note, with the helpe of other aduenturers manned forth two ships and a Pynnace, and went to Nombre de Dios in Noua Hispania, where hearing that the Towne was not very well peopled, hee landed in the night with one hundred and fiftie men, whereof he put seuentie into a fort, and the rest seized vpon the market place, the inhabitants in this amazement flying to the Mountaines, but soone after they within the fort apprehending that their companions in the Towne had been all slaine, for that they had heard some shot, and their trumpet did not answere them. They retyred inconsiderately to their Pinnace, which they of the Towne finding, made all the hast they could to get to their ships. Thus Master Drake without any losse but a Trumpeter, and hauing slaine but one man within the towne, retyred much discontented from Nombre de Dios. After which hee came to the found of Darien, where hauing conference with certaine Negros which had fled from their Master of Panama and Nombre de Dios, they did aduertise them of certaine Mules which were to passe from Panama to Nombre de Dios laden with gold and siluer, whereupon hee landed a hundred shot, and went to attend them with these Negros, where hee tooke two troupes of them, hauing none but their driuers, being without any feare: hee vnladed the Mules and tooke the gold onely, being vnable (as some of them write) to carrie the siluer through the Mountaines. Within two daies after he came to a place called the house of Crosses, where hee slue siue or six Merchants: he found not any gold nor siluer there, but much merchandize, & fired the house with the goods being valued at about two hundred thousand ducats, & thence hee went to his ships: presently after there came downe three hundred shot, Spaniards, but it was too late.

The

Christian army retires to Corfu.Sir Francis Drakes first voyage to the Indies.

A The Venetians seeing that there was no likelihoode to make their profite by the support of this league, and that in this warre they had lost the realme of Cypres, spent foure millions of ducats, and recovered not any one place of importance; finding also, that the Spaniards after all their delays, would still be masters, command in all their counsels, and haue the honour of all executions; they resolved to make a peace with the Turke, by the mediation of the French King, and the diligence of Marc Antonie Barbaro their Consill, who had bene staied at Constantinople, the which was concluded vpon restitution of certaine small places in Dalmatia, and 300000 crownes which the Venetians should pay vnto the Turke at three payments. The Senate being certified of the conclusion, they sent their embassadours to the Pope and catholike King to iustifie their actions: Pope Gregorie the thirteenth was discontented, but there was no remedie, for hee must allow of their reasons, which seemed pertinent.

B The King of Spaine seemed no wayes distast with this peace of the Venetians, but would shew by the effects, that hee was able of himselfe, without the help of any other, to maintaine continuall warre against the Turke, for the defence of Christendome, and not onely defend himselfe from him, but make warre against him at his doore. He therefore commaunded that the fleet which was prepared at Naples and Sicile, should go and attempt some thing in the Leuant Seas, or be imploied to annoy Fluccialy vpon the coast of Africke, where he had expelled Amida out of the realme of Tunes, for that hee had performed all duties to the King of Spaine, and paid the tribute which his father had promised to the Emperour Charles: the which did much displease the Turks holding Alger and other places in Africke, who procured Selims approbation to haue him dispossessed, and another set in his place, who should be more at his deuotion, the which was executed by Fluccialy: wherefore King Philippe thinking that he had an interest therein, and that it was necessarie to weaken the Turke forces in those partes, being greatly suspected to Sicile, and other parts of Italie, which Countries the Turkes desired much to ioine vnto his empire, hee sent commaundement to D. John by Soto his Secretarie, whom hee had sent into Spaine to that end, that hee should employ the gallies hee had readie in this expedition which would be verie profitable for Christendome, whilest that the Turkes forces were but weake at sea, to attempt a succour so farre off.

D In the meane season there was great means made for the deliuerie of Aly Bassas sons, which had bene taken at the battell, whom D. John had obtained from the Confederates with great instance, but one of them was dead before, to his great grieve, that hee could not wholie gratifie the mother: wherefore he sent him home that was liuing, called Mosamed, accompanying him with a dwarfe of his owne, and foure Turkes that had bene taken with him, and many presents which the mother had sent vnto his Highnesse, in signe of honour, but he refused to accept them, and wrote the reason thereof vnto her, wherein he shewed the greatnesse of his mind. I haue forborne, said hee, to accept the present which you sent me, and Mosamed hath it, not for that I doe not esteeme it, as come from your hands, but for that the greatnesse of my ancestors is not accustomed to receiue gifts from such as are forced to flie vnto them for fauour.

E The armie being ready for the enterprise of Tunis D. John parted with the Duke of Sessa, Antonio Doria, John Andrew, and other noblemen, on the eight day of September 1573 from the port which in old time was called Lilybee, and had bene long neglected, (notwithstanding that it be one of the best ports in the Iland, and had bene much vfed by the Romans in the Carthaginian warres) others write that they went from Palermo. There was in the fleet one hundred and sixteene gallies, foure and thirtie shippes, and other vessells of burthen. The Duke of Florence did send six gallies to this enterprise, vnder the commaund of Simon de Rossimini. They landed at Goulette, whereas they found not any difficulty, to keep them from entring into Tunis, for it had bene abandoned vpon the bruite of their coming, and all the Moores and Turkes were fled to the mountaines and desarts, carrying away all their goods, yea their victuals: yet the King that was aduanced by Fluccialy was taken prisoner: Biserta a city some forty miles from Tunis was recovered with the like facility, yielding by the persuation of Amida, who thought by this conquest to recouer his estate.

Q9999

The

Peace betwixt the Turke and the Venetians.Resolution of the King of Spaine to make warre against the Turke.Some of Aly Bassas set at liberty by D. John.Enterprise of Tunis.

Fort built at Tunis.

D. John effects to be king of Tunis.

D. Diego prince of Spaine borne

1574

... and Gou-lette recovered
by the Turkes.

Porto Carrero
an indiscreet governour of Goulette.

The matter being called in question, there were many of the Kings council in Spaine, G and of D. Johns, of opinion that Tunis should be demanded, & Goulette rased, for that those places brought nothing but charge vnto the King, but they were not beleued: yea it was concluded to fortifie the City better, and to make a new fort betwixt it and Goulette, and to ioyne the fort vnto the towne by two long curtines, to beate downe the old wall of the towne, and to lay it open towards the fort. For the effecting whereof Gabriel Serbelloni had the charge, and was made Colonell generall of the garrison that should bee left there, which should consist of fixe thousand men, three thousand Spaniards vnder the commaund of Salezar, and three thousand Italians vnder Pagan Dorra: afterwards they said that D. John left eight thousand men there, with labourers sufficient for the fortification, and a troupe of horse. D. John hauing thus ordered all things, H hee returned happily to Messina, and then to Naples, where he was receiued with much ioy in Nouember, being assured that the Turke could not send a fleet from Constanti- nople to Barbarie, vntill the next yeere, and that in the meane time Serbelloni should haue leisure to fortifie. D. Pedro Porto Carrero was gouernor in Goulette, a man more respected for his birth, than for his iudgement and knowledge in martiall affaires: he was preferred vnto it (no man knowes the reason) in the place of D. Alphonso Pimentell, an industrious and a valiant capitaine. In Tunis there was left more like a gouernour than King) Maho- met brother to Amida, who was alwayes opposit vnto him: some write hee was but his cousin, and as for Amida, he was carried backe into Sicile, whereas in former time they had seene his father Muley Hascen, dispossessed and made blind by him, and with him was the King whom Pluccial had aduanced in his place: for that Amida had giuen D. John some cause to suspect him; yet some write it was for that the Moores did hate him deadely for his crueltie. This happie exploit of D. Johns, made him to discover his inten- tions more plainly vnto the Pope, which was, to remaine King of Tunis, with the good liking of King Philip his brother: continuing in this opinion, he intreated the Pope to be Intercessour for him; taking counsell both in this and all other affaires of his Secretarie John de Soto, whom hee fauoured so much, as he caused him to marrie (about that time) with the baronesse of Saint Philadelphus at Palermo: the which did nothing please the King, as we will shew hereafter. But the Sultan Selim did soone make him loose that de- sire. D. John being come to Naples from the taking of Tunis, their ioy and feasts were doubled: hauing receiued newes, that King Philip had another sonne, the which being christned was called D. Diego. He staid there some moneths much honoured: then hee passed into Lombardie, being called into Spaine by his brother; but he went not by rea- son of the Turkes successe at the enterprise of Goulette.

The great Turke being much incensed for the taking of Tunis, by a young man, who had so much preailed ouer his forces, as after that he had in a maner disarmed him at sea, he had dispossessed a King which had bene placed by him at Tunis, and set an other in his place, which was contrarie vnto him: hee sent in the yeere one thousand five hundred seuentie and foure Sinan Bassa into Barbarie, with a nauie of one hundred and threescore gallies, thirty shippes, with many galcors, foists and other small vessells, carrying twenty thousand harquebuziers, and almost as many archers, with great store of ordnance, and at land they had fiftene thousand Moores and Arabians on horsebacke. At the newes of this great fleet, the viceroys of Naples and Sicile made preparation to defend their go- uernement, if the Turke should make any attempt vpon them. D. John had commande- ment to furnish Goulette, (where as we haue said Porto Carrero was gouernour) who re- quired certaine money of cardinall Granuelle then viceroy of Naples, for the leuying of cer- taine men to send thither, the which he refused, saying that he had no other charge, but to preferue the countrey which he had in gouernement. So as Tunis and Goulette were left to their defence that were in them: where the Commanders did not agree amongst M themselves; for Porto Carrero could not endure that any man should thinke hee wanted counsell, or that he was not verie sufficient to defend Goulette; taking it in ill part, that Gabriel Serbelloni should presume to send him five ensignes of Italians, to fortifie his garri- son, saying that he would not impart the honour of the gard, and defence thereof to any but to his owne nation: but it was not long before he changed his opinion; for when as he

Skirmish among
the Moores.

Ignorance of Porto Carrero.

Goulette taken by force.

Fort at Tunis taken by assault.

A he saw the fields couered with Moores and Alarabes; which they of Alger and Caruan had sent about Tunis, as fore runners to Sinan Bassas army, which arrived soone after, he then demanded men of Serbelloni importunately, protesting that if he sent him not some, he should be the cause of the losse of Goulette. King Mahomet thought to haue sallied forth with nine hundred horse, and foure thousand foote of his owne nation, against these troupes of Moores; but he was suddenly abandoned by his treacherous and disloyall sub- jects, so as with three score horse onely, being supported by the regiment of Salezar, and some Spanish horse, he escaped. Serbelloni being troubled with these accidents, thought that it was no time now to regard the vanities of Porto Carrero, but went himselfe to view the estate of the garrison of Goulette, when hauing caused some faults in the fortifica- tion to be amended, he returned to his fort, where hee made them to labour with all dili- gence to put it in defence, vnto the citie also, but they gaue him no great respite: for the B Turkes army being landed, and meaning at the first to assaile Goulette, Sinan sent Aydar king of Caruan to besiege Tunis, the which he did; and battered it furiously with a great quantitie of ordnance, so as Serbelloni resolved to leaue it, and to defend his fort betwixt the citie & Goulette, the which was presently inuested by the Moores towards the towne, but he scattered them often by his continuall sallies, and slew great numbers. Goulette being besieged, Porto Carrero did importune Serbelloni to send him men, the which he did by the lake: but the Turkes did soone take that passage from them, making a long bridge of barques bound together, and thereon as it were a causey of earth, whereon they plac- C ced many muskietiers. The batterie planted against the bastion which looked towards the sea, made a great breach, where the Turkes gaue a terrible assault, with bridges made of maine yards, according to their custome, the which notwithstanding was defended by the valour of the Christians: but Porto Carrero did either forget the duties whereunto men besieged are bound, or hee did not know them: Hee neuer would suffer his men to make a sallie, it seemes hee feared to waist powder and shot, so as the Turkes had good meanes to view the fort, to lodge, and to plant their ordnance at their pleasures: And to shew the great arrogancie of this gouernor, whereas Anthonie Carrafe a gentleman of Na- ples sought to giue him good aduice, he caused him to be strangled & to be cast in a sacke into the sea. Serbelloni, although he had need of all his strength within the fort, yet know- D ing the importance of Goulette, he weakened himselfe to fortifie it, being continually called on by D. Pedro, and sent him men as he could; yet could he not prevent it, but that Goulette was taken by force, Sinan hauing caused a general assault to be giuen, the which was continued with such fresh supplies one after an other without intermission, as they within it were no longer able to make any more resistance, but were forced, and all (or the greatest part) put to the sword: some write that Porto Carrero with three hundred soul- diers were made slaues, and that the sonne of King Amida was taken in that place. Gou- lette being taken, the Turkes went and besieged the fort both by sea and land, hauing fil- led certaine great barques with packes of wooll wet, to choake their cannon shot, and planted many harquebuziers in them, with long fowling peeces, which carried very great E bullets, to keepe the besieged from their defences. Sinan made batteries, and cast vp trenches to approach vnto the fort, as he was accustomed, to batter, sappe, and mine at one instant in diuers places; where hauing made great breaches, hee caused three seue- rall assaults to be giuen, but they were all resolutely defended; and hee caused fire to be set to a mine, the which did more harme vnto the Turkes than vnto the besieged. The as- saults were continued vnto the fourth time, & still they were repulst with great slaugh- ter: but this valor decreasing by litle and litle through their ordinary assaults, they were so weake at the fist, which was generall and more obstinate than any of the rest, as the place was forced, and all within cut in peeces. excepted Serbelloni, who was taken being F wounded, and drawne by the beard before the Bassa, who caused him to bee kept. Pagan Dorra flying the Turkes, and thinking to find more mercie with the Moores, was slaine by them, and his head set vpon a pike. Porto Carrero being a prisoner, died within few dayes after, (as some say) of poison. D. John de Sinoghera after these two losses, was left alone with three hundred and fiftie men to defend the tower vpon the lake, standing betwixt Tunis and Goulette, the which (although it were very strong, yet considering his owne strength, strength, and the enemies, he could not hope to make any long defence) he yielded vpon certain conditions, and passed afterwards into Sicile, to carrie newes of this great losse. Thus Goulctre (the honour of the Emperours conquests, the which kept Afrike in awe) was lost through carelesnesse: Sinan caused it to be rased to the ground, and then returned triumphantly to Constantinople.

Q q q q q j)

1574

D. Sebastian King of Portugall gets into Afrike.

17 This yere the Christians reaped both losse and dishonour in Afrike, for D. Sebastian the yong King of Portugall, of too warlike a disposition, as we haue shewed, and desirous of glorie, seeking to aduance himselfe by some enterprises against the Moores, hauing not imparted any thing vnto the Queene his grandmother, nor vnto the Cardinall his vnckle, by whose care his actions should haue bene gouerned, by reason of his age, which was voyd of experience: He sent D. Antonio Prior of Crato his cosin, but base, to Tanger in Afrike, which did belong vnto the Crowne of Portugall, and made him his lieutenant generall there, deliuering him the Standard with great solemnitie. He would haue him accompanied with some numbers of soldiers, but specially with many knights: and within few dayes after the King himselfe, taking many of the chiefe noble men with him, embarked at Calcais, whenas no man suspected it, and went in like maner into Afrike, leauing order in Portugall, that some knights should follow him, and therefore hee did write many priuar letters vnto them. Being come to Tanger, and hauing tried the Moors forces in the neighbour garrisons, and seeing his men in all their skirmishes to be ouerlaid with multitudes, and the nimblenesse of the enemies horse, he beganne to consider better of the daunger whercinto he had runne, of whom depended the peace and quiet of his whole Realme; and so being better aduised by some noble men of authoritie that were with him, but especially being moued by a letter written by father Lewis Gonzales a Iesuite, who had bene his Scholemaster, and was then in great credit with him, he resolved to returne presently.

THE

THE 30 BOOKE OF THE Historie of Spaine.

The Contents.

- 1 D. Lewis de Requesens, great Commander of Castille, sent gouernour into the Low Countries for King Philip.
- 2 D. Iohn of Austria sent Gouernour into the Low Countries.
- 3 Death of D. Iohn of Austria.
- 4 Xerxes Kings of Maroc and Fez, their beginning and proceeding.
- 5 D. Sebastian first of that name King of Portugall.
- 6 He led an armie into Afrike.
- 7 Battell in Afrike, and death of D. Sebastian.
- 8 D. Henry 17 King of Portugall, a Cardinall.
- 9 Pretendants to the Crowne of Portugall.
- 10 D. Anthonie Prior of Crato a bastard, made legitimate, disannulled by King Henrie.
- 11 Five gouernours in Portugall during the inter-reigne.
- 12 Death of the King D. Henrie.
- 13 Confusions in Portugall during the inter-reigne.
- 14 The king D. Philip meanes to debate his right by armes.
- 15 Aduice and Councell of the Doctours in Spaine touching the Kings title.
- 16 D. Antonio is declared Defender of the Realme against King Philips forces, and then is sluted King.
- 17 Duke of Alba generall of the King of Spaines armie in Portugall, and his exploits.
- 18 Defeat and flight of D. Antonio, and the taking of Liubone.
- 19 Death of D. Anna Queene of Spaine.
- 20 D. Antonio layes aside armes and retires himselfe.
- 21 Articles graunted by the King D. Philip to the Estates and realme of Portugall.
- 22 D. Philip receiued and acknowledged for King at Liubone.
- 23 Terceres Islands, their conquest, and the rout of the French armie.
- 24 D. Philips sonne Prince of Spaine acknowledged and sworne at Liubone.
- 25 Absolute conquest of the Terceres, by the defeat of Emanuel de Silua, and of Monsieur de Chattes.

Q q q q iij

The

¶ All the Realmes of Spaine vnited to the Crowne of Castille vnder D. Philip the second.

Great Commander of Castille sent gouernour into the Low Countrie.

On Lewis de Requesens great Commander of Castille was sent to succeed the D. of Alba in the gouernment of the Low Countries after that the duke of Medina Celi had refused it. He was a man approaching somewhat in disposition to his predecessor. He had accompanied D. John of Austria in his sea-army, whenas he fought with the Turke at Lepanto, as his chiefe Councillor, and after his returne into Sicile, the King D. Philip had made him gouernour of Milan, where hee remained not long, the King thinking him fit to calme that which the Duke of Alba had left in trouble in Holland and Zeland, into which prouinces it seemed that the whole warre was reduced. Among other disorders, he found the Spanish souldiers discontented, and cursing the Duke, who owed them foure and thirtie moneths pay: whom he was forced (for the first triall of his wisdome) to seeke meanes to pacifie, the which he did in some sort: but when he beganne to enter into the managing of affaires, he fell grossely into an inconuenience which did preiudice the rest of his gouernement. What his actions were, during his charge there, you may read at large in that Country historie. He liued not long there, but died of a pestilent feuer in the yere one thousand five hundred seuentie and sixe, leaving those Countries in greater confusion than the Duke of Alba his predecessor had done.

King of Spaine
renokes his affirmations and breakes with
the Genouois.

In the yere 1574 it was found that king Philip was indebted to the merchants of Genoua and Spaine in 37 millions of ducats; for the which hee gaue them assignements out of his royall reuenues: whereupon for the relieuing of his necessities, and to free the king from the Genouois, the Deputies of the chiefe Cities and Townes were called to Madrid, to consult how to relieue the king in these great wants. Among other, there was one in Court, whose name was Francisco Brauo, who told the king, that the contractions which he had made with the merchants, were in respect of them, against all law and equitie; the which, if he did not remedie within a yere, hee would not haue any meanes to free himselfe: telling him moreouer, that he had beene fraudulently circumvented by them, in very great summes, contrarie to all diuine and humane lawe. Whereupon in the yere 1575 the king of Spaine made a decree touching the losse and preiudice which his royall reuenues had receiued by the corrections which he had made with the Genouois and others, making a staie of all the said contractions and assignements, the which did much trouble the Genouois and others, to whom the king was indebted, for by reason of this suspension they could not giue satisfaction vnto their creditours, which made them to present an answer to this decree vnto the King, shewing that it would be a blemish to his honour, and verie preiudiciall to his seruice; yet could they not get it reuoked, but were forced to make a new composition.

Genoua di-
uided into factions

The citie of Genoua was diuided into two factions, the old (which were the noble men and gentlemen) and the new (who were some gentlemen, supported by the common people.) D. John Idiagues as embassadour for the Catholike King, had labored much to quench this fire which beganne to kindle, and had perswaded them to lay aside armes: but this yere the furious multitude little respecting the promise of the wiser citizens to disarme,

A disarme, and to treat an accord with the liking and authoritie of the Catholike King, for whom Idiagues was employed in that action, matters were brought to despair, the faction of the new offering by force to reforme the publique gouernement after their owne manner, and to abate the power of the nobles, who were called the old; who not suffering so great an indignitie, went most of them out of Genoua, John Andrew Doria beeing as it were their head. The Pope sent Cardinall Morone thither, but the Genouois would not treat with him alone, vnlesse the Catholike kings Embassadour were called, he being the chiefe protector of that common weale. The matter was found so difficult, as the faction of the old despayring, were come with good forces, some to Final, and some to Aquai, resolving to recouer their countrie and dignitie by armes, choosing John Andrew Doria for their Generall in that warre, who refused that charge, vntill he had leaue from the king of Spaine, whom he serued. In the meane time, they had newes that the king was ready to send another Embassadour, to adde authority and counsell to the other two, which was the Duke of Gandie: but D. John d. Austria came first with a nauie vpon that coast, to see that no Prince, by means of this tumult, should enter into Genoua; and make himselfe master thereof: and therefore they made prouision of souldiers, drawing into the duchie of Milan two regiments of Germans, and leuying some Italians. The people of Genoua grewe iealous that D. John meant to seize vpon their citie; but he, according to the order he had from his brother, hauing conferred with Prince Doria and the gouernour of Milan at Spetie, they concluded onely, that there should be all meanes attempted to quiet that citie, and if the people should continue in their obstinacie, the faction of the Old should haue leaue to recouer their countrie, with their auncient rights and dignities: and the rather, for that they offered to make warre at their owne charge, requiring nothing of his Maiestie, but Doria person, and the gallies wherewith hee serued the king. The Emperour and the French king sent their Embassadours to pacifie this tumult, but they could not effect any thing, especially he of France, whom for that they would not breed a iealousie in the king of Spaine, they dismissed with good words. They without the citie finding by the treatie that there was no hope of any pacification, were readie to goe to armes, when as Charles Borgia Duke of Gandie arriued; but hoping that his authority, and the priuat instructions of the catholike king, would preuaile much, they staid: but yet the mischiefe could not be thus cured. Soone after, the Secretarie Espanedo hauing beene sent by D. John, returned from Spaine, who brought order from the king, that all the resolution of that businesse, for that which concerned his Maiestie, was referred to D. John, who was then at Naples, whither John Andrew Doria was gone to that end, the nobilitie hauing prouided money to make warre: when D. John hearing that they to whom it was compromitted in the name of those great princes, could not pacifie them, he sent order to the Gouernour of Milan to dismisse his Germans and Italians, that the faction of the Nobles might imploy them, to reduce them to their duties that had no will of an accord. With which troupes, the faction of the Old went to field, and tooke diuers places. In the end, after many letters written from the Pope, Emperour, and King of Spaine, it was wholly compromitted to their agents, who caused a suspension of armes, and there were hostages giuen by both factions to stand to their arbitrement, but the accord was not fully concluded vntill the yere following.

This yere there grewe seeds of warre in Africke, which past into Europe, to the great preiudice of Christendome; for that Muley Mahomet king of Morocco, beeing loath to leaue the gouernment of that realme to Muley Moluc his vncke, according to the will of his grandfather dying, Moluc fledde vnto the Turkes for aid, and obtained it; with the which, and with the Moores which fauoured him, he made warre against his nephew, and defeated him thrice in battell, so as he remained absolute Lord of the realmes of Fez and Morocco, his nephew beeing fled vnto the mountaines, where, with some that followed him, he ranne vp and downe, not as a king, but like a thiefe; beeing by nature both couetous and cruell, vntill that in the end he perswaded the ill aduised king of Portugal, not onely to giue him succours to recouer his realme, but to passe thither in person, with the ruine of that royall house, as you shall hereafter heare.

After

Muley Mahomet
expelled out of his realme

1576
D. John of Austria
gouverneur
of the Netherlands.

John de Escovedo
Secretary to Don John.

D. John aspires to the crowne of England.

D. Johns carrying in his gouernment.

Voyage of Sir
Francis Drake
into the South sea, and about the world.

2 After the death of Lewis de Requesens, great Commaunder of Castille, D. John d' Austria was appointed to succeed him in the gouernment of the Netherlands, to which end he came into Luxembourg, but he would not aduance, vntill that the Estates had accepted him for gouernour, and Lieutenant general to the king his brother. This prince was once in an humour (as we haue said) to obtaine the crowne of Tunis, by the bounty of the king D. Philip, whom hee had caused to bee often importuned by the Pope, wherein the king tooke no delight, but the taking of that citie by the Turkes, and therazing of those forts which the Spaniards had built to keepe it in awe, made him to forget that humour: but it did not quench his desire to raigne in some other countrie, in the which a Secretarie of his called John de Soto entertained him. Which the king vnderstanding, hee tooke him from him, and commaunded him to vse the seruice of John d' Escovedo; by which change he got little, he animating him more to greatnesse: wherefore he thought it expedient (to diuert him somewhat from these ambitious desires) to drawe him out of Italie, and from those honourable employments which presented themselves, and to send him into Flanders, to contend against his rebellious subiects: the which D. John hearing, hee bare it with great impatiencie, to see himselfe so much deiected, as to become (as a man would say) an Algouzil, or Prouost Marshall, to punish common people, whereas he had been Generall of armies to the greatest Potentates in Christendom, against the incomparable forces of the great Turke.

Having failed of Tunis, he conuerted his thoughts vpon England, and caused the king to be solicited to make waite vpon that realme, for that (said he) Queene Elizabeth had alwaies fauoured the Estates and townes of the Lowe countries, in their contumacie and rebellion, and to make him General, hoping to make himselfe king; thinking that the affaires of the Lowe countries were too little to keepe him occupied. The king D. Philip, for that hee would not flatly refuse him, seemed to yeeld to it, but hee said, they must first subdue the Flemings, commaunding him to goe directly out of Italie thither, and not to passe by Spaine: but he obaied him not, for he went out of Italie into Spaine, and all by the counsell of Escovedo; which made the king to bee ill conceited of him: but in the end hee was forced to goe, and arrived as you haue heard. Beeing accepted for their gouernour, hee ratified the treatie of Gand, made by the Deputies of the Prouinces, for the expelling of all strange souldiers, and other things, the which was confirmed by the king of Spaine, in April, 1577, and his Letters of approbation sent to D. John.

Then the poore Netherlanders beganne to hope for better vsage, thinking that they were at an end of all their miseries, but the effects which followed did soone shew that this hope had beene conceiued vpon apparances. For in all D. Johns gouernement there was nothing but dissimulations, secret enterprises, accusations, false imputations, surprises, and apparent designs to heap vpon this people all the miseries of the precedent gouernements; although the effects did not follow according to the Spaniards desires. The which they imputed to D. John, who was not come into the Low Countries to liue there in a quiet estate, or to walke in his night gowne, but with an intent that the enterprise of England should proceed, and that the King would make him General: but seeing that (notwithstanding all troubles in his gouernment were in a manner pacified) they made no preparation tending to inuade that land, and that there came no aduice out of Spaine conformable to his desire, yet would hee commaund an armie, and breed occasions to employ it where he was. What his particular actions were you may read in that countrie historie.

Sir Francis Drake beeing encouraged by the good successe of his first voyage to the Indies, resolved to make a new attempt, and to passe into the South, thinking thereby to doe his Prince and Countrey great seruice, to winne himselfe immortall fame, and to annoy the King of Spaine and his subiects: wherefore in Nouember in the yere one thousand five hundred seuentie and seuen, he went forth of Plimmouth with five English shippes and barques, bending his course towards the Indies (my meaning is not to report the particularities of this voyage, but onelie to touch the action summarily, for

A for that it concernes Spaine) in August after his departure hee past the Strait of Magellan, and came into the South sea, whereas the Spaniards liued secure from all feare, hauing neuer seene any Englishman there before. Beeing in this sea, hee tooke many ships and barks, with great store of treasure: but there was one shippe which exceeded all the rest in wealth, hee tooke it at a place called Cape S. Francisco, 150 leagues from Panama: the shippe was called by the Spaniards Cacaluco, which name (after the taking thereof by Sir Francis) was wittily changed by a Spanish ship-boy, and tearmed Cacaplara, for that it yeelded him so much siluer. They found in her (besides great store of iewels, and pretious stones) thirteene chests full of ryals of siluer, foure score pound weight of gold, and 26 tunne of siluer. Having done diuers exploits, and sackt some townes vpon the coast of Peru, and Noua Hispania, being now full fraught with treasure, and sufficiently reuenged (as he thought) of the Spaniard, hee resolved to goe to the Islands of the Molucos, and so returne to England by Cape Bona Esperance; the which he performed happily in Nouember, beeing the third yere of his voyage. By the report of Nugno de Silua a pylot (whom he had taken in the beginning of his voyage at the Islands of Cape Verd) & others, Sir F. Drake carried to the coast of Peru, 866 kintals of siluer, every kintal being worth 1200 ducats of Spaine: all which amounteth to a million thirtie nine thousand and two hundred ducats. He had besides, tenne kintals of gold, every kintall beeing valued at ten thousand and five hundred Spanish ducats: which last some amounteth to a hundred and fiftie thousand ducats; besides other treasure in that shippe which had not beene customed (the value whereof was vnkowne) as pearles, pretious stones, ryals of plate, and other rich commodities.

These exploits of his in the South sea, (where they had neuer seene any enemy) did much trouble the Viceroy of Peru, who sent forth Pedro Sarmiento, a good nauigator, with two shippes, to meet with Captaine Drake if hee could, or to fortifie in the Strait of Magellan, against such as should hereafter seeke to passe it. D. Pedro passed through the Straite with one of his shippes, and so went into Spaine, where he informed the king of the nature of the Strait, and of the meanes to build a fort there, the countrey beeing rich, and abounding with all necessaries. Whereupon the king (beeing aduertised that there were more shippes making ready in England) sent Diego Flores de Balde with twentie three shippes, and three thousand and five hundred men, and a new gouernour to Chili, with five hundred old souldiers come out of Flaunders; but before they were free from the coast of Spaine, they were surprized with a storme, and eight of the Fleet cast away, with about eight hundred men, the rest put into Cadiz.

D. John d' Austria hauing drawne a world of miseries vpon those Prouinces which were vnder his gouernment, died in the Campe, neere vnto Nemours this yere 1578, of a pestilent feuer; a prince who conceiued high and great enterprises in his mind, but about all, hee was much incensed against the Lowe Countries, and their generall Estates: his death was happie for them, hauing thereby some ease of their miseries and calamities. Men made diuers censures of his death, and of Escovedo his Secretaries, who in a manner at the same time was slaine in Spaine (as some said by the kings commandement) for the which Antonio de Peres was afterwards called in question, as you shall heare.

Alexander Farnese prince of Parma, who was D. Johns lieutenant, had commaundement of the armie, and was afterwards gouernour in his place: hee was more temperate and modest in his gouernment than the Spaniards that went before him. This prince was allied to the king of Spain, he hauing married in the yere 1565 D. Maria of Braganca, daughter to D. Edward of Portugal, who was brother to the Empreffe D. Isabella, so as they were cousin germans: which marriage might purchase to the house of Farneses some right to the crowne of Portugal: where, soone after there happened a lamentable change; for that this realme which had maintained it selfe with honour and reputation, in all the parts of the habitable earth, for so many ages, was reduced vnto a Prouince, vnder him of Castille, as you shall heare.

Wee

1577.

1588

Treasure Sir
Fr. Drake brought out of the South sea.

Ships of Spaine cast away.

1578
Death of D.
John of Austria.

1577 Moors.Xeriffes kings of Marocco their beginningMahomet Ben Hamet Xeriffe
the father.Three brethren Xeriffes.Burning and Armes united makes a man
complete.Emanuel king of Portugal fortified by Moors.

4 We must now enter into the mournfull Tragedie of the death of D. Sebastian king of Portugal, who thrust on by his ambitious desire of glorie, gouerned by ill counsell, and among other affections, by zeale of religion, wherein the Iesuits had instructed him, would (contrary to the grane aduice of the Catholike king) and without any reason, bee an actor in the quarrels of the Xeriffes, princes of Afrike, contending for the empire of Marocco and Fez, from whence the race of the kings, Merins, (of whom wee haue often made mention in this worke) had bene expelled by their fathers. It will be fit, to giue more light vnto our historie, and more tast of the fruit which may be reapt, to relate briefly the beginning of these Xeriffes, and the policie of their suddaine and admirable aduancement to the large dominions, so neere vnto Spaine, there beting but a small cut of sea betwixt them, or (as a man would say) a puffe of wind.

Mahomet Ben Hamet called Xeriffe, which signifies famous and sacred, the which among the Mahometans they giue vnto them that are of the line of their Prophet Mahomet (from whom he said hee was descended) lived in the times of our fathers, in the towne of Tigumedel, in the countrie of Dara in Numidia. He was a politicke man, and a great hypocrite, who had by a fained sanctitie purchased the reputation of very religious and wise. He was learned in their law, in Astrologie, and in art Magike. He had three sonnes, whom hee instructed in the same manners, arts, and disciplines, and were esteemed as the fathers; especially after that they had bene at Mecque, and at Medina Tal Nahi in Arabia, which is a voyage held among them of great merit: for at Medina Tal Nahi the youngest, who past the rest in policie and valour.

Hamet and Mahomet beeing come to Fez, a great and well peopled citie in Afrike, and the chiefe of the reale of Mauritania Tingitana, to make themselves knowne there, they weremuch made of by men that were curious of Sciences, and in a short time one of them obtained a publike Lecture in the Colledge of Modarafa, and the other had the charge to instruct and bring vp the children of Muley Mahomet, and Otaaz, who was the last king of Fez saue one, of the race of Benimerins. The Xeriffe their father hearing that his sonnes prospered, hee aduised them to ioyne the art of warre with knowledge and learning; for those two faculties vnited, make a ready way to greatnesse: the which they could practise in such sort, that as they had bene esteemed for their learning, so they got a reputation to be valiant among the Xeques and Alcides of the realme; and vpon this opinion they had charge giuen them of some troupe or corner of horse, at their instance, vnder colour of religion, saying that it was to make warre against certaine Moores and Africans which went to seue the king of Portugal, and did annoy the other Mahometans of their sect: Muley Nacer brother to the king of Fez, was very vnwilling they should haue this Commission giuen them; saying, that by the like practises, and vnder a cloake of holinesse, the families of Isdris, Magaracs, Almoranides, and Almohades had raigned in Afrike, and ruined the auncient royall houses. Yet they had commission to leue men; and proued famous captaines in a short time; for hauing for a time ouerrunne the provinces of Duquele and others, where the Portugals had some forts, and done many gallant exploits, they past into that of Sus, which depends vpon Marroc, whither their fame was spread; and beeing there visited by many Moores and Africans of those marches, liuing then in libertie, without any king, and who beleued that their designe was to make warre against the Christians which did hold the coasts of Afrike vnder the kings D. John the second, and D. Emanuel of Portugal, and the townes of Ceuta, Tangir, Arzile, Alcazar, Ceguer, Azamor, Mazagon, Saphi, and Cap d'Aguer, & farther off, the castle of Arquin, they had presently a great troupe; especially for that king Emanuel entertained many Moores and naturall Africans: so as that Christian king might at sometimes haue drawne into armes of those nations aboue fiftie thousand horse, and twice as many foot. Vnder the name of this religious warre, the Xeriffes became strong and fearefull in the field: and in fauour thereof, they did obtaine of the inhabitants of the province of Dara in Numidia, where they were borne, the tenths of their reuenues: for vnto God, said they, the tenths of the fruits of the earth are due by auncient

1577

Xeriffe makes himselfe master of Turedant.Xeriffes strike vpon Marroc
by treason.

A auncient constitutions. The citie of Turedant, which is a seat royall, and in olde time was the third member of the Miralimumins estate, did not onely receiue this impossit willingly; but they also perswaded the other Westerne Prouinces to doe the like, and to choose for their gouernour the old Mahomet, Ben Hamet, the father of these two Xeriffes, Hamet and Mahomet: by reason whereof, he made himselfe master of Turedant, & made sharpe warres against the Moores which held the partie of the Portugals, in the province of Dara and others. A certaine Xec of the towne of Tiguint, in the mountaines of Atlas the greater, towards the province of Sus, drew vnto the Xeriffes the people of Hea, lying neere vnto him, who did contribute the tenthes of their fruits, and of the feeding of their cattell, and in the end hee put them in possession of the towne of Teneft, which is the chiefe of that province of Hea, one of the best of Afrike: and then they called themselves princes, by the practises of this Xec, who was a Genouois renegado. But they were expelled by Nugno Fernandes of Atayde a Portugal, who forced them to retire to Tazarot, a towne of the iurisdiction of Marroc, and in the meane time old Mahomet Ben Hamet the Xeriffe died. His three sonnes continuing their enterprises, besieged the towne of Alquel, and tooke it from a Xec, called Cidi Bugima Africain, vassall to the king of Portugal: and then they seized vpon the castle of the mountaine of Xanxaua, the which they fortified, and were continually assisted by the Lords, townes, and communalities of that Westerne quarter of Afrike, in regard of this holy warre. After which, they got more reputation, hauing incountried and taken D. Lope de Barriga, gouernour of Alasti, who was the most redoubted captaine king Emanuel had in Afrike. Norwithstanding Abdelquibir the eldest of the Xeriffes was slaine in this conflict. The two others continuing their designes made themselves masters of Marroc, a goodly great citie, and chiefe of the realme, by a notable treason practised against Nacer Buxentuf of the race of the Hententats, who was king, but hee held nothing, in a manner, but the very towne, for all the dependancies were at that time held by pettie tyrans; and the champaigne countrie by the Alarabes, who in that countrie doe commonly hold Lords; towns; yea and kings in subiection. This Nacer hauing often receiued the Xeriffes very kindly into Marroc, and vsed them with all honour and courtesie; hee was one time poysoned for their fraud, going forth to sic at the Heron with him. They had suborned a certaine Moore, who crossed these noble men in their way as they returned from hawking, hauing a cake in his basket made of flower and sugar that was poysoned, who seeming to go on his way like a trauelier, he was staid by the Xeriffes, who demaunded of him what hee carried in his basket, and if he had not something good to eate, or to mingle with water to disalter the king, who was there present; whereupon this Moore drew out his cake, and presented it vnto the king, who did eate thereof, and dranke the water, into the which he had steeped it; whereof he did not presently complaine: but beeing come to Marroc, he fell sicke and died within 6 daies. In the meane time Mahomet knowing what would happen, went to Xanxaua to fetch his forces, to second his brother Hamet, as they had agreed, who by the meanes of some confederates, which vnder other pretexts were then at Marroc, seized vpon the castle, euen as his brother arriued with his troupes, and made himselfe to be acknowledged for king of the Marroquins, and seeming with a counterfeit modestie to be very much grieved for the accident which had befallen king Nacer; as a thing (said he) practised by some of his enemies vnknewne to him, he said that his election was a blessing of heauen, the which must follow: seeking to pacifie the children of the deceased, promising them honours and estates at their desires. Then he sent to aduertise the King of Fez, that hee had bene created King of Marroc, and that hee would hold the citie of him; and sending him certaine presents, accompanied with submissions and promises, he rested satisfied. Thus he got the possession of Marroc, and of the rights of that realme, the iuridictions whereof extend farre towards the South; which (as wee haue said) were distracted by the usurpations of pettie Lords: and many townes also had infranchised themselves, gouerning themselves like common weales, but they reduced them to their old obedience. The warres against the Christians and Moores which did adhere vnto them, beeing the chiefe support of their auctoritie and credit with the people, they continued it, and had diuers incountriers with the Portugals.

1577

Hamet and Mahomet divide their estates.

Portugals; but that wherein they did labour more curiously, and wherein they were most fortunate, for the sealing of their greatnesse, was to practise the Moores which followed the king of Portugals partie, to draw them vnto themselves, wherein finding some difficulties, they fought to set a diuision among them, and they faiming to be partakers in their quarrels, did so bandie them one against another, as the Moores and Alarabes of the countrie of Duquele and they of Xarque of the one part, and they of Garbia of the other, by mutuall incounters and bloodie battels made themselves so weake, as the Xeriffes did easily subiect them one after another, and enrich themselves with their spoyle: which was so great, as afterwards they had not any need of armes, horses, nor followers: and then the two brethren diuided their estates, so as Hamet was king of Marroc, and Mahomet king of Sus, or of Tarudant, which towne he did beautifie with buildings, and fortifie very much: but, as the prosperities of this world are neuer absolute, going to besiege the towne of Cap d'Aguer in Sus, hee was roughly repulst, with the losse of a great number of men; the which did but quicken his spirits and courage to find meanes to recover this losse, and to maintaine his reputation: wherein both hee and his brother Hamet were much assisted by the approbation they had of the king of Fez, who was content when they had any losse, that they should repaire their forces by new leuies made in his countries, and by his subiects which did voluntarily follow them: and therefore for some yeares they entertained friendship with this king, who was the cause of their aduancement, by all duties and good offices, paying him the like tribute that Nacer king of Marroc was accustomed to paie, and moreover, the fift penie of their spoiles taken in warre. But finding themselves once strong, they began to neglect it, wherewith the king was discontented, commanding one of his captaines to let them vnderstand, that if they sent him not this tribute, he would make warre against them as enemies. The death of king Mahomet Ostaz ensuing, pacified this quarrell, for that the children of the deceased who had bene scholars to one of the Xeriffes, would not molest them, but confirmed them easily in their conquests, making a new promise of a light tribute, of the which they neuer paid any thing, being glad to haue such an occasion to breake with them of Fez, whom they knew to be men of little valour, liuing in delights and pleasures: Ambition which hath no bounds, prouoking them to passe all the bonds, respects, and considerations of the fauours which they had receiued from the house of these Ostaz Merimes, whom in the end they did ruine: and the better to attaine to that which they pretended, they made an alliance with Aben Hadu, and Muley Ferez, brethren, and Muley Drys, with other Lords of the mountaines, enemies to the familie of the Ostaz; so as when Muley Hamet, who had succeeded Mahomet his father in the realme of Fez, thought (after that the tribute had bene discontinued some yeares) to force the Xeriffes: they gaue him plainly to vnderstand that they owed him not any thing, and that they had more right to raigne, and to demand tribute of the kings and people of Affricke, than any other, for that they were descended from the Prophet Mahomet, and his lawfull successours: wherfore, if he thought it good to bee their friend, they would bee his: and if hee attempted to crosse them in the warres which they made against Christians, that both God and Mahomet would punish him, neither should they want power to defend themselves. And soone after, the Xeriffe of Marroc, who confined vpon the countrey of Fez, made triall if this king had the courage to enter into warre; for he began to force the inhabitants of some places of his iurisdiction which lay neere vnto him, to paie him the tenthes of their fruits, which was the chiefe article at that time of the receipt of their treasure: yea, they did not exact any other thing, but certaine customes or tolles. Whereupon the king of Fez resolved to proclaime war against them, & came in person to besiege Marroc, being vnprovided of Ordnance: for hee had but two peeces, with the which hee made a batterie neere vnto the port of Ciet Belabez Cebti. The other hearing of this siege at Sus, came speedily and put himselfe into Marroc, with three thousand horse, the which the king of Fez with his armie could not preuent: then instantly, with his and his brothers forces, they made a furious sallie, and put the assaillants to rout, pursuing them vnto the Prouince of Escura, doing infinit harme euen in the taile of their army. King Hamet Ostaz making hast, with the first to come to Fez, where he had news the same night, that

Tenthis offruits sho re newenes of Kings.

Muley

A Muley Musand her brother, had raysed a tumult in the cittie, & that he wold make himself King: which rebellion he suppressed by his comming. By this bad triall which the King of Fez had made, he was so incensed, as he would returne againe to the sege of Marroc, whereas the two brethren, did not attend him, but came forth to meete him, and charging him at the passage of the riuer of los Negros, at a place called Buacuba, they defeated his foreward: in which conflict Muley Mahomet his son was slaine, and with him King Aben Abdalla, he who had lost Granado in Spaine, and the King of Fez was forced to returne in disorder, with great losse of his men, baggage, and women, and to leaue the field to the Xeriffes, who by fauour of this victorie, made all them of the iurisdiction of Fez, which confined vpon Marroc, to contribute the tenths, without any resistance: and when as afterwards the King of Fez fought to be reuenged, they made head against him and his Captaines, and put them to many routes, so as that wrong remayned vreuenged. The Xeriffes hauing handled the King of Fez thus roughly, he of Sus led an armie beyond the mountaine Atlas, he tooke Tafilet, a towne of Numidia, and carried away the Lord thereof called Amar. He also took some other places, some by force, some by composition: so as these two brethren extended their dominions towards Numidia and Lybia, and subdued the Arabians and Affricans which liued in those drie countries. But that which gaue more fame to Mahomet, was the taking of Cape d'Aguer, which he had already attempted, and was then ill defended by D. Guttiere of Montroy a Portugois, who was forced and taken there with a good spoile, especially of armes and ordinance, whereof the Xeriffes could make great vse. This conquest settled them in their Estates, and made all the people of the mountaines and valleys, friends, yea obedient vnto them, and some thought that they had made Emanuel King of Portugal giue ouer the warres of Affricke, and demantle the townes of Azamor, Safi, Arzille and Alcaçar Ceguer, the which happened soone after.

King of Fez defeated by the Xeriffes.

But as all equalitie is odious in great men, and their societie nothing firme: these two brethren fell in the end to quarrell, and to open war. The cause was the hatred which Hamet bare to his younger brother Mahomet, for that hee was more esteemed and respected then he, he was indeed more valiant, more iust, and more loyall in that which hee promised: he was discontented also, that of all the bootie which Mahomet his brother had taken at Cap d'Aguer, of the which he should giue him the fift part, hee had not sent him any thing but D. Guttiere prisoner, and some few slaues: Wherefore he sent him an imperious message, that he would haue all the Ordnance, the harguebuzies, and the munition, which he had wonne and 400. slaues more, and then the fift peny of all the rest of the bootie: whereupon there were diuers answers and replies. Hamet seeing that hee did not performe what he desired, sent certaine troupes to leaue tribute of the land, which his brother enioyed, the which he did for that time endure. After which Hamet desired that they might haue an enterview in Marroc, but Mahomet knowing his brother well, excused himselfe, and seeing they were vpon complaints, Mahomet sayd, that he had deprived him of the lawfull succession of their father, who had left him great treasure in Tazaror, demanding a moiety both of the moouables and conquests, where he had alwaies bene in the greatest dangers. He sayd moreover, that Mahomet Harran his son hauing bin borne before that Hamet had any children, he ought to be sworne King and successor to all the Realmes, according to a certaine ordonance of their father. From these words they fell to armes, and without the meditation of Cidi Arrahal (who was an Alfagui of great authoritie among the Moores and Alarabes) the warre had then growne furious and bloudy, but he pacified them, and procured an enterview vpon the banks of the riuer Hued Isfen, whether either of them came with 500. horse, and lighted in the field, where there were two tents pitched, betwixt the which they parleyed, without any other companie, but the aboue-named Alfagui, their troupes being far from them. At their coming together, Mahomet humbling himselfe something, Hamet presently laied hold of him, (shaking him after a rough maner, and seeking to ouerthrow him: but Mahomet, who was strong and actiue, kept himselfe vp, and in the end in wrastring, got his brother vnder him, doing him no harme, but reproched him with his disloyalty, the other powring forth many injuries, vntill the Alfagui parted them, and then they both retired, so as this vnkind meeting

Xeriffes in quarrell betwixt themselves.

Rrrrr

did

did breed nothing else but an increase of hatred, which continued vnto their deaths.

Hamet was no sooner at Marroc, but hee sent Muley Cidan his eldest sonne to overrunne the land of Dara, which did belong to the King of Sus his brother, who sent against him Mumen Belesche, a Geneuiois renegado with some horsemen, who was defeated and forced to retire into a Castle, where he was besieged, taken, and carried to Marroc, and there remayned a Captiue in chaines for a time. On the other side, Muley Said another of Hamets sonnes, defeated and slue Hafcen Gelbi whome Mahomet had sent into the Prouince of Hea to leaue contributions: by which two routes Hamet thinking that his brothers forces were much weakened, he gathered the greatest power hee could together, with an intent to chase him out of his Realme of Sus, but Mahomet was not faint-hearted: for acquainting all his friends with the motiues of this warre, he could so perswade them, as they were more affected than euer to support and defend him, so as he was prepared to stoppe the passage of the mountaines called Mascatotan, which are betwixt Marroc and Tarudant, where hauing seized vpon the streights, when as the King of Marrocs armie was engaged in the mountaines, and his foreward led by Muley Nacer his third sonne, readie to enter into the open fields, it was charged by Muley Harraz, eldest sonne to the King of Sus, with such furie, as Nacer hauing lost his best men, was forced to retire into the mountaines, which caused a great disorder: for Nacer hauing incountred the battell, and the Squadron which his father led, there was so strange a confusion betwixt them, that did descend, and the others which would haue ascended flying the enemy, who poured them, as one hindering another, and intrangled in their baggage, we may say, that they gaue themselves a second route, greater then the first, casting one another downe the precepices vpon sharpe rockes, both men and horses: after a miserable manner: whereupon the enemy comming, and the barbarous people of the mountaines desirous of spoyle, falling vpon this amazed multitude, they made a terrible slaughter, yet many quitting their horses, escaped on foote, by those difficult waies into the reereward, which was free from this defeat. But Hamet King of Marroc, and Muley Buagou another of his sonnes were taken, and led to Tarudant: Muley Cidan his eldest sonne retired with the remaynder of this defeated armie to Marroc, in such despair, as he would haue sent Ambassadors into Spaine to the Emperour Charles the fifth, to craue an armie of him, and to offer him homage, but hee was dissuaded by the Alfaguis, and Captaines that were with him, who thought it fit to send Mariana the wife of Muley Cidan, and daughter to the Xeriffe Mahomet, whom hee loued much, to Tarudant to procure the deliuerie of her father-in-law, and to mediate a peace: the which shee handled so discretely, as the two kings were reconciled vpon these conditions.

That there should be a new diuision made, and that to Mahomet should be left all the Prouince of Sus, from Mount Atlas towards the South, vnto the bounds of Lybia and Numidia, where it confines to Sus, the which they call Remoto, and to Hamet that which is towards the North, and to the frontiers of the Realme of Fez: That the treasures left by their father should be equally diuided. That young Mahomet Harraz should bee sworne Prince successor to both their Estates, and after him Muley Cidan: That the prisoners of either side should be set free without ransom: That Hamet King of Marroc, his children and the Captaines that were taken, should sweare neuer to carrie armes against Mahomet nor his children: That Hamet should haue the fift part of all that should be gotten by their common armes, by way of acknowledgement, as being his elder, and his part of the ouerplus, and being in person in the armie, he should haue the honour to be the Soueraigne head, and Mahomet should be as Vrsi, or Lieutenant general vnder him. This peace was concluded in the yeare 1543. but it held not; for Hamet being come to Marroc, sayd, that whatsoeuer he had promised, was by force, being a prisoner, and that it was not fit he should to wrong his son: wherefore hauing taken armes againe, the two brethren came to battell, at a place called Quehera, 7. leagues from Marroc, the 29. of August 1544. whereas Hamet was vanquished, and his army so dispersd, as Mahomet being at the citie gates, chasing them that fled, he was receiued, partly by loue, and partly by feare, the Gouernor and citizens thinking that all had beene lost: where hauing deliuered him the cause, he was saluted and held for King of Marroc. Hee did not touch his brothers wiues

nor

A nor children, nor their Jewels, nor treasure, but preserved them, assuring them that they should haue good vsage. A day or two after Hamet came to the gates of Marroc, but he found the place taken: wherefore being oppressed with sorrow, hee retired to the Hermitage of Cidi Abdalla ben Cesi, a man greatly honoured among that nation, not farre from the citie, and from thence he sent his sonnes Muley Cidan, and Muley Nacer vnto the King of Fez, to recommend them and their affaires vnto him. It was Muley Hamet Oataz, aboue-mentioned, a generous Prince, who notwithstanding the wrongs hee had receyued from their father and vnkle, entertained these two Xeriffes very courteously, and promised them all assistance. The Xeriffe Mahomet, new King of Marroc, knowing that his Nephewes were retired to Fez, sent them word, that they should not estrange themselves, and that he had no will but to do them good, whereupon they obeyed him, and he also drew vnto him by rewards and good entertaynments, all the Captaines and souldiers which had serued his brother. The Alfaguis grieuing at Hamets disgrace, did mediat an interview of the two brethren neere vnto the riuer of Luyden, two leagues from Marroc in the yeare 1545, but it was to Mahomet aduantage: for this victorious King caused a great and rich pavilion to be set vp all open, in the midst of his troupes, where he was set low vpon a royall seate, hauing barres round about, so as no man could come neere him but before, he being armed. About him were his gards fer, and other troupes of souldiers, who left an entrie to go vnto the King. There first presented themselves vnto him Hamets smaller children, then they that were bigger, and so according to their ages, who came and kissed his knee one after another, and then retired to one side of the pavilion, whereas the Kings children and his chiefe Officers were: last of all came Hamet the Xeriffe, before whom the King arose, and receyued him at the entrie of his pavilion, where as they embraced one another with teares in their eyes, and then sitting downe vpon one seate, after they had viewed one another a long space, sighing but not speaking, Mahomet began to tell him mildly of the breach of his faith, and of the peace of Tarudant, that God had punished him by the victory which he had giuen him miraculously, being very apparent that his forces were not sufficient to seize vpon the Realme of Marroc, and that he must confesse, that for his disloyalie he was fallen into the hatred of his

D subiects and vassals. That he should remember how much he had loued him, serued and obeyed him, as being his elder, and that he might assure himselfe he would beare him the like loue hereafter, notwithstanding all that was past, so as he would acknowledge him to be his king, and be content to be his Vizir, and Captaine general: but he must forbear to enter into Marroc: for he had promised the Inhabitants, who feared to be ill intreated by him, not to suffer him to enter: Wherefore hee should retire himselfe with his wife and children to the towne of Tafiler, where he should receiue all brotherly loue from him, and that he hoped the conquests they had hitherto made, were of small esteeme, in regard of those that were to come, by the which hee should haue meanes to giue vnto his children Realmes and Seigneuries to his and their content. Hamet made some excuses for that which he had done, and thanked him humbly in words for the promises and offers he made him, although the sentence seemed hard, yet he must vndergo it: wherefore he retired to Tafila in Numidia with his wiues, children, & such friends as wold follow him.

If the Xeriffe Mahomet had disposed his brother, whereof the chiefe motiue had beene ambition and then distrust, the King of Fez might well attend as much, for they had beene already in armes, and the Xeriffe knew wel that he had wronged him of Fez, which in reason required reparation: but the Xeriffes greatnes would not permit it: one distrusting another, they fell easily to quarrell. The Xeriffe complained, that after the battell of Quehera, the king of Fez had giuen refuge to Muley Cidan, and Muley Nacer his nephewes, and then he pretended that the Prouince of Tedle, did belong to the Realme of Marroc, and at the same time that he demanded it, he sent Muley Abdel Cader, one of his sons, to field, with an army, to exact the contributions, giuing him for an assistant Mumen Belesche aboue-named, by race a Geneuiois, to whom he gaue charge to beseege the strong castle of Fixtelle, and to take it: which they could not do, for the place was well defended by Ben-Ouzar, capitaine to the king of Fez, who also went to field to succor him. The Xeriffe desiring to incounter him, went also to field. In the armie of Fez were 30000. horse,

Rrrrr 2

as

Mahomet defeats his elder brother

Xeriffes brethren reconciled.

Hamet breaks the peace made with his brother.

Mahomet speaks to his brother Hamet.

Kings of Fez and Marroc at warre.

Gouverneur of Alger, who had some intelligence of these Carauels, who assailed them with fourescore Galleons, tooke them, and carried them to Alger, with all the Christian souldiers, notwithstanding any thing that Buafon could pleade, who sayd, that hee had brought them for his seruice, that by their ayde hee might enter into the Estate of Fez, from whence the Xeriffe, their common enemy, had chased all their house and family by force: but hee could get nothing from Salharrais at that time but reproches, that hee should bee ashamed, being a Mahometane, to haue recourse vnto Christians in his affaires, rather then vnto Turkes: yet notwithstanding afterwards, hee not onely deliuered these Portugall souldiers, but came himselfe with the forces of his Gouvernement to ayde Buafon to recover the Realme of Fez: for it happened, that the Xeriffe hauing greater desseignes, and aspiring to the Empire of all Affricke, made an enterprize vpon the Towne of Tremessen, which was a store-house for the Turkes, where they had a Garrison, sending his three eldest sonnes Harran, Cader, and Abdalla, to whom it was yielded without resistance. Abdalla remayned there with a good Garrison, but hee stayed not long till hee was inuested by Salharrais with a mightie armie, by whom hee was vanquished going soorth to fight with them, notwithstanding that the father had sent him a supply of eight thousand horse, vnder the command of Cader and Abderramen his Brethren, who were the cause of this losse, by their accustomed iares and dissensions: for being brethren by diuers mothers, they had alwaies some quarrell a foote, and could not agree in this important action. Cader was slayne in this conflict, being not succoured by Abderramen, and Abdalla (fore wounded) was forced to retire in disorder.

Bahami an old Captaine, and Cousin to these young Xeriffes, thinking to reprehend Abderramen for the fault which hee had committed, vsing some sharp and manly words vnto him, hee wounded him in the arme with his sword; whereof hauing afterwards complayned vnto the Xeriffe Mahomet, hee was so incensed against his sonne, as some thought hee was poisoned within a moneth after, with the fathers consent: so in a short time three of the Xeriffes sons dyed: for Mahomet Harran the eldest, who was appoynted Successour to the Realmes of Marroc and Fez, and had assisted him in the Conquest of Tremessen, returning afterwards to Fez, he dyed of sickness. In the meane time the Xeriffe had newes that the Inhabitants of the Mountaine Nefusa, called otherwise Derenderen, a people subiect to rebellion, were reuolted. They had mutined before, by the perswasion of a Preacher of the sect of Mohaydin, called Cidi Abdalla: but now the Xeriffe imputed this tumult to the practises of Muley Hamet the dispossessed king of Fez and his children: but more vpon a conceipt, then any wel-grounded reason: so as incensed with a violent passion, hee sent his sonne Abdalla to Marroc, where this poore King was, with charge to cut off his head, and there was commaundement sent to Habis, Gouverneur of Sus, to do the like to his two sonnes Cazeri and Nacer, who liued at Tarudant, the which was executed.

The Rebels of Derenderen had annoyed the Xeriffe, being animated by their Preacher Cidi Abdalla, and now they shewed themselves no lesse obstinate. It is a mightie people, but barbarous, superstitious, and disloyall, inhabiting this long mountaine, which was strong and of hard access, hauing with in it spariou valleys well tilled, carrying grayne, oyle, and other fruites, which is a branch of the great Atlas, in the territory of Marroc: who made such resistance against the Xeriffe, who came against them in person, as after that he had lost a great number of his men, he resolved to leaue them vntill another time.

The towne of Tremessen being recovered by the Turkes, Buafon Lord of Velez, who was at Melille, came againe to intreate Salharrais, that he would not ruine his good fortune, but deliuer the Christian souldiers which hee detayned, paying him some reasonable ranfome. Salharrais being incensed against the Xeriffe, and thinking that if hee should assaile him after the route of his sonnes, hee would bee so amazed, as hee might dispossesse him of Fez, requiting him with the like as he had attempted to do against him at Tremessen, he granted Buafon his request, and moreover offered to furnish him with a good number of Turkes, hauing agreed vpon some pay, and he himselfe went with

A him in person. Buafon promised to pay him a thousand doubloons of gold daily, for forty daies together, and gaue him caution in the towne of Alger: Hee agreed also that Salharrais should carry away all the mouables, iewels and treasor which should bee found in Fez, belonging to the Xeriffe.

This accord being made, the Turke went to field with foure thousand men of his nation, and twelue peeces of ordinance, giuing order to other troupes to come and ioine with him at Tremessen; the Lord of Dubude of the bloud of the Merins, came also with some souldiers. It may be the newes hereof made the Xeriffe retire from pursuing the Montaynards of Derenderen, sooner then he would haue done, and to put himselfe into Fez, whether all his forces being come, hee went to encounter the Turkes vpon the Marches of Tezar, whereas the Realme of Fez confines with that of Tremessen, and there attended his comming many daies: but seeing his long stay, and his victuals being cut off by Buafon's children, who held the passages, and had their retreats into the mountaines of Maragara, hee was forced to retire. Xeriffe was no sooner parted from Tezar, but Salharrais arriued, to whom the Inhabitants opened their gate, and receiued a garrison of Turkes: then causing his army to march against Fez, hee went along the foote of the mountaines, being coasted by the Xeriff's army which held the plaines, and was much stronger then he in horse. Salharrais was a captaine, and could embrace all occasions, so as one day hee surprized the Xeriff's reereward, led by Abdalla, his sonne, and put it to route, and made him to abandon his munition and baggage, so as the Xeriffe was forced to goe hastily to Fez, marching all that day and the night following without any stay, and then Salharrais lodged presently vpon the bankes of the riuer Sebu.

The Inhabitants of Fez haue a priuledge, that if their King suffers the enemy to approach within halfe a league of the city, as being to weak and wanting meanes to resist him, they may open him the gates, and not bee taxed with treachery, and so they cause their Kings to sweare at their comming to the crowne: For it is a great folly, say they, by a vaine, weak & vnseasonable loyalty, to expose such a city to the spoile, in supporting a Prince obstinately, who is vnprovided of force and meanes to defend them. This priuledge forced the Xeriffe to goe forth againe to fight with the Turkes army, and with his enemy Buafon, and fearing that the captaine of the Turkes which hee had for his gard, would abandon him, and retire to Salharrais, he caused his head to bee cut off.

All the captaines and gouernors of Sus, Dara, Marroc, and the Prouinces of Fez, were in his army with their people, which shewed to bee foure score thousand horse, of the which he sent eight thousand good horse of Sus against the enemy, to fight with him at the passage of a riuer, and hee with the rest of the army followed after, stretching it out vpon the riuer side, so as there was nothing but the riuer betwixt the two armies, Salharrais finding great difficulty in his passage, planted his ordinance, vpon the riuer side where there was a ford, and caused euery horseman to take a Harguebuzier behind him, and the ordinance to play continually vpon the Xeriff's squadrons; so as hee past a great number of his shot in despite of them, who with admirable celerity cast vp a kinde of rampar to defend them from the horse, and shooting incessantly gaue meanes to the rest of the Turkes horse and foote to passe, neither could they bee forced to quit the place, which they had taken, notwithstanding the many charges of the Xeriff's horsemen.

The Turkes army being past, they lodged that night as strongly as they could. The next day they marched towards the city, whereas the Xeriff's army made great resistance, the which was diuided into three battailions, and hauing made a trench vpon the great high way, planted with ordinance, they could not passe; but Salharrais making a shew as if he would goe and beseege the bourrough of Zefere with part of his army, whereas the Xeriff's victuals and munition lay, hee caused his sonne Abdalla to leaue a little hill called Dardubag, which hee had in gard, of the which hee himselfe, with the other part of the Turkish army, seized instantly; and then hee feared not the enemies horse, the which could not then anoy him, the way being rough and full of stones. Notwithstanding the Xeriffe charged the Turkes, but they of that nation and the renegados which were in his army, and of his gard betraied him; so as Salharrais Turkes got the aduantage, and

Turkes goe to beseege Fez

Xeriffe Mahomet forced to flee.

Priuledge of the Inhabitants of Fez.

Crueltie of the Xeriffe Mahomet.

Turkes make the Xeriffe retire.

and with their shot disperced their first Squadrons: and put them to flight, wherefore A the Xeriffe seeing that they of Fez that were with him began to wauer, and that most of them retired towards the old city, hee resolved also to retire himselfe into new Fez, with his souldiars of Marroc and Sus, in whom he did most relie, and the Turkes marching on in good order, came and camped neere vnto the port called Bebelsetoh, whereas many of the Inhabitants came vnto them, and Arabians that were friends to Buacon, with an intent to haue it opened vnto him. Muley Abdalla the Xeriff's sonne, who had entred the city by an other port, caused two peeces of ordinance to bee planted vpon the por-tall of Bebelsetoh, which made many shot into the Turkes campe, and did them much harme, but Buacon and his friends brake open the gate, and made way for the army to enter. B

Then there beganne a furious and bloody conflict in the streetes, where there died many good men of either side, in the end Abdalla, who had no confidence in them of Fez, abandoned it, and retired himselfe into the castle of new Fez, passing by the suburbs of Merz, where he reported vnto his father how all things had past in the great towne, who holding himselfe not safe in new Fez, went to field, in a manner flying towards Marroc, hauing aduised his wiues, his daughters and household traine, to saue themselves as they could: abandoning his treasures, iewels, and mouables (whereof hee went alwaies well furnished) to them that could lay hold of it. Some escaped, others were staid and taken, and amongst them two of the Xeriff's daughters, who had that day a notable losse. Aliben Bubar, who was captaine of the fort of new Fez, held it, vntill C he thought that the Xeriffe was in safety, and then hee yeilded it to Salharrais by composition, his men going forth with their armes and horses, and what goods they could carry with them.

Fez abandoned by the X-eriffe to the Turkes.

Fez taken by the Turkes.

The city of Fez being thus wonne, some captaines of the Turkes army, who hated Buacon, gaue Salharrais to vnderstand that the Inhabitants of Fez did detest him, for that hee was affected to the Christians, and was proud, and of an ill disposition. That they murmured already against him, and gaue it out that they would neuer receiue him willingly for their King; and therefore hee should binde them much vnto him, if hee gaue them Muley Bubar, one of the sonnes of Muley Hamet Oulaz, to whom by right D the Realme did belong, and that it was their desire. Vpon these reports and perswasions Salharrais caused Muley Bubar to bee proclaimed King of Fez, retayning Muley Buacon in the fort of new Fez well garded, which made the people to mutine: for whereas the Turkes had said that Buacon was hated and reiected by the Inhabitants of Fez, it was a meere slander, and the contrary did soone appeare, for they tooke armes for his sake against the Turkes, so as Salharrais was forced (to pacifie this tumult) to send him vnto them with an Alcaide, he promising to returne againe to accomplish their conuentions.
Buacon being brought into the city, cast himselfe into the Mesquite of Caruin, and would not come forth, saying, that he had bene ill intreated by the Turkes, and in danger to be slaine by them, and therefore he would not fall againe into their hands. E
But the Alcaide, which did accompany him, gaue him so many reasons, as hee returned with him to Salharrais, who pacified him with good words and made him King of Fez: but he condemned the Citizens to pay an ounce of gold for euery house, because they had sediciously taken armes against the Turkes: whatsoeuer past betwixt them afterwards, it is certaine, that Salharrais departed very ill satisfied of King Buacon, and returned from this enterprife (where hee had gotten much honour and proffit) in such a rage against him, as hee aduertised the Xeriffe, that he might boldly make warre against Fez when hee pleased, assuring him that hee would neuer giue aide to Buacon: It may bee hee was the more incensed, for that hauing sent Ta Haya a Turke to Veles, to receiue the fort of Pipnon, which it may be was an Article of their Conuentions, the captaine that was in it, F would not yeeld it, but deliuered it vnto Muley Mahomet sonne of Buacon, and when the Pirat demanded it of Mahomet, hee refused him, but it happened on a time that the Pi-rat tooke Mahomet out of his fort, and intreated him so roughly, as hee yeilded vp the place.

The Xeriffe Mahomet being chased from Fez, thinking that the towne of Meguineus, would

A would be of great expence hee commanded his sonne Abdalla who was in it, to abandon it, for the which hee repented himselfe, hearing how much Salharrais was discontented with Buacon: for this place was very commodious to make an enterprife vpon Fez, which hee presently resolved. But hee had reason to thinke how to keepe it from the Xeriffe Hamet his brother, who vpon the newes of this losse was returned to Taflet, and had made himselfe Master thereof, with an intent to attempt some great matter.
He therefore resolved to punish him in such sort, as hee should neuer haue more cause to feare him, going himselfe in person to beseege him in Taflet, and in the meane time he sent an army against Buacon the new King of Fez; giuing the charge thereof to his sonne Abdalla; Buacon for his part sent his army to field, being led by Muley Nacer and Muley Mahomet his sonnes; but these two brethren (the one beeing base) disagreeing, they diuided their forces, and gaue Abdalla meanes to defeat Mahomet, and to make the other retire: which made Buacon goe out of Fez with a great army, who charged Abdalla so furiously, as hee put his army to rout with great slaughter. In this battaile there was a race of Arabians cut in peeces, called Arrahamenes, whom the Xeriffe drew out of the country of Sus, and had placed them in the Prouince of Temecene, of the which there escaped not one.

Abdalla defeated by Buacon.

The defeat of Abdalla was held secret by the Xeriffe, who did beseege Hamet his brother in Taflet, so as the beseegeed knew not any thing: but contrariwise they found meanes to haue it bruted in the towne, that Abdalla was a conqueror in Fez. Wherefore Hamet who had put himselfe into that place, in hope to be releued by Buacon, beleeuing that he had bene wholly defeated, and without hope of that which hee expected, he sent Zidan and Nacer his sonnes vnto their vnclie, and yeilded himselfe vnto his mercy: Who confined him at that time into an hermitage, but hee caused the heads of his Nephewes, to bee cut off, to free himselfe of all feare; and hauing left a good garrison in Taflet, hee tooke the way to Garciluin, and by that way entred into the Realme of Fez.
Buacon seeing himselfe thus obstinately pursued, went forth against the Xeriffe, where there was a bloody battaile, in the which Buacon was slaine vpon the place, and his army put to flight. Nacer his sonne fled to Mesquinez, to recouer the mountaines; his other sonne Mahomet, entred into Fez, with fifty horse onely, but the Citizens, who alwaies held with the stronger, let him know that he was not welcome: wherefore hee went also to Mesquinez, where he found his brother Nacer, and so they past to Sala or Rabat vpon the Ocean sea, where they imbarked to passe into Spaine, but they were taken at sea by certaine Pirats Brittons. Muley Bussiar, sonne to the deceased King Ha-met Oulaz, being in this battaile with Buacon, fled to Tremessen, and from thence to Algier, where he died of the plague.

Mahomet the Xeriffe beseege
th his brother
Mahomet.

Buacon King of Fez, defeated and slaine.

Thus by this victory the Xeriffe was peaceable King of Fez, and all the Xecques of the people, and Gouernors of the Realm, came and yeilded themselves vnto him. Being vnable to force them of the mountaines, or beeing loath to blemish the glory of so great a conquest by some sinister accident, in seeking to subdue those base desperate people, he made an accord with them, that they should yeeld him a certaine homage. Being then come to Marroc, he caused his brother Hamet to bee brought thither, with the children that he had remayning, giuing them in gard, to Ali Ben Bubar, and then he went towards Taradant to make a marriage (for hee was accustomed euery yeere to marry some faire gentlewoman) and therefore hee carried two of his daughters with him, with a great train of women, some troupes of horse, and twelue hundred Turkes of his gard; but he came not thither, being slaine by the way, by treason, vpon this occasion. Hee had a priuate hatred with Hassen Basba, sonne to Haradin Barbarouffe (but the cause is not well knowne) so as Hassen sought all meanes to bee reuenged. Being at Algier there came a Turke vnto him, who had heard speake of their quarrell, his name was also Hassen, a wicked and a murderous man, who made offer to kill the Xeriffe, and hauing receiued money, and great promises from the Basba, he came to Fez, whereas Abdalla was viceroy for his father; whom hee gaue to vnderstand that hee had fled from Algier, for that Hassen Basba would haue put him to death vpon certaine false reports, beseeching him to receiue him into his seruice. Abdalla who did not much loue the Turkish nation, would

Fez wholly subdued to the Xeriffe.

would not entertaine him, but willed him to goe to Marroc to his father the which hee A did, where he was receiued, and soone after made captaine of the Turkes of his gard, who were all discontented, and ready to mutine, for that they had bene about a yeere without their pay, the which they had often demanded of the treasurers, and were disdaine fully reiected, with iniuries, as it is the custome of that kinde of people: so as when the Xeriffe beganne his voyage to Tarudant; they were much incensed. The Turke Hassen taking this fit occasion to execute his desaigne, increased their discontents all he could, so as he grew confident to treat with some of the most mutinous of his garde, to kill the Xeriffe, and to spoile his treasure, shewing them how easily they might escape by Numidia, and get to Tremessen, before they should haue meanes to pursue B them.

This practise succeeded for the execution of the murthér, but they could not escape as they expected. The Xeriffe being at the passage of Mont Atlas, which is called Bi-bone, at a place named Algier, he would take a view of his gards, who for this cause were armed on horsebacke, and in battaile, Hassen who was their captaine, lighting from his horse, drew neere vnto the Xeriffe, who was at the entry of his tent, as if hee had some thing to say vnto him, being followed by foure other his confederats; being neere, and seeing him attentue to some other thing, the Treasurer who was not farre off, seeing Hassen lay his hand vpon his Cymiter, he cried out to Xeriffe that he should beware of himselfe: the Xeriffe thinking to flie into his tent, was intangled among the cords and fel, then the traitor cut one of his hamstrings, & the rest made an end of murdering him, C killing his chiefe Treasurer (whom they hated) with him. This murthér being done, it was published by the Turkes themselues, with curses against the dead. Many of the troupes which followed in this voyage, ioyned with them, so as Hassen was presently strong and so feared, as marching towards the Prouince of Sus, where soeuer hee pass, they did him honour and seruice, and being come to Tarudant they easily made themselues Master of the towne, finding it abandoned by Muley Odman, one of the Xeriffes children, and there they gathered together the treasure that was found in his, and his two daughters traines, with that which they found in the castle of Tarudant. Thus D perished the Xeriffe Mahomet, who from little was aduanced to one of the greatest principalities in the world, built vpon the rapine of three mighty and ancient realmes, wherevnto hee had annexed many other Prouinces, by notable murthers, and incredible effusion of blood, with an intent to make himselfe Monarke of all Afrike, high-minded, proude, a dissembler, a parricide to reigne alone, couetous, without loue, iniurious and contemning all other men: against whom God raised a petty enemy, when as hee thought to enioy all his conquests, and that he glorified himselfe, who slue him in the midst of his guards, yea and by them; so variable and inconstant is worldly great-nesse. The murthers liued not long vnpunished. They found amongst the prisoners whom they deliuered at Tarudant, a Moore issued from the race of the Iewes, who was called Gazi Musa, and had bene superintendant of the Engins of sugar which the X- E eriffe held in that Prouince, and was then restrained vpon his accounts.

He was knowne by the Turkes to be a man of great iudgement and vnderstanding, and that might giue them good aduice, wherefore they honoured him with the Office of Iustice Major of the towne and country of Sus. Being doubtfull what to doe, hee aduised them to fortifie themselues in that great and rich city, where they might well defend themselues for a time, vntill that succors came vnto them from Algier by Numidia, but Hassen who was rich, could not see the happinesse to returne vnto the Bascha, whom he had serued so wishfully, and therefore hee resolved to depart with his booty, and seeke to get through the deserts to Tremessen, the which they might haue easily done, if they had taken this resolution sooner: for hauing spent about 3. weekes in F Tarudant, they might well thinke they should find incounters, hauing so long a iorney to goe, which they should not be able to resist: Gazi Musa seeing that the Turke should bee no longer his Lord, he secretly gaue intelligence to Muley Odman (who was in the Prouince of Dara, and leauied men, both Africans and Arrabians his friends) of the departure and voiage which Hassen and his confederats made, who carried away his sisters
and

Xeriffe Mahomet murdered.

disposition of the Xeriffe Mahomet.

A and the treasor of the Realme, thinking by this aduice to bee freed from the remainder of his accompts. These theues were not two iourney from Tarudant, but they found themselues charged, and so prest as they were forced to loose both prey and life, for they were all slaine. So the virgins and the treasor was recouered, and Tarudant also. This happened in the yeere 1557.

At Marroc the Alcaide Ali Ben Bubcar remained Gouvernor, who had bene a good seruant to the Xeriffe that was dead, and was much affected to Abdalla his sonne. Hee vsing wordly wisdom, hearing how his Master had bene slaine, not attending any order or commandement from the new King Abdalla, slue the old Xeriffe Hamet, who had bene giuen in gard, least the people should force him to deliuer this Hamet, to seat him in the royall Throne, where they had seene him some yeeres before, the which might hinder Abdalla who was then at Fez, desiring to settle him quietly in the realme as he did.

Among the Princes which this Gouvernor slue, there were two sonnes of Muley Zidan and of Mariana daughter to the deceased Xeriffe Mahomet, who found an easie meanes to be reuenged, for after the death of Muley Zidan her husband, she had retired to Abdalla her brother, whom she gouerned whilest he liued with great fauour, so as Ali Ben Bubcar had a most dangerous enemy of her about the King. Abdalla succeeded in the realmes of Marroc, Fez and Tarudant, with their appurtenances, without any contradiction: The father had ordained by a sollemne will, made in a Parliament or Conuocation held expressly, that the eldest of his sonnes should succeed in all his Estates, Lands, and Siegneu-ries, as King, and after him his other brethren vnto the last that should be lyuing, according vnto the prerogatiue of their ages, and that not any one of their children should come vnto the crowne, during the life of any one of the vncles, which Order Abdalla in the course of his reigne thought to breake, in fauour of his sonne Mahomet, and there-vpon Mariana tooke occasion to be reuenged of Ali who had slaine her children, and procured his ruine by this meanes. This woman who was of a great spirit, gouerned the King absolutely, yea she presumed to meddle in his greatest and most secret affaires, and to giue him counsell, which he tooke not ill, but did confesse willingly with her. Hauing then a desaigne to breake this testamentary Ordinance made by his father, and to leaue the realme to his eldest sonne called Mahomet. She told him that she found he should haue some contradiction, if he should die during the life of Ali Ben Bubcar, who was vizir of the realme, a cheefe dignity next vnto the King, yea of so great authority, as in the election of Kings, the voice and approbation of the vizir was very necessary; for according to the custome of the Moores, all their Kings were chosen after this manner, notwithstanding any Ordonances and dispositions which Kings in their life time may make to the contrary, and she told him that this vizir would seeke to maintaine his fathers wil, for she saw him much affected to one of his brethren, she speake it not by surmise: for dissembling the hatred she bare vnto Ali (as shee was very cunning) and diuising often with him of diuers affaires, and euen of this, as if it had bene a desire of her owne onely, and no intent of the Kings, she discovered his heart sufficiently, by his discourse and answers, being to open and free for a Moore. Moreouer he was rich and mighty of himselfe, for he was Xeeq or Lord of a great people called Zaragana, and for his wisdom and valour, which were great, he was held so necessary for the realme, as the King ought to respect him, and gouerne his affections according to his counsels. The King in truth did much esteeme him, and knowing that the election of his successor depended of the vizirs voice and nomination, he did entertaine and gratifie Ali, thinking in time to bind him by his bounty to second his intentions. Conferring after with his sister of this desire which he had to leaue his realmes to Mahomet his sonne, she still objected vnto him the sincerity or rather severity of his vizir Ali Ben Bubcar, seeking to incense the King against him: So as on a time seeing the King discontented at some thing that Ali had done, according to the duty of his charge, but against the Kings will, this cunning woman fell in speech of the succession saying, that hee assured himselfe more of Ali then he ought, and namely in this businesse concerning his sonne Mahomet, perswading him to certifie himselfe by some tryall, and therefore she aduised him to counterfit himselfe sicke for some daies, and not to suffer any one to enter into his Chamber, if he were not called

Service rashly performed.

Abdalla King
of Marroc, Fez, and Tarudant.

Testament of the Xeriffe Mahomet.

Vizir a dignity at Marroc.

Kings of the Moores elect
their.

called the which is not strang among those nations, whereas their Kings being out of war remaine whole monthes shut with their women, and no man sees them, but such as are called. During this fiction, the Vizir Ali, who loued the King and the Estate, came daylie to the pallace, morning and euening, inquiring of his health, yet could not bee admitted into his Chamber. Mariane talked often with him, and made him beleue that the Kings sicknesse was very dangerous: who obseruing her words and countenance, perswaded himselfe that he was dead, and that she sought to conceale it, so as one morning he intreated her to tell him the truth, which should not be hidden from him; for if he were dead it were needfull to provide another King speedily for the Estate, and that such affaires could not admit delaies. Then Mariane seeing how this businesse wrought, brought him into the Chamber, where he saw the Kings bed couered, and he stretched out and couered with a cloath, as if hee had bene dead, and so hee held him: Then she said vnto him, consider Ali I pray you, seeing the King my Lord is dead, to worke so as his sonne may be chosen King, as you know he much desired. It is very fit answered Ali, that you women should meddle with such matters, what reason were it to choose a young man for King? It must not be, the Xeriffe Mahomet hath wisely ordained, that the brethren should succeed one another, knowing that Kingdomes must be gouerned by men that are ripe of yeeres and Iudgement, and being ready to goe out of the Chamber to assemble the counsell, hee was amazed when he saw the King vp, who called him, and said vnto him, that he thanked him much for the good office he intented to his sonne. Ali was so daunted, as not able to answer, nor to excuse himselfe with any reason, hee fled home to his lodging, where hauing taken the habit of a woman, he commanded a seruant of his to bring him two horses to a certaine place where he would attend them, and sodainely departed, with an intent to goe out of the realme. Being in that place, set at the foote of an oliue tree, attending his seruant, there past by two young Knights, which came from hunting, who seeing that Ali hid his face, thinking it had bene some leud woman, they came neere to see, and made him to vncouer himselfe; knowing him, they doubted some mischief, so as they carried him backe vnto the King, who caused his head to be presently cut off. And thus was Mariane reuenged for the death of her children.

This matter being knowne, the Kings brethren and all they of the blood disperced themselves, yea after that hee had caused Muley Mahomet Aben Abdelcader his Nephew, sonne to his elder brother deceased, to be slaine at Mesquinez, whom he had married with Lela Sophia his sisters daughter, onely for ieaousie, for that hee was a wife and a valiant Knight, and much beloued of his subiects. His brethren and other kinsmen being gone out of the country, he did not care much to persecute them. This Abdalla Xeriffe was the mightiest King of Affrike, the most peaceable, and the most happy, if he had abstayned for the blood of his owne house. His dominions extended from Benais in the Negros country, whether the Prouince of Sus doth bound, which they call Remoto towards the South, vnto the North sea, and from the Westerne sea, vnto the limits of Tremessen towards the East, in the which are comprehended foureteene great Prouinces. Hee did commonly entertaine three score thousand horse, well paid, the which were thus diuided 15000. in the realme of Sus 25000. at Marroc, and 20000. at Fez: and out of these hee drew fise thousand horse, which were his batrillion or Cornet: And moreouer hee had two thousand Harguebuziers on foote, Christians renegados, and fise hundred on horse-backe; with a thousand Harguebuziers of Sus for the gard of the towne of new Fez, which is the Kings pallace, and as bigge as a good towne. Hee gaue pay to all these souldiers as well in peace as warre, beeing paid euery foure monthes: when he had any enterprise, if need were, he assembled all his trained bands, and moreouer did entertaine what Arabians and Africans he pleased, lyuing in his countries, vnder a certaine vassellage, and paid them for the time they serued. He reigned seuentene yeeres, and ordained Mahomet his sonne to be heire to those their realmes, and to all his treasure, who beganne to persecute his vnckles, hauing three yet lyuing: that is, Abdelmmen, Abdelmelech, whom the Spaniards call Muley Moluc, and a bastard called Hamet.

Abdelmmen

*Dominions of Abdalla King
of Fez and Marroc.*

Abdelmmen was slaine at Tremessen, by a murtherer who shot at him being at his prayers in a Mosque; Hamet liued among the Alarabes, but Muley Moluc had first retired to Alger, from whence hee did for a time sollicit the King of Spaine, by the meanes of D. Rodrigo Alonso Pimentel, viceroy of Valencia, to assist him to annoy Abdalla his brother, who sought to depriue him of his right, but seeing it was in vaine, he past to Constantinople, where hauing complained of the iniustice was done him by his brother, hee continued in Selims seruice, seeking all occasions to giue a testimony of his valour, and to make him willing to aide him to recouer the realmes of Fez, Marroc, and Tarudant, which did belong vnto him, and were vsurped by Mahomet the sonne of Abdalla, his Nephew. He had bene in the warres which the Turkes had against the Venetians and the confederats, and at the recouery of Tunes, and the fort Goulette, where hee had carried himselfe so valiantly, as by the report of Sinan Bassa, the Sultan Selim held him worthy to be assisted and fauoured, sending him backe into Affrike, with letters of fauor and commandement to his Lieutenants, to giue him what ayde they could; so as hauing by this meanes gathered together a good army of Turkes and Moores his friends, and some Arabians which his brother Hamet brought vnto him, he came vpon his Nephew Mahomet, and gaue him three defeats, the last whereof was admirable; for Mahomet had three score thousand horse, and tenne thousand foote, and 36. peeces of ordinance, yet he disposed him quite, and chased him out of the realmes of Fez and Marroc, and their dependances. It is this Mahomet, which did incite D. Sebastian King of Portugal to passe into Affrike, whose misfortunes we must now relate.

Mahomet expelled by Moluc.

D. Sebastian the sixteenth King of Portugal, alone of that name.

On Sebastian King of Portugal had bene bred vp since the death of King Iohn the third (being but three yeeres old) vnder the gouernment of Queene Catherine his grandmother, and of his vnckle D. Henry the Cardinal, who were his tutors, and Gouernors of the realme, who bred him vp in delights and superfluous pompe, in steed of that commendable simplicity of his predecessors: wherefore being twenty yeeres old, putt vp with those vanities, being strong of body, of a couragious minde, full of ouerweening, (a natural vice in Portugals) and not content with his owne Dominions, he resolved (as it were by force) to alter the quiet of his realme, and to make triall of his valour, to his owne ruine, and of the crowne of Portugal: for not measuring his owne forces, hee would needs (without any constraint, and contrary to the aduice of Princes, which were allied vnto him, and his most faithfull friends) meddle in the warres and quarrels of the Xeriffes of Affrike: the chiefe blame whereof was imputed to the Iesuits, to whom Queene Catherine had giuen him in charge to frame his affections and Iudgement. These fathers who were in great credit, and well provided for in Portugal, beeing tired with their long peregrinations to the East Indies, where they are bound to procure the soules health of the Barbarians, with whom the Portugals doe trade; desired much that there might bee some occasion offered to set footing into Affrike, which was neere, by some enterprise of warre: entertayning this young King in this humor, who to bee ready when time should require, made certaine legions or trained bands on foote, in Lisbon and other townes, causing them to bee inrowled, and armed with pikes, and harguebuzes, and some of them to bee drawne once a weeke out of Lisbon to bee trained.

*Portugal:
5
D. Sebastian
first of that name King of Portugale*

D. Sebastian bred up by the Iesuits.

In the yeere 1574. he had an ychting desire (as I haue said) to see the skirmishes which were daily made betwixt the garrisons of Ceuta and Tanger, & the bordering Moores, he past the straight with some companies of soldiers, saying that he went only to visit those places: Being arriued in those countries hee discovered his lowne weakenesse, hauing a desire to do more then he spake, and being yong & without experience thought to effect more then hee did. Being returned to Lisbon, he did still meditate vpon some warre,

*Youth of D.
Sebastian.*

S ffff especially especially in those parts, and in this desire hee did things nothing befitting a Kings A practising amongst the common people, to the end, said he, to bee better accustomed to the toyles of warre. He thought that a happy occasion was offered, hearing that Muley Moluc, or Abdelmelech was come with Turkes to assaile Muley Mahomet his Nephew, to whom he presently sent to make offer of his forces if he had need, but the Moore (who was no discreeter then hee) thanked him, saying that he was strong enough to repulse Muley Moluc, and to ruine him, whereof hee repented himselfe afterwards; for hauing beene vanquished and dispossessed, he was forced to come to intreaties. This Moore after his defeats, fled with such as would follow him, hauing some iewels and other wealth, vnto certaine places called Montes Claros, which is, a sauage country, but finding B himselfe neither safe there, nor in a place fit to negotiat, hee went to Pegnon de Veles, casting himselfe into King Philips armes, for hee was ashamed to haue recourse to him of Portugal, whose offers hee had refused. Yet hee was forced to come vnto him, for he found not King Philip disposed to deale in that businesse. King Sebastian who desired nothing more then to goe to the warre in Africke, granted him whatsoever hee could demand, and did easily credit the promises and bragges of this Moore, who said, that as soone as euer they should shew themselves in field on the other side of the streight, the whole country would turne vnto him; for Abdelmelech, said he, had no friends, and was in a manner vnknowne; the which was found false, for after the victory he had beene receiued and acknowledged with great ioy and contentment, by them of C Fez, and Marroc, as their lawfull King, as well in fauour of the testamentary decree of the old Xeriffe Mahomet his father, as for that he was held amongst the Xeriffes to bee most valiant, and much regarded for his mildnesse and humanity, beeing alouer of Iustice, and temperate, and modest in his behauiour, vertues which grace a Prince, and which wanted in Mahomet, the effects whereof Moluc had made his subiects to tast: for he presently ordred the affaires of the Realme to their content; and for that the Turkes which he had brought with him, committed many inuolencies (as men accustomed to all excesses, lying in the garrisons of Barbary, sate from their Sultan) hee freed himselfe, and sent them away well satisfied. So as being respected and beloued of euery man, they came and offered their seruices voluntarily vnto him; and sent him rich presents from all D parts of his dominions; yet some Christian Princes were glad to haue his friendship, and among others King Philip, whom hee did also honour, so as many Christians began to frequent his Court and countries, to whom he shewed both fauor and bounty: One of his chiefeest cares was to prouide for the succession of the realme, wherefore he caused the Noblemen, townes and states, to sweare fealty and homage vnto Muley Hamet his base brother, according to their fathers testament, notwithstanding that he had a sonne: the which was held by them to be a generous act, for the which there were great feasts of ioy made at Fez, Marroc, Tarudant and other townes. Whilest that Mahomet begged succors of the King of Portugal by his Deputies; hee liued at Ceuta, a fort belonging vnto Portugal, beeing in Africke; the Gouvernor whereof beeing aduertised of his E Masters disposition, did him honour, attending an answer, the which hee had soone, and according to his desire.

But the King D. Sebastian beeing aduertised by some that were about him, that hee might finde himselfe too weake for so great an enterprise, hee tooke counsell to solicit King Philip his vnckle to bee of the partie, and to the end they might negotiat such an action with more efficacy, hee sent Peter d'Alcassona a fauorite of his, to craue an interview at Guadalupe vpon the confines of the realmes of Castile and Portugal, who returned with a good answer: whereas these two Kings met to their great contents, namely of Don Philip; there was some treaty of a future marriage betwixt Don Sebastian, and one of the daughters of Castile; but coming to confer of the F warre of Africke, which was the chiefe subject of their meeting, King Philip dissuaded him from it, as well for that he had a peceable treaty with Muley Moluc, as also for that he saw such a war had need of a more experienced commander then D. Sebastian was, & better soldiers then the Portugals of those times: for since the time of King Emanuel, that nation had not done any thing memorable in warre, at the least in Europe, or the countries

Mahomet flies to King Philip for refuge.

Muley Moluc a friend to Christians.

Mahomet Xeriffe craves aide from Portugal.

King Philip dissuades D. Sebastian from the voyage of Africke.

A confyning vpon Europe, yet hauing well defended their forts at the East Indies. The conclusion was that King Philip aduised him not to meddle in the quarrels of those Princes Moores, but whatsoever hee did not to goe in person to those warres. Being importuned by D. Sebastian to contribute men and shipping to this enterprise, hee excused himselfe vpon the great affaires he had in the Low countries, and the ielousie he had continually of the French, but especially of the Turke, who threatened Sicile and Italy, and had already taken Goulette and Tunes, being ignorant, what this new Sultan might practise against him; yet being intreated and coniuured by D. Sebastian not to abandon him in his first enterprise, he would not leaue him discontented, but promised in case the B Turke did not arme against him, to furnish him with fifty Gallies and fise thousand souldiars, so as he for his part should entertaine tenne thousand, and aduising him, what warre soeuer he made in Africke, not to abandon the sea shore, and that he should attempt the recouery of Alarache, and so proceed by degrees along the Ocean, and then they parted. King Philip aduise was very good, and the Portugals haue not yet any cause to complaine.

After that he had heard his Nephew speake, and discovered his heat and obstinacy, he fell to discourse of the inconueniences that might fall vpon him, and began to thinke of his affaires, as if the royall line of Portugall failed, and to seeke out what pretensions he might haue, were they cleere or doubtfull, and from that time hee resolved, that if Don C Sebastian should chance to die in this warre, not to suffer any other to seize vpon the Realme. The young King of Portugal being returned to Lisbon, full of hope and ioy, hee still pressed King Philip to grant him a free promise of his succors, without that reservation, if the Turke should send an army against him, the which he granted, and therevpon he thought it was but a leape to passe into Africke with great troupes, which hee imagined to haue ready; but when they came to examine euery thing in particular, they neither found men, money, shipping, nor horses of seruice, nor any thing that might serue to good vse, so as to prouide all these things, which giue motion vnto armies, they were forced to spend all the yeere 1577. And without doubt if D. Sebastian had had his men and prouisions ready, as it was concluded, King Philip would haue furnished the D gallies and men which he had promised. D. Sebastian beganne then to tast the difficulties which are found in making warre, especially for Estates which haue enioyed a long peace, and whereas both Nobility and people, haue neglected armes (the which is an inexcusable fault in them that gouerne common-weals, who should know that it is one of the maine pillars of an Estate, especially in this age full of iniustice.) Seeing then that Portugal at that time had neither captaines, souldiers, treasure, victuals, armes, nor horses, which are the essentiall parts to make a warre, into the which D. Sebastian would enter, he was forced to prouide all these things extraordinarily and in hast, seeing that in time of peace they had not thought of it. Hee was therefore forced to write into Italy and Flanders, for some Regiments of old souldiers, the Prince of Orange (who was then in armes against the Prince of Parma Lieutenant to King Philip) sent three thousand E Lansquenets into Portugall, vnder the command of Martin of Burgongne, Lord of Tamberg. And it happened that the King of Spaine being perswaded by Pope Gregory the thirteenth, to succor the rebels of Ireland against the Queene of England, there was a leauy of Italians made in the territories of the Church, the action went in the Popes name, but the King bare the charge, sixe hundred of these vnder the command of a Licentious English man called Thomas Stukeley (who not long before had gotten from the Pope the title of Marquis of Ireland) being shipped at Ciuita-uecha, came into the riuer of Lisbon when they were preparing for this warre of Africke. The King being desirous to see them, staied them, and intreated them to goe with him to this war. F He was forced to seeke money by meanes that were vnpleasing to the whole realme. The king tooke the portions of Widowes & Orfans, he made forced borrowings of the Clergy, Nobility, townes and commonalties, he laied an imposition vpon salt: he made the new Christians (as they call them) to buy the exemption of the confiscation of their goods in case they should fall into the Inquisition, and hee vsed other exactions, which made all men complaine.

Advice of King Philip to D. Sebastian.

D. Sebastian unfurnished of all things, for the warre.

He staied marchants ships. He enioyned some of the Nobility, to mount themselves like men at armes, and many gentlemen to march with the foote, being so aduised, to better his new leauied Portugal footmen; of the which hee made foure regiments; In these preparations he spent the time vntill Sommer, being in the yeere 1578. And when as he thought to take shipping, hoping that King Philip would haue sent him the gallies and men which he had promised, he found himselfe deceiued, for that the Castilian (hauing changed his minde) excused himselfe vpon new accidents which had happened that yeere, which would not suffer him to doe then, as he might haue done the yeere before: wherefore he had no aide from thence, but some voluntary aduenturers, and one very expert capitaine in matters of Affrike, called Francis of Aldana. There was no man of any iudgement and experience in worldly affaires, but saw that this preparation was weake, and vnfitting for such an enterprize, but there was no counsell, no perswasion, no difficulties, nor any other consideration, could stay or diuert him. Hauing intreated the Cardinall his vncke to gouerne the realme in his absence, he excused himselfe vpon his age; wherevpon he made foure Gouvernors, that is, George of Almeida Archbishop of Lisbon, Peter de Alcaissoua superintendant of the treasure, Peter de Sada and John Mascaregnas. They that did accompany him into Affrike were Diego de Sosa, Generall of the fleet at sea, Christopher Tawora Master of his horse and capitaine of the voluntaries of Portugal, Don George d'Alencastro Duke of Auero, Don Alphonso of Portugal Earle of Vimiofo, Don Lewis Cotigno Earle of Rodondo, Don Alphonso de Norogna Earle of Myra, Don James brother to the Duke of Bragança, and his Nephew the Duke of Barcellos, Vasco de Gama, and many others of the Nobility, but most of them in steed of good armes, were appareled in satten, inriched with imbroyderies, as if they had gone to some feast or marriage; yea there were some which had lined their tents and paulions with satten.

Gouernors made by D. Sebastian going into Affrike.

Superfluity of the Portugalls going to the warre.

6
D. Sebastian's Armie going into Affrike

In this equiPAGE D. Sebastian parted from Lisbon, being about foure and twenty yeeres old, the day after Saint Iohn Baptiste, being the fife and twentieth of Iune, hauing about two thousand failles in his fleet, but there were scarce 60. ships of warre, nor of defence, the best were fife gallies and foure galleasses; he came to Cadiz, where he staied fifteene daies, attending the Castilian souldiars of Andalusia, which should follow him by the suffrance of King Philip, which some said were two thousand; others, fifteene hundred by the suffrance of King Philip, which some said were two thousand; others, fifteene hundred or lesse. He had a Legat from the Pope in his army, with ample power to giue pardons to all such as went this voyage; then sayling towards the coast of Affrike, they cast anchor right against a place called the Almadraues, betwixt Tanger and Arzille. This place of Arzille was held by a Moore called Albacarin, who by the perswasion of Muley Mahomet, had consigned it some few daies before vnto the Gouvernor of Tanger. The King landed at Tanger, and there Muley Xecq, the sonne of Mahomet, came vnto him, and soone after the father presented himselfe, and made a goodly oration of his rights and pretensions, and of his friends and confederats which he had in the country, promising to giue the King three ports of the sea, and other places in Barbary; and for a pawne hee gaue him his sonne in hostage. King Sebastian being fed with these fictions, past with his army towards Arzille, hauing drawne all the old souldiars out of Tanger and Ceuta, and put new in their places, hauing first caused Muley Xecq to runne towards Mazagon, to see if any Moores would ioyne with him, but there was not any one that offred himselfe, but to skirmish.

King Abdelmelech or Muley Moluc had beene aduertised of this preparation from Cadiz and Castile, and also from Portugal, and was much greeued at the enterprize of this young Prince, not that he feared him, or his forces, but for that he saw him abused, and also in regard he bare some affection vnto Christians. What moued him (said hee) to be mine enemy, and to trouble himselfe to take from me a realme which doth belong vnto me, yea by hereditary right, confirmed and allowed, to giue it to another, and thereby not to benifit himselfe nor any Estate in Christendome? Doth hee thinke we are so vnprovided of souldiars, so faint hearted, so poore and needie, as wee cannot resist him. I foresee to my great grieve that the country of Barbary shalbe a tombe for the King of Portugal and his army, for God who is iust will neuer suffer that so

Muley Moluc speech of D. Sebastian.

A vniust an enterprize shall succeed. This Moorish King did often vse these or such like speeches, as it hath beene since reported. But because he would not bee found vnprovided, hee gathered together a mighty army, and went timely to field, vpon the Marches of the realme of Marroc, and hearing that the Portugal army had landed at Arzille with an intent to goe to Alarache, hee advanced into the country of Temisan tending to the Portugals frontier, and then being aduertised that the enemy hauing left the sea shore, approached neere vnto Alcaçaquibir, and had already waded through a little riuer called Macazen, which fallies into that of Luco, whereat hee wondred, knowing well that there was ignorance and confusion in the conduct of the King of Portugals army, and that it was not strong ynough to leaue the sea shore, and to march into the country.

Error of D. Sebastian.

In truth this was one of Don Sebastians chiefe errors, who (meaning to goe to Alarache which stands vpon the sea, and hauing his vessels already at Arzille to carry him in an instant) would rather trie to lead his army by land, and enter farre into a country, which was vnknowne both to him and his, to finde a bridge which is vpon the riuer of Luco, the which is not to bee waded through in those parts, and being betwixt his army and Alarache, stopped his passage. He marched vp the riuer of Luco, and made fife lodgings, before he had any newes of Muley Moluc's army, but such as vncertaine: yet hee was so neere it, as he was ready to fall into it before he saw it, doing all things after his owne fantasie, not suffering any one to contradict him: Hee had commanded

C Diego de Sosa, Generall of the fleet, to goe and attend him neere to Alarache, marshalling his army to lead it by land, as wee haue said; against the opinion of all men, yea of Muley Mahomet, who beganne now to despaire of his restitution. Some said that hee had a great desire to see his army in battaile, and to play the Sargent, and to trie if hee could order his squadrons, who like a young man and without experience, did not consider that the conduct of armies is no childrens play, growing into choller when any one tould him, that a good capitaine must haue a good foote, a good eye, and good eares, and that hee should alwaies take the surest way, how strong soeuer his army were, so as no man durst speake vnto him. Muley Moluc came to Alcaçaquibir, and hauing there ioynd with his brother Hamet, hee made hast to get the bridge, which the Portugalls sought after, and there past his army, so as the two armies were so neere in a plaine champian field called Tamita, as if night had not approached, they might haue scene one another that day. Then were they to resolute what to doe; for they must of necessity fight or retire in disorder to recouer the sea, the one or the other was very dangerous, but a battaile most; for there was no comparison betwixt their forces. King Mahomet made the greatest instance to haue Don Sebastian retire with his army, although it were with some losse. Most of the capitaines were of that aduice, especially of strangers, but howsoeuer, either in a picht field, or in a retreat, hauing so many horses to pursue them, this army must of force be defeated, wherefore let vs leaue this testimony to posterity of Don Sebastian, that hee made choise of the most honourable manner of dying. Hauing therefore put his army in battaile by the breake of day, hee beganne to march courageously against his enemies. Hee had about 14000. foote, two thousand horse and three thousand pioners; and there was double the number of boyes, whores, victuallers, carters and other vnprofitable people. But to describe the King of Portugals army more particularly, it did consist of three thousand Lansquenets vnder the Siegneur of Tamberg their Collonel, fixe hundred Italians, vnder Stukeley an English man, two thousand Spaniards vnder D. Alphonso d'Aguilar, fixe hundred souldiars drawne out of Tanger, 2050. aduenturers on foote, the rest were peafants of Portugall. Amongst which footmen there were eight thousand pikes. Moreouer fife hundred horse of Tanger, and 1500. as well of the gentlemen of Portugal, as of the Kings attendants. The souldiars were ill paid, the campe ill furnished, and all things managed with small order. In Muley Moluc's army there were 42000. horse, Moores and Alarabes, carrying lances and targets after their manner, and about 15000. harguebuziers, whereof two thousand were on horsebacke, fixe and twenty peeces of ordinance well mounted, and expert gunners.

Resolution of D. Sebastian.

Moluc falls
very sicke.

Captaines in Molucs army.

7 Battailins Af-fricke and
death of D.
Sebastian.

Death of Muley Moluc.

Death of King
Mahomet.

Defeat of the Portugall army, and death of D. Sebastian.

Moreover there was great store of victuals, his men well paid, and all orderly governed: All the discommodity thereof (the which in deed was very great) was the indisposition of King Moluc, who, having drunke milke to greedily, it quailed in his stomake, whereupon he fell extremely sicke and died in the heat of the battaile, the which did not hinder their victory. The armies approching neere together, Moluc made hast to ioyne, for he feared that some of his troupes would disband, and goe vnto the enemy, and in truth there were some which left him, but not many, nor they whom he most distrust. Hamet his base brother was Generall of the horse, Doali and Mahomet Faba captaines of the Andaluses and Christians renigados: Ozarin of Ragoufa led the hargue-buziers on horsebacke, and Musa was captaine of his gard, with other good captaines of Turkes. These two armies ioyned on a Monday the fourth of August, it being past noone, the canon hauing plaied a litle, the Portugal army was presently enuironed by great numbers of the enemies horse, but Moluc's left point was furiously charged by three hundred men at armes, led by the Duke of Auero, the which was put to route; there were about ten thousand Arabes which fled about twenty leagues, to carry newes that the Christians were victors, which disorder made Muley Moluc to get to horsebacke, so full of griefe, as he would haue gone thither to fight notwithstanding his sickness: But the souldiers of his gard staied him, and put him into his Litter, where withnesse: But the souldiers of his gard staied him, but they concealed his death. The Duke of Auero fearing to ingage himselfe to much, being not followed, ment to retire, after that he had broken that part of Moluc's army: but the Moores being ashamed that so few horse had thus shaken them, they sent a great number of harguebuziers, both of foote and horsebacke thither, who charged the Dukes troupe in flanke and behinde, and an other troupe of Arabian horse, came vpon them in front, so as they chased these men at armes vpon their battallion of foote, and disordred them very much: But they were presently repulst by the King, Don Sebastian, who was mounted vpon a strong horse, and in greene armor, being followed by the Duke of Auero, and a squadron of fresh horse, who bearing charged by a great battailon of the Moores Cavalary and shot, were soone put to route, in which retreat their happened the like confusion. And then the whole body of Moluc's army, with Hamet, fell vpon the disordred troupes of King Don Sebastian, with such fury, as they were no more able to resist them.

In this charge the Duke of Auero was slaine, with many gallant gentlemen, the whole army put to route and the ordinance abandoned. Yet King Sebastian charging Hamet's troupes made a breach in them, and forced them to turne their backs, but returning, he saw all his battailons, ouerthrowne, euen to that of Mahomet, which was the last and heere to the riuer, with an incredible slaughter of his men; so as Mahomet being forced to flee, thinking to passe the riuer of Mucazen, missing the foard, he was mired and drowned with his horse; but to increace all these miseries, D. Sebastian was charged by so great a number of Moores, as both he and all they that did accompany him, were slaine; it is certaine that many left him, flying towards Arzille; but they fell into the like misery, for being pursued by the victorious Moores, they were in a manner all cut in peeces. There died about 12000. Christians, amongst the which the chiefe, with the King Don Sebastian, were the Duke of Auero, the Marquis of Aranda, the Bishops of Coimbra and Porto, the Popes Legat Christopher de Tauora, and his brother Aluaro Pereira, Alphonso of Portugal Earle of Vimiofo, Lewis Cotigno Earle of Rodondo, Vasco de Gama, Alphonso of Portugal Earle of Mira, Iohn Lobo Baron of Aluito, ma Earle of Vidiguera, Alphonso de Norogna Earle of Mira, Iohn de Silueira eldest sonne to the Earle of Tentugal, James brother to the Duke of Bragança, Iohn de Silueira eldest sonne to the Earle of Sorteilla, the captaines of the Regiments of strangers, with others, so as by this defeat many Noble families of Portugall were extinct. There were many more taken prisoners of all sorts: The Duke of Barcellos, and the King of Spaines Ambassadors were deliuered without rancome. Don Anthony (who was base sonne to the Infant Don Lewis) Prior of Crato, of the order of Saint Iohn, being taken prisoner, escaped miraculously: some of the rest redeemed themselves, but the greatest part remained slaues in diuers places.

Hamet

A Hamet, a Conqueror, hauing gathered his people together, and caused a retreat to be founded, did that night publish the death of his brother Abdelmelch or Moluc, whereupon he was receyued and acknowledged for King, but to the great griefe of most of them who knew him to be a man of little valour, and not like vnto the deceased.

The day following, the new King sent some troupes to view the dead, where they found about 1500. of their men slaine, whome they buried in the same place: they also found the bodie of Mahomet, who had beene the cause of all these miseries. The body of King Sebastian was found naked among a troupe of his men that were slaine, and knowne by two of his seruants, as they say, to whom they had promised libertie, if they could find him. D. Sebastian's bodie was left (as it were in deposito) at Alcazar: but a while after the Xeriffe Hamet (renewing the allyance and peace which his brother had made with the king of Spaine) offered him this bodie, and to set his Ambassador, and the young Duke of Barcellos freely at liberty.

The King would not accept of D. Sebastian's bodie, but intreated him to deliuer it vnto the Portugals, the which he did, and sent it to the Gouvernor of Ceuta, to whom Andrew Gaspar of Corfica did conigne it in Hamet's name, and tooke an act thereof: Hamet caused the bodie of Muley Mahomet to be flead, and the skinne to be stuff with straw, the which was carried in great ignominy throughout the Realme: and the bodie of Abdelmelch, was carried twenty leagues from Alcazar, and buried with his ancestors. Thus there dyed three Kings in that battell. The King of Spaine accepted of the deliuerie of the duke of Barcellos, and of Iohn de Sylua his Ambassador, in requittall whereof he sent a present to the Xeriffe in Iewelst o the value of an hundred thousand crownes. Don Sebastian had reigned one and twenty yeares, one moneth, and sixe and twenty dayes, and dyed beeing foure and twenty yeares old, sixe moneths, and fiftene dayes.

The losse of this battell beeing knowne in Portugall, caused a generall sorrow and mourning, but they were doubtfull for a time, who were slaine or prisoners, wherof they were certified by degrees, and this desolation crept into priuate families, so as there were scarce any among the Nobilitie but felt of it. The Kings death was held doubtfull many yeares, some denying, that there was any certaine testimony that his bodie had beene found among them that were slaine in the battell: saying, that the liberall offer which Hamet Xeriffe made to king Philip, who demanded it not, was a great presumption, that he himselfe doubted, that the bodie which he left at Alcazar Quibir, was not Don Sebastian's, yea, that he did not beleue it: others haue presumed to say, that they had seen him after the battell in Portugall in a disguised habit, shrowding himselfe for shame in religious houses, and that beeing oppress with griefe for the death of so many of the Nobility, he had beene so sorrowfull, as holding himselfe vnworthie to raigne, he had returned into Affricke in a religious habit, and wandred among the Barbarians, who giue free passage to them that do penance for their sinnes, of what religion soeuer they be: yet two and twenty yeares after this battell, there hath beene a man found so resembling D. Sebastian, shewing markes vpon his bodie, naturall or accidentall, so like vnto those wherewith this Prince had beene marked, and speaking so confidently of things said or done by this king from his infancie, to the time of this lamentable day, and of secret conferences and speeches which he had had, as well with Ambassadors of forraigne Princes, which had beene sent vnto him, as other persons yet liuing, which haue certified it; and discourring so particularly and truly of the estate of Portugall at that time, as it hath made many doubtfull whether he were Sebastian or not, whom they held to haue beene slaine at the battell, in the plaine of Tamita in Affrick. You shall hereafter here it at large, and the man himselfe speake. But howsoeuer, Don Sebastian's funerall was made at Lisbone with great ceremonie, at the end whereof they cryed Reall, Reall, for the King Don Henry. King Philip did also make a funerall pompe at Madrid, where it was obserued, that the Duke of Alba sayd, that the King should go and do those obsequies in our Ladies Church at Belem in Portugall, and not at Madrid, which made some thinke, that the king had disouered his conceptions, and had resolued touching the succession of the Realme.

Don

D. Sebastian
body sent to the Portugals.

Death of Don
Sebastian un-belieued of many.

Don Henry the seuenteenth King of Portugall.

8 BY the decease of Don Sebastian, the Crowne of Portugal seemed to belong to Don Henry his great Vncle, Cardinall of the title of foure Saints crowned: but King Philip his Councell, (I know not by what law) found that the right which he pretended, was stronger then the Cardinals, yet he modestly gaue way to his preferment, and the rather for that seeing him old and broken, he thought he might with more content of the Portugals take his ranke afterwards without any difficulty or dispute. Yet there were many other pretendants to this succession, which might cause some troubles in the State, and therefore the first request which the cittie of Lisbon made vnto Don Henry in the name of the whole country, was, that for the quiet and tranquillitie of the State, hee would be pleased in his life time to name him, or her, who (in his opinion) ought to raigne after him: wherein they layed a burthen vpon him, which did exceed the force and capacitie of his iudgement. For this Prince in the whole course of his life had shewed a simplicitie of manners, and a weaknesse in his discourse, which had made him to be alwaies held fitter for the Church, then to gouerne a temporall State. Yet seeing himselfe King, hee sought to be feared, and gaue way to his ambition and choler, which procured him no more loue then before, but made him to be both hated and cursed. Hee disappoynted and dismissed all those, that had had any fauour or office in Court during his nephewes raigne, for that they had not respected and honoured him, as he thought, according to his ranke and neerenes of blood, causing some to be arraigned by courle of Iustice, for their charges, for words proudly spoken, and such like things which had past in the life of the deceased King, who were degraded of honours, deprived of the rewards which they had deserved, and sent from Court: He intreated Pedro d'Alcaçaua more roughly then any officer, who had bene of the secret Councell and high Treasurer. He appointed other Officers in their places that were dismissed, who were no honeste then the former, but much more ignorant in affaires, who framing themselves to their masters humors, thought to shew themselves sufficient to bring in examinations and reuisions of accompts, against such as had made parties, and contracted with the King, causing most of those contracts to be broken, and it may be such as were least vniust.

To know the disposition of this new King, and to make his ministers conformable to King Philip's desire, which was to vnite the Crowne of Portugues to that of Castile, in what sort foeuer, he sent Christopher de Mora, a Portugall, bredde vp in Castile, to reside there, with the title of an agent onely, who spared no paines, cost, nor presents to purchase friends to his Master. But the better to assure his poursuite, he was aduised in Castile to send some man of qualitie vnto the king Don Henry, with the title of Ambassadour: the which the King of Spaine had till then forborne to do, for that he thought he should thereby preiudice the right which he pretended from the death of Don Sebastian, if hee did by this act acknowledge him for King of Portugall, in sending an Ambassador vnto him. There was chosen to this charge, Don Pedro Giron, Duke of Osuna, after the resolution taken by the King Don Henry in an assembly of the Estates of the Realme, touching that nomination of his successor, which was, That the King would not name any one at that present, but might do it in time, by the aduice of the Iudges, assigned by the Estates, and in the meane time to preuent all inconueniences that might happen, if the King should dye suddenly, being very old, there should be a rowle made of fifteen of the chief and worthiest men among the Nobilitie, of the which the King should choose fise, who should be after him Gouernors of the State, vntill the Iudges had determined who should be the true successor to the Crown, in case the king had not named one: and that the fise thus chosen by him, should be kept secret during his life: and to examine the rights of euey one of the Pretendants, and to iudge with the King (being aliue, and sitting in his Estates) or after his decease, in case there were no sentence giuen, there should be another rowle made of foure and twenty Doctors, and men of State, of the which the king should Proceeding for the succession

of Portugall.

A should choose eleuen Iudges, which should make a royall Chamber to that end; and it was decreed, that all the sayd Pretendants should be cited and adioyned to appeare, or their Ambassadors, or Agents, before the sayd Chamber, there to produce their rights and pretensions, and to be heard in all that they would say and alledge, to the end they might make report, and proceed to the nomination. The Pretendants were Don Philip King of Spaine, Don Anthony Prior of Crato, Donna Catherina of Portugall, mother to D. Theodosia of Bragança, Rainucio Farnese, son to her sister D. Maria of Portugall, both being daughters to the Infant Don Edward, and Emanuel Philebert, Duke of Sauoy, borne of Donna Beatrice of Portugall: all these deriuing their rights from Don Emanuel, King of Portugall: moreover, there was Catherine de Medicis the French Queen, the Pope but especially the realme and states of Portugall.

Pretendants to the Crowne of Portugall.

Don Philip was borne of D. Isabella, eldest daughter to Don Emanuel, the Duke of Sauoy was sonne to D. Beatrice second daughter to the sayd King, Don Anthony was issued from the Infant Don Lewis, who was also sonne to king Emanuel, but Don Anthony was base, yet he maintained that he had a sentence for his legitimation. The Duchesse of Bragança was daughter to the Infant D. Edward, who was also sonne to King Emanuel, but Rainucio Farnese was issued from Mary, the eldest daughter of the sayd Don Edward. As for the Queene mother of France, she fetched her pretensions farther off, saying, that the Kings which had raigned in Portugall since Don Alphonso the third, brother to Don Sancho Capello, had bene vsurpers of that Realme, the race being base and proceeding from an vnlawfull coniunction: for that they say, Don Alphonso being married in France with the Countesse of Bullen, by whom he had one sonne named Robert, from whome the Pretendant was descended, he had left the sayd Countesse to marrie another wife in her life time, which was Donna Beatrice of Castile, and that from this vnlawfull marriage, all the Kings were issued which had held the Realme vnto that day. The Pope pretended it to be a fee, saying, that the Realme of Portugall was a fee of the Church, and was so acknowledged by Don Alphonso Henriques the first, who obtrayned the title of a king, who in acknowledgement had bound it to pay a certaine quantitie of markes of gold for a yearly rent, and for not paying those rights the Realme was deuolued vnto the Church, to dispose thereof. This right was corroborated after the death of the Cardinall then rainging, for that (said they) it was the spoyle of a Cardinall. But the realme and the generall Estates, pretended to haue an aduantage aboue all, for that (said they) women could pretend no right in Portugall to the succession of the Crowne, neither for themselves, nor their descendants: for they had neuer seene any women raigne, although it had bene often in question, euen with the Castilians, who had bene reiecte, and if they should haue any access, or their descendants, it must be after the males, before whome women haue no precedence, in regard of their age, the which is not considerable in fees, much lesse in Soueraigne Estates.

Queene mothers title to Portugall.

Popes title to Portugall.

Most of these Pretendants being cited, they sent their rights, titles, and Pretensions, the which were receyued by the sayd chamber without any difficultie, but in regard of Queene Catherine de Medicis, whose cause was odious, and her allegations iniurious to the king then rainging, and to his Predecessours, the Abbot of Saint Gelais her Agent found great difficultie to haue it admitted. Onely king Philip appeared not in this Chamber, disclayming the Iudges that were chosen, yea all the Portugals in his cause, the which (he sayd) was so iust and cleare, as it needed not any examination nor doubt, hauing had consultations vpon that point in the best Vniuersities of the world, as well for that which concerns right, and the lawes of Realmes, as for conscience, and to satisfie the king Don Henry, (whom he did importune by his Ambassadors to name him, without any other forme obserued by the Estates) he sent him a coppie of the counsels which many Lawyers and Diuines in Spaine had made him, that other reasons being examined and weighed, hee might not make any difficultie to name him. Aboue all they had wonne father Lyon Henrique a Iesuite, his Confessor, who hauing first made him incline to the Duchesse of Bragança, laboured afterwards to perswade him to name king Philip for his successor. The Duke of Osuna and Christopher de Mora his Ambassador doubting that this iudiciall proceeding would not preuaile, & that the familiaritie of the Castilians had Lisbon refused the King of Spains letters.

10 Sentence of Don Antonio's legitimation dismissed.

K. Henry falls sick.

had beene alwaies odious vnto the Portugals, who detested their gouernement, they had letters from the King their master, to the chiefe of the Nobilitie, to the Cittie of Lisbon, and to the principall townes of the Realme, full of perswasive reasons and promises, concluding in the end, that if they did not receyue him willingly (his title being so well grounded) he would vse force, and therefore they should aduise not to draw themselves, their families, and the whole Realme into a warre, and the miseries which follow it. These letters were deliuered to many with good words and presents: but the cittie of Lisbon would not receiue them: and as Christopher de Mora had left them with the Officers of the Cittie: they sent them sealed vp vnto their King, who was much troubled with this weightie busines, and could not resolue any thing that was pleasing to king Philip, who threatened him, and began to let the Portugals know, that he prepared to armes: for not meaning to be taken vnprovidd at Henries death, which could not belong, and that this delay should not any way preiudice him in that he pretended to be King of Portugal, in despite of all those that would contradict, he had drawne into Spaine of Germans, Italians and Spaniards of his old regiments of Italy, to the number of 18000. foot, whom he entertayned many moneths with great charge and hinderance to his subiects, in Andalusia, and other places nere to Portugall, which they could not coniecture to be to any other end, but to inuade that realme, where they sayd openly, that armes and force were his best title: for he had no right vnto it. He among all the pretendants which did most trouble him, and the King Don Henry also, was Don Antonio, Prior of Crato, who was very well beloued of the people, and of many of the Nobilitie. The King was so incensed against him, as he gaue commandement he should not be heard, and taking vpon him to re-examine his cause of Legitimation, he fought to dissolve the sentence which was giuen by Emanuel d'Almada, Bishop of Angra, appoynted Iudge by the Pope: whereof Pope Gregorie the 13. being aduertised, he retayned the knowledge of the cause to himselfe: yet Don Henry either moued by his owne passion, or prest by the Castilians, declared this sentence to be voyd by his owne authoritie, without forme of law, or solemnitie of iustice: but Conefagio in the Historie of Portugall, writes, that King Henry had obtayned a Breefe secretly from the Pope, by the which he gaue him authoritie to iudge the cause of legitimation absolutely, without any forme of Proceffe, and that of four witnesses, two confessed that they had beene suborned by Don Antonio, and that the other two were suspected, as his neere allies, and disagreeing betwixt themselves, and that Lewis his father reard him Bastard in his last will, whereupon hee declared Don Antonio illegitimate, imposing him perpetual silence touching the pretended marriage and legitimation, sending a Sergeant to Crato, to seaze vpon the Prior, but hee found him not. This he writes. But were it true or false, the King leauing the qualitie of a Iudge, commanded Don Antonio of his royall authoritie, not to come within thirtie leagues of the Court. Then his indignation increasing, he banished him the Realme, deprived him of all pensions, priuiledges and fauours which he had receyued of precedent kings, seeking by all meanes to haue him apprehended, and to put him into some freight prison: yet Don Antonio went not out of the Realme, but retired to some of his friends, or to some Monasteries vpon the frontier, neither did he forbear to come and sollicite the Iudges, with the which the king was dayly incensed. Being prest by the importunities of king Philips Ambassadors, terrified by his preparation to armes, and perswaded by his Confessor father Lyon Henrique, he did adhere wholly vnto him: and there was then no difficultie, but to find meanes to name him, and to get the consent of the Estates, and therefore he propounded a kind of accord betwixt the Realme and king Philip, the which should be treated by his means in an assembly of the Estates, the which he called to that end.

But the king of Castile would not put his right to Compromise, and detested this Assembly of the Estates, aduertising king Henry, that he should not treat of this businesse with them, vnited in one bodie, but particularly with the chiefe of the Clergie, the Nobilitie and the townes. In the meane time the king D. Henry found himselfe ill, so as being taken with great faintings, which held him long, the Councell, which was about him, and the Deputies assembled in the towne of Almerin, (whither they were retired by reason

A reason of the plague, which was very violent in Lisbon, and in a manner in all the other townes of the Realme) thinking that he would neuer recover it, they presumed to open the boxe, wherein was the lyst of such as he had chosen to be Gouernors of the Realme, and to proceede to the nomination of a Successor, in case he had not done it, where they found, that of the fiftene that were contained in the rowle, he had chosen George d'Almada Arch-bishop of Lisbon, Francis de Sada, Lord Chamberlain, John Tello, John Mascaregnas, and Diego Lope de Sosa, President in the Councell of Iustice at Lisbon. The king was somewhat recovered, but knowing that he drew neere his end, employing the remainder of his daies in the care of his soule, and leauing this businesse with others imperfect, he dyed the last of Ianuary, 1580. hauing held the royall state, (as the Castilians sayd) seuentene moneths and some dayes, being 68. years old, for he dyed in the same moneth, and on the same day that he was borne.

This was the last king of Portugall, in whom ended the direct masculine line. And as the first Lord of Portugall, (though with the title of an Earle) was called Henry, euen so was the last. He was of a thinn bodie, low of stature, and leane of his visage, hee had an indifferent good wit, and was endowed (besides the Latine tongue) with some knowledge. He was alwaies held to be chaste, and did neuer blemish that angelicall vertue; but with the desire of marriage in his latter dayes. He was accompted sparing, giuing rather then denying, for he refused seldome, but he gaue sparingly: he was ambitious of all Iurisdiction, as well ecclesiasticall as ciuill, zealous in religion, but more seuer then was fit in the reformation of Clergi-men. He was Bishop, Gouernor of the Realme, Inquisitor Maior, Cardinall, Apostolicke Legate and King. But the greater he grew in dignitie, the more he discovered his incapacitie and weaknesse, suffering himselfe in greatest affaires, to be ouer-ruled by his ministers, not able to determine the cause of the succession. Hee was very obstinate in his opinions, neuer forgetting any wrongs, so as iustice was in him but an vniust execution of his passions, and therefore a religious man (whome hee had prest to take vpon him a most strict course of life) sayd vnto him, that hee would obey, seeing there was no humane helpe against his Commandements, for he had the will of a man, the authoritie of a Pope, and the execution of a King: To conclude, hee had many D vertues, and fewer vices, yet they were equall: for he had the vertue of a Church-man, and the defects of a Prince: during his life he was feared of many, and beloued of few, so as no man lamented his death, onely such as were well affected; (desiring the cause of succession had beene first decided) had some feeling.

The five Gouernors being at Almerin, at the time of his death, they began to execute their charge as Kings, and their first resolution was to send Ambassadors to King Philip, (whome they saw in armes; and who had in a manner threatened the deceased king, and the Realme) to intreate him to proceede in this busines, by the way of iustice, and to assure him, that it should be done him, witnessing moreover the great good will and respect which the Gouernors, the chiefe of the Nobilitie, and the good townes of Portugall, bare vnto his highnesse. The king before their audience, made some difficulty, whether he should receiue them with the accustomed ceremonies to Princes Ambassadors, or as simple Deputies of his subiects: but he was counselled to heare them as Ambassadors, to the end he might winne the loue of the Portugueses, so as they were heard with their hats on, the king being vncovered at their comming in. The Ambassadors were the Bishop of Coimbra, and Emanuel de Mela, and they came vnto the king being at Guadalupe, who made a long relation vnto them of his rights, and of the consultations which he had made, as well to make them apparent to the world, as to satisfie his owne conscience: that he knew well there were many among the Nobilitie and townes, ill affected vnto him, whom he had good meanes to draw vnto their duties: wherefore the Gouernors and the Estates should be well aduised, and not be the cause of a warre in their country, giuing them a short time to send him their last resolution. The Deputies of the Estates of the Realme, who had beene called by the deceased king, were all at Saint Iren, a towne right against Almerin, the riuer of Tagus running betwixt them: who seeing the Gouernors manner of proceeding, they gaue them to vnderstand, that their Councell and Assembly was superiour vnto them: as representing the Realme, and the general

II
Gouernors of Portugall.

An. 1580.
Death of King Henry.

Life of King Henry.

generall Estates thereof, and therefore they sent word vnto the Gouvernours, that leauing Almerin, which was small, and not able to lodge so great a multitude, they should come to S. Iren, to the end they might all together determine of that was fitting for the preferuation of the Realme, and put it in execution, and not make them, vpon euery occasion, to passe the riuer, for their affaires required expedition, and no delayes, saying, that their most necessarie prouisions, was to man the entries of the Realme with soldiers, the which they should haue done before they sent Ambassadors to King Philip. This did amaze the Gouvernours, and caused bad intelligence betwixt them and the Estates, so as in disdaine one of another, they did not any good for the publike. Among these Gouver-nours, there were there noted to fauour King Philip, the other two were for the Realme.
 Among the Deputies of the Estates, most of them were for Don Antonio, Prior of Crato, who hauing notice of the death of Don Henry, came presently to Lisbon, spake vnto the Magistrates of the Cittie, shewed himselfe vnto the people, saluted euery man, seeking to maintaine himselfe in the loue of the multitude, with all the humilitie that might be: hee wrote vnto the Deputies of the Estates at S. Iren, and came himselfe to present the Popes Bull vnto them, by the which the sentence of the deceased King, giuen against him, was suspended; he remembered his rights vnto the Crowne, and protested that he would submit himselfe to iustice, according to the resolution which was taken whi-lest he liued in the open Estates, and conformable also to the sayd Kings last will, made eight moneths before his death, by the which he declared him his successor, that should be found to haue most right by the Iudges: This course was desired by all in generall, namely, by the other Pretendants, except King Philip, who pressing the Ambassadors much to haue their last resolution, whether they would receiue him for their King or not, and they desiring him to giue them a longer time then he had prefixed, he told them plainly, that he would vse his rights according to his meanes and dignitie. The which the Gouvernours, the Duke of Bragança, and other Noblemen, that were at Almerin, seeing, they began to prouide for the frontiers, but so late, and so slowly, as all men wondred: the Deputies of the Estates insisting stil, that they should all assemble in one place, to consult ioyntly together how to repulse the iniurious force, which the Castilians, their ancient enemies, would do vnto the Realme. And although it seemed reasonable, that the Gouvernours, who were but few in number, and had but a transitorie and limited au-thoritie for a time, should passe vnto S. Iren, and make shew to allow of it, yet they did it not, they still remaying in their seuerall lodgings, making very preiudiciall decrees apart, which in the end blemished the honour of the Crowne of Portugall, one weakning anothers authoritie, whereas if they had bene well vnited, euery man would haue obeyed them, and they might haue opposed such forces against King Philip, as happily he might haue yeelded to a iudiciall course.

The Gouvernours sent Commissions into the Prouinces, to raise the Commons, and commanded the Lords which had lands and vassals to be mounted and armed readie to march, when they should be called, but they did little regard it. The King of Spaine being aduertised of all their disorders, was exceeding glad, for that they prepared a way for him to attaine vnto that which he pretended: and without any further delay hee caused those troupees which he had so long entertayned, to march towards Badajos, where hee had appoynted the Rendez-vous for the armie: he commanded Don Fernando de Salua, Earle of Cisuentes, Guidon Major of Castile, to draw forth the Standard-royal, which is neuer displayed, but when as the King goes to the warre in person. Hee made choice of the Duke of Alba to be his Lieutenant to leade this armie, whom hee freed from prison for a certaine precipitated marriage made by Don Frederick his sonne, and by his counsell causing him to come to Merida, to conferre of the meanes to enter with an army into Portugall, yet some say, that he saw not the King, but marched directly to the armie.
 In the meane time he did write againe, and perswaded the Gouvernours, the Estates, the Nobilitie and Commons, to receiue him without resistance, sending them new consultations, which he had drawne from the Diuines of the Vniuersity of Alcalá of Henares of Castile, to the which he sayd, there was no reply, and that they were conformable in euery point to those which he had before from other Vniuersities. King Philip with his Councell

13 Disord betwixt the Gouernours and the Estates.

D. Antonies proceedings.

14-Philips troups marcheth towards Portu-
 gall.

A Councell and Lawyers did set downe (as a thing which they ought not to call in question) that beeing the most ancient male liuing of the race of Don Emanuel of Portugall, he should precede all others in the succession to the Crowne: yea presently after the death of King Sebastiam: for the Cardinall (whome he had suffered to raigne) was not capable thereof, considering his qualitie, beeing a Clergi-man. This beeing presupposed, he demanded of the Diuines: first, whether he were bound to submit himselfe to any Iudge or Arbitrator, to haue the Realme of Portugall adiudged vnto him. Secondly, if there were any other pretending that Crowne, who might decide their controuersies: and that there beeing no competent Iudge to do it, and the Portugals refusing to receiue him before the cause were decided, which might be a meanes to frustrate him, whether hee might not take possession of his owne authoritie by armes, without any scruple. And last of all, if the Gouvernours or Estates of Portugall alledge, that they are bound by oath, not to acknowledge any one for king, but he to whome the Realme shall be adiudged by iustice, if that may excuse them.

To the first point the Diuines of Castile answered, That Don Philip beeing a Soue-raigne King, he was not bound to submit himselfe to any Iudge, but onely take coun-cell, and that he might thereupon adiudge the Realme vnto himselfe, and not charge his conscience, grounding vpon the neerenes of blood, which was apparent. And if there were no Iudge in this cause, they sayd, that the Pope, who had the greatest power, might not take knowledge of it, for that it was meereley temporall, hauing not any circumstance to bind it to the Spirituality. The Emperor in like manner was no competent Iudge: for the Kings of Castile are Soueraignes, Emperours in their countries and Estates.

The Estates of Portugall were inferiours and subiects; and therefore in no sort Iudges: the deceased King Don Henry could not preiudice the right nor dignitie of King Philip, in appoynting eleuen Iudges to determine of the Succession of that Crowne: besides, hee beeing dead, the Commission of those Iudges was expired, and their autho-ritie extinct. As for the referring it to the compromise of Arbitrators, it was not vsed but in matters which were doubtfull: and whereas their titles and interests were obscure. If they would say, that in this cause King Philip should not be regarded as a King, but as a priuate person, bound to plead against the rest, pretending the same succession by reason of blood: it was a frivolous distinction, for that the dignitie of a King cannot bee separated from the person that carryeth it, in any case whatsoever. If they did pretend, that the controuersie must be ended, whereas the matter in question lyeth: that this rule hath no place in matters of Kingdomes.

To the second point they did apply some of the former answers, and to make it more plaine, they sayd, that it was sufficient for the King to exhibite his titles and right to the Gouvernours, or to the Estates, to iustifie his proceeding by armes, the which he might lawfully vse in case of refusall, the which was a kind of contumacie and rebellion. And last of all they sayd, that an oath made by whomsoever, to preiudice another, doth not bind him that hath taken it, especially where there is no Iudge, and he cannot pretend it for an excuse against a Soueraigne, especially when his title is apparent.

King Philip hauing resolved to enter Portugall with an armie, more (sayd he) to feare the Portuguezes, then to do them harme, besides, the armie which he prepared at Ba-dajos, he caused his vassals (after their example) in euery Prouince bordering vpon Portugal to be in a readines, commanding the Lords which had their lands there, to shew themselves in armes, but not to aduance, and that if any neare Townes, Noblemen or commons would acknowledge him for their King, they should assure them of all good vsage: The Gouvernours were much amazed, yet they made shew, as if they would defend themselves, sending into France, to the Emperour, and to other Christian Princes for succours.

But they did aboute all imploy the Popes authority and prerogatiue, that he would be a meanes to make King Philip lay aside armes, and submit himselfe to a quiet course of iustice: whereupon they obtayned, that there should be a Legate sent into Spaine to decide

T t t t

Allegations made by King Philip touching his title to Portugall.

15 Advice of the Diuines of Alcalá of Henares

cide this controuersie; which was Cardinall Alexander Riaro, who was not pleasing vnto the King, being held suspect, neither would he that the Pope should meddle in this business, much lesse determine of it: Besides, this Legate came late, the Castilian armie being already entred farre into Portugall: and the Gouvernors were in such a confusion, and did so disagree among themselves, as they suffered to haue a Croisado preac hed against the Castilians, as if it had beene to go against Infidels: the Magistrates did the like in many townes, and they sayd, that there were slaine Noblemen of Portugall, who by the meanes of prisoners which were yet in Affricke, since the overthrow of D. Sebastian, did sollicite the Xeriffe Hamet to take vpon him the protection of the Realme of Portugall against the King of Castile: such was the hatred of these two nations, and the proceedings of Don Philip so much detested, seeking to be Iudge in his owne cause, and to decide it by armes, to the prejudice of the other pretendants, and namely, of the generall Estates of the Realme.

The contrarities which were obserued in all that the Gouvernors did, being fearefull, irresolute, and yet very ambitious, seeking to retaine the royall authoritie longer then they might, and to sell their fauours to their owne priuate benefites, did witnesse the confusion that was in their minds, and in their affaires, being solicited by the Ambassadors of Castile, they yielded to declare D. Philip King, vpon certaine conditions, whereof they drew Articles, which were all signed by the Duke of Ossuna, but the difficulty was to publish this decree with any collour.

On the other side they fortified themselves daily both within and without the Realme. In the meane time they had not any money, and suffered the revenues of the Crowne to be lost by their bad intelligence, and withall the peoples loue, who might haue supplied their present necessities out of their store, if they had seene any order or grauitie in them.

They resolved to sell the Jewels of the Crowne, but the Ambassadors of Castile opposed themselves, saying, That they did belong vnto the King their master, who was the true and lawfull king of Portugall. They sent Iohn Tello, one of the bodie of the cittie of Lisbon, vnder colour to assist Emanuel of Portugall his brother-in-law, who did fortifie Belen, and other places, at the mouth of the riuer of Tagus, beneath the cittie, but it was to be ridde of him: for he did not fauour the Castilian partie, no more then Emanuel his brother-in-law: and for that the Deputies of the Prouinces and townes which were at S. Iren, did crosse them, they sought to send them home as vnprofitable, saying, that after the Kings death, who had called them, their procurations were void, and that there was not any assembly of Estates: yet they were content that tenne of the said Deputies should remaine with them, to bee witnesses of their actions, who should come to Setuual, a towne and port of the sea, twenty miles from Lisbon, whether they meant to retire themselves, by reason of the plague which was crept into Almerin. The Deputies on the other side maintayned, that their proclamations were still in force, that the Estates were not ended, and that in the business, which was now in question, their assembly was more requisite then in any other occasion, inuiting them againe to come vnto Saint Iren, where there was not any danger of the plague: the which they would not doe, but went to keepe their Councell at Setuual, farre from those that did obserue them, being accompanied by the Duke of Bragança, and the Ambassadors of Castile.

Setuual was one of those places whereof the King of Spaine desired to seize, for that in holding this port, he might shut vp the riuer of Lisbon: and therefore hee had commanded Don Aluaro de Bassan, Marquis of Santa Cruz his Admirall, to go thither with his Fleet, consisting of aboue sixtie gallies, and to make some enterprise, whilest that the Duke of Alba should enter by land, from Badajos to Eluas, and other places of that country, as he did soone after, the king hauing first sent Pedro Velasco, Iudge of Badajos, to see, if with perswasive words, promises, and presents, he might draw the neighbour townes and places to yeeld themselves voluntarily, and without force: where hee behaued himselfe so discreetly, as he caused D. Philip to be acknowledged for King of Portugall at Eluas, Oliuença, Serpa, Mora, Campo Maior, a noua, Arouge, Portalegre, and others.

Matred of the Portugueses to the Castilians.

Gouernors
bring King Philip into Portugal.

Gouernors seek to dissuade the Estates.

others. The Duke of Alba coming to the army, found it much wasted with sicknes, being in all but 4500. Italians, 3500. Germans, and 3000. Spaniards of the old regiments of Italy, the which the King supplied with 7000. Besognes, or new soldiers, which he had leuied in Spaine, after which he took a view of his army, where he found about 18000. foot, and 6000. horse, with 25. peeces of ordnance, and store of victuals, and other warlike necessities: for the carriage whereof he had aboue 6000. carts and wagons. The Duke of Alba was General both at sea and land: in this expedition. Peter de Medicis was General of the Italians, being diuided into 3. regiments: of the one Prosper Colonna was Colonel, of the other Vincent Carrasa, and of the third Charles Spinelli. Ierome Earle of Lodron was Colonel of the Germans, Sancho d' Auila was Marshall generall at land, and Francis d' Alana was Master of the ordinance. There was no Generals of the horse, for all the companies were commanded by Noblemen that were of the Kings councill, but in executions Don Francis de Toledo the Dukes son should lead them. With these forces the Duke of Alba past the riuer of Caya, and entred into Portugall the 27. of Iune, 1580. threatening such as would not acknowledge K. Philip his Master for their king. The Deputies of the Estates, which remained at S. Iren, seeing the king of Castile to enter the realme with an army, they accused the Gouvernors to haue abandoned the publike cause, and declared D. Antonio defender of the Realme alone, but soone after the people proclaimed him king, & although he excused himself, being content (said he) for that time with the title of defender, yet was he forced to accept it, seeing himselfe enuironed with many swords in the midst of a furious multitude, cursing the Gouvernors, & crying, that he must lead them against the Castilians. If D. Antonio did then somewhat want a spur to prick him forward to the royall dignity, he had afterwards more need of a bridle to curbe him, not to abandon himself as he did, in a time of so great confusion, hauing an armed enemy in the hart of the country, who wan the Nobility daily, & wanted neither mony nor credit, which are the sinewes of war. He might haue apprehended the want both of friends and mony, into the which he soon fell, hauing no support, but the multitude, and some Monks, who shewed themselves in his cause, not only passionat, but desperate, or rather mad. A royaltie is held to bee so sweet a morsell, and the desire to be a king, is so vehement, as they do willingly breake the bounds of law to deuoure it, when occasion is offered, without any respect: yea there haue beene many who to raigne one day, haue not cared to be slaine the next: whereof there are some examples in the course of this History: so as it is no wonder, if D. Antonio, who had suffered so many crosses to come to it, hauing got it, sought to keepe it. The first error he committed, was to haue caused Fernand de Pina, one of the Magistrates of Lisbon to be slaine, for that he spake against him, and then hee suffered Susres, who had committed the murther, to be hanged, whom he might haue saued by his authority. The opinion of the Portugals is and hath beene for many yeares, that the city of Lisbon is the force of a world, and that whosoever holds it, may make head against the mightiest Monarks of the earth. In truth it is one of the greatest peopled cities in Europe, of great traffick and wonderfully rich: but a multitude of people is but a weake support, and riches in the hands of priuate men in tumults, when as euery man sees himselfe in danger, and seeks to preferue that which he hath, are not assured, nor to be accompted of, vnlesse they will vse violence and tyrannie, which make the most lawfull kings to be hated. These considerations were not regarded by Don Antonio, hee must needs runne to Lisbon, thinking that if all the Realme were lost, Lisbon alone would restore him.

The bodie of the cittie, and the Magistrates, apprehending this hastie comming, and the peoples proclamation at Saint Iren, who had cryed Real, Real for Don Antonio, intreated Iohn Tello, one of the Gouvernors, with Don Emanuel of Portugal, as wee haue sayd, to come and hinder Don Antonio's entrie, if he could, and to perswade him not to take the name of King vpon him, but onely to tearme himselfe defender of the State and Crowne of Portugall, against the vniust and tyrannous inuasion of the King of Castile, that this title would be more fauourable for him, and make him to be followed and supported by the Nobilitie, and the great men of the realme: whereas that of King, seemed to bee vsurped out of season, whilest that hee with the rest of the Pretendants demanded it by iustice.

Duke of Alba enters into Portugal.

16
D. Antonio declared defender of the realme of Portugal.

Don Antonio
receiued into Lisbone.

Don Iohn Tello sent Diego de Sosa, and Francis de Meneses, who could not stay him, A but they returned together into the Cittie, where they durst not stoppe his entrie, yet comming neere vnto Lisbon, there was a harguebuze shot of, which past neere his haire, but they could not learne whence it came. Beeing entred into the cittie, hee was receiued with acclamations, and all signes of ioy, as the time would permit: for the greatest part of men of qualitie were retired to their houses in the Countrey, by reason of the plague, which was very great, so as the common people onely made him this reception, crying, God saue the king. But hauing once seized vpon the pallee, the riuier, and the Arsenall, and the armes, he went to the towne-house, whither hee called all the Magistrates that were within the Cittie, and was there saluted for king, and the other taken B and receiued with the accustomed formalities: which done, hee wrote vnto the Gouernours beeing at Setuall, that they should come vnto him. Don Iohn Tello (who had bin sent by his companions to Lisbon, with procuracion to see what was necessarie for the preseruacion of the Cittie, according to their desseigne, and had till then authoritie as a Gouernour) departed presently, and carried some others away with him, whome Don Antonio would haue employed: and by that meanes hee carried away fortie thousand Crownes, which he had gathered together, vnder colour of reparations that were to be done at Belen, S. Iulian, Cascais, Cabeça Secca, and other places lying vpon the riuier.

Beeing come to Setuall, the other Gouernours would no more admit him into their companie, saying, that he was confederate with Don Antonio, and that hee might haue C hindred his entrie into the Cittie if hee had would. The new King beeing discontented with them all, he wrote againe vnto them, to draw them to Lisbon, yet vsing very mild words, but they would not do any thing. Hee wrote also very kindly to the Duke of Bragança, who was with them, and in the end he sent Don Francis of Portugal, Earle of Vimiofo, to perswade them if hee might. In the meane time the Duke of Bragança taking leaue of the Gouernours, retired himselfe to one of his houses, seeing, that neither the one, nor the other, did any thing to purpose, and that they could not preuent it, but king Philip would raigne in Portugall, with whome soone after he made an accord. The Earle of Vimiofo seeing that he could not preuayle with the Gouernours, he incensed the people against them: who chased them out of Setuall so hastily, as some were forced to D creepe out of windowes, and to slippe downe the walles in danger of their liues, yet the Arch-bishop of Lisbon, and Don Iohn Tello stayed still, beeing assured to be spared, the one for his Ecclesiasticall dignitie, the other, for that he had not beene opposit to Don Antonio, but had done him good offices.

By this meanes the king seized vpon Setuall, and went thither to haue the place fortified and furnished, and then he returned to Lisbon, to whom there yeelded the abouenamed places vpon the riuier, and other about the cittie. The Gouernours beeing thus eclipsed, got, with the Ambassadors of Castile, to Castro Marin, where they made a strange Decree against Don Antonio, Prior of Crato, condemning him as a Rebelle, and declaring, that the will of the deceased King Don Henry was, that King Philip should succeed him in the royall dignitie. E

Decree of the Governors against Don Antonio.

17
Duke of Alba's exploits in Portugal.

Setuall taken by the Castil-lans.

Whilst these things past, the Duke of Alba aduanced, and had taken Villa-vitiosa, the Duke of Bragança's chiefe house, a place of strength, which might haue stayed him some daies, and then without any care to march in order with his army (for there was no enemy to feare) he came with small iournies to Setuall, whither he had appointed the fleet should come. This place was soone yeelded to the Dukes discretion, by men without iudgement and experience: yet he suffered all the soldiers to depart, retayning onely Diego Botello the yonger, Captaine of the garrison, who sought to escape in a barke. There remained only one tower which garded the port, the which he battered, and then the captaine and souldiers yeelded it, to haue their liues and goods saued: after that they had beaten one of the royall galleons in peeces, thinking it wold haue yeelded to the Castillans. This place being taken, the Marquis of Santa Cruz came with his fleet (consisting of 60. gallies and many ships) and lodged most of them within the port, from whence they did so stop the mouth of the riuier of Lisbon, which is neere vnto it, as nothing could go in, nor come forth, but by the mercy of the gallies.

The

A The Duke of Alba continuing his course, meant to go to the Cittie of Lisbon, which is the head of the Realme, and therefore he deuised how he might passe the riuier with his armie, wherein there was some difficulty, by reason of the old forts which were at the mouth of the riuier, and those which Don Emanuel of Portugall had newly built and erected.

Don Antonio beeing returned from Setuall, (whether hee had gone before the losse of it) was receiued by the Inhabitants with greater estate then before, causing him to enter vnder a Canopie, but hearing of the losse of this important place, their ioy was turned into feare and amazement, for they must now studie how to make head against B the enemy, who they might assure themselves, would be soone at their gates, if they did not speedily provide for it. The remedie consisted in a multitude of souldiers and mony to entertayne them, which they had not. There was a great multitude of common-people in Lisbon, but not trayned vp in armes, yet full of courage, when the enemy was farre off. He commanded them to be readie, and to furnish themselves with armes, giuing them Captaines of their owne sort, for there were few men of qualitie that followed him, and the best families of the Cittie were absent: but he made publike Proclamations to call them home in this necessitie, and some he inuited particularly: to such as hee found willing, hee distributed in paper, honours, offices, commanderies, crosses of the Orders of Knights which are in that countrey, without regard whether they, to whom he C gaue them, were men of merit, and capable according to the Orders: for many base men were seene to carrie the crosses of Saint James, of Christ, of Alcantara, and others vpon their Cloakes: but he was indifferent, so as they gaue money. Such as did not obey his commandements, and were slow in comming to the towne, hee vied with all rigour, causing their houses to be opened, and their goods to be sold for the charges of the warre.

If any rich man within the towne, fearing to be taxed, or forced to pay mony, did seeke to escape, he was stayed at the Port, stript, and put in prison, so as the great fauor which Don Antonio had found at his first coming, grew now cold. His most constant friends were the begging Friars, many of which leauing their hoods, tooke armes, and garded the ports, or followed him, and made a company in his armie, which he sought to rayse D of this multitude, hauing no other: but they shewed themselves mutinous and rebellious, when they came to lye in field, a practise which Shoo-makers, Taylors, Mercers, Vintners, and the other skumme of the people; had not beene inured vnto, by whome the estate and reputation of Don Antonio were supported, who could not be ignorant of this absurditie, but that glorious name of King couered all defects, and made all dangers light. Hee had sent Diego de Meneses to Cascais, with some troupes to gard the passage, yet hee did not thinke the enemy would haue past there, but rather would haue gone about the towne towards Saint Iren, where the riuier growes narrow, for towards the sea, it is very broad: but notwithstanding any thing that Meneses E could do, the Duke of Alba past vnder Cascais, at a place called Marines Vechos, neither did he euer seeke to hinder his landing, nor offer him skirmish, so hauing forced Meneses to retire, the Duke was master of the field, Don Antonio who expected some good seruice from Diego de Meneses, had made him Generall of his forces by land, and his brother George de Meneses of his armie at sea: where he had good Gallions, and some other Vessels, but growing ialous of George, he had taken his charge from him, and put him in prison.

It may bee, hee would haue done as much to Diego, if hee presented himselfe before him after the Dukes passage, but hee put himselfe into the Castle of Cascais, which cost him his life. Don Antonio, King of Portugall, must of necessitie issue forth of Lisbon F against the Duke, and fight with him for his honour, but hee found himselfe very vnfit for it: for neither by faire meanes nor rigour could he gather together at that time about a thousand foote, and some fiew hundred horse, ill appoynted, and neuer trayned vp in the warres, neither could hee possibly stay them about that day, for night beeing come, most of them returned to the towne to supper, for that there was not any breade in his campe.

Escape of Lisbon
under Antonio

Tttt 3

The

The Duke of Alba meaning to attempt Cascais, found it abandoned by the inhabitants, the castle which was somewhat strong, refused to yeeld, whereupon it was battered and forced. The captaine who commanded there, called Antonio Pereira was hanged, and his souldiers stript. Diego de Menezes was found in this place, whose head the Duke caused to be cut off, although there were some that did sue for his life. The cittie of Lisbon beeing amazed at the taking of Cascais, expecting to heare the like of the Castle of S. Iulian, which is, as it were, their key, they protested to D. Antonio, that they wold make their peace, if he did not put himselfe in defence, who offered himselfe to go, if they wold follow him. Then euery man was forced to take armes, and go to field, euen the Negro slaues, of the which there is a great multitude in that City, so as of one and other hee found himselfe to haue an armie of 8000. men, ill armed, ill apparelled, and ill led, (for there was scarce one that could execute the office of a Sergeant, or place a Sentinell) with which troupe he went and camped at Alcantara, within fise miles of S. Iulian, which the Duke did beseege and batter, which place was yeelded vnto him by Tristan vax, by the perswasion of a woman, who had obtayned a safe-condukt from the Duke to draw forth a daughter of hers with her husband, which were within it. Cabeça Secca which was a fort built vpon the sand in the midst of the riuer right against S. Iulian, was also abandoned to the Duke. So as there was not any thing that could hinder him from camping to the citie gates, but Belem, and Don Antonio's armie, which lay in ther ill-made trenches at Alcantara, and kept that bridge, the which was forced in its lodging, and put to route by the Duke, and chased euen into the towne with some slaughter. Don Antonio escaped by flight, being hurt, but he stayd not there: for passing through the town, and as it were, bidding them farewell, whom he could not defend, he tooke the way to S. Iren, hauing caused his wound to be drest at Sacaben, where he might haue bene taken, if they had pursued him: but he had the good hap to find meanes to retire to Coimbra, which of all the townes in the Realme had most resisted King Philip, and most dispured their pretended rights.

It is the onely Vniuersitie of Portugall, for all faculties, which had giuen aduice and counsell contrarie to the Doctors of Castile. The Duke of Alba tooke Belem, and soone after the Magistrates of Lisbon came to offer him the keys of the Cittie, demanding their liues and goods: the which was promised them, for King Philip's meaning was to haue it preserved, yet they could not prevent it, but the goodly suburbe which was vpon the way, was spoyled, and all the houses and gardens which were about the cittie, whither the Inhabitants had retired themselves by reason of the plague, and had carried most of their best moueables thither.

King Philip's gallies which were entred into the river, tooke them of Portugall, and the eleuenth of September, that yeare 1580. the Duke of Alba tooke possession in the king his masters name, of the city of Lisbon, and made him to be sworne and acknowledged, the people crying Real, Real for King Philip. Whilst that the Duke of Alba did these exploitcs in Portugall, King Philip was at Badajos, whereas he fell so dangerously sick, as the Physicians despayred of his life, and it was bruted in Portugall, that he was dead, so as many Noblemen did put on mourning weedcs, and among others the King Don Antonio: He recovered, but his Queene Donna Anna, who fell sicke at the same time of a continuall feuer, dyed.

The newes of the taking of Libone beeing knowne at Court, and what had followed, many Courtiers sought to disgrace the Duke of Alba's actions, accusing him of great negligence, to haue suffered Don Antonio to escape: they sayd, that he was more fitt to destroy then to edifie, not knowing how to do his master seruice, not to get him the possession of any thing, but defiled, spoyled, and made vnprofitable, and with such excessiue charge, as it did exceed the value of the thing gotten: this was spoken, for that the suburbcs and places about the cittie were spoyled. It is certaine, that this man for his sower, disdainfull, and haughtie grauitie, was hated of most of the Noblemen in Court. Then the King entred into Portugall, hauing first caused a generall Pardon to bee proclaimed for all those that had opposed themselves against his reception, except Don Antonio, whose that had fauoured him at Saint Iren, at Lisbon, at Setuual, and some others that were were named: the number of which hee did afterwards abate, causing his pardon to bee reiterated, yet still reseruing some, so as it was commonly sayd, he knew not so well how to pardon, as to offend.

He did set a price of 80000. crownes for him that could either take or kill D. Antonio: yet notwithstanding this temptation, there was not any one did attempt against his life, to reueale him, in eight monthes that he went wandring vp and downe the realme after all these miseries, being pursued and fought for in all places, with the greatest care and dilligence that might bee. Hauing elcaped at the route of Alcantara, hee retired to Coimbra, as we haue saied, where hee found so great loue and obedience, as hee gathered together about fise thousand foote, with the which hee approached neere vnto the city of Porto, a strong place neere vnto the sea, where although the Inhabitants had made shew to be Neuters, or rather inclyning to King Philip's party, yet hee entred, and was well receiued. Being resolved to trie againe the hazard of a battaile, hee made a kinde of campe vpon the riuer of Duero, neere vnto that city: There hee made some spoile of them that were of the contrary faction, and sought to draw money from the Inhabitants. In case of any sinister accident, hee was resolved to flie into France, and therefore hee caused a barke to lie ready in the roade neere to Viana, a little place vpon the sea, at the mouth of the riuer of Limas. Whilst that hee busied himselfe about these things, the Duke of Alba sent Sancho d' Auila against him, with about fise thousand foote, some horse and foure canons. Vnto whom the city of Coimbra (which till then had bene faithfull to Don Antonio) carried their keies; they of Auero did the like, who had bene spoiled by Don Antonio after that they had yeelded vnto him. D. Sancho being come to the riuer of Duero which was not to be waded through, he past his men ouer in certaine boats, which he had brought with him in carts, and others that he surprized running along that riuer, notwithstanding that D. Antonio had commanded that all the boats should bee drawne to the other side. Don Sancho found not any resistance, for as soone as the Portugals, which were camped on the other side of the riuer, saw him come towards them, they fled, euery man sauing himselfe as hee could, without any great slaughter: this was in effect a multitude without experience or courage. D. Antonio hauing no more meanes to subsist, left the towne of Porto, where after that he had let the Magistrate vnderstand how hee had imployed himselfe to the defence of the realme, and hauing excused himselfe by the basenesse of the Gouvernors, and the smal assistance he had had from the Estates, he bad them farewell with teares, promising to see them before it were long, better accompanied, to free them from the tyranie of D. Philip: for hee did hope to finde meanes and succors in France and England to restore him.

From thence hee went directly to Viana, with an intent to take shipping, where one attended him, but the sea went so high as it was impossible to put forth, staying there vntill the storme were past, behold there came a troupe of horse which sought for him, whereupon he put himselfe into a small boat, desyring rather to commit himselfe to the mercy of the winde and waues, then vnto men. Being come vnto the ship with great paine and daunger, there was no meanes to force the winde, nor to put to sea, so as hee was forced to come againe to Land in his boate, the sea driuing him to shoare, whereas he was not seene by them that pursued him. They of the house of Portugal were with him, who had alwaies followed him, namely the Bishop of Guarda, the Earle of Vimiofo, and some others; all which hauing disguised themselves like seruants and marriners, yet well furnished with rich iewels which were sowed vp in their doublets (for D. Antonio had made good prouision during his short reigne, as well at Lisbon, in the pallace royall, as in other places) they saued themselves as well as they could. By this retreat the name of D. Antonio was suppressed in Portugal; neither was there any place or man which made opposition against King Philip in all the maine land of Portugal.

The townes and forts which are in Afrike beyond the Straight, yeelded obedience to King Philip, as Ceuta, Tanger and the rest, where he was content to leaue the same Gouvernors and garrisons that were before: And it was not long before he had newes that D. Lewis d' Alcaide Earle of Zoghia, viceroy at the East Indies, had acknowledged him

Apries set vp on D. Antonios head.

D Antonio raises a new army.

Sancho de Auila sent against D. Antonio.

20 Antonio laies aside armes.

Portugal wholly reduced vnder King Philip.

Places belonging to the Portugals in Africke yeeld to King Philip.

18 Army of Don Antonio put to rout.

Lisbon yeelds to K. Philip.

19 Death of Q. Anne of Castile

for his King, notwithstanding that he had bene much solicited by D. Antonio. Wherefore there remained nothing for the King of Spaine, of all the dependances of the realm of Portugall, to subiect vnto him, but the Islands of the Tercera's, which are of great importance both for the Easterne and Westerne nauigations, for the which he prouided after that he had made his entry into Lisbone.

Imputations laid vpon the Duke of Alba.

Before that the King parted from Badajos, the imputations and slanders laied vpon the Duke of Alba were such, as every one was perswaded that he caused this goodly conquest to be trodden vnder foot by his souldiers, and that he gaue them such liberty, as without feare of punishment; they did spoile, sacke, kill and violate all diuine and humane lawes: wherefore the King sent two counsellors to informe, the one was called Francis of Villafaguana, taken out of the royall audience of Castile, the other in that of Galicia, whose name was Francis Tedaldi, who found much lesse disorder there then was spoken of: yet there were some insolencies suppress. There was something iustly imputed to the Duke of Alba, that by his sower and proud manner of proceeding, hee had hindered D. Antonios reception into fauour with the King, yea after that hee had bene saluted for King at Lisbone, and when as the Duke went about to take the forts that were neere vnto the city, being certaine that King Philip shewed himselfe willing, when as he vvas mooued by Diego de Carcamo. This Carcamo vvas a gentleman of Castile, who had serued D. Antonio when he was but Prior of Crato, in the life of King Henry: who seeing that King Philip had resolved after his decease to seize vpon the Realme of Portugal by armes, and that the Gouvernors made a shew that they would defend it, he had demaunded his leaue, and was retired into Castile, whereas the King suffred him to follow the Duke of Albas campe as a voluntary. Being in the army after the taking of Setuual, at the passage of the riuer of Tayo, he had leaue giuen him to goe to Lisbone, to see the new King D. Antonio, letting the Duke vnderstand that it was the King their Masters pleasure. Being well entertained by D. Antonio, they beganne to discourse of the present Estate of the affaires, and of what might happen, seriously

Discours betwixt D. Antonio and Car-camo.

Carcamo
speech to D.
Antonio.

and without vanity; they both concluding that D. Antonio had committed an error, in taking vpon him the title of a King, and that he should haue bene satisfied with that of defender of the country, and that hauing in effect no support, neither from the Gouvernors, who were opposite vnto him, nor from the Estates, who were dispers, nor of the Nobility, nor of any other, but of the Inhabitants of Lisbone, and some other townes, whereas the multitude being ignorant, inconstant, base and vilde, are alwaies mutinous and disobedient in such occasions, he must needs thinke that he could not subsist, and that he must yeeld vnto the forces of Castile, being in danger to be ill intreated, and without any respect if he were taken: and escaping, hee must not hope that any Prince in Christendome would vndertake a warre for his sake. He might well procure some weake succors from France or England, vnder the name of voluntaries, without aduow, for once, with the hazard of some encounter; but this were no great foundation, obtrayning a victory either at sea or land, to thinke your selfe thereby settled against a mighty Prince, as King Philip is, who hath meanes, in an instant, to repaire all the losses that may happen vnto him. It is true (said Carcamo) that this name and title of a King or Soueraigne Prince is a sweet enchantment to bewitch men, and it seemes that honour doth binde your highnesse, hauing once gotten it, to maintaine it with the hazard of your life, and rather to die fighting then to leaue it: This were good if we knew our aduentures, which are most incertaine; Man dies not when, nor how hee doth imagine, it depends of the wil of God. A King is as soone taken as slaine in a battaile. If your highnesse should be taken, consider, what would be your condition, and seeke no farther into Gods secret Iudgements, who shewes plainly by the successe of King Philips enterprises, that he hath ordained the realme of Portugal should be vnto that of Castile. That he should haue recourse whilest he had time, to those remedies which might warrant him from dishonour and infamy, rather then to contend in vaine against heauen and nature: and cast himselfe into the Kings armes, whom hee holds for his enemy; assuring him that he should find him milde, and forgetting all that was past, giuing him meanes to liue with honour, if not with the title of a King, yet in quality of a Prince, whom

A whom hee will loue and acknowledge as his kinsman. Diego de Carcamo did without any dispute, make D. Antonio allow of these reasons, who knowing them to be most true, resolved to write an humble letter vnto King Philip, yet still retayning some right vnto himselfe.

D. Antonio
writs to king
Philip.

He excused himselfe for that hee had taken the name of King, and receiued royall honours at Saint Iren, Setuual, and at Lisbone, the question of succession being not decided, saying, that he had bene forced by the multitude, who would haue yeelded him no obedience, if he had onely carried the title of defender of the country, and that if he had prepared to make defence, it was by authority from the states, which is the greatest power within the realme, the royall seat being void: and that his Highnesse should impute that to the loue and charity which euery good Portugues should carry vnto the crowne of Portugal: being then free, and full of honours purchased by the proper and peculiar vertues which God had infused into the Nation, both in Kings and subiects, the which hee greued to see confounded, and in danger to be darkened, being mingled with the trophees of Castile: And howsoeuer he held himselfe bound to perseuer in this defence, thinking the quarrel iust in his conscience, and by the consultations which hee had had both in the vniuersities of the country, as strangers, as well of Diuines as Lawyers, yet considering the condition of humane things, and the vncertentie of their euents, and also to spare blood, and to prevent the insolencies and spoiles which follow warre, he was content to lay aside armes, and the title of King, knowing how his highnessement to intreat both the realmes and him. This was the substance of the letter which Diego de Carcamo, carried vnto King Philip, being yet at Badajos, the which hee receiued in good part, seeming desirous the quarrel might be ended by such submissions, without any more force. But for that this negotiation fell out, either during the Kings sicknesse, or vpon his recovery, being it may bee aduised to haue this matter treated of farre from him, to the end hee might not haue his spirits continually importuned, nor haue occasion to alter his humors by any difficulty, that should put him in choller, hee gaue the whole charge thereof to the Duke of Alba, to whom Diego de Carcamo was sent, who made some voiajes more to Lisbone, and had so well aduanced the businesse, as there remained nothing, but to draw neere, and to conferre together by their Deputies, or in person if it might bee, when as Don Antonio receiuing letters from the Duke, conceiued by the termes thereof, an opinion that hee contemned him, and that hee would treat with him as a Master: for although that the Duke did witnesse by the tenor of his letters, that hee would imploy his best endeauors to attaine vnto a peace, saying that hee honoured the memory of the Infant D. Lewis his father, the which did binde him to seeke D. Antonios aduancement in this treaty, yet he gaue him no other title but your Lordship, where they had bene accustomed to say vnto him, your Highnesse, since he was King, and before your Excellency, when he was but Prior of Crato. This ceremonious kinde of speaking being omitted by the Duke of Alba willingly, to humble Don Antonio, was the cause that the treaty went not forward, which was a great crosse both for the country and himselfe.

D. Philip being now King of all Spaine, entred into Portugall soone after his recovery, and came to Eluas, where he was acknowledged for King, and in all places where hee past, and then he did free them of a forraigne imposition which was leauied vpon all marchandize which past from one realme vnto another, which was valued yeerely at a hundred and fifty thousand crownes, for a token of the vnion, and to shew that the Castilians and Portugals were now but one people. He appointed an assembly of the Estates at Tomar in Aprill the yeere following 1582: hee visited Catherine Dutchesse of Bragança at Villa Boim, who yeelded her right to the Realme vnto him, if she had any. The Pope who had till then bene somewhat opposite to the Kings purposes, did allow of all that had bene done in Portugall, being aduertised how matters had past; hee exhorted him that to shew himselfe thankfull vnto God for the prosperities which hee had giuen him, he should vndertake to make warre against the Queene of England, either directly, or vnder hand, in fauoring the Irish: hee not onely offred him his spirituall treasures, but also quit him the frutes of the Archbishoprike of Toledo, which had bene long

King Philip
enters into
Portugal.

Pope Gregory allows of the conquest of Portugal.

long in the hands of his Stewards, whilest that the Archbishop remained suspended of A his dignity, and that his proceffe was in question at Rome, the which amounted to some millions of crownes, and did belong to the Church and Sea of Rome. The King knew well that he should not restore those fruits, and therefore he was not eager to enter into open warre against the English, yet he promised to succor the Irish from Spaine, without any further declaration, but saying, that he would deal with the affaires of Ireland, as the Queene of England did with them of Flanders. Hee was also to provide for the reduction of the Islands of the Tercera's, without the which his fleets could hardly continue their navigations to the Indies.

Description of the Terceras.

People of the Terceras brutaish.

These Islands are in the Atlantike Ocean, and are otherwise called the Açores; they be B seuen in number, most of them small, and not greatly inhabited. The best are the Tercera (which carries the name of them all) Saint Michel (which is the greatest) and Fayal: the other, which be, Santa Maria, Pic, Flowers and Cornes, are barren and vnpeopled. The city of Angra the Bishops Sea, is in the Tercera, but the Bishops aboad is in that of Saint Michel, at a place called Puncto del Gada, which Island is some hundred miles neerer vn- to Spaine then the rest. All the Inhabitants of these Islands are brutish, superstitious and there. Vntil that the Marquis of Santa Cruz had conquered them, they were of opinion that the King D. Sebastian was not dead at the battaile of Afrike, they did hate the Castilians mortally, & were entertained in this hatred by D. Antonio, who held them two yeers C after the conquest of Portugal, by the means of some succors which he drew frō France, for this King being expelled, after that he had wandered throughout the realm, poore and in a disguised habit, for the space of eight months, and yet was neuer wronged nor discovered, notwithstanding that he spake to diuers men, in the end he had means to fraight a ship of the Low countries at Setuual, who for 600. crowns brought him to Callis, from whence going to the court of France, he was kindly entertained by the Queene Mother, one of the Pretendants to the crowne of Portugal, by whose fauor and authority, hee found in many priuat men that offered to do him seruice, & went to sea, & to the Islands, vnder his warrant, hoping to take some Spaniards or Portugal ships coming from the D Indies, and to enrich themselves with their spoiles, so as it was an ordinary trade from the diuers of France to the Tercera's: where for a time D. Antonio Cyprian de Figueredo commanded, but not well pleased with him, he displast him, and gaue his Gouvernement to Emanuel de Sylus, who called himselfe Earle of Torres Vedras. They of the Island of Saint Michel, being some distance from the rest, did presently acknowledge the king of Spaine, diuiding themselves from the rest, whether French ships came many times to spoile it, and some Spaniards to defend it, who meeting made furious war, but the Spaniards had alwaies the worst. They of the Tercera's, were firme for Antonio, and tooke all that came vpon their coast, and vpon that of Fayal, or that they could see at sea, to make a stock for D. Antonio, who reaped great commodity. There was one called John de Betancour, descended from some French house, dwelling in the towne of Angra, who thought to draw E the people into a mutiny for the King of Spaine, who being almost slaine, was cast into an obscure prison; where he remained long, and it is doubtful whether he died there. The Iesuits thought to speake, but they walled vp the gates of their conuents, and kept them long shut vp after that maner, giuing them meate twice a weeke, and yet they feared to bee worse intreated: but the other Orders of Monkes spake of none but D. Antonio, whose vertues and praises were most commonly the subiect of their Sermons, meddling much with affaires of state and warre. King Philip to assure himselfe of the Island of Saint Michel which held for him, and receiue the ships which came from the Indies, being not aduertised of that which had past in Portugal, least they should vnwillingly fall into the hands of the contrary party, he commanded that D. Pedro de Balder should bee F sent with foure ships and six hundred Spaniards, who aduerturing to land in the Island of Tercera's, with an opinion that there were many in the Island affected to the King his Master, and by their meanes to doe some good exploite vpon the city of Angra, which was vnwalled towards the land, he was charged by the, who slue 400. of his men, so as he made all the haste he could to get to sea, and returne to Lisbon, where for his welcome he Pedro de Balder defeated by them of the Terceras.

A he was put in prison, charging him that he had fought contrary to his Commission, yet he was soone released, finding that he was not expressely forbidden to fight. Lope de Figueroa being sent after to second him, thought to find him about the Island of S. Michel, but hearing of this defeat, he returned also to Lisbon, so as it was then resolved to send greater forces the next spring.

We haue formerly made mention of certaine companies sent by Pope Gregory the 13. to succor the Rebels of Ireland, vnder the command of Thomas Sunkely, who comming to Portugal with sixe hundred foote, when as D. Sebastian did arme against the Moores, they were intreated by him to serue him in that warre, where most of them were slaine E with their chiefe Commander. The rest returning into Portugall, with Sebastian Saniosep one of their Commanders, they had order to passe into Ireland; and the Popes Nuntio there had order to leauy Spaniards to fill vp the number, and to increase it, who should faile into Ireland vnder the Standard of the Church, yet at the King of Spaines charge, hauing money to raise foure thousand men of the country, they being but nine hundred men in all vnder diuers captaines Italians and Spaniards. These men landed in Ireland, and built a good fort, called Smerwike, the which was furnished with ordinance, victuals and munition to maintaine a long seege, into the which there entred but sixe hundred men, the other three hundred returning in three ships, leauing three behind; but before they were fully fortified, the Lord Gray, Lord Deputy for the Queens Maiesty in Ireland, came and besieged them, and prest them in such fort, as some of the captaines, compounding for their owne liues, the rest were put to sword: And so that enterprise was soone made frustrate, hauing more desire then meanes to annoy the English in those parts.

Forces sent into Ireland by the Pope and King of Spaine defeated.

The time appointed being come for the holding of the Estates at Tomar; the Deputies of the Clergy, Nobility, Prouinces and good townes of Portugal came thither; where King Philip was acknowledged by them all for King of Portugal, without any contradiction, and receiued the oath of fidelity, the which hee caused to be taken to the Prince his sonne. There they also treated how the Realme should be gouerned, where the King shewed himselfe very bountifull, for he granted vnto the realme, in a manner, all the Articles which the Duke of Ossuna his Ambassador had promised and signed to the five Gouernors, before the taking of Lisbon, the chiefe whereof were: That the King should take an oath, as he did, to maintaine the realme in her lawes, customes, preiudges and liberties. That the Estates of the realme should bee held within the realme, and that they should resolve there, and no where else, of matters concerning the realme of Portugal. That the viceroy, or by what name soeuer they called the Gouernor, should be a Portugese, vnlesse he were a Prince of the blood, sonne, vnkle, brother, cousin or nephew to the King. That the offices of Iustice, charges of the treasure and reuenues of the crowne, should be giuen vnto Portugeses alone. That such as had offices and dignities within the realme, as well at land as at sea, preferred by former Kings, should enioy them still, and in like manner the offices of the house and crowne of Portugal. That the Gouernors and Captaines of places and the souldiers in garrisons should be all Portugeses. That the commerce of the East Indies should remaine for the Portugeses, distinct from them of Castile, as they had bene before this vnion, and vnder the same lawes. That the money which should be coined in Portugal, should haue the armes of Portugal alone, without any other mixture or addition. That all Clergy dignities, both great and small, should be giuen to Portugeses, and in like maner all commanderies of the Orders of Knights. That no Croisadoes, nor thirds of Ecclesiasticall liuings, should be obtained from the Pope, to be leauied in Portugal. That no fees nor iurisdiccions should be granted in Portugal, to others the to Portugeses. That rights, exche- F ting to the crown, should not be giuen to any but to Portugeses. That the King should take into his seruice two hundred Portugeses, giuing them the pension which is called Moradic. That the King comming into Portugal, the lodgings of his Court and traine should be made after the manner of Portugal. That the King going through the realme he should carry with him a priuat Counsel consisting of a Prelate, Chancellor, Treasurer, superintendant, and a certaine number of Secretaries, which should bee called the counsell

An. 1581. Estates of Portugal held at Tomar.

22 Articles granted by King Philip to the realme of Portugal.

counsell of Portugal, all Portugueses. That the prouisions of offices, as wel of Iustice as others should be made within the realme, & that their supreme Iudgements should haue execution. That the Kings Chappel and singing men should be entertained, as had bin vied in the time of other Kings, in the city of Lisbon commonly, or where the Kings person should be within the realme. That all forraigne impositions vpon the confines of either realme, should cease. That all Portugueses should indifferently bee admitted to serue the Kings and Queenes, and that the Queenes taking Portugal maidens to serue them, should marry then according to their qualities, as had beene accustomed.

At these Estates there was a generall pardon granted to them that had carried armes, or otherwise opposed themselves against king Philip. Out of the which were excepted D. Antonio, the Bishop of Garda, the Earle of Vimiofo, and others named to the number of 52. All the religious men which had adhered to D. Antonio, and those that had received office from him, were also excluded out of this pardon, and were made incapable euer to receive any grace or charge from the King. The vniuersity of Coimbra, which had held D. Antonios part, and published his title, was (contrary to the opinion of many) confirmed in their preuileges, and taking into the Kings special protection. As for gratuities and rewards to priuate Portugueses, the King gaue much, yet he pleased not all futors. He confirmed the Duke of Braganca in the dignity of Constable of the realm. The Duke of Ossuna, who had left Portugal after the Governors flight from Setuual, was made viceroy of Naples, which is the goodliest charge of Spaine, wherevnto the Noblemen aspire and seeke to come vnto by degrees, as the chiefe of dignities which is giuen in Spaine. All that had employed themselves to serue the King in his pretension and pursuit of that realm of Portugal, as well of the nation, as others, yea and many which had opposed themselves, and were afterwards by some meanes reconciled, were gratified and rewarded, some superfluously, others more sparingly, so as some thought his recompences and rewards amounted to six millions of crownes.

The Estates being ended, the King drew neere vnto Lisbon staying some daies at Almada, not far off, attending the preparations which they made for his reception, and on Saint Peters day he made his royal entry, where after the triumphes, he wanted not importunate futors for guifts and recompences, and there was so great a number of petitions presented, as the counsel was ouer-charged, and there could not be any expedition, so as to abridge all delaies, the King discharged the body of the counsell, and committed the examination and prouision vnto two only, which were, D. Antonio Pignero Bishop of Leira, and Christopher de Mora.

The Great Turke being at truce both with the Persian and the Catholike King, had some cause giuen him to doubt a warre in Afrike, for that in Tunis the people had taken armes, and expelled the Turkes that were there in gard, calling home their old King Amida, who had beene expelled and liued at Malta, wherevpon Amurath did presently send Vlucially with some gallies, who attempted to land some men, but the King of Fez opposed himselfe, having no wil that the Turkes should grow potent in Afrike. And the Catholike King, who had made a league with the Moore, would not haue the Turke aduance on that side, protesting to Vlucially, that by reason of the truce, formerly made betwixt him and the great Turke, he could not attempt war against him of Fez, vnlesse he would breake the truce; and therefore if he attempted any thing, hee would send his gallies against him; which threats made Vlucially resolute (having past thither wel provided) not to alter any thing this yeere. The disorders at the Tercera increased daily, many comming thither for refuge, after they had beene spoiling at sea, whereof some were French: And King Philip being aduertised that in France they prepared many ships of warre, and leaued souldiers publicly vnder the fauour of the Queene mother, to come vnto those Islands, there to fortifie themselves against the Spaniards, to cut off their navigation to the Indies, and to assure them against the enterprises of the King of Spaine, and deprive him of the vse of them, he had already commanded D. Aluar de Bazan, Marquis of Santa Cruz, to carry 5000. men thither, when as hearing that D. Antonio had set saile with about 70. ships and 7000. soldiers (as reports are alwaies greater then then the effects) he prest the Marquis to be gonne, and seemed to be somewhat discontented with him, for his slacknesse in making ready the ships of Andalusia, whereof there were a good number appointed for this voyage: so as hee was forced to goe from Lisbon on the tenth of Iuly with eight and twenty ships only, some Biscains, the rest Flemings and Esterlings, appointing the rest which were at Saint Lucar, Santa Maria, and other ports to follow him. This Castilian army, beeing come to the Island of Saint Michel, they found that the French were already landed, and did spoile it. So as they came happily to preserve the Island, and the chiefe fort of it called Punta Delgada. Hee was glad that whilst the French were busied about the spoile of that poore Island, they had suffered a great ship, and very rich, comming from the Indies to escape, the which had come unwittingly vnto those Islands, beeing ignorant how the affaires of Portugal had past.

These two enemies fleets were at anchor some thirty miles one from another, being couered with points of Land which runne into the sea: The French being about Laguna towards the West, and the Spaniards at Morro, which is to the East, with this diaduantage, that the Marquis sailing along the Island to finde a fit place to land, the army had beene fully discovered by the French, which hee could not doe of theirs, lying couered and hidden: besides the French had taken a Caruell of aduice, the Marquis hauing sent two vnto the Governor of the Island to aduertise him of his comming, and of the number of ships and souldiers which hee brought with him, and of those which should follow him. Beeing therefore hard to discouer, the French army by sea, the Marquis was desirous to land some men to learne some certentie, but they were forced to returne without any certaine knowledge. Wherefore to bee better assured, he waied anchor, and put to sea with all his fleet, in order to fight, meaning to passe in that manner along the South part of the Island, where the enemy lay (for the other side of the Island was desart and had no landing) and by that meanes see what their strength might be, where at the breake of day there came a smal barke vnto him, in the which was the Master of a Biscain ship, with letters from John de Castillo, who commanded in the fort of the city, by the which he did aduertise him of all that had past since the comming of D. Antonio and his army vnto the Island: That the French had in all 58. sailes, whereof 28. were great ships, and 6000. souldiers; that they had sackt the village of Laguna, and put to rout Pedro Pexot, and Lawrence Noghera, who went to encounter them with 3000. men, part Islanders and part Spaniards, and then had entred into the city which they had found empty, and that they sought to winne the fort, into the which they were fled that had escaped at the defeat. That Lawrence Noghera was dead of a wound which hee had receiued in the fight, and that Pexot went away soone after in a Carauel towards Lisbon, leauing many of his vessels in the Port, which had beene taken or brothen by the French, and that hee was straightly beseged in the fort; and therefore hee should take counsell, whether hee should fight, or retire with all his ships vnder the fort to fauour it.

The Marquis beeing glad of this aduice sent the Master backe to John de Castillo with this answer. That hee should not trouble himselfe but hold good, for hee was resolved to fight, with hope to vanquish the enemy. This report came neere the truth for the number of their ships, for the French fleet at their comming from Belille in Britan consisted of fise and fifty sailes, whereof there were fise and thirty ships of warre, and twenty pinaces, carrying feuen and thirty companies of foote, which might make some foure thousand souldiers, whereof Sainte Soleme was Collonel of fiftene Ensignes, nine were vnder the command of the Siegneur of Buz, eight vnder Beaumont, and fise vnder Emee, ouer which Philip Stroffy was Generall, and the Earle of Brisfac was his Lieutenant. The Marquis hauing spent that day in consultations, and in ording all things necessary for the army, the next day, which was the three and twentieth day of Iuly, the two fleets were at sea, their prowes turned as if they ment to fight, which it is verie likely they had done instantly if so bee that a calme had not kept them from ioyning. After dinner the vvinde grooving somevvhat fresh, the Marquis thinking that the French (vwho had the vvinde) vwould haue charged him, and hee

Vvvvv

King Philip
bounty in Portugal.

22
Entry of King
Philip into Li-bon, and acknowledge
King.

Armies of French and Spaniards in the Island of Saint Michel.

Number of the French army
at the Tercera.

hee preparing to receive them; hee saw them bend their course towards the Island of A Santa Maria; fifty miles distant from that of Saint Michel, the which the Spanish fleet did in like manner, coasting one an other, and turning their sailes sometimes on the one side, sometimes on the other, until that night came, which was very calme, so as the French could not execute their designe, which was to have sent ten ships of warre along the Island to get behind the Spanish fleet, with an intent to charge them the next day in front, and on either side.

In the morning every man expected a battaile, but they did not any thing, but play with their great ordinance a farre off, yet injoying one another. For the French had one of their ships funke. Night being come the Marquis being tired with this losse of time, sought to get the winde; wherefore he gave commandment to all his ships, that hea- ring a peece of ordinance shot off, they should beare vp close with the Admirall, and follow it, bearing no lanterns; to the end the enemy should not see them. This Order was observed by all the ships, except two Battalions, in the which were four hundred Germaines, who being not advertised through his fault that had the charge, were so far off as they could not ioyne againe with the rest of the fleet. But this prevailed not, for at the breake of day, which was the five and twentieth of July, on Saint Iames day, the Patron of Spaine, to whom the Spaniards said that D. Antonio and the French captaines before, making no shew that they had any intent to fight. The Marquis men were preest with the like necessity, for that the maine mast of a great ship, in the which Christopher d'Erasso was, had beene bruized and shaken, so as they were forced to attend her, fearing the enemy should entuiron and take her, whilst they mended her mast, which was so shaken, as shee could not saile: So this day was spent, in the which the French, whose vessels were lighter, had meanes to recover the winde.

The next day being the fixe and twentieth, they must needs fight, their former delais proceeding from the sundry opinions that were amongst the captaines of D. Antonio's armies, whereof some would fight, and others were unwilling; and if their Generall and Admirall had not advanced to shew them the way, most of them would not have come to it: making their excuse that they had alwaies seenie Philip Stroffy, and the Earle of Vimiofo (who were in one ship) keepe behinde, which they imputed to want of will to fight, where as in truth the reason was for that the ship was heavy, and not so good a sailer as the rest: for these two Noblemen wanted no courage, but were most desirous to fight with the enemy: Stroffy and the Earle finding this bad impression of their companions, changed their ships, and tooke one of the best saylers in the fleet, in the which the Lord of Beaumont was, who was Collonel of those companies which had followed the Earle of Brissac. The two armies beeing in order of battaile at sea, within three miles one of another, and five and twenty from Saint Michel, the sea being calme, they attended some small gale to giue them meanes to approach.

The which fell out about noone, favorable for the French, wherevpon they ioynd within tenne miles of the Island, fighting with great resolution. In the front of all the French army was Stroffy and the Earle of Vimiofo, their ship holding the place of Admirall, the Earle of Brissac was with them for vice-admirall, with three English ships, then followed the other ships, some neere, some farther off. The Spanish fleet had for their foreward a great hulke, and Francis de Bonadilla in it, the galleon Saint Martin, in the which the Marquis of Santa Cruz went, who towed after him with a cable the ship of Christopher d'Erasso, whose mast was much shaken, and with them the galleon called Saint Mathew, which carried Lope de Figueroa: all the other ships of the Spanish fleet, were in a manner couered by these foure. Euery one had chosen where to fight, but the winde changing and varying, made them to change their designes.

The Saint Mathew, wherein Lope de Figueroa was, beeing cast some what from the rest by the agitation of the winde and waues, it was first charged by the Admirall and vice-admirall of the French, and the other three shippes, which did enuiron it with a storme of great shot and fire, whom hee answered with the like, and made them to keepe aloofe, yet Figueroa was so preest by the Admirall, Vice-admirall, and

23
battaile at sea
betwixt the French and Spaniards.

A an other ship as he was often in danger to be lost, for he maintained the fight valiantly about two houres, and was not succored. In the end a Biscay ship of Peter of Garagarza, in which were two companies of Spaniards, came and releued him. The Marquis, who saw him in danger, was much troubled for that hee could not succor him in time as hee thought; both for that he was forced to answer two French ships which had set vpon him (whom notwithstanding he had made retire with his great Ordinance, and that of the Hulke, wherein Francis de Bonadilla was) as also for that he must goe against the winde, casting about, so as the time would be long before he should recover him. Yet in the end he came vnto him, but the order of the army and all their priuate designes were peruered, as it happens commonly in sea fights, being subiect to the winde and waues; but he was preuented by the ships of Michel d'Oquendo, of captaine Villa Vieiosa, and another Biscain, who came first to succor the Galleon Saint Mathew, being followed by many others. These three last-named did inuest the Vice-admiral, in the which the Earle of Brissac was, who being already ill intreated by the cruel resistance the Spaniards had made, sought to be vngraped, and to retire her selfe. Among others the ship of Michael de Benefa came boldly and graped with the General Stroffy; so as the Marquis of Santa Cruz could not approach nere either of the enemies ships, seeing them enuironed by his galleons; wherefore he obserued what the issue would be, to succor where hee needed required. The French Vice-admiral defended it selfe valiantly against three

C ships that did presse it. Captaine Villa Vieiosa who fought in the prow was slaine. In poupe they were forced by Michel d'Oquendo, who caused some of his Spaniards to enter, but finding his owne ship to be perced, and that it tooke in water, he left her, seeing also other French ships come to succor her. So as this viceadmirall being much torne and broken, seeing her selfe free, would haue retired, but she could not goe farre, before she funke (as the Spaniards say) the Earle of Brissac with some others sauing themselves in a little boat, to the next French ship. As for the Admirall where Stroffy was, which had not yet abandoned the fight, she was so fastned to one of the ankors of the galleon Saint Mathew, as it was not possible to free her, but they must either vanquish or die. Before that succors came she was in a manner Master of this galleon, about the which almost the whole fight was, for there were but 70. men of defence and seruice remaining in her; but besides the ship of Michel de Venesa, the Marquis, who was watchfull, comming with other ships, compassed her in round, and did so batter her with musket shot, as she was forced to yeeld, hauing endured this last charge about an houre, and being shot through in diuers places, she beganne to sinke visibly. There were about three hundred men slaine in her, the rest were taken. Philip Stroffy was found fore wounded with a musket shot about the knee, which made him fall, who being drawne out of the presse, to carry him into the galleon Saint Martin, as they past with him from one vessell to another, an insolent souldier thrust his sword into his belly, and in this Estate he was laied before the Marquis of Santa Cruz, who made no account of him, and seeming not to vnderstand them that said it was Philip Stroffy, hee turned his head on the other side, and made a signe that they should cast him into the sea yet breathing. D. Francis of Portugal, Earle of Vimiofo, who also fought valiantly with him, died two daies after of his wounds. The Marquis seemed to lament his death, for he was his kinsman.

This battaile continued, about five houres, betwixt two very vnequall parties, for there were scarce ten French ships that fought, by reason of the bad intelligence and disobedience that was among them, as it happens often amongst a multitude of men, which are either voluntaries, or not experienced; of the which this army did for the most part consist, who were faoured in their faults by their captaines, whereas they should haue vfed severity, especially at sea. Before their comming out of France, they had falne into quarrels and mutynies, which were with some difficulty pacified: most of the other french ships were idle spectators of the battaile; Some at the first charge went to sea, bending their course towards the Island of the Tecera's, where they refused them the port, as treacherous runne-awaies; and if any one came neere vnto the enemy, it was but to discharge their canon farre off, which is held by good sea men to be idle and vnprofitable.

French defeated at sea by
the Spaniards.

Death of Philip Stroffy.

Many of the dead in the bataille.

Crueltie of the Marquis of Santa Cruz to the French.

Spaine's outraged the crueltie of the Marquis of Santa Cruz.

Thus the French army retired, hauing lost their Commanders with about 2000. men, and eight of their best ships in the conflict, in the which the Spaniards said they had not about 200. slaine, and about 500. hurt, wherein they flattered themselves strangely, for in the Gallion Saint Mathe-w, alone, there were about 600. soldiers and mariners, who by their owne confession were reduced to 70. when as Stroffy was oppressed by the Marquis and the rest that came. The Spanish fleet remained master at sea, neither cared to pursue them that fled, both for that night approached, as also thinking that he had done ynough. He was kept foure daies at sea, by reason of the winde which did rise, and could not get to the Island of Saint Michel, where he afterwards landed his men to refresh them, and to cure them that were hurt. There D. Aluaro de Bazan Marquis of Santa Cruz did an act which was held barbarous, discouering the pride and insolency of certaine Natures which cannot be pacified, and which neuer take delight in their victories, vnlesse they be seasoned with some new cruelties, committed after the fact in cold blood: for the first day of August the army being landed, Francis of Bouadilla hauing caused a great scaffold to be set vp in the market place of Villa Franca, in the Island of Saint Michel, he caused all the French prisoners, to the number of 300. to be brought thither by foure companies of souldiers, where he caused a sentence to be pronounced. That whereas (there being a peace betwixt the Catholike King and the most Christian) they had presumed to come out of France, in fauor of D. Antonio, sometimes Prior of Crato, in form of an army, with an intent to spoile the King of Spaines ships, coming from the Indies, and seize vpon his Islands, where they had already taken great booties; he therefore declared them common enemies to the commerce and publike quiet, and fauorers of his Maiesties rebels; and that as pirats and theeues he condemned them to die, commanding the Iudge of the army to cause that sentence to be put in execution, vpon all those that exceeded the age of 17. yeeres, for so the seruice of God, and of the two Kings required. The age of these prisoners, which were exempted from death, to vse them in the galleies, was iudged after that they were carried backe to prison by their beards, so as many which had little or no beards saued their liues, hauing secretly pulled the haire off their chins. There were found among those that were condemned foure score gentlemen, who lost their heads, or rather had their throats cut, for want of a good hangman, and the rest, both soldiers and mariners, were hanged, within two foot of the ground. This inhumaine and bloody slaughter, was detested by the Spanish souldiers, and by many of their captaines, saying, that it did blemish the honour of armes, and that they did wrong to those prisoners to terme them theeues, beeing apparent that they were not come to that voiage for D. Antonio, but to doe seruice to the French Queene, by reason of the pretensions she had to the realme of Portugal, and that they should make them faire war, hauing behaued themselves like valiant souldiers, wherevpon they made many requests vnto the Generall, seeking to diuert him from that cruel resolution, but he was inuincible. After this vnworthy fact (howsoeuer they may colour it) the Marquis staid some daies about those Islands, to receiue the India ships, if any came, so as he saued two, which might haue somewhat repaired D. Antonios losse, if they had saled into his hands, whom he put in some feare, and all them that were with him at Angra in the Island of Tercere, that he would land there, for he past and repast twise or thrice in view of the city, but he had an other desaigne; for seeing the season approach, when as the seas grow high, he gaue order for the gard of the Island of Saint Michel, where he left Augustin Inyguen with 2000. Spaniards, and then sailed towards Lisbonne.

The defeat of D. Antonios army, and the death of Philip Stroffy did much trouble the French King, and the Queene-mother; after which he could not procure any great means to annoy the King of Spaine: Some of the ships of that fleet making hast to recouer the Ports of France, their captaines were reproched with base cowardise, and some of them were put in prison, being charged to haue beene corrupted by the King of Spaine, or his Agents, before they parted from France, and to haue failed of their duties in the day of bataille. They had prepared for D. Antonio (hauing newes of the coming of this army) a stately entry in the city of Angra, whether he came two daies before the bataille, to attend the issue thereof out of danger, by the aduice of the French captaines,

D. Antonios
estate after the defeat of the French at sea.

His returne into France.

An. 1582.
King of Spaines fortifies the straights of Magellan.

Sarmiento fortifies in the straights of Magellan.

A captaines, the vnfortunate successe whereof made the triumphs to cease: and when as after the defeat he saw the Marquis lie houering vp and downe, he grew a fraide, causing a light barke to lie ready for his flight, if he should be assailed, but hearing afterwards of his departure, he grew assured. This poore Prince saled from all his hopes staid their a while, and was perswaded by Emanuel de Sylua, whom he had made Gouvernor of those Islands, to commit many insolencies to get money, wherevnto he willingly gaue care, for he fore-saw his future necessity. He caused many of a base standard to be coined, and set it at a high rate. Yet would he not imitate the Marquis of Santa Cruz in cruelty, being sollicitated to put to death fifty Castillans which were in prison at Angra, to reueng the death of those that had beene executed in the Island of Saint Michel, which shewed his generous minde. About the midst of October he resolved to returne againe to France: for danger and want would not suffer him to live any longer in the Island of Tercere. Hauing therefore recommended vnto Emanuel de Sylua, that which concerned the gouernment of those Islands, for the gard whereof he left him five hundred French soldiers, besides those he had before: he parted with about thirty saile. And for that he would not arriue in France, whilest that the memory of the losse of so many gallant men was fresh, whereof they imputed the cause to him, he directed his course towards the Canaries, and the Island of Madera, to spend the time, and to get some spoile to content his souldiers: some ships both French and English abandoned him in a storme which disperst them about the Island of Saint Michel.

C The Marquis of Santa Cruz being arriued at Lisbonne, he was welcome to the King, who told him, that seeing he had beene so fortunate in that voiage, he would send him the next sommer to the Tercera's with a stronger army, and that he should carry some galleies with him, to make an absolute conquest of those Islands, and to chase away the French and D. Antonios partisans, and euen there he gaue order for that voiage.

We haue formerly made mention that the King of Spaine after the returne of captaine Drake from the South sea, had sent D. Diego Florens de Baldes with 25. ships, to fortifie and plant in the Straights of Magellan, & to stop the passage of any other Englishmen that should attempt the like, and that five of his ships had beene cast away in a storme, vpon the coast of Spaine, notwithstanding the King sent commandement that he should proceed in his voiage, the which he did with sixteene saile, but he could not get into the straights that yere, so as leauing Diego de Ribera his Lieutenant, & Pedro Sarmiento (who should be the Gouvernor of those forts) to attempt it the next yeere, he returned for Spaine. And they happily got into the Straights, where they landed 400. men, with their victuals and munition, which done, Diego de Ribera left Pedro Sarmiento with 400. men, thirty women, and a ship, with victuals for eight months, and returned with three ships, hauing staid but eight daies in the Straights. Pedro Sarmiento built a towne in the mouth of the Straight to the Northward, in the which he put a hundred and fifty men, calling it Nombre de Iesus, from whence he went by land, and sent the ship some five leagues within the Straights, where in the narrowest part he found a very good port, and built an other towne, which he called Ciudad del Rey Philippo, or King Phillips towne, but the snow and extreme cold of the Winter would not suffer him to finish his fort. Wherevpon pretending to goe to his other towne, hee failed to the Straights mouth, to his first built towne, where hauing staid aday or two, he brake his cable in a storme (as hee said) and went to the riuer of Ienero, and then to Fernambuck to seeke for some supplie of victuals, where he obtained what he desired: But Sarmiento sayling towards his Colony, his ship with all his prouision was cast away, three of his men were drowned and himselfe hardly escaped. At Baya the Gouvernor of Bresil fitted him with a barke, & furnished him with clothes and victuals for his people, but vpon the way he was surprized with so furious a storme, as he was forced to cast all his freight ouer bord, & to returne againe to the riuer of Ienero, where attending a whole yere, he neither receiued succors nor letter from the King, who was offended with Pedro Sarmiento, for that he had giuen him wrong informations touching the straights, and put him to a needlesse charge, and losse of men, so as Sarmiento hauing no meanes to releue his people, was forced to saile towards Spaine, where at sea he was taken by certaine Englishmen, so as in

Death of D.
Diego Prince
of Spaine.

Death of the Duke of Alba.

Death of D.
Sancho de Avila.

An. 1583.
D. Philip the Kings sonne sworne at the Estates of Portugal.

Archduke Albert made Governor of Portugal.

King Philip
goes out of Portugal.

Success sent to the Terceres.

Forts built at the Tercere.

four yeeres those poore Spaniards which hee had left in the Straights had no succors. A This yeere D. Diego the Kings sonne, Prince of Spaine, died, for the which he was very sorrowfull; but he did not much regard the death of the Duke of Alba, which followed soone after, at the least he made no shew of it, whereat the Portugueses (who had seene their Kings retire themselves for priuat men) wondred. They remembered that King Emanuel had shut himselfe vp three daies for the death of a Pilot. The Duke of Alba was 74. yeeres old when he died in the Kings lodging at Lisbon: of whose deeds and disposition we haue spoken sufficiently. D. Sancho de Auila, accounted by the Spaniards for one of the best capitaines of his time, died soone after the Duke, being hurt with a horse he fought to be cured by a fouldier, with charmes, and neglected the Art of Surgery. B
Among other Acts of his the sacke of Antwerp is memorable, in the yeere 1576.

King Philip being prest to returne into Castile, to consider of a marriage which was treated of betwixt the Emperour and one of his daughters, being also to goe to the Estates of Arragon, he made hast, before his departure out of Portugal, for that which was necessary for the government of the realme, and for the firme vnion thereof with Castile. He therefore sommoned the Estates for the 26. day of Ianuary the yeere following 1583, and there he caused his sonne D. Philip to be sworne lawfull successor to the crown of Portugal; he caused the funeral of the deceased King D. Henry to be made at Belem, where he was buried with his Predecessors, and he caused the bones of King Sebastian, of diuers other Princes his kinsmen, which had bene left, or buried in diuers Mona- C steries, to be brought thether. As for the Government of the realme, in his absence, he gaue it to the Archduke Albert Cardinal, contrary to the opinion of most Courtiers, who thought he would haue left it to his sister D. Maria, widow to the Emperour Maximilian, who had retired her selfe into Spaine, and was come to him into Portugal at the time of this conquest. He left for Counsellors to the Archduke, D. George d'Almeida Archbishop of Lisbon, Pedro d'Alcaçova, who had bene so ill intreated by King Henry, whom King Philip restored to all his goods and honor, and Michel de Mora, Secretary of the realme, who was honored by him with the office of Scribe of the purity, which is one of the greatest dignities of that Court: but the King contrary to the Articles concluded at the Estates of the realme, and against their priuiledges, put into the Counsell D of the Hazienda, which is for the revenues of the crowne, two Castillians, one a Lawier & the other a Merchant. The Emperesse did also somewhat discontent the Portugals when as visiting the conuent of Santos, which is a retreat for Ladies of great houses living as religious women, but yet may marry, she drew out D. Iuliana d'Alencastro, daughter and heire to the Duke of Auero, being thirteene yeeres old, and tooke her with her into Castile, whereas they thought she would marry her. The Portugueses were also discontented at the Archdukes proceedings, who after the Kings departure, in the beginning of his government, made difficulty to signe the prouisions and ordinary letters, which ought to be dispatched within the realme, as the King had agreed, sending furors ordinarily to Court. In the end the King, to pacifie all discontents, and to leaue a good conceit of him in his new conquest, gaue many gifts and rewards to them that presented themselves, and made their seruices knowne, or their desire to doe him any: the Duke of Bragança and the Marquis of Villareal were they that tasted least of his bounty, the which was noted, being the principal persons of the realme, from whence he parted the eleuenth of February that yeere, presently after the ending the Estates.
E

The Marquis of Santa Cruz, after his returne to Lisbon, used all diligence to make ready the army which he should lead the Sommer following to the Tercera's: the which being knowne in France by D. Antonio, and those that fauored him, they wrought so as he had meanes to send about 1200. men, vnder the command of Monsieur de Chattes a Knight of Malta, and Gouvernor of Diepe, a man well practised in martiall affaires F both at land and sea: there were already in the Islands of Tercere and Fyal, seuen hundred French and three hundred English, and about three or foure thousand Portugueses and Islanders. The Island of Tercere was the place which must bee chiefly kept, to defend the approaches whereof, and the landing places, Emanuel de Sylua had caused some thirty forts to be built within compasse of it, which was a weak fortification, for

A for being all small, capable offew men, and farre one from another, they might be easily forced with few men, and one could not releue another. This Emanuel de Sylua (as the Spaniards describe him) was a man full of will, and opinion of his own sufficiencie, but in effect he was ignorant of the art of war, as in a manner all Portugueses at that time were) and of a very tyrannous disposition: so as he omitted no kind of cruelty to get mo-ny: and did willingly giue care to them that found out any inuention to call the inhabitants of the Island in question, for the breach of his capitulations, Edicts, and Ordonan-ces, to the end he might forfeit their goods. To effect the which, one Amador de Vieira gaue him good meanes, who being secretly entertayned in that Island by King Philip, to discouer who was affected to him, and to entertayn them in that good will to serue him, when as he thought he had discouered all, he carried the roule to Emanuel de Sylua, who made his profit thereof. Monsieur de Chattes being arriued at the Tercera's, he would see all the fortifications of the Island, and vnderstand the reasons: for he did not comprehend much, considering the number of men, the defence of so many forts would require: withing that Emanuel de Sylua had rather made one strong retréat, capable of all that was good in the Island, both men, victuals, munition, and other things in the best place ther-of, which might haue bene able to endure a sege vntill winter, with the fouldiers and inhabitants that were there, the which making in all fise or sixe hundred men, good and bad, being well led and commanded, might make a gallant defence, and not trust to those small forts, which were neither made with iudgement, nor able to hinder the enemies landing: for they did not defend the third part of the approaches of that Island, the which hee found not so inaccessible as they had described it vnto him in France: This Knight did also find, that there was small prouision of victuals and munition, although there were good store of Ordinance. So as he made accompt, that if the Marquis came with such forces, as were giuen out, these Islands were lost without recouerie. Yet like a man of courage, he repayed, as well as he could, the defects of these hen-rousts, exhorting them all to be of good cheare, and to hope well, and that howsoeuer, he would dye honorably with them. The presence of this Capitaine did much comfort the inhabitants of the Island, and did somewhat assure Emanuel de Sylua: who notwithstanding had prepared for his escape, if he saw himselfe prest; for he kept two vessels readie in the port, to fly into, whereof Monsieur de Chattes was in doubt, and therefore he obserued him.
D

The Marquis of Santa Cruz hauing put to sea with 30. ships of waire, 12. gallies, two galleasses, 5. galleons, and other smaller vessels armed, to the number of 60. besides carauels, pinaces, and other ships of burthen, carrying 10000. men, Spaniards, Italians, Germans, and Portugueses, vnder Lope de Figueroa, Francis de Bonadilla, and John de Sandoval, Colonels of the Spaniards, Lucio Pignatello of the Italians, Jerome Ledron of the Germaines, and Felix d'Arragon of the Portugueses. He came to the Island of S. Machel the 3. of Iuly, where hauing also imbarcked the Regiment of Augustine Iniques, which he had left there the yeare before, he then sayled towards the Tercere, where the city of Angra is, in the port whereof hee saw the ships which had brought Monsieur de Chattes and his men, and some other vessels, which the Gouvernors did vse to send to sea: there he left certaine gallies to keepe them in, and instantly caused the city to be summoned, offering a pardon to the Inhabitants, and a good composition to the Capitaines and fouldi-ers: but they answered him with the Canon: the Marquis seeing that all landing places neere vnto the citie were fortified, he began to coast along the shoare to find some fitte descent, but it seemed to him, that all were rampared and fortified: being in this care, he was aduertised by a Portugeze, that there was a good landing place at port des Mojes, farre from Angra, where presenting himselfe, he found some acceffe, but difficult, both for that the place was stonie, and there was a fort built: yet he did hazard some fouldiers, F
E
who did assure the way for the rest. Being at land, they that garded this fort made some resistance, which gaue Monsieur de Chattes time, being aduertised by the fires and smoke, and by the bells which hung at either of these forts, to draw his men together French and Portugueses, to go and succor them: but vpon the way he found the fouldiers which had abandoned this fort flying, whom he caused to returne with him, being resolved to fight with the enemy, the which he indeauored to do, and might haue amazed him, if Emanuel de

Monsieur de Chattes comes to Tercere.

Army of Spaine going to the Tercere.

Conquest of the Islands of the Tercere, for King Philip.

Angra at the Terceres taken by the Marquis of Santa Cruz.

de Silva the Gouvernor, and his men had held good: but they did not continue as they had begun: for hauing skirmished well all the day against the Spaniards, and others of the Marquises armie, and against hunger, through the bad order of Emanuel de Silva, night beeing come, they abandoned the French, and retired to the mountaine, whether the Commander de Chattes was forced also to make his retreat with his French troupe: for there was no reason, that so few men should wilfully make head against an army of 12000. Emanuel de Silva thought then to go and imbarke himselfe, and to flee away, but he could not, for euery man watched him, and therefore he retired also to the mountaine, to a place apart. It was strange to heare those Ilanders (who before had seemed so braue) to call then vpon Castile, and to confesse, that those Ilands did belong vnto King Philip. The Marquis seeing himselfe master of the field, marched towards the city of Angra, which he found abandoned and emptie, so as the souldiers made small profit of the sacke thereof. When as the Marquis entred the city by land, the gallies seized vpon the shippes which were within the port without resistance, for there were neither souldiers nor mariners in them. From thence Don Pedro de Toledo was sent to the Iland of Fayal to subdue them that would not acknowledge the King of Spaine. In the meane time the Marquis apprehending the difficultie to draw the French out of those rocks by force, hee fought to haue them by some honest composition. The Commander de Chattes at the beginning made great demands, considering the estate whereunto he was reduced, which made the Spaniards resolute to vanquish them, or to lose their liues, and so they did promise the Marquis, but he did auoyd that danger, hauing found more moderation in those poore forelorne men: for so they might well be tearmed: for had he not fought with them, hunger would soone haue forced them to haue yeelded to his mercie. Their accord was treated by a Colonel called Pedro de Padilla, whom the Commaunder de Chattes had sometimes knowne at Malta, where it was concluded, that they should deliuer vp their armes and ensignes, keeping onely their swords, and that they should lodge in a quarter of the cittie, and shippes provided for their retreat. D. Pedro de Toledo beeing come to Fayal, fought to perswade the souldiers and inhabitants to yeeld without force: wherefore hee sent vnto the Gouvernor, whose name was Pero Antonio Guedes de Sosa, a man of qualitie that was in his company, who had his wife and children in that Iland, to let him vnderstand what had happened to the Iland of Tercere, and to perswade him to apply himselfe vnto the time, and to yeeld to the Conqueror. This Gouverneur being proude and disdainfull, making no other answer to this messenger, shue him: wherefore Don Pedro staying awhile, doubting that which had hapned, began to aduance with 2500. souldiers which he had brought, beeing to skirmish with 400. French which came to encounter them, whom he made to retire soone into their fort, & to yeeld vpon the same conditions, that the rest had done. Sosa was taken, who (for the wild part he had played with him, that was sent by D. Pedro) was hung vp by one arme, both his hands having beene first cut off. The Portugals of the Iland were sackt, and then left free, hauing submitted themselves to the Kings obedience. Anthony of Portugall was left Gouvernor there with 200. souldiers, and the rest returned with the gallies to the Tercere, where as the Ilanders came and made the submissions that were required. So as there was not any one but did acknowledge King Philip for king of Portugal. Before the Marquis of Santa Cruz returned, he caused Emanuel de Silva's proces to be made, hauing had no meanes to escape, who, with some others were executed, Emanuel lost his head, and so did Amador Vieira, hee who had discovered the Portugals in the Iland, that were affected to the k. Emanuel Surradas, who had spoiled the Ilands of Cap Verd, was also beheaded, others of meaner qualitie were hanged. The mony which had beene coyned with D. Antonio's stampe, was condemned as counterfeit, and a great quantitie was burnt in the market place of Angra. This done, the Marquis hauing disposed of the estate of these Ilands, and left John d'Vrbine for Gouvernor of the Tercere, with 2000. foot, he bent his course towards Spain, and arriued safely with his fleet in the ports of Andalusia, where there was great ioy, as also in Portugal, and thanks giuen to God for so happy a victory, which put King Philip in a peaceable possession of the Realme of Portugal, and all the dependances, so as he might then iustly intitule himselfe King of all Spaine.

The end of the 30. Booke.

A

B

A

CONTINUATION OF THE GENERALL HISTORY OF Spaine, from the yeare, 1583. to this time.

C

D

HE warre of Portugall beeing ended, Philip, King of Spaine, subdued the Ilands which had made resistance: he returned into Castile, whether the Estates of Arragon, and other weightie affaires did call him. Among other things, there was a marriage treated of betwixt Catherine his youngest daughter, and the Duke of Sauoy, which allyance, hee held, would be both profitable and honorable to himselfe, and the whole house of Austria, and therefore he concluded the marriage, but it was consummated the yeare following.

Marriage contracted between Catherine
Infanta of Spain, and the Duke of Sauoy.

This yeare the king would haue his sonne sworne Prince of Spaine, the which was done with great solemnitie, in S. Hieromes church in Madrid, the twelfth day of Nouember, there beeing present the King, his sister Mary, wife to the Emperour Maximilian, the Prince, and the two Infanta's: where the Cardinal of Toledo began to sing a sollemne Masse, there assisting the Cardinal Granuello, with the Bishops of Placencia, Salamanca, Zamorra, Auila, Segouia, Coria, Siguenca, and Osma Granuello presented the Euangell and the Paxe vnto the king, the like did the Bishop of Placencia to the Infants. Masse beeing ended, the Prince was conducted by Cardinal Granuello neere vnto the altar, and there he receyued from Toledo the oth of confirmation, and then was returned backe vnto his place. Then did a King at armes rise from his seate, and going to the left side of the altar, where as Princes Ambassadors, and the Noblemen of the Realme did sit, crying out with a loud voyce, That the Prince Don Philip was to be sworne: but after him there followed one of the Kings Councell, deliivering in particular the forme of that oth: and how the Emperesse Mary should sweare with the two Infanta's the Princes sisters: but presently the Emperours Ambassadour made it knowne, that that Emperesse was to take the oath as Infanta of Spaine, and not as Queene of Romanes.

F

The first were the King and his sister, who performed that ceremonie vpon the Masse booke, and the Crosse, which were presented vnto them: but when as the Emperesse would haue kist her Nephewes hand, according to the custome, hee would not, for modestie sake suffer her, and so shee was constrained to kisse his fore-head. After, the Emperesse followed the Infanta's, and then the Bishops, the Admirall of Castile, the Marquis of Villena, the Duke of Pastrana, the Marquis of Denia, the Prince of Afcoly, and so all the Grande's Grande's and chiefe Noblemen of the Court, the Marquis of Aguilar, and the Cardinal A of Toledo swearing last of all.

Ambassadors come from Japen into Spaine.

The ioy of this ceremonie was augmented by the arriual of three Ambassadors, which had bene sent two yeares before from three Kings of Iapon, of Bugno, of Fiunga, and Arima, to the Pope, by the perswasion of the Iesuits, who desired that those Princes, seeing the noble and politicke gouernement of these countries, and the greatnes of the greatnesse of the Pope of Rome, might be edified and freed of a certaine opinion which they had conceived, that Christians came into their countries to get meanes to lue. They came into Spaine beeing accompanied by father Alexander Valignari, Visitor in those parts, at such time as the Court was full of feasts and ioy, for the prosperous successe of Portugal, for the conclusion of the Infanta's mariage, and for the swearing of the prince: so as they were not onely received by the Catholike king, and the whole Court, with greates pompe and state, but with extraordinarie content. The King at their reception, would not suffer them to kisse his hand, but embraced them as his equals, and to do them the more fauour, would haue both the Infanta's to do the like: hee made them see all his delights, and rarest things: and at the Princes ceremonie he commanded they should be set at his right hand, in the first place, whereas two men appointed for that seruice, instructed them in the order of the ceremonie, naming euery Nobleman, and what place hee held, as they went to sweare obedience to the Prince. The king hauing royally intreated them, and honored them all that might be, being to go for Italy, gaue them a Caroch and a Coach, commanding, that throughout all his realmes, they should be receiued with all magnificence, causing a shippe to be prepared for them in Alicante, where they imbar- ked, but they were driuen by foule weather into Maiorca, yet in the end they arriued in Tuscany.

Antwerpe, one of the chiefe townes in the Low-countries, was this Sommer so streight- ly besieged by the Duke of Parma, with the forces of Spaine, as hauing no releefe, nei- ther by sea nor land, they were driuen to extreame want, and almost to despair, where- upon they prest their Confederates to succour them: but the Estates not able to rayse so great an armie, sent a sollemne ambassage of twelue of their Deputies to the French king to intreat him to take the Netherlands into his protection, as his owne subiects and vas- sals: the which did much trouble the Councell of Spaine, seeing that the French king might with small difficultie get the possession of those countries, hauing the subiects hearts inclined vnto him: whereupon they fought by letters, and all other meanes to draw them of Antwerpe to a reconciliation with the King of Spaine. Don Bernardin de Mendoza, Ambassador at that time in France for the Catholike King (hauing been sent with some disgrace out of England, for that contrarie to the dutie of his charge, he had bene a busie practiser against that State) vpon the arriual of these Deputies to Paris, came with a great clamor vnto the King, telling him that the Estates of the Low-coun- tries, as Rebels to the King of Spaine, had bin condemned of high treason by the Coun- cell of the Inquisition of Spaine, and therefore were to be rooted out. That remembering the strict league and alliance betwixt him and his master, he should not giue them audi- ence, but rather driue such rebels out of his countrie: the which would turn to the good of France, (lying so neere vnto Spaine) and of all Christendome, which was disquieted with these wicked people.

Bernardin de Mendoza his speech to the French King.

Answer of the French King to Mendoza.

That he should do wrong vnto all other Princes, to whome such presidents are very preiudicial, if they should countenance and support their Rebels. But the King answered, that he would not giue audience to the Deputies of the generall Estates, as to Rebels, re- uolted, but as to afflicted people, who complained of oppressions. That Princes had ne- uer, neither ought they refuse to ayde the afflicted, especially when as their greatest de- sire is to be reconciled to their Prince (to obtaine the which they informed the King, that they had made many petitions vnto the King of Spaine, and could get no answer: ) and therefore he thought, that any man might seeke support where he could, if right and ius- tice were denied him, so as he was not to be blamed, if he gaue them audience.

In the beginning of this yeare, there was preparation made in Spaine for the mar- riage of the Infanta Donna Catherina, with that pompe that was befitting such Princes: for

A for the effecting whereof, the King with his children, and the chiefe of the Nobility of Spaine, came to Sarragossa, about the end of February, the Duke of Sauoy, beeing arri- ued in Doria's gallies, at Barcelona on the 18. of the said moneth, from whence hee went by land to Sarragossa, where his Maiesty attended him, without the city, and receiued him with wonderfull signes of ioy, doing him exceeding great honour. The same day that he arriued, he put the ring vpon his spouses finger, the King her father holding her hand, there assisting at the ceremonie, the Cardinal of Seuille, (to whom some few daies before a hat had bene sent) with the Cardinall Granuelles, who made them thus: Monsie- ur Taverna the Popes Nuncio, the Arch-bishop of Sarragossa, Vincentio Grudonigo Am- bassador of Venice, with other principall Noblemen. The next day, according to the cus- tome of the Realme, the married couple came to the Arch-bishops church, (who per- formed the ceremonie) couered with a white yail. Masse beeing sayd, and returning to the pallace, they dined in publike at one table, his Maiesty, the Duke, his wife, and the Infanta Donna Isabella, beeing all set of one side: for many daies after there were great triumphs, tiltings, tourneys, and other knightly sports made by the Nobility of Spaine, who shewed themselves very gallant in all their sports, especially the Duke of Medina del Rio-secco, Admirall of Castile, the Duke of Albuquerque, the Duke of Medina Celi, the Duke of Maqueda, the Marquis of Denja, the Duke of Paltrana, the Marquis of A- guilar, and the Prince of Acoli, besides the great Commander of Castile, who was fauor- ite and Lord Steward to the Prince D. Philip.

*Mariage of the Duke of Sauoy,
and the Infanta
D. Catherina
in Spaine.*

C To these there iynned a great number of Knights, of no lesse Nobility, but not of so great dignitie, as well Spaniards as strangers, who were come thither to honour this feast of the Catholike King their Lord. The Duke of Sauoy had also brought with him a great troupe of gallant Nobility, of the which, on the foure and twentieth day of May, he made Knights of the Order of Saint Stephen, John Baptista of Sauoy, and the Marquis of Chambray, and besides these the Marquis of Nemours his cousin, and Afcario Roba who were absent; and withall, Carlo Pallavicino, newly made Master of the Dutcheffe horse, Count Sannitelli, and Michel Bonelli. But eight dayes after the King did honour three Princes with the Order of the golden Fleece: the Duke his sonne-in-law, the Admirall of Castile, and the Duke of Medina Celi. There were many rich presents mutually giuen by the King and Duke, and by the Noblemen both Spaniards and Italians. Then in the beginning of Iune the married couple beeing accompanied by the King, Prince, and the Infanta Donna Isabella, went to Barcellona, where they tooke shippe in Doria's Admi- rall gally, and beeing accompanied with forty other gallies, hee brought them safely to Genoua, and entertayned them with great state in his owne house, from whence they past to Nizza, then going with an honorable trayne towards Turin, they were receiued with great signes of ioy, and the feasts were renewed. But the King of Spaine beeing re- turned to Sarragossa, whither he had already sent the Court, he caused the Prince to be iworne with the ordinarie solemnities, and then he past into Castile.

E About the same time there came to Court Pomponio Torello, Earle of Mont Chiaru- lo, with an Ambassage from his Princes, the Duke and Prince of Parma, the first requi- ring of his Maiesty the restitution of the castle of Placentia, so necessarie for the prefer- uation, not of his Estate, but also of his life, the mutinous people of Placentia being ani- mated by the Spanish garrison, to practise against the Duke, as some conspirators had lately done, who beeing not suppress and punished, although they were discouered, gaue him continuall cause of feare.

Ambassage sent into Spain from the Duke of Parma.

F The Prince did sollicite concerning the enterprise of Antwerp, and also about his fa- thers affaires: yet he refused to receiue it as a fauour done to him, for that hee would not confirme an opinion, that he was as distrustfull as his father, of the Crowne of Spaine, to whom, and not to him, hee would haue the castle yielded. This busines was referred to Cardinall Granuelles, the great Commaunder of Castile, and to John d'Isagues, at that time Secretarie of State, with commission not to treat with any other of the Councell, it seeming the king should yeeld that which hee ought. Granuelles shewed himselfe very willing, not onely for the equitie of the cause, but also for a priuate bond he had vnto the Prince, from whome he did acknowledge, that his brother Monsieur de Champagne held his

Castle of Placentia yielded.

Mutinie at Naples.

Deputies sent from the Estates of the Low-countries into England.

Reasons why the Queene of England should take protection of the Low-countries.

his life, and for his Maiesties seruice, whose affaires in Flanders depended chiefly vpon A the Prince: In the end the King resolved to make this restitution vnto the Duke: and so he dispatched Count Pomponio with a commission to the Duke of Terranoua, Gouvernour of the State of Milan, to cause the sayd castle to be restored, the Castellan being absent, the which was accordingly performed, and free possession deliuered to Prince Raynucio in his Grandfathers name.

This yeare there grew a popular tumult in Naples, partly through the couetousnesse of the King of Spaines Ministers in that Realme, during the time that the Duke of Ossuna was Viceroy, the King hauing giuen order to the Viceroy to supply their wants in Spaine, with such corne as they might well spare within the Realme, hauing had a plentiful harvest: but they not onely transported the ouerplus, but that which was needefull B for their owne vse, by a greedie desire of gaine: so as when the Spring came, they found that they had not corne sufficient, which seeking to helpe by bringing in from forraigne parts, they were forced to raise the price of corne, and to make their bread lesse: whereas with the people being vexed, (for it seemed strange to them to see scarcitie, whereas they expected abundance) who endured more by this want, then the rest. Whilst that on the ninth of May, their elect John Vincentio Starace was with the Deputies in the church of Santa Maria del nouo, to consult touching the prouision of corne, they began to mutine, saying, that it had beene accustomed to be done in Saint Augustines church, and to adde deedes vnto their words, they tooke Starace, being weake and sicke, and carried him with iniuries and ill vsage. Being come thither, he retired himselfe into a chappell C which had a grate before it, and there sought to pacifie the furie of this multitude with good words, the which notwithstanding increased as the number did, growing almost madde.

These Starace growing fearefull, caused himselfe to be let downe into a tombe, which these mad men vnderstanding, he was suddenly drawne forth, and murdered with an hundred wounds, after which they drew him through the streets, and tearing him in peeces, they carried them vp and downe the cittie, in signe of a cruell reuenge. The Viceroy carried himselfe indifferently in this mutinie, and full of feare, where as in the beginning he should haue suppressed it by force, and not to haue purchased afterwards the name of D cruell in his seuer punishments, seeking to recover the reputation which he had lost: but the King of Spaine stayed this rigour, sending a generall pardon concerning this murder.

The Deputies of the generall Estates being returned from France with many good words, but no effects, by reason of the league, which hindred the Kings desire to embrace their cause, they had recourse vnto the Queene of England, vnto whom they also sent their Deputies, seeking to perswade her to vndertake their protection against the king of Spaine, in regard of her owne priuate interest, and the good of both the Estates. This matter was weightie, and required a graue and deliberate consultation. Shee called her Councell, and demanded their opinions, whether shee should voluntarily ingage her selfe in a warre without constraint, which she must needs do, in taking vpon her the protection of the Low-countries. Whereupon they concluded, that she might not with her owne safetie abandon the vnited Prouinces of the Netherlands, vnlesse she would neglect the preservation of her owne Estate. They layed before her the King of Spaines hatred against her, hauing changed the religion, which he had planted in England, which appeared by his denying passage to her Merchants throughout the Low-countries, with armes, powder, and munition which he had bought in Germany. That he had refused to renew the auncient contracts made betwixt the Emperour Charles his father, and her predecessours. And to shew his hatred to her Maiestie, he had suffered the Inquisitors of Spaine to persecute her poore subiects with all crueltie, and had dismissed her Ambassa- F dour out of Spaine, vpon colour of Religion. That the Duke of Alba his Gouvernour in the Low-countries, had in hostile manner arrested the bodies and goods of her subiects, contrarie to the auncient contracts. That he had sent forces to invade her realme of Ireland, and to ayde her rebels.

Besides these and many other iniuries, the Lords of her Councell layed before her, how

A how dangerous it would be for her Estate, if the Spaniard should become absolute Lord of those countries: that he would alter their religion, disannull their auncient Priuiledges and liberties, and make them subiect to his will and pleasure: which done, he might easily inuade England, hauing so much shipping, and so many mariners at his command, and his Indian treasure, to supply all other wants. He would ouerthrow all trade betwixt her subiects and the Netherlands, and would breed factions within the heart of her country. These reasons (sayd they) should moue her Maiestie to embrace the present occasion, and not suffer the Low-countries to be planted with Spaniards and Italians, considering that the warre was not vndertaken against those Prouinces, but with an intent to B make a greater conquest.

Whilst that the Queene of England resolved to vndertake the protection of the generall Estates of the vnited Prouinces, it was concluded to arme out a Fleet to annoy the King of Spaine vpon his owne coast, or at the Indies: whence his treasure came. Wherefore this yeare 1585, in September, Sir Francis Drake was sent out of England with a fleet of 25. ships and pinaces, and about 2300. souldiers and mariners. Master Christopher Carlisle was his Lieutenant generall, with many other gallant Captaines and Gentlemen, whose names for breuitie sake I omit, being written at large by others. After some daies, this Fleet came to the Ilands of Bayonne, vpon the coast of Spaine, where the Generall putting his men into boates, and pinaces, went into his Galley, with an intent to surprize the towne: but vpon the way there came an English Merchant vnto them from the Gouvernour, to see what Fleet it was, who after some speech with the Generall, was returned backe, and one Captaine Sampson with him, to demand of the Gouvernour, if there were any warres betwixt Spaine and England: and why they did arrest the English Merchants, and their goods. To whome the Gouvernour made this answer, that he knew not of any warre, and that it was not in his owne power to make any: and as for the stay of the Merchants, it was the kings pleasure, but not with any intent to preiudice them, and that hee had receiued a countermaund to discharge them, the which hee did presently.

The lying of this Fleet at those Ilands, did much trouble them in Spaine, being ignorant of their intent. Whereupon Don Aluaro de Bazan, Marquis of Santa Cruz, Admirall of Spaine, being then at Lisbon, did set downe in writing what harme this Fleet might do, if it should go to the West Indies, and enter into the South sea, as Drake had formerly done: and what course was to be taken to preuent those inconueniencies and dangers.

This English Fleet stayed not long vpon the coast of Spaine, but directed their course towards the VVest Indies, passing by the Canaries, and the Ilands of cape Verde, where they tooke the towne of S. Iago, which they spoiled and burnt, they came to the Island of S. Dominica, from whence they past to the Island of Hispaniola, where they tooke that gallant Cittie of S. Domingo by force, which after they spoyled, and burnt E a third part, the Spaniards made a composition for the rest, paying fine and twenty thousand Duckets, at five shillings sixe pence the peece. In this Island they found great store of good prouision, but little siluer or plate, yet in their furniture they were very rich and costly.

From Saint Domingo they put ouer to the mayne land, and came within sight of Carthagea, which stands vpon the sea side, where they made a gallant attempt vpon the towne, and tooke it: they landed their troupes five miles from the towne, whither they marched in battell: coming within halfe a mile of the towne, they were to passe vpon a narrow cauley not five paces ouer, lying betwixt the sea and the harbour: This streight was crost ouer with a wall well flanked, and a good ditch, hauing onely a passage F for horsemen and carriages, if need required: which breach had a good barricado: and here there were sixe peeces of Ordinance planted, which scoured along the cauley, and in the harbor, or inner water, they had layd two gallies, with their prowes to the shore, hauing eleuen peeces of Ordinance in them, which did beate crosse this streight, and three or foure hundred small shot: notwithstanding all this preparation to receiue them, the Lieutenant generall (it being very darke, and not yet day) marched by the sea shoare,

Xxxxx

so

Sir Francis Drake with a fleet upon the coast of Spaine.

S. Iago taken.

S. Domingo taken.

so as they receiued little harme by their shot, and comming close vp to the wall, after A some resistance they ouerthrew the Barricado, and forced the Spaniards to retire, they entred pel mel with them into the towne, and wan the market place, where the Spaniards made head awhile, after which they abandoned the towne, and retired to other places, whither they had carried their wiues at the comming of the English. They had drawne many Indians vnto them, all bow-men with poysoned arrowes; them they had placed in corners of aduantage, so as if they did but breake the skinne of any one, he dyed. The armie stayd here fixe weekes, and burnt the out-parts of it, but in the end there was a composition made, by the which they should pay an hundred and ten thousand ducketts for the ranfome of the rest. They had bene aduertised of this Fleet 20. daies before their ar- B riual, which had made them fortifie in that manner for their defence, and to conuey away their wealth. Hauing made this composition, they left the towne, and lodged in an Abbey, within a quarter of a mile of it, demanding a new composition for it, and a fort which stood at the mouth of the harbor: but not able (as they sayd) to ranfome the fort, it was blowne vp. From thence the Fleet went to Cape Saint Anthony, and then to the Cape of Florida, where they found a fort held by the Spaniards, the which, vpon their approach they abandoned: They found in it thirteene peeces of brasse Ordinance, and a chest of some 2000. pounds sterling, to pay the Kings Garrison, which consisted of a hundred and fiftie men. This fort was called Saint Johns, from whence they went vp the maine riuer to a towne ca'led S. Augustines. And then the Fleet returned into England. C They tooke in this action 200. peeces of brasse Ordinance, and 40. of Iron. In Saint Iago two or three and fiftie peeces: In S. Domingo foure score, whereof most was Cannon, Demi-cannon, Culuerin, and such like. In Carthagea sixtie three peeces: and in Saint Augustines fort fourteene, the rest was Iron Ordinance.

There was such excesse in their styles, and in their speaking and writing one vnto another, as vpon petition made vnto the King, he made an Edict and set downe a forme, what termes they should vse both in their speaking and writing, as followeth:

Pragmatica, or an Edict:

In the which is set downe a forme which is to be kept and obserued in their entertainments and courtesies of word and writing, and in carrying of Coronets vpon their Armes.

On Philip by the Grace of God, King of Castile, Leon, Arragon, the two Sicilies, Ierusalem, Portugall, Nauarre, Granado, Toledo, Valencia, Gallicia, Maior-ca, Seuille, Sardinia, Cordoua, Corsica, Murcia, Iacn, the Algarues, Algezire, and Gibraltar: of the Islands of the Canaries, of the East and West Indies, and the Islands and firme land of the Ocean sea; Arch-duke of Austria, Duke of Bourgondie, Brabant and Milan, Earle of Ausbourg, Flanders, Tirol, and Barcelona, Lord of Biscay, Molina, &c. To the Prince Don Philip our most deere and welbeloued Sonne, and to the Infanta's, Prelates, Dukes, Marqueses, Earles, Barons, Priors of Orders, Commaunders, and sub-Commaunders, Captaines of Castles and places of strength, and to those of our Councell, Presidents, and Iustices of our Courts, Commissioners, and Prouosts of our Houfe, Court, and Chancerie, and to all Corrigidors, Assistants, Gouvernours, chiefe Iustices, &c. and to all other our Officers, and naturall subiects, of what estate, preheminence or dignitie foeuer they be, or may be, in all the citties, townes, places, and Prouinces of our Realmes and Seigniories, both present and to come, and to euery one of you

A you whom the contents of this our Edict may concerne, health and peace.

You shall vnderstand, that at the sute of the Attorneys of Courts of the Citties and Townes of these our Realmes, we haue bene forced to prouide a necessarie and conuenient remedie, concerning the disorder and abuse, which is in the entertainments by word and writing, the excesse whereof was growne so great, and come to passe, as it had caused some inconueniences, and daily more might be expected, if it were not reformed, and reduced to some good auncient order, seeing that true honour doth not consist in vanities, or titles giuen by word or writing, but in greater matters: whereunto these do neither adde nor diminish. And hauing often treated thereof with our Councell, Wee haue ordayned as followeth in this our present Edict.

First, although it be not necessarie to treat herein of our selfe, nor of the persons of Kings, yet to the end that it may be the better obserued and kept, which doth concerne them, Wee will and command, that from hencefoorth, on the toppe of the letter or paper that shall be written vnto vs, there shall bee no other title put, but Seignior, or My Lord, nor in the end of the letter, any thing, but God preserue the person of your Catho-like Maiestie, nor the subscription below, any thing but his name that writes it: and vpon the superscription, there shall be onely set, To the King our Lord.

That to the Princes heires and successors of these our Realmes, they shall write in the same forme, changing only Maiestie into Highnes, and that of King into Prince, and in the end of the letter, God preserue your Highnesse.

The same forme and style shall be obserued, with the Queenes of these our realmes, as with their Kings, and likewise with the Princesses of the sayd Queenes, as with their Princes.

That the Infants and Infanta's of these our Realmes, shall onely haue the title of High-nesse: In the top of the letter they shall write, My Lord, and in the end, God keepe your Highnesse, without any other ceremonie: and vpon the Superfcription, To my Lord the Infant D.N. or, To my Lady the Infanta Donna N. Wherefore when they do speake or write Highnesse, without any other addition, it is onely to bee vnderstood of the D Prince, the heire and successor of these our Realmes. Declaring, that it is not our will nor intent, that the contents of this Edict shall extend to Donna Maria the Empreffe, my most deare and welbeloued sister, although she be an Infanta of Castile, being certaine, that she is to be called and written Maiestie; and vpon the superscription, To my Ladie the Empreffe: and her sonnes, (brothers to the Emperour, our most deare and welbeloued Nephew) shall haue the same titles that are giuen to the Infants of these Realmes, and in like manner to the Arch-dukes his Vncles.

That to the sonnes-in-law, and brothers-in-law of the kings of these Realmes, shall be giuen the same titles that their wiues haue, and daughters in law to the sayd Kings, shall be vsed like vnto their husbands.

And as for the entertainment which the sayd royall persons are moreover to haue, our meaning is not to innouate any thing of that which hath bene accustomed.

That the style vsed in the petitions which are presented to our Councell, and in the other Councels, Chanceries and Tribunals, and the words which they vse when they are in Councell, shall be obserued as hath bene hitherto, vnlesse it be contrarie to this our prouision, and on the toppe they may set, Most mightie Lord, and no more.

That in the signing of all our letters, scedules, and prouisions, our Secretaries shall set,
By the King our Lord, in the stead of Maiestie, and in the signing of our Secretaries of the chamber, they shall do the like.

That in all iudiciall seates, as well belonging vnto vs, as to any other, and of what qualitie foeuer, whether they speake in priuate or in publike, the petitions, demaunds, and quarrels shall be begunne in a lyne, with that which they are to treat of, without setting any title, word, or signe of courtesie on the toppe: And in the conclusion, they may say: For the which I implore the office of your S. or your VV. (according to the persons and Iudges to whome they are to speake.) And the Notaries shall onely say:
By the commaundement and decree of N. the Iudge setting to his name and surname

Xxxxx 2

only,

onely: they may also adde the name of such a mans Office, and the dignitie and degree A which he hath taken, without any other title.

That no man of what estate, condition, dignitie, degree or office whatsoever, shall assume vnto himselfe, either by word or writing, the title of Excellencie, nor of excellent Lord, neither may any be called Reuerent Lord, but onely Cardinals, and the Archbishop of Toledo, as Primate of Spaine, although he be no Cardinall.

That to Archbishops, Bishops, Grande's, and such as we command to be couered, all men within our Realmes, shall be bound to giue the title of Your Lordship, and also to the President of our royall Councell.

That to Marquises, Earles, great Commanders of the Orders of S. James, Alcantara, B and Calatraua, and to the Presidents of our other Councils and Chanceries, the title of Lordship may be giuen both by writing and word, and not to any other, vnlesse it be to the chiefe cities of the Realme, and to Senates, and to Metropolitan Churches, to whom they may giue that addition, as they haue beene accustomed.

That to Ambassadors in like manner, which haue place in our Chappell, may bee written or spoken Seigneurie or Lordship.

That in what concerns writing from one man vnto another generally without exception, this forme shall be obserued. They shall begin the letter with the busines they are to treat of, without setting beneath the Crosse, or on the topp of it, or at the beginning of the line, any title, cypher, or letter: and they must end the letter, saying, God C keepe your Seigneurie, or Lordship, or Worship, and then the date of the time and place, and then his signature, without any courtesie before it: and hee that hath taken a title, shall mention it when he signes, and whence that title is.

That in Supercriptions, to a Prelate shall bee set downe the ecclesiasticall dignitie which he hath, and to a Duke, a Marquis, or an Earle, that of his estate, and to Knights, and other men their names and surnames, saying, To the Cardinall, Archbishop or Bishop of such a place. And in like manner, To the Duke, the Marquis or Earle of such a place: and to meaner men: To Don N. or to N. adding his surname, and to euery one named in this Article, may be set the dignitie, office, charge, or degree which hee holds.

The vassall shall not be excepted out of this order, writing to his Lord, nor the seruant D to his master: but the father to the sonne, and the sonne father, may adde their naturall name to their proper, and betwixt the husband and the wife, they may note the estate of their marriage, and betwixt brethren the like allyance.

That the complements to women, and among themselues, by word or writing, shall be the same that is vsed to their husbands.

That to men of religious Orders, there shall be no other title giuen but father-hood, or reuerence, according to the charge which he holds. And in the supercription with his name, they may set the charge and degree which he hath in those Orders.

That whatsoever is containned in these our letters and prouision, shall be obserued by all the subiects of our dominions, yea writing to them that are absent.

Moreouer, to preuent the great disorder and excesse which hath beene, and is daily committed, in setting Coronets to their Scutcheons of armes, and to their seales and fomter cloathes. We do ordaine and command, that no manner of person shall set any Coronet to his seale or fompter cloath, nor in any other place where he hath armes, except Dukes, Marquises, and Earles, who we hold may carry them, beeing in their right forme, and not otherwise: And that the Coronets which haue beene carried, shalbe presently left, and no more vsed.

And to the end it may be the better kept, obserued, and executed, we ordaine and command, that whosoever shall go against the contents of this our Ediſt, or any part therof, shal for euery breach incur a penalty of 10000. maraudis to be diuided after this maner: F a third part for the Informer, another third part for the Iudge that shal giue sentence, and the rest to godly vses, the which shalbe executed without any remission. Wherefore we command all and euery of you, that shall see these our letters and prouision, and the contents therof, (the which we desire should hold the force of a Law or an Ediſt, made and registred in our courts) that you obserue and keep it, and cause it to be obseru'd & kept in euery

A euery point, according to the contents, against the forme and tenour whereof you shall not do, nor suffer to be done at any time, nor in any sort, vpon the penalties which they do incurre, which breake the commandements of their Kings and naturall Lords; and vpon paine of our displeasure, and the said thousand maraudis, for euery one that do to the contrarie. And to the end that no man shall pretend ignorance thereof, wee command that these our said Letters and prouision shall be proclaimed publicly in our Court, and that the contents be precisely and inuolably obserued, from the first day of the yeare following 1587. and that no man do otherwise in any sort, vpon the said paines:

Dated at S. Laurence the 8. day of October, in the yeare 1586.

B

Signed. JO EL REY.

THIS yeare Don Pedro de Toledo, sonne to D. Garcia, sought to make an attempt vpon Affricke, but the little experience of some Neapolitans which landed in a small I-land called Cherchine, was the cause of their ouerthrow and death, beeing defeated by a small number of Moores which put them to flight. Toledo beeing landed with the rest of his troups, and gone vp the other side of the Iland, he vnderstood by the mariners of his mens successe, which holding for an ill presage, without care of any reuenge, hee began to faint, retiring with all his men into his gallies, and bent his course towards Sicily, where seeking to find some Pyrates, in the end he came to Naples, whether soone after came D. John de Zuniga, or Eñuniga, Earle of Miranda, and Viceroy of Naples, the D: of Ossuna beeing called home into Spaine, to the great content of the Neapolitans, who taxed him for his cruell and couetous gouernement.

Pedro de Toledo vnderstand in Affricke.

This yeare there was another enterprise by an English Gentleman, whose name was Thomas Cauendish, who passed into the South seas, as Sir Francis Drake had done: where after many accidents in November 1587. the Generall hauing two shippes, mette with a great shippe of the King of Spaines called Saint Anna, the which was Admirall of the South-sea, beeing about 700. tunnes burthen, the which, after six or seuen houres fight, and three seuerall charges, yeelded, to haue their liues saued. In which shippe, by the confession of the Captaine and Pilot, they had an hundred and two and twenty thousand Pezo's of gold, and the rest of the lading was in silkes, fatten, damaske, muske, with many other good commodities: in the end they set fire of the Kings shippe and burnt her, hauing to the quantitie of 500. tunnes of goods in her: then sayling by the Philippina's, the Moluccos, and the Cape of Bona Speranza, they arriued safely in England, in September 1588.

Cauendish takes the S. Anna in the South seas

King Philip (after much warre, the losse of his wiues and children, and the little hope he had of long life in the Prince his sonne, beeing of a weake complexion, and ill disposed) beganne this yeare to haue more cause of content, for now the young Prince began to bee vigorous, and of a spirit besitting an heire of so great dominions: and on the other side, the second Infanta Donna Catharina hauing had a sonne the last yeare, did this yere double his ioy with another, giuing him the more content, for that the first was christened with so great solemnitie the twelfth day of May, foure daies after that the second was borne.

Yet touching his publike affaires, the Low-countrie warres troubled him much, the which hee referred to the valour and wisdom of the Duke of Parma, and liued himselfe quietly in Spaine. But finding, that the Queene of England did fauour and protect his Rebels of the Low-countries, (as he termed them,) and that shee did feed the fire, of that long warre, to be reuenged of that iniurie, and to employ his forces to aduance the Romish religion, he made preparation to transport the miseries of warre into England, giuing countenance and entertainment to all the fugitiue Papists of that country.

The Queene of England beeing aduertised of this great preparation in Spaine for the inuation of England, shee was aduised to preuent it: whereuppon shee armed fourth a Fleet of some 30 sayle, in the which there were 4. ships, and a pinaces of her Maiesties, the rest

xxxx 3

rest were Merchants of good seruice. Sir Francis Drake was appointed Generall of this A Fleete, which went towards the coast of Spaine this yeare, in Aprill. And beeing aduertiz-zed, that there was great store of warlike prouision at Cadiz, the which was readie to go for Lisbon, he made all possible speed thither, to intercept these prouisions: so as on the 19 of Aprill, he entred with his Fleet into the harbour of Cadiz; where at the first they were affronted by sixe gallies, but they soone retired vnder their fort.

Ships burnt at Cadiz by the English.

There lay in the roade sixtie ships, with diuers smaller vessels vnder the fort; and such as could passe the shoals, fled vp to port Real: there came foure gallies more downe against them from Saint Mary port, and port Real: but they were well beaten: they burnt in this harbor a shippe of Ragouça, of a thousand tunne, hauing fortie peeces of brasse B Ordinance in her, and richly laden, and another great new ship of twelue hundred tunne, belonging to the Marquis of Santa Cruz, high Admirall of Spaine, with many others laden with victuals, wine, iron workes, biscuit, oyle, fruite, and other commodities, which were to be transported to the Indies, or to serue for the prouision of the Fleet which was preparing for England: so as they burnt, sunke, and carried away to the number of thirty shippes and barkes, beeing as they esteemed them ten thousand tuns of shipping. Whilest they lay in the roade, the gallies and forts shot continually at them: and such shippes as they could defend no longer, they fired, to driue among the English shippes, who were somewhat troubled to auoid them. This resolute attempt was performed in one day and two nights, to the great amazement of the King of Spaine, and the Marquis of Santa C Cruz his Admirall.

After their comming out of the roade of Cadiz, this English Fleete was followed by ten gallies, who notwithstanding suffred them to ride quietly at an anchor by them. Then they bent their course towards cape Sacre, beeing well victualled at the enemies charge:
vpon the way they tooke at seuerall times, almost an hundred shippes, barkes, and cara-uels, laden with hoopes, gally oares, pipe-stauces, with other prouisions for the King of Spaines armie intended for England; all which they burnt, and landed the men. They also spoyled the fisher-boates, and nets, for the fishing of Tunies. And comming to Cape Sacre, they landed, and tooke three forts, some by force, the rest by composition. From thence they came neere vnto Lisbon, anchoring neere vnto Calcais, where the Mar- D quis of Santa Cruz was with his gallies, and yet he came not forth against them. Hauing a message sent him by the Generall, that he was readie there to exchange certaine bullets with him: the Marquis returned him an answer, that hee was not readie for him, neither had he any such commission from the king his master.

Carack of Portugal taken by Sir Francis
Drake.

The Generall seeing no more good to be done vpon the coast of Spaine, hee bent his course towards the Ilands of the Azores, where (by good fortune) beeing within thirty leagues of Saint Michels, he met with a Caracke of Portugall, called S. Philip, the which they tooke, hauing made little resistance, sending the people home into their country, in other vessels well furnished with victuals. And this was the first Carake that euer was taken comming from the East Indies. The riches of this prize was held exceeding great, E whereupon they resolved to returne into England, the which they did with their whole Fleete, and their admirable rich prize.

S. Diego canonized.

The religious desire which the Catholike King had long had, to haue Friar Diego Seni- liano of the castle of Saint Nicholas, to be canonized a Saint, being dead in Spaine some hundred and foue and twenty yeares before, with an opinion of holinesse throughout all Spaine, did this yeare take effect: for that since the yeare 1563. instance beeing made by him, and the Spaniards, to Pope Pius the fourth, to Pius the fifth, and then to Gregory the 13. all which dyed before this busines could be ended. But continuing in this zealous disposition, he commanded the Earle of Oliuares, his Ambassadour resident at Rome, to mooue it againe to Pope Sixtus the fifth, so as on the third of Iuly this yeare, hee was F canonized a Saint, at the charges of the King of Spaine, and his feast day appoynted the twelfth day of Nouember, to the great content of all Spaine. This yeare the Catholike King sent the Duke of Saboneta out of Italy into Poland, to pacifie the tumults and confusions of that Realme, which were growne by the election of two kings, the Pope hauing also sent Cardinall Aldobrandini thither to that end.

The

A The King of Spaine after the conquest of Portugal, hauing gathered together a great Nauy of ships, and leauied a mighty army, euery man thought, hee would make some great enterprise according to the opportunity that was offered; but mens opinions were diuided touching the action, for that their humors and dispositions beeing di-uers, they propounded things according to the quallitie of their owne passions. And so it fell out in the ordinarie discourses which were made touching the Catholike Kings enterprise, which they all restrained to three, against Afrike, England, or the vnited Estates of the Netherlands: but to resolute which was most expedient for his Ma-iesty, they all disagreed, some seeking to perswade him to attempt the Netherlands, others Afrike, but most England.

In the end a truce beeing concluded betwixt the King of Spaine and the Turke, and thereby the enterprise of Afrike cut off; the question was now whether hee should inuade England or the Netherlands. Wherevpon there was one which deliuered his reasons, by way of discourse to the Catholike King, shewing that it was more conueni-ent for him to make warre against England, then against the vnited Estates. It seemes hee was vassall to the King of Spaine, as you may iudge by the vanity of his discou-se. Many (said he) considering at the first sight, the Catholike Kings interest to the Netherlands and to England, affirme, that although hee haue great pretensions to this Island, yet he is more bound to recover the Netherlands, then to conquer England; for that C in all policy of state, wee should rather seeke to preferue that which wee hold, then to conquer new. Although this maxime of state be of great force, yet (said he) I doe not hold it to bee of such import, as it shall sway downe the ballance, without all contradiction.

For in these graue consultations, we must not onely consider what is to bee done, but how it may be most profitable, most easly, and most conueniently done: For that many times Princes are incited to enterprises by honour and duty; and yet the consideration of many circumstances and discommodities restraine them: wherefore the consideration (which binds vs more to preferue that which wee hold, then to get new) is not sufficient to conclude, that his Catholike Maiesty should rather vndertake the enterprise D of the Netherlands, then that of England, neither should wee in effects of so great importance, giue credit to such light reasons. But to the end it may appeere plainly that the King of Spaine is bound in all respects to the enterprise of England, I will first of all (said he) lay not onely a true, but a necessary foundation, which shall support the whole building of my opinion; which is, that conquering England, hee shal at the same instant conquer the Netherlands: but winning the Netherlands, England is not gotten, nay their hopes are no whit increased.

Moreouer, hee said, that the conquest of England was not so difficult as that of the Netherlands. If then (said he) the conquest of England drawes with it the Netherlands, and if bee more easie and more certaine; who doubts, that to peruert this order, were E to loofe a goodly occasion, and to bee the workman of his owne disgrace? but I will prooue (said he) with pertinent reasons either member of my ground. That the conquest of England is more profitable then that of the Netherlands; and that it is more easie. For my prooue of the first ground, I will produce three heads. The first that the Low countries haue not so long maintained warre, but with the helpe of England, without the which they could not stand, no more then mans bodie can liue without nourishment: That fire is more easly quenched by taking away that which feeds it then by casting on water, for that not hauing wherewith to feed it, it consumes it selfe:
but seeking to vanquish it by the contrary; it may bee it will grow more violent. So the Florentines could not quench the rebellion of the Pisans, before they had taken away the matter which nourished that fire which came from strangers, and therefore F it was all one action to take away their succors which came from confederats Princes, and to winne the city, which otherwise all their forces and of their confederats would not haue beene able to effect.

For my second head (said he) I set downe, that England doth not onely maintaine the rebellion of the Netherlands by sending succors, but also by her countenance: for where as

as the Netherlanders see the forces of Spaine conuerted against them, they flie vnto A England as to a Sanctuary, knowing that the English would alwaies take armes against any that should inuade them. Wherein they imitate the Athenians, who thought themselves safe as long as the Olynthians stood, who being subdued, they knew not how they should keepe Philip out of their country. Euen so if England should fall into the Spaniards hands, the Netherlanders should loofe the ground of their rashnesse, being defitute of that support which hath maintained them in their insolencies.

My third reason (said he) is, that the burthen of so long a warre, hath so wasted the spirits and faculties of the Netherlanders, as they scarce haue any pulse remayning; they hauing not onely beene cruell butchers of their owne liues, but Tyrants ouer their goods, taxing themselves at about forty in the hundred; besides hauing lost so many B yeeres profit, their land being vttilled, and their trade of Marchandise sayling which doe much import them; hauing also endured so many spoiles, inuasions, burnings, routs of armies, and ruines of townes, with other great losses: So as they cannot possibly maintaine this rebellion wanting life and spirit, which England gaue it. Whereby it ap-peeres that the conquest of the Low countries followes that of England, as the shadow doth the body. But on the other side we must not thinke the Netherlands being won England would be so easily vanquished: the which being a rich and a mighty Kingdome, seekes no support from any other, but relies vpon her owne forces; the which they would oppose against their forraigne enemies, if the Netherlands should fall absolutely C into the Spaniards hands, standing as they doe now, wherefore England in her defence depends onely of her owne power, and if it should expect any forraigne succours, they would not flie vnto those rebellious States, which are needy, and depend vpon others.

Hetherto (said he) we haue shewed the difference of these enterprises, and how much more profittable that of England would be. Now I must prouue the second head of my ground; that the conquest of that Island is more easie then that of the Netherlands, and therefore ought to be preferred, whether wee doe consider the profit, the oportunity, the possibility, the honour, and safety, or any other important consideration whatsoeuer.
But discoursing now of the easinesse of this conquest, in regard of that of the Ne- D therlands, I will proue (said he) that the difficulties be the same to inuade England and the Netherlands. First of all I presuppose that a sufficient army beeing leauied, a royal enterprise is sooner brought to perfection, when as they are attempted both by sea and land, the which King Philip may do with greater aduantage in the enterprise of England then in that of the Netherlands: for as the voiage by sea is shorter and more easie, so he may more commodiously inuade England by land, hauing meanes to land part of his army safely in Scotland, as we will hereafter shew: whereas if he should send an army by land into the Low countries, the way would be long to passe from Spaine through Italy and Germany, and it would be exceeding chargeable and dangerous. The second reason is, that it is more commodious, neerer and more safe to passe into England; for that from the straight of Gibraltar thither, is all open sea, without any let; but to go into the Low countries, hee must of necessity passe by England, the which by all reason of state should let the King of Spaine vnderstand in his passage, that neither friends nor foes are welcome, when they come with a great power, wherefore there is no doubt that whoe-euer wil inuade the Netherlands hee must breake this barre, or make plaine this moun-taine of England, which crosseth him in his passage.

My third reason (said he) is grounded vpon a firme maxime of the Art of warre; that thou must neuer seeke to inuade any place, and leaue any thing behind to disturbe thee, wherefore it were a rash enterprife to attempt the Low countries, and leaue England behind, who beeing full of ialousie, may sodainely set vpon the Catholike Kings army in the hottest of their warre against the Netherlanders.

The fourth, that going to conquer the Low countries, they must fight with braue old souldiers bred vp in the warre; but on the other side the English are without Art or practise of warre, they cannot vse the harguebuse, nor any other offenciuie armes, but onely bowes and arrowes, the which are of no force against corselets and head-peeces, as wee vse:

See here his error and ignorance.

A vse: so as (said he) there is the like comparifon to bee made betwixt the English and the Dutch souldiers as is betwixt idlenesse and exercise; or an armed and disarmed man.
And what an aduantage it is to fight with vnskillful souldiers, it is apparent by the example of Miltiades in the fields of Marathon, who with lesse then 10000. braue men, put to flight that mighty, but vnwarlike, army of Xerxes, being about 600000. men.

The fifth, that there is more difficulty in that of the Netherlands, for that they will keepe themselves more close, so as they must bee wonne by inches, and a whole army must be employed in the sege of a towne and so of the rest, the which happily wilbe of no great importance, but that they wil stay in course of his victory that seekes the winne
B them. But contrarywise England hath not any towne to stay: the violence a victorious enemy, hauing once set footing into the Island, the which wilbe no difficult thing for the King of Spaine to effect. So as England being without any forts but vpon the frontiers, and the Low countries full of forts both within and without, there is no doubt but the en-terprife of that is more easie then this, as it is more easie to vanquish them that make no resistance. Whereof the Low countries are a familiar example, where notwithstanding that the King had great garrisons, yet they many times found so great crosses, as they were often vanquished by the opposition of those forts, whereas there being no place in Portugal able to resist the enemies forces, the Spaniards entred into the heart of the realme, they being not able to make resistance.

The sixth reason is that forts and townes of strength are to an inuading army but incombers after they be wonne, for that the greatest part of the army, is drawne away into garrisons, whereby it is much weakened.

The seventh reason (said hee) seemeth sufficient in this case to proue the truth of my opinion. If the King of Spaine sends an army to purge the rebellious humors of the Netherlanders, it is to bee feared that this Phisicke will rather stirre vp the good humors then euacuate the bad, breeding a disease full of corrupt matter: whereas now the good matter hauing the predominant power, wee may hope that in time it will vanquish the violence of the disease: whereas by this course the humors of Malcontents may bee corrupted, and they drawne to desire innouations: we know that by the composition made D betwixt the King and his subiects, the Malcontents, they haue taken vpon them the burthen of this warre, so as the Spaniards and other strange souldiers might bee drawne out of the Low countries: If then an army should bee sent out of Spaine to subdue the Netherlanders, or they should but heare it were so resolved: they would easily vnderstand that the victors would prescribe a Law to the vanquished: and the Malcontents would not only loose that great desire they had to beare that great burthen of the warre, and the reward which they expected from his Maiesty, but they would feare to loose their preuiledges and liberties, in regard whereof they haue made cruell warre against themselves. By this then and many other reasons it appeeres, how dangerous it is to exaf-perate the mindes of friend with so sharpe a medicine. If the Malcontents should ioyne E themselves with the aduerse partie, and oppose against the Spaniards, that warre would proue more difficult then euer for the Catholike King, not only for that the Kings forces should be diminished, but also for that the enemy should be fortified: So as we haue hetherto proued that it is more easie and more commodious to inuade England then the Netherlands.

Now we will shew (said hee) not by way of comparifon, but in respect of it selfe, how much it doth import the Catholike King, and how easie it is for him to inuade England.
It is not to bee doubted but the Phisicke is best, which not onely cures the member that is greued, but also takes away the cause of the disease. If then the Catholike King seeke to conquer the Low countries, hee may well close vp the wound of their rebellion, but F he shall neuer euacuate the corrupt humors, which haue fed the disease, seeing that England hath alwaies nourished the rebellions of the Low countries: And admit it were cured of this present indisposition, what health can it bee called, when as the body is still subiect to these peccant humors: wherefore England is first to be attempted, that afterwards wee may with safety digest or euacuate all concurrent humors. But to intreat more plainly of the facility of this enterprife: I denie not but that England is a mighty Kingdome,

Kingdome, and the greatest Island that the ancients haue made mention of, conteyning A in circuit with Scotland two thousand miles, yet late writers haue made it two hundred lesse: That it is well fortified with a wall which the sea makes about it, whereby it is so defended, as if Scotland were vnder that iurisdiction, it were not to bee inuaded by land; Norwithstanding the glory which that nation hath gotten by armes, is rather to be attributed to the ancient, and not to them that are now, for as it often happens that the minde being great with the imagination of great matters, doth still retain the same imaginings although that matters change; euen so it happens here, that we doe measure the forces of England; not by the present Estate, but as they haue beene when as they had in their possession Normandy, Brittan, Gascony, and other flourishing Pro- B uinces of France, yea they commanded in a manner absolutely ouer all France, and Henry the sixth, was crowned King in Paris. But hee that will looke into the present Estate of England, may easily iudge that it is great, rather by the reputation of her ancient fame, then by the quality of her present forces, and that it is no more that England, which was fearefull to the greatest Princes of Europe.

And without doubt it hath beene obserued that not long since there haue so many disgraces fallne vpon that Island, as at one instant it not onely purchased the hatred of men, but of God, euer since it fell into Schisme. So as since the change of their religion, England hath suffred great shipwrackes, whereof wee may see the effects, hauing lost that support whereon depended their reputation and safety, that is the Authority and com- C mand, which they had at sea, for that in former times this Island did maintaine many ships, and did continually entertaine a good fleet at sea; yea sometimes their preparations were admirable, as amongst others when as Henry the sixth, went almost with eight hundred great ships against Charles the sixth, the French King, making a bridge ouer the Ocean: but the state and condition of that Island is changed, for since Henry the seuenth and Henry the eight, they could not maintaine those hundred Ordinary ships, which they were wont to keepe in a readinesse for the safety of that state, but the Island is growne to that extremity, as they haue beene constrained not onely to diminish, but also to sel the greatest part of those ships which did secure them from forraigne inuasions, so much doth want presse those Princes, more their owne safeties.

But the better to explaine that which I haue spoken of the easinesse of the enterprise,
I wil (said hee) propound two things, the one of him that is inuaded, the other of him that doth inuade; whereby it shall appeere that the one is as vnable to defend, as the other is powerful to offend. If wee consider England which is to bee inuaded, without doubt it is not able to resist the King of Spaines forces, if hee will inuade it with such prouisions as he may, and the importance of the action doth require, the which will appeere by diuers reasons.

The first, for that, as I haue said, the Island of England is at this day in great want; and if in this weakenesse, thee should seeke to make head against the power of a mighty Potentate, it were as much as if the should seeke to support Heauen, beeing nei- E Alcides nor Atlas.

Secondly, in respect of this necessity (he said) that the crowne of England could not entertaine that number of shipping which was wont to be appointed for the gard of the realme; and if they should seeke to make any prouision, it were to draw force from realme; and if they should seeke to make any prouision, it were to draw force from weakenesse, or to prescribe a Law to time and nature; seeking in great want and in a short time, to make those prouisions which require a great treasure and many yeeres: Moreouer to beginne to make preparation of those things which King Philip hath in a readinesse, were to put themselves in defence, when as the enemy held his sword ouer their heads. It were vaine for any one to say that the English in daunger may use priuat mens shippes for the publike seruice: this remedie would come to late F when the daunger is at hand, neither could those ships bee easily called together from remote places, neither doe priuate men willingly employ their commodities to pub-like vse. Wherefore it is necessary that the designs of Princes in great enterprises, flow from the fountaine of their owne power.

Thirdly, for that the English doe altogether want, or are very defectiue of horsemen which

Ignorance and malice of the writer.

Weaknesse
of England compared with the power of Spaine.

Vwant of ships in England.

which is a chiefe ground of warre, for speaking of men at armes they haue scarce any knowledge of them, and as for light-horses, they doe not much import, vnlesse the number supply the defect of the quality. Besides all the horses of that Island being continually put to pasture, are full of diseases and weake, which proceeds partly from the temper of that aire.

Fourthly, that the Kings of England haue either through negligence or disability omitted to make prouisions for the war, like vnto al other Princes, that they may be readie against any sodaine tumult that may rise either within or without their states; for that in former times their whole care was for prouision by sea, so as the land-seruice was neglected, as if in an Island there were not any need to goe to field against strangers, or that warre could not bee managed at land with sea prouisions.

Fifthly, it is most certaine that the English are by nature desirous of innovations and change, for who so shall read ouer their History, hee shall finde that seditions, conspiracies, treasons and such like, haue made their dwelling in their land. Behold the lying vanity of
the Spaniards.

Sixthly, for that the English, in respect of their ancient greatnesse, are more desirous to annoy others then to be annoyed themselves when they shall see themselves charged by braue enemies, they will be daunted. To see Fortune turne her face is a fearefull spectacle for them that are not accustomed thereto.

Seuenthly, for that England beginning to decline by the iust iudgement of God, e-uery man knowes how easie it is to cast it downe, a declining being nothing else but a way to ruine. So that mighty Empire of the Romaines, when it began once to decline, it fell sodainly, and drew with it a great ruine.

Eightly, for that the English nation haue not in a manner any Commanders to manage their warre, which defect beeing ioyned with the insufficiency of the souldiars of that realme, it will prooue that the army of Lyons, commanded by a Hart, wil be little esteemed: one of the Harts led by a Cony wil be ridiculous, the which will happily fall out in England.

Lastly, admit that England were furnished with armes, captaines, souldiars, victuals, ships and all other things necessary for the warre; yet (said hee) all was of no moment, wanting money, which giues forme and essence to all enterprizes, for that the crowne of England, not onely by the small reuenues, but also by the superfluity of their ordinary expences, is growne into that want, as they are not able to vndergoe any royall enterprise, hauing scarce meanes to entertaine themselves, for he that doth arrogate to much to his owne force, and ouer-chargeth himselfe with warre, is the instrument of his owne ruine. Hauing hether to shewed that it is easie for the Catholike King to inuade England, in regard of it; I will proue the facility thereof with greater reasons in regard of the Catholike Kings forces.

The first is the great power of the King of Spaine, whose dominions doe imbrace the whole diameter of the globe, and is Lord of more land then any Monake or state in the world did euer hold. A Prince, rich in armes, souldiars, captaines shipping, victuals, and all other necessary prouisions for warre. A Prince who as Iudge and moderator, seemes to gouerne the reines of the Empire of the sea and land.

The second is, for the great navy which hee hath ready, which is not onely that which of late yeeres made the enterprise of Portugall, but 150. more which hee hath gotten in that Kingdome, which, ioyned with the rest, will breed admiration in all men, and seeme to fill the sea with their multitudes.

The third, that besides these ships, and those which hee may haue in Biscay, as faithfull to the crowne, as expert in navigation, besides the ships of priuat men, which his Maiesty hath in a readinesse; he shall receiue no small seruice from his gallies, who in the action of Portugall discovered our error in thinking that they were not of any vse in the Ocean sea at any time, as if that sea were not calme in Sommer, and that it were neuer to be failed in; so as there is no doubt but our gallies may safely aduenture in those seas the three monthes in Sommer. They that obiekt Casars wrack in the Brittain seas, doe not remember that he himselfe doth not impute it to the sea, but to the Moone, which not only in the Ocean, but in all other seas doth shew her power, as the Meteoroligikes
and

and experience doe teach. The fourth, that the Catholike King being Lord at sea by A reason of his great fleet, he will at the same instant bee Lord at land: For hauing sufficient forces to vanquish the defences of the Island, he shal with ease land his men, and ouer-run the Island with his victorious armes, for such is the condition of that Island, that as soone as an enemy is entred, and his army orderly lodged, hee may cut off their victuals, and famish the Islanders.

Fifthly, for that by sea King Philip shall haue the fauor of them of Ireland, who haue securely shewed themselves to adhere vnto him, and by land there is no man doubts (said he) but that Scotland will assist him in his designs with all her means.

The sixth in order, but the first to be considered, is the Iustice and honesty of the cause, B
the which carries so honorable a title, as the defence of religion and the Catholike faith, as nothing shalbe able to hinder it; yea his Maiesties pretensions (said he) are such that realme, and such is the duty which hee owes vnto the name which he carries, of Catho-like, as there is no enterprize more due to him then this; whereby he shal not only take possession of a realme which is his due, but also hee shal purchase vnto himselfe immor-tall glory, about all other Kings, adding so rich and famous a Kingdom to that of Spaine.

The seventh is the commodity of the passage, knowing how short a cut it is from the Streight of Gibraltar to the Island, and what great commodities grow by expedition, and the ease of transportation of victuals, soldiers, artillery, munition, and al other proui-sion necessary for the enterprize.

The eight, if King Philip makes warre against his enemy at his owne doores, he shal fill C England with feare and amazement, and the approaching danger will trouble all their counseils. There is nothing more terrible then to see the sword that must be the murthe-rer of them and theirs.

The ninth, for that (said he) his Catholike Maiesty had many partisans in that Island; it importing much to haue some that fauor him among his enemies. And to proue that he hath some at his deuotion in that Island, I wil produce three reasons. First the remembrance of his clemency which remains yet in the hearts of those people, and of his curtesie, hauing sometimes gouerned them as their lawful Prince, with so great satisfaction to them al in general, as any other gouernment, in respect of his, should seeme tyrannous. D
The second reason is that of religion, knowing that there are many in this Island which adhere to the Church of Rome. The third is the riches of King Philip, who in his large dominions hath so many commanderies, pensions, offices and rents, to aduance men that shal deserue wel, as it wilbe ease for him to draw the hearts of the English vnto him.

Hauing thus shewed the reasons why the Catholike King should rather inuade England then the Low countries, and with what facility it is to be performed, I will (said he)
to the end that nothing shal remaine vsatisfied, make answer to an ordinary obiection which is made by many vpon this subiect, which is, that the king of Spaine making an attempt against England, he shal reuiue the emulation which hath bene betwixt him and the house of France, which fire lying now smothered vnder the ashes of peace, may kindle a great warre, for if the French should remaine as spectators of this tragedy of England, it might in the end turne to the preiudice of France, whereby they conclude that the Christian King should be forced to ioyne with England, least that hauing conquered that Island, he should afterwards turne his forces vpon France, which obiection notwithstanding he left vsatisfied.

During this great preparation of three yeeres in Spaine, which held all Europe in suspence, the King of Spaine caused an ouerture of a peace to be made vnto the Queene of England (onely as it seemed to abuse her with the imagination of a treaty, and to make her neglect the defence of her realme) who embraced this proposition, and sought to draw the vnited Prouinces into this treaty, which they absolutely refused. Notwithstanding the Queene desirous of a peace sent her Commissioners in February 1588. F to Ostend; and in March following there came others to Bruges from the Duke of Parma, to treat with them in the King of Spaines name; who these Commissioners were, and what the successe of that treaty was, I leaue to the Netherland History, be-eing but a fained shew of the Spaniard, to winne time, and to find England vnprovided
when

A the Queene of England (seeing the Spanish fleet almost at her doore) called home her Commissioners, and prepared for her defence.

But now to come to this admirable fleet; the King of Spaine had deuised how hee might conquer England, hoping by that means to recover his Inheritance in the Low Countries; for being Lord in England, hee might cut off their trafficke by sea, the which many (well acquainted with the situation of both countries) held easie to be done. Wherefore the King of Spaine (hauing spent one and twenty yeeres, and wasted an infinite treasure, in those Lowe Country warres,) resolved to make an other attempt vpon the Netherlands by sea, but with greater forces, for that England was now his enemy, and might hinder all trade into those parts. So as hee resolved first to inuade England, wherevnto he was perwaded by diuerse subtil spirits, both Spanish and Dutche, and by some English rebels, holding it more easie to be conquered then Holland and Zeland, and that it would be more profitable to inuade both England and the Lowe Countries by sea at one instant, then to maintaine a continuall armie to cut off their traffick from both the Indies. For the effecting of this resolution, hee had for some yeeres together made preparation of a great Nauie at Lisbon, the like whereof had not beene seene in many ages in the Ocean sea. It was ready in the beginning of this yeare 1588. the fame of this action was such, as there was not an honorable house in Spaine, but had a sonne, a brother, or some of the blood in it, thinking all to winne euermore honor with this inuincible Armie (as they called it) and to make themselves rich with the spoiles of England and the Netherlands.

The King had resolved to make Don Aluaro de Bassan Marquis of Saint Cruz, (a Nobleman of great note, who had done the King great seruice in the conquest of Portugall, and the Tercera's) Generall of this armie. Hee sent vnto him, and acquainted him with his designe; hee put him in minde of his promise, that hee would spend his life in his seruice, and hee commanded him to prepare himselfe to conduct this fleet.
The Marquis in his answer humbly thanked his Maiesty, yet hee seemed by circumstances to disswade the King from this enterprize, telling him that the English were gallant men at sea (of whom they had made good tryall) that they had good shipping, and that he should finde strong opposition. The King was much discontented with the Marquis for this answer, hauing euer relyed vpon him, and sent him word, that seeing hee failed his expectation, and had no courage to vndertake this Action, he would finde an other to command his Army, wherevpon he made the Duke of Medina Sidonia his Generall. The Marquis finding himselfe in disgrace with the King, conceived such greefe as he died before the fleet went to sea. But let vs returne vnto the Armie, whereof I will make a particular relation, as the Spaniards themselves haue set it downe.

Portugall did furnish ten great Gallions, with two smaler ships, vnder the command of the Duke of Medina Sidonia the Generall, in the which were 1300. saylers 3300. soldiers and 350. peeces of Ordinance.

E Biscay set forth ten Gallions and foure Pinasles, with saylers, soldiers, and ordinance proportionably, vnder D. Iohn Martines de Ricaldo, the Admirall.

Gnipuscoa did arme ten Galeons and fourteene Pinasles, vnder Michel Oquendo.
Andalouzia set forth ten Gallions, & one Pinasse, vnder comand of D. Pedro de Baldes.
Italie had furnished ten Gallions, the which were commanded by Marsin de Bretendona.
Castille provided fourteene Gallions, and two Pinasles, ouer which Squadron Diego Floris de Baldes had charge.

There were also three and twenty Hulks conducted by D. Iohn Lopes de Medina.
From Naples there were foure Galeasles sent, commanded by D. Hugo de Moncada, they had in them 1200. slaues to row, 480. saylers, 870. soldiers, and 200. peeces of Ordinance.

F Portugall sent foure gallies, vnder the conduct of Diego de Mentrana, with all things proportionably.

There were 22. Pinasles and other smal ships, vnder the gouernment of Antonio Buccado de Mendoza.

Besides all these there were 20. Carauells, which carried owers and other necessities for the ships, so as there were 150. sayle of all sorts, in the which they had about 8000.

Y y y y.

saylers

King Philip resolves to inuade England, and the Netherlands.

Description of particular preparation of the Spanish Fleet.

An. 1588.

there to attend the Duke of Parma, whether the next day the English fleet came and anchored close by them, who that night sending downe ships before the winde, being full of wood, powder, wild-fire and other combustible things, and beginning to burne, they made the Spaniards in that amazement, cut their cables, and to put confusedly to sea. In this confusion the great Galleasse of D. Hugo de Moncada, lost her helme, and was driuen vpon Callis sands, where D. Hugo was slaine, and the Galleasse spoiled by the English and lost, where there were three hundred slaues set at liberty.

The morning after their disorder, the Spaniards had put themselves againe into battle: and the English charged them before Graueling, but they desired to passe along with the winde, and to stand vpon their defence onely; this fight continued the whole day, in the which some of the Spanish ships were sunke, and some being spoiled, and not able to follow the fleet, were taken by the States men and carried to Flessingue. I omit the repetition of euery particularity, because you may reade them in the Dutch History. The Duke of Medina seeing that he had done what hee had in charge, thought it best now to retire, holding it better to hazard a dangerous passage by the North of Ireland, then to stay still vpon the coast of Flanders, with apparent danger, hauing no means to ioyne with the Duke of Parma: wherevpon they packt on all their sailes, hauing a greater will to sic then to fight, whom the English followed for a while, but seeing them bend their course Northward, they left them, and retired into England. It seemes that God did miraculously defend the English, for in all their severall fights, they lost not one ship, nor a man of account, and not aboue a hundred common persons.

Thus the Spanish fleet hauing lost ten or twelue of their best ships, with foure or fife thousand men, besides those that were sicke and wounded, whose number was great, distressed with wants, and despayring of all helpe from the Duke of Parma (who prepared for their returne) they sought to get into Spaine behind Scotland and Ireland, expecting final releefe in Scotland, and that Norway could not supply their wants, they tooke all the fishermen they could meet withall to serue them for Pilots, and fearing the want of fresh water, they cast their horses ouer-board, and so they sailed Northwards, till they came to 62. degrees. Then the Duke of Medina commanded the whole fleet to bend their course for Spaine or Portugal, and himselfe with about 25. saile, that were best provided of fresh water, kept out at sea, and so got into Spaine. Don Martin de Ricalde the Admiral with some forty ships, sailed neerer Ireland, hoping to refresh themselves there, but a great storme arising about the second of September, they were disperst, and many of them were driuen vpon that coast, and there cast away; some sunke, some broken, some runne on sands, and some burnt by the Spaniards themselves, to the number of seuentene great ships: some write, they lost vpon fixe and thirty or eight and thirty ships, in which I take it they comprehend some that were lost vpon the coast of Norway and that sunke at sea. Yet it was constantly reported, that of all that great fleet of a hundred thirty foure saile that went out of Lisbon, there returned but fifty three ships great and smal. Of them perished in Ireland there were specially named a Galleasse two great Venetian ships, called La Ratta and Balanxara and the Galleon called our Lady of Rosa, of a thousand tunne, in the which D. Michel d' Oquendo, General of the Squadron of Guisacoa, was, in which ship there perished (by the confession of the Pilot) fife hundred men, and not any one was saued but himselfe, among others (besides the General Oquendo) there died as he said the Prince of Alcoly (held to bee the King of Spaines base son) Masut a Commander of the souldiers, Villafranca capitaine of the said ship, with many Knights and Adventurers of account: Moreouer hee confest that there was in that ship 50. canons all brasse for the field, 25. peeces of brasse and iron belonging to the ship, 50. tunns of sack, 15000. ducats in gold, with much plate and rich furniture.

After the Duke of Medina's returne with the remainder of his fleet into Spaine, many died of sicknesse, or of the wounds which they had receiued. Many taxed the Duke for this vnfortunate successe, but he (like a iudicious Prince, who had vnwillingly vnderaken that charge) laied the blame vpon his Pilots, and the Duke of Parma, who was not ready to ioyne with him, so as the King allowed of his reasons, and gaue him leaue to goe home, and rest himselfe. There died many Commanders and men of account after their returne

Ships cast away vpon the coast of Ireland.

Others write that he remained in Flanders after his loss at Callis.

A returne, as D. John Martinez de Ricalde, D. Diego Floris de Baldes, D. Alonso de Lietua, D. Diego de Maldonado, D. Francisco de Bouadillo, & D. George Manriquez, al of the counsell of warre. And many were taken prisoners, some in Ireland, as D. Alonso de Lufon, a Collonel, two of the house of Cordoua, and D. Roderigo de Lasso, and some in Zeland, as D. Diego de Pimentel a Collonel. Finally the losse was such, as there was not any great house in Spaine; but had some particular cause to mourne for some one of their blood. The Duke of Parma was much blamed by the Spaniards that were in the Low countries, but he excused himselfe, for that (as he said) the Spanish fleet came to soone, and to free himselfe, he caused some to be hanged, which had not discharged their duties. After the

B ruine of this great Spanish fleet, there fel a great iarre betwixt the Lord of Champaign and Mounseur Richardot, who was much fauored by the Duke of Parma, these two hauing run contrary courses in their treaty of peace in Flanders, with the Queene of England's Commissioners. So as after this bad successe, Champaign taxed the Duke of Parma of negligence, writing many letters of the like tenor into Spaine, whereof the Infanta Isabella the Kings eldest daughter, affecting the Duke well, did still aduertise him, who seeing his reputation and seruice thus called in question, sent Richardot, President of Arthois, into Spaine to the King to make answer to all objections and slanders, wherewith they had incensed him, seeking to bring him in disgrace, and to get his gouernment from him, accusing him that hee had not done his duty concerning the Spanish fleet, and that hee had receiued a great affront before Berghen vp Zoome, for that hee would not beleue the counsell of such as would haue dissuaded him from that enterprife; but Richardot gaue good satisfaction to the King and his Councell, and returned with a Commission for the continuance of his gouernment, in despite of his enemies.

C The King of Spaine beeing aduertised of the vnfortunate successe of his fleet and army, which he had sent to inuade England, after the returne of such as were remayning of that miserable wracke, hee beganne to examine euery mans merits; and who had deserued reward, and who punishment in this action, to preserue vnto himselfe, with the feare of some, and the loue of others, the authority of a wise Prince: wherevpon hee rewarded the heires of Don Alphonso de Lietua, who (as they said) was drowned with a thousand persons vpon the coast of Ireland.

He did punish seuerely Fernando Lopes, who was campe Master generall; and Antonio de Gueuara, Pouruoier generall, was deprived of his Office, for his misdemeanors.

In the meane time they had newes in Spaine of a great army preparing in England to send into Portugal, for the restoring of Don Antonio, wherevpon the King made prouision for the defence thereof, sending the Earle of Fuentes for Generall into Portugal, with good troupes, hee augmented the number of their horse, giuing the charge to D. Alphonso Vargas, he made D. Francis de Padiglia Camp-master General, Andreas d' Alua Pouruoier, and John Maldonado Auditor.

E The prouisions for this enterprife beeing made, they went from Plimouth in Aprill: Sir John Norris and Sir Francis Drake being Generalls; they had with them fixe of the Queenes, twenty ships of warre, and (as some write) a hundred and forty for transportation, hauing when they tooke shipping a eleuen thousand souldiers, and two thousand fife hundred mariners: within fixe daies after their departure from England being the twentieth day of Aprill, the army landed in a bay within a mile off the Groine, without impeach, from whence they marched presently towards the towne, approaching within halfe a mile they were incountred by the enemy, who beeing charged retired to their gates, and then the Generall lodged the army in the villages and houses thereabouts. F Generall Norris hauing viewed the towne before daie, resolved for to attempt it by scaladoc, and to land some Artillerie to beate the shippes and gallies which did play vpon their troupes, the which was effectually performed, so as the Gallies were forced presently to abandon the roade, and goe to Farrol, and then they prepared with all speed to surprize the base towne, the which was done the next day after, they entering it in three severall places, where after good resistance

YYYY 3

An. 1589.

Richardot sent into Spaine by the Duke of Parma.

Trouison for defence of Portugal.

Voyage of Portugal.

Groine the base towne surprized.

resistance in one place, they were forced to abandon it, they all retyring into the high A towne, the which they might easily doe for that the English knew not their passages. The rest that were not put to the sword, in the fury, fled to the rockes in the Island, where they did hide themselves in caues, whereas many were daily found out.

D. John de Luna, a man of great command, hauing hidden himselfe in a house came forth the next morning and yeelded himselfe. John de Vera a Commissary of the victuals was also taken that night, who confessed that at the entry of the English into the towne, there were siue hundred Spaniards in seuen companies, (as it seemed) returned weake from the voyage of England, all vnder D. John de Luna: the captaines names were D. Diego Bagan base sonne to the Marquis of Santa Cruz. D. Antonio de Herera; B D. Pedro Manriques brother to the Earle of Paredes. D. Ieronimo Mouray, of the Order of Saint John, hee was in the fort, D. Gomes de Caruajal; capitaine Monson and Cauca-de Secas. And that the day that the English landed there came from Retenzas the companies of D. John de Mosale, and of D. Pedro Ponce de Leon. He confessed more-ouer that there was order giuen for the baking of 300000. of biscuit: that there was two thousand pipes of wine in the towne, and a hundred and fifty in the ships. That there was lately come 300000. ducats from the Marquis of Seralba. That there was a thousand larses of oyle, with great store of beanes, pease, wheat and fish. That there were three thousand kintals of beefe, and not twenty daies before, there entred three C barkes laden with mach and harguebuses: There were some others taken, and there were slaine by the common souldiers about siue hundred. At their first entry into the towne, the souldiers finding three sellars full of wine distempred themselves, so as many beeing drunke were hurt from the high towne, and this disorder was the cause of a great mortality which fell in the English army. There was abundance of victuals, and prouision for shipping and warre; which the Commissary confest to be for a new voyage into England.

After the taking of the base towne, there came some two thousand men out of the country, downe to the very gates, as resolutely as if they would haue entred, but the English that were in gard making head against them, they fled away disordredly, hauing D lost some eightene of their men. The Generall attempted the high towne both by mine and battery, and going to the assault the loose rubish vnder their feete failed them so as they could not stand. They had diuers men hurt in their retreat, and they lost some twenty or thirty vnder the ruines of a tower which fell.

The day after that the English had offered an assault, the General vnderstood, by a prisoner, that the Earle of Andrada had gathered an army together of eight thousand men, at Puente de Burgos, six miles from the towne, which was but the beginning of an army, there being a greater leauy ready to come vnder the conduct of the Earle of Altemira, either to releue the Groyne, or to incampe neere vnto the place where the English should imbarke, and to hinder there shipping for to that end the Marquis of Seralba had E written vnto them both the first night of their landing, as the Commissary had confest, or else to stop their passage into the country, whether they went daily by troupes, and burnt, spoiled, and tooke great booties. The Generall resolved the next day to goe and visit these forces, leading nine Regiments with him: In the foreward were the regiments of Sir Edward Norrys Master of the Ordinance, Sir Roger Williams and Collonel Sydneys: In the battaile that of the Generall, of Collonel Lane, and Collonel Medkerke:
And in the reereward, Sir Henry Norrys, Collonel Hunstleys and Collonel Brets Regiments, leauing the other siue Regiments with Generall Drake for the garde of the Ordinance.

Vpon the sixth day of May in the morning they discovered the enemy within F halfe a mile off their campe; against whom the shot of the foreward skirmished, and forced them to retire vnto their bridge, which was of stone, built vpon Arches, ouer a creeke that came from the sea. At the foote whereof on the other side the enemy lay verie strongly intrenched, who beeing with his shot at the further end of the bridge, Sir Edward Norrys (who ledde the foreward, and marched in the head of the pikes) past the bridge without any stay at all, beeing accompanied by

A by Colonell Sydney, Capitaine Hinder, Captain Fulford and others. The way was euen, but they must passe thorough a storme of small shot; for the bridge was flanked on both sides with their shot, at the farther end there was a barricado, but they that had it in gard, seeing the proud approach of the English, forsooke it, where Sir Edward Norrys entred, and charging the first he encountered, with his pike, ouer-thrusting himselfe hee fell, Sir Edward was fore hurt on the head, at the sword, but was honorably rescued by the Generall his brother, Colonell Sidney, and some other Gentlemen: Capitaine Hinder hauing his cask shot off, had siue wounds in the head and face at the sword. This attempt of difficult-ty, beeing seconded by the Generall, their brauest men which defended that place, being ouerthrown, their whole armie fell presently to rout, and the English had the chase three miles foure fundrie waies. The Generals Standard with the Kings armes was taken, what number of the enemy was slaine, was not certain, but only by coniecture how many, two thousand men, (for of so many consisted the foreward) in such a poursute might kill. And to increase the number, hauing giuen ouer the execution, and returning to their stands, they found many hidden in the vineyards and hedges, whom they slue. And Colonell Medkerke beeing sent with his Regiment three miles farther to a cloyster, which he burnt and spoyled, he found two hundred men there, which he put to the sword. The English lost onely one Capitaine Cooper, and a priuate souldier. The execution beeing past, the Generall sent three parts of the armie three severall waies to spoyle and burne, so as the countrie round about was on fire. They found good store of victuals and munition in the campe, with some plate, rich apparell, and other booties, which they had left behind them.

Thus the English armie returned to the Groine, bringing small comfort to the Spaniards that were within it: and the next day the shipt their Ordinance, and then they set fire vpon euery house in the base towne, and on the Cloister, so as they left not any one standing. And on the eight of May, the English imbarked their armie without losse of one man, which (had they not beaten the Spaniards at Puente de Burgos) they could not possibly haue done, they hauing (as it seemed) an intent to charge the English when they should imbarke: the Commissarie confessing, that the first night of their landing, the Marquis of Seralba did write vnto the Earle of Altemira, the Earle of Andrada, and to Terreis de Sentiiso, to bring all the forces they could rayse, wherewith they might either beseege the English in the base towne, if they tooke it, or lye betwixt them and their imbarking place, and so fight with them vpon an aduantage, they hauing about 25000. souldiers vnder their commands.

The English armie leauing the Groine, on the thirteenth of May, there came vnto the Fleete the Earle of Essex, his brother Master Valter Deneraux, Sir Roger Williams, Colonell generall of the foote, Sir Philip Butler, and Sir Edward Wingfield. The Earle hauing put himselfe into that action, contrarie to the opinion of the world, and with the hazard of his fortune, yet much to his honour. After which, the armie went and laided at Penecha in Portugall, within shot of the castle. The enemy beeing siue companies of Spaniards (vnder the command of the Earle of Fuentes) sallied out of the towne, and came to the water side, as the English landed.

But the Earle of Essex, with his brother, and Sir Roger Williams hauing landed men enough to make two troupes, they left one to go by the waters side, leading the other ouer the sand-hilles: which the enemy discouering, they retired further into the land, that they might haue the better meanes to passe away, yet they did it in such sort, as be-eing charged, they came to the push of the pike, where they slue an English Capitaine:
These Spaniards beeing fledde, the English entred the towne, which was neither fortified nor defended by any man.

F The Generall summoned the Castle that night, which was held by a Portugese, called Antonio d'Aurid, who promised to yeeld it, so as he might bee assured, that Don Antonio was landed, and so he did. Thither came some Friars and poore men to their new king, promising within two dayes good supplies of horse and foote. Hauing staid at Penecha one day, the Generals resolved, that the armie should march by land to Lisbone, vnder the conduct of Generall Norrys, and that Generall Drake should meete him

Sir Edward
Norris hurt.

Spaniards defeated at Pien-cie de Burgos.

English leaue
the Groine.

Spaniards come to releue the Groyne.

him in the river with the Fleete, that there should bee a companie left to guard the Castle, and stue in the shippes.

After which conclusion, hee marched with fourteene Regiments towards Lisbon, commandement being giuen from the Generall, that no man should spoyle the countrey, nor take any thing from a Portuguese, the which was very streightly obserued, so as the souldiers grew to some want of victualles in their march, but vpon complaint made vnto the King, it was better supplied. In fixe dayes march the armie came to Lisbon, without any incounter of the enemy, who was betwixt them and the cittie, but they dislodged as they approached.

English armie comes to Lisbon.

Being come to the suburbs of Lisbon, Sir Roger Williams, and Captaine Anthony Wingfield with some thirtie shorte, scowred the streetes neere vnto the Towne, where they found not any but old folkes and beggers, crying Viva el Rey Don Antonio, and their houses shut vp, the inhabitants hauing carried much of their wealth into the town, and fired some houses by the water side full of Corne, and other prouision, for that the English should not make vse of it. The whole armie being quartred in the suburbs, the souldiers being tyred with their fixe dayes march, and desirous of rest that night, the enemy being aduertised thereof, sallied forth about one of the clocke, and came vpon the English by three seuerall streetes, but especially vpon Collonell Bress quarter, who being (as most of the Companies) at his rest, made all the hast hee could to draw his men into armes, in which charge hee was slaine, with some other Captaines of his Regiment: but there was such resistance made in all quarters, as they were suddenly put to a soule retreat, and chased euen to the Cittie gates, where they lost many of their best Commanders: In this salley the Spaniards lost treble the number of the English, and some of good qualitie.

Cascais entered by the English.

During their march, Generall Drake came with the Fleete to Cascais, where hee entered without any resistance, the Inhabitants being fledde with their goods to the mountaines, but the Generall sent a Portuguese vnto them, to offer them all fauour, if they would acknowledge their king, and supply the wants of his armie: which offer they willingly embraced, sending two chiefe men to signifye their loyaltie to Don Antonio, and their loue to the English. Whereuppon the Generall landed his Companies, but the castle was held still by 65. Spaniards.

The day after the Spaniards salley, Generall Norris called a Councell, to aduise whether it were fite to attend there for the horse and foote, which the King of Portugall had promised, and to send some conuenient troupes to Cascais to fetch their Ordinance and munition, which was with their shippes. The opinions of the Commanders were diuers, some sedde with a vaine hope of Don Antonio, thought it best to stay there, and to send some three thousand men for the Ordinance. Others (despayring of all succours from Portugall) perswaded to march away, and not to stay vpon any vaine hopes. The Generall being loth to haue an imputation layed vpon him for his too great hast, or to loose any more time vpon Don Antonio's promises, told them, that although the expedition of Portugall was not the onely desseigne of their iourney, but an aduventure, the good successe whereof might get them great wealth, and much honour, wherein they had done so much, as whatsoeuer happened, it could not blemish their credits and reputations.

Yet in regard of the Kings last promise, that hee should haue that night three thousand men armed of his Countrey, hee would not dislodge that night. And if they came, that he might send the like number for his munition, and resolute to trie his fortune for the Towne. If they came not, he thought it not fit to diuide his forces, by sending any to Cascais, knowing how boldly they had sallied forth the day before, and that there were more souldiers armed within the towne, then was in their campe. And that before their men could returne from Cascais, they expected more supplies: for the duke of Bragança, and Don Francisco of Toledo were attended with great succours: whereuppon he concluded to march away the next morning, if the promised supplies came not that night: yet all the Portugueses which came vnto their king, would not make a cornet of horse, and two hundred foote.

The

A The Generall attended the effect of the Kings promise vnto the last houre, and hee sought to perswade him to stay eight daies longer, in which time he might haue ingaged himselfe, and receiued an affront, attempting a towne that was well fortified, and great troupes of men in it. So as the next day, seeing no Portugueses appeare to ioyne with them, as was promised, the English Generall gaue order to march away, the Earle of Essex, and Sir Roger Williams making a stand, vntill that the whole armie was drawne into field, and so they marched out of the suburbs: Captaine Anthony Wingfield, and Richard Wingfield, being in the reere of them with some shot: after which the Battalions marched in order that night to Cascais. In their march, that day the Gallies of Lisbon did somewhat annoy them, (their way lying along the river) and followed them vntill they were past Saint Iulians, spending many shot, but doing little or no harme. The horse-men followed them afarre off, and cut off many sicke men, which were not able to hold march, hauing no carriages for them.

English armie retired from Lisbon.

Hauing bene two dayes at Cascais, they were aduertised by a Friar, that the Spaniards came marching strongly towards them, and were at Saint Iulians, wherewith the Earle of Essex, and the Generals were much pleased, desiring nothing more then to fight with them: Whereuppon the English General sent away a messenger with a trumpet that night, who carried a challenge to the Spanish General, wherein he gaue them the lye, for that they reported, that the English had retired disorderly and with feare from Lisbon, challenging him to meete him the next morning with his whole armie, if he durst attend his comming, and there to trie the iustnesse of their quarrell by battell: by whom also the Earle of Essex (preferring the honour of his countrey, before all other respects, sent a challenge to any one of his qualitie, that would meete in the head of their Battalies, single, or with more companie, to trie their fortunes, offering assurance for their returne, and honorable vsage.

challenge sent by the English General to the Spanish.

The English Generall put his armie in a readinesse by three of the clocke in the morning, and marched to the place where they incamped: but they had dislodged in the night in great disorder and feare, as the Generall was the next day informed: so as the troupes followed them to Lisbon, but could not get any answer to his letters, they threatening to hang him, for that he presumed to bring such a messenger: but fearing the like measure to their prisoners, they sent him away without answer.

The armie being come to Cascais, the Castle was summoned, where the Captaine promised to yeeld it vpon sight of the Cannon, and not otherwise. Whereuppon the Generall caused three or foure peeces of batterie to bee brought, where after the first volley, they compounded to depart with their Armes and baggage, he had in the Castle one Cannon, two Culuerins, one Basiliske, and three or foure field-peeces, three-score and fixe souldiers, with good store of victuals and munition, which hee might haue kept longer then the English had any intent to stay: the armie being imbarked and readie to set sayle, the fort was blowne vp.

castle of Cascais yielded to the English.

E Whilest they lay there in the roade, the Fleete, in fixe dayes, fetched in to the number of three-score Hulkes, laden with Spanish commodities, as it seemed, for the Kings prouision, and were going for Lisbon: their chiefe lading was corne, Masts, Cables, Copper and Waxe: among which, some were of great burthen, very well built for sayling, hauing no great lading in them, and therefore it was thought they were brought to supply the Kings decayed Nauie. Into the which the English that were in flie-boates were shipped, and the flie-boates sent home, with an offer of Corne for their hire. And then they sent shippes to fetch their men which they had left at Penecha, where as the enemy entred presently.

F There were nine Gallies sent from Andalusia, to strengthen the river of Lisbon, who in their returne, set vpon some shippes that were becalmed, and farre from the Fleete, but they did no great harme. The Fleet, by reason of the wind, went to the Islands of Bayonne, where they landed two thousand men, being all that were able to fight, and marched to the Towne of Vigo, which being entred by Captaine Anthony Wingfield, hee found the streetes full of Barricadoes, but not any one to defend them: for hee found but one man in the towne, they being fledde away to Bayonne: the

Vigo taken by the English.

the Generall with some others, beeing entred into Vigo, they sent some Captaines out to spoyle, and burne the Countrey, which they did seuen or eight miles in length. In the towne they found not any thing, but wine, all their goods beeing carried away, and in the morning the Colonell generall hauing drawne the Companies out of the towne, he caused euery house to be set on fire, and then they embarked againe, and returned home into England.

King of Spaine
sends forces to the Duke of Sauoy to be-sege Genoua.

The Duke of Sauoy had an intent to beseege Geneua, which he pretended to bee his, in which attempt he craved ayde from the King of Spaine his father-in-law, who sent vnto him out of the Dutchie of Milan, Pyrrho Malaezza with five thousand foot, who went vnto him with all speed: from Naples hee had Alexander Sforza with a good number of horse, and Paul Sforza with foote: and from the countrey of Cremona, William of London with five thousand Germaines, and hee obtrayned the Marquis of Saint Martin from the Duke of Ferrara, to bee Lieutenant generall to the Duke of Sauoy, to whome he was allyed, furnishing him also with money, so as it seemed rather the King of Spains action, then the Duke of Sauoys.

An. 1590.
Pretext of the King of Spaine
to make warre
in France.

The King of Spaine aspiring (as it seemed) to the Crowne of France, whereof he had taken vpon him the name of Protectour, tooke now a new cloake to make warre, which was in the name of his eldest daughter, Donna Isabella Clara Eugenia, whome he had by Elizabeth of Valois his third wife, daughter to Henry the second of France, pretending the Dutchie of Brittanie to bee fallen vnto her by lawfull right and succession, by the death of King Henry the third, her Vncle by the mothers side. Vpon this pretext hee sent certaine troupes thither, seeking to dismember it from the Crowne of France, to the which it was incorporate, by the death of the Ladie Anna of Brittanie, accomplishing the descendants from the sayd Ladie Anne, who was promised to Maximilian Arch-duke of Austria, and afterwards Emperour, but married to Charles the eighth, the French King, who dyed without heires, and then shee was married to Lewis the twelfth, by whome shee had one daughter married to Francis the first, father to Henry the second his successour, who had by Catherine de Medicis foure sonnes, all which dyed without children, and three daughters, Elizabeth third wife to the King of Spaine, Claude married to Charles Duke of Lorraine, and Marguerite wife to Henry the fourth King of France and Nauarre.

All the fore-sayd children beeing descended in the direct feminine line from the Lady Anne of Brittanie, their Grand-mother, so as the sonnes hauing no lawfull heires, the succession of of the sayd Dutchie of Brittanie did belong vnto the Lady Elizabeth of Valois, the eldest of King Henries two daughters, and mother to the sayd Infanta: the which, according to the Lawe, the King her father would maintaine, should represent her deceased mother: for that the sayd Dutchie beeing but a fee of Fraunce, may descend vnto the daughters as well as to the sonnes, as appeareth in the sayd Dutchesse Anne, daughter to Francis the last Duke of Brittanie, who brought it to Charles the eighth, and Lewis the twelfth. The French answered, that Dutchie, which were but fees, and held by homage of the Crowne, beeing once incorporated, can bee no more dismembered, with many more allegations, as you may reade in the French.

The King of Spaine could not forget the affront hee had receiued the last yeare by the English in Portugall, hee sought how to bee reuenged, if not of the whole State in generall, yet of priuate Merchants, whose liuing consisted, and wholly depended vpon Traffike into diuers parts, and hearing that the English Merchants had great trade within the Streights of Gibraltar, to Venice, Constantinople, Alexandria, and other places of commerce, hee resolved to interrupt them, and intercept them if he could by any possible meanes: Wherevpon hee gaue charge vnto certaine Gallies to lye continually in the Streights to attend their passage.

Fight betwixt
the Spanish gal-lies & English ships.

It happened this yeare, that there were tenne good English shippes, and well fraught, coming from diuers parts, mette together at the Streights, and were bending home-ward. These shippes coming neere to the mouth of the Streights, hard vpon the coast of Barbarie they descryed twelue tall Gallies, wonderfully well manned, and gallantly appoynted, beeing commaunded by Andrew Doris for the King

A King of Spaine: who on the foure and twentieth day of Aprill in the morning, bare vp with the shippes, and waied them amaine for the King of Spaine, and the English did the like for the Queene of England: after which, the fight beganne, one of the shippes at her first shot raked away all the men of one side of a Galley, and so pierced it, as it was readie to sinke, but the fight continued very furious, for the space of fixe howers. In the meane time, whilst they were in the hottest of this fight, there came in two Flemings to the Fleete, who seeing of what strength the Gallies were, the one of them stricke her sayles, and was presently taken by the Gallies: the other Flemming was also readie to yeeld, if the trumpetter of that shippe had not threatened to kill the Pilote at the Helme, if he did not speedily put off to the English fleete, and take part with them, by which meanes they were preferred from the Spaniards, whereas the other was taken safely and cowardly. After this long and furious fight the English shippes escaped, for the Gallies were so torne, as they were forced to flie into harbour, for that some of them were readie to sinke, neither durst they come any more forth, notwithstanding that the shippes lay becalmed in the streight.

The Catholike King finding himselfe ouer-burthened, and weakened with the warres which he had at one instant maintayned against his enemies, his treasure beeing exhausted, and hee wanting money to make his necessarie provisions both for Flanders, and France vpon all occurrents, hee commaunded the Duke of Sessa, who was newly come Ambassadour to Rome, to succcede the Earle of Oliuares, who was gone Viceroy into Sicily, to intreate his Holinesse to grant him part of the reuenues of the spirituall liuings in Spaine, leauing vnto the Priests a competent liuing according vnto euery mans qualitie, but this demaund was not allowed of, nor held conuenient in the Court of Rome.

This yeare there was a memorable fight at the Ilands of the Açores betwixt the king of Spaines Armado, and one of the Queene of Englands shippes called the Reuenge. The Lord Thomas Howard, second sonne to the Duke of Norfolk, and now Earle of Suffolke, going forth with fixe of the Queenes shippes, fixe victuallers, and some pinaces to attend the West Indian Fleete in their returne, lying at one of the Ilands of the Açores, they were aduertised of the approach of the Spanish armado, (beeing three and fiftie sayle of men of warre, commaunded by Don Alphonso Bagan, brother to the Marquis of Santa Cruz) the which were presently in sight, many of the English beeing then on shoare, to furnish themselues with ballast, fresh water, and other necessaries, so as their shippes were light for want of ballast, and halfe their men sicke and vnseruiceable for fight.

Fight betwixt
the Reuenge &
the Armado of
Spaine.

The Spanish Fleete beeing couered by an Iland, were come so neere, as they had scarce any time to weigh their anchors, yet some were faine to slippe their Cables, and to set sayle. Sir Richard Greenfield (who was Vice-admirall in the Reuenge) wayed last, staying to recouer her men that were in the Iland, which otherwise had beene lost, and not able to recouer the wind, as the Admirall, and the rest had with some difficultie done, he was perswaded by the Master and some others to cast about, and to trust to the sayling of the shippe: but Sir Richard would by no meanes turne head to the enemy, protesting that he would rather dye, then dishonour himselfe, his Countrey, and her Maiesties ship. But he could not force through them, as he thought, but was boarded of either side by their huge Galleons.

The fight beganne at three of the clocke in the after noone, and continued very furious all that euening. The Spanish shippes were full of souldiers, in the English there were not any but Marriners, and some few voluntarie Gentlemen, with their seruants. They made many assaults, thinking to force her with their multitudes, but they were still repulst. The fight continuing all the day, and some howers in the night, many of her men were slain and hurt, and one of the great Galleons, with the Admirall of the Hulks funke, and a great slaughter made in diuers other Spanish shippes. The Spanish shippes which attempted to board the Reuenge, as they were beaten off, others came in their places, there beeing neuer lesse then two mightie Galleons by her side, so as shee had beene assailed assailed by fifteene feuerall Armados, yet at the breake of day they were more willing to A hearken to a composition then to make any new attempt.

At the breake of day the Reuenge saw none but enemies, nor any hope of reliefe: their powder was spent to the last barrell, their Pikes were broken, forty of their best men slaine, and most of the rest hurt. In the beginning of the fight they had but a hundred sound men, and nintie fixe lay sicke vpon the ballast. And on the other side the Spanish ships were still supplied with soldiers from the other Squadrons, and with all kinde of armes and munition. The Reuenge hauing her masts beaten ouer board, her tackle cut a sunder, and in a manner made euen with the water, there being nothing left above head to make defence. Sir Richard Greenfield, finding himselfe vnable to make any more resistance, hauing endured the assaults of so many feuerall ships, and (as it was thought) B eight hundred shot of great Ordinance, and that he and his ship must needs be taken by the enemies, being in a ring round about her: he commanded the maister Gunner (being a resolute man) to sincke her, to the end the Spaniards might reape no glory of that victory, seeing they could not take her in fifteene houres, with fifty three ships, and about C ten thousand men, perswading the company to yeeld themselves to the mercy of God, and to none else: And as they had like valiant men repulsed so many enemies, so they should not now blemish their honours by prolonging their liues for a few houres. The Gunner was willing with diuerse others, but the Captaine and Maister diswaded him, pretending that the Spaniards would willingly entertaine a composition, and that there were diuerse valiant men (whose wounds were not mortal) which might hereafter do their Prince and country good seruice, assuring him withall, that the Spaniards could neuer D recouer the shippe, hauing fixe foote water in hold, three shot vnder water, and so weakly stoppt, as three must needs sinke with the first working of the sea. But Sir Richard could not bee remooued from his resolution. Wherefore the Maister of the Reuenge was conuayed aboard the Generall Don Alphonso Bassan, who (finding no man willing to enter her, fearing they should be all blowne vp) yeelded their liues should bee saued, the company sent into England, and the better sort to pay reasonable ranfoms, and to be free from the Gallies and imprisonment. Wherevnto hee yeelded the more willingly, as well to auoyde a greater mischiefe, as to recouer Sir Richard Greenfield, whom hee seemed to honor and admire for his great valour.

The Reuenge
yeelded to the Spaniards by composition.

This answer being returned, most of them left Sir Richard Greenfield and the Gunner, who being desperate would haue killed himselfe. Don Alphonso Bassan sent vnto Sir Richard to remooue out of his shippe, being vsfauory like a slaughter house, with bloud and dead bodies. Sir Richard answered, that hee might doe with his body what hee list, for he regarded it not. The Generall vsed him with all humanitie, and tryed all means for his recovery, much commending his valour, and lamenting the danger wherein hee was, being a rare thing to see one shippe make head against so many huge and great Armado's.

Losse of Spaniards at the fight.

There were slaine and drowned in this fight neere a thousand Spaniards, and two speciall Commanders. Don Lewis of Saint Iohn, and Don George de Prunaria of Malaga; The Admirall of the Hulkes and the Assention of Seuille were sunke by the Reuenge, one recouered Saint Michaels, and did sinke there, and a fourth ranne a ground to saue her men. It is said, that Sir Richard dyed the second or third day aboard the Generall, and was much lamented. The rest of the Queenes shippes did not ingage themselves so farre in the fight, the reasons were. They were but fixe shippes in all, whereof two were small: the Reuenge was past recovery: the Island of Flores was on the one side, and fifty three Spanish shippes on the other, full of Soldiers: halfe the English were sick, and not seruiceable; the shippes fowle and wanting ballast, hauing benee fixe moneths at sea, so as if they had all entred the fight, they had all benee lost. Norwithstand- F ing the Lord Thomas would haue entred among their Squadrons, but the rest would not yeeld to it, and the Maister of his shippe offered to leape into the sea, rather then to conuict her Maisties shippes to bee a prey to the enemy, where there was no hope eyther of defence or victory. A shippe of the Queenes wherein Maister Thomas Vauasor (now

A now Knight Marshall commanded) continued two houres in fight, as neere the Reuenge as hee could, but being in danger to bee compassed in by the Spanish Squadrons, hee cleered himselfe with great difficulty.

Some dayes after the fight, the English prisoners being disperced in the Spanish ships, there arose a great storme, so as the whole fleete (Indians and others) were disperced, they being newly come vnto them; of the which there were fourteene saile, and the Reuenge, with two hundred Spaniards in her, cast away vpon the Island of Saint Michael. There were fifteene or sixteene ships of warre more cast away vpon the other Islands; and of a hundred saile and odde, expected that yeare in Spaine from the Indies, B there were about three score and ten lost in feuerall stormes; the Spaniards confest that there were ten thousand men cast away in that tempest.

The Reuenge
cast away with many Spanish
ships.

This yeare happened that miserable and lamentable condition of the Arragonois, especially of them of Saragoça, the chiefe city of the realme. From whom the King of Spaine (whether by lawfull or vnlawfull meanes I will not iudge) tooke, or rather pulled away violently their liberties and ancient priuiledges, after this manner. The King had giuen vnto Don Iohn of Austria, his base brother, one Iohn de Soto, to serue him as a Secreterie, a man by nature tending to great matters, to raise his Lord and Maister to a superlative greatnesse, and by the meanes of Pope Pius the sixt, to aduance him to the realme of Tunes. The which being suspect and displeasing vnto the King (fearing the C diminution of his pretended Monarchie) after that hee had well obserued his desseignes and actions, it was thought fit to call home Soto from 'D. Iohns seruice and to substitute Escouedo in his place. In the beginning this Secretary Escouedo did serue his Lord Don Iohn well, to the Kings good liking: but in time they discouered plainly, that hee trod in the same pathes that Soto had done, entertaining secret correspondencies in the Court of Rome, for his Maisties aduancement by the Popes poursute, who posselt him with an Imagination of the Crowne of England, the which did much displease the King, although it were no preiudice to him. Don Iohn being returned soone after out of Italy into Spaine, to receiue his commission and Instructions for the government of the Netherlands, he parted well satisfied and full of hope of this Conquest of England. Seeing come into the Netherlands, and hauing ratified the pacification of Gant, made by the Generall Estates, the Prince and the particular Estates of Holland, Zeland, and their associates, with the Estates of Brabant, Flanders, Arthois, Henault, &c. by which pacification all strange Souldiers should depart the countrie: so as Don Iohn thought, (and such was his first and most assured desseigne) to make vse of the sayd Soldiers, in their retreat, to execute this exploite of England. But whether the Generall Estates of the Lowe Countries (who had then made an alliance with England) discouered his intent, or not: when as hee could not finde meanes to retire his souldiers by sea, for want of shippes, which they refused him, that desseigne of England turned into smoake. Notwithstanding that the Pope would haue assisted him, as well with money, as with Bulls, E granting him the inuestiture of that Realme, to hold it of the Popes Sea. The which the King of Spaine (without whose priuie this businesse was in the beginning managed) (hauing himselfe a greedy desire to that realme, as did afterwards appeare) could secretly cross.

Arragonois spoiled of their ancient priuileges by the King.

Mistakes of the bad vse of the Arragonois for their interests.

Don Iohn being much grieved in heart at this escape, yet seeming still very obsequious and dutifull to the King, hauing in some sort caused the Spaniards and Italians to retire, but not far off, and keeping the Germane Collonels at his deuotion, and not causing them to retire, hee afterwards seized vpon the Castle of Namur, whereby all his practises were discouered, and many letters were intercepted, written by him and Escouedo his Secretary: Wherevpon hee was declared an enemy to the Lowe Countries. Then hee began to treat secretly, and to make private alliances in France, F with the Duke of Guise, all without the King, of Spaines priuie and knowledge, the which did mooue him much, obseruing these courtes of Don Iohn and his Secretary Escouedo: whereof Antonio de Vargas, Ambassador for the King of Spaine in France, aduertised Antonio Perez, Secretary of State to the sayd King, who presently acquainted his maister therewith. Among other things, that Don Iohn said, that hee had rather seeke

Zzzzz

his

his fortune in France with 6000. foote, and 2000. horse, then to stay any longer in the A gouernment of the Netherlands. On the other side, Don John by his letters which hee did write into Spaine, made strange complaints, full of bitternesse and despaire, yea with threats; if they suffered him to languish any longer in that estate: and his letters were seconded by Escovedo, who wrote to Antonio Perez, whom he held to be a friend to Don John and himselfe; but hee discovered all their secrets vnto the King; as it appeared by letters written from Perez vnto the King, and noted in the margent with the Kings owne hand.

During all this businesse, Escovedo being sent for into Spaine, the King resolues to haue him made away, either by murder or poyson, as well for the great liberty and boldnesse hee vsed in his writing, as for the strange speeches he sometimes vttered, which were very displeasing vnto the King, taking for a coulour a certaine proposition made by him to fortifie and man the rock of Magro, and of some 6000. Ducats employed by him, contrary to the Kings intent. In the end, after that he had conferred with the Marquis of Velez, and duly considered of all Escovedos practises: holding it a dangerous matter to send him back to Don John, the King found it expedient to haue him slaine. So Escovedo returning home to his lodging in the night, he was murdered in the streete by Garcia of Arres, and his confederates, at the induction of Antonio Perez, who had receiued commandement from the King. Hauing bene formerly concluded betwixt the King and Perez, that if the murderers should chance to bee apprehended, that Perez, taking the fact wholly vpon himselfe should flie into Arragon, whereas the King might more easily defend him then in Castile, Escovedo being murdered in this manner, the fact began to be discountred. The widow and her sonnes made their complaints against Perez. The King receiued them into his Councell of State, but hee sent them not before their Ordinary Iudge, himselfe giuing the whole knowledge of the fact to the President of Castile, and commanding him to talke with Escovedos sonnes, and to the Secretary Mathew Vasques, who presented their complaint, to the end they might bee silent. But all the Presidents admonitions were of no force, yea hee made them more violent in their complaints. Perez aduised the King to suffer this fact to come to a triall of lawe, with a moderate & slow porsute, yet not to decree any thing, or else that he would giue him leaue to retire from Court; the which the King tooke in ill part, promising him by the faith of a Knight, neuer to abandon him, and that hee would keepe him in his seruice. But Perez in the meane time saw the storme approaching, whereof hee was the more assured after the death of the Marquis of Velez, who had bene a liuely witnesse vnto him. The King seeing him perplexed, and in distresse for this death, did confirme this promise againe vnto him more strictly. In the meane time they doubled their complaints, the which (in like maner tending to the dishonor, and to charge the Princeesse of Eboly) the complainants framed at large by writing, and presented it to the King, yet for all this hee gaue no sentence: but being prest by Vasques, to whom he had begun to discouer himselfe, as appeared by the answer which hee made him in writing, copyed by Perez, with a postscript of the Kings.

In the end the King commanded his Confessor to reconcile the Princeesse and Perez, with Vasques: wherevnto the Princeesse would not giue eare, finding her selfe wronged, for that she held him vnworthy to conferre with her. The which did wonderfully discontent Perez, not daring to moue her therewith, for that he held himselfe bound vnto her seruice, for the fauours he had receiued from her. And seeing that by their reiterated complaints, notwithstanding the Kings promise in the faith of a Knight, they pursued him with all violence: he besought the King, at the least, to do him this fauour, that hee might retire himselfe. The King finding himselfe wronged on both sides; by the Princeesse, for that she would not reconcile her selfe with Vasques, as hee had commanded; and with Perez for that he would retire himselfe. After that hee had consulted with his Confessor, and with the Earle of Barayas, he caused the Princeesse and Perez to be committed to prison, vpon a coulour, that by this imprisonment hee should force them to bee reconciled, the King himselfe being a spectator of this apprehension, made by his commandement, the which was in the yeare 1579.

The

A The next day, the King sent to visit Perez wife, and to comfort her, wishing her not to be troubled for her husband. Hee in like manner sent his Confessor to visit Perez, seeming to haue a care that hee should be well intreated. After that he had bene detained some moneth in prison, hee sent him with a certaine garde home to his house, where he commanded Perez that he should sweare to Don Rodrigo Manuel, by the faith of a Gentleman, that he would continue friend with Vasques: Perez remitting his spleen (yet hauing the knife neere his throte) yeelded therevnto: and so continued in his house, bearing the charge thereof, vntill the yeare 1585. and receiuing no allowance nor fee. At the end of which time (to the end the blind should not see any thing) hee was with other Secretaries put to the Visita (which is a lawe to examine the actions of such as they meane to intrap.)

La visita in Spaine is the law of fishing.

The charges of this Visita were more honourable to Perez, then hurtfull. They did consist of two points, the one concerning the Kings secrets, whereof hee aduertised the King, for that he would not discouer them, seeing that they meant to force him thervnto; hauing alwayes faithfully acquit himselfe in keeping them in his bosome, as the King had trusted him. Hee in like manner informed the Confessor, shewing vnto him for his discharge, a writing of the Kings owne hand: wherevpon the Confessor did forbid him to purge himselfe by his Kings writing: wherevnto he obeyed, for that he would not diuulge his secrets: suffering himselfe to bee condemned in a fine of thirty thousand

C Ducats, suspension of his office, two yeares imprisonment, and then to be banished eight yeares. The which Perez endured by the perswasions and goodly promises of this Father Confessor.

This condemnation was made by the strangest Act that hath bene scene, whereof the Councell had no knowledge, neither was it signed, nor any iudiciall sentence pronounced. The Act being insinuated to Perez, being lead from his house to the Castle, his goods before seized on were freed, and it was told him that hee should not per-forme the said Act, so as hee would deliuer the papers and Instructions which hee had written vnto the King, and from the King to him: that by this meanes hee might wholly discharge the King, and lay all vpon Perez owne head, wherein consisted the end of their proceeding. For there were yet two secret points in the sentence: the one was, they would make Perez guilty of Escovedos death: the other, that hee had no meanes to complaine of force and violence in his Countrey of Arragon: besides an accusation of ten thousand Ducats wherewith they charged him, whereof by many liuely reasones, and by a note of the Kings owne hands hee was discharged. Which note hauing bene deliuered into the Confessors hand, hee read and retained it, and afterwards denyed the hauing it.

Trick of a false
Monke.

When they came to execute the said Act, Perez thinking to preuent it, fled into a Church for liberty (fearing that his enemies would murder him in prison) from whence notwithstanding hee was drawne, but hauing obtained a sentence to his aduan-tage, this execution was stoppt. Notwithstanding hee was afterwards taken againe, and carried to the Castle of Turnegano, where hee was cruelly intreated by one Torres of Auila a Licentiar, who kept him ninety dayes in Irons, from the sight of his wife and children, who were in like manner committed to prison; to the end they should not demand Iustice, as the wife had done once at Lisbone, vpon the Kings promising by the faith of a Knight, the which was done to the end they might the better come to the Kings papers and her husbands, which this Friar Diego Chines hunted so after, knowing how much they did import to free the King. To attaine vnto the which hee had already written two letters (by the meanes of the Earle of Barayas President of Castile) to Perez wife, sending her word, that there was no other meanes to see her husband in liberty, then in yeelding vp the sayd papers: and in so dooing, that both shee and her husband should bee deliuered out of prison, wherevnto shee resisted courageously, refusing flatly to giue them. So as in the end her husband did write a note vnto her with his owne blood (so straightly was he kept) that she should de-liuer them, the which she did; yee by a diuine instinct shee reserued some, sending them in two cofers to the said Confessor, being at Monzon, with the Keyes, the which were deli-

Zzzzz. 2.

deliuered into the Kings owne hands by him that had charge of the cofers; by the deliuerie of which papers, the Lady onely was set at liberty.

At the Kings retorne from Monzon, the papers being read, Perez was somewhat enlarged in the towne of Madrid (but not without a further meaning) for the space of foure moneths, hauing leaue to bee visited, and the weeke before Easter to go to Masse, but this was a short ioy, for Escouedo sonne came to renew his old complaint, and Perez was againe sent to the Castle to prison, and soone after hee was called into the Court: where being examined vpon this complaint, hee continued faithfull and constant vnto the King; refusing to declare any thing according to his commandements and promises; aduertising him notwithstanding what the euent might be of such kinde of proceedings: but all was in vaine; for it was ordered that hee should answer within ten dayes, vnto the chiefe points of a proceffe, which had lasted ten yeares. At this examination the Confessor aduised him, to confesse Escouedo murther, but not to declare the motives and reasons; which Perez did not approoue. But rather, to the end the King might bee discharged, to compound with Escouedo children, who were the parties interested, the which was effected at Perez charge, for twenty thousand Ducats; and it was presently paid. All this did not serue the turne, for the President Roderigo Vasques, a kinsman to Escouedo, seeing that Perez could auoyde all stormes, wrote vnto the King that hee should consider well of the composition which Perez had made, by the which the world did murmur and surmise, that his Maiestie had caused him to do it. And therefore his regall authority required, that hee should declare, or cause Perez declare the reasons of this accord; whereby his Maiesty should stop all mens mouths, and Perez should bee better discharged. Wherevpon the king did write vnto Perez, to tell the reason why, by his commandement and for his seruice, hee had caused Escouedo to be slaine. This note and command from the king, made the greatest murmure; for (said they) if the king hath commanded him to murther Escouedo, what reason, or what reparation do they pretend? Is it now time, after twelue yeares since it was done, to demand the cause? yea a Cardinall, & the Popes Legat spake vnto the Confessor in Perez behalfe: To whom he answered, that they should rest satisfied, and that what had beene done, was to giue contentment to the President Roderigo Vasques, and that all should be well. As in like manner Father Salinas preaching Friar, discoursed sufficiently in a Sermon which he made in the kings Chappel, in Iustification of Perez, but all was without effect, the Confessor holding it a sinne to demaund Iustice: Notwithstanding Perez remained firme and constant, and being examined vpon the Kings note, he would not declare any thing, for he did not easily giue credit therevnto: wherevpon the Iudge tooke occasion to put Perez to the rack (although his minde were sufficiently tortured, with the confusion of a precedent order) yet relying vpon the Kings first instruction and commandement, he continued constant, & endured the torture, euen to the effusion of his blood, yet in the end hee was forced to declare the motiue causes of the murther of Escouedo, with the circumstances, producing the Kings originall letters to that end, and an Autentike witnesse, who was yet living: whose testimony they receiued, but all making for Perez, they suppress his deposition, and the Kings biller, and did not produce it. Perez finding by all these violences and out-rages, that they would draw his life into question, he found no better means, then to seeke how he might escape out of prison in Castile: as he did by the assistance of his wife, and of Giles de Mafsa, a Gentleman of Arragon, his kinsman in the night, the Thursday before Easter: running thirty leagues post, without any rest, vntill he came into Arragon: for the which his wife and children smarted, for they were cast into prison, with a friend of Perez; which cruelty was intollerable before God, as in such euents, whereas wife men are combe, God makes fooles to speake, and to tell Kings and Princes the truth, to their confusion. For Thio Martino the kings foole, & a natural hearing that the chiefe in Court reioyced that Perez had so escaped, asking the king what that Perez was, for whom euery man did so much reioyce? Surely said he, he was not guilty, had therefore Sir, be thou also glad. These words by a foole were observed by the wisest. It seemed that imprisonment of Perez wife and children, proceeded from hatred, or to stop their iust complaints, or else that the Confessor sought to be reuenged of them, for that the said Lady had once charged him

An. 1591.
Arragon
action.

Perez escapes
out of prison,
and flies into Arragon.

A him that instead of a Confessor, hee was a Soueraigne Iudge, teaching him what was written of the poore widow in the holy Scripture. And also for that which Dona Gregoria Perez their daughter, after a long pursute, spake with great courage and griefe of heart, vnto the President Roderigo Vasques, that she was come with her young Brethren and Sisters, to the end that without making them to languish any longer in misery, hee should make hast to suck vp their blood, and that they were come to that end, desiring rather to dye at once, then they should thus suck their bloods by degrees. Wherewith the President was no lesse terrified, then the Confessor was at the Mothers words. Perez hauing recovered Arragon with great difficultie, being much broken with the Racke, and his long and miserable imprisonment, hee stayed some time at Calatajub, where hee retired himselfe into a Monasterie. There were priuate letters sent to a Knight of that towne, without any Act, or sufficient warrant, to draw him from thence: the which not able to effect, being hindered by the religious men of that Conuent, hee gaue him a Monkes Sell for his prison. Perez did write from this place vnto the King, but all was in vaine; for vpon new complaints and accusations, hee was drawn out of this Conuent by the Kings expresse commandement (not without some mutinie of the townes men) and lead to Saragosa, from whence hee did importune the King with new letters, sending a religious man expresse, with good instructions of all matters. This religious man spake vnto the King, who gaue him good words: but hee was not welcome to the reuered father the Kings Confessor. But nothing could helpe him, to stay these pursutes begonne: or else God would haue the truth knowne to all the world, the which some priuate mens mallice sought to suppress.

Perez seeing that hee prevailed nothing, hee had recourse to his papers, letters, and instructions, as well from the King, as from some others, which had beene kept safe by his wiues industrie: whereof hee made a collection, deciphering the whole estate of his businesse, and made a Booke, the which hee presented vnto the Iustice: whereby his aduersaries seeing themselves confounded, and that hee should be absolutely discharged, they inuented an other meanes to intrappe him: which was that the King reseruing all his rights, should desist from this action against Perez; and that they would charge him to haue ill acquitted his duty to his Prince. Although that this seperation of the cause was repugnant to the customes of Arragon, and that the King might not doe it: yet they gaue it forth that they had instructions, impugning them of Perez, the which was alledged wholly against the Kings authority, to the blemish of his reputation, and contempt of his writing, the which Perez, neither in prison, nor out, for the onely respect he bare vnto the King, would euer shew, but onely at this last charge, where hee was forced to make vse of them, least he should fall into the like inconuenience that Piso had done, who would not iustifie himselfe of Germanicus death, by the writings of Tiberius Caesar, who had commanded him: Perez discharge being the more receivable, for that hee did make euery man know by liuely reasons, what had moued the King to doe it. Perez enemies seeing there was no aduantage to be gotten of him before the Soueraigne Iudge, they drew him to the seate of the Inquests of Arragon, where as the King is both Iudge and party. There he was examined vpon the old Articles, the fift day after the separation, and also vpon two new points: by the which in their Interrogatories they did obiect against him, that when as he heard the French King did prosper, hee reioyced, and contrarywise hee was sad, when as he heard of the King of Spaines good success. Moreover that he had a desire to retire himselfe into Berne, or into Holland and Zeland. To whom he answered, that they ought not to search into the secret Cabinet of God, who alone knowes the hearts of men, protesting of the force and violence they offered him, to the preiudice of the Kings seruice: Offering yet to produce more Instructions before any third person, whom it should please the King to name, and especially before the Archbishop of Saragosa: But this offer was not allowed, nay not any one durst deale in his businesse, no nor his owne Aduocate, hearing the threats of the Marquis of Almenare, who had corrupted some witnesses vpon Perez retreat into Holland.

Yet this Inquest could not worke out any thing to prejudice Perez: then his aduersaries tooke a new resolution, to deliuer him ouer to the Inquisition, vpon those

Z z z z z 3

Peres put into the Inquisition.

*An. 1591.
Arragon.*

those witnesses which had beene suborned by the Marquis of Almenare, touching his reuerate into Holland, accusing him also of Inchantment. This forged Act of the Marquis, was censured throughout the realme, and euery man would take knowledge thereof, who found it to be such, as it was nothing preiudiciall to Peres: yea the Salmedine of Saragoſſa (which is the supreme Magistrate of the towne) was afterwards committed to prison, for that he had receiued the depositions of these false witnesses: whereby all the people and Estates of Arragon, did see with what passion and spleene they did proceed against Peres: and would haue them iudge definitiue, whether he were guilty or not, the which if they refused to doe, then said they, Peres cause was good. Notwithstanding the Officers of the Inquisition, (contrary to the priuiledges of the manifestation, and other rights of the realme) came vpon the fine and twenty of May, that yere 1591. and tooke him out of the prison, leading him to the Inquisition; but within foure houres after, the Inquisitors were forced through a mutiny of the people, to deliuer him back to his first prison of the manifestation: the tumult was very great, with the effusion of some blood, and the burning of houses: yea the Marquis of Almenare, for that he had done against their priuiledges, was committed to prison, hauing a thousand injurious speeches giuen him by the women and children, and being out-raged and beaten by the skumme of the people: whereof fifteene dayes after, (hauing in his extremities freed Peres) he dyed in prison. Peres enemies being not yet sufficiently taught, by this third bloody and horrible error, they persisted in their obstinacie to haue him in the Inquisition: wherevpon thirteene Lawyers of the realme, were appointed to iudge, whether Peres cause deserued to be sent thither, or not. At the first they ordeined, that it was against all right to deliuer him to the Inquisition: But afterwards by the solliciting of John Lewis Murano, who had wonne most of them with presents, they gaue another sentence, contrary to their first, directly impugning the priuiledges, examples, concordants and declarations of the realme, which disannull the Edicts of Conſecration, proceeding from the Inquisition. Yet his aduersaries would proceed, and the rather, for that the King had commanded the Gouvernor of Arragon, to keepe Peres in perpetuall prison: or at the least that he might neuer goe out of the realme of Arragon: wherein the deputies, to obey the King, agreed most together. The people notwithstanding were resolute, seeing the wrong and violence they not onely did to Peres, but also to his wife and small children, yea to religious men that were his sollicitors: the which all the world detested: and in like manner to his reuenues, so as in prison hee liued onely of almes, the which were grudged him, besides the wrong which was done vnto his moueables, basely sold at an out-cry, yea the shirts and smocks of his little Infants borne in the prison, with the thimble and needle wherewith Donna Gregoria his eldest daughter did sows besides many other great indignities, which were done to him, his wife and children, whereof the people had great pittie; concluding thereby, that whatsoeuer he endured, proceeded onely from reuenge, hatred and spleene, and that he was not culpable.

His pursuing enemies knowing well, and hauing found it by experience, how the people stood affected to their priuiledges, and to Peres, durst not attempt to put him againe into the Inquisition (which should haue beene done on the twentieth of August) without force: and therefore they gathered together a good number of the Kings soldiers, with many Noblemen and Knights of the Viceroyes house (which had neuer beene seene before) the which troubled both the City of Saragoſſa, and the whole realme, for that it was directly against their priuiledges: but all turned for this time into smoke, they not daring to effect any thing. Not content herewith, they made better prouision of men on the 24. of September following, hauing raised 2000. men to take Peres, being assisted by the Officers, Noblemen and Knights. On the day appointed, the Gouverneur called his soldiers together before the breake of day, and put them into battaile: and to strike terror into the Burgesſes, he caused them to giue a charge of shotte, where there was a yong child slaine, and some hurt by the Gouvernours owne hand. At the houre of Councell, the Inquisitors arriued, who demanded to haue the persons of Peres and of John Francisco Maiorini deliuered into their hands. Vpon which demand (notwithstanding, a petition presented at the same time, by some good Countrymen) they obtai-

A obtained, Fiat. Wherevpon many Noblemen and officers went to the prison to receiue him. Whether being come, a Lieutenant called Micer Claueria, with the Officers of the Inquisition, being accompanied by some soldiers, leading with them two Notaries, the better to qualifie their exploite, they entred into the prison, and caused Peres to come downe, where hauing obserued the ceremonies of his euocation, they demanded to haue him for some points concerning religion, and the faith. Peres seeing this, and standing vpon his right and the priuiledges of the realme, nothing would preuaile, but they put Irons vpon both his legges, and prepared to lead them away. Whilest that the Viceroy, or Gouverneur, the Soueraigne Iudge, the great Noblemen, Earles and Knights of this company, were in Armes in houses neere vnto the prison: at the same instant the people came running in great troupes, crying, Liberty, liberty, (the which in the like case vpon the breach of their priuiledges, is lawfull.) At the first they were but a multitude of labourers, and the skumme of the people (whereof few were armed) which fell vpon them that were vpon the place of Iustice. The rest of the people seeing that they had no leader, and that it was not onely for Peres, but also for their liberties, that made them to stirre, they went and intreated Giles de Meza to bee their head, who hauing taken vpon him this charge, with those men he had, and such as came scattering vnto him, hee charged the horsemen, and the rest of the Gouvernours souldiers, whom he presently put to flight, who were also set vpon by two hundred children, armed according to their ages and strength, and a poore naturall foole, who played his part with stoanes. Finally, their fury was so great, as they slew the Coche Moyles, and burnt the Coches, which should haue carried Peres and his companion into Castile, they also set fire of the house whereas the Viceroy and other Noblemen had saued themselves. There were slaine in this tumult the said John Lewis Murano, and Pedro Ieronimo of Baradix, one of the chiefe Councillors of the towne.

This Combate, happened for their liberties, was done with such zeale and heate, as a very old man would haue exposed sixe or seauen of his sonnes to sacrifice themselves for this cause, commanding them to arme, and rather to dye: and a Gentlewoman of a good family, sent her Nephew and onely heyre. The furie being past by the death of fifty or sixtie persons, and about a hundred and fifty hurt, the people returned to the prison, with an intent to haue Peres. The Officers of the Inquisition, seeing in what danger they were, tooke off his feters, and by their Maisters commandement, intreated him to goe out of prison, fearing to be slaine there. Peres demanded an Acte, but for that by reason of the confusion hee could not haue it, hee went forth, to the great ioy and content of all the people: who conducted him to the house of Don Diego of Eredia. This done, they went to retire John Francisco Maiorini, setting all the other prisoners at liberty. The same night Peres went out of Saragoſſa, with Giles de Meza, remaining three dayes vpon a Mountaine, during the which hee vnderstood that the Gouverneur caused him to be pursued, wherevpon hee returned back into the towne, where he lay hid forty dayes, to vnderstand what would become of this business: which was that they prepared an Armie in Castile, to come towards Saragoſſa, and yet the Viceroy gaue out a brute of an Accord, which was but to vnderstand where Peres remained; as appeared by the letters of an Inquisitor, who had seed men to that end, hoping by such a seruice to get an Archbishopricke: By reason whereof Peres retired the day before that Don Alonso de Vergas entred with his Armie into Saragoſſa, hiding himselfe among the rocks, vntill in the end hee came to Sala, where hee rested himselfe some dayes, vntill that hearing of the new and intollerable Accord, hee sent Gilles de Meza vnto the Lady Catherine Princeſse of Nauarre, the French Kings onely sister, intreating her to receiue them vnder her protection and safegard. And hauing certaine intelligence that they pursued him, and sought him in all places, hee went by night from Sala and came to Pao, where hee found Giles de Meza, with an answer from the Princeſse, which was that hee might come boldly, where hee should find all freedom, going, comming, or staying, with liberty of his religion, yea shee sent some horses to fetch him vnto her. Where being arriued, and hauing saluted the Princeſse, shee gaue him as good a reception as he could expect of such a Lady.

Tumult in Saragoſſa for Peres.

Peres escapes out of Arragon and comes to Paris.

Action of Arragon.

Peres

Perez being thus vnder the protection of this Princeesse, the greedinesse of the Spaniard to shed his blood, did hunt after his death, offering new Accords, to entertaine him neere vnto them, vntill they might finde some meanes to effect their desseignes, to which end they bargained with diuerse persons for his life. Being at Pao, there was a very good agreement offered him by Don Martin de la Nua, in the behalfe of the Viceroy, of Don Alonso de Vergas, and of the Inquisitors, but he durst not trust them. Many letters haue discovered the treasons and practises to murder Perez, and the names of the vnder-takers: among others, of one Bastamantes his owne kinsman: of another Arragonois furnished with poyson, and letters from the Viceroy, found about him, who being discouered, hee was condemned to dye, but at the request of Perez, the Princeesse pardoned him: then there was another of Nauarre hired to that end, who discouered himselfe to John Francisco Maiorini: to whom in the King of Spaines name, hee promised pardon and great rewards: But going about to perswade him by his reasons, that in executing the Kings will to murder or poyson Perez, was no treason. John Francisco hauing discouered the ground of his speech, hee reuealed him, and the Nauarrois was banished. They would also haue suborned a naturall Foole to murder him, but he was wiser then they that sought to corrupt him.

All these practises and attempts were the cause that Perez retired into England, considering that in France hee should neuer bee safe from such practisers against his life: Notwithstanding that hee was comprehended in the letters of Pardon granted to them that had offended the King of Spaine, which were afterwards dispersed throughout the world. Wherevnto hee would not trust, taking example by Don Bernardo de Cabrera, the Kings Secretarie, who seeing how hee was enuied, retired from Court, and became a Priest, yet the King called him back againe, being loth to loose such a seruant: being returned, their enuie increased, and he was so violently pursued, as Don Pedro of Arragon caused him to loose his head like a traitor: and yet afterwards, this Don Pedro dying, hee declared him an Innocent, and to haue bene faithfull: saying, that hee had been abused by his household seruants, who hated Cabrera, commanding that all his lands and goods should bee restored to his Nephew, which had bene confiscated: In the meane time the Innocent man was dead, and had suffered wrongfully.

The like was scene at Brussels, in the Councell of the troubles, who put to death during their greatest executions, a poore innocent man that was a prisoner, who had neuer bene called, heard, nor examined, so as some three or foure moneths after his death, when they came to call him to bee examined, they found that hee had bene executed, without any arraignment, or sentence giuen. Wherewith some of the Councillors that were borne in the country, being troubled in conscience, the Councillor Vergas a Spaniard, sayd vnto them: Trouble not your selues, it imports not, if he bee dead an Innocent, his soule is the more happy, and his body is freed from all miseries.

But returning to that which followed in the towne of Saragoça, after the departure of Perez. The King of Spaine, to bee reuenged for this tumult, gathered an armie together vpon the frontiers of Castile, giuing it out that it was to bee sent into France, to succour the League, of the which Don Alonso de Vergas was Generall, who hearing that Perez was escaped, fell with all his troopes vpon the realme of Arragon, to punish them of Saragoça. There was a petition presented against him and his armie, by the whole body of the realme of Arragon, to the end that the Iustice Maior, according to their ancient priuiledges, should take armes, to repulse the attempts of Don Alonso. According to the which, by a decree of seuentene, the Iustice with the whole realme, fell to Armes, distributed the Offices of warre, leuied men, and brought Saint Georges Standerd to field (an vsuall thing in such cases) and so marche in good order out of Saragoça, but with bad successe: for that the Captaines (traitors to their Country) basely fearing the forces of Don Alonso, retiring themselves, abandoned their companies, so as the armie of Arragon came to nothing, euery one slipping away, through the treachery of a Maister Inquisitor, who aduertised the King how many men there were, who were their Commanders and Captaines, with their names and surnames, and the meanes how to defeat them.

To

A To vnderstand the reasons of the Arragonois, to the end it may not be held a rebellion, lightly vnderaken without cause, or an alteration without ground. It shall be good for the better knowledge of the matter, to relate briefly, the estate, condition, and beginning of the realme of Arragon.

Since the generall losse of Spaine, which hapned vnder King Roderigo, by the meanes of Cont Julian, for that he had deflowered his daughter Caba. The Moores or Sarazins held Spaine long, without either King or Lord. In the end, the realme of Arragon freed it selfe from the power of the Moores, and the Arragonois made themselves their owne Maisters and Lords, not acknowledging any particular Prince, and without any Souerainty but their owne. So as being weary of their rest and liberty, they required (as the children of Israel did sometimes to Samuel) to haue a King, and therein they demanded the Popes aduice: who answered them as Samuel had done the Israelites. But seeing they desired to haue a King, he did wish them to prescribe him lawes and conditions, and ouer him a Soueraigne Iudge, with assistants, to bridle his ambition. The Arragonois gaue credit to this Councell, and before they would choofe them a King, they erected the dignity and preheminance of El Iusticia of Arragon, which is a Soueraigne Iudge about the King, with seuentene Assistants. And they made a law which was called the Laws of manifestation, for the preservation of the Vassals right, against the out-rages and oppressions of the mighty, be hee King, Prince, or other Iudge. Which law, with other

C Statutes and Ordonances, together with their Priuiledges, are to be scene Printed, vnder the Kings royall authority, and haue continued many hundred yeares, to the honor and reputation of their Kings, and especially of Don Ferdinand of Arragon, surnamed the Catholicke, who would not giue eare (being come to the crown of Castile, by D. Isabella his wife) to the bad counsell which the Spaniards gaue him, tending to the abolishing of the said priuiledges, saying: So long as the two ballances of the King and realme, shall be in a iust Counterpoise, the king and realme shall continue and flourish together, but if one of the Scales seeke to weigh downe the other, the one or the other will fall to ruine, or it may bee both together. Moreover the Arragonois made a law of vnion, consisting in two points worthy the knowledge, for the clearing of this present discourse. The one is, that whensoever the king shall breake their lawes, they may choofe an other. For you must vnderstand that they do not sweare vnto their Kings, but conditionally in these termes. Nos que valemus tanto como vos, y vos tanto como nos, o hazemo nuestro Rey y Senor con tal, que nos guardey nuestros fueros, y libertades, sy no, no. And hee must humble himselfe vpon his knee, bare-headed, before the Soueraigne Iudge, which is El Iusticia, and sweare first, and then the Arragonois after him. The second point of this vnion is, that the Princes and Noblemen of the realme, may make leagues and confederations against their King in case of oppression, or of breach of their priuiledges. And vpon these conditions they did choofe their first King, who was a Knight of Arragon, called Garci Ximenes, and after him three or foure: But this election continued not long; for the King D. Pedro, called with the Poignard, desiring to make the realme successiue, and hereditarie, insisted in an

E assembly of the Estates, to disauill this law of election; the which in the end was granted, by the foure members of the realme, reseruing all their other rights and priuiledges but that: the which he did willingly accept, and after this Accord made (holding the Charter of this Election in his hand) he drew out his Poynard and cut it in peeces, saying these words. Que tal fueray fuero de poder elegir Rey los vassallos, sangre de Rey auia de costar, and withall stabd himselfe through the hand, from which time the King was called Don Pedro with the Poynard: as his effigie is to bee scene at this day, in the royall hall of the deputation in the towne of Saragoça, whereas all the Kings his successors are, vnto Philip the second last deceased. By vertue of the law of vnion, and of their priuiledges, the

F Arragonois tooke Armes this yeare 1592. proceeding thus iustly in their businesse, the chiefe Iustice causing the sentence to be insinuated to Don Alonso de Vergas, by two Notaries and two others, who hauing made their insinuation vnto him, vpon the penalty of body and goods, they returned freely to Saragoça. Of which their proceeding may appeare by the Comission giuen to Don John de la Nua, chosen Generall of the armie, signed by El Iusticia, by the Abbot of Piedra, Lewis Nauarra, Ihon Louis of Marcella, Don Saying of Don Ferdinand King of Arragon.

Manner of the King of Arragons othe.

Don Iohn de Luna, Jeronimo de Oro, and others, and the Realme. Wherefore all things being thus ordred according vnto law, and past by the Iustice, and Soueraignty, the Preachers in their Pulpits, and the Priests in their Confessions exhorted the people to do it: yea a Secretary of the Inquisition signed the resolution of the realme, as well grounded. The Army of Arragon being thus dispersed, and come to nothing, as wee haue sayd, before that Don Alonso entred into Saragoça, the King wrote goodly letters to diuerse of the chiefe Noblemen of the Realme, as Don Alonso did in like manner, to giue some coulour to his bloudy exploite, saying, that it was to goe into France, and swearing that it was the least of his thoughts to doe them any harme: yea that hee was a better Arragonois then any one of them.

Vpon these letters he was suffered to enter freely with his armie into Saragoça: hauing lodged his men, hee began to imprison all men whom hee pleased, Noblemen, Knights, Gentlemen, Lawyers, Marchants, and Bourgeses of all qualities: the Deputies of the Realme and the Cleargie were least spared: there were also many Ladies, Gentlewomen, and other women prisoners, and Lieutenants of Soueraigne Iustice, as Michel Claueria, and Miter Spinsa, whom they forced to renounce their Offices, substituting others, whom the King before for their offences had declared incapable, to the blessing of his authoritie, their election being against all right and law. They did also confiscate (contrary to the lawes of Arragon) not onely the goods of the husbands, but also of the wiues of such as were absent. And about all the Soueraigne Iudge of Arragon was taken, and within twenty houres lost his head, without any other sentence, but of a little scrowle written with the Kings hand, in these termes, Hauing read this, you shall presently apprehend Don Ihon de la Nuca, chiefe Iustice of Arragon, and let mee haue newes of his death as soone as of his imprisonment. The which was done, notwithstanding his appellations and Protestations, without the priuie of any man, vntill hee came vnto the Scaffold to bee executed, whereas many had gone before him, and many followed after. Thus the Realme of Arragon thinking to preserve their priuiledges and liberties, lost them, with the chiefe of the Nobility, and a great number of men of good quality.

This yeare 1592. the King of Spaine hauing put many to death at Saragoça, for that they had taken armes for the defence of their liberties, and burnt Antonio Perez Image. The Estates of the Country hauing assembled at Tarracone, and giuen satisfaction vnto the King, hee was content to send a generall pardon into the Prouince. Wherevpon all Vargas Souldiers were drawne out of Saragoça, except some fewe that were left to garde the Inquisition. The Turke being in Armes, and threatening especially the house of Austria, the Catholike King grew iealous, that by this diuersion hee might bee much troubled in his warres of Flanders, where as the vnited Estates were very strong, being assisted from other Princes: hee therefore sent Charles Cigala to Constantinople, vnder coulour to visite his brother, but it was generally thought, that his going was to saue his country from inuasion, but Cigala could not obtaine what hee desired, for that the Turkes landing diuerse times, carried away many thousands of Christians, and committed great spoiles vpon the coasts of Calabria, and Apulia, comming neere vnto Naples, as also in Sicile.

Cont Fuentes sent into the
low countries.

Newes being come into Spaine, that the Duke of Parma was returned very sicke from the Spawe, and that the Physicians despaired of his life: the Cont of Fuentes was presently sent into the Lowe Countries, with Commission to command the armie after his death, (the which some imputed to the Spaniards) whither he went in post, but the Duke of Parma dyed before his arriuall in Arras, and was much lamented.

This yeare there being a Commission granted by the Queene of England to Sir Walter Raleigh, for an expedition to the west Indies: he armed fourteen or fifteen good ships of warre, whereof two were the Queenes, and being accompanied by a troope of resolute Gentlemen, hee began to bee ready to goe from the West Countries, but hee was so long stayed there by contrary windes, as the fittest season for Sayling was past, his peoples mindes began to alter, and his victuals consumed. Wherevpon the Queene called home Sir Walter Raleigh in Maye, commanding him to giue over his intended voyage.

A voyage, and to leaue his charge to Sir Iohn Bourrough, and Sir Martin Frobisher: but hee finding his honor ingaged, would not leaue the fleet being now vnder saile, but being taken with a strange tempest on the 11. of May, and in danger to be swallowed vp in the sea, hee resolved to returne, and to leaue the charge to the aboue-named, giuing them directions to diuide their fleet in two, one to lye vpon the South Cape of Spaine, and the other to attend at the Ilands, which made the Admirall of Spaine to stay vpon that coast, and to neglect the wasting of the Caracks. Sir Iohn Bourrough sayling towards the Açores, hee discovered a Carack called Santa Cruz, comming from the East Indies, which getting neere the land, the Portugalls carried what goods they could out of her, and set fire of the ship. There they vnderstood by certaine prisoners, of three other Caracks that were comming from the Indies, which Sir Iohn, with his comforts, resolved to attend. After sixe weekes patience, they discovered a huge Caracke called Madre de Dios, one of the greatest belonging to the Crowne of Portugall, which after a long and furious fight, was in the end borded by the English, they found the hatches strewed with dead carcases, and with wounded men languishing. Don Fernando de Mendoza was commander of this Caracke, whom Sir Iohn Bourrough, of an honorable disposition and pitying his estate, sent away freely with most of his followers to his Country. This Caracke was esteemed to be of a thousand sixe hundred tuns, and did carry nine hundred tuns in bulke of Marchandize, there were in her sixe or seauen hundred persons: her chiefe commodities, besides Jewels, were Spices, Drugs, silks, China silkes, Callicoes, with Pearle, Muske, Cyuet and Amber gris, with diuerse other commodities, the which at reasonable rates was valued at an hundred and fifty thousand pounds sterling. The losse of these two Caracks brought Don Alphonso de Bacan, General with the Spanish fleet, in disgrace with the King, who imputed it to his negligence.

Caracke called Santa Cruz, set on fire.

Caracke called Madre de Dios, taken by the English.

In the yeare 1593. the King of Spaine sent the Duke of Feria into France, to offer all his forces to fauour the League, and the election of a new King, being assembled together at Paris to that end, where it being propounded, who should bee called to the Crowne, the Duke of Feria did insist for the eldest daughter of Spaine, who he sayd had most right, the realme falling to the Masculine line of Capet, the which hee maintained for many defects might not pretend, so as the Infanta comming of the sister, who was elder then Henry the third, shee should also bee preferred to the Crowne, and the rather for that shee should bee married to some Prince in France, so as it should not passe to a stranger, but this Prince should be chosen by the King of Spaine. This proposition was distastfull to most of the assembly, who sayd that it was against their Salike law.

1593.
Duke of Feria sent to the league in France.

King Philip hauing conquered Portugall, which hee pretended to bee due vnto him in the right of his mother, and expelled Don Antonio, who was held base, hee gaue the government thereof to Cardinall Albertus of Austria, yonger sonne to the Emperour Maximilian the second, a Prince endowed with many great vertues, and therefore very acceptable to the Portugalls. In which government hee did so carry himselfe, as hee gaue great satisfaction both to the King and his subiects. Philip being now growne old, and vsfitted for the government of his realmes, his sonne Philip being yet too young, hee called the Arch-duke Albert out of Portugall into Spaine, who came vnto the King on the eleuenth day of September, hee being at the Monastery of Saint Lawrence (commonly called Escoriall) where hee gaue him an honourable reception. The King calling Albert vnto him, let him vnderstand with what cares and toyle hee had for so many yeares gouerned his hereditary kingdomes, and states, but being now broken with age, hee was no more fitt for command: hauing hetherto by all means sought to procure the peace and quiet of his subiects, but he had bin interrupted by the practises of some turbulent men, so as hee could not maintaine peace in all his Prouinces. Hee was therefore greued that hee could not deliuer vnto his sonne a quiet estate, and the rather for that his sonne being yong of yeares, was not yet fit to gouerne kingdomes, that his cousins wisedome and integritie had bene tryed vnto him, the which he had hetherto vsed among the Portugals, knowing it to be such, as hee durst safely commit the government of all his other realmes to his faith.

Hauing now resolved (after so many labours past, for the glory of God, and the quiet of of his subiects) to giue ouer the gouernment, and to spend the remainder of his A dayes in contemplation, giuing God thanks for the prosperous course of his life, and the happines of his Estates, rettyring himselfe into some Religious place, and there pray continually for his soules health: And to resigne vp the gouernment of his Realme to Philippe his sonne, and to Albert his cousin, that with their ioynt Councils and cares they might gouerne his subiects, vntill his sonne grew to more yeares, and were capable of the sole commaund. That hee would also adde vnto their Councils five of the cheife Noble-men of the Kingdome, Spaniards borne, whose counsell, helpe, and authority, if need were, they should vse, but I doe not find that this resolution tooke effect.

Muley Xecq becomes a Christian.

Muley Mahomet sometimes King of Fez and Marrock, was expelled by his vncle B Muley Moluc, who, imploring ayde from Sebastian King of Portugall, they both dyed in battell, as you haue heard. Mahomet had a sonne called Muley Xecq, who had beene giuen in hostage with some Noblemen to Sebastian, who sent him to Mazagon.
After the battell hee was coueayed with his company into Spaine, where hee was brought vpp vnder the protection of King Philippe, and this yeare beeing instructed in the Christian Religion, hee became a Christian, and was Christened in that famous Monastery of Saint Laurence (called Escoriall) with his couzin and other Courtiers, all making profession of the Gospell.

1594

The Turke this yeare made all Italy to tremble, for that Cigala beeing come forth C with an hundred and threescore Gallies and other vessells, it seemed at the first, that hee had a desseyne to enter into the gulphe, but finding the Venetians to make great preparation, they fell vppon the coast of Calabria, where they did much harme vntill the coming of Prince Doria into those Seas, who seeing the Turke gone retyred himselfe, but the Turkes hauing fortified their Fleete with more Gallies, returned againe and threatned Italy: Wherevppon Carlo Spinelli, by commandement from the Viceroy of Naples, caused the City of Rhegium to be abandoned with some others vppon that coast.

Turkes invade
Italy.

Cigala coming to Rhegium, and finding their goods carried to some safer place, D hee burnt it in disdaine, and threatned to passe farther into the country. The misery which the poore people endured, and the cruelty which those Barbarians vsed was exceeding great, the spoyle they made were valued at many hundred thousand crownes: And for that the King of Spaine had need (if hee would defend his owne Estates, and the honour of the holy Church from the Armes of Infidells) of great summes of gold, he made request vnto the Pope, that the Cardinall and Archbishop of Toledo being dead in Spaine, and hauing left a million of crownes to be employed in godly vses, he would make declaration that the said summe might be employed in those godly and important warres, wherein the Pope tooke deliberation, and did soone after satisfye the King, confirming the Cardinall Albert of Austria in the succession of the said Archbi-shoprick, hauing beene named by his Maiesty. But to treat more strictly with him of many affayres importing Christendome, he sent John Francisco Aldobrandini Ambassadour into Spaine, who was receaued there with royall magnificence and great shewes of honor and loue.

Albert of Austria Archbishop of Toledo.

1595

In the beginning of this yeare 1595. the warre began to grow hotte in the Franche Contry of Bourgundy, betwixt the French and the Spaniard, whether the King of Spaine resolved to send the Constable of Castile, who was Gouernor of the Dutchie of Milan, with 4500. souldiers of the Realme of Naples, and he gaue commission to Fernando de Toledo, Lodowicke Melzi, to Alexander Carraciola, and to Alexander Gonzaga, either of them to raise a troupe of horse, and that they should leauy a thousand foot in that estate, and three thousand in the Duchy of Vrbino.

Constable of Castile sent vn-
to the French Court.

Protestation of the Spanish Ambassador at the absolution of the French
King.

The French King hauing left the religion wherein he had beene bred, and fallen to the F Romish Church, was after great sute and instance, absolved by the Pope with the accustomed ceremonies. Before the doing whereof, the King of Spaines Ambassadour made a protestation in the King his Masters name, that whatsoeuer the Pope intended for to doe in the said businesse, should not any way preiudice his Masters rights to the Realme of Nauarre, nor to the Duchy of Bourgundy, nor yet to the great

A great treasure hee had disbursed at the request of the Catholikes of France, whereof hee meant to bee repaid, and that hee would not desist from armes, vntill that Realme had satisfied him: which protestation being accepted by the Pope, the said embassadours Secretarie caused a publike instrument to be made with licence from his Holinesse. And this yeare died D. Antonio of Portugall at Paris, which newes were verie ioyfull to the king of Spaine, being freed from the apprehensions of daile troubles in that realme, by meanes of his pretensions.

Death of D.
Antonio king
of Portugall.

The Archduke Ernestus of Austria being Gouernour in Flanders for the king of Spaine, the earle of Fuentes commanded the armie by prouision vntill the coming of a new gouernour, the king resolving to send the Cardinall Albertus to succeed his brother: vpon whose dispatch (whether it proceeded from the kings own disposition, or a desire in him to make himselfe the more acceptable to the people of those Prouin-ces, at his first coming) there were many Ships of the East Countries, and the Netherlands, (which had beene staied in Spaine, to serue as men of warre, and to waite home the Indian fleets) discharged in diuers Hauens and Ports: And at Seville the Duke of Medina Sidonia, told the Merchants and Masters of ships, that it was the kings pleasure and command, being mooued there vnto by the Cardinall of Austria, and that from thenceforth their ships should haue free passage into Spaine, and haue passports to goe and come if they would demand it, hoping they would C in time acknowledge the kings gracious fauours, and submit themselues vnto their naturall Prince: And the better to perswade the vnited Prouinces of the kings loue and fauour towards them, hee set Philip of Nassau, Prince of Orange, and Earle of Buren, at libertie, hauing beene long restrained in Spaine, which was thought to be done at the instance of the Prince of Spaine, and of the Archduke, to the end hee might haue him with him into the Low-Countries.

Ships of the vnited Prouin-ces, discharged
in Spaine.

Experience hath often taught that armes are more fortunate, and produce greater effects in an enemies Countrie, than at home, and that there is no such triumph as that which is fetcht farre off. The French held that all their combustions had bin forged in Spaine, that the Iesuits had beene the chiefe workemen: The attempts against the French kings person, by John Chastell who had hurt him in the face, and other their disciples, did verifie this opinion; Besides the French king, had by his lerters giuen the Estates of Arthois and Henaut to vnderstand, that if they did not desist from relieuing his rebellious Leaguers, vpon the frontiers of Picardie, hee was resolved to make warre against them, prefixing them a certaine time, to giue him answere, which they neglected: whereupon the French king grounding the necessitie of his armes, vpon these considerations, hee made a declaration at Paris, in Ianuary this yeare, by the which, for certaine reasons therein contained, he denounced war against the king of Spaine and all the Low-countrie Prouinces vnder his obedience, as his enemies, causing it to be proclaimed in all the frontier Townes of his Realme.

French king
proclaims war against the king
of Spaine.

E After the publication hereof, there was the like proclamation made at Brussels, in the name of the king of Spaine, against the French king (whome hee tearmed Prince of Bearne) and against all the French that held his partie: the Leaguers were excepted, whome hee called the good confederate French Catholikes, and he promised to aide and assist them with all the meanes which God had giuen him, promising the like to all the French, of what qualitie souer: that should within two moneths after that proclamation forsake him, and giue good testimony that they are no enemies to the Romish, Catholike, and Apostolike Religion, nor to the king of Spaine. This Edict was made in March, and proclaimed in all the Low Country townes vnder the kings obedience.

King of Spaine
proclaims war
against the French.

F In the yeare one thousand siue hundred ninetie and sixe, the king of Spaine made an edict, complaining that the reuenues of his crowne and the treasure which came yearly from the Indies, were consumed by reason of his great charges, for the defence of his Estates, and of all Christendome, imputing the cause to the great interest which he paid for the exchange of money, and vpon other contracts made with the Merchants in his Majesties name, so as in a manner all his receipts and reuenues were A a a a a a ingaged

1596
King of Spaine
breakes with the Merchants.

ingaged to others, being without any treasure to supply his wants, for that the Bankers (who had been accustomed to furnish him by exchange) made now some difficultie to deale any farther, hauing in a manner all the reuenues of his Crowne in their possession: for the preuenting of which inconuenience, hee found no better meanes than to repaire the treasure, and to free it from the wrongs it hath suffered by interests, which hee hath allowed in his contraction, to auoid greater danger which might grow by the want of meanes, to supply the necessities of the warre, the which his meaning was to preuent by these meanes, being impossible to vse any other vpon those occasions: wherefore (to cut off the said interests) his meaning was to resume vnto himselfe all the assignements which hee had given vnto any Merchants and Bankers, for what summes or contracts soeuer, which haue bene made by his commandement, since the decree made by him the first of September, one thousand five hundred seuentie and five, and the sixt of December one thousand five hundred seuentie and seuen, vnto the twentieth of Nouember this yeare one thousand five hundred ninetie and sixe, which assignations hee suspended, so as the Merchants might not receiue them, but the reuenues should be brought into his Coffers, and all contracts for interest should cease; Confirming whatsoeuer had bene concluded by his royall Councell in this behalfe, as done by his expresse commandement.

Merchants broke by reason of the Edict

This Edict being published, it bred a strange alteration among the Merchants in Spaine, Italie, and the Low-Countries. The Cardinall Albertus having taken vp money at Andwerp for the payment of the annie, and sent his bills of exchange into Spaine, they were not accepted, but sent backe againe and protested, which was a blemish to his credit, and made many merchants to breake, imputing the cause vnto the Edict.

Titles forbidden in Italie.

The corruption of titles being brought out of Spaine into Italie, men honouring one another in their speaking and writing with affected courtesies in such sort, as they found not titles sufficient to satisfie their arrogant ambition, so as to tearme meane men, most worthy or excellent (which was due to Soueraigne Princes) they held it no flatterie, the which was growne so familiar among all sorts of people, as euen base and obscure men did arrogate it: the king hauing made a prouision in Spaine some yeares before for this abuse; this yeare Henry de Guzman Earle of Olivares, being Viceroy of Naples, did set downe an order for that realme, the which was in some sort obserued in the Duchie of Milan; ordaining that in their letters there should bee no title of courtesie giuen to any but onely the dignitie which hee held, as to the Duke; Prince, Marquess, Earle or Doctor, such a one, taking away all superfluitie or suspicion of flatterie, as well within as without the said letters: the which was rigorously obserued in the Realm of Naples. But the Court of Rome and the Clergie men, disliking to receiue a law from any other than from the Pope, would not suffer it to be obserued.

Inundation of the river of Guadalquivir.

The King of Spaine being desirous to be reuenged of the spoiles which the English made daily, as well in Spaine as in his other dominions, gathered all his sea-forces together, in the beginning of this yeare one thousand five hundred ninetie and sixe, appointing the Rendes-vous to bee at Seuille, but this sudden preparation was disturbed by diuers accidents. The first was the strange swelling and ouerflowing of the Riuer of Guadalquivir, to the great spoile of the neighbour Countie, for passing ouer her banks, there were many persons drowned, with much cattel, and very many buildings overthrowne; but the greatest losse was at Seuille, in which port there lying many Ships of the Fleet, they were staied long from making of their preparations. And in the meane time, whilst they proceeded slowly in this action, according to the custome of that nation, who perswade themselves to doe great matters with fame onely, and repose the chiefe of their most important enterprises, in tying the enemie, and consuming him at leysure, the English armie appeared vpon their coast, as you shall heare.

The charge of the English fleet and armie was giuen to the Lord Charles Howard, high Admirall of England (who at his returne from that seruice, was by the Queenes Maiestie

A Maiestie made Earle of Nottingham) and to the Earle of Essex, being ioyned together in Commission. Being vpon their going from the coast of England, they did publish in print in feuerall languages, the true, iust, and vrgent reasons which had moued her Maiestie to vndertake the sending forth of so great an Nauie, with a full declaration of her Majesties pleasure, and so they set saile from Plymouth vpon the third of Iune, this yeare, the whole English fleet consisting of some hundred ships of all sorts, the which was diuided into foure squadrons; of the which the Lord Admirall commaunded the first, the Earle of Essex the second; the Lord Thomas Howard (now Earle of Suffolke) the third, and Sir Walter Rawleigh the fourth.

B On the tenth of Iune this fleet got sight of Caliz, or Cadiz, in Andalusia, but they kept not the order appointed for their coming in, by reason of the mistaking of their masters and their falling in the night with the West, sooner than they expected, which made them stand vpon another boord, and had somewhat disordered their fleet. The Lord Admirall (one of the Generals) was with the greatest part of the fleet ahead to the Windward of the other. General the Earle of Essex and his Squadron, the wind being then 'at South; Sir Walter Rawleigh was by reason of some chase in the night to Leeward, and afterne.

The Spaniards which were to the number of fiftie and seuen saile, rod vnder the Towne of Caliz and the Gallies being seuentene lay in the mouth of the Bay, to couer the ships and to attend the landing of the English: The Lord Admirall came to an anchor before the South-west point of the Island, called Saint Sebastians, the Earle of Essex seeing the Gallies rowe towards the landing place which hee had chosen, bore with them vntill hee made them leaue their course, and then looft vp, and came with his Squadron to another anchor by the Lord Admirall, which the rest of the fleet seeing, came all vnto them, only the Lord Thomas Howard in the Sea-honor anchored between them and the shoare. The Generals called a Councell, where it was ioynly agreed vpon by them that their men should bee landed, and the Town presently attempted on the West side, which was next to the anchoring, for which purpose the Earle of Essex Lord General, Sir Francis Vere Lord Marshall, and Sir Coniers Clifford Sergeant Maior, went to draw together as many souldiers and Gentlemen as their boats could wel carrie at once: which being done, and all their boates about the Lord Admirals ship, Sir Walter Rawleigh (who was but then arriued in the Due Repulse) came and protested against their landing, holding the attempt to be dangerous, and the performance (as the wind blew and billowe went) impossible, for indeed it was growne to a storme, whereupon it was resolved that the souldiers should bee returned to their ships, and the Spanish fleet first assailed, according to Sir Walter Rawleighs aduice.

English fleet
enters into
Cadiz roade

It was past noone before this later resolution was taken, and more than two houres after before the Souldiers could bee carried backe vnto their Shippes, some of their boates miscarrying before they could recouer their shippes: which being done, my Lord Thomas Howard weighed anchor first, to giue the other ships scope to cast about; then the rest of their principall ships, as they could get leaue of the smaller Vessels which rodde close by them, who also put themselves vnder saile; but the winde was so strong, and in such a place, as most of their ships had bene driuen too farr to leeward, if they had not come to anchour, which the chiefe leaders perceiuing, they came to a roade: Besides, the Sunne being not verie high, they thought that the bringing in of so great a fleet towards night, would so disorder them, as the attempt should bee made to their great disadvantage. So as the first day there was nothing executed by reason of these accidents. Onely, in the euening from the Bulwarke called Saint Philip, from the Ships of warre which lay at Anchor, and from the Gallies which did aduance a little towards them, some few Canon shot were bestowed vpon the Due Repulse, who answered them with the like, especially against the Gallies, when they approached, to make them know the English could entertaine them, if they came on.

That night the gallies coasting by the shore, betwixt S. Mary Port & Rotta, came to obserue what order was kept by the rereward of the English fleet, but they were soon turned backe.

A a a a a ij.

backe. On Munday early in the morning, there was a Councell held aboard the Lord Admirals Shippe, where it was resolved to weigh anchor presently, and to assaile the Spanish fleet, the which was accordingly performed, after this manner. The Lord Thomas Howard, and Sir Walter Rawleigh (for so the Generall had appointed it) bare right in the midst of the Chanell with the kings great ships which retred before them, scorning to bestowe a shot on the gallies, which discharged their Canon as they passed by them. The Lord Marshall, being in the Raine-bow, loost vp the Gallies, which lay vp with their sternes close vnder the Towne, and kept their prowes towards the Ships that should passe by them: The Raine-bow was a good while in fight, before that any other ship came vnto her, and was plyed with shot both from the gallies and from the Towne.

The Earle seeing her so ouer-matched, made haste vnto her, and so making the enimie a fairer mark than the Raine-bow (which was a farre lesser ship) caled her of many blowes. Some other ships shot, but farther off, and to lesse purpose. This encounter with the Gallies, was a verie great aduantage vnto the enemy, they hauing so many to so fewe, for in effect these two ships about mentioned performed this whole seruice. Besides, there were two Bulwarkes of the Towne on their side: all which notwithstanding, the Gallies were forced to sic before them into the Baie, two onely except, which Sir John Wingfield, comming then vp in the Vanguard, did keep so in as they durst not looke out.

During the fight with the Gallies, the wind calmed, and the English fleet went slowly ahead, most of the Spanish ships neuer staied vntill they came to Portreal which is the furthest part of the Bay, the ships moued themselves with their broad sides towards the English, that they might fight to their greater aduantage. The English masters of ships were generally of opinion, that they could not go neer without danger of running on ground; the which did much crosse the forwardnesse of the chiefe Commanders of the formost ships, led by the Lord Thomas Howard, and Sir Walter Rawleigh, whose desire being to draw as neere the enemy as they might, were notwithstanding insforced to come to anchour without the reach of Musket shot, and to attend the flood, where they fought with perpetuall volleys of the Canon, from fixe in the morning to eleuen of the clocke: the ships that followed them neereft were commanded by Sir Francis Vere, Lord Marshall, Sir George Carew, now Lord Carew, Vice-admirall of Sir Walter Rawleighs Squadron, and Generall of the artillerie, by Sir Robert Dudley, Viceadmirall of the Lord Admirals Squadron, by Sir Robert Southwell, Vice-admirall of the Lord Thomas Squadron, by Sir Robert Crosse, the Earle of Suffex being aboard him, and by Sir George Gifford. The Earle of Essex and the Lord Admirall came vp an houre before the flood, hauing beene all that morning soundly battered by the forts of Cadiz: And for that the Arke drew too much water for the narrownesse of the Chanel, where those ships did ride, who also took vp the whole breadth of the riuer, the Lord Admirall put himselfe into the Lord Thomas Howards ship.

Spanish ships
vnto aground
at Cadiz.

When the flood beganne to swell, the Lord Thomas and Sir Walter Rawleigh determined to lay the Armadoes aboard with the Queenes ships, (for the hulkes filled with Muskietiers, which were promised, came not) but as soone as soe the Spanish Admirall perceiued that the said Leaders beganne to hoyle their top-sailes, they presently cut their Cables by the halfe, and draue a shoare, sauing as many of themselves as they could carrie at once in their boates; of the rest some were slaine in the furie, and the rest taken to mercie.

The Admirall of the Spaniards called the Philip, a goodlie and a powerfull ship, tooke fire before she could be entred, by an inch of a match fired, and laid in the mouth of a barrell of powder in her gunner roome: But the Lord Thomas Howard and Sir Walter Rawleigh saued the Mathew and Andrew, Viceadmirall and Rereadmirall of the Spanish fleet, the other ships were set on fire by certain Negros, who leapt into the riuer and saued themselves by swimming.

The India fleet of merchants being about 40 saile, were gotten vp 4 English miles into the riuer; for the redemption of which the K. officers in Cadiz offered the English 600 thousand

A thousand pounds sterling: The Earle of Essex was often prest to haue them first taken and then solde, but hee beleued that such as offered the composition had means how to pay the money from which hee could not bee dissuaded, vntill he saw the ships all in a flame, which the duke of Medina Sydonia commanded to bee done.

Spanish ships
red by themselves.

The number of the Spanish Fleet was fiftie seauen ships, foureteeen of the kings men of warre, and three great Fly-boats which brought the Treasure from Portricco, the rest were Merchants, all faire ships, full of good ordnance, and richly laden than euer any Fleet was that went to the West Indies. Here also I should remember, that during the fight, the gallies and Fort of Pontall, plaied continually vpon the English ships.

B The English hauing obtained this great victorie by Gods especial fauor, the earle resolved to follow it with all possible expedition; and so immediately hee dispatched the Sergeant Maior to get as many Gentlemen and old fouldiers into boates, as might well bee landed at once, which being performed, his Lordship and the Lord Marshall went to discover the landing, and finding it good, he put betwixt two and three thousand men on land, returning the boates to fetch my Lord Admirall with his seconds.

English land at Cadiz.

C These being put in battell, he commanded the Marshall to march directly with his regiment to the other side of the lland, which was halfe a mile from their landing, his Lordship with the rest that were on shoare following him speedily. Becing come to the Southside, the Earle diuided his troupes equally, sending the one halfe with Sir Coniers Clifford, Sir Charles Blunt, and Sir Thomas Gerard, to breake downe a bridge called El Ponte del Suasso, at a streit, that keepes the passage from the maine, marching himselfe with the other halfe towards the Towne: the like directions hee gaue for the seconds, to bee equally diuided, and sent these two waies. When hee came within halfe a mile of the Towne, a cornet of horse, with some shot, made offer to skirmish, but they were soone put to flight: when they came within musket shot of the Towne, there sallied forth great troupes both horse and foot, vnder fauor of their walls, with their Cornets and Ensignes, which the earle discouering from a little hill as they fell out of the towne, hee gaue direction to the formost of the troups being some thirty pikes, and as many shot, to run away as soone as the enimie offered to charge them, the which they did, giuing the enemy courage to come farther on than they first intended, but the English charged them so fast, as they had scarce time to recouer the Port and shut it.

D The Horsemen which sallied out of the Towne, were called the Knights of hires: they could not get into the Towne being so closely followed by the English foot, whereupon they forsook their horses, & leapt ouer the walls at the west corner, by which the English also entred. The English in pursuing the Spaniards staied not vntill they came to the foot of their formost rampar, and then the Earle diuided his troupes equally, consisting of twelue hundred men, keeping the one halfe with himselfe on the Southside of the Port, and sending the Marshall with the rest to the Northside. The Earle of Essex, on this side, with much adoe found meanes for himselfe and some few others, to get vp, where he saw on the one side a Parapet of stone almost inaccessible, for that neither the bulwark nor any part of the Courtine was finished. There the English did first beate the enimie from the Parapet, yet they lay open to another square bulwark of stone, which flanked them within a pikes length, but they did so beate the bulwark with shot, as the enimie did them little harme: Notwithstanding, considering that they must quier the place for that their men lay vncovered, the earle sought for an entrance, which being found, the leape downe being a pikes length, hee commanded one Ensign which stood next him, being Lieutenant to the Earle of Suffex to enter, which after he and foure or five other fouldiers more had done, the like charge was giuen to Captain Pooley, who carried the Generals red Ensigne, whereupon Sir Arthur Savage, Captain of the Earles company, with diuers Gentlemen followers and seruants to his Lordship took the same course. In the mean time, whilst that thirtie or fortie were thus entred into the Towne, the Lord Marshall who besides his own soldiers had with him the generals gard of Partizans,

Cadiz entred by the English.

A a a a iij.

forced

forced the Port, which his Lordship espying, being not ten paces from it, hee presently turned from the leape, and entred that way, carrying with him all the chiefe Aduenturers of the armie, and worthy Sir John Wingfield (who before had slaine a Commaunder of the enemies with his pike, and was cast behind) hauing a shot in the thigh, but hauing recovered one of the enemies horses, hee came vp prefendly to second them, not staying for any dressing.

From the entrance of the English into the Towne, vntill they came vnto the Market place, the enemy fought with them continually, and kept them play about halfe an houre before they could recouer it, yet at the last hauing wonne the place from them, they notwithstanding so flanked it, and kept their houses (which were built like castles) as they slue many of the English, and among others that valiant gentleman Sir John Wingfield, who though vnarmed, offered himselfe continually to all daungers, so as hee was shot in the head from the castle which did continually play vpon those that made good this market place.

At length they got into the houses which annoyed them, and slue those they found in them: And as the Lord Generall before it was darke cleared all the abouts, but the castle, or that which they call the vpper Towne, so the Lord Marshall cleared all the other side towards the water, and brought those that were in the Fort and Bulwarke of Saint Philip, to sue for mercie: which done, the Generals entred the Towne-house, whither all the chiefe citizens came to kisse their feet.

The next morning, both the Castle and forts yeelded to their mercie, without any other conditions. The poore and baser sort were dismissed, and all women of qualitie whatsoeuer. The Corregidor deliuered his sword vnto the Generall, offering to bee his prisoner, and to giue for himselfe and some others of good place twelue thousand ducats: no man was slaine vpon cold blood: it was held there were about two thousand Spaniards slaine in the furie of the fight.

Besides the chiefe Commanders of the armie, who had giuen many proofs of their valor and experience in martiall affairs, there were many gallant gentlemen which serued worthily in this action, whome in the end the Generall rewarded with the honour of knight-hood. I may not forget to make particular mention of Sir Samuel Bagdol who receiued eight wounds with the pike, and sword, whome the Lord Generall (meeting in the market place all bloudie) knighted, to the encouragement of all others, before that either the castle was taken in, or the whole Towne wonne.

The towne was verie rich, and did much enrich the armie, but the worthiest men got least, for they were fighting, whilest the baser sort intended nothing but pillage and spoile. There was good store of brasse ordnance, and though no great, yet very happy sort of poulder, for the English hauing not about twelue hundred men, their poulder was spent, and they were ouerlaid on all sides, with the number of the enemies shot, who hurt and slue their men from the houses: when they had made them quit the streets, they found by chance by the market place, such poulder as they had brought for their owne defence, and the supply of their men that should fight there, with the which they serued their turnes, till their succours were entred and the Towne assured.

King of Spaine
besides at Cadix,

The Prouisions of Sea for the kings fleet, as masts, pike-staues, deale-boards, caskes, and all kinde of shot, cables, anchors, wine, oyle, vinegar, rice, figs, and such like things, were of great value, and will not be supplied by the king of Spain in many yeares. And as for his losse in shipping, the kings Officers of his naue, who were then taken prisoners, did protest with sighes and teares, that nineteene of the ships which they had spoiled, with the S. Mathew and Saint Andrew, which they had taken, were able to bear the greatest part of ships that the king hath in all the world. So as laying together the running of the Kings Fleet, the enioying of some of his great ships of warre, which before had neuer bene done; the burning of the Indian fleet of Merchants, whose lading the prisoners confest to haue bene worth eight Millions; the impeaching him to send that yeare to releue his men at the West-Indies; and so by consequence to receiue no treasure from thence the next yeare; the taking of the Citie, wherein were foure thousand foot, and fixe hundred horse

A horse of the chiefe caualiers of Andalusia; the sacking of this place, from whence he is to set out all his fleets for the West Indies, and the spoyle of all his prouisions there: All this, I say, layed together, will proue one of the greatest blowes that euer Spaine receiued. Yet all this was done in one day, and without any great losse; for in the whole fleet there was not any man of note, but Sir John Wingfield, slaine. At the assault and winning of the towne many gentlemen were hurt, and some slaine; and yet not many, considering the strength of the place, and the nature of the attempt.

As soone as the English fleet was entred into the road, and that the Spaniards had discovered the Dutch squadron in the fight, immediately, both at Seuille, Saint Lucar, and some other places, they did not onely arrest all such Dutch ships as dealt with them friendly by way of trade and marchandise, but did confiscat their goods, and did imprison the marchants and owners of the same, and, as it was reported, did intreat many of them verie cruelly.

The English being masters of the towne of Cadiz, the two Generals had an especiall care for the well-intreating of all religious persons, both men and women, whom they caused to be freely transported out to port Santa Maria, without any ranfome or other molestation; and, giuing the bishop of Cusco free passage without ranfome, they let him vnderstand, that they came not to deal with Church-men, or vnarmed men, and men of peace, or with children; neither was it their intent to make this voyage for gold, silver, or any other riches; but that their onely comming was to meet with their dishonourable practises, and many injuries, and to deale with men of warre and valour, for the defence of the true honour of England; and to let them vnderstand, that whensoever they attempted any base and dishonourable practise against their Soueraigne Queen and Majesty, that it should be reuenged.

The day before the English departed from Cadiz, being the first of Iulie, the citie was burnt, the Ladies, Nunnes, and other women and children, being safely sent to Saint Marie port, with their apparell and Jewels, euery man being forbidden to search them vpon paine of death.

I haue thought good to annex vnto the end of this relation, for a remembrance to posteritie, the names of such as receiued the Order of Knighthood from the Generals, as a testimonie of their well-defending in this worthe action.

|                                 |                                   |
|---------------------------------|-----------------------------------|
| Sir Samuel Bagdol .      | Sir Christopher Heydon .   |
| Sir Arbuthnot Savage .   | Sir Francis Popham .       |
| The Earle of Suffex .    | Sir Philip Woodhouse .     |
| The Lord Burke .         | Sir Alexander Clifford .   |
| Com. Lodowike .          | Sir Maurice Barkley .      |
| Sir William Howard .     | Sir Charles Blunt .        |
| Sir George Dennewe .     | Sir George Gifford .       |
| Sir Henrie Neneh .       | Sir Robert Crosse .        |
| Sir Edwin Rich .         | Sir James Esclandmore .    |
| Sir Richard Leuen .      | Sir John Leigh .           |
| Sir Peter Egmont .       | Sir John Leigh alias Lee . |
| Sir Anthonie Aspley .    | Sir Richard Weston .       |
| Sir Henrie Leonard .     | Sir Richard Wainman .      |
| Sir Richard Lewison .    | Sir James Weston .         |
| Sir Horatio Vere .       | Sir Richard Ruddle .       |
| Sir Arthur Thragmorton . | Sir Robert Alesfeld .      |
| Sir Miles Corbet .       | Sir William Monson .       |
| Sir Edward Conway .      | Sir John Bowes .           |
| Sir Oliuer Lambert .     | Sir Edward Bowes .         |
| Sir Anthonie Cooke .     | Sir Humphrey Druel .       |
| Sir John Townsend .      | Sir Amias Preston .        |

Names of such as were knighted at Cadix.

Sir Robert Newington.
Sir John Bucke.
Sir John Morgan.
Sir John Aldridge.
Sir John Aschdown.
Sir Mathew Browne.
Sir John Alton.
Sir Thomas Gates.
Sir Gille Merricke.
Sir Thomas Smith.
Sir William Pooley.

Sir Thomas Palmer.
Sir John Stafford.
Sir Robert Louch.
Sir John Gilbert.
Sir William Harney.
Sir John Gray.
D. Christopher prince of Portugal.
Sir John Vanderfuerd, Ad-mirall of the Hollanders.
Sir Robert Dudley.

8 August.

Thus this triumphant English armie left Cadiz, hauing receiued from the duke of Medina Sidonia nine and thirtie English prisoners, which had bene slaues in the Spaniards hands: Which done, they past along the coast of Portugall, they tooke, spoiled, and burnt Farol, they marche into the countrey thereabouts, after which exploit they shap-Farol burnt by the English.

Having done this great affront to the king of Spaine, they left him full of rage, and de-Fleet of Spaniards prepared against England fire of reuenge: whereupon presently after the returne of the English, he gaue commandement to the Adelantado of Castille, to prepare a mightie fleet; wherein he employed great care and diligence, so as it was readie the same yeare. But this fleet had a farre different successe to that of England. It consisted of fourescore ships, which went out of Lisbon the eighth of October 1596. They coasted along Galicia, to goe and joyne with the Generall of Biscaie, where they had leuiued some troupes of souldiers: the Adelantado comming to double cap S. Vincent in the night, it seemes he mistooke his reckoning, and fell short of the cap, where they were taken with a cruell storme, in the which five and foure of their ships were cast away, on Symon and Iudas day, and the rest were so shaken with the storme, as they had great difficultie to saue them: so as their enterprize proved vaine that yeare.
 Spanish fleet cast away.

This ye also they treated in Spaine of the canonizing of blessed S. Raymond, the which was afterwards effected at Rome. They renewed their suit vnto the Pope, which had bin made many yeares before to diuers of his predecessors. After that instance had bin made vnto his Holinesse by the townes of the realme of Arragon, who had sent Paul Costabile, Generall of the preaching Priests, of which Order S. Raymond had bene also Generall, the Pope hauing pronounced that they should passe on to perfect this businesse, the Archbishop of Tarazona came to Barcelona with two bishops, and the Proctor generall of S. Dominicke, to reuiue Saint Raymond's boile: the which was done with great ceremonie, and authenticall writings sent to Rome to prosecute the rest. About the same time Luca Calmacanti, Chamberlaine to the Pope, arrived, being sent with two cardinals hats by him, to Francis d'Avila, Archdeacon of Toledo, and to Ferdinand Aluarez de Gueuara, President of the royall Councell, who had bene newly created cardinals, being exhorted by his Holinesse to passe withall speed to Rome, as they did that Winter: so as in the beginning of the next yeare they came into Italie, hauing a good opportunitie to passe in those galleys which were come from Genoua, whither the duke of Maqueda should also haue gone, being appointed by the king to be Viceroy of Sicile: but he was stayed many monethes by some smaller accidents. And there arrived also Alphonso Gariglia, who required a great aid of money for the prince of Transilvania, to maintain the warre against the Turke, who found the king verie well affected, notwithstanding that hee was enforced to maintain warre in diuers places, to his exceeding great toyle and charge. Yet he satisfied that princes desire with a bountifull hand, and gaue free libertie to the Popes Agents, to buy a quantitie of corn in his realmes, to saue the state of the Church. And then about the end of September, the Indian fleet arrived safely at Seuille, being verie rich, the which did much comfort the Spaniards after the great losses they had sustai-Communication of S. Raymond desired by the Spaniards.
 Quarrels in the Venetian embassadors house.

A sustained by the English armie. There was nothing did more afflict the minds of the Spaniards, than their hatred and disdain of the English, being not able to endure, not onely to be troubled in their traffique to the Indies, and their rich fleets to be layd for, piercing euen into the heart of America, but also to inuade the continent of Spaine with a royall armie, and to land there by by force, incountring, spoiling, and burning their ships euen in their ports. Being therefore tormented with a desire of reuenge, and grieved that the last yeares fleet, being ruined by tempest, could not effect what they had designed, there was a new order giuen, that many galleons should bee armed, and new troupes of souldiers should bee leuiued, not onely in Spaine, but also in Italie.
 B The king therefore, touching matters of warre, gaue an extraordinary authoritie to the Cont Fuentes, who was newly returned from the gouernement of Flanders: They caused all ships of foreine countries to be stayed within their ports, with an intent to make vse of them in this armie: but the king falling verie sicke, this preparation was somewhat stayed, they being doubtfull of his life, both in respect of his great age, and the violence of his infirmities. And so the souldiers which were leuiued for this seruice, were sent to lodge, some in Galicia, and some in Biscaie, to bee fully imbarcked when time should serue.

The important cause concerning Marchants and Bankers, was now in question in Spaine; they hauing for many yeares furnished the king with money for his warres in Flanders, and other places, a businesse which troubled all the Bankes of Europe, as one depends vpon another, with their subalternall credits and interests. Wherefore some princes were moued by an act of true bountie, to helpe their subjects that were marchants, least they should faile in their credit. Besides the kings souldiers being, by reason thereof, in great want, they fell to mutinies. In this businesse therefore of so great importance, and wherein the king pretended to bee defrauded in diuers man-
 C
 D
 E
 F
 gers, of many hundred thousands of crownes, this controuersie with the kings officers was long and tedious, the marchants at the last beeing well content to come to any reasonable agreement; the which at the length was made about the end of this yeare. And for that it had been discovered, that Girolamo Lomellino had sent great summes of money into Fraunce, the which had bene verie prejudiciall vnto Spaine, and forbidden, by reason of the warre which continued yet with France, he was subject to a rigorous punishment.

There fell out a great accident in the Venetian embassadours palace at Madrid, whose name was Augustine Nani, a man of great judgement, and of a generous spirit, in maintaining the dignitie of that charge which hee held neere the king: The Prouost Marshall of the citie would haue apprehended one who had retired into his palace, flying from the Sergeant which followed him, hoping hee should be safe there, as in a place of franchise, according to the vse of Courts: the Prouost carrying himselfe too imperiously (as such people are accustomed to doe) a gentleman of the embassadours, of the house of Badoero, and his Secretarie, comming at this noyse, could not endure it; so as from great words they fell to deeds, and the Prouosts wand was broken (the which they are accustomed to carrie, as a marke of their authoritie) with other accidents; so as most of the embassadours familie came running at the noyse: whereupon the kings officers complained. But matters were afterwards tempered by the king, with the equitie and respect which ought to bee had to the accident and person. Yet the State of Venice, being willing to take away all causes of distast, that might grow, made a speedie election of a new embassadour, which was Francis Soranzo; but hee past not into Spaine vntill the next yeare, all shadowes of dislike being in the meane time vanished away, taking all occasions to shew mutuall kindnesse betwixt them and the embassadour Nani, who was extraordinarily favoured by the king and prince; and at his departure hee was made a knight, and honoured with rich presents.

They were verie carefull this yeare in Spaine, to preuent the English, least they should haue some new opportunitie to annoy them, as they had done at Cadiz; which citie and

1597 Spaniards incensed against the English.

Preparation in Spaine for a new armie.

Controuersie in Spaine touching
the Bankers.

Quarrels in the Venetian em-bassadors house.

1597

and castle they did fortifie better, with all other places vpon the coast, the earle of Fuentes lying continually towards the sea with great forces, and hauing good garrisons in the coast townes, hee sent his horsemen to runne along the coast, that they might bee free from feare.

Marriage of the prince of Spain published.

And for that the king of Spaine, by the continuall indisposition of his bodie, the great trouble of his mind, hauing such a world of weightie affaires, could not hope for any long life, he sought to prouide for the future gouernement of his subiects. Wherefore he did publish the future marriage of his sonne D. Philip vnto the eldest daughter of Ferdinand Archduke of Austria, whom some call Gregoria Masimiliana, others Marie. But whilest they made preparation for the solemnitie of this mariage, and sent to the Pope for dispensations, as well for this, as for the future mariage betwixt the Archduke Albert, and the Infanta D. Isabella, they had newes that the sayd princeesse was suddenly dead, hauing left the greatnesse of this world, to attaine vnto a better life in heaven.

Preparation for the island voyage.

The fortunat successe of the English the last yeare at Cadiz, hauing affronted the king of Spaine at his owne doores, gaue them courage to make new attempts this yeare, and to send forth a goodlie fleet to sea, vnder the commaund of the earle of Essex, who was both Admirall at sea, and Generall of the land forces. This fleet consisted of an hundred and twentie saile, whereof there were threescore men of warre, the rest were victuallers, and ships for transportation of souldiers, and to attend the English fleet. The Estates of the vnited Prouinces sent ten tall flie-boates vnder the commaund of Monsieur de Duniord. This fleet was victualled for three monethes, with large allowance, with a supplie of apparell for the mariners and souldiers. It was diuided into three squadrons: the Admirals Squadron, the Lord Thomas Howards Squadron, who was Vice-admirall, and Sir Walter Rawleighs Squadron, being Rere-admirall. The Nederland flie-boats were commaunded by their owne Admirall. There were six thousand souldiers appointed for the land seruice, with ten peeces of ordnance for the field and batterie, with all necessarie prouisions. And there were in this fleet about five hundred voluntaries, of knights and gentlemen. The chiefe Commaunders of these land forces, were, the Earle of Essex Generall, the Lord Montjoy his Lieutenant generall, Sir Francis Vere Marshall of the field, Sir George Carew Master of the ordnance, Sir Ferdinando Gorge, Sergeant Major of the armie, Sir Christopher Blunt Colonell generall of the foot, with all other officers necessarie in such an action. In all this great fleet there were not aboue eightene or twentie ships of her Majesties royall Nanie, the names of which, and of the Captaines that commaunded in them, I leaue to a particular discourse written of this voyage, by a worthie knight, who was an eye witness, and an actor in it; the which I hope hee will suffer to cometo the presse.

Designes of the English fleet.

This goodlie armie being readie, it seemed they had three seuerall designes, to defeat the king of Spaines fleet, commaunded by D. Martin de Padiglia, earle of S. Gadea, and Adelantado Major of Castille, if they met it at sea, or to ruine it in the harbour of Farol, if they found it there; and to take all fleets of treasure, or any East or West Indian fleets they should find at sea, in the way to Spaine: and lastly, that they would take the island of the Terceres, which they held to bee an action of great importance. With this resolution they put to sea with this gallant fleet; but neither of these enterprises succeeded: for bending their course directly for Farol, they were incountered with verie stormie weather, and contrarie windes, so as the whole fleet was scattered, and many of the shippes in verie great danger, a great part of the fleet beeing forced to put backe againe into Plymouth. The shippe wherein the Generall was, had a verie dangerous leake, and her mastes crackt in diuers places; yet hee held it out as long as possibly hee could, till in the end her vpper workes gaue way, and her maine beames did teare, so as they looked hourelly when the Oretoppe would fall, and the ordnance sinke downe into the Keele. Whereupon hee was forced to put backe to Plymouth, where hee found a great part of the

1597

A the fleet. There they repaired their shippes, and the earle tooke another, his owne being made vsueruiceable: But they were kept in by continuall stormes and contrarie windes, vntill their three monethes victuals was in a manner spent, and the sicknesse growne great in the flie boats which carried the land armie. Whereupon the Generall had order to discharge his land forces, all but a thousand old souldiers which had bene drawne out of the Low Countries; so as they were made vnable to land any forces at Farol. After which there was a project made by the earle, to send in certaine ships of fire, and to bumethe king of Spaines fleet as it should lye in the harbour, without any danger to the queenes ships. Which counsell being allowed of at Court, they put the second time to sea. But some of good judgement in the fleet; held this exploit vnseasable, they hauing not sufficient forces to performe it; neither could they attempt it without apparent daunger, as indeed it succeeded not; for that the Saint Mathew, one of the chiefe ships which should haue bene employed in that action, had lost her fore-mast, and was put backe into England, as they pretended: So as hauing no meanes to doe any seruice vpon the fleet at Farol, they concluded for the intercepting of the Indian fleet, and defeating of the Adelantado, if he did put to sea: for there was no meanes to take in the island of Tercera, their land forces being discharged. Whereupon they shaped their course for the islands, where they layed wait for the Indian fleet; but they escaped them, and got into Tercera road. What the reasons of the missing of this Indian fleet were, and what was else done at the islands by this armie, I leaue to an ample relation of him who was an eye witness, and did well obserue it. And so, hauing failed in all their designes, this fleet returned home into England.

The Spaniards did in like manner arme. There was the regiment of Alexander de Monti, consisting of 15 companies, embarked at Naples, the which had like to haue bene cast away in a storme vpon the coast of Romania: In the end they came to Genoua, and there joyned with the troupes of Gambalaita, all which were transported into Spaine in Doria gallies, passing from Barcelona to Cadiz, where a part of the fleet lay: there they embarked their land forces in certaine galleons, being six thousand Italians, going towards the Groine, with an intent (being joyned with the Adelantado, and the rest of the fleet) to make some attempt vpon England. But on the eight of September they had so cruell a storme, as they were scattered from their Admirall, and in exceeding great daunger, whereof some were cast away. A galleon, wherein Alexander de Monti was, and some of his companies, hauing lost her maine mast, was driuen to the Canaries, and after that to the coast of Africke, hauing lost his pilot with most of his mariners: there he ran her on ground, and recovered Mazagon, where he furnished himselfe of all that hee wanted; and then he past towards the strait, meeting with an English ship, which sought long with him; but in the end hee tooke her: Then joyning with D. Pedro de Toledo, with some other vessels, they scoured the coast of Barbarie, securing the coasts of Spaine, and in the end they came to winter in Saint Marie port. The rest of this Spanish fleet, after this cruell storme, for the most part, recovered Farol. Thus both fleets this yeare, without any fruits, put themselves to the hazard of the sea, and receiued great losses.

The warres hauing continued long betwixt France and Spaine, many princes desired to see the miseries of Christendome at an end. Pope Clement the eight as much affecting this generall peace as any of his predecessors, considering the great miseries which the diuisions of the French and Spaniards did cause, and that the Turke made his profit thereof, and had incroached farre into Christendome, hee resolved to reconcile these two kings of Spaine and France. Father Bonauenture Calistagione, a Sicilian borne, Generall of the Franciscanes (and whil after wards was made Patriarke of Constantinople) was sent by him into Spaine; vnder colour to visit the Conuents of his Order; but in effect it was to sound king Philip whether he had any inclination to a peace with France: where hee found all things well disposed, and the Spaniards desirous to change the doubtfull euents of a troublesome warre, with the assured and more profitable effects of peace; his old age, his son young, whom he desired to make, and to leaue him his Estates quiet, his eldest daughter, to whom he would give the Low Countries, marrying her to cardinal Albert of Austria, who like new Lords should haue need of the loue and good neigh-

Spaniards preparation at sea.

*Mediation for a peace betwixt France and
Spaine.*

neighbourhood of a French king, the French being vnited, and their ciuile warres ended, they were likely to transport the warre into his countries; hauing taken Amiens by force, euen in view of his armie. All these considerations made the king of Spaine incline to a peace, not onely with the French, but with the Queene of England and the vnited Prouinces of the Netherlands. Calatagiron being returned to Rome, assured the Pope that hee had found a disposition and desire of peace in king Philip, and that he was wearie of the warres. So the Pope continuing in this good desire, sent this Franciscan into France, to persuaide the king to peace and friendship with the king of Spaine. Alexander cardinall of Florence, his Holinesse Legat in France, vnderstanding the Popes pleasure, together with Calatagiron, persuaided the king to yeeld vnto a peace. And on the other side, by the exhortations of the Patriarke Caietan, his Holinesse Nuntio at Madrid, the king of Spaine referred the whole treatie of the said peace to his nephew cardinall Albert.

Whilest that Calatagiron went to Brussels, to sollicite the cardinall to send the deputies to Veruins, the French king aduertised all his allies, to the end they might be comprehended in this accord with the Spaniard, if they thought good. The queene of England (who had more annoyed the Spaniard than all the princes of Christendome) refused to be comprehended in the accord, and so did the Estates of the vnited Prouinces, who sent their embassadours to the French king, to dissuade him from a peace with the Spaniard. The king of Spaine did greatly desire a peace with them, and sought it by the meanes of his kinsmen and allies, who, at his request, sent their embassadours to that end into England, and the vnited Prouinces, but without effect. The king of Spaine hearing of all their answers, and being out of hope of a peace with the English and Hollanders, caused them to proceed in the treatie with the French: whereupon the deputies of either king came to Veruins: Who hauing long disputed, and being often ready to breake off, almost in despaire, in the end a peace was concluded, in Iune this yeare 1598. The deputies for the French king were, Monsieur de Bellieuue, Counsellor of State, and Monsieur de Syllery, Counsellour also of State, and President of the Court of Parliament at Paris: And for the Catholike king, John Richardot, knight, President of his priuie Councell, John Baptista Taxis, Commaunder of los Santos, of the Order of Saint James, and of his Councell of State and warre, and Lewis Verreichen knight, chiefe Secretarie and Treasurer of the Charters of the said Councell of State: who according to their Commissions concluded in the name of the said kings.

That the treatie of peace made at Castle Cambresis, in the yeare 1559, betwixt the kings of France and Spaine, should be newly confirmed and obserued.

That all hostilitie and quarels should cease, with promise not to annoy nor prejudice one another.

That their subiects should haue freetraffique.

That all places taken since the treatie of Castle Cambresis, should be restored of either part within two monethes.

That the said kings and the Infanta of Spaine, reserued vnto themselves all the rights, actions, and pretensions, by reason of the said realms, countries, or seigniories, whereunto they or their predecessors haue not expressly renounced, to make their pursuit by some friendlie course, or by justice, and not by armes.

The force and life of king Philip began to decline, which he foreseeing, hee was desirous to effect the promise which he had made to the Archduke Albert, his nephew, and if the marriage betwixt him and the Infanta Isabella his daughter were not consummated, yet they might be assured by the cession of the prouinces, which he meant to make in fauour of it. Whereupon, the sixth of May, he caused to be read at Madrid (in the presence of prince Philip his only son, who was then about 26 yerres old, of D. Gomes d'Avila, marques of Vellada, Lord Steward of the princes house, D. Christopher de Mera, earle of Castell, Roderigo, great Commaunder of the Alcantara; D. John d'Idiaquez, great Commaunder of Leon, all three Counsellours of State, and Nicholas Diamant, knight, President and Chauncellour of Brabant, with La Zoo, Secretarie of the affaires of the Low Countries) the contract, by the which he did institute the future spouses, and their heires, of what

sex

A of what sexe soeuer, soueraigne Lords of all the Prouinces of the Low-countries, of the franche countie of Bourgondie, and of the countie of Charolois, with condition that the donation and cession should be void, and of no force, in case the marriage were not accomplished. That the eldest of the lawfull children issuing of this marriage, should be preferred before the younger, and the male the female, jointly in all the Prouinces, without any diuision: That for want of lawfull heires it should returne to the Crowne of Spaine: And that they should not alienate any part thereof without the consent of the heires and successors of the king of Spaine. That the Princeesse, heire of the Netherlands, being a maiden or widow, should marrie the king of Spaine, or the prince his Sonne; and if shee haue neither will nor power to doe it with the Popes dispensation, shee shall not take any aliance but with the consent of the kings of Spaine: And so of the heires and descendents of the future Spouses. That al negotiation and traffik to the East and West Indies shall bee forbidden them and their subiects. That the Arch-duke suruiuing the Infanta, hee should hold those Countries during his life. That hauing children, their portions should bee assigned them, vntill that the elder after the decesse of the father should take possession of the whole. That onely the Catholike, Apostolike and Romish religion should bee maintained in the said Prouinces, and in case of contrauention by them or their descendents, they should lose their rights to the said Countries.

C Prince Philip did consequently ratifie this donation, more (as some thought) to please the king his father, than for any good liking hee had of it, for the depriued him of many goodlie and rich Prouinces: And the Infanta his Sister hauing accepted the transaction, sent her fathers and bothers letters Patents to the Gouvernours and Councels of the Prouinces, with their letters which promised all assistance for the warre, and her owne which contained a declaration of this accord. Thus the Archduke, as the Historie saith, married a great Princeesse, a troublesome quarrell, and a long sure, all in one day. From which time shee did write vnto him, as a wife doth vnto her husband, taking vpon her the titles of all those Countries and Prouinces, and sending him a procuracion to take possession in her name. The empresse, mother to D. Albertus, and sister to the king of Spaine, receiued the promise of marriage for her Sonne, and did also make a promise in the name of the Archduke Albert.

The king of Spaine would moreouer shew, that in giuing his daughter the Infanta to the Archduke, hee would not abandon them for want of money to continue the warre against the vnited Prouinces: hee made a new contract with Camillo, Soniolla, Adaluenenda and Grimaldi, to whome hee did reassigne and confirme the reuenues of Spaine, and reuoked the edict which had beene made at Pardo, vpon condition that for an ouerplus and new loane, they should furnishe him with seuen millions and two hundred thousand ducats, paying euerie month two hundred and fifty thousand ducats to the Archduke Albert, so supply the charges of the low countie warres, & that for the space of eighteen monethes, the first payment whereof should be due the last of Ianuarie, in the said yeare 1598, the whole summe for the Low countries amounting to foure millions and a halfe. The rest should be paid in Spaine, or where hee should command, after the rate of an hundred and fiftie thousand ducats monthly, for eightene monethes together: both which parties amount to 7200000 ducats.

The king of Spaine sent in the beginning of this yere 4 thousand Spaniards, Besognes, into the Low countries, to fortifie the Archduke Albert, whome as it seemed did not greatly trust the Wallons. D. Sancho de Leua was their chiefe commaunder ouer foure Colonels: they came by sea in 40 ships, the lesser got safely into Callice for that the Estates ships had bin forced by fowle weather to weigh anchor, yet they took one of the greatest; in the which was Alonso Sanchez of Villareal with 150 Spaniards, and made foure more to runne on ground to saue the foldiers.

The States of the vnited Prouinces, finding the number of thei shipping to bee great, & that they wanted employment for them, not daring to traffik into Spaine, where their ships and goods were daily arrested, and their men imprisoned, whereby in time their Navigation would decay, they resolued to seeke their fortunes at the East

Bbbbbb

and

Articles of the cession.Donation ratified by Prince Philip.King of Spaine makes a new contract for the payment of his debts.Spaniards sent into the Low-countries.Vnited Prouin-ces saile vnto
the Indies.Queene of England & Estates of the Low Countries refuse a peace with the Spaniard.Peace betwixt Spaine and France.Contents of the articles of the peace.Cession of the Low Countries
to the Infanta
of Spaine.

The generall Historie of Spaine.

Lib. 31.

and West Indies, whether the Spaniards would neuer allow them to goe, whereupon they gave leaue, and assisted certaine priuat Merchants, to goe and seeke trade at the East Indies, and in those Ilands whereas the Portugals had no commaund, so as this yere there went to the number of eightie saile out of Holland and Zealand, towards the East and West Indies, Bressil, Castell de Mine, to the coast of Africke, and Guinee, whose successe was diuers. Many of these vnder the charge of Baltazar Moucheron, had commandement from Prince Maurice and the State, to meet at the Iland del Principe. Julian of Cleerhagen as Generall in the absence of Moucheron, and Gerard Stribos as Admirall, parted in March with fise Ships, one hundred and fifty Souldiers, and two hundred Mariners, who arriued somewhat late in August at the said Iland: where Cleerhagen found a ship, in the which a Nephew of Moucheron commanded, who being well knowne in the Iland by reason of his trading there, was a meanes that the Generall became Master of it without any opposition, for hee drew the Gouvernour and chiefe Officers of the place to come aboard, where they made them good cheare. After which the Generall acquainted them with his Commission, and to what end hee was come. The Ilanders seeing themselves surpris'd, feemed content, and yielded to their wils: then, having taken an oath to Cleerhagen, they all landed, whereas the Generall in Moucheron's name was proclaimed Generall of the Iland.

Surprize of the Iland del prin-cipe.

Three daies after the taking of the oath, the Portugals and Ilanders conspired against the Hollanders, and came suddenly with great fury to charge Moucheron's men, but they were repulst and scattered in the Iland; but vpon proclamation of a pardon they returned, and submitted themselves againe to the Hollanders; whereupon there was a new accord made betwixt them, but it continued not aboue fixe weekes, by reason of Cleerhagen's disordered actions, who did not obserue the course that was prescribed him, neither was hee carefull to build the forts which had bene drawne, hauing good meanes. The Portugals and Ilanders seeing his carelesnesse, made a new attempt against him, which being discovered vnto the Hollanders, they seized vpon the Padre Vicario, meaning to execute him, but as Francis Fort with the Iudge Steuens Quarlesmo, went to visit this Vicario's house, they were slaine by his slaues, which caused a new tumult, whereupon the Vicario was condemned and hanged with one of his confederates. This death made them send to D. Antonio de Meneses Gouvernour of the Iland of Saint Thomas for succours, who a month after sent the Gouvernour of Castell de Mine with fise hundred souldiers, by whose perswasion they were resolu'd to make warre against Moucheron's men.

The Generall Cleerhagen fell into disgrace with his Companie, and died of griefe: Stribos the Admirall succeeded him, and dyed also with ouer-toiling himselfe in the fortifications. Whereupon the Hollanders erected a Councell of foure to gouerne the estate of their affaires in the Iland: but after a months sufferance, their Souldiers being somewhat wasted, they began to faint and to be out of hope of succours, so as they should not be able to maintaine themselves against so many enemies. Whereupon they abandoned the Iland, and setting their fort on fire, they imbarcked, there comming supplies of men and victuals vnto them from Moucheron within fiftene daies after, but it was too late: and so the Iland was soone wonne and as soone lost.

Coast of Spaine annoyed by the English.

This yere in the Spring the Spaniards began to apprehend some new attempt of the English vpon their coast, for that those Seas were full of Englishmen of warre: yea, there was a fleet set forth by the Earle of Cumberland, which after it had committed some spoile about Cascais, lay many daies in the mouth of the Riuer of Lisbon, keeping in the galleons of Portugal, which lay ready to go to the East-Indies, but it was without any fruits, the West-Indian fleet being safely arriued at Seuille, after that it had bene scattered by a storme neere vnto the Terceres.

The treasure which came in this Indian fleet gaue the kings ministers meanes to provide more commodiously for the great affaires of so many kingdomes, and to continue the war, which hee maintained in diuers places. Wherefore they leuied new men to send into the Low-Countries, and others to man certaine vessels which were sent forth to bri-

G

H

I

K

L

M

dle

The generall Historie of Spaine.

Lib. 31.

A die the attempts of the Turkes vpon the coast of Spaine, and Africke: They were fise and twenty gallies vnder the charge of D. Pedro de Toledo, whereof some were of Spaine, and some of Naples: there were two regiments of Italians in them, the one was commanded by Alexander de Monti, the other by Cesare d'Euoli; but hee dying before at the Groine, they were both then commanded by Monti. These gallies hauing not met with any Pyrats at sea, past into Barbarie, where they landed a good number of their men, with the which Monti did presently march, & set vpon a towne, the which was taken by scaling making slaues, with great store of wealth: yet this could not be so soon executed, but many horsemen Moores, came posting thither from the neighbour places, so as de Monti was forced to make an orderly retreat, putting his men into squadrons & the rereward skirmishing still with the enemy, wherein they all in generall shewed such valour, as this action was more esteemed, although they lost some men, than the winning & spoiling of the town without any losse. The Colonel de Monti was still in the rereward, who with great iudgement and valour gouerned the retreat vntil they were all imbarcked, being so fauoured by the gallies ordnance, as the Moorish horsemen, being many in number, were forced to retire with great losse. The gallies after they had run along that coast, & made the Barbarians feele the spoils which they committed vpon the weaker parts of Spain, they were called home to lie in gard in the streit of Gibraltar, to hinder the enemies attempts. But the English fleet about mentioned hauing left the riuer of Lisbon, took many Easterlings, & other ships carrying victuals & other commodities into Spain, which being that yere verie scant of corn, which was then brought vnto them from other countries, & taken at sea, it bred a great scarcitie. Whilest that Lisbon was prest with this extremity, by great hap there was a Galeon of Tuscany got in, being laden with come and other commodities fit to relieue their wants. Yet the dearth of corn increased, notwithstanding that the Hollanders being greedy of gain did often attempt to bring some, and so they did in Sicile & other places. Some held that this dearth grew through the want of men to till the ground (whereunto that nation is nothing inclined) hauing been also constrained to send forth great troups of men to the wars of France & Fläders; besides others which went daily by thousands out of that realm vpon diuers occasions. They did also aleage another reason of the scarcitie, for that some yeres before Corne had bin set at an vnder rate, so as strangers had no care to bring in any, neither did the countrie men much care for tillage.

De Monty surpriseth a towne in Barbarie.

Marriage of the duke of Alcala.

King Philip grows towards his end.

During the great dearth of corn, Spaine felt a general ioy for the peace which had been concluded with France, the which was proclaimed at Madrid in the end of Iune, and it was increased with a priuat content by the marriage of the duke of Alcala, with the daughter of Christopher de Mora, being honored with the presence of the Prince D. Philip, & many Grandes of the court. And soon after were celebrated the mariages of two of the Marquesses of Pozzas daughters, the one vnto the eldest son of the duke of Sessa, who was then ambassador at Rome, & the other vnto the heire of Cordoua: but the ioy was much greater when the future marriage of Prince Philip with Marguerit of Austria, and of the Infanta D. Isabella, with the Archduke Albertus were published. Whilest that Philip ends as hee had begun his raig with the wars of the Low countries, behold many touches of the misery and pouerrie whereunto humanitie is subiect, made him remember that hee was a man. He could not feele that contentment in his soule, like vnto the first man of Greece in his time, who dying, held himself happy, for that neuer any Athenian had mourned by his occasion: yet at the least he hath this consolation, that after the experience of so much money, & the shedding of so much blood, hauing with so great rigour and bitternesse pursued the ruin, & hastned the destinies of the goodliest estate of Europe, he sees the two first monarchs of Christendome vnited by a firm bond, & common peace, and his children ready to enter into allyances; which content him. He now fees that his houre is come, & that he must leaue the ambitions of this world, and that the flesh striues in vaine against the spirit, when as the one must part company from the other. Wherefore carrying alwaies a great deuotion to the Monasterie of Saint Laurence, and being much affected to his most sumptuous and incomparable Palace of the Escoriall, 7 leagues from Madrid, his sicknes increasing daily, after the resignation of the Low countries, to his daughter D. Isabella,

B b b b b i j

Isabella, he would needs be carried thither, to seek a safe rampar, against the assaults which G an intestine warre was readie to giue him vpon the troublefome dissolution of the soule and bodie. He, whom Histories obserue to haue beene greater than any one of his house, who without danger sitting in his Cabinet, hath disposed of more famous actions than any of his predecessors, finds now that the Soueraign Creator hath made the poorest cottager equal to the greatest king in many respects. He hath giuen them the earth for their abode, for they nurse and common mother, the same beginning of creation, one common heauen, one sunne, one Moone, the aire and water common; the soules of one and other haue one nature; they come all into the world naked alike, and all haue one issue out of this life. He finds now that death feares no gards; that he knocks as familiarly at Princes H Palaces, as at the cottages of poore Shepheards, hee laies hold of them, when as teares preuaile not, armes are of no force, prayers cannot moue him, nor presents corrupt him, the Phisitions art cannot stay him, nor drugs and receipts preuent his power: Yea, that sometimes he takes them away when they haue not leasure to deliuer their last will. Finally after this end they must all run one course, when as their bodies shall putrifie alike.

He had surmounted the crosses of fortune, and great accidents in his time, but hee could find no preseruatiue, to make him insensible of griefe. The gout, a feuer, a filthy Phthiriasis, an apostume on his right leg, foure other, wonderfull foule and stinking, on his breast, an infinit number of lice, breeding of that corrupt & stinking matter, & dispersing themselves ouer his whole bodie, gaue him to vnderstand, that nature could make a wretched Anatomie of his bodie, as well as of the meanest of his subjects. Being come to the Escuriall, and his paines increasing, hee prepared himselfe for death, and after hee had receiued the Sacrament, hee desired to see D. Garcia of Loyola solemnly consecrated Archbishop of Toledo, by the Popes Legat, it being resigned vnto him by the Archduke Albert.

His feuer and infirmities increasing in the beginning of September, hee called for D. Philip his sonne, and the Infanta Isabella his daughter; where in the presence of the Archbishop of Toledo and some others, he shewed his body vnto the Prince, and said vnto him, Behold prince the greatnesse of this world, see this wretched carcasse, whereas all human help auails nothing. He then caused a brasen coffin to be brought, and a death head to be set vpon a cupbord with a Crowne of gold by it. He then commanded D. Lewis de Velasco a gentleman of his Chamber to fetch a small Casket, wherein there was a rich Jewell, the which he gaue vnto his daughter in the Princes presence, saying, This Jewell was your mothers, keep it in remembrance of her; And forthwith he drew out a paper which he gaue vnto the Prince, saying, That it was an instruction how he should gouerne his estate. After which, he drew forth a whip, at the end whereof appeared some markes of blood, and holding it vp he said, that it was blood of his blood, although it were not his own blood, but the emperor his fathers who had vsed it: which done hee disposed of the order of his funerals. After which, in the presence of the Popes Nuntio, he recommended the Sea of Rome, the Pope, and the Catholike Apostolike and Romish Religion to his children, desiring the Nuntio to giue him absolution of his sinnes, & to blesse his children. He did recommend the Infanta vnto the Prince his Son, and the good estate of her Countries. He did not remember the children of D. Catherina duchesse of Sauoy his other daughter, to whom before he died he had bequeathed for a remembrance the picture of our Lady of Lorette. He was so resolute and ready to die, as his Confessor did with that he might die of that disease, and in that estate, least that his recouerie should alter that good & happy disposition. The continuall feuer, whereof he had languished three yeres, and the violent torments of the gout, had prepared him for death, long before he was ready to take him. He gaue no care to any discourse but touching his departure. A gentleman of his chamber seeing him to haue some intermission of his pains, aduised him to remoue into some other chamber that was more chearefull, the Phisitions warranting that hee might liue two yeaeres longer; Giue (said hee) this picture of our Ladie, to the Infanta, it was the Empresse my Mothers, and I haue worn it fifty yeaeres: He spake of his departure, as of a royall entrie into goodliest Cities vnder his obedience; and of his funeral, as of a Coronation. I will (said hee) haue this Crucifix hung at my neck, and resting vpon my breast: I will

A will haue that in my hand with the which my father dyed. Hold a candle of Mont Sarra readie, and giue it me when I am in the Agonie. Goe (said hee) to two Religious men, and measure my fathers Herse, obserue how hee is laid: I will be so; and with no more ceremonie than the poorest Monke in this Monasterie. They that were about him, spake of his constancie, as Saint Augustin did of the admirable resolution of a holy Spaniard. The violence of his paine was great; but the force of his courage was greater, the one suffered, and the other sung, the flesh suffered and the spirit spake. Nothing liued more in him than a feeling of his sinnes, the which toucht him so neere, as after that they had made an incision in his knee, and the Prince his Sonne asking him if he felt not the paine of his grenewound, I feele (said the king) the wounds of fifty sinnes much more.

Approaching towards his end, hee commanded that the Marquesse of Mondejar should bee set at libertie, but restrained from coming to court; and that the wife of Anthony Perez (sometimes his Secretarie) should bee set at libertie, vpon condition that hee should retire himselfe into some Monasterie. Hee receiued the extreme vnctions from the Archbishop of Toledo, after that hee had demanded the manner of the administration thereof, for that hee had neuer scene it giuen: Hee had resolved to send the Prince and the Infanta to Madrid, for that they should not bee present at the pitifull spectacle of the ruine of his bodie; but hee changed his opinion, and would haue the Prince present when they gaue him the extreme vnctions: after which hee commanded them to leaue him alone with his Sonne, to whom hee spake these words: I was desirous my son you should assist at this last actio, to the end you should not liue in ignorance, as I haue done, how this holy Sacrament is administered, & that you might see the end of kings, and whereunto their Crownes and Scepters are reduced. Death is readie to snatch the Crowne from my head, and to set it vpon yours. Therein I recommend two things vnto you; the one is, that you remaine alwaies obedient vnto the Church; the other that you doe iustice to your subjects. The time will come when this Crowne shall fall from your head as it doth now from mine: you are young, I haue beene so, my daies are numbred and are ended, God keeps the account of yours, and they shall likewise end. They say that hee did enioyne him, with passion, to make warre against Heretikes; and to entertaine peace with France.

The Prince thinking that his end approached, demanded the golden key of the Cabinet from D. Christopher de Mora, meaning to grace the Marquesse of Denia his fauourite therewith: but hee desired the Prince to pardon him, saying that hee might not leaue it whilst the king was liuing, but by his expresse commandment: whereat the Prince was offended.

D. Christopher complained hereof vnto the king, who neither commended the demand being too sudden, nor allowed of his refusall, commanding D. Christopher to carrie it vnto the Prince, and to craue his pardon: who returning to visit his father, D. Christopher de Mora kneeling downe, kiss the key and deliuered it vnto him; the which the Prince tooke and gaue to the Marquesse of Denia: And as the prince and the Infanta stood before his bed, hee said vnto them; I recommend vnto you D. Christopher de Mora, the best seruant I euer had, with all my other seruants: And forgiving them his last farewell, and embracing them, his speech fayled him; continuing two daies in that estate vntill hee died, being seuentie and one yeaeres old; and hauing reigned fifty.

He was borne at Vailledolit the five and twentieth of April, in the yeare one thousand five hundred twenty and six, and dyed the thirteenth of September 1598. He was but little of stature, yet of a pleasing aspect, but no goodlie man by reason of his great nether lip, which is hereditarie in the house of Austria, otherwise he was faire of complexion, rather resembling a Fleming than a Spaniard: of so sound a constitution of body, as he was sildome or neuer sicke. He was sometimes troubled with faintings: and did neuer eat any fish: he was of a constant resolution, and of a great spirit, apprehending presently the ends of things, and foreseeing them with an admirable wisdom and iudgement.

Pope Clement the eight, hearing newes of his death; assembled the Consistorie, Pope Clement the eight, hearing newes of his death; assembled the Consistorie, B b b b b iij. where King Philip's last speech vnto his Sonne.

Birth and stature of the king of Spaine.

1598 Popes iudgment upon the death of King Philip.

where after audience given vnto the Cardinalls, hee told them in a graue speech full of passion: That if euer the holy Sea had cause of greefe and affliction, it was for the death of that Prince, the Church hauing lost a great Protector, and her persecutors a mightie enemy. That his whole life had benee sothing but a wayfare against infidelities, heresies, and errors. That two things did comfort them in this losse: the one, that being dead with an admirable conformitie in the will of God, an incredible patience in his paines, and an vnchangeable constancie in his Religion, he held him rewarded in heauen with immortall glorie: the other, that hee had left a Sonne which made them hope that it was rather a resurrection of the father than a succession of the Sonne. In the end hee recommended them both to their prayers, paying thereby for what the one had done, and what the other offered to doe by his letters for the good of the Church.

Virtues of King
Philip.

His pietie.

To speake of his vertues: it is said that all good Princes may bee written in a ring. Philip had great vertues, it were a rare thing to haue all. The seedes of such princes as haue no defects are in heauen. Hee was great in pietie, Religion, justice, liberalitie and constancy. As for his pietie and religion, hee hath bene heard to say, that if the prince his Sonne became an Heretike, or a Schismaticke, hee would bring fagots himselfe to burne him. He alwaies protested that his desires in warre, and his exercises in peace did onely tend to the advancement of Religion. The last words he pronounced with his last gaspe, were, That he died a Catholike. He respected the Pope as hee that carried the keyes of heauen in his hand, the prince of the Church, and Gods Lieutenant generall ouer mens soules. The Popes respected him as the chiefe supporter of the peace and vnion of the Church: Pius 5. did so terme him when they made the league against the Turke: and his successeur Gregorie 13 answered him that caused his health to be prayed for at Rome, My life imports the Church little, the which after me may haue a better Pope: Recommend the king of Spaines health vnto God, for it is necessarie for all Christians to stand on. And he himselfe held his assistance necessarie for the affaires of Christians, for being sicke, and the Physitian doubting to let him bloud by reason of his weaknesse, Fear not (said he) to let me bloud, the estate of Gods Church permits not that I should die of this disease, nor of this bloud letting. Euerie man knowes in what credit hee was in the Consistorie, to haue his intention approued, and likewise in the Conclau for the election of Popes. Hee held Rome by the thaire and the throat, being in his power to famish it, refusing the commodities which they may draw at need out of his estates which inuiron it.

Speech of the
king of Spaine.

This is spoken
for the persons of Cardinalls which are at the deuotion of Spaine.

His curiostie to find out Heretikes

As he honoured the Pope, so did hee much esteeme the Prelates of the Church, and had a great care to preferre men of vertue and merit to ecclesiasticall dignities. There was a great controuersie betwixt the archbishop of Valencia, and the Viceroy, to know to whom they should first present the Pax and the Censor: the which hee ended, commanding that hee that presented vnto his Maestie, should giue it first vnto the archbishop, thinking that the honour that hee did vnto Gods Ministers was an infinit glory vnto him, and that a prince should affect no other commendation, than the care and zeale of Religion, when it is without dissembling or hypocrisie. Hee did witness his zeale and passion in the seeking out of many rolikes of Saints, especially to haue the body of Saint Eugenius Bishop of Toledo, hauing to that end sent ambassadors expresse to the duke of the Cardinall of Lorraine, Abbot of Saint Denis: hee went to receiue it at Toledo, and caused it to bee conducted to the Escoriall. How much did he spend for the canonizing of Frier Diego of Alcalá of the order of Saint Francis, and of Frier Raymond of Pégnafort a Iacobin, famous among learned men, for that he gathered the decretales into one bodie, and through out all Spaine, for that hee past like another Elixeus vpon his cloake from Majorca to Barcelona, and that which is very rare in our age, refused the Archbishopsrick of Arragone. Wee find not any now that hide themselves in causes from spirituall dignities, or that out off their nose and eares to make themselves incapable of church preferments, which requires sound bodies and sanctified soules. No affaires could interrupt him in the course of his deuotion, and we in the relations of Antonio Perez that hee did often referre the care of businesse to another day,

En este dia no
haqe mal uisal.

A day, when he was preparing of his conscience, or among his Monkes at the Escoriall. He went bare headed in the procession of the Sacrament, and being on that day at Cordoua, some one did aduertise him, that the Sonne was offensive: to whom he answered, That the Sonne that day would doe him no harme. Being a religious prince, hee loued no new religions. He neuer received the Capuchins. They of his house haue built many colledges of Iesuites in diuers places, at Vienna in Austria, at Tumaat in Hungarie, at Prague in Bohemia, at Hal, at Grats, at Munch, at Inspruck, and he alone of his house is dead without any memorie of his bountie towards them. Speaking against that great multitude of religions, and the increase of regular Orders, hee said, That they should reduce the new to the auncient, and maintaine those in the first integritie of their institution, and that it was to be feared the world would abound more in religious Orders than in pietie. Hee vied them of Saint Dominicke in his confessions, and in his other deuotions the Ieronimists, to whom he gaue that rich temple of the Escoriall. He did so respect Dominicke de Chanet, his Confessor, as he caused him to be visited in his cell by the President of Castille, when he was in doubt of any point of conscience or of penance.

He had a Councell of conscience for the direction of his enterprises. This Councell hath often drawne him out of many difficulties, and hath freed him from the bond of his promises. The historie of Portugall doth furnish a memorable example. The duke of Ossuna, and D. Christopher de Móra, had promised mountaines of gold to them that should be opposit to D. Antonio, and should fauour the kings right to the Crowne of Portugall. He being expelled, these men demanded the effects of those promises, and that their bills should be discharged. The king commanded that all should bee sent to the table of conscience. The Iudges payed them with this sentence: Seeing that king Philip is heire to the realme of Portugall, the petitioners could not compound for his right for money, gifts, or promises, and haue deserued death, for that they did not willingly yeeld it vnto him: If the realme did belong to Antonio, they could not then deliuer it. And therefore king Philip is no way bound to performe those promises which his ambassadors and agents had made vnto the petitioners: But vsing his clemencie and mercie, he freed them from the paine of death, which they had vpon this occasion desired.

Councell of conscience.

Adiuce of the
king of Spaine
Councell of conscience.

As for his justice, the example of his son is sufficient to shew his rigor. It is true, that in many actiōs he hath proceeded more by his absolute power than by the ordinarie courfe. These great motions cannot alwayes be ruled by the ordinarie formes, nor subiect themselves to the iudgement of reason, nor to humane discourse. Yet hee protested, being neere his end, That he had not done wrong nor injustice to any one, but through ignorance, or false impression. It is an act of justice in a prince, to suffer them to tell him of the vnjust actiōs of his gouernement. It is true, that it cannot be tearmed an act of justice, to haue made his creditors so often to loose that which they had lent him, nor to reduce the 18 millions of gold, which he did owe the Genouois, to 12.

King of Spaine
a seuerer iusticer

His liberalitie. His liberalitie hath appeared in recompensing the merits of many of his seruants. He made his Schoolemaster Primat of the Church of Spaine, as his father had advanced his vnto the Popedom. There are few such princes now, that vse such requitals. There are no more Alexanders, who gaue eight hundred talents to his Schoolemaster Aristotle. Kings haue long hands, but few haue them so large after this proportion. The king of Spaine did neuer leaue any goodlie action either of learning, justice, or warre, without reward. Hee did not onely doe good vnto the good, to make them better, but also to the bad, lest they should grow worse. But he did neuer aduance them hee, loued to fauours disproportionable to their condition: He did much for Ruy Gomes, for the loue of his wife the princeesse of Eboly: Yet this liberalitie did neuer make a passage for him to great affaires. He was verie circumspect in the distinction of great charges, especially of such as concerned the administration of justice, whereon, as Plato said, depends the safetie and ruine of an Estate. And although that the earle of Chinchon, being bred vp with him in his youth, should haue expected more than any other, yet he obtained nothing but what he held fit for his qualitie. He was wont to say, That all stomackes were not fit

His liberalitie.

That is 480000
crownes.

Honours ruine them that deserue them not.

1598

His constancie.

His great moderation in prosperitie.

His constancie in aduersitie.

Vices of the King of Spaine.

King of Spaine valiant and distrustfull.

to digest great fortunes, and that ill meat did not corrupt sooner, and tume to bad humors, than honour in a soule without merit.

As for his constancie against afflictions, fortune could neuer shake him. In two diuers accidents, happening at two diuers times, he shewed the constancie of his mind, and the equalitie of his affections; neither puffing him vp insolently in prosperitie, nor deiecing himselfe basely in aduersitie. When the post brought him newes of the victorie of Lepanto, he thought to see him much transported with joy, but hee made no shew of any alteration; and hauing vnderstood the order and successe of the battell, hee spake these words coldly; D. John hath hazarded much. Now, when another post did bring him newes of the losse of that great nauie at sea, thinking it would haue plunged him into a gulph of cares and perturbations; at the report of so fatall an accident, hee was not a whit moued; saying onely, That hee had sent it against men, and not against the windes and waues. Vulgar spirits are transported with choler at euerie grosse accident, this vnmatchable losse doth not trouble this prince, who continued his deuotion in his Oratorie. Some other would haue torne his haire, and haue whipt the Ocean, as Xerxes did. The duke of Medina Sidonia, Generall of this armie, sending to know his pleasure, if hee would haue him come and giue an account of his charge, he answered, That hee should first goe home to his house, to refresh and rest himselfe before he came to Court.

It were fit we should see the backside of this Medaile, and speake something of the errors and vices of this prince, as well as of his vertues, seeing it is fit to speake all for examples sake; yet it is not good to trouble the rest of the dead. Nijons image overthrew him that strooke it with a staffe: A dead stone did reuenge the iniurie that was done vnto a dead man. It is sufficient to say, That as this prince was commended for many great vertues, so hee was blamed, in his youth, of great dissolution to voluptuousnesse, and a violent propension to crueltie. These two vices doe seldome abandon one another: Euerie voluptuous prince is cruell, if necessitie constrain him. This plague doth infect and blemish the glorie of vertues, how bright soeuer they be in the life of a prince. Victorinus might haue bene compared to the best Emperours, yea hee should surpasse Traian in bountie, Antonine in clemencie, Nerva in grauitie, Vespasian sparing of his treasure, Pertinax and Seuerus in the integritie of his life, and in the severity of militarie discipline: but all these vertues were so quenched by voluptuousnesse, as no man durst speake vnto him. The king of Spaine hath put many to death in the excessive and first fits of his choler. He was as suspitious, distrustfull, and cruell, as euer any was. He did not allow the prince his sonne to speake with the Infanta his daughter, but by permission, and in the presence of their gouernors. The jealousy of Soueraigne power makes no distinction of persons, nor spareth not his owne blood, as appeared by his owne sonne: and Sultan Solyman caused his sonne Mustafa to bee strangled, for that the Ianizaries made great acclamations of joy at his returne from the warres of Persia.

Some write of him, That, besides the aboue named vices, he was fearefull, doubtfull, close, and a dissembler, ambitious, and proud beyond the condition of man, and nothing religious of his word in matters of Estate; the duke of Vilhermosa, and the marquisse of Fuentes, are good witnesses; he put them to death after that he had pardoned them the reuolt of Arragon. And those words which he spake in his last instruction to his sonne, speaking of the Low Countries, doe verifie it; it is true (said hee) I haue giuen them to your sister, but it imports not; you haue an hundred euasions, which you may vse in time.

His ambition appeared, in that he affected the Empire by all possible meanes, which not able to obtaine, he sought the title of Emperour of Spaine: yea some write, That he was resolu'd to goe vnto the Indies, to take vpon him the title of Emperour of America. After all his ambitious proiects against Africke, his attempts against England and Ireland, and his intelligences with the Turkes, Barbarians, and Persians, whom hee hath sought to diuide, and to make vse of, even against Christian princes, yet in the end he was forced to confesse, That all the power and pompe of this world was meere vanitie.

He

A He had foure wiues, but he was vnfortunat in the first, the which was Marie princeesse of Portugall, who bare him one sonne, whose name was Charles; but his life was short and vnfortunat, and his end violent, being charged by the Inquisition to haue thought ill of the Faith, and to haue had intelligence with Chastillon Admirall of France, and with the prince of Orange touching the Low Countries. His second wife was Marie queene of England, by whom hee had no issue. His third was Elizabeth of France (surnamed by the Spaniards, the Queene of Peace) who brought him two daughters, the Infanta D. Isabella Clara Eugenia, now Archduchesse of Austria, and Ladie of the Low Countries, and the Infanta D. Catharina Michelle, who was duchesse of Sauoy. His fourth wife was Anne of Austria, daughter to the Emperour Maximilian, and his owne neece, by whom he had three sonnes and one daughter, of the which, at his death, there remained onely the prince, who was then called Charles Laurence, but at his comming to the Crowne he was surnamed Philip the third.

He ended his dayes with an act of wisdome worthie of his long experience. Princes cannot enter into their realmes by a better port, than the loue of their subjects. If their fathers be dead, desired, and lamented; they must doe some great matter to mollifie this sorrow. Painters are no more bound to represent the true lineaments of the face, than princes are to represent their fathers vertues, whose liuelie images they are. Before his death hee made an Edict which could not be pleasing vnto his subjects, who began to murmur, and it seemed that they would not be so satisfied, if they proceeded to execution. It was not made for that the king of Spaine had any desire to haue it executed and obserued, but to the end he might giue the prince his sonne a good occasion to win the peoples hearts; for he sayed presently, that hee would neuer allow of the execution of that Edict, and that he would breake his head that should first speake it; the which hee spake so lowd, as euerie man thought himselfe happie to liue vnder the command of such a prince, who would proue better than his father.

We haue formerly made mention of a paper which the king drew out of a casket, and deliuered to his sonne, the which contained this instruction following.

D My sonne, I haue bene euer carefull to leaue you your Estate settled and in peace; but neither the many yeares which I haue liued, nor the assistance of princes my allies, could euer purchase it. I confesse that I haue spent in lesse than thirtie three yeares, fye hundred ninetie and foure millions of ducats, all which haue bred me nothing but cares and troubles. It is true, I conquered Portugall, but as France did easily escape me, so may this be wrested from me. I would to God I had followed the aduice of the Emperour Charles, my deceased father, of famous memorie, or at the least that you would belecue and follow mine. I should then beare my crosses more willingly, and should die with more content, leauing you in this vallie of miseries. Behold then what I leaue you for an euertlasting testament, besides so many kingdoms and Estates, that you may see, as in a glasse, after what maner you shall gouerne your selfe after my death.

E Be alwayes verie watchfull of the alteration and change of States, to make your profit thereby according to occurrents. Haue a vigilant eye ouer them that are most familiar with you in counsell. You haue two meanes to entertaine your realmes of Spaine, the one, the present gouernement, the other, the trade to the East and West Indies. As for the gouernement, you must either relie vpon the nobilitie, or vpon the Clergie. If you leane vnto the Church-men, keepe the other in awe, as I haue done; but if you fortifie your selfe with the nobilitie, shorten the reuenues of the Clergie as much as you may. If you seeke to countenance them alike, they will consume you, and trouble your realms, whereof you shall neuer see a final conclusion. If you will make good vse of the nobilitie, my aduice is, that you keepe good correspondencie with the Low Countries, for they are friends to the French English, and some princes of Germanie: therein you can haue little assistance from Italie, Poland, Sweden, Denmark, or Scotland. The king of Scotland is poore, Denmark drawes his reuenues from foreine nations, Sweden is euer in faction, and not well situated, the Polonians are alwaies masters of their kings, Italie, although it bee rich, yet is it far off, and the princes are of diuers humors: On the other side, the Low Countries are populous, rich in shipping, constant in labour, diligent in search, hardie to vnder-

1598

His wiues and children.

Wisdome of the King of Spaine.

Instruction of the King of Spaine to his sonne.

Consideration of Fortaine Princes.

1598 " take, and willing to endure. It is true, I haue giuen these prouinces to your sister, but it G
 " imports not, there are an hundred euasions whereof in time you may make your profit:
 " The chiefe are, that you keepe your selfe alwaies gardian to her children, and that there be " no alteration concerning religion: for these two points taken away, you are quite depri-
 " ued of those countries: And then will some other princes present themselves, and bind
 " them vnto them by some meanes, which may proue your ruine. If you thinke to fortifie
 " your selfe against this by the Clergie, you shall purchase many enemies: I haue tried: yet
 " keepe good correspondencie with the Popes, be bountifull and kind vnto them; entertain
 " such cardinals as they fauour most, and labour to beare a sway in the Conclau. Keepe H
 " friendship with the bishops of Germanie, but commit not the distribution of their pen" sions to the Emperor. Let them know you, they will serue you the more willingly, and will
 " receiue your presents more thankfully. Draw not any neere vnto you that are of base con" dition, neither respect the nobilitie and commons alike: for, seeing I must now speake the " truth, their pride is great, they are verie rich, they must haue what they desire, they will be
 " burthen some vnto you, and in the end will be your masters.
 " Serue your selfe then with such as are of the noblest families, and aduance them to pre-
 " ferments of great reuenues: the common sort are not so needfull, for they will procure
 " you a thousand discontents, which will consume you. Beleue not any of them, if " they be not of qualitie. Free your selfe from English spies, and French pensions. Employ
 " some of the noblemen of the Low Countries confidently, whom you shall haue bound I
 " vnto you by fealtie. As for the Nauigation of the East and West Indies, therein consists
 " the strength of the kingdom of Spaine, and the meanes to curbe Italie; from the which " you shall with much difficultie restraine France and England: their power is great, they
 " haue many mariners, the seas are spacious, their marchants too wealthie, their subiects too
 " greedie of gaine, and their seruants too faithfull.
 " I haue excluded the Low Countries, but I feare, in time, mens humors may change; and " therefore you must often change your ministers at the West Indies. Such as you call " home make them of your Councel for the Indies, and so, in my opinion, you shal neuer be " circumuented, but both the one and the other will acquaint you with the gaine, aspiring K
 " to more honour. See how the English seeke to deprime you of that commoditie: they are
 " mightie at sea both in men and shipping. As for the French, I doe not much feare them.
 " Fortifie your selfe with them of the Low Countries (although they be partly heretikes, " and would continue so) with this prouiso, That they shall freely sell their marchandise in
 " Spaine and Italie, paying the kings customes, and other duties. And in taking papiers to " saile to the East and West Indies, let them put in caution, & take an oath to discharge their " goods in Spaine at the returne of their ships, vpon paine of punishment if they infringe
 " this order: the which I think they will willingly offer to obserue. By this means the riches
 " of the Indies and Spaine shall haue free commerce with the Low Countries, whereby " both France and England shall be disappointed.
 " My son, I could prescribe you greater designses for the conquering of kingdoms, but you L
 " shal find in my studie such aduertisements & discourses as haue bin giuen me: commaund
 " Christopher de Mora to deliuer you the key presently, least those secrets shold fall into some " strangers hands. I did cause some briefs of those instructions to be burnt the 7 of Septem" ber; I doubt all are not suppressed, be carefull to seeke for them. I haue this day added, if you " can, win Antonio Perez, that he may serue you in Italie, or in some other of your Estates,
 " but suffer him not to returne into Spaine, nor to go into the Low Countries. Touching " your mariage, the instructions are in the custodie of the Secretarie la Loo. Read this often " that is written with mine owne hand. Haue a watchful eye ouer your most secret counsel-
 " lers, acquaint your selfe with cyphers, discontent not your Secretaries, keep them alwaies
 " employed, be it about matters of importance or otherwise; make triall of them rather by M
 " your enemies than by your friends. If you discouer your secrets to any familiar friend,
 " keepe alwaies the most important within your owne bosome.

The king of Spaine fearing that in his life time the mariage of his daughter with the Archduke Albert would not be consummated, and that after his death the Infanta Isabella would like better of the donation than the mariage, hee tied her vnto it with strict con-

Advice touching the Pope.

Council touching the Indies.

Archduke
Albert gets into Spaine.

A condicions, desiring about all things, that she should liue vnder the protection of the Crowne of Spaine, whereunto this new alliance did particularly bind her. Whereupon the Archduke gaue order for the gouernement of the Low Countries, and prepared himselfe to goe into Spaine, to marie the Infanta. But the king of Spaine, before his death, had concluded a mariage betwixt prince Philip his son, and Marguerite daughter to the Archduke of Austria of Gratz, being younger sister vnto Marie (who had bin promised vnto the prince, but dyed before the consummation of the mariage.) Wherefore the Archduke Albert had commaundement to goe and receiue the said ladie Marg-guerite at Gratz, and to conduct her into Spaine. Being readie to goe on his journey, B hee receiued newes of the death of the king of Spaine; yet hee went on his journey, and passing by the countrey of Treues, the Palatinat, and the duchie of Wirtemberg, into the limits of Bauaria, he came into the countie of Tyrol, being receiued in all places with great pompe and presents, and his traine discharged. In this countie hee met with the ladie Marguerite of Austria, and Marie of Bauaria, her mother, neere vnto the place whereas the Emperour Charles the fit, and his brother Ferdinand king of Romans, met, in remembrance of which happie enteruiew there was a table of brasie hung vp for a monument, and is yet to be seene; which table doth represent them as they imbraced one another. This ladie was attended on by 500 gentlemen of high Hungarie, whereas the Archduke her father makes his chiefe residence.

C Hauing joyned their troupes, being about two thousand horse, and three thousand five hundred foot, they past by Bolsene, and came to Trent the nine and twentieth of October, where they spent some dayes, to visit the reliques of Saints. Then entering into the territories of Venice, which was neere, they were honourably receiued by two Senators, at a village called Delce, vpon the riuer of Adde, where there was a bridge made by commaundement of the State, for them to passe ouer. They went on by small journeyes through the Venetians countrey, who defrayed the charges of them and their whole traine ten dayes together.

Hauing past Verona, they entred the duke of Mantouas country, who came in post with ten noblemen to Ostia (a small village vpon the riuer of Po) to salute the queene; where D there were many boats made readie, among others there was a nuptiall barge, verie sumptuously made, and covered with tapistrie of siluer, the which was diuided into chambers, halls, and cabinets. The future queene, her mother, the Archduke Albert, with some noblemen and ladies, entred this barge, where they found the tables readie furnished with all exquisite meats. The rest of the traine past the riuer in three great boats, vnto the other side, whereas Rouere stands, a towne belonging to the duke of Mantoua, from thence going downe the riuer they were carried to Ferrara, whereas the Pope was, with many Cardinals (whither he came after the composition of Faence, with D. Cesar of Este.)

The Pope being certified of the queenes comming neere the towne, hee presently sent forth two Cardinals Legats, which were, Aldobrandin and Saint Clement, with a E great number of Prelats and gentlemen. Hauing gone three miles, they receiued the queene verie honourably, at a place called the islands, euen as she landed, in the name of the Apostolike Sea, and of the Pope, presenting vnto her, in his name, a rich caroch, wher-of all the yron-woke was gilt, being drawne by six white horses, in the which the queen, her mother, and the Archduke, entred into Ferrara.

Without the citie gates the duke of Sessa, ambassador for the king of Spaine, presented vnto her, in his masters name, a litter covered with cloth of gold, and richly appointed, both in the yron-woke, which was of siluer and gilt, as of all other royall furniture, hauing two white mules, and the muleters, in the like liuerie, and withall a caroch, with six pied horses, and two coach-men clad in cloth of gold, which made a glistering shew.
 F At the port called Angels gate, shee was receiued by two other Cardinals, Sforza and Alantato, and conducted into a house artificially made, where shee was seated in a royall throne, where she staid vntill the rest of the Cardinals came to visit and receiue her.

After this reception the queene was mounted vpon a white horse, and the princeesse her mother vpon the like (which the Pope had sent them) & in that maner she entred the city, being

He meetes with the future
Queene of
Spaine.

Venetians defray the charge of the future
Queene of
Spaine.

Duke of Mäto-ua entertaines
the Queene of
Spaine.

Pope sends a present to the Queene of
Spaine.

Present sent by the King of Spaine to his Queene.

Arriuall of the Queene of Spaine into Ferrara.

The generall Historie of Spaine.

Lib. 31.

being late, vnder a canopie of cloth of siluer, and betwixt the two Cardinals which had receiued her at the port. There were a great number of coaches and wagons which went before with much baggage; then followed two companies of horse, hauing mourning weeds vpon their armes, by reason of the late death of the king of Spaine: after whom followed a troupe of courtiers on horsebacke, then two other companies of horse sent from the Pope to receiue the Queene, followed by such as serued the Cardinals, and other noblemen: After whom came a great number of gentlemen and noblemen, verie gallantly appointed. Such as carried maces of siluer (which is the marke of a Cardinall) being mounted vpon mules, with solemne ornaments, marcht before the companie of Cardinals, who were attired in violet, which is their accustomed habit to mourne in.

The Queene went betwixt the two Cardinals Sforce and Montalto, hauing her Dutch gards about her, and her mother, with the Archduke Albertus following her: After whom followed the great Constable, gouernour of Milan, the duke of Aumale, the prince of Orange, the earles of Egmont, Gand, Barlamont, and Ligny, with many other lords and ladies of great state, and a great number of carroches and coaches full of ladies and gentwomemen. In this order they came to the Emperours embassadours lodging, passing vnder many triumphant Arches that were set vp in euery street.

The king of Spaines spouse being come vnto the palace, shee mounted vp betwixt two images of the two Apostles Saint Peter and Saint Paul, princes of the Church, which were set at the staires foot; and then she retired her selfe into a chamber, joyning vnto the which was the sacred Consistorie, where the Pope was set in his Pontificall throne, with his whole colledge of Cardinals, where she stayed vntill the Oration was ended, which was pronounced by Bernardin Lesot of Milan, in prayse of the house of Austria, and of the happie arriual of the said future Queene: After which, she with her mother and the Archduke, were brought in, and suffered to kisse his Holinesses feet: who receiued them graciously, and gaue them his blessing. After which the said future Queene was conducted to her cabinet, which was prepared for her after a royall manner. The next day, hauing assisted at a Masse which the Pope himselfe did say, the Queene, her mother, and the Archduke, were feasted at the Popes owne table. But the Sunday, being the fifteenth of Nouember, was the day appointed for the celebration of the mariage, at which time they all left off their mourning weeds, which they had worne for the death of the king of Spaine, and put on their nuptial robes, where both princes and princesses, and the whole Court, shewed themselues so rich and sumptuous, euery one seeking to note his familie by the inuention of his liueries, as the like had neuer been seene in Ferrara.

On the day appointed for this great ceremonie, the Pope went before to the Cathedrall church, being set in his throne with his Pontificall robes and diadem, readie to say Masse. The Queene being attired all in white, after a royall manner, and glistering with pearles and pretious stones of inestimable value, being followed by her mother, the Archduke, and all the princes, noblemen, and ladies, was so conducted as a bride vnto the same church, by the Cardinals of Santiquatro and Farnese, the which glistered, being hung with cloth of siluer.

The Queene being set in a throne of cloth of gold, vnder a cloth of Estate of the same, and her mother with her, the Archduke being also set in one of the same, the Pope began the Masse. After the Canticle had bene song, the Queene was conducted neere vnto the Pope, by the said Cardinals, with her mother, and a great troupe of ladies, and in like manner the Archduke approached, being followed by the princes and noblemen. The king of Spaines procuration directed to the Archduke, being read, the Pope did consummate the mariage, betwixt Philip the third, king of Spaine, in the person of Albert, his vnckle, deputed by him to that end, and appearing in his name, on the one part, and Queene Marguerite, being present, on the other. She being conducted backe vnto the throne, there was an acclamation of all the princes, congratulating the mariage with wishes of all happinesse.

The

The generall Historie of Spaine.

- A The Archduke staid still before the Pope, vntill that the duke of Sessa came with the like procuration from the Infanta D. Isabella Clara Eugenia: which commission being read, the said Infanta was married by her Proctor to the Archduke Albert, by the Popes hands. Masse being ended, the Pope caused the married queene to approach neere the altar, to whom he presented a consecrated rose all of gold, the which his Holiness doth commonly giue to queenes and princesses, as a sword and a hat hath bene vsually sent by Popes to the chiefe princes of Christendome. After which all the citie of Ferrara was full of feasts and joy, for the solemnization of this mariage. All places, streets, waies, and houses, both publike and priuat, did ring with acclamations of joy, the citie was full of masks and dauncings, and there was nothing omitted that might in any sort giue delight and contentment.

Hauing passed those few dayes which they remained at Ferrara in great joy and feasting, they made preparation to goe to Mantoua. The duke attended them at Rouere, hauing sent foure companies of men at armes before, who conducted the queene to Gouberne (which is a castle situated vpon the riuer of Mince:) there the queene going into the Buccinaure, which was a verie stately gallie, she was carried downe the riuer within a mile of Mantoua; where landing, she was entertained by the princes, and then entred the citie in a Carrosse with her mother, being honoured with pleasing fights in all places as she past. The palace wherein she was to lodge, was royally appointed; but the Sunday after her arriual there was a tragicall comedie represented vnto her beyond all admiration. The duke of Mantoua entertained the queene so royally, as besides the rich presents which he gaue, he defraied 5000 foot and 4000 horse for the space of nine daies together.

The queene, her mother, and the Archduke, going from Mantoua past by Cremona to Milan. It were tedious to make repetitions of all the honours that were there done vnto the queene. And for that Milan is now held by the king of Spaine, they resolved to stay there, and to attend the kings good pleasure, being vnfit to passe into Spaine during the Winter season, where the duke of Sauoy came to visit the queene with a gallant traine.

- The greatest Monarches of the world are forced to giue time to time, and to refer vnto it the accomplishment of their desires: Their power (be it neuer so absolute) cannot make the seasons subiect to their wils, neither aduance nor keepe them backe according to the commoditie of their designs. If this could haue bene effected, the queene of Spaine had not staid so long in Italie, the desire she had to see the king D. Philip 3. would haue giuen her wings to flie from Milan to Vailledolit: but the vnseasonable Winter made her to stay vntil the Spring, from whence they went to Genoua, where they embarked in the beginning of March: they past to Sauone, where, for the discommoditie of the sea, they were forced to stay some dayes, at the end whereof they went along the shore by Monaco and Villa-franca, and came to Nice in the countie of Terra-noua, which at this day the duke of Sauoy holds, but in former times was belonging to the countie of Prouence. After which they came and cast anchor in the port of Marseilles, where they rested to ease the queene.
- E The duke of Sauoy had entertained and feasted her verie royally: neither did the duke of Guise (who was the kings Lieutenant in Prouence) omit any thing, being so commanded by the king; where he refreshed the gallies with victuals and all other necessaries. The queene would not land but onely to heare masse in a tent which was pitcht vpon the key, in forme of a chappell. The Archduke landed there with two gallies, and went to visit the reliques of S. Victor, and other venerable reliques: which done, hee returned presently vnto the queene, and so they parted from Castle Ifz in a cleere and calme day, but there followed a present storme, the which had cast them vpon the sands, whereas the riuer of Rhosne dischargeth it selfe into the sea, if the wisdom and foresight of Doria had not preuented it. He knew the place and the danger, and doubting of the inconstancie of the weather, he would not passe without the aduice of the mariners, who were all doubtfull in their opinions. Prouidence is alwayes better than repentance. In this suspension of judgement a mariner passing by, wisht them not to proceed, for in lesse than three houres they should haue a contrarie wind which would carrie them directly to the danger, which they would willingly auoyd. Doria beleued him, against the opinion of some, and the shewes of the weather, being loath to attend vntill he were forced to take Entrie of the Queene of Spaine into the Popes Palace.

Ccccc

Marriage of the King of
Spaine.

The queene of Spaines entrie into Mantoua.

Entrie into Millan.

1599
Queene of Spaine imbarke for Spaine.

Lands at Marseilles.

Queene of Spaine arrives at Binaros.

take some daungerous resolution. Wherefore he retired his gallies into a place of safetie, and the storme did arise sooner than the mariner had told them. They thought at Marceilles that all had bene lost; and their beliefe had not bene vaine, if Doria had not giuen credit to that which the best aduised could not beleue. The daunger being past, they continued their voyage along the coast of Cattelonia, they saluted Barcelona, and came to the port of Rode, they surmounted the Promontorie of the Moone, and came to Alsagues, which is at the strait of Gibraltar, on Africke side, and in the end they put in at the port of Binaros, in the realme of Valencia: from whence the queene sent prince Doria sonne to the Catholike king, to aduertise him of her happie voyage, and safe arrival. The last of March they came to S. Mathew, whereas the marquisse of Denia came to salute the queene, in the behalfe of the king her husband, and to acquaint her with his Majesties speciall intentions. Passing from thence to Gabanes, and Villa-reall, they went and stayed at Moliuedro, a village built of the ruines of Sagunt, an auncient towne allied to the Romans. The Archduke Albertus tooke post there, and went with all speed to kisse the kings hands, and to visit the Infanta, his spouse: from whence hee past to Madrid, to see the Empreffe, his mother, where hee stayed foure dayes, and then returned to Valencia.

The king in the meane time burning with an amorous desire to see his new queen, came in a disguised habit like one of his noblemen, making his pretence to be sent from the king to kisse her hands, but he was discovered by the princeesses and ladies which then attended the queene, where he was receiued with an incredible joy and content to them all.

Magnificence at Valencia at the king of Spains marriage

In the meane time they made wonderfull preparation at Valencia, for the celebration of these mariages, all which being readie, on the seuenteenth day of Aprill the queene made her entrie into Valencia, with so goodly a traine of princes and noblemen there assembled, as the glistering of their glorious and sumptuous apparel, the varietie of colours, and the shining of the gold, did dazle the eyes of the beholders. Before this royall assemblie there marcht fise companies of men at armes, after whom followed thirtie kettle drummes on horsebacke, with trumpets, claires, and hautbois, which did found continually: then came the courtiers in troupe, without any precedence or prerogative of rank: among which there were foure hundred young noblemen like vnto pages of honour, gallantly attired, attended on by their pages and footmen, some having six, others eight, some ten, yea twentie, twentie foure, twentie six, and more, attired in their lueries of diuers colours, richly appointed. There were moreover 700 knights of honor in the queens colours, which were white and crimzon gilt, the ground fatten. Then there followed foure knights, carrying royall maces; after whom followed the Stewards of the queenes house, and then sixteene of the Grandos of Spaine. Next marched the heraulds with their cassockes richly imbrodered with the kings armes: after whom went the Lord Steward and the Master of the horse: and last of all came the queene on horsebacke, vnder a canopie of cloth of gold, the which was carried by twentie of the chiefe nobles of Valencia, and thereines of her bridle, being of silke and gold, were held by the greatest lords of that kingdom. The queenes gowne was of cloth of gold, the ground siluer, very richly imbrodered with pearle and precious stones, so as there could be no more added. The queenes mother and the Archduke Albert followed with the queenes cabinet, and a great number of princes and noblemen, and to finish their nuptiall pompe, the princeesses and ladies came last of all in their carroches and coaches. Some thought that there were spent in this nuptiall pompe three millions of ducats.

The queene hauing entred the port, where there was a stately triumphant Arch made, shee was led vnto the church, which was hung with cloth of tissue. The high altar was royally appointed, before the which there was an Oratorie erected, couered with cloth of gold, able to containe three persons: there was also another which might hold fise, which was seene by them all, and was verie commodious to kneele in: thither the queene went, after that shee had kist the Crosse, which was wonderfully enriched with reliques, being presented vnto her by the Patriarke, who was Archbishop of Valencia.

The Catholike king came downe into the church with his sister the Infanta, by a priuie

A uie way, which was made of purpose, where the Popes Nuncio (the solemnitie of the ceremonie being ended) demaunded of the king first, and then of the Archduke, if they did ratifie the mariages which had bene contracted before by their embassadours, and celebrated by the Pope: Which either of them confirming, they all went vp vnto the altar, where kneeling downe, they assisted at the last blessing of their marriage. The prayers being ended, they went from the church vnto the palace, where the nuptiall feast was made with all the pompe and state that could be deuised. Two dayes after the king made three knights of the Golden fleece, which were, the Archduke Albert, the Constable of Castille, and Prince Doria. For the space of eight dayes there were all sports and fights that mans wit could inuent. There was a Theatre built, able to containe threecore thousand persons, fit to behold all kind of sports, as baiting of the bull, Ioco di Canna, after the African manner, tilts, turneyes, and all other exercises wherein the Spaniards delight.

This nuptiall pompe being ended, the king and queene went to Vailledolit, whereas the king settled his Court, after the example of Charles the fift, his grandfather, and not at Madrid, which, after the death of king Philip the second, was abandoned. The king, after his marriage, gaue himselfe wholly to the exercises of peace, and left the managing of affaires to his Councill, retiring himselfe in a manner from the sight of all the Grandos of Spaine, being loath to see, or to be seene of any, but of the marquisse of Denia, whom he made duke of Lerma. Since that this prince tooke the scepter in hand, he hath made them change their conceits they had of him, and hath shewed more vigour than they did attribute vnto him. That which he wants by reason of his youth, abounds in his Councill, to whom he commits the conduct of his Estates. A prince must be wise, or else gouerne himselfe by them that are wise. They did not like that he should wholly giue himselfe to the duke of Lerma. The Grandos of Spaine could not endure this vnequall distribution of the kings fauours, vpon one onely object, and were grieved, that this common Sunne should haue no light but for two eyes; that this fountaine should haue no water, but to quench one mans thirst: which made them to grow in to great discontentes, and the rather, for that his wife was made chiefe Ladie of honour

*King of Spaine
settles his Court at Vailledolit.*

D to the queene, wherewith the greatest house in Spaine would haue thought it selfe much honoured, being impossible that so grear and sudden preferments should not be enuied and maligned. Hence grew complaints and murmuring, wherein the best wits imployed their tongues and penes to write freely. This discontentment was seene in all the sorts that malecontents could discouer it. They made images to speake at the kings coming to the Crowne, and at the entrie which hee made at Madrid, they set vp Jupiters statue, carrying a globe of the world vpon his shoulders, and discharging the one halfe vpon king Philip, with an inscription, That the Empire was diuided betwixt Jupiter and Cesar: they found in strange characters, and an vnknowne hand, at the foot of Jupiters image, these words; This is the duke of Lerma. They also made Pasquin to speake. The king of Spaine made request vnto the Pope, to grant him the tenthes of the Clergie-livings, besides that which his predecessors had bene accustomed to take: The feare they had the Pope would not grant it, made them to write this on the palace gates at Vailledolit: An unkind Pope, an innocent King, and an insolent Duke. They made counterfeite letters, both without name and subiect, hauing nothing but a superscription. The king comming one day from walking, he found vpon his table a letter sealed vp, with this direction: To king Philip the third of that name, king of Spaine, being now at the seruice or deuotion of the duke of Lerma: The post which brought it had not returned without an answer of hee had stayed. The king, who knew that there is nothing makes such brutes vanish sooner than contempt, nor that requies them more than a feeling and apprehension, laugh at it, and turning to the duke of Lerma, said, See here what they say of vs.

*Fauors of princes
full of enuie*

*Diuisum Imperium cum Ioue Cesar
habet.
Pasquins.*

E They spake vpon stages, and in publicke Scenes. They made a Tragedie at Vailledolit: the adors were the King, the Constable of Castille, the Duke of Lerma, and the people: The Argument was the complaints and insolencie of the duke of Lerma: the Catastrophe, the duke of Lermas death, who was torne in peeces by the furious multitude.

1599

They made fooles to speake, who are about kings onely to tell truth, and to make wise men, which dare not speake it, to blush. A ieafter passing betwixt the king & the duke of Lerma, iustled him in such sort as he made the duke to stagger, and said vnto him, Stand fast, for if thou fallst thou wilt neuer rise again. The king taking the word, answered presently, We will then fall both together. The Grandes, who smiled at the ieasters speech, were much amazed at the kings answer. All Spaine admires his fortune. The most happie hold, that who so will be fortunat, must bee borne vnder the same Planet. But no man knowes how long this happinesse will continue: And in the end the great fauors of princes are prejudiciall and ruinous to their fauourites. One sayes, That we must approach neere vnto kings, as vnto fire, neither standing too farre off, least we take cold, nor approaching too neere, for feare of burning. This fauour is a fire, as it shines, it burnes. Courtiers flie vnto it, and burne themselves like Butterflies. Hee is not wise that vseth it as a fountaine, and drinkes as much as he can, for the thirst that is past, for the present, and that which is to come: but he is wise that drinks of these fauors as dogs do of the riuert of Nol, passing and running, least they be deuoured of Crocodiles by enuie and jealousie.

The Archduke having brought the kings wife into Spaine, and receiued the Infanta his wife, to condu& her into Flanders, & to take possession with her of those countries, which the king had giuen her in dowrie, hauing taken leaue of the king, queene, and empress, his mother, he took his way towards the sea, which was so fauorable vnto them, as imbar- king at Barcelona the seuenth of Iune, they arriued in 18 daies at Genoua, where they remained the rest of that moneth in prince Dorias palace. From thence they past to Pauia, where the duke of Parma came to see them. Then they came to Milan; thither the Pope sent cardinall Dietestain to visit them, who presented a sword vnto the Archduke, in his Holinesse name, and a rose of gold to the Infanta: and so they past on their journey through the Grisons country.

At the conclusion of the peace of Veruins, betwixt the French and the Spanish, the queene of England was not comprehended in that treatie. The king of Spaine desired to enter into a particular treatie with her, the French king being willing to further this good motion, offered the towne of Boullen for their Commissioners to meet at: whither they came, but it was of no effect, by reason of the precedence, which neither would yeeld to other: for the English refusing to yeeld to the deputies of Spaine, they returned without any fruits of this meeting, neither was there any one of them but thought it vnreasonable to purchase a peace with so great a disadvantage to his masters seruice.

The king of Spaine being at peace with France, he thought him much wronged, & the treatie infringed, that the French went to serue the vnitd Estates: wherefore he gaue commandment to his embassador in France, to make complaint vnto the French king, That contrarie to the conditions of the treatie of Veruins, and contrarie to the publike faith, the French went to serue prince Maurice, and by the fauor of their arms did countenance the vnitd prouinces of the Netherlands in their rebellion: that a friendship in words without effects, was more prejudiciall, a peace which doth not obserue the conditions, was more hurtfull vnto him, than the acts of open war. The French king desiring to obserue the articles of the treatie sincerely, & without any just exception, disauowed all his subiects which caried armes in that qualitie, commanding them to returne home within six weeks, vpon paine of confiscation of body and goods, forbidding all others to goe thither to that intent: yet hee grew jealous, for that there was an armie newly imbarked in Portugal, which made him suspect some designe either against France or England: whereupon he commanded his seruants to stand vpon their gard.

This yere the marquisat of Saluces was in question betwixt the French K. and the duke of Sauoy, who in his proceedings seemed so discontented with the Spaniards, for sundrie reasons, and made them so jealous of him, as the Councell of Spaine demanded the prince his eldest son, and his eldest daughter, vnder a colour of bringing them vp after a royall manner, in the Court of Spaine, whereas they might one day hope to raigne. The duke was much discontented herewith, seeing that it proceeded rather from suspicion than affection; yet by the aduice of his Councell, hee gaue the king of Spaine to vnderstand, That hee could not lodge his children better, being the true cymment of per-

Archdukes
pass for Flanders.

Treaty at Bou-llen betwixt the deputies of England and
Spaine.

King of Spaine complains that the French
serue this enemy.

King of Spaine demands the Duke of Sauoy
children.

1599

A feet friendship, yet he resolved to send one to make his excuse, pretending, That the estate of his affairs would not suffer him to send them at that instant, nor to provide them a train and things necessary for their voyage. But the king of Spaine, to preuent all excuses, gaue order that money should be provided at Milan, persuading the duke to send the cont la Morte as gouernour to the prince. But hauing the money, he kept his children still, say- ing, That the ayre of Spaine would not agree with his children, and that their indisposi- tion and young yeares, would not suffer him to expose them to so long and daungerous a voyage. At which refusall the king of Spaine was much discontented.

The Estates of the vnitd Prouinces not content to make head against the forces of B Spaine within their country, they sent forth a goodlie fleet, in the which were about 8000 souldiers and mariners, with all other necessarie prouisions for such a preparation. They set saile on the 25 day of May, hauing for Generall Peter vander Does, and went to affront the Spaniards at their owne doores. On the eleuenth of Iune comming neere the Groine, they met with two small boats, which were sent forth to discover them: in one of them they found a Spaniard, by whom they vnderstood, that they had beene aduertised of their comming vpon that coast, where they stood vpon their gard, and that in the Groine there were foure thousand foot, and some horse: which made the Generall (ha- uing called all the captaines to counsell) to thinke it not expedient to attempt any thing in those parts. Which made them to hoise saile, and to bend their course towards Cap S.

C Vincent: so passing the islands of Lancerote, Allegeance, and Forte-aventure, they disco- uered the great island of the Canaries, whereas the Generall vander Does came with his whole fleet before the towne of Alegoena, the 26 day of Iune, where he cast anker vnder the great castle, which is on the Northwest part of the towne; and causing those ships to approach which had the greatest ordnance, he began in like maner to batter the castle of Gratiofa. The Spaniards and islanders hauing three peeces of ordnance, resolved to hin- der their landing, after some great shot from the castle, which did much annoy the Hol- landers. In the meane time the Generall put part of his armie into boats, to row to land, but not able to come vnto the shore, for want of water, he leapt first into the sea vp to the girdle, being followed by all the rest, who marched resolutely to land, notwithstanding all the attempts of the Spaniards and islanders, who kept their ground, and defended the landing verie valiantly: yet the Hollanders forced them, not without some losse of their men. At this charge the Spaniards lost some fortie men, before they would quit the place: among others the gouerniour (being on horsebacke) had a leg shot off with a great peece. The Generall of the Hollanders was hurt in the leg with a pike, and had three light hurts on the bodie, and if one of his souldiers had not slaine the Spaniard which in- counted him, he had beene in daunger of his life. The islanders leauing their artillerie fled to the towne with their lame gouernour, and the Hollanders landed at their ease.

E They of the castle of Gratiofa seeing foure and twentie companies of Hollanders lan- ded, and put in battell, and their colours flying, there came three mariners running from towards the castle, who told the Generall, That they of the castle would yeeld, if they might haue their liues and goods saued: whither hee presently went with some cap- taines, to whose mercie the place was yeelded, they leauing their armes, nine pee- ces of brasse ordnance, and six of yron, with all the prouision and munition. There were eight and fiftie prisoners, all the rest hauing beene slaine by the canon, all which he sent home in a Spanish ship which the fleet had taken, reseruing onely three of the chiefe for his better instruction.

The Hollanders meaning the next day to besiege Alegoena, they were much annoyed by the canon of another castle which was neere vnto the towne, so as being forced to fetch their canon to batter it, they spent foure houres, the great ordnance playing of either side: in the end they within the castle being beaten from their defences, their ordnance dismounted, and their men slaine, the Generall hauing also set one of the towne gates on fire, which they of the towne, castle, and a mountaine which shot with some great ord- nance, seeing they abandoned both towne, castle, hill, and artillerie, and fled to rockes and caues in the mountaines, carrying their plate, jewels, and the richest of their mouables with them, with their wiues and children.

Success of the Estates army at the Canaries.

Castle of Gratiofa yeelded to the Hollanders.

Towne and castle of Alegoena abandoned.

The generall Historie of Spaine.

Lib. 31.

After this the Generall caused some ladders to bee brought, with the which they entered the towne, finding no opposition. His men ran directly to the castle, where the Spaniards, at their retreat, had left a mine, with a match burning, the which tooke fire before the Hollanders were entred, so as it did them no harme. They found five peeces of ordnance in the place, the which, with all the rest of the bootie which they found, was carried into the Admirals ship, as the Estates had commaunded. The towne and castle being taken, the Generall put his men in battell, as if hee would muster them, in a plaine within the towne. The souldiers brought a Flestringer vnto him, whom they had drawne out of prison: whereupon the Generall went vnto the prisons, and freed some six and thirtie persons, who told him, that the inhabitants flying away, they had carried two prisoners with them, the one an English man, the other a Dutch, who were condemned by the Inquisition to bee burnt. Towards night the whole armie was quartered, and lodged within the towne, except such as were appointed to bee in gard towards the mountaines, whereas the islanders did sometimes shew themselves in great troupes. The towne was spoyle of all that remained, the best being carried away; and then the Generall caused a proclamation to bee made, That no man should appropriate any goods vnto himselfe, for such was the will of the Estates.

Estates men slaine in the mountaines.

On the nine and twentieth of Iune some mariners went vp into the mountaines to get some bootie, but the islanders intercepted them, and slue some twentie. Towards euening the Generall sent three hundred men to a small castle; halfe a league from the towne, but the garrison seeing them approach abandoned it presently, and fled to the mountaines; whereas the Estates men found three peeces of ordnance, and leauing a squadron there, the rest returned to the towne. The last of Iune the Generall commaunded that the wine, oyle, and all other goods, should bee imbarked. The Spaniards that were in the mountaines did often make offer to treat, but the Generall hearing their first demands, which hee held impertinent, dismissed them, and would giue them no more audience. The Hollanders being master of the towne, the Generall caused the bells, artillerie, munition, and all other commodities which the islanders had left behind them, to be shipt, and then he sent two thousand to charge them that were fled into the mountaines, who at the first made head, and fought valiantly, where, although the Spaniards had great aduantage, yet they retired into the mountaines, where the Hollanders not knowing the passages, durst not pursue them, but returned to the towne with the losse of seuentie men, and one sea captaine.

Alegoena burnt
by the Hollan-
ders.

The next day the Generall blew vp the castle of the towne, and burnt all the churches and religious houses, both within and without it: then, being readie to make his retreat, he drew forth his men in battell, and caused the towne to be fired: Then they marcht to Gratiofa, some halfe mile from the towne (which castle they also blew vp) where their boats attended them to carrie them aboard. They were no sooner imbarked, but the islanders came running from the mountaines to quench the fire. The Generall being at sea, hee called all the captaines to counsell, asking their aduice what was to bee done, and to informe himselfe of the situation of other islands in those parts. At this time there came certaine Spaniards to the shore, which desired a parley. Whereupon the Generall sent forth a boat to fetch them: Their coming was onely for those prisoners which had beene taken in the castle of Gratiofa; whose ransomes being payed, they were let goe.

Gomora taken by the Hollan-
ders.

Leauing this island, within few daies after the fleet discovered the island of Gomora, one of the Canaries, whereas they landed without any resistance, the Spaniards and islanders being fled to the mountaines and caues, as they had done from Alegoena. The Hollanders hauing taken Gomora, and seeing the islanders flee to the mountaines, there were foure companies, which landed first, pursued them, to cut off their passage: but being ignorant of the passages, they were charged by the Spaniards, who slue 80 of their men. The Generall hauing caused the ordnance, bells, wine, and such other commodities as he found there, to be imbarked, hee set fire of the towne, which the islanders came running downe to quench, as they had done at Alegoena.

Behold

Lib. 31.

The generall Historie of Spaine.

1299

1599

- A Behold how these two Ilands of the great Canarie and Gomora, which in a hundred yeares had not seene any enemies, were spoyle and burnt by the States armie, the which diuided it selfe into two parts; and twenty ships were sent homeward with the spoile they had taken, vnder the command of the Admirall John Gheerbrantsen, who arrived scatteringly about the middest of September. The Generall Vander Does bent his course with thirty and sixe ships towards the Iland of Saint Thome, which is vpon the coast of Guinee, directly vnder the Equinoctiall line. This Iland is inhabited with naturall Portugals, and abounds with Sugars, which is their greatest trade: whereof they became Masters vpon their first approach, without any resistance or losse. But the Hollanders being more accustomed to the cold blasts of the Northerne Region, than to the violent heat of the burning Zone, they were not long Masters thereof, but there fell a contagious sicknesse among them, whereof they died in very great torments. The Generall seeing this, caused them to imbarke the spoile with Francisco de Mences, Gouverneur of the said Iland, his prisoner: but this infection did not leaue them being at sea, for they dyed in so great numbers, as the Generall Vander Does, and all the Captains but two or three, with three parts of the Mariners & Souldiers had no other Sepulchres but the Sea, so as they had scarce men to gouerne their ships, yet in the end they got home safely by one and one.

Saint Thome
taken by the Hollanders.

- In the beginning of this yeare began the Iubile at Rome, which although it doth not directly concerne this Historie of Spaine, yet haue I presumed to make a little digression to relate the maner of this ceremony. This action of Iubile was in old time so rare, as few men might see it twice in their times. Bonifacius 8 ordained first of all that it should be celebrated at Rome euerie hundred yeares, and made it to be past in forme of a law, which before was done but by deuotion. Clement 6 abridged it to fiftie, to reduce it to the prefixed time of the ceremoniall law, which yeare all debts and iniuries were abolished, and the trumpets and cornets did sound lowder than of custome. Urban 6 had another consideration: Our Sauour had liued thirty and three yeres in the world, and therefore he wold that men reuerencing the yeare which fell out at the end of that space, should sanctifie it with the celebratio of the Iubile. Paul 2 finding the time yet too long, diuided the hundred into foure parts, that as the Bulls are proclaimed at the foure corners of Rome, and bind the that pretend to obtaine the pardons which are granted in this reuolution of yeres, to visit the foure principall Churches, so the foure parts of the world should bee inuited to frequent this Iubile, so called of the Hebrew word Iobel, which signifies a Rammes home, for that it was published that yeare by the sound of the Cornet with reioicing. It doth commonly begin on New yeares eue, with a solemne procession, in the which the Pope, the Cardinals, the Embassadors of Christian Princes, the Prelates, Clergie and Officers of the citie of Rome, march according to their ranks, with a world of people, vnto the doore called Holy, which finding walled vp, and neuer open but the yeare of Iubile, they put a candle into one of the Popes hands, and a little siluer hammer into the other, with the which hauing strooke thrice vpon the wall, it is presently beaten downe by men appointed to that purpose, whereupon the people carrie away the peeces with great prease and deuotion.

1600
Iubile at Rome.

- Clement* had presidents for the deferring of this day Iulio 3 began his Iubile in the yere 1550, on S. Mathias day, for that the Sea had been void vntill then. The importune paine of the gout should haue made Clement delay this ceremony: but the concourse of people was greater at Rome than had bin in the memory of man: the Pilgrimes were exceeding poore, and a longer stay wold haue bin very hurtfull vnto them. Which inuited the Pope not to frustrate their expectation: wherefore hee was carried in a chaire according to the custome, and gaue his first blessing to this worke the first day of the yeare.
- F The French king hauing long expected restitution of the Marquisate of Salusses, which the duke of Sauoy detained from him, or some recompence, was forced to seek it by arms: whereupon he came in person with an army into Sauoy, and tooke the chiefe places of strength. The earle of Fuentes Gouverneur of Milan fortified the duke with foure thousand Spaniards. The Ministers of Spaine murmured much at the French kings approaching so neare Italie, saying, that the Marquisate of Salusses was the pretext, but Milan

Spaniard apprehends the French kings taking of Sauoy or

or Naples was the true cause of this warre. Italie was in alarme, who thought that the idlenesse of the French at home would make them trouble their neighbours: The Pope feares that these first sparkles will set all their neighbours on fire: The duke of Sicilia, king Philips embassador at Rome presses him; hee cries out of the miseries & calamities which the continuance of this warre would cause; hee doth intreat, beseech, and coniure the Pope to send Cardinall Aldobrandin his nephew to the most Christian king to quench the fire of this great diuision, and to exhort them to come vnto the effects of the treatie of Paris: which the Pope did willingly yeeld vnto.

Spanish forces keep Christen-dome in alarme

After an accord made betwixt the French king and the duke of Sauoy, all things seemed quiet, but suddenly both Italie and France were in alarme, hauing intelligence that both the duke of Sauoy, and the Earle of Fuentes, kept their forces together, and increased them daily, and that they had some great designe which could not be yet discovered, they threatned many, to strike but one, but no man knew where the chance would fall: that all the Princes of Christendome had cause to doubt him, and that the king of Spaine would make himselfe fearefull by armes in the beginning of his reign: but they knew not whether his designe was against Asia, Africke or Europe. Men spake diuersly of this preparation; In France some said that the king of Spaine would reuiue the pretensions of his Grand-father, Charles the fifth, against the Venetians: others said, and with some reason, as the issue will verifie, that hee threatned to enter the estates of the great duke of Tuscany, with this mightie army, if he deliuered not into his hands that man which for some years had qualifed himself, D. Sebastian the true and lawfull king of Portugal, who being banished from Venice vpon this occasion, had bene staied at Florence as hee past, thinking to imbarke at Liorno to get to Marseilles, and so come vnto the king during the warre of Sauoy. The Venetians gaue order for their Gulphe, and did thinke to demand Frances de Bonnes Lord of Des Diguers from the French king, to be their leader, if they were invaded; to the end that as France had lately furnished the Emperour with a Lieutenant General, and Malta with a great Master against the Infidels, it might also supply them with a great Capitaine against the Spaniards, if hee did attempt to trouble the quiet of their estate.

At Rome it was bruted that Geneva was in danger, and that the Marquesse of Aix was sent thither to intreat the Pope to blesse the enterprise, and to fortifie it with his meanes. In England they thought that some great men had some practises in Castille; and the yeares following will shew that their jealousy was not vaine. The Flemings said that it was to make king Philip to be declared king of Romans: but it were not conuenient to breed new factions among the Princes of Germany, when as the Turke was so powerful in Hungarie.

All these erred in their iudgements, time had discovered that this great armie which so troubled mens affections, was entertained for an enterprise which they had vpon Marseilles, but one of them which should haue deliuered the Towne to the Earle of Fuentes, discovered it to the duke of Guise, and so they were disappointed.

Gentlemen of Venice executed.

During the stay of this army in Italie, a Venetian Gentleman of the house of Donati, appointed to be gouernour of Creme, was conuicted to haue intelligence with the Spaniard, and publicly executed; hee testified that this army had many and diuers designes at one instant, of the which if any one had succeeded, it may be they had not lost their time and paines at sea, as they did at land. But seeing all their designes proue vaine both in Italie and Prouence, the army imbarked at Vada, in the State of Genoua, in two troupes, the one vnder the command of D. John Andrew Doria, and the other vnder Charles Doria his Son, and so they bent their course towards the Turkes, being in all seuentie gallies, to the which the Pope, the king of Spaine, the great duke of Tuscany, the duke of Sauoy, and the great Master of Malta had contributed. The Venetians would not infringe the peace they had with the great Turke, and yet they provided for all things necessarie for their defence, both by sea and land, if any did quarrell with them.

Enterprise iust
but not blessed of heauen.

The enterprise was iust and worthy of the first stratagems of a Prince, who desires to begin his raigne by some worthy act; the opportunity of doing well being so fauourable, as if Christendome could haue made her profit by the diuision which was then

A in Mahomets estate, by the mutinies of the Ianifaries, and the reuolts in Asia, they might in shew haue aduanced the accomplishment of that prophecy; whereof the Turkes doe not speake but with sighes, That by the common armes of the Christians they shall be rooted from the face of the earth.

This armie being imbarked they came, in the beginning of Iuly, to Naples to make prouision of great store of armes; and a good number of Petards, which made the world thinke that hee would both arme some of the Turkes subiects, which were ready to reuolt, and that he had intelligence in some place to surprise it suddenly. And for that footmen are alwaies weake if they bee not seconded by some horse, they made prouision also of fiftene hundred, or two thousand armors for horsemen.

B The Venetians seeing them bend their course towards Messina, entred into new apprehensions, that if they attempted any thing in Albania they should bee troubled in their gulphe, but being come to Trepany, which is the promontarie of Sicile next to Africke, they were freed from this feare. Hauing past the Ilands of Baleares, they then thought it was for Alger. But Cigala of Sicile was come from Constantinople with fifty gallies to crosse his designes, and to watch him vpon his retreat, being loth to fight at one instant against the Christians and against the Moores, their slaues and rebels; for it was giuen out that the Christian army should be assisted with eight or ten thousand Moores, and some Christians. Wherefore Cigala had drawne all them that dwelt along the Seacoast, and might fauour this army into the Towne, and did shut vp about tenn thousand slaues in caues, tyed with double chaines, and straitly garded.

C There was great hope of good successe of this enterprise; and the Spaniards said, that the King would giue good testimony of his affection to Christendome. Prince Doria the better to fauour this designe, had intreated the great Master of Malta, in the king of Spaines name, to send some gallies to spoile in the Levant seas, and to make a diuersion of the Turkes forces, and to aduertise him of their course. They were verie fortunate in the designe, for passing into Morea with fife gallies, Beauregard a French knight had commandement to set a Petard to the gate of Chasteau-neuf, which the Turkes call Passana; and in the meane time some other knights should attempt it by Scalado on the other side. As nothing is easie to cowards, so the valiant find nothing difficult: where they entred with such furie, as they forced the second Port, and yet it was valiantly defended by seuen or eight hundred Turkes, where they tooke many slaues, cloyed their ordnance, spoyled and burnt the Towne and countrie about it, and returned with speed.

Chasteau-neuf in Morea taken by the knights of Malta.

The Sea armie of Spaine recouered the coast of Africke, but both men at land, and windes at Sea were banded against it. God would not blesse this enterprise although it were iust and holie, the reasons remaine in the Register of his justice and infinit wisdom: against the which wee may not murmure, as the Romans did against the conduct and gouernment of their gods, when as they saw that Pompey, doing nothing according vnto justice, was fauoured with their assistance; and when as he fought for their laws and countrie, yea for the gods themselves, he was most vnfortunate. Prince Doria seeing that both heauen, earth, and sea did crosse his designes, resolved to retire and not attempt any thing.

F The Prince of Parma did serue as a voluntarie in this army: who grieuing to see this great armie returne without any employment, desiring rather to erre in iudgement than in the greatnesse of his courage, told Prince Doria, That hee should not suffer so goodlie an armie to returne without some attempt, the which had done nothing but incense a mightie enemy, who to bee reuenged of a dead enterprise ready for execution, would seeke to annoy the king of Spaine in all his estates. To whome the old man made this present answer: I know my charge, my head is growne white in learning this experience. Your excellencie is accountable vnto the king my lord but for your pike onely, and I for a whole army, wherein although I haue bene vnfortunate, yet will I not that other parts belonging to my charge, as courage, authoritie and experience shall faile mee, or that any shall obiect vnto me that I haue erred therein. A gallant and worthy answer, to teach a young Prince how great

Prince of Parma
speech to
Prince Doria.

Prince Doria
his answer

Prince Doria
his answer

Prince Doria
his answer

Prince Doria
his answer

1601

great fouer hee bee in an armie) that hee must onely studie to obey, and not to lead and commaund which was the Generalls charge.

So Prince Doria having discharged his armie went towards Genoua, chosing rather to giue them cause to speake disgracefully of his retreat, than to haue attempted an impossible enterprize in vaine. The Popes Gallies attended the Prince of Parma at Barcelona, who was gone into Spaine to kisse the king of Spaines hands. Those of the great duke of Tuscany went to Genoua, and from thence to Li-uorne.

Politic of the earle of Fuentes.

Most of the Souldiers came and lodged in the duchie of Milan, to the vtter ruine of the Countrie. But the Earle of Fuentes, who neuer forceth the people when hee can persuaide them, found an inuention to make this burthen sweet and supportable. Hee sought to drawe their commerce by water from Milan to Paulia, and caused them to digge Trenches, to bring the Riuer together which are betwixt those Townes.

The people seeing commodities that might well recompence their losses with aduantage, seasoned the remembrance of their present harme, with the hope of so great a good. Many haue attempted the like, but in vaine, who in the end haue bene forced to giue ouer the worke, and to leaue the world as it was made.

The Emperour Charlesmaigne, sought to ioine the Riuer of Rhin to the Danowe, and the Morelle to the Rhin, to the end the French might traffike by water throughout all Europe, and to this end hee caused great and deepe Trenches to bee made, but finding lets, not fore-seene nor thought off, they remained vnprofitable and filled of themselves.

And the Earle of Fuentes encounters great difficulties in this designe, which did frustrate their worke, and renewed the peoples complaints, when as they sawe themselves surcharged with the ruines of this last Ship-wracke, and that the Souldiers which came from the armie of Alger, liued in Lombardie at discretion and without discretion: wherefore to giue the Millanois some ease, hee entreated the duke of Sauoy to lodge the Regiment of Barbo, in the Marquise of Salusses, but knowing how difficult a thing it is to make the Spaniard leaue his lodging, he excused himselfe vpon the ruine and miserie of his estates.

Ten shillings
sterling.

In the end the king of Spaines Commissaries cast those companies of Italians that were in Alexandria, they wrapt vp their colours, disarmed them, and left them in a manner naked, giuing to euerie one but five liuers of that Countrie money; the King of Spaine hauing no meanes to doe better, his Treasure beeing much wasted in the charges of this last sea armie, being also to furnish money for the Suisses and Germanes.

Infanta of Spain borne.

This yeare the Queene of Spaine was brought in bed of her first Childe, the which although it were a Daughter, yet were the Spaniard as full of ioy as the French were for their new borne Daulphin, saying they had rather their Queene should beginne with a Daughter than with a Sonne, least they should fall into those difficulties which jealousy and ambition doe breede, when as the Sonne growes vp so soone and sollicit his father to be gone, when as their ages are in a manner confounded, the one being in the flower, the other in the season of frutes, the which is fittest for gouernement; and that the desire to succede may not trouble the order of Nature, which makes the one repent that they are fathers, and shewes the other vnworthy to be children.

This Daughter was borne on Saint Maurice day, the second of September, and was afterwards Christned Anna Maria Mauricista.

Outrage done
vnto Rochepot embassador in Spaine.

There fell out an accident this Summer, which had like to haue drawne the two great Monarchs of Christendome into armes. The Maiestie of kings is so interested in the wrong which is done vnto their Embassadours, as there is nothing more sensible, nor a iustier subiect to quarrell with them that doe the wrong: And this pretext is so nice, as the Prince which suffers the wrong unpunished, is no lesse culpable than they that doe it.

This

1601

A This accident did trouble the mindes of many, and transported their imaginations beyond the Pyrenes, if hee who quencht the last combustions of France; had not speedily cast water vpon this new fire which began to kindle. A nephew of the earle of Rochepots, embassadour in Spaine for the French king, bathing himselfe at night with some other Gentlemen after the manner of the French: certaine Spaniards looking on them, vsed some iesting speeches, which were as suddenly answered, wherewith the Spaniards being moued; cast the French mens clothes into the water, the French attired themselves with all speed, and from words they fell to swords, in which conflict there were some Spanish Gentlemen slaine, and some hurt. The kinsmen of the dead made complaint vnto the king of Spaine, who commanded his officers to doe justice as the cause required. And they, not remembering that the name of an embassador is inuolable; euen among enemies, forced the doores of his lodging without any respect, and drew forth his Nephew, and some other Gentlemen to prison.

The French king, being aduertised of this affront, was much offended, and demanded satisfaction from the king of Spaine, else hee should not take him for his friend, and withall hee called home his embassadour, forbidding all his subiects to traffike into Spaine and Portugall, vpon paine of corporall punishment, and the losse of goods, protesting to bee reuenged if reason were not done him by some mild course: whereupon hee went presently towards the frontiers and came to Calais. The iniury done vnto Rochepot, the defence of traffike, and the kings approach, made all men thinke that this goodlie Sunne of peace, which began but to spread his beames ouer both realmes, would be soone eclipsed, at the least it would bee over-cast with clouds, from whence would grow many great and ruinous stormes.

Traffike forbidden into Spaine

The Archduke tooke an alarme at the kings approach, being then at the sege of Ostend: wherefore hee sent the Earle of Sora to beseech his Majestie not to suffer his enemies to preuaile against him, and presume to find a support in him, which would be of dangerous consequence for all other people that would shake off the yoke of obedience, and an odious example to princes from whom they should receiue a law.

Archduke iealous of the French king.

And for that many thought the king would embrace this occasion of the sege of Ostend, whereby it seemed he should haue good meanes to enter into Artois, without any opposition, he sent the duke of Esquillon to assure the archduke that he had no other designe but to maintaine peace with all his neighbours; that his coming to Calais, was to view and to prouide for that which should bee necessarie to assure the frontiers against all dangers. That he desired peace, yet would not endure a wrong: And as he did hope, the king of Spain would do him reason for the affront done vnto his embassador, so he would not seeke any reuenge vntill it were denied him. But the Pope fearing that this violence offered to the French embassador, would not passe without some reuenge, and that it might kindle a warre betwixt these two great kings, hee sent into Spaine for the prisoners, the which were sent vnto him, and hee presently deliuered them into the hands of Monsieur de Bethunes, embassador for the French king at Rome: and so the peace was continued.

French king sends to the Archduke.

I must now make some mention of a wonder or miracle in Spain, wherof the Spaniards brag much, but I leaue it to the iudicious Reader to beleue what he please: it is a bell in Arragon, which they say, doth sometimes ring without any mans help, and therefore they call it, The miraculous bell.

Bell in Arragon miraculous.

Neere vnto the riuer of Ebro, whereas in old time was a colony of Romans, called Curia Celsa, from whence they brought goodly vessels of Alabaster, as Titus Livius and others doe witnesse, there is a place, the ruines wherof shew that there hath been a great town which is now demanteled, and did stretch from Villila vnto a place called Celsa, which keeps stil the old name though it bee corrupted.

Neere Villila there is a little hil, on the top wherof there is a little church dedicated to S. Nicholas, where among other things there is a square stone of alabaster, very ancient, on the the which there are many personages cut in stone, kneeling before a Bell, which hangs in a Tower of that steeple. But now the Church hath a Tower vnderpropt with three pillars, in the which there hangs two bells, one a little one, which calls the neighbours daily to diuine seruice, and the greater is commonly called by them the miraculous Bell, the which is ten spannes about, and there is printed on it on two places, The picture of Christ crucified, with that of the Virgin Mary and Saint Iohn, the one towards the East, and the other towards the West; and in like manner two crosses, one towards the South, and the other towards the North, and about it there are Letters grauen which containe this Sibilline prophesie: Christus Rex venit in pace, Deus homo factus est. This bell by ancient tradition, as they affirme, hath often sounded of it selfe, and hath foretold strange and vnexpected euents.

This yeare one thousand sixe hundred and one, on the thirteenth day of Iune, this bell did sound without the helpe of man, and without any shaking, the knepple striking sometimes on one side alone, and sometimes on both sides of the bell; at the first it gaue fixe stroakes, then nine, and afterwards twelue, fiftene, and in the end thirty stroakes, continuing striking after this manner for the space of two houres; and the greatest blowes were for the most part giuen towards the East, and towards the South: and diuers daies following it strooke sundrie times in the presence of the Curate of the place, and of an infinite number of people, vntill Saturday the sixteenth of that moneth: So as the bruit of this noueltie was spred ouer the whole Countrie, and in the end it came vnto Sarragossa the chiefe Towne of the Realme of Arragon, whereas D. Garcia of Villiapando, Lord of Quinto and Villila, was at that time, who hearing these news went with his wife, and daughters, and many others of good accompt, presently to Villila, being desirous to see that with their eyes which had bene reported: and for that after their arriual the bell stood still some daies, they held themselues very vnforgunate, that they came not in time, fearing it would sound no more.

But the next day which was Thursday, being Corpus Christi day, about fixe of the clocke in the morning, when they were ready to goe in procession, it beganne to sound very lowd, and so continued diuers times, vntill the day after Saint Iohn Baptists day, that it stayed for a time, and afterwards as if the clapper had bene guided by ones hand, it gaue twenty great stroakes towards the East verie melodiously, and so it ceased.

They say that they haue autentike testimonies in their Annales, that this bell did sound of it selfe, when as Alonso the fift, king of Arragon, went into Italie, to take possession of the Realme of Naples; and when as the Emperour Charles the fift, died: In like maner when as D. Sebastian king of Portugall went into Afrike; and when as king Philip the second was extreamely sicke at Badajos, at which time his wife Queene Anne dyed; from which time vntill now it had neuer sounded. This Bell did sound (as I haue said) when as D. Sebastian went into Afrike, and the Portugalls (who alwaies produce some Prophecies,) assure that this bell did sound this yeare for the retume of their king D. Sebastian.

The accident of a man which termed himselfe D. Sebastian, sometime king of Portugall, is so common throughout all Christendome, as there is not any Nation but talks of him, yet diuersly: The verification thereof would not onely giue pleasure and profit, but would rauish many of them with admiration, who beleue him to be so, as well as the others, who hold him to bee an Impostor, or a Magitian: And with all it might serue for an example, as well to those that are now or shall come heereafter, in matter of wilfull and malicious incredulitie, as well as in too indiscreet and light beleefe.

The Spaniards in this beleefe are contrarie to the Portugalls, for they hold him for an Impostor. Some among them say, that he is a Calabrois, borne at Tauerne: others maintaine that he is Monke, which had renounced his order: And others hold that it is one Mark Tulle Catizon, born in a town of Apulia, & that he hath a wife liuing at Messina, being induced by some Portugalls enemies to the Spaniards, who by this pre-

D. Sebastian
king of Portu-
gall.

Opinion of the Spaniards of D.
Sebastian.

text

- A text would seeke the deliuerie of the realme of Portugall; which they say, is held by the violence of the Kings of Castille: That it is most certaine the king D. Sebastian was slaine at the battell in Afrike: That he being dead, his bodie was knowen and deemed by king Philip the second for a hundred thousand etownes. Others say, that the Moores deliuered it without any money, by reason of the accord made betwixt Muley Mahut, and king Philip: it is true that king Philip did sollicite them for it by reason of his pretensions. That hee was honourably interred at Belem by Lisboners. That foure kings, accompting the election of D. Antonio, haue reigned since his death. That it is not likely that king Sebastian should haue continued two and twentie yeeres a prisoner, and a wanderer about the world, and not haue a desire, nor find any means to make himselfe to be knowen for him who this Impostor saies he is. Moreover, the miserable estate wherein this affronted hath long liued among poore people, and in the end was scene in Italie before hee sailed who hee was, having not written vnto any of the Princes of Christendome: That hee could not answer pertinently to all the demands made vnto him by the Seigniorie of Venice, who had deliberately examined him both in prison and at liberty. And that he had not all the marks which the deceased king D. Sebastian had. That the king D. Sebastian was flaxen haired, and this Impostor is blacke. That he doth not speake good Portugall. That in all Ages there haue bene some seene to resemble one another in countenance, to be of the like stature, and to haue like marks. That it is not now alone that there haue bene such Impostors which said they were the king D. Sebastian; yea a Mason borne in the Island of Tercere, was so impudent as to assume himselfe to be the same, who was followed by some Portugalls armed, and if he had entred into Lisbon on Assention day, as he had resolved, and had written vnto the Gouverneur, he had bene receiued by all the Portugalls for their king D. Sebastian: but others say, that onely some peasants of the countrey followed him, and that he had written vnto the cardinall Albert to leaue Portugall; but being taken and knowne for an Impostor, he was hanged. That also in a Prouince of Portugall called Beira, a certain Portugall of bale condition maintaine himselfe to be the king D. Sebastian: the which was giuen out to be so true, as Albert Cardinall of Austria then Viceroy of Portugall, was resolved (as the Portugalls themselues say) to retire himselfe into Castille; yet by the aduice of the true Gouvernors of Portugall, which gouerned the realme ioyntly with him, he sent to captaine Gill de Mesa (who at this day is one of the French Kings chamber) to go and apprehend him with his companie of two hundred men, and to bring him with honour and respect: for if haply hee were the same whom he vaunted himselfe to be, hee would deliuer vp into his hands the scepter and crowne of the kings of Portugall, with his realmes. Gill de Mesa went into the prouince of Beira, and came to the towne of Pena macor, where he tooke him easily, and carried him to Lisbon, who being knowne for an impostor, he was publicly whipt and sent to the gallies; which Impostor liued of late yeeres, and was called Sebastian in derision, who was not hanged notwithstanding, for that in his processe hee was not found charged with any other crimes than with that of his intention: But one who termed himselfe Bishop of La gard was hanged, for that hee had persuaded this man: And as for the cardinall Albert, he would not retire, but when as the King D. Antonio came into Portugall with his sea armie. That there haue not onely bene such Impostors, who termed themselues to be the king D. Sebastian; but that lately in Castille, there was a pie baker at Madrigal, who gaue it out secretly, that he was D. Charles prince of Spain, whom king Philip his father had put to death twenty yeeres before, who being knowne for an abuser was hanged: Others say, that this pie baker termed himselfe king Sebastian, being incited thereunto by Nicholas de los Sanctos an Augustine Frier, Preacher to Queene Katherine, who was hanged in his religious habite: That in like maner other ages had furnished the like Impostors which had taken vpon them the name of Kings and Princes.

The Portugalls on the other side maintaine, that this is their true king by many and sundry great markes, which he carries like vnto those of the true Sebastian, wherein they are the better confirmed, for that the Spaniards (say they) ground onely vpon simple, common, and light presumptions, the which doe in no sort ballance so many marks and

D d d d d

reasons

Portugalls opinion touching
D. Sebastian.

1801

Birth of D. Sebastian king of Portugall.

reasons which iustifie this to be the true king: And moreover, that the Spaniards, who say that he is a Calabrois, a Monke, or Marc Tullio Catizon of Apulia, haue not yet produced any apparent proofes of his life and means whom they call an Impostor. The which they may so easily doe; by the authoritie and absolute power which they haue in those Prouinces, as the Portugalls doe not receiue their negatiue, but for a meere slander: but on the other side they repeat the life of D. Sebastian from his birth, vnto his coming to Saint Lucar of Barameda, with many prophesies, signes, and predictions: the which we haue added, that it may serue as an example to posteritie.

D. Sebastian (as you haue heard) was the onely sonne and after-birth of the Prince D. John sonne to the king D. John the third, who died young, leaving D. Joane of Austria, princess of Castille, and daughter to the Emperour Charles the first with child, who was deliuered of D. Sebastian on Saint Sebastians day, eightene dayes after the fathers death, whib as it seemes was in a maner wrested out of the hands of God, by the great prayers which were made generally throughout the realme of Portugall, to the end the crowne should not be left without lawful heires males in the succession of great Alphonso the first king of Portugall. They were induced hereunto by the predictions and reuelations which had beene giuen to the said Alphonso the first founder of the said realme: by the which it was promised them of God, To warrant his posteritie in such sort as it should not faile vpon the earth, yet, at the sixteenth descent from him, it should haue great tribulations and afflictions.

By this Oracle it appeareth it was spoken of his birth, for the which also the Portugals made such praers, and shewed such deuotion, for that they feared to fall vnder the Spaniards yoke, who are their naturall enemies: either for that the Portugals had in olde time their beginning from the French, as the name doth shew, for that the French coming into those parts did inhabite that country, and gaue it their name; or else for that the Spaniards being enuious of their prosperities, seeking alwayes to raigne ouer them, are become their enemies without cause.

The king D. Sebastian being ouerthrowne at the bartell of Alcaferquibir in Afrike, the Spaniards say that some noblemen of Portugall which followed him, seeing all lost, aduised him to retire, but he answered that he had rather die, and so thrust into the midst of his enemies, where some noblemen entred with him, where they beleue he died, whose bodie they say was buried at Belem.

But the Portugalls say, that they did neuer beleue that it was D. Sebastians bodie, or that he was dead, but that he imbarqued (as you shall heare) and that he went into Algarue, and put himselfe into a monasterie of Ieronimits, or according vnto some, of S. Francis, whom they called los Descalcos, or the bare footed, and there hee caused his wounds to be cured; the which they say had beene verified by a seruant to Cardinall Henrie the Kings vnckle, who was a Church man and trusty to his master, and brought an A& signed by the Gardian and monks of the said monasterie of Ieronimits: this seruants name was Mannuel Antonex: But cardinall Henrie, who was acknowledged king, did not then speake, neither did the said Mannuel Antonex: the which (as they say) was afterwards the cause of great miseries in Portugall: for the cardinall dying, notwithstanding that the Portugalls did after him choole D. Antonio a prince of Portugall for their lawful king, yet the king of Castille seized vpon the Realme, and held it by force. Afterwards the said Mannuel Antonex reuealed this A&, seeing that in the yeere 1598, it was said that D. Sebastian was recovered, who being sent for by king Philip, hee went vnto him, but no man knew what was become of him, some said he was dead.

The Portugalls beleue, that the king D. Sebastian seeing the battell lost, that hee was in daunger to be taken, but that defending himselfe valiantly, hee slew some which sought to take him, and hid himselfe amongst the dead carcases vntill night, at which time hee went towards the sea, where the rest of his armie lay in the roade. There hee met with the Duke of Auerio Christopher de Tanora his great fauourite, the Erie of Redonde, and other noblemen, with whom he imbarqued, and went into Algarue, as you haue heard, sending his shippes away: where hee resolved with the said noblemen to wander ouer all Europe, Afrike, and Asia, into Ethiopia to Pete Ian, and into Persia, where he was in battells against the Turke, and receiued many wounds.

Being

How the Portugalls beleue that D. Sebastian answered himselfe from the battell.

1601

A Being wearie of running, and tired with the vanitie of the world, hee came vnto an Hermitage, where hee continued vntill hee had visions and reuelations both to himselfe, and to an Hermit with whom hee liued: so as after many delayes he left him: which was in the yeare 1597. And that being in Sicilie he sent letters into Portugall, by Marc Tullio Catizoni a Sicilian, who neuer returned, and was neuer seen since. That king Sebastian after hee had attended him long, parted from Sicilie, with an intent to manifest himselfe vnto the Pope. But there fell out an other accident, his seruants robbed him, and ranne away, so as he remained naked and without meanes, being forced to begge vp and downe Italie: and in the end hee came to Venice in Iune 1598, hauing but one gazette, which is not a peny of our English mony: being there, he got into a Cooks house, and lodged in a poore cockelost or garret, the Cookes name was Francisco, borne in Cyprus, who (being but a poore man and charged with wife and many children) entertained him as well as he could, for the vertues and good parts which he seemed to haue, being continually at his prayers.

Within few dayes he was discovered by the Portugals to be D. Sebastian king of Portugall, whereupon some of them carried him to Padoua, whether it were vpon hope to be aduanced by him, or otherwise, so as there was a great bruite of him. The Embassador of Spaine made his complaints, and the Seigniorie sent to the gouernors of Padoua to chase away this man, who called himselfe D. Sebastian king of Portugall, within 3 daies out of their towne. This sentence being signified vnto him, touched him so neere as hee fell sicke. Being recovered, he resolved to go in person to Venice to yeeld an account of himselfe. He presents himselfe vnto the Senate, relates the historie of his life, his rout in Afrike, his retreat into Calabria, his resolution neuer to haue shewed himselfe in anie place of knowledge for the shame of his disgrace, and the punishment of his rashnesse, if the Spirit of God had not inspired him with another will, and giuen him a certaine assurance to make him known for him that he was borne. He added moreover, that among all the soueraigne Estates of Europe, he would not haue recourse to any, but to the common weale of Venice, to iudge the truth of his condition. And for a prooffe, hee remembered vnto them with all circumstances, the Embassadors which they had in former times sent vnto him, the answers and dispatches which they had brought backe from him, and the difficulties that were of either side. The Senate caused their records to be searcht, and found them conformable to his words. They questioned with him, with great wisdom and iudgement, of many other matters of importance; whereunto hee answered so pertinently, as many held him to be the true king D. Sebastian, and others tooke him to be a magician, for that no other but himselfe could be informed of such secret matters, without the spirit of Pithon.

Then grew there a great rumour in Venice, the people fauoured him with their wishes and praers, euery man desired to see him seated againe in his throne. But hee had a violent enemy, the Embassadour of Spaine, who maintained for his master, that hee was an impostor, charging him moreover, with many horrible and detestable crimes (which being prooued could not haue deserued lesse than fire) he made himselfe partie against him, and got him to be committed. Being in prison, the Senat deputed Iudges to make his processe, who vsed all diligence to informe vpon the crimes imputed vnto him by his aduerserie partie, but they found him innocent. They examined him eight and twentie times, at all the which he shewed such an vndaunted courage and countenance, as he seemed rather capable to iudge the Iudges, than to vndergoe their censures. In the end, imagining that their demands were more curious than iust, and that they fauoured the greedinesse of the Spaniard more than the truth of his cause, hee would not answer any more, but did insitt vpon his first request, That they would let him be scene vnto the Portugals, and to such strangers as had knowne him before he past into Afrike, and if he were a counterfeit, hee was in their hands to doe that iustice on him which an impostor deserved.

This Seducer (said the Embassadour of Spaine) is borne in Apulia, and married at Messina, we haue the depositions of his wife, that his name Marc Tullio Catizoni is, that he had beene procured & instructed by certain Portugals, enemies to the Estate of Spaine,

D d d d d ij

Reasons of the Embassadors accusing D. Sebastian.

who

fares, and conclusions beeing taken the 16 of December, 1600, he was called vnto the Senat at ten of the clocke at night, where there did assiste aboute 200 of the chiefe men of that State; where the same inuention which had beene made vnto him by the Podesta of Padoua, in the year 1598, was againe intimated vnto him by foure Deputies of the Seigniorie, all standing vp bare headed, with great respect: where they pronounced this sentence vnto him, and he still couered, if we shall beleue the Portugals.

Going forth of the Senat many presented themselves to accompanie him to his lodging, but he would not suffer them. The Portugals which were at Venice, D. Christopher, D. John de Castro, Diego Manuel, Roderigo Marques, Sebastian Figueyra, Francisco Antonio, Sampayo and Chrysostome Monkes, with many others, whereof some had seene him often in Portugal, and siace in Barbarie after the defeat, protest that at the first sight of him they were much amazed, for that they saw him differ so much in age and haire; but hauing well obserued his countenance, his forehead, his eies, his nose, his lippe of Austria, that is to say, greater than the ordinarie, the which most of the Princes of that house haue (from whence he was descended by his grandmother Catherine, sister to the Emperour Charles the first, and by his mother Joane daughter to the said Emperour) his stature, his speech, his writing, all the visible markes of his bodie, whereby they did know him infallibly; the left parts, as his arme, hand, leg, and foot, shorter than the right; his wart vpon the little toe of the right foot, which was almost like vnto a sext toe; the moles of his face and hands, his hurt vpon his right brow & head, the place where he wanted a tooth in his right jawe beneath, the which Sebastian Nero his Chirurgion had once pulled out: all which markes, with many other, did rauish them with wonderful admiration, & forced them to confesse that he was their true & naturall king, who was miraculously preferred for the restoring of Portugal, and for the benefit of Christendome, and they liue yet in this expectation.

Sampayo a Doctor and professour of Diuinitie at Tolouza, and a Iacobin by profession, to giue an indubitable beleefe to this new manifestation, and to make the world thinke that it were Atheisme not to beleue it; writing to Paris, presumed to deliuer these words: I assure you that Iesus Christ is no more the sonne of the true and eternall God, whom I call to witnesse, than this is D. Sebastian our true and naturall king and Lord. A bold speech, although it were an vndoubted truth, confest by all the world; the comparison is vnlawfull, the which I doubt cannot be made without blasphemie, seeing there is no proportion betwixt the Creator and the Creature.

Beeing at libertie, the Portugals which were at Venice besought him to speake vnto them, to the end they might see if his speech would giue them as much knowledge of his qualitie as his countenance had done, not being able to iudge of the inward man by the outward parts: wherupon he spake vnto them after the Portugal manner, proudly & royally, telling the what he was, & what his life had bin since his ouerthrow in Afrique, which forced teares from him in speaking, and from them in hearing. Being thus resolved, they were much troubled how they should saue him from the ambushes of the Spaniards, for they were aduertised that the Embassadour of Castille laid wait for him at euery passage. The duke of Sauoy & the Earle of Fuentes had the like charge. The Archbishop of Spalato offred to conduct him safely in his Caroeche vnto the frontiers of Germany, but they would not trust him, & yet they knew not what to resolve: some would carry him to Lions, where they treated of a peace with the duke of Sauoy: whereas when they saw any troupe of horse a far off, they ran to meet them, with acclamations, hoping to see D. Sebastian king of Portugal, & thereupon built goodly castles in Spaine. Others desired he should rather passe by Florence, to imbarke at Liuerne, & so get to Marceilles. But as euery one in particular sought to haue the honour to preserve the king, their obstinate disagreement spoiled all. They made choice of the worst, & followed the aduice of Sampayo, who was a turbulent & cholericke man: they attire him like a monke of the Order of S. Dominike, & imbarke him in a gondole in the night, from whence he goes to Padoua: there he changed his habit for a cloake and a rapier, & so went to Florence, whereas the duke caused him to be stayed, by the aduice of the Archbishop of Pisa, where he kept him vntil the 23 of Aprill.

The king of Spaine beeing aduertised that he was at Florence, prest the great duke

Prefumption of Doctor Sampayo.

D. Sebastian
kaid prisoner
at Florence.

A to deliuer him vnto the Viceroy of Naples, and to his entreaties he addes threats. But why should he deliuer him, seeing that the Venetians seeme rather by their sentence to giue their prisoner means to seeke justice elsewhere, than to take knowledge of his cause? Shall he violate the law of nations, in deliuering him that trusted vnto his protection? Being thus in suspence betwixt the feare of threats, and the reason of demall, they represent vnto him a great armie, at the king of Spaines deuotion, the which affrightes all Italie, and threatens his estates. He desires rather to auoid the storme, than to incense a mightie Prince, and to draw a waire vpon him, the end whereof must needs be ruinous: Whereupon he sent him to Orbello, where some, appointed by the Viceroy, receiued him, and conducted him safely to Naples.

He is deliuered to the Viceroy of Naples.

B Seeing himselfe in the Castillans power, and that he had nothing free but theayre and his tongue, he poured forth all that might be spoken against one that may be taxed of treason, inhospitalitie, and treacherie; as the violence of choler thrust him on to strange imprecations against them that do so deliuer vp the poore, vnjustly afflicted, which commit themselves to the safegard of another. Notwithstanding these violent humors, he presented himselfe before the earle of Lemos, Viceroy of Naples, with as settled a countenance as he had done to the Senat of Venice, and the great Duke; yea (the Portugals say) with as great maiestie, as if he had beene sitting in his royall throne at Lisbon: For at his coming in, to a great hall, seeing the Viceroy bare headed, whether it were to respect the title of a king, which he did attribute vnto himselfe, or by reason of the heat, Cuer you Earle of Lemos, said he, with such a hardie grauitie, as it amazed the whole companie. The Viceroy demanded of him, Whence comes this authoritie to command me? To whom he answered, It is borne with me. You seeme not to know me, I know who you are: doe you not remember that the deceased king Philip mine vnckle sent you twice vnto me when I reigned in Portugal? Declaring vnto him euery particular so precisely, as it bred some scruple in the minds of the hearers, and did much distemper the Viceroyes thoughts: who dying some moneths after, charged his sonne and successor to carrie himselfe discreetly and moderately to this prisoner, as indeed he had intreated him (as the Portugals say) with little rigour and much courtesie. But this new keeper, whether that he had a contrarie commaundement from his Soueraigne, or to insinuate more into his fauor, or else fearing the corruption of some Portugals, who followed him a farre off, to see his successe, he restrained his prisoner, and doubled his guards, giuing him no more libertie than to many others, to goe out on Sundayes and festiual daies to heare Masse in a chappell within the castle. Yet the Viceroy, who would not publicly seeme to consent to the affliction of this vnfortunate man, dispensed with himselfe to call him Impostor: who finding himselfe much toucht with this reproch, fell to those armes which his condition did furnish him, which were as bitter words as might be giuen to any one that would not respect his qualitie. These violent words did not free him from a hard prison in the castle d'Ouo, in the which he did not find any thing (according to the report of the Portugals) but a cord, and a long knife, fit instruments for some desperat malefactor, who would free himselfe from some exemplarie punishment. There he continued three daies without bread, wine, water, or bed. On the fourth the Auditor generall being followed by two Registers, came to visit him, and finding him safe and well (for there was no great likelihood that with such cruell vsage he should seeke to prolong his life, especially hauing such fit instruments to end his miseries, and to free himselfe from a more sensible ignominie before men) he said vnto him, That if he did not forbear to say and maintaine himselfe to be D. Sebastian king of Portugal, they had not any thing to sustaine his hunger nor thirst, nor to giue him rest. Doe what you please, said the prisoner, for I am D. Sebastian, the true king of Portugal, and no other. God forbid that I should fall into so great a mischiefe, and so contrarie to my soules health, that for feare of men I should denie the truth, and confesse that which is not. I am that D. Sebastian king of Portugal, who in the year 1578 past into Africke against the Infidels: he who to augment the number and power of Christians, put his life in hazard: that vnfortunat man who for his sinnes lost a battell, which was the cause of so great alterations in Christendome. This is the very truth, and I can say no other.

D. Sebastian in the castle d'Ouo.

The

The Auditor and the Registers departed with this answer: from which time they gaue him bread and water for his diet; but some dayes after he had five crownes a moneth giuen him, and a man to serue him, without any further proceeding in his cause, vntill the seuenteenth of Aprill 1602. Vpon which day the Viceroy sent to know if he persisted in his first deposition, and that he should be now well aduised to answer pertinently. This is not (said he) the right course they should take to examine and judge my proceffe: present me vnto the Portugals, who haue bred me, knowne me, and serued me; vpon whose saying and testimonie the whole profe and verification of my cause doth depend. If I should liue a thousand yeares, yea more, I would neuer answer otherwise. If you be resolu'd to put me to death without any other profe, I take God for my onely judge, who knowes the truth of my cause. I am D. Sebastian the true king of Portugall: you may now deale with me as you haue heretofore pretended. After which he disposed himselfe to die, made a generall confession, and receiued the Sacrament, still maintaining, that he was as he had said.

Whilest that he attended the houre of his death, they sent againe vnto him to make his last answer; that is to say, he should sing a new song, and recant the former: but he made the same answer: And vpon this last answer he was at the instance of the Castilians exorcised by the Bishop of Rhegium, as a Magitian, for that he had answered very pertinently to all they had demanded of him. During which action hee shewed vnto the Bishop with a cheerefull countenance a Crucifix, which he carried at his breast: Behold (said he) the Image of the Master in whom I trust, and for whom I would die. Wherewith the Bishop went away, confounded with his conjurations, as some report, who say they were then present. After which he was set vpon an Ass, the last day of Aprill, and carried publickly through the streets, hauing three trumpets going before him, and proclayming his sentence, by the which he was condemned to be led ignominiously through the streets of Naples, and then put into the galleyes, for that he had called himselfe D. Sebastian king of Portugall, being but a Calabrois. At this crie when he pronounced this word King, he answered with a loud voice, So am I; and when he added, being but a Calabrois, he said, That is false. Neither did any of the officers or people hinder him, or once moue: Euerie man heard him with admiration crying at the corners of the streets: I am in my enemies hands, let them doe with my bodie what they please, I recommend my soule vnto God, who hath created it, and knowes the truth, that I am as I say.

Hauing thus led him through the citie, they put him into the royall Galley, where they attired him like a slaue, and cut off the haire both of his head and beard, which some gathered vp, either through reuerence or superstition, as a matter of great esteeme, and then they fastened him to the chaine, yet aduising them that they should not force him to rowe.

The galleyes passing from Naples to Barcelona, arrived in August 1602, at the port of S. Lucar of Barameda, whereas the Duke of Medina Sydonia and his wife were desirous to see him: who hauing deuised long with him, he demanded of the Duke if he had the sword which he had giuen him, when he embarked to goe into Barbarie. The Duke answered, It is true Don Sebastian king of Portugall presented me with a sword, which I keepe among others. Seeing you haue it yet, said the Gallerien, I pray you let me see it: for although it be foure and twentie yeares since I gaue it you, yet will I know it. Whereupon the Duke caused a dozen to be brought, but it being not among them, he sent for others. The Gallerien seeing it in the bringers hand: behold (said he vnto the Duke) the sword which I gaue you when as I undertooke my voyage into Africke. Then, turning vnto the Duchesse, who was Anna de Silva, daughter to the prince of Eboli; Cousin, said he (after that he had told her what secrets had passed betwixt them when he tooke his leaue of her at Cadis) I remember that I gaue you a jewell, haue you it also? The Duchesse made the like answer vnto the Duke her husband, That the

D. Sebastian led ignominiously through the streets.

He is put into a Galley.

His discourse with the Duke of Medina Sydonia and the Duchesse.

A the king D. Sebastian had giuen her a jewell: he then replied, Shew it me; I shall know it well, and shall tell you of a secret which it may be you know not: then hauing chosen it out from among many, he said vnto her, That to proue his saying true, she should cause the stone to be taken out, vnder which she should find his name and cypher grauen. There was a Negro in the Duchesse's companie, whom he knew, saying, that the had serued him for the washing of his linnen, when he reigned in Portugall. The Duke and Duchesse seeing these apparent things, and so conformable to truth, went away with heauie countenances, and as it were weeping for compassion to see this miserable prince in so wretched an estate. Many old Portugals saw him, knew him, and did aduow him to be the true D. Sebastian, king of Portugall. Finally, the Portugals (if wee may beleue them) report so many particularities touching this man, as it would require a whole volume to relate them all: adding, that they that haue seene him, and knowne him, haue giuen this testimonie, that he is the same, or a deuill incarnate.

But besides these probabilities, which they take for truth, they arme themselves with certaine predictions or prophecies, which they say must needs haue relation to the aduentures of this poore Gallerien, whom they maintaine with an obstinate constancie to be their lawfull king. S. Isidore, sonne to Seuerian, the sonne of Thierry, king of the East Gothes, and of Italie, did leaue in writing aboute a thousand yeares since, That a hidden king, twice giuen by prayers and deuotions, shall come into Spaine vpon a horse of wood, whom many seeing, shall not beleue that it is he, &c. And for the vnderstanding of this prophecie, which they attribute particularly vnto king D. Sebastian, they say, that he was twice giuen; first, by the intercession of the people of Portugall for his birth, when they saw his father die, leauing no other issue but what might be hoped for from a woman with child: the second by the acknowledgement they haue made of him at Venice, after that he had wandered twentie yeares vnkowne throughout the world: That the wooden horse is the galley vpon the which he came from Naples into Spaine.

Sampayo swears, that he found this other prophecie at S. Vectors Librarie at Paris: That the king D. Sebastian shall goe out of Naples vpon a horse of wood: that out of the Mediterranean sea he shall enter into the Ocean, and that his horse shall stay at S. Lucar of Barameda. The which is accomplished, when as the galley passing from Naples to Barcelona, entred into the Ocean sea.

This other was found in a Castilian Author, in his language: The vnkowne shall come, yea without doubt he shall come: he shall enter into the garden by the gate which is most on this side the wall: and that which seemes obscure, shall be seene clearly and plainly. By this garden they vnderstand the countrey which is on this side Mont Calpe vnto the riuer of Guadalquivir, which they call the garden of Spaine, for that it is pleasant and fruitfull: the wall is Cadiz, the gate S. Lucar of Barameda.

That the labourers of Portugall did hold for a most auncient tradition, That a time will come, when as a King, whose name shall be as Bestia, shall vanish out of sight, and that after he and his realme haue suffered many great afflictions and miseries, the same king, whom all the world held for dead, shall rise againe, and recover his throne with incredible prosperitie. Which they say must needs be applyed to their king D. Sebastian, for that the peasants in Portugall, in stead of Sebastian, say Bestiam.

And as they hold these predictions to be accomplished in the person of this prisoner, so it is not possible to root out this beleefe, That he is the true and naturall D. Sebastian, king of Portugall. Sampayo after he had proclaimed this miraculous aduenture ouer all Christendome, and runne into a thousand dangers for his sake, he went againe into Portugall with Frier Bonauenture, a Franciscan: where publishing this opinion as a most certaine truth, they bred such a mutinie among the people, as they were ready to make a generall revolt, if they had found any assistance with strangers: but being in the end discovered at S. Lucar, they were degraded of their Orders, and hanged at Lisbon, with horrible torments, the which notwithstanding could not stop their mouthes, but

Predictions alledged by the Portugals in fauour of D. Sebastian.

Sampayo and Bonauenture hung for this Gallerien.

1601

but they tooke earth, heauen, and all heauenly creatures, yea and God himselfe, to whom the most hidden secrets are knowne, to witnesse of their innocencies and words, the which they maintained vnto the last gaspe to be as true as the Gospel; so as through compassion of their cruell tortures, and the firme beleefe which they had setled in the hearts of their countymen, they drew many thousands into danger. Some retired themselves vnto their friends, to escape the search which was made for the adherents of this noueltie: some got them away disguised, and escaped into diuers prouinces here and there. Some coming to Paris presented a petition vnto the king in the name of the Portugals oppressed by the tyrannie of the Castilian, beseeching his Maiestie to succour them onely with two thousand men, commaunded by a Prince, or some great man of Fraunce, such as he should please to name, and some store of armes to disperse among the people at their arriual, being assured (said they) of money for their entertainment, and other munition of warre both by sea and land, which the Queene of England and the Estates should furnish them, to restore their lawfull king, and free them from the command of strangers. Moreouer, they gaue hope, in case they might recouer their king D. Sebastian, vniuersally detained prisoner, whenas they should cause him to be duely acknowledged, and restore vnto him his inheritance, to marrie the duke of Vendosme with the daughter of D. Catharina duchesse of Braganca, who had right to the succession of the realme of Portugal, and to crowne him king of Portugal, if it should so please the most Christian king his naturall father. But God hath not blest the voyages made into Portugal, with a desire to drawe it from the Spaniard, who hath enioyed it quietly for many yeares; and a wise man will not prouoke the wrath of a mightie prince, by drawing him into warre, the end whereof must needs be doubtfull and ruinous.

The Spaniard considering the attempts of the Portugals, who would willingly trouble heauen, earth, yea and hell it selfe, to free themselves from his subiection, hee caused their pretended king to be taken out of the royall galley of Naples, and to be brought to Seuille in the galley of D. Pedro de Toledo the Generall, there to be more safely kept. But afterwards, to take all knowledge from the world, hee caused him to be shut vp in the castle of S. Lucar. The Portugals hope that hee shall come forth in despite of all his enemies, and fulfill all the prophecies that are made of him, and recouer possession of his realmes. It is in the power of the king of Spaine, but it is not likely that hee will seeke to verifie the qualitie of this person by any other meanes: for if hee catcheth him to be declared an impostor, and to be punished, the Portugals who had procured him to maintaine himselfe to be their king, might hereafter suborne another to the same end; whereas so long as they shall beleue this man is aliue, they will not attempt any thing in fauour of another, and this man being detained perpetually in prison, or in the galleys, shall daily feele the paines of death, without dying: And if he were duely proued to be such as he qualifies himselfe, reason and equitie would require that he should bee restored to the iust and lawfull possession of his Estates, which is the fairest rose of the Spaniards girland, and the rarest pearle of his cabinet.

Whatsoever hee bee, Donatus and Delphinus Procurators of Saint Marc at Venice, being sent to congratulate the French kings victories, and his marriage, they were demanded by the Prince of Conde, what iudgement the seignorie of Venice made of him who called himselfe king of Portugall; to whom they made no other answer, but that the State had done what it might in his cause; and that he had bene ill counselled and conducted.

This yeare the Queene of England was much troubled with her rebels in Ireland, by reason of the aide and support they receiued from Spaine: the king sending D. John d. Aguilar vnto them, with about two thousand old souldiers in sixe ships: they came to Castel-hauen, Baltemoore, and Beer-hauen; all three important places; here they landed their men, with an intent to fortifie them, being then about the end of September. Sir Richard Lemifan, who was Admiral of some of the Queens ships, lying then in the haue of Kinsale, & hearing of the Spaniards coming into the aboue named ports, he drew forth his ships both against wind and weather, & went & fought with the Spaniards within Castel-hauen, where he did so batter them, as he made 5 of their 6 shippes vnseruiceable,

Gillien put in the Castle of
S. Lucar.

Politic of the Counsell of Spaine.

Spaniards sent into Ireland.

1601

A seruiceable, most of their men were landed before he came, by reason of the weather, who played dangerously vpon him with their ordnance from the land, whereof they were wel furnished with great store of munition. Presently after, D. John d. Aguilar put himselfe into Kinsale with most of his Spaniards, where he fortified himselfe: whither in October after, the Lord Montjoy, Lord Deputie of Ireland; and Generall of her Maiesties forces in that kingdome, came with an armie to besiege him; the which continued long, in a very vnseasonable time, and was in the very dangerous for the English: for they within the towne were for the most part old souldiers, well armed, and in no want, as was supposed, and without the rebels were all in armes, and had drawne their forces together, which were the greatest that euer had bin seene together in Ireland, being sixe thousand foot (whereof there were sixe companies of the new arriued Spaniards) and five hundred horse, and began to march towards Kinsale, with an assured hope to releue the towne, raise the siege, and defeat the English, if they of the towne did fallie forth when as Tyrone and Odonell should giue charge vnto the campe: they had great reason to hope for good successe, for the English were scarce so many in number, all in a manner tyred with the miseries of a long winters siege, their horses weake and decayed, and likely to want victuals.

Notwithstanding, continuing their approaches still towards the towne, as if they regarded not the rebels, on the twentieth of December at night, the Lord Deputie had intelligence that Tyrone and the rebels would campe the next night within a mile and a halfe of them, with all their forces; and so on the 21 day at night he shewed himselfe, with most of his horse and foot, vpon the toppe of a hill, within a mile of the English campe.

I must craue pardon if I make a relation of this battell, and the ouerthrowe of the rebels armie in this historie of Spaine, both for that they were then relieved by the king of Spaine, with money, men, and munition, and supported in their rebellion; and also for that the yeelding vp of Kinsale by the Spaniards, depended wholly vpon this action.

Tyrone (shewing himselfe as I said before) and seeing two regiments of foot, with some horse, drawne out of the campe, and marching towards him, he retired to the other side of the hill, where he camped that night, being fortified both with woods and water. One the three and twentieth day the Lord Deputie was advertised, and had also intercepted letters, written from D. John d. Aguilar Generall of the Spaniards, and commaunded within the towne, by which he did presse and importune Tyrone to make an attempt vpon the English campe intimating his wants, and likelihood to be soone forced, putting the rebels in mind of their faithfull promises to succour him, and of the easinesse of the enterprise, and vndoubted successe, assuring them that the English were much decayed in numbers, and that those which remained were much weakened with that long winters siege; so as it was not possible they should be able to maintaine so much ground as they had taken when their strength was full: if they on the one side, and he on the other, charged them at one instant, which he for his part promised to doe whensoever they should giue the attempt. It seemeth that vpon this aduice they resolved to put it in execution, that night, or the next following.

In the meane time they gaue the English continuall alarmes, and made sallies from the towne, keeping them still in action, that they might be the lesse able to make resistance when they were charged. But the Lord Deputie provided for all inconueniences, making forts, barricadoes, and trenches, and fortifying all the approaches to the towne, keeping good guards, and his armie ready vpon all occasions. On the 23 day at night hee was assured that the next day the rebels would charge his campe, whereupon he commanded the whole armie to be in readinesse.

Tyrone had an intent early in the morning to put all his Spaniards into the towne, with eight hundred of his best Irish, vnder Tyrrell; but seeing at the breake of day some of the English troupes aduance, hee made a stand, and then retired to the body of their armie. The Lord Deputy giuing the charge of the camp to Sir George Carew then L. President of Munster, to attend the Spaniards within the towne, hee drew forth part of his forces, being about foure hundred horse, and a thousand and two hundred foot, and hearing that the enemy retired disorderly, hee aduanced towards them, who still retired with feare. In the end, (omitting euery particular circumstance touching the marshalling of the English armie, to them that write that historie) they they Kinsale besieged by the Spaniards in it.

Reason why this is inserted into the history.

Letters from
D. John d. Aguilar
to the
L. Deputie.

Rebels and Spaniards defended in Ireland.

they ouertooke the rebels, charged them, and put them to rout. The Spaniards (being abandoned by the Irish) were almost all slaine. D. Alonso d'Ocampo their colonell, with three Captaines, sixe Alferes, and fortie souldiers were taken prisoners. There were found (of Irish onely) twelue hundred bodies dead vpon the place, and about twelue hundred hurt, whereof many died that night. The rebels lost two thousand armes which were brought forth, all their munition, their drummes, nine ensignes, whereof sixe were Spanish: the English had but one man slaine, and not aboute tenne hurt. Thus they got a miraculous victorie, to the great honor of the Lord Deputie, and of all that commanded vnder him.

After this glorious victorie, the Lord Deputie posted that present day vnto the camp, lest the Spaniard should haue made some sally in his absence, but they had not attempted any thing: the next day he commaunded the approaches vnto the towne should be aduanced nearer: But after fise or sixe daies worke, D. John d'Aquilar, who commanded the forces within the towne, offered to parle, and sent a drumme with a letter sealed vp to the Lord Deputie, by the which he demaunded that some men of qualitie and sufficiencie might be sent into the towne from his Lordship, to conferre with him, whom hee would acquaint with such conditions as hee then stood vpon: whereunto the Lord Deputie consented, imploying Sir William Godolphin in that busines; the which was managed after this maner, according to the originall.

D. John d'Aquilar speech.

D. John told Sir William, that hauing found the Lord Deputie (whom hee termed Viceroy) although a furious and powerfull, yet an honourable enemye, and the Irish not onely weake and barbarous, but (as he feared) treacherous friends, he was so farre in his affections reconciled to the one, and distastd with the other, as it did inuite him to make an ouerture of such a composition as might be safe and profitable for the state of England with least prejudice to the Crowne of Spaine, by deliuering into the Viceroyes power the towne of Kinsale, with all other places in Ireland held by the Spanish, so as they might depart vpon honourable termes, fit for such men of warre, as are not enforced by necessitie to receiue conditions, but willingly induced vpon iust respects, to disingage themselves, and to leaue a people, by whom their king and master had bin so notoriously abused; if not betrayed: That if the Viceroy liked to entertaine further parley touching this point, he would first be pleased to vnderstand them rightly, and to make his Propositions such as might be sutable to men thoroughly resolute, rather to bury themselves aliue, and to indure a thousand deaths, than to giue way to one article, that should taste of basenesse or dishonor, being so confident of their present strength, and the royall succors of Spaine, as they should make no doubt of yielding a good accompt of themselves, and of their interest in this kingdome, but that a just disdain and spleene conceiued against the nation, dissuaded them from being farther ingaged for it, than of necessitie they must.

Sir William Godolphin hauing charge from the Lord Deputie, only to receiue D. Johns propositions and demands, hauing made this relation to his Lordship, and the Council, he was sent backe by them with this answer following.

Answer from the Lord Deputie to D. John.

That although the Lord Deputie hauing lately defeated their succours, did so well vnderstand his owne strength and their weakenesse, as it made him nothing doubt of offering them within a short time, whom hee knew to be preft with vnresistible difficulties, how much sooner they laboured to couer and conceale them: yet knowing that her sacred Maiesie out of her gracious and mercifull disposition, would think the glorie of her victorie blemished, by a voluntary effusion and obstinate expence of blood, was content to entertaine this offer of agreement, so as it might be concluded vnder such honourable Articles for her Highnesse, as the aduantage she had against them gaue reason to demand. The which were the same that are set downe in the Articles of Agreement following, signed by the Lord Deputie, D. John and others: sauing that there was an Article more in them, for the leauing of his treasure, munition, ordnaunce, and the Queens naturall subiects to her disposition; all which points he did peremptorily refuse: Protesting that both he and all his would rather indure the last of miseries, than be found guilty of so foule a treason against the honor of his prince, and the reputation of his profession, although

A although hee should find himselfe vnable to subsist, much more now when as hee might not onely hope to sustaine the burthen of the warre for a time, but with patience and constancy in the end ouercome it. That hee tooke it so ill to be misunderstood in hauing articles of that nature propounded vnto him, as were they but once againe remembered in the capitulation, the Viceroy should from thenceforth vse the aduantage of his sword, and not the benefit of his former offer: adding, that the Viceroy might rather thinke to haue made a good and profitable purchase for the realme of England, if with the expence of two hundred thousand ducats hee had procured D. John to quire his interest and footing but in Baltemore alone, speaking nothing of Kinsale, Castel-hauen, &

B Beerhauen: for said he; suppose that all wee with the rest of our places here had perished, yet would that Peninsula being strong of its owne nature, bettered by our art and industrie, (furnished as it is with vittuals, munition, and good store of ordnance) preferue vnto the king of Spaine, a safe and commodious Port for the arriual of his fleet, and bee able to maintaine it selfe against a Land armie of tenne thousand, vntill Spaine (being so deeply ingaged) did in honour releue them: which would drawe on a more powerfull inuasion than the first, being vnderaken vpon false groundes, at the instance of a base and barbarous people, who in discouering their weakenesse and want of power, haue armed the king my master to relie vpon his owne strength, being bound in honour to relieue his people which are ingaged, and to cancel the memorie of our former misfortunes. But this is spoken, said he, in case the Viceroy be able to force this town, as I assure my selfe hee cannot, hauing vpon mine honour, within these walles at this instant, about

C two thousand fighting men, which are strong and able, besides which some hauing been sicke and hurt recouer daily; the greatest part of these consisting of old Soldiers, which fall not but by the sword, and those that were new, being now both trained to their arms, and acquainted with the clymate, are more able to endure than at the first: our means as good as they haue bene any time these two moneths, such as Spaniards can well indure, and able to suffice vs three moneths more: wee lodge in good warme houses, haue store of munition, and (which is best of all) stand well assured, that our succour will be here shortly. To bee plaine, wee preferue our men, and referue our strength the best we

D may, hoping to front you in a breach, which (if our hearts faile vs not) wee haue hands and brefts now to stop, against treble your forces: but I wil giue the Viceroy this right, that his men are passing good, yet spent and tyred with the miseries of a Winter seage, which hee hath oblatinately maintained beyond my expectation, but with such caution, and vpon so good gard, as hauing nicely watched all aduantages, I could neuer fasten a falley yet vpon him, but with losse to my selfe: wherein I must confesse my hopes were decciued, that grounding vpon some error in his approaches, I promised vnto my selfe the defeat of at least a thousand men at one blow. But when wee meet vpon a breach, I am confident vpon good reasons, to lay fise hundred of your best men on the ground, and rest hopefull that the losse of those will make a great hole in an army, which hath already suffered so much extremity.

E But to conclude our business: the king my master sent me to assist the Condees, Omeale and Odonnell, presuming on their promise, that I should within few daies after the arriual of our forces haue ioyned with them: I expected them long in vaine, sustained the Viceroyes armie, saw them drawne to the greatest head they could possibly make, lodged within two miles of Kinsale, fortified with certaine companies of Spaniards, euery houre promising to releue vs, and being ioyned together to force your campe: At last wee saw them broken with a handful of men, and disperfed into diuers parts of the world, Odonnell into Spain, Omeale into the farthest parts of the North: so as now I finde no such Condees in verum natura, as I came to ioine with: and therefore haue moued this accord

F the rather to disingage the king my master from assisting a people, so vnable in thefelues, as the whole burthen of the warre must lie vpon him, and so perfidious, as perhaps they might be drawne in the end to betray him.

Vpon relation made, by Sir William Godolphin, to the Lord deputy & Council, of these offers made by D. John, it was thought good, for many important reason to proceed roundly to an accord, there being nothing propounded by him that admitted any exception,

Ecccc

but

Articles of the accord as Kin-sale.

but that he demanded to carrie away his ordnance, munition & treasure, which did not so much import, as it should breake off the treatie which concerned the common good and safety of the kingdom: whereupon a composition was made vpon these articles following.

1 That said D. John d. Aguilar shall quit the places which he holds in this kingdom, as well the towne of Kinfales, as those which are held by the Spaniards, or other souldiers vnder his command in Castell-hauen, Baltemore, and in the Castell of Beerhauen, or other places, to the Lord deputy, or to whome he shall appoint, giuing him safe transportation & sufficient shipping and victuals for his said Souldiers, with the which the said D. John may passe with them into Spaine, if he may, at one time, if not at two shippings.

2 That the Souldiers which are at this present vnder the command of the said D. John in this kingdom, shall not beare armes against the Queenes Maiesty of England, whensoever supplies shall come from Spaine, vntill the said Souldiers be vnshipped in some of the Ports of Spaine, being sent away as soone as may be by the Lord Deputy, as hee promisseth vpon his faith and honour.

3 For the accomplishment whereof, the Lord deputy offereth to giue free: passport to the said D. John and his army, as well Spaniards as other nations whatsoever, that are vnder his command, and that he may depart with his armes, munition, money, ensignes displayed, artillerie, and any other prouisions for warre, or other things, both that which is in Castell-hauen, Kinfales, and other places.

4 That they shall haue ships and victuals sufficient for their money, after such rates as they vse here to pay. That all the Souldiers and the said things may be shipped if it bee possible at one time, if not at two, and that to bee within the time aboue mentioned.

5 That if by contrarie winds, or any other accidents, there shall come into any of the ports of Ireland or England, any of those ships wherein the said Souldiers shall passe, they shall bee intreated as friends, and may ride safely in the harbour, & be victualled for their money, & shall moreover haue such things as shall be needful: to furnish the for their voyage.

6 That during the time they shall stay for shipping, victuals shall be giuen to D. Johns people, at reasonable rates.

7 That there shall be cessation of armes of either side, & security giuen that no wrong be offered to any one.

8 That the ships wherein the said Souldiers shall be transported for Spaine, may passe safely by any of the queenes Maiesties ships, of England, and so shall the said Queenes and her subiects by those that shall go from hence: and the said ships being ariued in Spaine, shall return as soone as they haue vnshipped their men without any impediment giuen the by his Maiestie, or any other person in his name, but rather they shall shew them fauour, and help them if they need any thing: and for securitie thereof they shall deliuer into the Lord deputies hands three Captaines, such as he shall chuse.

9 For assurance of the performance of these articles D. John promisseth that hee will confirme and sweare to accomplish this agreement, whereunto some of the captaines vnder his charge shall in like maner sweare.

10 That the said D. John shall remain within the realme of Ireland, where the Lord deputy shall appoint, vntill the last shipping, vpon his Lordships word, & if it happen that his souldiers be shipped all at once, the said D. John may go in the same fleet without any let, but rather the Lord deputy shall giue him a good ship wherein he may passe, and if his men go in two shippings, then he shall go in the last.

11 And in like maner the said Lord deputy shall confirm & sweare the same, & giue his word in the Q. Maiesties behalfe & his own to keep & accomplish this accord, & that the chiefe officers of the camp, with the counsell of state, & some nobles should sweare the like.

These were the articles of the accord made before Kinfales, for the sending the Spaniards out of Ireland, & freeing this kingdome from an imminent danger. They were signed & sworn accordingly on both parts the 2 of Ianuary, and the towne yeelded vpon the ninth.

At such time as the duke of Biron's treasons were discovered in France, the king of Spain had an army ready to passe at Pont de Grefin, vpon the frontiers of Bourgundy vnder color of passing into Flanders: but the passages being kept by the marshal Lanerdim, Taxis ambassador for Spain demanded passage of the king, beseeching him to think that the king

Answer made
by the French
king to the em-bassador of
Spaine.

A his master had not sought to draw the duke of Biron from his obedience. To whome the king answered, you would haue me believe that the king your master was not acquainted with the practices which the marshal of Biron had with the Count Fuentes, & I tel you that it is impossible his treasure should haue bin so freely distributed, without the consent of his counsell: I haue no reason to leaue my frontiers disarmed vntill that all the marshalls conspiracy be discovered by his proceesse. In the mean time I do not mean to hinder the commerce according to the treaty.

The Count of Fuentes not able to dissemble his discontent, to see matters fall out so contrary to his designs, he discharged his rage vpon the marquesse of Final, sometimes pretending a donation of the said Marquisate to the king of Spaine, when as the Marquesse was verie sicke: and sometimes that he should haue a principality in the realm of Naples in exchange, but he first seased vpon the place, and then published his pretensions: Hee sent D. Diego Pimentel his nephew, & D. Sancho d. Luna with some troupes of souldiers, who surprised Final, hauing corrupted the Lads knits which were there in garrison with a promise of 16 moneths pay, assuring himselfe both of the countrie and Port by a garrison of 200 Spaniards vnder the command of D. Pedro de Toledo. Milefimo a place nere vnto it was by the same right purchased by the king of Spain. The Marques of Final, who is vassall to the emperor, made his complaints vnto the pope, & vnto his imperial maiesty, but they had no other effect, but that he had a pension giue him during his life, & so was forced to yeeld vnto the stranger. By this prise the Genouois did hereafter reap no profit by their Commerce with Spain, but what pleased the gouernor of Final. Doubtlesse that seruant loues his masters greatnes with passion, which doth rauish another mans inheritance without any lawfull cause, or precedent wrong, neither respecting reason nor equitie, nor considering that God is offended with such violences. But king Philip did not limit and bound his hopes with so small a purchase. That great leuie which was made at Naples, in Sicile, in the dutchie of Milan, and in many estates of Italy, witnessed that his designs shue a higher pitch. It was thought they would either renew the enterprise of Alger, or make head against Cigala, who they said was comming out of Constantinople with a fleet of 100 saile. As the designe was secret, so was it not known who should be generall. Andrew Doria

D had demanded leaue to retire himselfe, he had been vnfortunat the yeare before, & therefore he thought the Spaniards would not willingly employ him againe. The duke of Sauoy seemed willing to accept of this charge, if it were offered; but it was giuen to D. John de Cordona, who shall be no more fortunate in his enterprises than Doria. The chief designs of this army were rather against the Christians than the Turks & Moors, although it were giuen out that the king of Fez had intelligences vpon Alger, & that he had promised the K. of Spain to make him master therof: yet this army did not forsake the sight of Europe, & some thought it lay houerling to see what would become of the treasons which were practiced in France. But want of money & some other discommodities made them to giue ouer

E al attempts for this yeare against the Turks. These were the opinions of the king of Spains designs, & withall they added that d. Albigny was gone to Milan to the earle of Fuentes, that the marques of Aix had past into Spaine, and that the duke of Sauoy was ready to ingage himself wholly to the wil of the counsell of Spain, to whom he did consign his 3 Sons; That he had made them knights of his order, to prepare the for the voyage, & had sent an extraordinary embassador to Rome to beseech the Pope to send them his blessing.

There were 8 great gallies made ready this yeare at Scuile, the which were appointed to be sent into Flanders to the Archduke, vnder the command of Frederic Spinola, to annoy the coast of England, Holland & Zeland. There were 400 men in either of these gallies, besides the slaues, and 800 souldiers more which they tooke in passing by Lisbon. Two of these gallies called the Trinity & the Ocaion were sunk by sir Rich. Leuison vpō the coast of Portugal, the rest a while after went on their course towards the low-countries. Comming betwixt England & France, they were first discovered & pursued by sir Robert Mansel, being then admiral of the queens maiesties ships in those seas, who lay there of purpose to attend them, he hauing them in chase, the States ships which lay in the downs vpon his aduertisement came in, & in the end the said gallies were defeated, some were sunk and the rest made vnseruiceable. This great seruice was diuersly reported according to the humors & passions of men. The Hollanders did challenge all the honor of this action, & did publish

Eeeccij

Earle of Fuentes takes the Marquesate of Final.Armie of Spaniards at Sea.Duke of Sauoy resolues to send his sonnes into Spaine.Gallies sent out of Spain into the Low countries.

lish it in print in diuers languages. Sir Rob. Mansel finding the state interested, & his reputation somewhat blemished by their pamphlets, made a true relation of the whole seruice, the which he presented vnto the lord admirall, vnder whose comand he was, & published it to the view of the world, with an offer to maintaine it by any course fit for a gentleman that professed arms. And for that the Statesmen haue left their assertions recorded in their history, & haue made the French to write it after the same manner, I haue thought good for the better satisfaction of posterity, to insert it in this history, in the same words and phrase as hee himselfe hath set it down, speaking in his own person as followeth.

On the 23 day of September, being in the Hope, & hauing in my company, the Advantage only of the Q. ships, which captain Jones commanded, & two other Dutchmen of war I rid more the half chanel over, towards the coast of France, vpon a northwest & southeast line, my self being next that coast, captain Jones next vnto me, & the Dutch men of war a sea-board, & to the Westward of him. The final force at that time present & with me remaining, thus disposed for the intercepting of the gallies, hauing dismissed the Dutch men of war that serued vnder me, vpon their own intreaty to reuiscual & trim: & hauing employed the rest of the Q. ships vpon especial seruices, I desired from my top mast heads, 6 low sailes, which some made for gallies, others affirmed the to be small barks that had strooken their top-sailes, being bound from Diep towards the Downes. To which opinion (though I inclined most) yet caused I the master to waite and to stand with them, that I might learne some news of the gallies, which by your Lordships aduertisement sent me, I knew had either past me that night, or were nere at hand, vnto the sea had swallowed them vp in the stormes which had raged 3 daies before. Hauing set my selfe vnder saile, the weather waxt thick, which caused me to lask some two points fro the wind, towards the English coast, least the continuance of that dark weather might giue them power to runne out ahead of me. About 11 of the clock the weather cleared, when I discoursed them plainly to be the Spanish gallies so long time expected; at which time with the rest, I plied to receiue them by crossing their forefoot as they stood alongst the Chanell: which they endeoured, till they perceived that by the continuance of that course, they could not escape the power of my Ordnance.

All this time these two Fly-boats were betwixt them and me, and as the slaues report that swamme ashore at Douer, they determined with three gallies to haue boarded each of those ships, and would haue executed that resolution, but for the feare of her Maiesties great Gallion (as they reamed the Hope) whose force that they shunned in that kind (considering the disadvantage that twice fixe of the best gallies that euer I saw, hath by fighting against one ship of her force) I doe as much commend, as otherwise I doe detest their shamefull working, in that, full of cowardinesse and weakness, they rowed backe to the Westward, and spent the day by running away, in hope that the darkenesse of the night would giue them liberty sufficient to shun the onely ship they feared, or that was indeed in the sea at that time, to giue them cause of feare, I meane betwixt them & Dunkerke or Newport. This error only of theirs bred their confusion, as you may perceiue by the sequel. For they no sooner began that course of rowing backe again; but I instantly made signes for Captaine Jones in the Advantage of the Queenes, to come vnto me whom I presently directed to repaire to Calais road, & thence to send the alarm vnto the States army prepared before Sluce: and to aduise such men of warre as kept on the coast of Flanders, vpon any other occasion, to stand off to the sea, to meet with the gallies in the night, which shold be chased by me with my lights in my top-mast heads & a continual discharging of my ordnance. Captain Jones hauing shapt his course according to my directions, I gaue order for hoysing & trimming of my sailes by the wind, to keep sight of the gallies: the two Fly-boats being stil aweather of me, did the like. Which chafe we held til sunne-setting, obseruing this course following all the day. They being a weather of me, kept their continuall boords, that the gallies were alwaies betwixt the. And my self being to leeward, made such short turns, as I kept all the afternoon in a manner, euen in the verie eye of their course, betwixt the & the place of their design: euer discharging my best ordnance to warn the Answer of her Maiesties, that rid by my directions at the Downes, vpon important seruice as your Lordship knoweth; and the Flemings that were there, hauing left the Sea vpon vnknowne groundes to mee (yet sent from Portsmouth

A Portsmouth, by the most prouident direction of her sacred Maiestie, to awaite the comming of the Gallies, vpon aduertisements that her Highnesse receiued of their being put to sea, to set saile, who else had receiued no vnderstanding of the Gallies, neither came they within shot of them, till after night, how soeuer the reputation of the seruice is wholly chalenged by them.

Hauing giuen your Lordship an accompt how this day was thus spent by me, from eight of the clock vntill the euening, and with these onely helps: I beseech your Lordship to be pleased to vnderstand, that with the setting of the Sunne, I could both discern the ships last mentioned vnder saile at the downes, and the Gallies to haue set their sailes: directing their course close aboard our shoare, each of them being out of sight of the other, and my Dutch consorts by this time to haue beene left by the Gallies to a sterne chase. When I perceived them to hold that course, which would bring them within shot of the Answer, and the rest that were in the Downes: I held a cleane contrarie course from them towards the coast of France, to confirme the secure passage they thought to find on our coast, which I continued, vntill the report of their battery gaue me assurance of the Gallies being engaged vnto them.

How the batterie began, who began it, how it was continued, how ended, and to whom the reputation of the seruice is due, I leaue to be considered by your Lordship, by the perusal of the true discourse following. The Answer of the Queenes, which Captaine Bredgate commanded, as she rid more Southerly at the Downes than the Flemings, so came she first to the Gallies, and bestowed 28 peeces of Ordnance on them before the Flemings came in, who at length seconded him with verie many shot.

During this batterie of ours vpon the gallies (which I so terme, because they neuer exchanged one shot) at the very first report of the Answers ordnance, I directed the master of my ship to bear vp with the south end of the Goodwin, with which directiō I deliuered my reasons publicly, as I stood on the poope of my ship, viz. That if I stood directly into them, the gallies, before I could recouer the place, would either be driuen ashore or sunk and so would there proue no need of my force; or else by their nimble sailing they would escape the ships, of whom (once getting ahead) they could receiue no impediment: for

D there was no one ship but the Advantage in the sea that could hinder them to recouer any port in Flanders or the East countries (Sluce onely excepted) vnlesse I staid them at that sand head. Hauing recouered as neere that place as I desired, I staid at least a quarter of an houre, before I could either see galley, heate or see any of those ships, their lights or report of their ordnance, which made me and all my company hold opinion that they had outsailed the Answer, and the rest of the Flemings, and shunned sight of mee by going ashore of my ship, which I so vtrily beleueed, as I once directly determined to saile for Sluce, with hope onely that the preparation which I knew the States had there, would be able to preuent their entrance into that place. Whilst I remained thus doubtfull, or rather hopelesse to hinder their recouerie of Dunkerke or Newport, in case they had bin ashore of me, some of my company desired a single galley plying from the shoar to get ahead of my ship. When she approached within caluer shot, I discharged about 30 peeces of Ordnance of my lower and vpper tire at her alone, my selfe with many other in my ship saw when her maineyard was shot asunder, heard the report of many shot that hit her hull, heard many their most pitifull outcries, which when I perceived to continue, & instead of making way from me, to neer me what she could, I forbore shooting, & commanded one that spake the Portugal language, to tel them that I was contented to receiue them to mercy: which I would accordingly haue performed, had not the other 5 gallies offered to stand out ahead of me at that very instant, & thereby would haue left me as they had both the first two Dutch ships, and afterwards the Answer with the rest of the Flemings, had I omitted any small time of executing the aduantage I had of their being on my broad side, which as appeares was so effectually employed (howsoeuer the night wherein this seruice was performed, might hinder the particular mention of their hurts) as none can deny but that God pleased thereby onely to worke their confusion. For since that time none hath said or can speake of any one shot made towards them: yet foure of them are sunke and wrecked, the fift past doing the enemy seruice, and and the first they are forced to new build at Dunkerke, where (if I be not much deceived) G she will proue more chargeable than profitable, if the default rest not in our felues.

The disagreement betweene the Dutch captaines themselves touching the stemming and sinking of the gallies (whereof one challenged before your Lordship, and in many other publike places, to haue stemmed and sunke two himselfe) and the printed Pamphlet containing the stemming and sinking of three Gallies, giueth the reputation thereof to three seuerall Captaines, amongst whome no mention is made of the first; and whereas there are but two in all sunke; I leaue to bee reconciled amongst themselves, and to your Lordshippe, whether that the same of right appertaineth not to her Maiesties ship the Hope, in respect of the allegations before mentioned, euerie particular whereof being to bee proued by the oathes of my whole company and mainained with the hazard of my life with that which followeth.

1 As the shooting of the single Gallies mainyard asunder, my bestowing about thirtie peeces of ordnance vpon that one Gallie, within lesse then Caliuier shot.

2 That they in the Gallie made many lamentable out-cries for my receiuing them vnto mercie.

3 That I would accordingly haue receiued them, but for giuing them ouer to encounter with the other siue Gallies, which else had left me to a sterne chase.

To these reasons I adde the assertions of the Viceadmiral himselfe, who told me (whatsoever he spake in other places) that one of the Gallies, which he stemmed, had her mainyard shot asunder before his comming aboard her: by whomsoever she was then stemmed, your Lordship may iudge, who ruind her, considering she made no resistance, by his owne report, but by crying to him for mercy.

Touching the other galley stemmed and sunke, I haue already proued how shee (as all the rest) had got ahead the Answer of the Queenes not named, and the rest of the States men of warre with her, who challenge the whole credit of this seruice. They (as all other Sea-men) cannot deny but that the gallies will outsaile all ships, in such a loome gale of wind and smooth sea, as we had that night.

The Gallies being then quicker of saile than they, how could they by any means possible fetch them vp, but by some impediment? impediment they receiued none, but by my ordnance: which amounted to fiftie great shot at those siue which came last from the shoare, when all the ships were about a mile asseme.

Some notwithstanding out of their detracting dispositions may perchance say, that the two which were wrecked at Newport would haue perished by storme, though they had not bene battered. Whereunto though I haue sufficiently answered, first in shewing that they might haue recovered any of the places thereabouts before eight of the clocke that night but for mee; and then the second time before the morning, had they not bene encountered by me alone, at the South-sand head: Yet for further prooffe that they miscaried by our batterrie onely, I say that if one of the gallies which receiued least damage by our ordnance did out-live Fridaies storme, continuing till L Saturday noone, being driuen among the Ilands of Zealand to recover Calais; then surely those two (vnlesse they had bene exceedingly torne) would haue made shift to haue recovered the ports of Newport, Graueling or Dunkerke; especially sith from the place where I battered them, they might haue bene at the remotest of those places about foure houres before any storme beganne. But such seemed their hast to saue their liues, as their thought ran of a shoare, and not of a harbour.

Now that I haue deliuered vnto your Lordship the whole & true discourse of this businessse, I shall forbear to trouble your patience with any further relation of that night & next daies spending my time (though the same in their chase had like to haue cost her Maiestie her ship, and the liues of as many as were in her) and conclude with admiration of their not holding her Maiesties ship, nor I (her vnworthiest seruant) and then and yet by her Highnesse grace and your Lordships fauour, Admirall of the forces in that place, are not once mentioned: especially sith the sixe Gallies might safely haue arrived before seuen of the clock that night at any of the Ports of Flanders to the Westward of Ostend. And that the Dutch ships had not come fro an anchor in the Downes, but for the

A the signes they receiued from me. Then that the force of her Majesties ship, wherein I was, enforced them to keepe close aboard the English shore, whereby those ships in the Downes had power giuen them to come to fight, which fight was begun by the Answer of the queenes.

And lastly, sith the gallies escaped their batterrie, and had gotten ahead those ships, about a mile at least, and neuer receiued any impediment after, but onely by me, who lingered them (as you haue heard) vntill the comming vp of those ships that challenge to stemme them: which being granted, I cannot see how any other credit can rightly be giuen them (for that stemme I meane) than to a lackey for pillaging of that dead bodie B which his master had slaine.

Thus much I haue set downe out of his owne mouth, touching the seruice that was done vpon those six gallies of Spaine.

This yeare there was a new fleet made readie in Spaine, the which bred a jealousie in the French, and made them to stand vpon their gard in Languedoc and Prouence. This fleet was readie to set saile, the which vnder colour of renewing the enterprise of Alger in Affrike, might frame some designe vpon that coast. Prince Doria, and D. Iohn de Cordova, had bene both vnfortunat in their charges. The honour of Christendome made all men with, that this execution might proue more succesfull than the rest. But as bad designes do manie times prosper better than good, the successe depending commonly on the blindness of fortune, this enterprise of Alger was no more succesfull than the two former.

C It was managed by a Franciscan Frier, called Father Mathew, who promised as great glorie vnto himselfe, in chasing away those pettickings of Affrike, as Aratus had of freeing Sicyonia of tyrans. He had negotiated with the king of Cycco, who promised (that for a certaine summe of money, whereof he should receiue fortie thousand crowns in hand) not onely to fauour any designe, but to declare himselfe openly against the king of Alger, and to reduce the towne to what condition they would: but there is a great difference betwixt saying and doing: And it is a great simplicitie to giue credit to an Infidell, seeing that treacherie is inseparable from his soule. The Viceroy of Majorca, who was Generall in this action, and with whom the king of Cycco had promised to

D joyne, approached with foure gallies vpon this assurance, and landed about an hundred men, to deliuer fortie thousand crownes vnto the Moores; who receiued the money, and deliuered the men into the hands of the Viceroy of Alger, where the Frier was slaine, and the Viceroy retiring, freed their neighbours from jealousie. They of Barcelona (who are subiect to the king of Spaine) did no lesse apprehend this armie than the Moores: they feared that the Catholike king would take their priuiledges from them, as hee had done from them of Arragon; yet the passage of the three princes of Sauoy into Spaine, renewed their jealousie in France. The duke came with them to Nico, where they attended the commoditie of their imbarcking, the princeesse Marguerite, his eldest daughter, commaunding in Piedmont, and from thence they past to Barcelona, where they attended the kings pleasure, and were entertained with all the honours that might be done vnto princes of that alliance. The king of Spaine rejoyced at the dukes resolution, and seemed to haue a great desire to see them. He sent D. Henriques de Guzman to congratulate their arriual, and to commaund them to take small journeyes, by reason of the heat of the season. Being come to Court, he made prince Vicior, the dukes second sonne, Viceroy of Portugall: the which did much content the Portugals, to see the fruits of D. Beatrice, his great grandmother, who was daughter to D. Emanuel king of Portugall and married to Charles duke of Sauoy. The third sonne was afterwards made Archbishop of Toledo, and then cardinal.

The queene of England being dead this yeare, and the king of Scotland come to the succession of that Crowne, the king of Spaine sent D. Iohn Baptista Taxis, earle of Villa Mediana, his embassadour into England, to witnesse vnto the king the great contentment hee receiued by his happie comming to the Crowne, who after his first audience of congratulations and ordinarie complements, made a speech vnto the king to this effect.

The king of Spaine, my master, assuring himselfe to find the same effects and affection

1603 Armie of Spaine
at sea.

Moores treacherous.

Passage of the prince of Piedmont into Spain

King of Spaine
sends an embaf-sador into England.

1603 Speech of the embassador of Spaine
to the king
of England.

ons of friendship in you, being king of England, which you haue alwayes made shew of G vnto him being king of Scotland, hath sent me vnto your Maiestie, to confirme the sincerity, to desire the continuance, and to preserve it by all the proofes of friendship and affistance which he offers you, which is the same that many great princes haue desired, and could not obtaine, and for that it is offered is no lesse necessarie, and to be wished for of your Maiestie. If the king D. Philip the second, of glorious memorie, hath attempted any thing against England, and queene Elizabeth against the Estates of Spaine, it was more vpon some priuat spleene, than for any reason of State. But one tombe should interre both their bodies and their passions. The successours doe inherit the great-nesse and power of their predecessors, but they are not tied to their designes, which haue H no end but the ruine one of another.

The Catholike king hath such rich and goodlie Crownes in Europe, Asia, and A-fricke, and at the East and West Indies, as they are sufficient to settle the desire of his ambition within the bounds of his owne greatnesse. If hee hath dealt in the affaires of any other princes, it was to support them and keep them from ruine, time hauing discouered how many things were readie to fall, if they had not bene vnderpropt by the hand of D. Philip. The enemies of the house of Spaine haue published, That the ambition of this prince was to make himselfe Monarch of all Christendome, and that hee had left these designes hereditarie to his posteritie. But the wiser sort may easily judge, I that if hee had bene so affected, he would haue carried himselfe otherwise, and begun the execution of the enterprise by Italie, in the which hee is the stronger, the conquest whereof would be easie, hauing such aduantages.

But as hee is contented to preserve his owne, and desires no lesse to raigne justly, than long and happily; so is hee grieved to see his friends crosse him in a thing that is so just and reasonable. Complaints are free for all men, but they are more affectionate among neighbours. My master, who holds you in this qualitie of a friend, and will doe what possibly hee may that you bee neuer other, complains to you of your selfe. Hee cannot dissemble how much hee thinks himselfe wronged, for that your Majestie doth affect the defence and protection of the rebels of the Low Countries, against their lawfull Lord, and that you haue lately graunted them a great leuie of Scot- K tish men. Hee assures himselfe of all friendship and justice from you, and hee in-treats you, that in calling home these Scottish men you will punish them as they haue deserued. Hee desires to treat sincerely with you, and beleeueth that your Maiestie (considering how much the friendship of so mightie a prince should bee deere vnto you, and will be profitable) will seeke and embrace it, and will neuer be so carelesse of his good,
as to wish him ill.

The king returned him many good words, to witnesse the alliance which hee desired to entertaine with the king of Spaine, vpon the like termes hee had with him asking of Scotland. But aduowing the Scottish troups which were sent to the generall Estates of the vnited Prouinces, to be leuied by his commaundement, he said they had not deser- L ued any punishment; giuing leaue to king Philip to make vse of Scottishmen, if hee pleased: and letting him know, that he had not transgressed the lawes of neutralitie. And as for their protection, he desired he should vnderstand, That the great interests which England hath with the vnited Prouinces, as well in regard of their townes which they haue ingaged, as for the succours which they haue received from thence, did bind him to assist them, and to haue a care of their preservation, and to second the intentions of the deceased queene, and to build vpon the foundations which she had laied; yet he desired to see them all well reconciled with the king of Spaine.

The ambassador (as my Author sayes) answered, That whosoever knew the power of M the king of Spaine, were not ignorant that he can easily bring the rebelled Prouinces vnder the yoke of his obedience, when hee shall please to make an enterprise equall to his power: That no man should doubt, that hee that had passed the Hellespont, will easily passe the riuer of Granique; and that a prince which triumphes ouer so many nations, so many islands, so many seas, and so much firme land at the new-found world, will not adde the islands of Holland and Zeland to his triumphant chariot: the wife will alwayes

Spaniards think none so powerful as their own
king.

A alwaies giue the counsell which Phocion gaue vnto the Athenians, either to make them selues the strongest, or to be obedient vnto them that were so. He then desired leaue to enter into conference with some of his Maiesties Councill, and to consult of the meanes of some treatie; which would be no lesse profitable and honourable to England, than to Spaine: the which was granted him. After some meetings, the lords finding that he had no power to treat, they attended other deputies, who came the next yeare with an ample Commission, as you shall heare.

There fell out two accidents, which had like to haue troubled the quiet of those two great Monarchs of France and Spaine. The yeare before king Philip and the Archdukes B had imposed thirtie in the hundred vpon all marchandise which came in or went out of the countries that were vnder their obedience: the which did seeme directly to infringe the treatie of Veruins. The French king commanded his ambassadors to deale with those princes touching this imposition, and to aduertise him of their resolutions. But their answers, and the force they vsed afterwards to the kings subiects, to make them pay the imposition, did witnesse sufficiently, that they had no will to exempt them. Whereupon the French king made a defence, That no marchandise should bee carried out of France into Spaine, or the Low Countries, that were vnder the Archdukes obedience, nor any bee brought from thence into France, vpon corporall punishment, and losse of goods. But this did not alter the peace, onely there were complaints made by the two kings one of another. King Philip began: He tooke it ill that the French going voluntarily to serue C the Estates, did prolong their rebellion, and did hinder the reduction of Ostend: that the king did succour them with men and money; and that hee had forbidden his subiects to traffique into Spaine and Flanders. But the king disauowed them that went to serue the Estates: If hee sent them money, it was (sayed he) but to pay that which hee had borrowed: And the defence of traffique tended to no other end, but to force the king of Spaine and the Archduke to take away that intollerable imposition, and to let him know, that France can liue better without the commodities of Spaine, than Spain without those of France.

The second accident, or cause of jarre betwixt these two princes grew also from D Spaine; the French king complaining, and justly, That the secrets of his cabinet were discovered to his enemies. Will the king of Spaine neuer cease (said he) to withdraw my subiects from their due tie and loyalties? Will hee still entertaine some traytor within my realme? My embassadour complains vnto me by his letters, that hee is so slowly aduertised of our affaires, as the king of Spaines ministers know them before him.

The king being much troubled to find out the spring from whence this pestilent liquor of Infidelitie did flow, behold God discovered the treacherie of Indus, by such meanes as the wisdom of man could not find out. Villeroy, the chiefe Secretarie of State, who managed the greatest secrets of the kingdome, had an vnder clerke, E called Nicholas Loft, in whom hee reposed much trust, and the rather, for that his father had serued him long. This young man hauing attended on Monsieur de la Roche-pot, being embassadour in Spaine, there laied the plot of this treason, whereof you may read the whole discourse at large in the historie of France.

There was some likelihood of a new enterprise this yeare vpon Africke. The king of Cusco, who had promised the last yeare to ioyne with the Spaniards against Alger, had receiued fortie thousand crownes vpon the bargain, and treacherously betrayed them that brought the money vnto their enemies, this yeare hee sent an embassadour vnto the king, who gaue him audience at Valencia: Which made many thinke, that hee would make another attempt vpon Alger, for that he caused him to be conducted home by a Master of the campe, and an Engineer, giuing him great store of F munition, and fire-works, laden in three fregats.

The king of Spaine being aduertise out of England, from his embassadour Taxis, of the successe of his embassage, and of the expectation of a treatie, hee appointed the Constable of Castille to vnder take this charge, giuing him an ample Commission, to treat and conclude a Peace betwixt England and Spaine: hee past

1604 Imposition exacted by the Spaniards.

Treason of Loft.

Embassadours
from the king of Cusco at Valencia.

Constable of Ca-stille sent into England.

past through France, where he was verie honourably received, and so came into Flanders to the Archdukes, from whence he went into England, for the conclusion of the peace.

There were Commissioners appointed on either side: For the king of great Britaine were named, the earle of Dorset, high Treasurer of England, the earle of Nottingham, high Admirall of England, the earle of Devonshire, Lieutenant of the kingdome of Ireland, the earle of Northampton, and the lord Vicomte Cranborne, principall Secretarie, and now earle of Salisbury, and high Treasurer of England; being all of his Majesties privie Councell.

For the king of Spaine there were deputed D. John de Velasco, Constable of Castille and Leon, Duke of Frias, Earle of Haro, &c. D. John Baptista Taxis, Earle of Villa Me-diana &c. and Alexander Rowidius, a Lawyer, and Senator of Milan. The Archdukes sent for their Commissioners, Charles Earle of Aremberg, Counsellor of State, and Admirall to the said Archdukes, John Richardos Knight, President of the privy Councell, and Counsellor of State, and Lodowike Verreiken, Knight, their principal Secretarie. All these Commissioners, after many consultations and conferences, in the end concluded a peace, on the 18 of August, betwixt the two kings, their Estates and subiects, vpon certaine articles, whereof I have set downe the contents.

Articles of the peace betwixt England and
Spaine.

1 First it was concluded, That from thenceforth there should be a sincere and firme league and peace inuolubly obserued for euer, and in all places, betwixt the most renowmed king of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, &c. and the most renowned king of Spaine &c. and the most renowned Archdukes of Austria, Dukes of Bourgondie, their heires and successors, their countries, dominions, and subiects, of what condition or degree soeuer they be, or may be.

2 That all acts of hostilitie should cease, and all wrongs and injuries done, during the troubles, be forgotten, so as there should be no action pretended for any depredations or spoiles committed, but all should be freely abolished, except such depredations as had beene committed since the 24 of Aprill 1603: and that from thenceforth they and their subiects should forbear from all depredations and spoiles, and cause restitution to be made of any that should be after that time committed.

3 That neither of the above named princes, their heirs or successors, by himselfe or any other, should do, treat, or attempt any thing against the other, or against their king-domes or dominions, vpon any pretence, nor assent or consent vnto any warre, attempt, or treatie, to the prejudice one of another.

4 That they should neither themselves giue, nor consent to be giuen by any of their vassals, subiects, or inhabitants, any aid, fauour, or supplie, vnto the enemies or rebels of either part, (whether they shall invade their countries, or withdraw themselves from their obedience and subiection) of souldiers, victuals, money, ordnance, and munition, or any other aid to maintaine warre.

5 That the said princes should, and did, renounce all leagues, confederations, and intelligence, made to the prejudice one of another, which did or might impugne this peace, & the contents thereof: all which they shal disannull, and declare to be of no force.

6 That the said kings and Archdukes should restrain their subiects from doing any wrong, and should reuoke all Commissions and letters of Reprisall and Mart, of what nature soeuer, being to the prejudice of the said princes, or of their subiects, to whomsoever they haue beene granted: the which they shall declare to be void and of no force. And that whosoever should do to the contrary, should be punished criminally, and compelled to make restitution to the parties damnified.

7 That as concerning the townes of Fleissingue, Brill, Ramekins, and other forts thereunto belonging, in the which the souldiers of the king of England did remaine in garrison, forasmuch as the said king affirmed, that by contracts formerly made betwene queene Elizabeth, of famous memorie (vnto whom his Maiestie did succed) and the Estates of the vnited Prouinces, hee stood bound not to redeliuer the said townes and forts to any, but to such as had deliuered the same for caution; so as by the said contracts his Maiesties faith & honor (which he resolved to keep religiously towards all men) being inga-

A ingaged, he might not then restore those places vnto the Archdukes; yet hee promised to enter into treatie with the said Estates, wherein his Maiestie would assigne them a conuenient time to accept of conditions conformable to justice and equitie, for a pacification with the renowned princes, his deere brethren: which if the Estates should refuse to accept, then his Maiestie, as beeing freed from the former conuentions, would determine of those townes as hee should thinke most iust and honourable, wherein hee would doe all good offices for the said Princes, his louing brethren.

8 That the renowned king of England &c. would commaund the garrison souldiers not to serue the Hollanders, nor to succour them with victuals, armes, or any munition for warre, or other the king of Spaine or the Archdukes enemies, vpon any colour or pretext soeuer, nor doe any act of hostilitie against the king of Spaine, the Archdukes, or their subiects: And in like manner the king of Spaine and the Archdukes did promise, that no act of hostilitie should be done against the said garrison souldiers, nor against the king of England &c. or his subiects.

9 That betwene the said kings, their kingdomes, vassals, inhabitants, and subiects, there should bee free commerce in all places where it hath beene formerly vsed before the warres, according to the auncient leagues and treaties; so as the subiects of either partie might goe and enter freely into the others countries and dominions both by sea and land, without any Safeconduct, or other licence, and depart from thence with their goods and marchandises, paying the ordinarie customes and imposts.

10 That it should be lawfull to haue acesse vnto the ports of the said princes, there to make stay, and with the like libertie to depart, not onely with ships for marchandise, but also for warre, whether they come thither being forced by foule weather, or for the repairing of their ships, or for prouision of victuals, so as they exceed not the number of six or eight ships, when they come in voluntarily, nor stay longer in the hauens than they shall haue cause, for the repairing of their ships, or to make prouision of necessaries, least it should cause an interruption of free traffique with other nations in amitie. And if any greater number of ships of warre than is aboue mentioned, shall happen to haue acesse into those ports, then it shall not bee lawfull for them to enter without the priuite and consent of the prince. Prouided, that they should not commit any act of hostilitie within the said ports, to the prejudice of the princes:
and that there should be an especiall care had, that vnder the pretext of traffique there should be no victuals, armes, or munition for warre, carried by the subiects of those kingdomes, to the enemies of the one or other king. And whosoever should attempt the contrarie, should bee punished as seditious persons, and breakers of the peace.
It was also prouided, That the subiects of the one should not bee worse intreated in anothers dominions in his sales and contracts of marchandise, than his owne naturall subiects.

11 That the king of England &c. after the conclusion of these articles, should forbid by proclamation, That none of his subiects, or any inhabiting within his realme, should carrie ouer in his owne name, directly or indirectly, or colour any ships, marchandise, or any other thing going out of Holland and Zeland into Spaine, nor any Holland or Zeland marchant, vnto the sayd ports, vpon paine of punishment. And to auoyd fraud, all marchandise to be sent out of England, Scotland, and Ireland, to the dominions of the king of Spaine and Archdukes, was to bee sealed with the Towne or Citie Seale from whence they should be laden: and that which was not so sealed, should bee taken for good prize, and confiscated, and all Hollanders and Zelanders found in the sayd ships, F should be also taken.

12 That all English, Scottish, and Irish marchandise, might bee transported out of those countries into the dominions of the king of Spaine, without paying the imposition of thirtie in the hundred, largely imposed, but onely the customes and tolls vsually demaunded before the said imposition of thirtie in the hundred.

13 That

13 That for such marchandise as the English, Scottish, or Irish marchants should G buy in Spaine, or other the king of Spaines dominions, and should carrie in their owne ships, or in ships hired or lent them (except they be of Holland and Zeland) they should on- ly pay such customes as were accustomed to be paid before the imposition of thirtie in the hundred: provided, that they should carrie the said marchandise to the realmes of the king of England &c. or to the ports of those provinces which obey the Archdukes. And to prevent the transportation of the said marchandise to any other places, and espe- cially to Holland and Zeland, it was agreed, That the marchants should enter bond at such time as they did lade their ships in Spaine, or in any of the king of Spaines domi- ons, before the magistrat of the place where they should lade, to pay the said impositi- on of 30 in the hundred, in case they carrie the said marchandise to any other countries: H and that they should bring a certificat, within one yeare, from the magistrat of the place where they should unlade the said goods, testifying that they haue discharged in the king of Englands dominions, or in those provinces which are vnder the Archdukes obedi- ence; exhibiting of which certificats their bonds should be deliuered vp.

14 That the king of England &c. soone after the confirmation of this accord, should forbid his subiects to export any marchandise out of the K. of Spaines dominions, to any other places but to his Majesties kingdoms, and the said ports of Flanders, vpon paine of the confiscation of all their marchandise, to the vse of the king of England &c. wherof the Informer is to haue the one halfe, the imposition of thirtie in the hundred being first deducted, the which shall be payed to the king of Spaines officers: the proofes being lawfully receiued in Spaine, and sent into England in authentical forme, should be cre- dited. I

15 That the magistrats of any townes or cities within his Maiesties kingdoms, which should make certificats of the unlading of ships, and giue testimonie of the registring of marchandise, should not commit any fraud therein, vpon paine of the losse of their offi- ces, and the kings displeasure: With this prouiso, That when as the king of Spaine and the Archdukes shall agree with the French king, or any other, touching the last Edict of thirtie in the hundred, and the commerce betwixt them be restored, then it should bee lawfull for the subiects of the said king of England &c. to transport their marchandise into K his or their dominions vnto whom the commerce shall be restored, without the payment of thirtie in the hundred, paying onely the former vsuall customes.

16 That there should be free commerce betwixt the subiects of the king of England &c. and the Archdukes, in all places where they had beene formerly accustomed to trade, both by water and land, hauing free libertie to enter into the dominions, townes, and ports one of another, and to buy, sell, carrie and recarrie their marchandise, repaire their ships, provide victuals, and all things necessarie, at reasonable prices, and should depart with the like libertie with their goods and marchandise, paying the vsuall customes. Pro- uided, that the subiects of the king of England &c. should not vse the shipping of the L Hollanders, or the vnited Prouinces, nor bring any of their manufactures into the Arch- dukes countries, nor any other thing for the which any tribute was payed in Holland, neither should they transport any thing from the Archdukes Prouinces, vnto the vnited Prouinces, vntill a pacification were made; neither should they receiue any goods be- longing to the vnited Prouinces, into their ships, nor put any of them into the vnited E- states ships, nor fraudulently colour the goods of any one of the vnited Prouinces: the which being found, it should be held to be good and lawfull prize.

17 That the former Prouisos should not onely be vnderstood of ships laden for mar- chandise, but also of ships of warre, which the said princes should send forth to prevent the attempts of their enemies: which ships of warre, not exceeding the number aboue mentioned, might freely enter into one anothers ports, being driuen by tempest, or to M repaire their ships, or buy necessities, and there stay, so as they committed no act of hostili- tie, with the like cautions and exceptions as is contained in the tenth article.

18 As the said kings and Archdukes did religiously promise, not to giue any warlike succours to any of the others enemies, so it was provided, that the subiects or the inhabi- tants

A tants of their realmes, of what nation or qualitie foeuer, should not vnder colour of com- merce, nor vpon any other pretext, giue any aid to the enemies of the said princes, or sup- plie them with money, victuals, armour, munition, ordnance, or other warlike prouision: and those which should do the contrarie should be seuerely punished, as breakers of the league, and seditious persons.

19 And for the greater benefite and good of their subiects, it was agreed, that the king of England &c. and the Archdukes, should do their endeours, that their subiects should haue the passages open vnto their ports and dominions, so as they might freely come and go with their ships, marchandise, and carriages (paying the ordinarie customes) to all the B said ports, kingdoms, and dominions, & depart when they please with the like libertie.

20 As touching the ancient treaties of commerce and traffique betwixt the realms of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and the dominions of the dukes of Bourgondie, and prin- ces of the Low Countries, the which during the late troubles had beene intermitted, and it may be in some parts impaired: It was concluded by way of prouision, That they should remaine in their auncient force, and be vsed on either side, as they had beene be- fore the warre. And if it happen, that by both parts, or by any one, any breach thereof be pretended: or that the subiects shall complaine, that the conuentions were not ob- served, or that more grieuous burthens than were accustomed were imposed on them, then there should be deputies appointed on either part, which should meet, and treat C friendly, and restore such things as should be found out of course, or to haue beene alte- red by the injurie of time, or by corrupt custome.

21 And to make this peace fruitfull to the subiects of the king of England &c. it was concluded, That such as had recourse to and from the realmes and dominions of the king of Spaine and Archdukes, and should remaine there for trade, should not be molested in the cause of conscience: wherefore to the intent their traffique might be safe and without danger both by land and sea, the said king of Spaine and Archdukes should prouide, that vsing their trade and commerce, they should not be called in question nor molested for their consciences, so as they gaue no scandall.

22 If any goods or marchandise prohibited to be carried, should be conueyed out of D the realmes and dominions of the said kings and Archdukes, by the subiects of the one or the other, that in such case the person offending shall onely incurre punishment, and only the goods prohibited shall be confiscated.

23 That the goods of subiects dying within the realmes and dominions of either, should be preferred for the right heires and successors of the deceased, alwaies reseruing the right of any third person.

24 That graunts and priuiledges giuen by the princes to marchants of either of the kingdoms, comming to their realmes, which priuiledges, by reason of the warres, haue ceased, should from thenceforth be reuiued, and stand in their full force and vertue.

25 And if hereafter any vnkindnesse should grow betwixt the king of England &c. E and the king of Spaine, or the Archdukes, whereby there might grow any interruption of entercourse and traffique, the subiects of either prince should be so aduertised thereof, as they might haue six monethes from the time of the admonition, to transport their mar- chandise, without any arrest, disturbance, or molestation in the meane season, to be offe- red or done them either in their persons or goods.

26 That neither of the said princes should imbarre or stay for their prouision in war, or for any other seruice, to the prejudice of the owners, the ships of the others subiects, ly- ing in their ports or roads, vnlesse one of those parties to whom the ships do belong, bee first aduertised thereof, and yeeld his consent thereunto.

27 It was also accorded, That if during this peace and league of friendship, any thing F should happen to be attempted, or done, against the force and effect thereof, either by wa- ter or by land, by any of the said princes, their heires and successors, their vassals and sub- iects, or by their allies comprehended in this league, or by the heires & successors of any of those allies, their subiects or vassals, yet notwithstanding this peace and amitie, should re- maine in his full strength and vertue, and the attempters and such as doe offend onely shal be punished for their attempts.

The generall Historie of Spaine.

Lib. 31.

28 That all prisoners taken in the warres, or condemned to the gallies, should be released and set free, the charges of diet, of such as were not in the gallies, being first paid, and the ransomes of such as had before compounded for the same, being discharged.

29 It was concluded, That all ciuile actions which were in force at such time as the last warre begun, should be continued and pursued, notwithstanding any lapse of time during the same warre, so as they should not be any way prejudiced by the continuance of the warre: those onely were excepted which were already come to the princes treasure or Exchequer.

30 If any action should be commenced in the realmes and dominions of any of these princes, by any person not being subiect to the same prince, touching any depredations or spoiles, the cause should be remitted to the Iudge of the jurisdiction vnder that prince, against whose subiect or subjects the suit is commenced.

31 If the Hollanders and the other confederat Estates, would accept of conditions of pacification with the Archdukes, or their successours, by the meanes of the king of England &c. the said Archdukes and their successours would alwayes willingly hearken vnto that which should be propounded therein, and would desire, that by the helpe of the king of England &c. they might be brought to imbrace equall conditions; wherein they should well vnderstand how much the said Archdukes did attribute vnto the king of England.

The last three articles were for the comprehending of the allies, friends, and confederats of the said princes in this present treatie, the which they did seuerally and particularly name: and for the ratification, confirmation, and due obseruation of the said treatie.

There was also an order set down touching marchandise of high Germanie to be transported into Spaine, and free from the imposition of thirtie in the hundred, whereby the Constable of Castille, hauing speciall procuration from the Catholike king, did promise that it should be lawfull for the subjects of the king of England &c. to conuey marchandise out of high Germanie, being subiect to the imposition of thirtie in the hundred, and could not without payment thereof, be carried into Spaine, the same marchandise being first conueyed into England, and there discharged and custumed, and from thence to be afterwards transported into Spaine, or any other of the king of Spaines dominions, without payment of thirtie in the hundred, so as the said marchandise had not paid any thing to the Hollanders and Zelanders, or other enemies of the king of Spain and the Archdukes: which marchandise they should conuey in their owne ships, and not in any belonging to any other prince or nation. And, to auoid fraud, the marchandise of high Germany, which should be transported out of England, Scotland, and Ireland, into the dominions of the king of Spaine and the Archdukes, should be registred and marked with the seale of the towne from whence it came, and a certificat sent from the magistrat of the said towne, testifying, that the said marchandise were discharged in England, Scotland, or Ireland, and that they had paid custome there; vpon paine of the kings displeasure, & the losse of their offices, and other punishments, to be inflicted at the kings pleasure vpon the magistrats of townes vnder the obedience of the king of England &c. which are to certifie the vnlading of ships, and the registring thereof, if they shall herein commit any fraud. And what marchandise foucer of high Germanie, shall not be discharged in England, Scotland, or Ireland, and yet to be transported into Spaine, and other the dominions of the king of Spaine, all such marchandise shall be confiscated, and reputed good prize.

There were also three articles concluded, concerning a moderation to be had in the proceedings in the Inquisition in Spaine, against the king of Englands subjects.

First, If they exceeded in any thing before their entrance into Spaine, they should not be called into the Inquisition for the same, neither should they be molested for any of those things so committed out of Spaine, neither should any account be demanded of them for the same.

2 That no man should compell them to enter into churches, vnlesse they would, but if they did enter, they should performe those dueties and reuerence which are vsed towards the holy Sacrament of the Altar, being there; and if they should see the Sacrament comming towards them in any street, they shall doe reuerence by bowing their knees

Lib. 31.

The generall Historie of Spaine.

1331

1604

A knees, or else they shall passe aside by some other street, or turne into some house.

3 If any of the said persons being masters or masters mates, or any other officers of ships which be not their owne, doe exceed in any of these things, the Inquisition proceeding against them by office, is onely to sequester their own proper goods, and are to leaue the ships and all other goods, not belonging to the offenders, free: and the same was to be vnderstood for all traders and factors.

During this treatie betwixt England and Spaine, the defence of traffique betwixt France and the dominions of the king of Spaine and the Archdukes, was verie troublesome. The French suffered great discommodities, and the Spaniards found this restraint heauie and insupportable, for that all things grew exceeding deere, and the tradesmen murmured, and grew almost desperat. The Pope commaunded his Nuntio to deale in this businesse, and to reconcile these princes; but the French king would not yeeld to any thing, vntill that the Spaniards, who had first troubled the water, had cleared it againe, in reuoking the imposition of thirtie in the hundred, which made the libertie of traffique a meere seruitude, and the profit an assured losse. This was verie seuer and rigorous. It is in euerie kind bitter vnto the marchant, couetousnesse hauing changed the first cause, as well as the quantitie of customes and imposts. At the first they were paid onely to haue free libertie and assurance of passage from one place vnto another; and for that princes haue vnder their protection the highways (for the which they are called Royall) they did acknowledge this right of protection with some duetie. Such impositions for so necessarie causes are just, others are noe; and yet they must be borne, being not lawfull for the subiect to murmure against the customes and imposts wherewith the prince doth charge him. They said, That the Spaniards, which are long in their consultations, and constant in their resolutions, would neuer reuoke this imposition, for that they would not loose the reputation of constancie in their lawes, and bee noted of inconstancie and lightnesse, by applying themselves to the time and affaires. But there was no remedie, the deputies of the two kings and Archdukes meeting, tooke off the imposition, and set the commerce free.

Discomodities for the cessation of traffique.

Commerce set at liberty in France.

The peace being fully concluded betwixt England and Spaine, and sworn by the king of England in the presence of the king of Spaines Commissioners, the Constable of Castille hauing receiued great honour in England, both in his entertainment and presents giuen him from the king, returned into Flanders, much satisfied in himselfe, to carrie home with him such joyfull tidings. From thence hee past into France, where the French king vsed him so royally, as hee afterwards said, That hee had entertained him as a king, and intreated him as a kinsman.

Constable of Castille returns into
Spaine.

In the yeare a thousand six hundred and foure the king of Great Britaine sent the earle of Nottingham, high Admirall of England, into Spaine; to take the Catholike kings oath, for the confirmation of the peace, as hee did the earle of Hartford vnto the Archdukes, to the same end. The sayd earle of Nottingham, being attended on by a gallant traine of noblemen, knights, and gentlemen, arriued at the Groine, where hee was no sooner discovered from the land, but D. Lewis de Carilla de Toledo, marquisse of Carascena, Gouverneur both of the towne and of the countrey of Galicia, gave order for his entertainment, the which was verie royally performed.

1605
Earle of Nottingham
sent into Spaine.

At his comming into the harbour, a fort vpon the North side of the towne, did first salute him with twentie peeces of ordnance: then a fort lately built vpon a rocke, with six and thirtie peeces; and lastly from the towne and castle with aboute thirtie peeces of ordnance: And the earles ship, with the whole flect, being at an anchor, requiuted them with all their ordnance. Presently after the Gouverneur sent foure chiefe officers of the towne, with D. John de Pacheco, his brother, and D. Lewis de Carilla de Toledo his onely sonne, to welcome the earle: After some time spent in complements, the Gouverneur himselfe came aboard the earles ship in charge, the mariners and rowers being in blew silke cassocks and capps, and the barge covered with blew velvet. After hee had saluted the earle, he told him, That the king his master had giuen vnto him an especiall charge to haue a respect

411

Ffffff ij

who

who he was that came embassadour, from whom hee came, and to whom hee was sent: G and that he should doe euerie thing for the honour of these three persons, not sparing any thing that might be fit for his Lordships entertainment. Wherefore hee did intreat the earle to goe to land, the which he did forbear vntill the next day; so as that night hee sent vnto his Lordship a present of fish, fruits, bread, and such commodities as the country yielded.

He lands at the Groine.

On Tuesday, the sixteenth of Aprill, the earle of Nottingham prepared to goe to shore, to his lodging, which was appointed in the gouernours house. The gouernour hauing taken care to receiue his Lordship in most honourable manner, had (vpon notice of his comming to the Groine) caused a bridge of timber, being aboue fortie yards H long, to be built and painted, the which was garnished with many penciles of filke of diuers colours. The way into the towne was set on either side with boughes of bayes and Orange trees, and strewed with rushes and flowers. The whole garnison of the towne, and other companies that were drawne out of the countrey, were there readie to make a gard for him.

His Lordship being readie to land, the gouernour sent diuers of the Commaunders to let him vnderstand, that he and the magistrats of the towne would attend him on the bridge. Whereupon the earle tooke his barge, and (being followed by his whole traine) went vnto the bridge, where the Spaniards entertained the English as they landed, the haultboyes and shagbotts playing all the while. Being all landed, they entred into the towne an English man and a Spaniard marching together in verie good order. At their entrance into the towne they were saluted with a great volley of shot, both great and small, and so they went on foot to the gouernours house, where, when the earle entred, there were many chambers shot off.

During the earle of Nottingham's stay at the Groine, hee solemnized Saint Georges feast, the which was performed with the greater state, for that the people came thither in troups to see that ceremonie; and it was thought the gouernour (being inuited) would haue dined with his Lordship, but hee fearing to heare something that might touch the king, his master, in honour, excused himselfe, and so retired, hauing scene his Lordship set downe: But hearing, after dinner, by his owne brother, that there was not any thing that might giue cause of offence, or exception, hee was forie, and did accompanie his Lordship at supper, whither many ladies and gentlewomen came to see the order of that State.

On the foure and twentieth of Aprill D. Blasco d'Arragon, nephew to the duke of Terranova, who had bene in England the yeare before with the Constable of Castille, came from Court, being sent from the king his master, to salute his Lordship, and to acquaint him with such preparations as were made for him and his traine for that journey. There was also D. Gaspar de Bullion, the kings chiefe Harbinger, who came with commission from the king, to provide all things necessarie for his Lordships journey. After some conference (notwithstanding they had promised there should be no want of any thing) they found, that the whole countrey would not furnish mules ynow, there being six hundred and fittie persons, besides the carriages, which were verie many. Whereupon his Lordship resolved to leaue some of his owne companie aboard his ships vntill his retume. There were foure coaches and foure litters attended them at Villafraanca, besides their riding mules, whereof there was a coach and a litter for his Lordships owne vse, another coach and a litter for six Charles Cornwallis, who was then sent to be embassadour leager in Spaine, and the rest for the knights and gentlemen which should be sicke.

During his Lordships stay at the Groine, hee was entertained with sundrie sports, the which were performed in a square made of purpose on the market place; as assaulting of a castle by armed knights, and freeing a ladie from foure monsters which defended it, fighting at barriers, and in the end verie rare fire-works, the which were generally commended for their strangeness. After which his Lordship, hauing all his traine furnished with mules, began his journey towards the Court the 3 of May; the gouernour and magistrats bringing him out of the town with musick & shot. He was accompanied by D. Blasco d'Arragon, & D. Gaspar de Bullion, chiefe harbinger to the K. who had the charge of the conduct. His

Earle of Nottingham goes from the Groine

A His Lordship past from the Groyne to Bytance, to Villa Alua Lugo, Terra Castella; Cebrera, Villa Franca, Bubibre, Astorga (where his Lordship saw a fayre castle belonging to the marquesse of Astorga) Banefa, Benauent, Villa Garcia: and from thence hee had order to goe to Simancas, which was as farre as Vailledolit: To which towne his Lordship came in twelue dayes, hauing bene honourably receiued in all places where he past. His Lordship comming to Simancas on Tuesday the 14 of May, he had order from the king, not to come to Court till Thursday. On the Wednesday after dinner there came D. Pedro de Suniga, or Estuniga, newly appointed embassadour for England, and D. John de Taxis, sonne to the earle of Villa Mediana, then embassadour in England; B who hauing saluted his Lordship, departed againe.

On Thursday, his Lordship being appointed to goe to Court, there came to attend him the marquesse of Camerata, D. Pedro de Suniga, D. John de Taxis, D. Blasco d'Arragon, with diuers other knights and gentlemen of the kings house and chamber, bringing diuers coaches with them. Simancas was not aboue six English miles from Court. Vpon the way the earle of Nottingham was perswaded to goe into a banqueting house which stood vpon the highway, and to see the delicacie of their orchards and gardens, and to tast of the fruits: but it was rather to stay for the noblemen which were appointed by the king to meet him. During his stay in this garden, there was a horse presented vnto him from the king, which he did vsually ride on. After an houres stay, there came diuers

He goes to Court.

C Grandoes, and other noblemen, the chiefe whereof were, the duke of Frias Constable of Castille (lately embassadour in England) the duke of Infantaigo, the duke of Albuquerque, the duke of Cea, the duke of Sessa, the duke of Pastrana, the marquesse of S. German, the earle of Chinchon, the earle of Punno en Rostro, the marquesse of Baneza, the earle of Aguilar, the earle of Berosa, the earle of Nieua, the earle of Corunna, the earle of Paredes, the marquesse of Carpio, the marquesse of Tauera, the marquesse of Villanoua, the earle of Salinas, the marquesse of Seralua, the marquesse de Fuentes, the marquesse of Alcanices, the earle of Galues, the Admirall of Arragon, with many other lords and knights. The earle with all these nobles, and his whole traine, being vpon the way, the weather being exceeding hor, there fell a verie great showre, which continued vntill they came into the towne, where his lodging was appointed in the house of the earle of Salinas, not farre from Court. There was a multitude of people, and eight hundred coaches (as it was thought) full of ladies and gentlewomen, gotten out of the towne to see the earle and his companie. I omit the manner of their marshalling with the Spanish knights and lords. They entred by a gate called Puerta del Campo, and passed through the chiefe parts of the towne, by the Court gate, the king, queene, and ladies, standing (as they said) at certaine windowes, to take view of the companie. That night there came diuers noblemen, and the queene sent her Major Domo to visit his Lordship: which caused some admiration in the Spaniards, who saied, they neuer knew the like fauour done to any embassadour.

Noblemen that meet the Earle of Nottingham.

E The day after, his Lordship comming to Vailledolit, D. Francisco Gomes de Sandomal, duke of Lerma, the kings great fauourite, being accompanied by many dukes and earles, came to visit him, and so consequently all embassadours, and most of the Grandoes and noblemen of the Court, came to visit him, and congratulate his comming. He had his first audience on Saturday the eighteenth of May. In the morning the king sent the earle of Galues, and diuers of his priuie chamber, to visit his Lordship. In the afternoone the Constable came accompanied with aboue twentie noblemen, whereof three or foure were of the Grandoes, bringing many coaches with them, to conduct his Lordship and his companie to Court. The kings gard made a way for them them to the prefence chamber doore, they being three hundred in number, Suisses, Spaniards, and Wallons, attired in red and yellow veluet, but of feuerall fashions. At the palace gate stood the duke of Infantaigo, and the marquesse of Vellada, with diuers noblemen, knights, and gentlemen, to receiue his Lordship, & to conduct the companie into the prefence, where the king sat vnder a rich cloth of Estate, and by him eight Grandoes of Spaine covered. His Lordship hauing deliuered his message by his interpreter, & his letters into the kings own hands, coming from his chaire, he gaue his Lordship a very kind & honorable entertainment.

The Earle goes to Court.

His Audience.

FFFFF ij

tainment

1334
1605

The generall Historie of Spaine

Lib. 31.

tainment, causing him to sit neere vnto him: which fauour was much obserued, as a thing (sayd the Spaniards) neuer vsed to any embassadour before that time. After some conference, the noblemen and gentlemen hauing kist the kings hand, his Lordship was conducted by the Constable and others, to the queenes presence, where shee sat vnder a rich cloth of Estate, and the Infanta by her: hee was receiued by the Major Domoto the queene, and conducted to her presence: where hauing ended his complements, being somewhat late, he tooke his leaue, and returned with those dukes and lords vnto his lodging.

King of Spaine
goes in procession.

On the nineteenth of May, being Sunday, the king went in procession, going first to S. Paules church neere the Court, and then through the town to S. Maries, after this maner. H First went the Monkes and religious Orders singing, and bearing crosses, banners, and other church reliques, the Sacrament being also carried by foure officers of the Church. Then followed diuers noblemen in their ranks, according to their degrees. And next before the kings owne person went the younger of the princes of Sauoy. After king followed the cardinall, being Archbishop of Toledo, and with him the prince of Sauoy his elder brother. Then followed the prince of Maroc, with the Emperours embassador, the embassador of France, and he of Venice: after whom followed diuers gentlemen of the kings chamber, and the rest of the traine.

Christening of the prince of
Spaine.

After dinner the same day there was preparation made for the Christening of the prince. There was a large scaffold made for their passage at the end of a long gallerie, and joynted to the church; the timber of which scaffold was couered with rich cloth of gold. They came vnto the church after this manner. The trumpets were set in feuerall companies neere vnto the church, still sounding, and answering one another. About foure of the clocke there past by this scaffold, to go into Saint Paules church, the Knights, Lords, and Grandoes going before, and some Dukes of especiall name bearing sundrie ceremonies, as the salt carried by one, a wax taper by another: then came the Constable, who carried the Crowne, before whom went the king at Armes. The duke of Lerma bare the prince in his armes, being tied vnto him with a rich scarf; he was assisted by the prince of Sauoy, and the earle of Miranda. Then followed the Infanta in a chaire, the which diuers gentlemen of the kings bed-chamber, and priue chamber, carried on their shoulders, the younger prince of Sauoy going by. At the church doore the cardinall attended them in his pontificall robes, hauing three bishops, and other officers of the Church with him; and so they conducted them with singing vnto the Font, the which was richly couered with a canopie of cloth of gold. The cardinall performed the ceremonie; the which ended with church musicke, sounding of trumpets, and other wind instruments: and so they returned as they came, being accompanied by most of the great Ladies of the Court and kingdome. The prince was Christened by the name of Philip Domingo Victor. The elder prince of Sauoy was his godfather, of whom he tooke the name of Victor, and the Infanta, his sister, was his godmother. The Lord embassador of England was placed in the earle of Ribadauias house, both to see the procession in the morning, and the prince going to the Christening: after which he was conducted by a priuat way into the church, to see the ceremonie.

Churching of the queene of
Spaine.

The next day, being Monday, the embassador leger was presented to the king, and graciously allowed of by him. On Tuesday the Lord embassador was conducted to S. Maries church by D. Blasco d'Arragon, to see the ceremonie of the queenes Churching, whither the king and queene came together, the king being on horsebacke, and the queene in a verie rich carroch of cloth of gold, drawne with foure horses, hauing their furnitures of cloth of gold, with whom the Infanta sat. After which, in another carroch, came the yong prince, in the armes of an auncient ladie: and then followed two other carroches of blacke velvet, with diuers duchesses, countesses, and other great personages, widows. Then came foure other carroches, all of one fashion, with diuers ladies, the queenes maides. This was the first day of the queenes going abroad, and as it was held, her Churching day.

Earle of Nottingham
sestified
by the Constable

That day the Lord embassador was invited to dine with the Constable, where he was accompanied by the dukes of Albuquerque, & of Sessa, & others: where there wanted not any

Lib. 31.

The generall Historie of Spaine.

1335

1605

A any thing that the countrie could yeeld for his entertainment. On Friday being the 20 of May there were certaine presents, sent by the king of England, deliuered, the king and Queene comming themselves into a priuat garden to receiue them. They were fixe hoes, three for the king, and three for the Queene, with saddles and clothes verie richly imbrodered, two Crosse-bowes with sheafes of arrowes, foure fowling peeces, with their furnitures, all verie richly garnished and inlaied with plates of gold, and a couple of lime-hounds: which presents were kindly receiued, the king and Queene admiring the fashion and richnesse thereof.

Presents sent to the king and Queene of Spaine

On Tuesday the eight & twentieth of May, the Lord embassador, with all the English were invited to dine with the duke of Lerma, where they were verie honorably entertained to their great contentment: he was accompanied at the table by the duke of Lerma, the duke of infantago, and the duke of Albuquerque. They were attended on at the table by Marqueses, Earles, Knights, and gentlemen of the kings priuy-chamber, and few others.

Embassador sestified by the duke of Lerma.

Having receiued what pleasure could be deuised at the table, they were afterwards carried down into a faire Court, paved with square stone, in the midst whereof was a fontaine of cleere water; the whole Court was couered with canuas to keep them from the heat of the Sunne: There was a stage set vp in this Court with all things fitting for a play, which the embassadour and the rest were invited to see. The king and Queene were also in priuat to see this Comedie.

The day appointed for the taking of the kings Othe, was vpon Thursday the thirtieth of May, being Corpus Christi day, on the which the king went in procession; and for that hee would bee seene by the English, hee appointed to passe by the gate where the embassador was lodged, after this manner.

King of Spaine
goes in procession.

First there came eight great Giants, three men, three women, and two Moores, with a Taber and pipe playing, and they dauncing: Then followed certaine Pilgrimes clad in blew: After whome hue and twenty or fixe and twenty crosses, belonging to feuerall Churches, with many pictures and holy reliques, Monkes, Morris dancers like Gipsies, Beastes with fire workes, wild men, and such like vanities, as it should seeme, to draw the people more readily to admiration: After these followed diuers other Church-reliques, with certaine Augustine and Franciscane Friars, with their reliques. Many Church-men had Tapers in their hands: the kings Pages bare Torches: Then followed the Sacrament carried by foure Church-men in rich Copes, after whome came the Noblemen, and Grandoes of Spaine; and then followed the king with a Taper light in his hand, of white Virgin waxe: after whome came the Cardinals, the embassadors to the emperor, French, and Venetians, the Prince of Sauoy, the Prince of Maroc, with others, euerie one carrying a Taper light.

The same day D. Blasco de Arragon brought word vnto the Lord embassador that the king expected his comming presently vnto the Court for the taking of the othe: wherefore there was order taken that the Noblemen and Gentlemen which should attend him thither, should be furnished with Genets out of the kings stable. Being all mounted, the Constable D. Pedro de Suniga, with many other Lords and Knights, were sent to accompany him: And at the court gate the duke of Lerma and some other of the Grandoes staid to receiue him; by whome hee was conueied through a long gallerie into a presence, and so into an inner chamber, where the king staid his comming, and receiued him with a kind salutation, and so took him along with him. The kings Sergeants at armes going first, then followed the Noblemen and Grandoes of Spain, then the foure kings at armes, in their coats of armes; after whome came the duke of Lerma, bearing the sword naked, not vp-right, as the custome is in England, but lying vpon his left shoulder; and in this order the king marche to a verie faire banquetting house, newly built, the embassadour leger, the Lords, and diuers others following.

King of Spaine
takes the othe.

The king being set in his estate, the Lord embassadour & the Leeger were placed vpon his left hand, the Grandoes and other Noblemen of Spaine, being on the right, but two degrees lower. There was a little table set before the king, wheron lay the Bible and a Crucifix vpon it. The Archbishop of Toledo red the othe: at one part of the othe the embassador

Observations touching the state and government of Spaine.

Or as much as my Authour in the beginning of this Historie hath made an exact description of Spaine, setting downe the number of leagues the whole continent doth containe in circuit, describing the principall rivers within the Countrey, with their Springs and courses, setting downe the mountaines and hills, and distinguishing the Prouinces, within the countrey, as they lye at this day, and by whome they were in ancient time inhabited, with a declaration of the fertilitie, riches, and commodities of the Countrey: I haue thought good to adde something touching the government of that state, with some other observations concerning that subiect, the which I haue collected out of such as haue bene curious to see, obserue, and write thereof.

The king of Spaine, as hee is a potent Prince and Lord of many countries, so hath hee many Councils for the managing of their affaires, distinctly & apart, without any confusion, euery Councell treating only of those matters which concerne their Iurisdiction & charge, and meddle not one with anothers businesse: with which Councils and with the Presidents, being men of chiefe note, the king doth conferre touching matters belonging to the good government, preseruacion, & increase of his Estates, and hauing heard euery mans opinion, he commands that to be executed that shall be held most fit and conuenient. The first is,

The Council of state; wheron the rest depend. They name Viceroyes for all the king of Spaines countries, and prouide for many things for the preseruacion of his realms. The king himselfe is President of this Councell: the Counsellours, who are the chiefe men in the court, haue no fees.

The Council of warre. It prouides for Generals, Colonels, Captaines, the Generall of the gallies, and for whatsoeuer concerne the war, with the aduice of his Majestie, who is president of this Councell. They punish all commanders and officers at warre that doe not their duties. And in like maner they dispose of the companies of men at arms appointed for the gard of the kingdom, and they giue order for the artillerie, munition, and fortifications, or any thing that is necessary for the warre. The counsellours haue no wages.

The royall Council of iustice. Here they treat of the good government of all Spaine, they determine controuersies betwixt Noblemen, and ease the greouances of other Courts. This councell is of great preheminance: the president names all Iustices of Spaine, the Prouosts of the kings house, with many other Counsellours and Iustices. They take information how euery one hath behaued himselfe in his charge, punishing and changing as they shal thinke good, but with the kings priuie. There is a President, and sixteen counsellours, who haue all wages.

The Council of Italie: which treats of matters concerning the realms of Naples and Sicile, and the Duchie of Milan. The Constable of Castille is President: there are fixe Counsellours, three Italians, and three Spaniards. In this Councell they dispose of the government of Italie, and giue aduancement to the Souldiers that serue in those Countreies; they appoint Gouvernours, and Iudges in cities, and giue titles to Noblemen: but they first acquaint the king with their consultations.

The

A The Council of the Indies. The President is of greatest esteeme next vnto the Councell royall: there are eight Counsellours, and haue all wages. They appoint Viceroyes, for Peru, & Noua Hispania, and a general of the army that goes into these parts, with all other Offices and Spirituall liuings. In this Councell they also treat of all greouances and complaints, that come from the Indies, by way of appellation. All which things they impart vnto the king. They also appoint Visitors to goe into those Prouinces, to examine howall Officers carrie themselves, and to heare the peoples greouances; and they punish or dismisse as they shall see cause.

B The Councell of Orders. It hath a President, and foure Counsellours, with wages, which must be Knights, of the Order of Saint Iames, Calatrava, or Alcantrara. In this Councell they treat of suits; which happen in Prouinces belonging vnto these orders, and to see that the Knights weare their habits nearly. This Councell appoints two and twentie Iustices in their Prouinces, wherewith the royal Councell hath not to deale. They punish the Commanders and knights which obserue not their orders: They dispose of many Benefices, Vicarages, Chappels, and other Offices, in the Prouinces of their Orders, but all with the kings priuie, and allowance.

C The Councell which they call de Camera. It hath a President and three Counsellours, of the most ancient of the Councell Royall, which haue no wages. In this Councell they provide superiour officers for the Realme, and they dispose of Bishopricks, Chanonries, and other Ecclesiastical liuings, the king hauing the nomination from the Pope of Rome.

The Councell of Hazienda: wherethere is a President and three Counsellours, without fees, wherewith they treat of the kings reuenues, and of all dueties, entries & accompts, like vnto our Exchequer in England.

There is a Councell of accompts: which consists of foure Counsellours, in the which two of the kings chiefe Auditours haue place, and the most ancient Counsellor presides. In this councell they determine of sutes touching the subsidies and taxes, and giue order to Collectors, for recouerie thereof.

D The Council of Cruzada. It hath a President, two Counsellours and three Auditours: Their charge is onely to diuide the Cruzado by the bishopricks, and to send forth Commissaries to gather it.

The Council of Arragon, Valentia and Cattalogia. It hath a President, who is called Vicechancellour, with fixe Counsellours, which haue wages. They treat of the government of those Realmes, and of the Islands of Maiorca, Minorca, & Sardinia: they appoint gouernors and Iudges, and determine suits from those places by way of appeale, and heare their greouances, and to giue rewards in the kings chamber of those realmes; all with his Maiesties approbation.

E The Council of the Inquisition. The President is called Inquisitor Maior, an Office of great dignitie, which most commonly the Archbishop of Toledo holdes: hee hath fixe counsellours, or Inquisitors, they appoint all the Inquisitors, Prouosts, and Secretaries in all the Inquisitions within the Realme, which are aboute twentie, in either of which are three or foure Inquisitors: who deale in matters of Heresie, & with such men as do or say any thing against the church of Rome. And before they condemne any offender they send him to this Councell to determine of him.

The Council of Descargos, treats of the paying of the old kings debts, and the execution of their last wils.

F There are two Chanceries in Spaine, one at Vailledolit, and another at Granado, either of which hath a President and twelue Counsellours. They take knowledge of all ciuill causes which come vnto them by way of appeale from other inferiour courts. They also take knowledge of sutes, for the estates and inheritances of Noblemen, from the which they may appeale to the Councell royall, if the matter in question exceed the value of foure thousand ducats. There are foure Alcaldes or Prouosts of the Chancery, who determine of all ciuill and criminall causes, within fixe leagues; from whome they appeale to the counsellours of the Chauncerie.

There is a Councell for the realme of Nauarre, wherethere is a Regent, fixe Counsellors, and foure Alcaldes, or Prouosts, they take knowledge of suites, both ciuill and criminall

Council of state.

Council of war

Council of iustice.

Council of Italy.

The Council of
the Indies.

The Council of Orders.

The Council of Orders.

Council de Camera.

Council of Hazienda.

Council of Accompts.

Council of the Cruzada.

Council of Arragon.

Council of the Inquisition.

Council of Descargos.

Chanceries of
Spaine.

Council of Nauarre.

minall within that Realme, and end them there, of what qualitie soeuer they be without appeale, whereof they consult euery weeke with the Viceroy, who determines what they shall doe.

Council of Galicia. There is also a Regent, 4 Councillors, and 4 Prouosts in the realm of Galicia, who end all suits within that realme; but they deale not in questions of Nobilitie and Gentrie, which goe to the Chancerie of Vailledolit.

Council of Seuille. The Citie of Seuille with the dependances, hath a Regent, 6 Councillors, and 4 Pro-uosts, who take knowledge of all ciuill and criminall matters, whereof the iudges of the said citie or realm haue giuen sentence. There is an appeale from them to the royal councel: all questions of Nobilitie goe to the Chancerie of Granado.

Power of the President of the Council royall. The President of the Councell royall of Iustice appoints all the Councillors, Pro-uosts, Presidents, & Regents of the Chanceries, & changeth them from one to another, & draws them to be Councillors of that Court: Moreover he names sixty and sixe Go-uernors of Cities and Prouinces, changing them as occasion shall require. These Gouernors or Iudges, haue commonly two or three Lieutenants in the townes of their gouernment. They or their Lieutenants, gouerne the cities or prouinces which are vnder their charge, with twelue or more Aldermen which hee hath in euery citie and towne: which Aldermen doe onely deale with the maintenance of the citie, and with the publike works wherein they haue a voice, but the gouernors or their Lieutenants determine of al murders, thefts, or other misdemeanors: and punish according to the qualitie of the fact, e-uery Gouernour hath as much power in these matters, as the king himselfe, the matter being iustificable, and they may deale in al matters for that their Comissions are vrie ample, representing the kings person, from whome they doe appeale to the Chanceries of Vailledolit or Granado.

Reuenues of the king of Spaine. I am afraid to enter into any discourse of the reuenues of this king, men write so diuer-ly therof: some write that he hath but 14 millions of ducats, comming in yearly, others say eighteen Millions, and some bring it to 23 millions, which differences may haply with some limitations bee reconciled: But whatsoeuer it bee, it is most certaine, that during the warres of the Low-countries, it was too little to mainteine his charge, for although that Naples, Sicile, Milan, Sardinia, Maiorca and Minorca, Flaunders and Burgondie, yeeld him aboute fise Millions yearly, yet there comes little of all this to his cofers, being employed in the entertainment of Viceroys, Gouernors, Capitaines, Garrisons, Officers, and other charges in those countries. The kings reuenues in Spaine, rise not from his demeanes, as in some other Countries, but from the great impositions which hee ray-seth vpon the ports of the Sea, and from his drie Ports, which bee the passages from one kingdome to another: and of all Merchandize which is sold, hee takes ten in the hundred, and how often soeuer it be sold. A great part of which Gabelles & Impositions in Spaine stands ingaged vnto the Genouois & other merchants for the paiement of the kings debts.
Some hold that he hath not aboute fise millions of ducats comming in cleerly to mainte-taine the charges of his court, and all other extraordinary expences of war, gifts, pensions, voyages and such like.

The Impositions which are raised in Spaine, are not laid equally vpon all his Countries, but they lie most heauie vpon the two Castilles, Leon and Andaluzia, for in the realmes of Valencia, Arragon, and Cattelonia, hee imposeth little, but mainteineth their priuiledges which be great, and they themselues redeiue the Gabelles and customes, & not the king: the profit which growes there by confiscations and pecuniarie fines, doth scarce entertaine his Viceroys and other officers. So as it seemes hee hath but merum im- perium in those three countries, they being also bound to serue him in his warres.

The king reapes great commoditie, by the popes fauor, from the Clergie, he giues him Buls of Croyfadoe; he enioyes the masterships of S. James, Calatrava, Alcantara, & disposeth of the Comanderies; he hath the first fruits of Ecclesiasticall liuings, and a part of the tythes, which comes yearly to three millions of ducats at the least; & he hath the nomination of all Archbishops, Abbots and Priors, yet he may not giue any benefices, but to naturall borne Spaniards, or to such as haue bene formerly naturalized.

The

The Realmes which they number in Spaine, are these:

The Realme of Seuille.
Cordoua.
Iaen.
Toledo.
Leon.
Nauarre.
Valencia.

The Realme of Gibraltar.
Granado.
Murcia.
Castille.
Gallicia.
Arragon.
Cattelognia.

In these Realmes (besides Arragon, Valencia, and Cattelognia) there are some Cities, which are called to the generall Estates, and haue voices for the Prouinces in which they are; the which be these:

Seuille.
Granado.
Cuenca.
Madrid.
Soria.
Auila.
Cordoua.
Iaen.
Toledo.

Guadalajara.
Segouia.
Salamanca.
Zamorra.
Vailledolit.
Burgo.
Toro.
Leon.
Murcia.

The names of all the chiefe Cities in Spaine and Portugal, and in what Prouinces they are:

In Galicia.
Compostella.
Tuye.

In Asturia of Oviedo.
Mondenedo.
Leon.
Pomperado.

In Asturia S. Ellene.
S. Ellene.

In Biscaie.
Victoria.

In Nauarre.
Pampelone.

In Cattelognia.
Barcelona.
Tarragone.
Moufon.
Seguença.

In Arragon.
Saragossa.
Tarrel.
Dutago.
Valencia.

In Valencia.
Cuenca.
Segouia.
Oraguella.

In Mancha.
Alacantye.
Segure.

In Granado.
Granado.
Almeric.
Carthagena.
Murcia.
Guadix.

In Andalucia.
Seuille.
Cadiz.
Medina Sidonia.
Esica.
Iaen.
Mallega.
Xeres.
Cordoua.
Vbeda.
Bacsa.
Andujar.
Gggggg

In the Countie.

Aymonte.
Auyta.

In Castille.

Burgos.
Tarragone.
Guadalajara.
Segouia.
Calohorra.
Zamora.
Toro.
Medina del Campo.

In Spaine there are 57

Cities.

Salamanca.
Valentia.
Astorgo.

In Toledo.

Cuidad Royall.
Alcala de Henares.
Toledo.

In Extremadura.

Placentia.
Auyta.
Badajos.
Merida.

In Portugall.

Lisbone.
Euora.
Coimbra.
Porto.
Braga.
Bragance.
Cuidad Roderigo.
Beiria.
Cono.
Oliuensa.
Eluas.
Guarda.
Settuual.
Selues.
Leria.

In Portugall there are 15
Cities.

Some haue obserued in their late trauels, that the King of Spaine hath alwaies within that continent 36000 foot, which are mustered and enrolled, and are bound to be readie in armes at the ringing of a bell, or the sound of the drumme. The Grandos, Nobilitie, and Prelats of the Kingdome are charged with horse, and they amount to the number of 16000. Besides, the inhabitants of the sea coasts, and of diuers other Ports of his dominions within land, are bound to find horse, which come to 12000 at the least, all which must be readie at a moneths warning. This I had from the relation of a yong nobleman, wherein he hath shewed great industrie and judgement, but it may be there was some mistaking in the writing of these great numbers of horse.

A note of all the Hauens, Ports, and Fisher Townes vpon the coast of Spaine, from Fontarabie in Biscaye, to Barcelona in the Mediterranean sea.

In Biscaye.

Fontarabie, a bard hauen.
Passage and Renderie, an open hauen.
S. Sebastians, a bay hauen.
Sumaye and Guittario, bard.
Montrica and Deua, fisher townties.
Mondac and Alequito, Fishers.
Vermeo and Placentia, Fishers.
Bilbao and Portugalete, bard hauen.

Asturies.

Aluredo, a key hauen.
S. Ander, an open hauen.
S. Vincent de la Barkera, fisher towne.
Aryba de Sella, Fishers.

Villaviciosa, Fishers.
Chynchon, a kay.
Torre, Fishers.
Pena, Fishers.
Loarca, bard hauen.
Auiles, bard hauen.

Gallicia.

Ribadeo, bard hauen.
Vuiero and Sidera, Fishers.
Farrol, open hauen.
The Groyne, an open hauen.
Mongea, bard hauen.
Corcauiana, bard hauen.
Muros, bard.
Porta viedra, bard hauen.
Vigo and Bayone, open hauen.

InIn the Countie.

Aymont, a bard hauen.
Selua and Palos, Fishers.

In Andalusia.

S. Lucar de Barameda, it stands in the mouth of the riuer of Guadalquivir, which goes vp to Seuille, Fisher boats.
Seuille, bard hauen.
Rora, a kay.
Cadiz, an open hauen.
S. Marie Port, barred hauen.

Streits toward Barcelona.

Gibraltar, an open roade and kay.
Grand Malega, a kay roade.
Maruela, an open roade.
Velez Malega, a kay roade.
Almerie, Fishers.
Carthagena, a hauen.

In Valencia.

Alicante, which is the Port of Valencia, a hauen.
Valencia, a Creeke.

In Castile.

Barçullas
Tarragona
Palamos
Empurias
Bajas

All Fisher Townes.

Barcelona, an open hauen.

In Portugall.

Camina, a barred hauen.
Viana, barred.
Villa de Conde, barred.
Auro, barred.
Porto de Portugall, barred.
Cascas, Fisher Townes.
Lisbone, an open hauen.
Sesambrie, barred hauen.
Setun, an open hauen.
Lagos, a kay.
Villanouas, a barred hauen.
Farouillas, barred.

Figera
Fauilla
Cathromarin } Fisher Townes.

I will not trouble my selfe nor the Reader in setting downe what shippes and parkes belong vnto these Ports and Hauens, as some haue done, being very variable and vncertaine: but I will onely make some mention of the king of Spaines forces at sea, as I haue learned from those that haue curiously inquired thereof, at their being in the countrey. The king maintaines vpon the coast of Spaine and Portugall some 40 good shippes and galleons, with 32 galleyes, besides smaller vessels. And besides all these, he hath at Naples 25 galleyes, in Sicilie 16, and they of Genoua, which he entertaines continually, but the galleyes are none of his.

Gggggg ij

A

A Catalogue of the Princes which haue raigned in Spain since the euersion of the Romane Empire, with their Alliances and Successions.

The Kings of the Gothes.

|    |   |     |    |                                     |     |
|----|---|-----|----|-------------------------------------|-----|
| 1  | V Allia, first King of the Gothes, whichsettled himselfe in Spaine about theyeare of our Lord | 420 | 15 | Ricarede.                           | 585 |
| 2  | Theodoric the first.   | 440 | 16 | Luiba the second.            | 601 |
| 3  | Torismond.  | 453 | 17 | Viſteric vsurper.            | 603 |
| 4  | Theodoric the second.  | 458 | 18 | Gundamir.                           | 610 |
| 5  | Henry or Euric.   | 471 | 19 | Sizebuth.                           | 612 |
| 6  | Alaric.   | 483 | 20 | Suintilla.                          | 621 |
| 7  | Genſalaric or Geſſelaric.   | 508 | 21 | Sizenand.                           | 631 |
| 8  | Amalaric.   | 511 | 22 | Cinthilla.                          | 637 |
| 9  | Theude.   | 526 | 23 | Tulca.                              | 641 |
| 10 | Theodisſcle.  | 524 | 24 | Cindaſiunthe, and his sonne. | 642 |
| 11 | Agila.  | 546 | 25 | Reccesiunthe.                       | 652 |
| 12 | Aranagilde.   | 551 | 26 | Bamba.                              | 672 |
| 13 | Luiba the first.   | 565 | 27 | Eruinge.                            | 681 |
| 14 | Leonigilde.   | 567 | 28 | Egica.                              | 688 |
|    |   |     | 29 | Vitiza.                             | 701 |
|    |   |     | 30 | Roderic.                            | 711 |

During the raigne of R O D E R I C, last King of the Gothes, the Arabians, Saracens, or Moores inuaded or conquered Spaine; againſt whom did riſe many Chriſtian Potentates, whose lines and deſcendant follow: that is,

|                              |           |
|------------------------------|-----------|
| The Line of Ouiedo and Leon. | Fol. 1345 |
| The Line of Caſtille.        | 1349      |
| The Line of Nauarre.         | 1355      |
| The Line of Arragon.         | 1362      |
| The Line of Cattelogne.      | 1367      |
| The Line of Portugall.       | 1369      |

The names of the Archbiſhops of Toledo. Fol. 1374

Moreover, the names of the Kings and Princes }
Moores which haue raigned in Spaine, } Fol. 1375.

The

The Line of Ouiedo and Leon.

I.
Pelagius first king of Ouiedo, ſonne to Faſila, Gouverneur of Biſcaie.
Gaudioſa his wife.

Lawfull children { Faſila.
Ormiſinda.

II.
Faſila ſonne to Pelagius, in the yere 735, raigned two yeres, and died without children.
Ormiſinda his wife.

III.
Alphonſo firſt of that name, ſonne to Peter, Gouverneur of Biſcaie, in the yere 737: he raigned 19 yeres.

Ormiſinda, daughter to king Pelagius, his wife.

Lawfull children { Froila.
Kimaram.
Aurelius.
Odeſinde, a daughter.
Mauregat, a baſtard.

IV.
D. Froila the firſt of that name, ſonne to king Alphonſo I. in the yere 756: he raigned 11 yeres, 6 moneths.
Menine or Momerane, daughter to the Duke of Aquitaine, his wife.

Lawfull children { D. Alphonſo.
D. Bermund, or Veremund.
D. Ximena, mother to Bernard del Carpio.

V.
D. Aurelius brother to Froila, in the yere 768: he raigned 6 yeres, and died without children.

VI.
D. Sillo husband to Odeſinde, daughter to king Alphonſo the firſt, in the yere 774: he raigned 9 yeres, and died without children.

VII.
D. Mauregat, baſtard to king Alphonſo the firſt, an Vſurper, in the yere 783: he raigned ſixe yeres and ſix moneths, and died without children.

VIII.
D. Bermund, or Veremund, ſonne to king Froila, and firſt of that name, in the yere 789:
he raigned two yeres alone, and ſoure with Alphonſo his brother.
D. Imelona his wife.

Lawfull children { D. Ramir.
D. Garcia.

IX.
D. Alphonſo ſecond of that name, ſonne to king Froila, called the chaſt, in the yere 795:
he raigned 29 yeres after the death of D. Bermund.
D. Berſia his wife, with whom he had no companie; and therefore he had no children.
G g g g g g iij D. Ramir

X.

D. Ramir and D. Garcia, sonnes to king Bermund, raigne together in the yere 824 :
 D. Ramir who suruived, held the realme fix yeres.
 D. Vrraca of Castille wife to D. Ramir.

Lawfull children { D. Ordogno or Fortun, D. Garcia.

XI.

D. Ordogno or Fortun, first of that name, and sonne to the king D. Ramir, in the yere 831 :
 he raigned 10 yeres.
 D. Nugna his wife.

Lawfull children { D. Alphonso.
 D. Bermund.
 D. Nugno.
 D. Odoaire.
 D. Froila.
 D. N, a daughter.

XII.

D. Alphonso third of that name, sonne to king D. Ordogno, in the yere 841 : he raigned 46 yeres.

D. Amelina, or as some say, Ximenis his wife.

Lawfull children { D. Garcia.
 D. Ordogno or Fortun.
 D. Froila.
 D. Gonsal the Archdeacon.

XIII.

D. Garcia first of that name, sonne to D. Alphonso the third, in the yere 886 : he raigned three yeres, and had to wife the daughter of D. Nugno Fernandes de Castille, and died without children.

XIIII.

D. Ordogno or Fortun, second of that name, brother to D. Garcia, in the yere 889 : he raigned eight yeres.

D. Nugna or Eluira, as some say, his first wife.

Lawfull children { D. Sancho.
 D. Alphonso.
 D. Ramir.
 D. Garcia.
 D. Ximena.

D. Arrogande, or it may be Radogande of Galicia, his second wife, repudiated.
 D. Sancho, Infanta of Nauarre, third wife to this king D. Ordogno.

XV.

D. Froila second of that name, and third sonne to king Alphonso the third, an vsurper, in the yere 897 : he raigned one yere six moneths, surnamed the cruell.
 D. Nugna or Manina his wife.

Lawfull children { D. Alphonso.
 D. Ordogno, or Fortun.
 D. Ramir.

D. Froila, a bastard, father to D. Pelagius the Deacon.

XVI.

D. Alphonso fourth of that name, sonne to the king D. Ordogno the second, in the yere 898 : he raigned 6 yeres.

D. Vrraca Ximenes Infanta of Nauarre his wife.

D. Ordogno or Fortun, called the bad.

D. Ramir,

XVII.

D. Ramir, second of that name, brother to D. Alphonso the fourth, in the yere 904 : he raigned 20 yeres.

D. Theresia Infanta of Nauarre, his wife.

Lawfull children { D. Bermund.
 D. Ordogno.
 D. Sancho.
 D. Eluira, a Nun.

XVIII.

D. Ordogno 3 of that name, sonne to D. Ramir, in the yere 924 : he raigned 5 yeres.
 D. Vrraca, daughter to D. Fernand Gonsales Earle of Castille, his wife repudiated.
 D. Eluira his second wife, by whom he had

D. Bermund.

XIX.

D. Sancho, brother to D. Ordogno, in the yere 929 : he raigned 12 yeres, the first of that name, and was surnamed the Grosse.

D. Theresia his wife, of whom was borne

D. Ramir.

XX.

D. Ramir third of that name, sonne to D. Sancho, in the yere 941, he raigned 24 yeres.
 D. Vrraca his wife, by whom he had no children.

XXI.

D. Bermund second of that name, sonne to king D. Ordogno the third, in the yere 965 :
 he raigned 17 yeres.

D. Velasquita his wife, of whom came

D. Christina married { D. Alphonso. to D. Ordogno the { D. Ordogno. blind, & had issue { D. Pelagius.

D. Eluira 2 wife, mother to { D. Adencia, who was wife { D. Pedro Ordogno.
 to D. Pelagius the Dea- { D. Pelagius.
 con aboue named, and { D. Nugno.
 D. Theresia, a Nun. { had by him { D. Theresia.

Oftwo sisters Concubines, he had

D. Ordogno by the one:
 D. Eluira by the other.

XXII.

D. Alphonso fifth of that name, sonne to king Bermund, in the yere 982 : he raigned 46
 yeres.

D. Eluira daughter to D. Melendo Gonsales his wife.

Lawfull children { D. Bermund.
 D. Sancho married to D. Ferdinand first king of Ca-
 stille.

XXIII.

D. Bermund third of that name, sonne to D. Alphonso the fist, in the yere 1028 : he raig-ned 9 yeres.

D. Theresia his wife, daughter to Sancho Earle of Castille, who brought him

D. Alphonso, who died an infant.

XXIIII.

D. Sancho heire to the realme, sister to D. Bermund, was married to king
Ferdinand the first of Castille, and 24 of Leon, in the yere 1037 : he raigned 30 yeres.
 Children

Children after she came to the Succession of Leon

Children after she came to the Crowne

XXV

D. Alphonso sixth of that name, son to D. Sancho, in the year 1067 he reigned 41 years in Leon, and came to the crowne of Castille: he had many children by many wiues, specified in the line of Castille, and among others,

D. Constance his fourth wife, a Spaniard, brought him
D. Vrraca who was Queene of Leon and Castille, married first to D. Raymond of Burgundie, of whom came D. Alphonso Raymond, king.

XXVI

D. Vrraca had to her second husband, D. Alphonso king of Navarre and Arragon, number of the sequence of that name among the kings of Leon in the year 1108: they had not any children.

XXVII

D. Alphonso Raymond eighth of that name, sonne to D. Raymond of Burgundie, Earle of Galicia: he reigned in the place of D. Vrraca his mother 35 years, in the year 1122.

D. Berenguela daughter to D. Raymond Armoiré Earle of Barcelone, by whom among other children named in the line of Castille, he had

D. Ferdinand his second sonne, king of Leon.

XXVIII

D. Sancho second of that name, and second sonne to king D. Alphonso the eighth, in the year 1157: he reigned 31 years.

D. Vrraca of Portugal, his first wife.

D. Alphonso.

D. Theresia his second wife, of the house of Lara.

D. Vrraca Lopes his third wife, mother to

D. Sancho Ferdinand.

D. Garcia.

XXIX

D. Alphonso ninth of that name, sonne to D. Ferdinand the second, in the year 1188: he reigned 42 years.

D. Theresia of Portugal his first wife.

Lawfull children { D. Ferdinand.
D. Sancho.
D. Dolce.

D. Berenguela Infanta of Castille, his second wife, mother to Lawfull children { D. Ferdinand, king.

D. Alphonso, Lord of Molina.
D. Constance, a Nunne.
D. Berenguela, Countesse of Brenne, and Queene of Ierusalem.

Of a Concubine whose name is vnknowne,
D. Roderigo Alphonso of Leon.

XXX

D. Ferdinand the third, he reigned at Leon after his father D. Alphonso the ninth, but he first seized vpon the crowne of Castille, by the diligence of D. Berenguela his mother: in him the two realmes were vnited, and neuermore diuided, in the year, 1230.

D. Beatrice daughter to the Emperour Philip: their posteritie is in the line of Castille.

Line

Line of Castille.

D. Nugno Fernandes Earle of Castille, vnder the Soueraignie of Leon, father or grandfather to

D. Ximena married to D. Gonsal Inste.

D. Diego Porcello Earle also, or gouernour of Castille vnder the same Soueraignie.

D. Sulla married to D. Nugno Bellides.

These two gouernours were flaine by king Ordogno the second of Leon, in the prison of Leon.

D. Nugno Bellides Earle of Castille.

D. Sulla daughter to Diego Porcello his wife.

Lawfull children. { D. Nugno Rasure.
D. Inste Gonsales.

D. Nugno Rasure father to

D. Gonsal Nugnes.

D. Eluira or Theresa Nugnes, surnamed the Faire.

D. Eluira Caluo husband to Eluira, whence comes the race of Cid Ruy Diaz.

These gouerned the countrie of Castille, in qualitie of Iudges: after that it was drawn from the obedience of the kings of Leon, during the raigne of D. Froila the second, about the year 896.

D. Gonsal Nugnes sonne to D. Nugno Rasure, sole gouernour of Castille.

D. Ximena daughter or grandchild to D. Nugno Fernandes, whom wee set in the first place in this Line, mother to

D. Fernand Gonsales their sonne.

First Soueraigne Earle.

D. Fernand Gonsales first Earle proprietarie of Castille, in the year 910: he gouerned 32 yeares.

D. Vrraca, his first wife, mother to

D. Vrraca.

D. Sancho Infanta of Navarre, second wife to D. Fernand, daughter to D. Sancho Abarca.

Children { D. Gonsal Fernandes.
D. Sancho Fernandes.
D. Garcia Fernandes.
D. Pedro father to two sonnes. { D. Gonsal Nugnes.
D. Baldwin. { D. Fernandes Gonsales.

It is doubtfull by which of his wiues he had these fiue sonnes.

II.

D. Garcia Fernandes the third sonne to D. Fernand Gonsales, in the year 942: hee held the Earldome 48 yeares.

D. Argentina his first wife, a French woman.

D. Sancho, Ogna, or Abba, his second wife, mother to Children { D. Garcia Roland.

D. Sancho Garcia.
D. Vrraca a Nun.

III.

D. Sancho Garcia the second sonne to D. Garcia Fernandes, in the year 990: he gouerned Castille 38 yeares.

D. Vrraca his wife, mother to Children { D. Garcia.

D. Nugna Queene of Navarre.
D. Theresia Queene of Leon.
D. Tigrida a Nunne.

D. Garcia

Castille.

IIII.

D. Garcia second of that name, floure at Leon before he was married, so as the Earldome fell to his sister.

D. Nugna Queene of Nauarre by the right of proximitie.

V.

D. Nugna sister to D. Garcia, married to the king.

D. Sancho fourth of that name of Nauarre, in the year 1028, they held the Earldome sixe yeares, then they gaue it to D. Fernand their second sonne, with the title of a King.

D. Fernand, second sonne.

The other children of this marriage are named in the line of Nauarre.

First King of Castille.

D. Fernand, second sonne of D. Sancho, fourth of that name of Nauarre, had Castille for his portion, with the title of a king, being the inheritance of his mother D. Nugna: in the year 1034 he vniued Leon vnto it, by his wife D. Sancha, and raigned 32 yeares.

D. Sancha sister to D. Bermund, third king of Leon, mother, among other children, to

D. Sancho Fernandes.

D. Alphonso.

Their other children are named in the line of Leon.

II.

D. Sancho Fernandes, whom we will call the second of that name, in regard of the Earle D. Sancho Garcia, in the year 1067: he raigned 6 yeares, died without children, and left his realme to his brother D. Alphonso king of Leon.

III.

D. Alphonso brother to D. Sancho, first of that name in Castille, and sixt in Leon, in the year 1073: he raigned 34 yeares 8 moneths.

D. Ines or Agnes first wife to D. Alphonso a Spaniard.

D. Constance, second wife, a Spaniard, and mother to

D. Vrraca Queene of Castille married to D. Raimond

D. Sancha.
of Burgondie first, by whom shee had
D. Alphonso Raymond.

D. Maria other wife called Caida, a Moore, third wife to D. Alphonso, mother to

D. Sancho.

D. Berthe fourth wife, an Italian.

D. Isabell, fift, a Spaniard, mother to

D. Sancha.

D. Eluira Queene of Naples.

D. Beatrix a French woman, sixt wife to D. Alphonso.

By D. Ximena Nuges de Guzman a Concubine, he had

D. Eluira, Countesse of Toloufa.

Of another Concubine whose name is not knowne,

D. Theresa, first Countesse of Portugall.

IIII.

D. Vrraca beeing the eldest, widow to D. Raymond Earle of Burgondie, was hereditarie Queene of Castille and Leon, shee tooke to her second husband, D. Alphonso king of Nauarre and Arragon, first of that name, from whom beeing diuorced, and liuing loosely in her countie, shee did choose D. Alphonso Raymond her sonne for their king, during her life: yet we will set her in the fourth place.

D. Alphonso husband to D. Vrraca, fourth king of Castille, in the year 1108, where hee raigned eight yeares.

V.

D. Alphonso Raymond, sonne to Raymond of Burgondie, and to D. Vrraca, in the year 1122, he raigned 35 yeares, and is numbred for the third of that name.

D. Berenguela

Castille.

D. Berenguela, daughter to the Barke of Barcelona called D. Raymond Arno, his wife, mother to

D. Sancho king of Castille.

D. Fernand king of Leon.

D. Isabel or Constance Queene of France.

D. Sancha or Beacia Queene of Nauarre.

D. Garcia.

D. Rica 2 wife to D. Alphonso Raymond, aunt to the Emperour Frederic 1, mother to

D. Sancha Queene of Arragon.

D. Marie a concubine, mother to

D. Estienne, wife to D. Fernand Roderigo el Castellan, whose sonne D. Pedro Fernandes de Castro was.

D. Goutrude sister to Diego Apricio, a concubine also, mother to

D. Vrraca Queene of Nauarre.

VI.

D. Sancho, sonne to D. Alphonso Raymond, in the year 1157: he raigned two yeares, the fourth of that name.

D. Blanche of Nauarre his wife.

D. Alphonso their sonne.

VII.

D. Alphonso sonne to D. Sancho 4 of that name, in the year 1159: he raigned 55 yeares, D. Leonora daughter to Henrie the second king of England.

D. Blanche Queene of France.

D. Berenguela Queene of Leon.

D. Sancho died an infant.

D. Vrraca Queene of Portugall.

D. Fernand died young.

D. Malfade died a virgin.

D. Constance a Nunne.

D. Leonora Queene of Arragon.

D. Henrie King of Castille.

Two daughters which died in their infancies.

VIII.

D. Henrie first of that name, sonne to D. Alphonso 4, in the year 1214: he raigned about three yeares.

D. Malfada of Portugall his wife.

The king D. Henrie beeing dead without children, his sister D. Berenguela second daughter to king D. Alphonso seized vpon the realme of Castille, to the preiudice of D. Blanche mother to Saint Lewis king of France, who was the elder, and there leised D. Fernand sonne to her, and to D. Alphonso ninth king of Leon.

IX.

D. Ferdinand third of that name, sonne to D. Alphonso ninth king of Leon, and to D. Berenguela of Castille, obtained the realme of Castille, to the preiudice of Queene Blanche, mother to Saint Lewis, in the year 1217, and raigned 35 yeares.

D. Beatrix daughter to the Emperour Philip, of whom was borne

D. Alphonso.

D. Frederic.

D. Ferdinand.

D. Henrie.

Lawfull children

D. Philip.

D. Sancha.

D. Emanuel.

D. Leonora not married.

D. Berenguela a Nun.

By

By Isabella or Adella as some write, of the house of Poitiers, his second wife, he had

Lawfull children {
D. Ferdinand.
D. Lewis.
D. Leonora.

In this King the two Realmes of Leon and Castille were vnited, and were no more diuided.

X. King of Castille. 31. of Leon.

D. ALFONSO sonne to D. Ferdinand 3, numbred for the 5 of that name, and 10 in Leon: but they that joyne these two Lines, accompt him the 11, adding his great grandfather Alfonso 4 of Castille, who had no interest in Leon.

D. Violant of Arragon his wife, by whom he had

Children {
D. Ferdinand called de la Cerda, who married D. Blanche daughter to S. Lewis of France, and had
D. Sancho 3. sonne
D. Pedro 3. sonne
D. John 4. sonne to
D. Alfonso the wife, who married D. Maria Lopez Diaz, heire of Biscaye, and had D. John the blind, father to one Daughter married to D. John Nugnes de Lara.
D. James 5. sonne.
D. Berenguela.
D. Beatrice.
D. Isabella.
D. Leonora.

D. Maior de Guzman a Concubine, mother to
D. Beatrix Queene of Portugall.

XI. King of Castille. 32. of Leon.

D. SANCHE second sonne to the King D. Alfonso, seized vpon the realme in his fathers life time, to frustrat the children of his elder brother D. Ferdinand deceased in the yeare 1284, and reigned about 11 ycares: wee number him for the 4 of that name in Castille.

D. MARIA of Castille, daughter to D. Alfonso Lord of Molina, his wife.

Lawfull children {
D. Isabella Duchesse of Britaine.
D. Ferdinand.
D. Alfonso on Philip.
D. Henry.
D. Pedro.
D. Beatrix.

XII. King of Castille. 33. of Leon.

D. FERDINAND sonne to D. Sancho the 4 of that name, in the yeare 1295: hee reigned 17 yeares.

D. Constance of Portugall his wife.

Children {
D. Alfonso.
D. Leonora.

D. Alfonso

XIII. King of Castille. 34. of Leon.

D. Alfonso 11 of that name, sonne to D. Ferdinand in the yeare 1312: he reigned 38 yeares.

D. Maria of Portugall his wife.

Lawfull children {
D. Ferdinand, died in his infancie.
D. Pedro King.

By Leonora de Guzman a Concubine he had

Bastards {
D. Pedro.
D. Sancho.
D. Henry.
D. Frederic } Twins.
D. Ferdinand.
D. Tello.
D. John.
D. Joane, who was wife to Ferdinand de Castro.

XIII. King of Castille. 35. of Leon.

D. Pedro the cruell, in the yeare 1350: he was lawfull sonne to D. Alfonso, or as some hold, supposed by the Queene D. Maria, who was icalous of the fruitfulness of D. Leonora de Guzman: he reigned tyrannously 18 yeares.

D. Blanche of Bourbon his wife.

D. Maria de Padille his Concubine.

Bastards {
D. Beatrix.
D. Constance Duchesse of Lancaster.
D. Alfonso.
D. Isabella Countesse of Cambridge.

D. Joane de Castro, whom he married in the life of Queene Blanche, mother to D. John.
D. Isabella an other Concubine, mother to Bastards {

D. Sancho.
D. Diego.

D. Theresa of Ayala, vpon promise of marriage, brought him D. Maria.

XV. King of Castille. 36. of Leon.

D. Henry 2 of that name, base sonne to Alfonso 11: being persecuted by the king D. Pedro, he had recourse vnto the French, by whose ayde he conquered the Realme of Castille, and slew the king D. Pedro in the yeare 1368, and reigned 11 yeares.

D. Joane Manuell his wife, mother to

Lawfull children {
D. John king of Castille.
D. Leonora Queene of Navarre.

D. Leonora Ponce, some call her Beatrix, a Concubine: by her he had

D. Frederic duke of Benauent.
D. Eluira Iniques an other Concubine, mother to

D. Joane married to D. Alfonso sonne to the Marquesse of Villena.
Of vncertaine mothers were borne

D. Alfonso Earle of Gijon.

An other daughter married to D. Pedro sonne to the marquesse of Villena.

XVI. King of Castille. 37. of Leon.

D. John 1 of that name, sonne to D. Henry the second, in the yeare 1379: hee reigned 11 yeares.

D. Leonora of Arragon his wife, mother to Lawfull children {

D. Henry.
D. Ferdinand.

A daughter which died young.
D. Beatrix of Portugall, his second wife.

H h h h h

XVII.

Castille and Leon.

XVII. King of Castille. 38 of Leon.

D. HENRY third of that name, sonneto D. John the first, in the yere 1390: he raigned 16 yeres.

D. KATHERINE of Lancaster his wife.

Lawfull children { D. Marie, Queene of Arragon.
D. John, King of Castille.
D. Katherine.

XVIII. King of Castille. 39 of Leon.

D. JOHN sonneto D. Henry the third, in the yere 1406: he raigned 48 yeres.

D. MARIA of Arragon, daughter to D. Ferdinand his vncle, his wife.

Lawfull children { D. Katherine, died yong.
D. Leonora.
D. Henry king of Castille.

D. ISABELL of Portugall his second wife, daughter to the infant D. John, Master of S. James.

{ D. Isabell, Queene of Castille.
D. Alphonso.

XIX. King of Castille. 40 of Leon.

D. HENRY fourth of that name, called the vnable, in the yere 1454: he raigned 21 yeres.

D. BLANCHE of Nauarre, daughter to the king D. John, his first wife, put away.

D. IOANS of Portugall his second wife, mother to
D. Ioane, a supposed child.

XX. King of Castille. 41 of Leon.

D. ISABELL of Castille, sister to king Henry the fourth, was Queene of Castille, as next of the blood, and lawfull, she married with

D. FERDINAND, Prince of Arragon, King of Sicile: they began to raigne in the yere 1474, and had

Lawfull children { D. Isabell, Queene of Portugall, mother to D. Michel, who had beene heire to all the realmes of Spaine, if he had liued.
D. John, who died yong.
D. Ioane Queene heire.
D. Maria Queens of Portugall.
D. Katherine.

XXI. King of Castille. 42 of Leon.

D. IOANE, daughter to the Queene D. Isabell, and D. Ferdinand her husband: she was married to the Archduke

D. PHILIP of Austria: they succeeded to the Realmes of Castille and Leon, in the yere 1504, and raigned together two yeres, they had Lawfull children { D. Leonora, Queene of Portugall and of France.

D. Charles King and Emperour.
D. Isabell Queene of Denmarke.
D. Ferdinand Emperor.
D. Marie.
D. Katherine.

XXII. King of Castille. 43 of Leon.

D. CHARLES by the decease of his father D. Philip, succeeded to the right of the Crowne of Castille, vnder the gouernment of the King D. Ferdinand his grandfather, after

Castille and Leon.

after whose death hee tooke vpon him the gouernment of the realme, by reason of the incapacitie of the Queene D. Ioane his mother, in the yere 1516: hee raigned 45 yeres in Castille, Arragon and Nauarre.

D. ISABELL daughter to King Emmanell of Portugall his wife.

Lawfull children { D. Philip king.
D. Marie Emperesse.
D. Ioane married to the Prince of Portugall.
D. Ferdinand who died yong.

By Concubines he had

Bastards { D. Marguerite duchesse of Florence, and Parma.
D. John d. Austria.

XXIII. King of Castille. 44 of Leon.

D. PHILIP, 2 sonneto to the Emperour Charles 5, in the yere 1558: he raigned fortie yeres.

D. MARIE of Portugall his first wife, mother to

D. Charles.

D. MARIE Queene of England, died without children.

D. ISABELL of France, his 3 wife, mother to { D. Isabella Clara Eugenia.

{ D. Catherine.

D. ANNA of Austria his 4 wife, by whom he had

D. Charles.

D. Laurens, some say Ferdinand.

Lawfull children { D. Diego, or James.

D. Philip.

D. Na daughter.

XXIII. King of Castille. 45 of Leon.

D. PHILIP 3 now raingong, sonneto Philip 2, in the yere 1598.

D. MARGUERITE of Austria daughter to the Archduke Ferdinand of Gratz, his wife.

Line of Nauarre.

First King in Sobrabre and Nauarre.

D. GARCIA Ximenes in the yere 716: he raigned 42 yeres.

INIGA his wife, mother to Garcia Inigo.

II.

D. GARCIA INIGO, second of that name, in the yere 758: he raigned 44 yeres: the name of his wife is vnkowne.

D. FORTUN Garcès his sonne.

III.

D. FORTUN GARCÈS, sonneto D. Garcia Inigo, in the yere 802: he raigned 13 yeres.

D. THEVDA of Arragon daughter to D. Galinde.

D. Sancho Garcès.

III.

D. SANCHE GARCÈS, first of that name, sonneto D. Fortun, in the yere 815: hee raigned 17 yeres.

The name of his wife is not found.

D. Ximen Inigo, it may be their sonne.

Hhhhhh ij

D. Ximen

Nauarre.

V.

D. XIMEN INIGO, in the year 832: he reigned 8 yeres.
D. NVGN his wife.

D. Inigo Arista.

VI.

D. INIGO ARISTA, in the year 840: he reigned 27 yeres some hold that hee was not sonne to D. Ximen, but issued from the Lords of Bigorre, and elected.
D. THEYDA, daughter to Zeno Earle of Biscaie.

D. Garcia Inigo.

VII.

D. GARCIA INIGO, third of that name, sonne to D. Inigo Arista, in the year 867: he reigned 18 yeres.

D. VERRACA, heire of Arragon, his wife.

D. Fortun.

Children { D. Sancho Abarca.
D. Sancho Queene of Leon.

VIII.

D. FORTUN, in the yere 885: hee reigned 6 yeres in Nauarre and Arragon, which was a small thing then, and vnder the foueraignty of Nauarre. This king made himselfe a Monke, and left the realme to his brother.

IX.

D. SANCHO ABARCA, 2 of that name, in the year 901: reigned 19 yeres.
D. TODA, or THEYDA his wife.

D. Garcia Sanchez.

D. Vrraca Xenuenes, Queene of Leon.

Children { D. Marie Countesse of Barcelona
D. Theresia Queene of Leon.

D. Sancho Countesse of Castille.

D. Blanche married to the Lord of Biscaie.

Some hold this King had 3 sonnes more,

D. Ramir.

D. Gonfal.

D. Ferdinand.

X.

D. GARCIA SANCHES, 4. of that name, sonne to D. Sancho Abarca, in the year 920: he reigned 49 yeres.

THERESIA his wife.

D. Sancho Garcies.

D. Ramir.

Children { D. Vrraca.

D. Ermeilde.

D. Ximena.

XI.

D. SANCHO GARCIES, third of that name, sonne to D. Garcia Sanches, in the year 969: he reigned 24 yeres.

D. VERRACA his wife.

D. Garcia.

Children { D. Ramir father to D. Sancho.
D. Gonfal. D. Garcia.

XII.

D. GARCIA the shaking sonne to D. Sancho Garcies 5. of that name, in the yere 993: he reigned 7 yeres or thereabouts.

D. XIMENA

Nauarre.

D. XIMENA his wife.

D. Sancho their sonne.

XIII.

D. SANCHE 4. of that name, sonne to D. Garcia the trembling, in the year 1000: hee reigned 34 yeres.

D. NVGN daughter to D. Sancho Earle of Castille, which by some is called D. Mena heire of Castille.

D. Garcia King of Nauarre.

Children { D. Ferdinand king of Castille.

D. Gonfal king of Sobrarbre and Ribagorça.

Of D. Caya the Ladie of Ayuar, a Concubine

D. Ramir King of Arragon.

XIII.

D. GARCIA, 6 of that name, sonne to D. Sancho 4, in the yere 1034: he reigned 20 yeres.

D. ETTIENETTE a French woman, of the house of Carvassone, and of Beziers, his wife.

D. Sancho Garcia King.

D. Ramir.

D. Ferdinand.

Children { D. Raymond.

D. Ermeilde.

D. Ximena.

D. Mena.

D. Vrraca, or Ogneda.

XV.

D. SANCHO GARCIA, 5 of that name, sonne to D. Garcia, in the yere 1054: hee reigned 22 yeres.

D. PLAISANCE his wife.

D. Ramir Sanchez of D. Elvira daughter to Cid Roy Diaz had

D. Garcia the elder.

D. Garcia the second.

These children did not succeed.

XVI.

D. SANCHE RAMIRES, who was 2 king of Arragon seized vpon the realme of Nauarre, and is nombred for the 4. of that name, in the yere 1076: he reigned 88 yeres.

D. FRANCESCA, daughter to the Earle of Vrgel, his wife, mother among other children named in the Line of Arragon to

D. Ramir.

D. Alfonso.

D. Ramir a Monke.

XVII.

D. PEDRO, 1 of that name, sonne to D. Sancho Ramir, in the yere 1094: he reigned 10 yeres & more.

D. BERTHA or INES of Tuscaine his wife.

D. Pedro, died an infant.

D. Isabell, died also before the father.

XVIII.

D. ALFONSO, brother to D. Pedro 1 of that name, united all the Christian realms of of Spaine together by his marriage with D. Vrraca heire of Castille and Leon, he came to the Crowne of Nauarre, in the yere 1104, and reigned 34 yeres.

D. Vrraca, daughter to Alfonso 6 of Leon and Castille, his wife, by whom he had not any children.

XIX.

D. Garcia Ramires, 7 of that name, sonne to D. Ramir Sanchez, & grahd-child to D. Sancho Garcia, 5 of that name, he was chosen by the Estates, in the yere 1134, and reigned 16 yeres.

D. Margellina or Marguerite, as some say, daughter to Rotrou Earle of Perche, his wife.

Children: D. Blanche.
D. Sancho king.
D. Alfonso Ramires.
D. Marguerite Queene of Naples.

D. Vrraca, base daughter to D. Alfonso, 8 king of Leon and Castille, his second wife, mother to

D. Sancho, Vicountesse of Bearn, and then wife to D. Pedro de Molina, of which second marriage came Americ Vicont of Naboma, for D. Pedro his father was sonne to Ermiscinda Vicountesse of Naboma.

XX.

D. Sancho, 7 of that name, called the wife, sonne to D. Garcia Ramires, in the yere 1150: he reigned 46 yeres.

D. Beacia or Beatrix, or as some say D. Sancho, daughter to D. Alfonso Raymond, king of Castille and Leon, his wife, by whom he had Children: D. Sancho King of Nauarre.

D. Ferdinand.
D. Ramir Bishop of Pampelone.
D. Berenguela Queene of England.
D. Theresa, or Constance.
D. Blanche Countesse of Champagne and Brie.

XXI.

D. Sancho, 8 of that name, called the strong, sonne to Sancho 7, in the yere 1194: he reigned 40 yeres.

D. Clemence, daughter to Raymond, 4 Earle of Tolouza, his wife D. Ferdinand, who died before the father.

Of a Concubine whose name is vnknowne, this king had William a bastard.

By the death of the king, the Crowne of Nauarre past into the house of Champagne, D. Blanche his sister, wife to Count Thibaud, remayning sole of the race, hauing issue.

XXII.

D. Thibaud, 1 of that name, sonne to D. Blanche of Nauarre, succeeded his vnclie D. Sancho 8, in the yere 1234, and reigned 19 yeres.

His first wife was of Metz.

The 2, was daughter to Guichard Earle of Beaufieu, and had

D. Blanche Duchesse of Britaine.
The third wife, was daughter to Archambaud, Earle of Foix, named Marguerite mother to Children: D. Thibaud.

D. Henry.
D. Leonora.
D. Pedro.

D. Thibaud,

XXIII.

D. Thibaud, second of that name, sonne to the first, in the yere 1253: he reigned 18 yeres.

D. Isabell of France, daughter to S. Lewis, by whom he had not any children.

D. Marquise Lope de Rada a Concubine, brought him

D. Marquise a bastard, who was wife to Pedro Fernandes of Ixar, base sonne to D. James the first, King of Arragon.

XXIIIIL.

D. Henry, brother to Thibaud the second, in the yere 1271: he reigned three yeres, the first of that name.

D. Ioane, daughter to Robert Earle of Artois.

D. Thibaud, died an infant.

Children: D. Ioane Queene.

By a Concubine of the house of Lachrya, he had

D. Henry, bastard, Marshall of Nauarre.

XXV.

D. Ioane, sole daughter to D. Henry the first, married to Philip the faire, king of France, and reigned in Nauarre, in the yere 1274, the space of 31 yeres: of which mariage issued Children: D. Lewis Hain.

D. Philip the long.
D. Charles the faire.
D. Ioane.
D. Isabell Queene of England.

XXVI.

D. Lewis Hain, King of France and Nauarre, first of that name, in the yere 1305: he reigned 10 yeres in Nauarre.

D. Marguerite daughter to Robert of Burgundie.

D. Ioane of Nauarre.

His second wife was Clemence, daughter to the King of Hungarie.

D. John an after-birth, who liued but eight dayes.

XXVII.

D. Philip the long, king of France and Nauarre, second of that name, in the yere 1315: he reigned five yeres.

D. Ioane daughter to Othelin Earle of Burgundie.

Children: D. Ioane Duchesse of Burgundie.
D. Marguerite Countesse of Nemours.
D. Marie, wife to the Daulphin Humbert.
D. Blanche, a religious woman.

XXVIII.

D. Charles the faire, first of that name, king of Nauarre and France, in the yere 1328: he reigned about eight yeres.

D. Blanche, daughter to Othelin Earle of Burgundie, his first wife.

D. Marie of Luxembourg his second wife, mother to

D. Blanche Duchesse of Orleans.

A sonne, which died in his infancie.

D. Ioane, daughter to Lewis Earle of Euxux, by whom (some say) D. Blanche, was borne.

XXIX.

D. Ioane, daughter to King Lewis Hain, heire of Nauarre, in the yere 1328: she reigned with her husband 21 yeres.

D. Philip

D. PHILIP Earle of Eureux, husband to D. Joane, the third of that name, among the kings of Nauarre: of which marriage descended

Children {
 D. Charles king.
 D. Philip Earle of Longueville.
 D. Lewis Earle of Beaumont. This D. Lewis married the heire of the house of Beaumont le Roger in Normandie, and were the stemme of the Earles of Lerin.
 D. Joane Countesse of Rohan.
 D. Marie Queene of Arragon.
 D. Blanche Queene of France.
 D. Agnes Countesse of Foix.

XXX

D. CHARLES second of that name, sonne to D. Philip the third, in the yere 1349: he raigned in Nauarre 37 yeares, and was surnamed the bad.

D. IOANE of France, daughter to king John, his wife: of which marriage descended these following.

Lawfull children {
 D. Charles King.
 D. Philip died yong.
 D. Pedro Earle of Mortaign, from whom descended D. Pedro of Peralta, Constable of Nauarre, the stemme of the Marquesse of Falses.
 D. Blanche.
 D. Joane, Duchesse of Britaine, and Queene of England.
 D. Marie Countesse of Denia: it is doubtfull whether she were daughter to this Queene.
 D. Leon or Lionell a bastard, the beginning of the Marquesse of Cortes, Marshals of Nauarre.

XXXI.

D. CHARLES third of that name, sonne to Charles the second, in the yere 1386: he raigned 39 yeares.

D. LEONORA of Castille his wife.

Children {
 D. Joane Countesse of Foix.
 D. Marie.
 D. Blanche Queene of Sicile and Nauarre.
 D. Beatrix Countesse of Marche.
 D. Isabell.
 D. Charles.
 D. Lewis.

By a Concubine whose name is unknowne.

Bastards {
 D. Godfrey Earle of Cortes.
 D. Joane married to D. Inigo d'Ortiz of Bluniga.

XXXII.

D. BLANCHE, daughter to D. Charles the third, had to her second husband D. John of Arragon, and began to raigne in the yere 1425, and lasted 17 yeares: then after her decease D. JOHN, who was king of Arragon and Sicile, continued his raigne vnto the yere 1479, who had by D. Blanche

Children {
 D. Charles.
 D. Blanche Queene of Castille.
 D. Leonora, Countesse of Foix, and afterwards Queene of Nauarre.

This King John had a second wife, and other issue which is set downe in the Line of Arragon.

XXXIII.

D. LEONORA, Countesse of Foix, wife to D. John the fourth, came to the Crowne of Nauarre, suruiuing her brother and sister, in the yere 1479, and died the same yere.

D. GASTON,

D. GASTON Earle of Foix, called Prince of Viana, husband to D. Leonora, by whom he had

Children {
 D. Gaston, of whom and of Mar- Francis and guerite of France descended Katherine.
 D. John, Vicount of Narbona.
 D. Pedro, Cardinall.
 D. James.
 D. Marie, Marquesse of Montferrat.
 D. Joane, Countesse of Armaignac.
 D. Marguerite, Duchesse of Britanie.
 D. Katherine, Countesse of Candalle.
 D. Leonora died a maid.

XXXIII.

D. FRANCIS, sonne to Gaston, surnamed Phebus, and grandchild to D. Leonora, his father being dead before her decease, he succeeded her in the realme of Nauarre, in the yere 1479, and raigned foure yeares: he died without any children.

XXXV.

D. KATHERINE, sister to Francis Phebus, raigned after her brother in the yere 1483: she married with

D. JOHN of Albret: of which marriage issued

Children {
 D. John.
 D. Andrew.
 D. Henry king of Nauarre.
 D. Charles, or rather Francis, who died at Naples in Monsieur de Lautrecs voyage.
 D. Katherine.
 D. Anne.
 D. Quiterie.
 D. Magdelaine.
 D. Isabell.
 And five other children which died young.

During the time and raigne of these Kings, D. John of Albret and D. Katherine, D. Ferdinand and D. Isabella his wife, kings of Castille and Arragon, seized on the realme of Nauarre beyond the Pyrenees, and joyned it to Castille.

XXXVI.

HENRY, the second, of Albret, successor to the rights of Nauarre, second of that name, in the yere 1517.

MARGUERITE of France, sister to king Francis the first, his wife.

Joane, whom Bertrand Helie calls Charlotte.

XXXVII.

IOANE, daughter to Henry the second, succeeded in her fathers rights, married to ANTHONIE, Duke of Vendosme, of the noble house of Bourbon.

Henry.
 Katherine.

XXXVIII.

HENRY the third of that name in Nauarre, and the fourth in France, in the yere 1572, and raigned 38 yeares.

MARGUERITE of Valois, from whom he was diuorced, hauing no children.

MARIE de Medicis, daughter to the duke of Florence, his second wife, by whom he had Lewis, with diuers other children.

XXXIX.

LEWIS now rainging, the second of that name in Nauarre, and the thirteenth in France: he succeeded to his fathers rights in the yere 1610.

Line

Line of Arragon.

I.

There is mention made about the yeare 775, of Aznar the sonne of Aznar, and grand-child to Eude, Duke of Aquitaine, who had two sonnes.
Galinde and Ximenes Garcet.

II.

D. Galinde obtained some lands of the Soueraignie of Nauarre, and had his dwelling and seat at Iaca: This was the beginning of Arragon.
D. Theuda, who was Queene of Nauarre.
D. Ximen Aznates.
D. Endregot.

III.

D. Ximen Aznates, sonne to D. Galinde, the third Earle of Arragon.

IIII.

D. Ximen Garcet, brother to D. Galinde, fourth Earle of Arragon, in the yeare 803.
D. Garcia Aznates his sonne.

V.

D. Garcia Aznates, sonne to D. Ximen Garcet, fift Earle of Arragon.
D. Fortun Ximenes his sonne.

VI.

D. Fortun Ximenes, sixt Earle of Arragon.
D. Vrraca, as some say daughter to this D. Fortun, and others to Endregot about named, vnited the Earledome of Arragon to the Crowne of Nauarre, bringing it in dowrie to the King D. Garcia Inigo, second of that name.

VII.

D. Garcia Inigo king of Nauarre, and seuenth Earle of Arragon, in the yeare 867.
D. Vrraca about named, his wife.
D. Fortun their eldest sonne: the rest are named in the Line of Nauarre.

VIII.

D. Fortun king of Nauarre, second of that name, and eight Earle of Arragon, in the yeare 885.

IX.

D. Sancho Abarca king of Nauarre, and ninth Earle of Arragon, brother to D. Fortun, in the yeare 901.

X.

D. Garci Sanchez, sonne to D. Sancho Abarca, king of Nauarre, and tenth Earle of Arragon, in the yeare 920.

XI.

D. Sancho Garcet, sonne to D. Garci Sanchez, eleuenth Earle of Arragon reigning in Nauarre, in the yeare 969.

XII.

D. Garcia the Shaking, sonne to D. Sancho Garcet, king of Nauarre, and twelfth Earle of Arragon, in the yeare 993.

XIII.

D. Sancho the Great, sonne to D. Garcia the Shaking, thirteenth Earle of Arragon, in the yeare 1000. This king of Nauarre erected the Countie of Arragon to a Realme, and gaue it to his baird sonne D. Ramir, as appears by the discourse by the Historie.

First

First King of Arragon.

D. RAMIR, first of that name, sonne to D. Sancho the great, king of Nauarre, was the first king of Arragon, in the yeare 1034: and raigned 42 yeares.

D. ERMISSENDE, daughter to the Earle of Bigorre, by some named Guberge, his wife.

Children
D. Sancho Ramires.
D. Garcia Bishop of Iaca.
D. Sancha Countesse of Tolousa.
D. Theresa Countesse of Prouence.

He had by a concubine

D. Sancha Lord of Ayuar, Atares, and Xauierre.

II.

D. SANCHE RAMIRES, king of Arragon, in the yeare 1076: he raigned 18 yeares, and vsurped the realme of Nauarre.

D. FALICA daughter to the earle of Virgel, his wife.

Children
D. Pedro king.
D. Alphonso a king.
D. Ramir a Monke, and then a king.

By a concubine, whose name is not extant,

D. Garcia, Bishop of Iacca.

III.

D. PEDRO, first of that name, sonne to D. Sancho Ramires, in the yeare 1094: he raigned 14 yeares.

D. BERTHE, or IGNES, his wife, an Italian.

Children
D. Pedro 2.
D. Isabell } They died both before the father.

IIII.

D. ALPHONSO first of that name, brother to D. Pedro, in the yeare 1108, and raigned 26 yeares: he married D. Vrraca the heire of Castille, and died without children: after him Nauarre was seperated from Arragon.

V.

D. RAMIR a Monke, sonne to D. Sancho Ramires, and brother to the last kings, was king of Arragon, in the yeare 1134, by election of the Estates: his raigne was vncertaine: for hauing for the most part led a Monkish life, he gaue ouer the gouernment of the realme vnto his sonne in law, D. Raymond Berenger Earle of Barcelona.

D. AGNES sister, or daughter, as some hold, to William Earle of Poitiers, his wife, mother to

D. Petronilla, heire of Arragon.

D. Petronilla, daughter to D. Ramir, did not raigne, as some hold, but her sonne D. Raymond, whom she had by the Earle of Barcelona.

D. Raymond Berenger, who gouerned the realme in qualitie of a Regent, and was called Prince of Arragon, who had by his wife Petronilla, among other children which are named in the line of Cattelogne, this sonne

D. Raymond, who changed his name, and was called Alphonso.

VI.

D. ALPHONSO, second of that name, called before Raymond, sonne to the Earle D. Raymond Berenger, and of the Princess D. Petronilla, in the yeare 1162: he raigned 34 yeares.

D. SANCHA, daughter to D. Alphonso Raymond, king of Castille and Leon, and of D. Rica, she was mother to

D. Pedro,

Arragon.

D. Pedro king of Arragon.

Children

|   |  |
|---|--|
| D. Alfonso Earle of Prouence, who had to wifeD. Maria de Folcaquier, whence descendedD. Raymond Berenger who was married to Beatrix daughter to Thomas Earle of Morienne, who had | Marguerite queene of France.Leonora Queene of England.Sancha Queene of England & Empreffe.Beatrice Queene of Naples.Joane, who had the countie of Provence, as the Arragonois say. |
|---|--|

D. Ferdinand a Monke.
D. Constance Queene of Hungarie and then Empreffe.
D. Leonora Countesse of Toloufa.
D. Sancha Countesse also of Toloufa.
D. Douce a Nunne.

VII.

D. Pedro 2 of that name, sonne to D. Alfonso the 2, in the yeare 1196: he raigned about 18 yeares.

His first wife was of the house of Folcaquier, by whom he had

D. Raymond Berenger.

D. Marie daughter to the Earle of Mompellier, who had beene married to the Earle of Cominges: by this second wife he had

D. James king.

By a Concubine not named

D. Constance married to William Raymond of Moncado, Seneschall of Cartelogne.

VIII.

D. James first of that name, sonne to the king D. Pedro the first, in the yeare 1213: hec raigned 43 yeares.

D. Leonora of Castille, daughter to king D. Alfonso the 9, by whom he had

D. Alfonso, who dyed before the father.

D. Violant daughter to the king of Hungarie his second wife, mother to

D. Pedro king of Arragon.

|          |   |  |
|----------|---|--|
| Children | D. James king of Maiorca, who married Esclermond of Foix, who brought him   | D. James a Monke.D. Sancho king of Maiorca.D. Ferdinand.D. Philip.D. Sancha. |
|          | D. Sancho Archbishop of Toledo.D. Isabel Queene of France.D. Ferdinand.D. Violant Queene of Castille.D. Constance wife to D. Manuel.D. Sancha.D. Maria. |  |

Of D. Ferdinand 3. sonne to D. James of Maiorca, and of Isabel heire of Morea, issued

D. James king of Maiorca.

D. Frederic.

And of his 2. wife of Cyprus

D. Ferdinand.

D. James sonne to D. Ferdinand had by Constance of Arragon

D. Isabel Marquesse of Montserrat.

D. James heire of Maiorca.

King James had also by D. Theresa Gil de Bridauwe, whom hee had married secretly,

D.

Arragon.

D. Pedro, Lord of Ayerbes.

D. James, Lord of Xerica.

D. Berenguela, a concubine.

D. Pedro Fernandes, Lord of Ixar.

Of the daughter of D. Sancha d. Anelles, a concubine,

D. Ferdinand Sanches.

IX.

D. Pedro, third of that name, son to D. James 1, in the yere 1276: he raigned 9 yeres.

D. CONSTANCE, daughter to Manfred, bastard to the Emperour Frederic 2 his wife, mother to

|          |  |
|----------|--|
| Children | D. Alphonso, King of Arragon.D. James, King of Sicile, and then of Arragon.D. Frederic, King of Sicile.D. Pedro.D. Isabel, Queene of Portugall.D. Constance or Violant, queen of Naples. |
|          | D. Maria Nicolosa, a concubine, brought himD. James Perex.D. Anne Zapate, a concubine, mother toD. Ferdinand.By another concubine not named,D. Sancho.                                   |

X.

D. ALPHONSO, third of that name, sonne to D. Pedro, in the yeare 1285: he raigned six yeares, and died without children.

XI.

D. JAMES, second of that name, brother to D. Alphonso, in the yeare 1291: he raigned 36 yeares.

BLANCHE, daughter to Charles King of Naples, called the Lame, his wife, mother to

|          |  |
|----------|--|
| Children | D. James, who became a Monke.D. Alphonso.D. Pedro, Earle of Ampurias.D. Raymond Berenger, Earle of Prages.D. John, Archbishop of Toledo.D. Constance, wife to D. John Manuel.D. Maria, wife to D. Pedro of Castille.D. Blanche, a Nunne.D. Violant, Princess of Tarentum.D. Isabel, wife to the Emperour Frederic the third. |
|          | This King had first of all married D. Isabel, daughter to D. Sancho King of Castille, but the Pope dissolved this mariage.D. MARIA of Cypres was his third wifeD. ECLISENDE, sister to Othon of Moncado, his fourth wife.By a concubine, not named,D. James of Arragon, Earle of Luna.   |

XII.

D. ALPHONSO fourth, sonne to D. James 2, in the yere 1328, and raigned 8 yeres.

D. THERESA ENTENZA, Countesse, heire of Vrgel, his wife.

|          |  |
|----------|--|
| Children | D. Pedro, King.D. James, Earle of Vrgel.D. Constance, Queene of Majorca.Some write hee had fute other children which died. |
|          | D. LEONORA of Castille, his second wife, mother toD. Ferdinand, Marquesse of Tortosa.D. John.                                  |

Iiiii

D. PEDRO,

XIII.

D. PEDRO, 4 of that name, son to D. Alphonso 3, in the yere 1236: he reigned 51 yeres.
D. MARIA, second daughter to Philip 3, King of Nauarre, his wife.

Children {
D. Constance, Queene of Sicile.
D. Ioane, Countesse of Ampurias.
D. Maria.

A sonne which dyed young.

D. LEONORA, or ELVIRA of Portugall, his second wife.
D. CONSTANCE, of LEONORA of Sicile, sister to King Lewis, his 3 wife, mother to

Children {
D. John, King.
D. Alphonso.
D. Martin, who was King.
D. Leonora, Queene of Castille.

D. SIBILLE FORTIA, widow to Artol de Foset, his 4 wife, by whom he had
D. Isabel, Countesse of Virgel.

XIII.

D. JOHN, 1 of that name, son to D. Pedro 4, in the yere 1387, and reigned 8 yeres.
D. MATTHEA, daughter to the Earle of Armagnac.

D. James, who dyed.

D. Ioane, wife to Mathew of Castelbon, Earle of Foix.

D. VIOLANT, second wife to D. John, mother to

Children {
D. Violant, wife to Lewis { of Anjou, mother to {
One sonne, who dyed young. { Charles, Earle of Mayne.

XV.

D. MARTIN, brother to D. John deceased, for want of heires male by him, succeeded by election of the Estates, and by will, to the realme of Arragon, to the prejudice of D. Ioane, Countesse of Foix, and against her matrimoniall conuentions, and the promises made by her father and grandfather to Mathew of Castelbon, her husband.

D. MARIA de Luna was his first wife, before he came to the Crowne, by whom he had
D. Martin, who was King of Sicile, and dyed before his father, without any children.

D. MARGVERITE de Prades, his 2 wife, by whom he left no issue.

XVII.

D. FERDINAND, 1st of that name, brother to Henrie 3, King of Castille: hee obtained the realme of Arragon by election of the Estates, all other pretendants being rejected, in the yere 1412, and reigned about foure yeres.

D. LEONORA d'Albuquerque, a Princess of the blood of Castille, his wife, mother to

Children {
D. Alphonso, King of Arragon.
D. John, King of Nauarre and Arragon.
D. Henrie, Master of S. James in Castille.
D. Sancho, Master of Alcantara.
D. Pedro.
D. Maria, Queene of Castille.
D. Leonora, Queene of Portugall.

XVIII.

D. ALPHONSO, 5 of that name, sonne to D. Ferdinand, in the yere 1416: he reigned 42 yeres.

D. MARIE of Castille, his wife, but without children.

By

By concubines not named, he had

D. Ferdinand King of Naples.
D. Maria Marquesse of Ferrara.
D. Leonora Princess of Rossano.

XVIII.

D. JOHN second of that name, brother to king Alphonso 5th, for want of lawfull heires, succeeded to the Realme of Arragon, in the yere 1458: and reigned one and twentie yeres and sixe moneths.

D. BLANCHE of Nauarre his first wife, in whose right he was king of Nauarre, and had by her three children

{
D. Charles, who died before his father, and had these base children,
D. Blanche Queene of Castille.
D. Leonora Queene of Nauarre.

D. Ioane daughter to D. Frederic Henriques Admirall of Castille, his second wife, mother to

{
D. Ferdinand king of Arragon, Castille, Nauarre, &c.
D. Ioane Queene of Naples.

By concubines whose names are vnkowne,

Bastards {
D. Alphonso Earle of Vilhermosa.
D. John Archbishop of Saragosse.
D. Leonora Countesse of Lerin.
D. Ferdinand.
D. Maria.

XIX.

D. FERDINAND second of that name, sonne to king John, in the yere 1479: he reigned 37 yeres in Arragon.

D. ISABEL Queene of Castille his wife, by whom the realmes of Arragon and Castille were vnited.

D. Ioane mother to the Emperour Charles the 5th.

The other children of D. Ferdinand and D. Isabel, are mentioned in the Line of Castille.

D. GERMAINE second wife to king Ferdinand.

D. John, who died an infant.

The Vicountesse of Eboli a concubine, mother to

D. Alfonso of Arragon Arch-bishop of Saragosse.

Of another concubine

D. Ioane of Arragon wife to D. Bernardin de Velaasco, Constable.

Of D. Tota of Bilbao, a concubine

D. Maria of Arragon a Nun.

By a Portugall of the family of Pereira.

D. Maria of Arragon a Nun.

Line of Cattelogne.

BERNARD, Earle, Duke and Marques of Spaine vnder Charles the great, confirmed by Lewis the gentle, gouerned Cattelogne about the yere 795.

D. GEOFFREY d'Arria Earle of Barcelona, vnder the French, in the yere 839.

D. ALMIRA his wife, a French woman, mother to

D. Geoffrey the hairie.

D. SALOMON Earle of Cerdagne, an vsurper, in the yere 878.

liiii j

First

First proprietarie Earle.

D. GEOFFREY the haire obtained Cattelogne in proprietie, vnder the Soueraigntie of France, in the yere 884, of Charles the Grosse.

D. N. a Fleming, his wife.

Children { D. Rodolphus, Abbot of Ripos, and Bishop of Vrgel.
D. Geoffrey.
D. Myr.
D. Seniofrid, Earle of Vrgel, { D. Borel, Earle &c. who was father to { D. Armingol, Bishop of Vrgel.
One daughter.

II.

D. Myr, sonne to D. Geoffrey, in the yere 914: he held the Countie 15 yeres: his sonnes were Children { D. Seniofrid, Earle.

D. Oliban, called Cheurette, earle of Cerdagne & Besalu, father to
D. Myr, Earle and Bishop of Gironne.
Bernard, called Breake-yrone, father to
D. Geoffrey, earle of Cerdagne, who had siue sonnes.
D. Oliban, Bishop of Vic, of Ossone.
William the fat, earle of Besalu, father to Bernard Guillel, also Earle of Besalu.
Raymond Gefroy, earle of Cerdagne, father to D. Geoffrey Guinard, Arch-bishop of Narbone.
D. Berenger Geoffrey, Bishop of Gironne.
D. William Geoffrey, Bishop of Vrgel.
D. Geoffrey, Earle of Bergade.
William Raymond, earle of Cerdagne, father to
D. William Jourdainne, Earle of Cerdagne.
D. Bernard.
D. William.

III.

D. SENIOFRID, sonne to D. Myr in the yere 919: he ruled vnder the gouernment of his wile the Earle of Vrgel, and alone, about 38 yeres.

D. MARIA, Infanta of Nauarre, daughter to the King D. Sancho Abarca, his wife, by whom he had not any children.

IIII.

D. BOREL, sonne to D. Seniofrid, Earle of Vrgel, succeeded his cousin D. Seniofrid in the Countie of Barcelona, by right of intrusion: yet some pretend an insufficiencie in D. Oliban, brother to the deceased, in the yere 967.

D. LAODEGARDE, his first wife, mother to

D. Raymond Borel.

D. ARMERUDE, or as some write, Engelrade his second wife.

{ D. Ermengauld, Earle of Vrgel.

Children { D. Borella, a Nunne.

V.

D. RAYMOND BOREL, sonne to the Earle D. Borel, in the yere 993, and held the Earldome 24 yeres.

D. SANCHIA his wife, mother to

D. Berenger Borel.

VI.

D. BERENGER BOREL, sonne to D. Raymond, in the yere 1017: he ruled 18 yeres.

The name of his wife is vncertaine.

{ D. Raymond Berenger.

Children { D. William Berenger.

{ D. Sancho Berenger, a Priest.

D. RAY-

VII.

D. RAYMOND BERENGER, sonne to D. Berenger Borel, in the yere 1035: he ruled 41 yeres.

D. RADALMVS his first wife.

D. Pedro Raymond.

D. Berenger Raymond.

D. ALMODIA, a French Ladie, descended from those Lords which ruled then in Languedoc, by whom the house of Barcelona got the rights it hath had to Carcaffone, and other lands in that countrey: by her D. Raymond had { D. Raymond Berenger, Earle.

{ D. Lucia, Countesse of Paliars by her marriage with the Earle of Arsal.

VIII.

D. RAYMOND BERENGER the Young, and third of that name, sonne to D. Raymond Berenger 2, in the yere 1076: he held the Earldome of Barcelona six yeres.

D. ALMODIA, daughter to Robert Guichard, Duke of Ponglia, his wife, mother to

D. Raymond Arnould.

IX.

D. RAYMOND ARNOULD, sonne to D. Raymond Berenger, and 4 of that name, in the yere 1082: he ruled 48 yeres.

D. DOVLCE, Countesse of Prouence, daughter to Cont Gilbert, or Gibert, his wife, mother to { D. Berenguela, Queene of Castille.

{ D. Raymond Berenger, Prince of Arragon.

{ D. Berenger Raymond, Earle of Prouence.

{ One daughter, married to Ameri, Vicont of Narbone.

{ Another daughter, married to Cont Roger, some call him Bernard de Faux.

X.

D. RAYMOND BERENGER, fift of that name, sonne to D. Raymond Arnould, in the yere 1131: he ruled 31 yeres.

D. PETRONELLA, daughter to the king D. Ramir the Monke: by which marriage the realme of Arragon and the Earldome of Cattelogne, or Barcelona, were vniued, they had

{ D. Raymond, who was afterwards called Alphonso, king of Arragon.

{ D. Pedro.

Children { D. Sancho.

{ D. Adoncia, Queene of Portugall.

{ One daughter, married to the Earle of Vrgel.

D. RAYMOND, afterwards Alphonso, sonne to D. Raymond Berenger the fift, king of Arragon, and Earle of Barcelona, in the yere 1162: his posteritie is in the line of Arragon.

Line of Portugall.

HENRIE of Befanson, or of Lorrain, was first Earle of Portugall, about the yere 1090, by his marriage with D. THERESA, daughter to D. Alphonso the sixt, king of Leon and Castille, to whom that countrey was given in dowrie: Their children were { D. Alphonso Henriques, King.

{ D. Theresa Henriques.

{ Another daughter, married to D. Ferdinand Mendes.

First King of Portugall.

D. ALPHONSO HENRIQUES succeeding his father in the Earldome of Portugall in the yere 1112, tooke vpon him the title of King about the yere 1139, and held that country 72 yeres.

D. MAFADA MANRIQUE de Lara, his wife.

Children { D. Sancho, King of Portugall.
D. Vrraca, Queene of Leon.
D. Theresa, Countesse of Flanders.
D. Malfada.

Bastard D. Pedro Alphonso.

II.

D. SANCHE, first of that name, sonne to D. Alphonso, in the yeare 1184: hee raigned 28 yeares.

D. ALONCIA, or DAVICE, daughter to D. Raymond Berenger, Earle of Barcelone, mother to Children { D. Alphonso, King.

D. Ferdinand, Earle of Flanders.
D. Pedro, Earle of Virgel in Arragon.
D. Henrique.

D. Theresa, wife to D. Alphonso of Leon.
D. Malfada, Queene of Castille.
D. Sancho, a Nunne.

D. Blanche.
D. Berenguela.

By D. Maria Aires, a concubine, he had Bastards { D. Vrraca.

D. Martin of Portugall.

By D. Maria Peres of Ribera, another concubine,

D. Theresa Sanches.

Bastards { D. Gil Sanches of Portugall.
D. Constance Sanches.

D. Ray Sanches of Portugall.

III.

D. ALPHONSO, second of that name, son to the King of D. Sancho, in the yeare 1212: hee raigned 11 yeares.

Children { D. Sancho.
D. Alphonso.
D. Ferdinand.
D. Leonora, Queene of Denmarke.

By a concubine, a Moore,

D. Alphonso Martines.

IIII.

D. SANCHE, called Capello, second of that name, sonne to D. Alphonso the second, in the yeare 1223: hee raigned in troubles vnto the yeare 1257: for then by reason of his incapacie, D. Alphonso, his brother, was called to the gouernement of Portugall.

D. MENCIA LOPES, his wife, by whom he had no children.

V.

D. ALPHONSO, third of that name, brother to D. Sancho, of a Regent and Gouernor he made himselfe king of Portugall, about the yeare 1257, and raigned two and twentie yeares.

MAHAYLT, OF MATILDE, Countesse of Boullen, his lawfull wife, mother to

D. Ferdinand, or Peter.

D. Robert.

This king D. Alphonso, to be supported in his designes to raigne by the fauour of Castille, his lawfull wife Mahault Countesse of Boullen, and married, in her life time, with the daughter of D. Alphonso, called the Wife, king of Castille.

D. BEATRIX

D. BEATRIX, a bastard, his wife, by whom he had

D. Denis, king.
D. Alphonso.
D. Blanche, a nun.
D. Constance.

By a concubine, or by diuers, he had

D. Leonora.
D. Ferdinand Alphonso of Portugall.

VI.

D. DENIS, sonne to D. Alphonso the third, in the yeare 1279: hee raigned 46 yeares.

D. ISABEL of Arragon, daughter to the king D. Pedro, his wife, mother to Children { D. Constance, Queene of Castille.

D. Alphonso, king of Portugall.
D. Pedro, Earle of Portalegre.
D. Alphonso Sanches, a bastard.

Some write, that the lawfull children of D. Denis and D. Isabel, were,

Isabel.
Constance.
Alphonso.

By concubines,

Bastards { D. Alphonso, author of the familie of Albuquerque.
D. Peter, who gaue himselfe vnto learning, and made a booke of the great houses of Spaine.
D. John.
D. Ferdinand.
A daughter married to D. John de la Cerde.
Another daughter, a Nunne.

VII.

D. ALPHONSO the fourth, sonne to D. Denis, in the yeare 1325: hee raigned thirtie two yeares.

D. BEATRIX of Castille, his wife, mother to

D. Pedro, King.
D. Maria.
D. Alphonso.
D. Denis.
D. John.
D. Leonora, or Fluira, Queene of Arragon.

VIII.

D. PEDRO, I of that name, son to D. Alphonso 4, in the yeare 1357: hee raigned 10 yeares.

D. BLANCHE, daughter to D. Pedro king of Castille, whom he put away, and then married

D. CONSTANCE, daughter to D. John Manuel, mother to

D. Lewis, who died an infant.
D. Ferdinand, King.
D. Marie, wife to D. Ferdinand of Arragon.
D. Beatrix died young.

By AGNES de Castro, a clandestine marriage,

D. Alphonso.
D. John.
D. Denis.
D. Beatrix, Countesse of Albuquerque.

D. Theresa Gallega, a concubine.

D. John, who was King.

IIIIII IIII

D. FERDINAND

IX.

D. FERDINAND, sonne to D. Pedro, in the yere 1367: he raigned feuteene yeres.
 D. LEONORA TELLES de Meufes, his wife.
 D. Beatrix, queene of Castille.
 By a concubine he had Isabella Countesse of Gijon.

X.

D. JOHN first of that name, base sonne to the king D. Pedro: he got the realme by his sword, and also by election, in the yere 1385, from D. John king of Castille and D. Beatrix his wife. He was before master of Auiz. He raigned 49 yeres.
 D. PHILIP of Lancaster, an English woman, his wife, mother to
 D. Blanche.
 D. Alphonso.
 D. Edward king.
 D. Pedro duke of Coimbra, who married D. Isabel of Arragon, and had
 D. Henrie duke of Viseo.
 D. Isabel duchesse of Bourgondie.
 D. John Master of Saint James, father to D. Isabel, who was queene of Castille.
 D. Ferdinand Master of Auiz.
 Besides these lawfull children, the king D. John had by D. Agnes a concubine, D. Beatrix Countesse of Arundel.
 D. Alphonso Earle of Oren and Barcellos, and duke of Bragance.

XI.

D. EDUARD sonne to D. John the first, in the yere 1433: he raigned fve yeres.
 D. LEONORA of Arragon, daughter to D. Ferdinand the first, his wife, mother to Children {
 D. Alphonso king.
 D. Ferdinand Duke of Viseo, who married D. Beatrix, daughter to his vncle D. John Master of S. James, and had
 D. Philip a daughter.
 D. Leonora, wife to the Emperour Frederic the third.
 D. Katherine.
 D. Joane queene of Castille.

XII.

D. ALPHONSO sif of that name, sonne to D. Edward in the yere 1438, and raigned 43 yeres.
 D. ISABEL, daughter to his vncle D. Pedro Duke of Coimbra, his wife, mother to
 D. John, who died young.
 D. Joane.
 D. John king, whom some call Ferdinand, and make him father to John which raigned, and adde a third sonne, D. Henrie.

XIII.

D. JOHN, second of that name, son to D. Alphonso the sif, in the yere 1481: he raigned foureteene yeres.
 D. LEONORA, daughter to D. Ferdinand Duke of Viseo, mother to
 D. Alphonso, who died before his father.
 By D. Anna de Mendoza, a concubine, D. George, Master of S. James and Auiz.

D. EMANUEL

XIII.

D. EMANUEL Sonne to D. Ferdinand duke of Viseo, by right, and also by the nomination of king John, was king of Portugal, in the yere 1495, and raigned 26 yeres: he married first:

D. ISABELL, eldest Daughter to D. Ferdinand and D. Isabell Kings of Castille and Arragon, mother to

D. Michel who liued little.

D. MARIA, Sister to the said D. Isabell his second wife, by whome hee had

D. John king.

D. Isabell Queene of Castille, and Emperesse.

D. Beatrix Duchesse of Sauoy.

D. Lewis, father to D. Anthony the Bastard chosen king after Cardinall Henry his Vncle.

D. Henry Cardinall.

D. Alfonso Cardinall.

D. Catherine.

D. Ferdinand.

D. Edward husband to Isabell, daughter to John or Jaime, duke of Bragance, & had { Marie duchesse of Parma.
 Catherine duchesse of Bragance, wife to John second sonne to Theodosius.
 Edward an after birth died in the yere 1576.

D. Anthony, he died soone after he was borne.

D. LEONORA, sister to the Emperour Charles the sif, mother to { D. Charles, he died an Infant.

{ D. Marie, who being 56 yeres old, died at Lisbone in the yere 1578.

XV.

D. JOHN, 3 of that name, Sonne to D. Emanuel king of Portugal in the yere 1521: he raigned thirty and fixe yeres.

D. CATHERINE, sister to the Emperour Charles, his wife, mother to

D. Alfonso.

D. Marie Princeesse of Castille.

D. Catherine.

D. Beatrix.

D. Emanuel.

D. Philip.

D. John Prince, father to D. Sebastian, & husband to D. Joane, daughter to the Emperour Charles.

D. Anthonie.

XXI.

D. SEBASTIAN Sonne to the Prince D. John, in the yere 1557, hee raigned one and twentie yeres, and died in Afrike, leauing no heires.

XVII.

D. HENRY, Cardinall, Archbishop of Epora, sonne to the King D. Emanuel, in the yere 1578, he raigned about a yere and a halfe.

XVIII.

D. PHILIP 2. king of Castille vnited the Realme of Portugall to Castille by force, after the Cardinals death, in the yere one thousand fve hundred and eighty, and held it eightene yeres.

XIX.

D. PHILIP the third doth now hold this Realme.

Archbishops

Archbishops of Toledo.

|  |                      |                                      |
|--|----------------------|--------------------------------------|
| Eugenius , first Archbi-shop. | Campeius .    | Iustus .                      |
| Pelagius .                        | Cintuacinus . | Eugenius 2.                   |
| Patruuius .                       | Patron .      | Eugenius 3.                   |
| Turibio .                         | Paramacius .  | Illefontus .                  |
| Quince .                          | Peter 1.      | Quiricius .                   |
| Vincent .                         | Celsus .      | Julian 2.                     |
| Paulacius or Paulat .      | Montanus .    | Sesebert or Sicarius . |
| Natalis .                         | Julian 1.     | S. Felix .                    |
| Andens .                          | Bacchand .    | Gunderic or Guttiere . |
| Astur .                           | Peter 2.      | Sinderic .                    |
| Ificius .                         | Enfemius .    | Opas .                        |
| Maiozan .                         | Excipius .    | Vrbain .                      |
| Castin .                          | Adelphius .   | Peter , ? In the time of      |
| Melancius .                       | Anrasius .    | Cixilas , the Moores.         |
|  | Heladim .     |                                      |

After the Conquest of the Citie of Toledo from the Moores.

|  |   |
|--|---|
| Bernard Abbot of Sahagun.           | Blasco .                             |
| Raymond .                           | Gomez Manrique .                     |
| John 1.                             | Pedro Tenorio 4.                     |
| Celebrun .                          | Pedro de Luna 5.                     |
| Gonsal 1.                           | Sancho de Roias .                    |
| Martin .                            | John de Contreras 4.                 |
| Roderigo Ximenes .                  | John de Cerezuela 5.                 |
| John 2.                             | Guttiere Gomez de Toledo .           |
| Guttiere 2.                         | Alfonso Carrillo de Acugna .         |
| Pascal .                            | Pedro Gonsal de Mendoza , a Cardinal |
| Sancho 1.                           | Francis Ximenes a Cardinal.          |
| Sancho 2, Infant of Arragon.        | William of Croy.                     |
| Gonsal 2, Cardinal.                 | Alfonso Fonseca of Azeneda.          |
| Guttiere 3.                         | John Tavera , Cardinal.              |
| Gonsal 3.                           | John Martines Sileco , Cardinal.     |
| John 3, Infant of Arragon.          | Frier Barthelmew Carranza de Mi-     |
| Ximene de Luna .                    | randa .                              |
| Gil Carrillo d Albornos , Cardinal. |   |
| Blaise .                            |   |

76. Archbishops.

Moores.

Gouernors vnder the Miralmumins or kings of Affrike.

|   |     |                       |
|---|-----|-----------------------|
| Musa in the yeare  | 714 | Hieman .       |
| Tarif .  |     | Autuman .      |
| Abdulazis tooke the royal diademeat Seuille.                       |     | Alhatan .      |
| Ainb , who restored the ancient Bil-bilis, and called it Calataub. |     | Manes .        |
| Alabor .   |     | Mahumet .      |
| Adam .   |     | Abderrahamen . |
| Abderrahamen .   |     | Abdimelic .    |
| Iabca .  |     | Abnbacar .     |
| Adaisa Alcazazin .   |     | Redoan .       |
|   |     | Toaba .        |
|   |     | Joseph .       |

Soue-

Souveraigne kings at Cordoua ouer the other Princes Moores, in Spaine, and did no more acknowledge the Miralmumins of Affrike.

|  |           |                       |      |
|--|-----------|-----------------------|------|
| Abderrahamen 1.                     | yeare 757 | Zuleima .      | 889  |
| Hizen his sonne.                    | 787       | Mahumet 3.     | 993  |
| Haliabban , sonne to Hizen . | 794       | Hali .         | 1001 |
| Abderrahamen 2.                     | 819       | Caein .        | 1003 |
| Mahumet .                           | 839       | Higia .        | 1007 |
| Almundir .                          | 874       | Abderrahamen . | 1007 |
| Abdalla .                           | 876       | Mahumet 4.     | 1007 |
| Abderrahamen Almanzor 3.            | 889       | Hizen 3.       | 1009 |
| Hali Hatan 2.                       | 939       | Ioar .         | 1011 |
| Aizen 2.                            | 956       | Mahumet 5.     | 1014 |

After these there were great alterations and changes among the Moores in Spaine, sometimes free, sometimes vnder the kings of Maroc and Fez: in the end the realme of Granado was erected, the which continued about two hundred and fiftie yeares vnder the kings which follow.

GRANADO.

|   |      |                                      |      |
|---|------|--------------------------------------|------|
| Mahumet Aben Alhamar .                     | 1226 | Joseph his Sonne.             | 1392 |
| Mahumet Mir Almus his sonne.               | 1272 | Mahumet Aben Balua .          | 1396 |
| Mahumet Aben Alhamar Aben Azar .           | 1302 | Joseph .                      | 1407 |
| Mahumet Azar Aben Leuin .                  | 1309 | Mahumet Aben Azar .           | 1423 |
| Ismael .                                   | 2319 | Mahumet the little .          | 1427 |
| Mahumet Sonne to Ismael .           | 1322 | Joseph Aben Almas .           | 1432 |
| Joseph Aben Amet .                         | 1334 | Mahumet Aben Ozmen .          | 1445 |
| Mahumet Lagus .                            | 1354 | Ismael .                      | 1453 |
| Mahumet the Vermeil reigned two yeres, but |      | Muley Alboacen .              | 1462 |
| Mahumet whom he had expelled returned      |      | Mahumet Boabdelin the little. | 1482 |
| Mahumet Guadix .                           | 1379 | Muley Boabdelin .             | 1485 |

This king being expelled from Granado by Mahumet aboue named retained Malaga, Bafa, Almerie, Guadix, and some other places, which were taken from them by the kings D. Ferdinand and D. Isabell, some by force, some by composition, Boabdelin, remaining sole king of Granado, whereof he was dispossessed by the same kings.

The Titles and families of all the Dukes, Marquesses, and Earles of Spaine.

THe duke of Lerma and of Cea, Marquess of Denia and Villamisar, Earle of Ampudia, of the Council of state, cup-bearer, to king Philip 3. and master of his horse, commander Maior of Castille, captain general of the horse of Spain, and of the holy church of Toledo, Adelantado, or Lord President of Calabria, the head of the house of Rotas and Sandanal: he holds his estate in Castille the old, and his house in Vailledolit, and in Denia.

2 The duke of Frias, Marquess of Berlanga, earle of Haro, Lord of the house of the seven Infants of Lara, Constable of Castille, Justice Maior and high Chamberlain, he is the chiefe of the Velascos: his house is in Burgos, & his estate in Castille the old, in the mountains of Biscaye, and the hills of Soria; hee is of the Council of State and President of the Councell of Italie, he had a daughter which was married to the duke of Braganca.

3 The duke of Medina of Riosecco, Marquess of Modica, earle of Melgar, Vicont of Esterlin, Admiral of Castille, head of the Enriques: he holds his house in Vailledolit, and his estate in the Prouince of Campos, Catalonia and Sicilia.

4 The

4 The duke of Alua and Guefca, marques of Coria, Earle of Saluaticria, Vicor of Sal-dices, & lord of Valde Comeia, the chiefe of the familie of the Toledos: he holds his house in Salamanca, and his estate in Castille the old, towards Portugal, and the realm of Granada, he is Constable of Nauarre, and a knight of the order of the Golden fleece.

5 The duke of Infantado, Marques of Cenete, and Santillana, earle of Saldanes, Lord of the royaltie of Manfanares, and head of the Mendofas: he hath his house in the cite of Guadalajara, and his estate in the kingdome of Toledo, and in the mountaines of Castille the old, and in the Prouince of Alaua, he is of the Councell of State.

6 The duke of Medina Celi, Marques of Cogolludo, Earle of Port Santa Maria, chief of the familie of Los Cerdas: his house is in Medina Celi, and his estate in the Realm of Toledo, & Seuille, he is of the bloud Royall of Castille.

7 The duke of Medina Sidonia, Marques of S. Lucar of Barameda, Earle of Niebra, head of the familie of Guzmans: he holds his house in Seuille, and S. Lucar, and his estate in the country of Seuille.

8 The duke of Escalona, Marques of Moya, earle of Esteuan, hee hath his house in the cite of Toledo, and his estate in the realmes of Murcia, and in la Mancha, he is chiefe of the Pachecos, he was married vnto the sister of the duke of Bragance.

9 The duke of Osuna, Marques of Pegnaffel, earle of Vrena, head of the familie of Girones: he hath his house in Pegnaffel, and his estate in the realm of Seuille and in Castille.

10 The duke of Bejar, Marques of Gibrleon, earle of Benalcacar, head of the Zunigas, and of the familie of Soto Maior: he holds his house in Seuille, and his estate in the realme of Seuille and in Castille the old he is of the bloud royall.

11 The duke of Albuquerque, Marques of Biedma & Cuellar, earle of Ledefina, head of the familie of the Cuenas: he hath his house in Cuellar, his estate in Estremadura, and in Castille the old.

12 The duke of Alcala de los Gasules, Marques of Tarifa, earle of Hornos and Villamartin, chiefe President of Andalusia, he is of the familie of the Enriques and Riberas: hee hath his house in the cite of Seuille, and his estate in Andalusia, hee hath married with a daughter of the Marques of Castell Rodrigo, Verrey of Portugall.

13 The duke of Seta and Terranova, Earle of Cabra and Baena, head of the Cordons & of Aguilar: he holds his house in Cordoua and Granada, and his estate in the kingdome of Naples, & in the realme of Cordoua: he is of the Council of state, and chiefe steward to the Quene.

14 The duke of Najara, earle of Treuigno & Valencia, of D. John, hee is head of the familie of the Manriques de Lara: he hath his house at Najara, and his estate in the Prouince of Rioje, and in the realme of Leon.

15 The Duke of Maqueda, Marques of Elche, head of the Cardenas: hee hath his house in Toledo, and his estate in the realm of Seuille.

16 The duke of Feria, Marques of Safra, head of the familie of the Figerosas: he hath his estate in Estremadura, and his house in Safra.

17 The duke of Arcos, Marques of Lara, earle of Marchena, head of the house of Pancees: hee hath his estate in Andalusia, and house in Seuille.

18 The duke of Gandia, marques of Laiba, head of the familie of the Borjas: hee hath his estate and house in the Realm of Valencia.

19 The duke of Sogorue and Cordoua, marques of Comares, lord of Lucena, of the bloud royall of Arragon, and of la Cerde: hee hath his house in the cite of Valencia, and the Duchie of Sogorue in the realme of Valencia, and that of Cordoua, in Cattelonia, and his greatest estate in the realme of Cordoua.

20 The duke of Soma, earle of Panamos, admiral of Naples, his of the familie of the Cardonas: he hath his house at Belpuche and his estate in the Realm of Naples.

21 The duke of Villahermosa, earle of Ribagorfa, head of the house of Arragon: he hath his house at Saragoffe, and his estate in the realme of Arragon.

22 The duke of Veraguas Admirall of the Indies, of the house of Toledo: hee keeps his house in the city of Saragoffe, and his estate in the realme of Arragon.

23 The duke of Pastrana, prince of Eboli, of the familie of Silvas in Portugall: he hath his house and his estate in Pastrana.

24 The

24 The duke of Franca villa, Prince of Meliro, of the house of the Mendofas: hee hath his house in Franca villa, and his estate in the realme of Naples.

Marqueffes that be Grandes.

1 The Marques of Astorga, Earle of Castagneda, Lord of the house of Villa Lobos, head of the familie of the Ossorios: he hath his house in the cite of Astorga, and his estate in the realm of Leon, and in the prouince of Campos.

2 The Marques of Aguilar, Earle of Castagneda, of the house of the Manriques of Lara: he holds his house in Carrion and in Aguilar del Campo, and his estate in the mountains of Leon, and in the prouince of Campos.

3 The Marques of Mondejar, Earle of Tendilla, one of the house of the Mendofas: he holds his house in Mondejar, and his estate in Alcaria.

4 The Marques of Taurares, master of Montefa, of the house of Borjas: he may giue the habit of Montefa in Arragon and Valencia, and hath his estate and house in the said realmes.

5 The Marques of Pliego, Lord of the house of Aguilar, of the familie of Eigerbas: he hath his house in Cordoua, and his estate in the said realme, and in base Andalusia.

6 The Marques of Los Velaz, Adelantado or President of Mureia, of the familie of the Fairdos: he hath his estate and house in the realme of Murcia.

7 The Marques of Villa Franca, of the house of the Toledos: he keeps his house in Villa, Franca, and his estate in the realme of Leon and Naples.

8 The Marques of Santa Cruz, of the familie of the Bafanes: he hath his house in Vifo, and his estate in the realme of Toledo.

9 The Marques of Frichilla, and of Malagon, he is brother to the duke of Bragance: he hath his estate in Castille, and is of the bloud royall of Portugall, and liues in the city of Eborá, in the same realme.

Marqueffes which be not Grandes.

1 The Marques of Ayamonte, of the familie of Sumigas: he hath his estate & house in Seuille.

2 The Marques of Benefa, of the house of Anellenada.

3 The Marques of Viana, of the familie of the Pimentelles: he hath his house in Vailledolit, and his estate in Galicia.

4 The Marques of Cameraca, of Saujote, and Earle of Riscla, he was Adelantado of Casorla: he is of the house of Cobos and Mendofa.

5 The Marques of Cortes, he is of the Toledos: he hath his house in Cortes, and his estate in the realme of Nauarre.

6 The Marques of Monte-mior, of the house of Silvas.

7 The Marques of Guardia, Earle of Santa Euphemia, he is the chiefe of the familie of the Mexias: he hath his house in Salamanca, and his estate in Andalusia, and in the realme of Iden.

8 The Marques of Montes Claros, of the house of the Mendofas: he hath his house in Guadalajara, and his estate in Alcaria.

9 The Marques of Las Nauas, he is chiefe of the house of Anilas: he hath his house in the city of Auila, and his estate in the mountaines of Auila.

10 The Marques of Pofa, he is of the familie of Roxas: he hath his house in Pofa, and his estate in Castille the old.

11 The Marques of Stepa, of the house of the Centuriones at Genoua: he hath his estate and house in the realme of Seuille.

12 The Marques of Tabara, he hath his estate in Castille the old, & his house in Vailledolit.

13 The Marques of Villanova delrio, of the familie of the Enriques: he holds his estate in Estremadura, and his house in Seuille.

14 The Marques of Villanova de Barca rota, he is chiefe of the familie of Puerto carreros: he holds his house in Seuille, and his estate in Estremadura.

15 The Marques of Ladrada, of the familie of Los Cuenas: he holds his estate in the realme of Toledo.

16 The Marques of Canete, of the familie of Mendofa: he hath his house in the city of Cuenca, and his estate in the said prouince.

17 The Marques of Palces, head of the Peraltes: he hath his house in Nauarre, and his estate in the said kingdome.

18 The

- 18 The Marques of Fiomesta, of the familie of the Benavides and Enriques : he hath his house in Fiomesta, and his estate in the prouince of Campos.
- 19 The Marques of Valle, sonne to Fernando Cortes, who conquered Noua Hispania : hee hath his house in Seuille and in Mexico, and his estate in Noua Hispania.
- 20 The Marques of Aunon, he is of the Hereiras : he hath his house in Madrid, and his estate in Alcaria.
- 21 The Marques of Ardale, Earle of Teba, of the house of Guzman : he keepes his house in Malaga, and his estate in the realme of Seuille.
- 22 The Marques of Beretta, of the familie of the Cardenas : he hath his house in Herena, and his estate in Estremadura.
- 23 The Marques of Villa Manrique, of the house of Saniga : he hath his estate & house in the realme of Seuille.
- 24 The Marques of Morta, of the house of Villoa : hee holds his estate and house in Castille.
- 25 The Marques of Alcanices, of the familie of the Henriques : he hath his estate and house in Castille.
- 26 The Marques of Auila Fuente, of the house of the Sanigas : he holds his estate and house in Castille.
- 27 The Marques of Molina.
- 28 The Marques of Fuentes.
- 29 The Marques of Villada, Maior domo, maior or chiefe Steward, to the king : he is one of the Grandes.
- 30 The Marques of Laguna, chiefe steward to the Queene : he is a Grande.
- 31 The Marques of Saraluo.
- 32 The Marques of Caracena, of the familie of the Carrillos and Toledos.
- 33 The Marques of Cuellar.
- 34 The Marques of Saint Germain, of the house of Mendosa, his Marquisate is in Sauoy, and his house and estate in Castille : He is a gentleman of the kings chamber, and Lieutenant generall of his gards and of all the horse in Spaine.

Earles which be Grandes.

- 1 The Earle of Miranda, Marques of Baneza : he is head of the Auellaneda, and is of the familie of Sanigas and Bajanes : he holds his house in Penderanda villa fuya, & his estate in Castille the old, and the mountaines thereof : he is of the Councell of State, and President of the chiefe of Castille.
- 2 The Earle of Benauent, the head of the Pimentels : he holds his house in Vailledolit, and his estate in the prouince of Campos : he is the greatest Earle in Spaine.
- 3 The Earle of Alua de Liza, of the familie of the Henriques : he hath his house in Zamora, and his estate in Castille the old, and Estremadura : he is of the Councell of State, and chiefe huntsman to the king, and of his chamber.
- 4 The Earle of Lemos and Andrada, of Castro and Villalua, Marques of Sarria, and Lord of Villosa, he is head of the house of Castros, and gentleman of the kings chamber, he is president of the councell of the Indies : he hath his house in Lemos and Sarria, and his estate in the realm of Galicia.
- 5 The Earle of Oropeza, he is of the house of Toledo and Pachecos : he hath his house at Talavera, and his estate in the realm of Toledo, he had one daughter and heire, who was married to a brother of the Duke of Bragances.
- 6 The Earle of Santa Gadea, he is head of the familie of the Padillas, he is a gentleman of the kings chamber, and Adelantado maior of Castille : he hath his house and state in Castille.

Earles which be not Grandes.

The Earle of Salinas and Ribadeo, of the house of Auellaneda & Mendosa : he hath his house in the city of Burgos and his estate in Biscaie, & the mountaines, who (for that his predecessors did helpe much in the winning of Toledo) haue this priuiledge, to dine on twelfe day with the King, and the apparell, which the King weares that day, is his, with his best horse, and a Cup of gold. This house fell by marriage to Ruy Gomez de Silva, Duke of Pastrana, who was second brother

- ther to him that died in Flanders, and Vncle to him that holds the state at this day, he is president of the Councell of Portugall.
- 2 The Earle of Aguilar, head of the Arrelanos, and Lord of Los Cameros : he hath his house in the towne of Nilda, which is his, and his estate is in Rioja, and the Mountaines of Soriana.
  - 3 The Earle of Aranda, Lord of Almuernin.
  - 4 The Earle of Alcaudette, of the house of the Cordouas : he keepes his house in Alcaudette, and his estate in the realme of Cordoua, he is also of Aluaida, of the house of Milan.
  - 5 The Earle of Altamira, of the house of Roxas, and Moscofo : he hath his house in Altamira and his estate in Galicia.
  - 6 The Earle of Citona, of the house of Moncada and Heredia.
  - 7 The Earle of Buendia, Lord of Duenas, of the house of Acugna : he hath his house in Acugna, and his estate in the Territorie of Campos.
  - 8 The Earle of Ayllon, of the house of Leon and Cordoua.
  - 9 The Earle of Belchite, of the house of Tiar : he holds his estate in Valencia and Arragon.
  - 10 The Earle of Castellar, he is the chiefe of the Sayanedras : he hath his house in Seuille, and his estate in the same realme.
  - 11 The Earle of Castro Xeris, of the house of Mendosa, and Manriques : he hath his house in Castro Xeris, and his estate in the realms of Leon and Castille.
  - 12 The Earle of Chinchon, head of the house of the Bobadillas : he hath his house in Madrid, and his estate in the realme of Toledo.
  - 13 The Earle of Cifuentes, he is the head of the Silvas : hee hath his house in Toledo, and his estate in Alcaria.
  - 14 The Earle of Cornina, of the house of Mendosa : his house is in Guadalajara, & his estate in Alcaria.
  - 15 The Earle of Fuenfaldia, he is the head of the Ayala, his house is in Toledo, and his estate in the same realme.
  - 16 The Earle of Gelues, he is chiefe of the house of the Portugals, he hath his house in Seuille, and his estate in the same realme.
  - 17 The Earle of Gomera, which is in the Iland of the great Canarie, hee is of the house of the Ayala.
  - 18 The Earle of Gajan.
  - 19 The Earle of Oliuares, he is of the house of Guzman : his house is at Seuille, and his estate in Andalusia.
  - 20 The Earle of Ierna, of the familie of the Cardes.
  - 21 The Earle of Costania in Valencia.
  - 22 The Earle of Coruipo.
  - 23 The Earle of Fuentes of the house of Heredia : hee hath his estate in Arragon, and his house at Fuentes.
  - 24 The Earle of Luna, he is head of the Quignones and Villasanes, he hath his house and estate in the realme of Leon.
  - 25 Earle of Medellin, of the house of Puerto Carreira : hee hath his house in Medellin, and his estate in Estremadura.
  - 26 Earle of Monteagudo, he is of the house of Mendosa : he holds his estate in Raca of Arragon, and his house in Almala.
  - 27 Earle of Monterey, of the house of Azuado : he hath his house in Salamanca, and his estate in Galicia.
  - 28 Earle of Oforno, he is of the Manriques, his house is in Vailledolit, and his estate in Castille the old.
  - 29 Earle of Onante, head of the Gueuares : he hath his house in Onante, and his estate in the prouince of Guipuscoa.
  - 30 Earle of Oliua, of the house of Gentillas.
  - 31 Earle of Morata, of the house of Luna.
  - 32 Earle of Orga, he is of the house of Ayala and Mendosa : and some say hee is the head of the Mendosas.
  - 33 Earle of Puebla, of the house of the Cardenas : he hath his house in Llerena, and his estate in Estremadura.

- 34 Earle of Paluia, of the house of Puerto Carrero, he holds his house in Eccia, and his estate in the Realme of Cordoua.
- 35 Earle of Pliego, of the house of Carillo and Mendoza: hee hath his house in Guadalajara, and his estate in the mountaines of Cuenca.
- 36 Earle of Puno in Rostro, he is head of the Sarrias: he hath his house in Madrid, and his estate in the Realme of Toledo.
- 37 Earle of Paredes, of the house of Manriques: his house is in Paredes, and his estate in the prouince of Campos.
- 38 Earle of Ribadauia, of the house of Auellaneda: he hath his house in Vailledolit, and his estate in Galicia.
- 39 Earle of Ciruela, of the house of Velsco.
- 40 Earle of Sastago and Pina, of the house of Arragon: hee hath his house in Saragosse, and his estate in the realme of Arragon.
- 41 Earle of Saint Esteuan, the head of the Benanides: his house is in the citie of Vuida, and his estate in the realme of Arragon.
- 42 Earls of Nauarre, of the family of the Toledos, & by his wife, by whom he had the estates, of the bloud of Nauarre, & of the Beaumonts: he hath his house and estate in the realm of Nauarre.
- 43 Earle of Bargas, he is head of the house of Capatas, his house is in Madrid.
- 44 Earle of Puebla of Montaluan, of the familie of the Telles, Girones and Pachecos: hee holds his estate in Estremadura.
- 45 Earle of Baileu, hee is of the Pensos of Leon: his house is in Baileu, and his estate in the realme of Iacn.
- 46 Earle of Nicua, of the house of Valesco: he hath his house in Nicua, and his estate in Rioja.
- 47 Earle of Saluatierra, of the house of Ayala: he holds his estate in Castille the old.
- 48 Earle of Cosentaina, of the house of Corella: his estate & house is in the realm of Valencia.
- 49 Earle of Galuas, of the house of Los Cerdas.
- 50 Earle of Delda, of the familie of the Colomas: his estate & house are in the realm of Valécia.
- 51 Earle of Ficallo, of the house of Gandia and Borias: his countie is in Portugall, but his estate and house in the Realme of Valencia.
- 52 Earle of Cuba, he is of the Henriques of Almanca: he hath his countie in Portugall, and his estate and house in the realme of Castille.
- 53 Earle of Villamediana, he is of the familie of Taxis.
- 54 Earle of Barraja.
- 55 Earle of Mayalde.
- 56 Earle of Mirabel.
- 57 Earle of Galue.
- 58 Earle of Villador.
- 59 Earle of Castarubios.
- 60 Earle of Los Arcos.
- 61 Earle of Salasar.

|                       |                                |   |
|-----------------------|--------------------------------|---|
| Vicont of Peralta.    | Admirall of Arragon.           | Adelantado of Canaria.                      |
| Vicont del Buli.      | Admirall of Valencia.          | Adelantado of Carforla.                     |
| Vicont of Altamira.   | Adelantado Maior of Castille.  | Adelantado of the house of Mendoza . |
| Vicont of Chelba.     | Adelantado Maior of Andalusia. |   |
| Admirall of Castille. | Adelantado of Galicia.         |   |

Masterhips of Orders of Knights.

The great Masterhip of Saint Iames.

The Masterhip of Alcantara.

The Masterhip of the Calatrava.

These three are annexed to the Crowne, and the king is perpetuall Gouvernor and Administrator of them.

These be the Dukes, Marquesses, Earles, Admirals, and Adelantados, which are in the realms of Castille, Leon, Arragon, Nauarre, Galicia, Valencia, and Cartelonia, and the other estates of Spaine, except Portugal. Some haue precisely set downe the reuenues of euerie one of these Noblemen in their relations, as if they were immutable; but, being subiect daily to increase and decrease according to the disposition and frugality, of the persons that enioy them, I haue wittingly omitted it: But thus much I dare boldly say, that the nobility of Spain are exceeding rich in their yerely reuenues, and if I be not much deceiued, they are the richest subiects in reuenues of any country of Christendo me.

F I N I S.

50 A Table of the most memorable things contained in this
Historie of Spayne: wherein the Reader is to be aduertised of an error escaped in the bodie of the Booke, in numbring of the pages, from 971, from whence to 972. he shall find them doubled: Which obserued, will set him right on that he seeks for by this Table.

|  |   |
|--|---|
| A Abderramen stemme of the Kings of Maroc, 165                                   | Approbation of the Order of Saint Ierome by the Pope, 586   |
| Abderramen vsurpes the Soueraigntie of Spaine, 175                                      | Admonition of the king of Castile to his sister the Queene of Nauarre, 623  |
| Aben Mahomet , a Moorish king vnder the protection of the King of Castile, 369          | Admirall of Castile surpriseth Simancas, 819  |
| Accord betwixt the Romanes and the Carthaginians, 36   | Admiraltie in Castile, and the iurisdiction, 993  |
| Accord betwixt the k. of Castile & his mother, 277   | Era of Caesar abolished in Arragon, 542  |
| Accord betwixt the kings of Castile and Arragon, for the diuorce of Queene Elenor , 339 | Affection of a mother, 227  |
| Accord betwixt the Kings of Nauar & Arrag. 366   | Agility of the Numidian horsemen, 143   |
| A concord betwixt the King of Castile and Granada, 394   | Affricke a towne in the Realme of Tunes taken by the king, 706  |
| Accord betwixt Alphonso king of Castile, and his rebellious subiects, 400               | Ayre in Sardynia corrupted by nature, 22  |
| Accord betwixt the Estates of Nauarre, and Pearo of Arragon, 403                        | Admirall of Boniuert enters Guipuscoa with an armie, 966  |
| Accord betwixt the kings of Maroc & Castil, 427  | Alaric chiefe of the Gothes, 130   |
| Accord betwixt Castile and Portugal by marriage, 443   | Alanes and Vandales defeated by the Goths, 151  |
| Accord betwixt Granada and Castile, 454  | Alcaron of the Barbarians, 163  |
| Accord betwixt Castile and Nauar, 582  | Alphonso king of Ouiedo and Leon leaues the Crowne to become a Monke, 199. he repented that he became a Monke, 200. hee is beleegged and taken by his owne brother, ibid. |
| Accord betwixt the kings of Castile & Arrag. 588   | Alphonso k. of Leon dispossesseth by his brother, 241  |
| Act of the Master of Auiz to make the Castilians odious, 603                                   | D. Almedia poysoned by her sonne-in-law, 244   |
| Accord betwixt the king of Castile and the Duke of Lancaster, 614                              | D. Alphonso king of Nauarre seeks to assure himselfe of Castile, 270   |
| Accord betwixt the Noblemen of Castile, 636  | Almudebar taken from the Moores, 272  |
| Accord made with the Earle of Giron, 648   | D. Alphonso king of Nauarre defeated by the Moores and slaine, 282   |
| Accord made by the king of Castile with D. Henry of Arragon, 690                        | Alphonso Raymond king of Castile crowned Emperour of Spaine, 285   |
| Accident happened to the Prince of Portugall, and his death, 941                               | Alphonso king of Castile beeing young, giuen in gard to the Inhabitants of Auila, 310. hee marries Elenor of England, 314   |
| Accord betwixt the k. of Castile and Nauar, 740  | Alphonso King of Portugall, taken prisoner by the king of Leon, 322  |
| Accord betwixt D. Iohn king of Arragon, and his sonne D. Charles , 761           | Alphonso king of Castile inuades Leon and Nauarre, 331   |
| Accusations propounded by the Confederats, 781   | D. Aluar de Lara spoiles the Queene Regent of her authoritie and estate, 351   |
| Accord betwixt king Iohn of Arragon and Leonora his daughter, 812                | D. Aluaro of Sandy taken prisoner by the Turkes, 1092.   |
| Accord for the government of Spaine, 924   | Aluar de Lara taken prisoner, 354  |
| Act of constancie of D. Alphonso Perez de Guzman , 438                                  | Alphonso of Portugall leaues his lawfull wife, 389   |
| Act of Alphonso of Aguilar against the children of the Earle of Cabra, 819              | D. Alphonso king of Castile disinherits the children of D. Fernand his eldest sonne, 413  |
| Act of choler done by the D. of Infantaigo, 1001  | Alain Leontine a damnable traytor, his end, 428  |
| Adrian doth a generous act, 121   | D. Alphonso de la Cerde saluted k. of Castile, 440   |
| Adelantamiento of Carforla giuen to the Church of Toledo, 365                                  | Alphonso de la Cerde and D. Iohn of Castile contend for the Realme of Castile, 440  |
| Adultery of D. Nugno de Lara , 397  | Allyance renewed betwixt Castile & Arragon, 458   |
| Adultery punished, 550   | Alcaudete taken by the king of Castile, 458   |
| Admonition of the son to the father, 1134  | Alphonso de la Cerde quits his interest to Cast. 434   |
| Aduertisements of a Philosopher a Moore, to the king of Castile, 572                           | Alaua vnited to the crowne of Castile, 488  |
| Admonition of the Admirall of Castile to Cardinal Ximenes , 949                         | Alboacen king of Maroc dispossesseth by his son, 519   |
|  | Alcauala, a kind of Impost, 527   |

K k k k k

D. Al.

The Table.

|  |      |   |       |
|--|------|---|-------|
| Don Alphonso Ezrand Corner vnworthily put to death,                  | 534  | Arabians tributaries to the Romanes,  | 164   |
| D Alphonso the king of Castile vnle deliuered out of prison,                | 633  | Arabian tong common in Affricke,  | 166   |
| Aluaro de Luna and his beginning,   | 670  | Arabians & Mores all one in this History,   | 168   |
| Alphonso king of Arragon leads an army into Corsica,                        | 686  | Arabians 5. years about the conquest of Spain, ibid.                             | 191   |
| Alphonso de Luna made Constable of Castile,                                 | 687  | Armes of Barcelona and Arragon,   | 205   |
| Alphonso k. of Arragon fauors a new Schism,                                 | 688  | Arabian Phisitions in great request,  | 236   |
| Aluaro de Luna Constable of Castile, insolent, contentious, and trecherous, | 714  | Arts flourish among the Arabians in Spaine,   | 243   |
| Aluaro de Luna Constable of Castil executed,                                | 744  | Arragon and Nauarre vnited,   | 288   |
| Alphonso king of Arragon, inuested in the Realme of Nauar,                  | 724  | Arragon and Cattelonia vnited by marriage,  | 317   |
| Alphonso of Faisardo punish for his rebellion,                              | 759  | Arragon exempt frō the Soueraignty of Castil,   | 317   |
| Alphonso the king of Castile brother acknowledged heire to the Crown,       | 782  | Aduice giuen by the Emperour Charles vnto his sonne,                             | 1126  |
| the Confederates,  | 794  | Aduice to D. John touching the war of Granado,                                   | 1147. |
| Aluaz Gomez disloyall to the K. of Castile,                                 | 783  | Army of Turkes in Cypres,   | 1159  |
| Alphonso of Hojeda first discoverer of the mayne land at the Indies,        | 889  | Aduice of k. Philip to King Sebastian ,                                   | 1199  |
| Alphonso of Arragon and his posteritie                                      | 831  | Army against the Mores in Spaine,   | 339   |
| Alliance betwixt France and Castile,   | 855  | Armes of Nauarre,   | 342   |
| Alhama taken by the Castilians,  | 884  | Arabians in Spaine reiect the Miraliums of Affricke,                                    | 353   |
| Alhambra of Granado yeilded to the King of Castile,                                | 940  | Archb. in quarrell for the Primacie,  | 376   |
| Alliances betwixt the house of Austria and Castil,                                 | 954. | Articles sworne by the King of Nauarre,   | 477   |
| Amilcar slaine by the Spaniards,  | 35   | Arragonis defeated by the Nauarrois,  | 457   |
| Ambition makes Mandanius and Indibilis disloyal,                     | 68.  | Articles of the Order of the band,  | 489   |
| Ambassador ill aduised and importunate,  | 103  | Armies are vnprofitable that haue too great multitudes,                                 | 510   |
| Ambition the mother of heresies,   | 160  | Archb. of Toledo forced to leaue Spaine,  | 535   |
| Ambition of Almodia furious and vnrestrayned,                               | 225. | Armie of Don Pedro king of Castile,  | 574   |
| Ambassadors sent from Nauar to Castile,  | 478  | Act of D. Leonora Telles de Meneses ,  | 597   |
| Ambassadors speech to the king of Arragon,   | 591  | Archbishop of Toledo turbulent,   | 630   |
| Ambassadors from France to the k. of Castile,                                      | 631  | Articles concluded at the assembly at Tholoufa in Guipuscoa,                            | 634   |
| Ambassadors from the King of Granado to the K. of Castile,                         | 645  | Archbishop of Toledo regards not the publike good,                                      | 633.  |
| Ambassadors discover the counsels and actions of Princes,                          | 658  | Arragonis reiect D. Ioane and chose Don Martin to be king,                | 650   |
| Amadeus of Sauoy called Pope Felix ,                                 | 733  | Articles of marriage broken by the Estates of Arragon,                                  | 660   |
| Ancients vsed Religion to keepe the people in aw,                                  | 51.  | Arbitrators to chuse the king of Nauarre,   | 675   |
| Antiquity of Toledo,   | 251  | Artillerie when first vsed in Spaine,   | 669   |
| Ambition a vice in great men,  | 1132 | Articles concluded for the pacification of the troubles in Castile,                     | 782   |
| Answer of D. Henry of Nauar to the Conspirators of Castile,                 | 397  | Archb. of Toledo betrayes the king his Master,  | 784   |
| Andrew of Clairmont beheaded at Palermo,                                    | 660  | Arragonis defeated by the French,   | 808   |
| Ambassadors from the king of Castile to the Souldans of Egypt,                     | 968  | Articles of marriage betwixt Fernand of Arragon, and Izabella of Castile, | 818   |
| Ambassador of king Fernand stayd in Bearne,                                 | 905  | Arzilla and Tanger in Affricke taken by the king of Portugall,                          | 829   |
| Answer made by Pope Paul to the Duke of Albas complain,                     | 1075 | Archb. of Toledo disloyall and seditious,   | 871   |
| Apparitions beleueed by the Spaniards,   | 149  | Armes of French in Spaine,  | 873   |
| Apparition of S. Isidore ,  | 251  | Arzilla beseege by the Mores, and the towne taken,                                      | 887   |
| Armes of the ancient Spaniards,  | 16   | Army of Spaine annoy the Venetians,   | 895   |
| Arts in Spaine damnable in old time,   | 30   | Articles of yeelding of Pampelona to the Duke of Alba,                                  | 904   |
| Army of Spaniards against the Romanes,   | 78   | Army of French enters into Nauarre,   | 909   |
| Argemond a traitor punished,  | 144  | Armes giuen to the Province of Guipuscoa,   | 910   |
| Arabians first attempt vpon Spaine,  | 150  | Arrogant answer of D. Pedro Giron ,  | 926   |
| Arabian western Mores descended frō Ismael ,                                | 161  | Articles betwixt the Emperour and k. of Tunes,  | 991   |
|  |      | Army of Charles the 5. going into Prouence,                                      | 996   |
|  |      | Army of Turkes prepar'd against the Portugalls,   | 997   |
|  |      | Armie of Christians against Gerbe,  | 1086  |
|  |      | Armie of Turkes in Minorca,   | 1082  |
|  |      | Armie   |       |

The Table.

|  |       |  |                |  |     |
|--|-------|--|----------------|--|-----|
| Army sent against Pegnon de Veles,   | 1113  | Barbarians diuide the conquest of Spaine,  | 130            |  |     |
| Arrians persecute the faithfull  | 125   | Barbarians easie to corrupt,   | 101            |  |     |
| Archbishop of Toledo drawne in question by the Inquisit. on,   | 1125  | Barbarians impatient of seruitude kill them-selues,  | 103            |  |     |
| Army sent with the D. of Alua into Flanders,   | 1129  | Bamba made King of the Gothes against his will,   | 149.           |  |     |
| Abdalla King of Marroc, Fez and Taradant,   | 1195  | 149. he is poysoned by Erving .   | 150            |  |     |
| Allegations made by King Philip touching his title to Portugall,  | 1209  | Bargaine made in sport enter tayed by force.   | 205            |  |     |
| Aduice of the diuines of Alcala of Henares   | ibid  | Barcelona taken and ruined by the Moores,  | 219            |  |     |
| Army of D. Anthony put to rout  | 1214  | Baiona taken by the King of Nauarre,   | 281            |  |     |
| Articles granted by King Philip to the realme of Portugall,   | 1219  | Barcelona yeilded to King Ihon of Arragon,  | 831            |  |     |
| Army of French and Spanish at the Iland of Saint Michel,   | 1221  | Barbarossa beseegeth the Castell of Nice,  | 1006           |  |     |
| Asdrubal takes aduantage of his enemies negligence 41. he prepares to goe into Italy. 42. his passage broken, 44. he circumuents Nero , 50. he makes noe conscience to deceaue his enemy, 51. he thinks to repaire his losses by a battell, 98. he is defeated by Scipio , 59. he passeth into Italy. 60. he is defeated there, | 61.   | Barcelona sets vp the banners of Castile,  | 777            |  |     |
| Asiapians barbarously murder their wiues and children,   | 68    | Battenes at Famagosta,   | 1161           |  |     |
| Assembly of the Estates euery yeare in Spaine,   | 126   | Battell betwixt the Romanes and naturall Spaniards, 78. an other battell betwixt them, 88. betwixt Pompey and Scitorius , 111. betwixt Cesar and Pompey , 116. of Voglad and death of Alaric , 137. of longuera lost by the Christians. 194. of Simancas, and great victory of the Christians. 201. of Calacaulor, 215. Battell betwixt the Moores, 222. of Obrigue wonne by Alphonso Henriquez first King of Portugall, 292. of Valpeirre. 303. of Muradall. 341. Battell at sea before Caillery, 480. of Salado. 512 betwixt the Geneuois and Venetians, 543. at Aliubarota, 608. betwixt the Christians and Moores, 665. of Figueroa. 702. of Olmedo, 730. of Olmedo, 738. of Albuhera, 874. of Rauenna, 993. betwixt the Castilians and Portugalls, 858. of Villa Lara. 962. betwixt the Christians and Barbarossa in Affrike, 990. of Lepanto. 1169. of Alcazer in Affricke, 1202. at the Tercera's bewixt the French and Spanish, | 1222           | Bata Guadix and Almeri yeeld to Castile. | 935 |
| Assembly in Portugall for the election of a King   | 607   | Basenes of King Ramir occasion of new tumults.  | 211            |  |     |
| Afores the bound betwixt Granado and Castile   | 644.  | Basenes of Henry called the vnable King of Castile  | 760            |  |     |
| Assembly at Madrid   | 796   | Bazain at the Indies taken by the Portugals.   | 997            |  |     |
| Assembly of the Estates disliked by Cardinall Ximenes at the arriual of King Charles ,  | 957   | Batteries made by the Turke at Malta.  | 1116           |  |     |
| Assault giuen against Diu.   | 1021  | Beginning of nations fabulous for the most part,   | 1              |  |     |
| Arch-duke Albert made gouernor of Portugall.  | 1226  | Beginning of the Saguntines.   | 7              |  |     |
| Army of Spaine going to the Terceres,  | 1227  | Beteca called Valdausia of the Vandales.   | 133            |  |     |
| Angra at the Terceres taken by the Marques of Santa Cruz,  | 1226  | Beggar counterfetting punished from heauen.  | 142            |  |     |
| Arantippe the Goth slaine by his owne men,  | 131   | Bernard first Earle of Barcelona subiect to the French,   | 179            |  |     |
| Attempt of D. James King of Maiorca vaine,  | 525   | Bernard of Carpio neglects his rebellion,   | 188            |  |     |
| Attempt rashly made by the Constable of Castiles followers,  | 722   | D. Bermond a religious King and a louer of Iustice  | 229.           |  |     |
| Atabalipa defeated and taken,   | 980   | 229. hee breaks the peace with Castile, and is slaine in Battell.  | 231            |  |     |
| Aurang taken by the Romanes,   | 62    | D. Bela of Nagera troubles the state of Castile,  | 205            |  |     |
| Authors of a Sedition punished for the whole multitude,  | 70    | Beginning of the towne of Saint Deminike,  | 265            |  |     |
| Authors of rebellion alwaies smart for the rest,   | 78    | Berenguel of Leon Guernesse of Castile  | 347            |  |     |
| Authority of the Iustice Maior of Arragon,   | 618   | Behavior of D. Sancho the grosse, King of Nauarre in his age.   | 367            |  |     |
| D. Anthony proceeding after King Henries death   | 1208. | Beginning of Granado.  | 372            |  |     |
| 1208. he is declared defender of the realme of Portugal, 1211. he is receiued into Lisbon, 1215. he rayseth a new army, ibid. hee writes to King Philip , 1217. his estate after the defeat of the French at Sea.  | 1225  | Beginning of the house of Guzman and Dukes of Medina Sydonia,  | 437            |  |     |
| Amdassadors from Iapon into Spaine,  | 1230  | Bertrand of Guesclin betraies King Henry ,   | 575            |  |     |
| Ambassadors sent into Spaine from the Duke of Sauoy,   | 1221  | Beginning of the house of Medina Cely ,   | 606            |  |     |
|  | B     | Beginning of a sect called the White coats.  | 663            |  |     |
| Badaies taken from the Moores by the King of Leon,   | 322   | Beginning of the King of Castiles hatred against the Constable,  | 731            |  |     |
| Baesa and Almeri taken from the Moores,  | 295   |  | Berrand |  |     |
| Baesa Castle beseegeed by the Moores,  | 361   |  |                |  |     |
| Badurio K. of Cambaia slaine by the Portugalls,   | 997   |  |                |  |     |
| Balegres Iland, called Gimnastic,  | 9     |  |                |  |     |

The Table.

|  |      |   |  |    |
|--|------|---|--|----|
| Bertrand de la Cueva the Queene of Castiles Minion, created Earle of Ledesma, 767. he is made Duke of Albuquerque | 782  | Bootie taken from the Moores,   | 1144   |    |
| Beginning of the house of Foix,  | 811  | Bridge of Alcantara built by Traian ,  | 120  |    |
| Beginning of the Iesuites,   | 962  | Brothers kings in one kingdome and agree well,  | 183.   |    |
| Beouya a castle of importance, abandoned by the French,  | 967  | Brothers of Nauarre at discord,   | 243  |    |
| Beginning of Francis Pizarro and James of Almagro ,   | 984  | Breethren executed vniuſly,   | 458  |    |
| Bernardin de Mendoza drowned with some Gallies,   | 1094 | Braganza a terror to the Moores,  | 922  |    |
| Beginning and progresse of the Inquisition in Spaine,  | 1119 | Breach betwixt Pope Paul the fourth, and the king of Spaine,   | 1074   |    |
| Biscaine young first vsed in Spaine,   | 3    | Burthens layd vpon the Spaniards by Lucullus ,   | 96   |    |
| Birth of Mahomet ,  | 142  | Burgos made a Bishopricke,  | 265  |    |
| Bishops in Spaine learned and religious,   | 199  | Buildings of Fernand king of Portugall,  | 600  |    |
| Bishops at Toledo in the Moores time,  | 173  | Buildings of Charles the third king of Nauar,  | 668  |    |
| Bishops at Compostella profane,  | 213  | Burgos in the Confederates power, 780. it yeelds to king Henry .   | 805  |    |
| Bishops sea restored to Saragossa,   | 272  | Buafon king of Fez defeated and slaine,  | 1193   |    |
| Bishop of S. James exempt from all subiection but to the Pope,   | 265  | C   |  |    |
| Bishop of Pampelona a fauourer of seditions,   | 405  | Carthaginians called into Spaine by the Gaditains,  | 12   |    |
| Biscay sold to the king of Castile,  | 483  | Cadiz, and the ancient names,   | 20   |    |
| Bishop of Burgos chosen by himselfe,   | 568  | Carthaginians desire rather to be great then iust,  | 32.  |    |
| Biscay belongs to the house of Alanson,  | 585  | 32. they continue the conquest of Spaine, 35. they are defeated at sea by Scipio , 40. they are twice defeated, 45. being growne proud of a victorie they are defeated by the Romanes, 48. they dissemble their losse, 57. they resolute to vnto they dissemble their losse, 57. they resolute to vnto | 48.  |    |
| Bishop of Lisbon slaine by the mutines,  | 603  | people Spaine of souldiers to prevent reuolts, 60. they are quite defeated by the Romanes, and chased out of Spaine,  | 65   |    |
| Birth of the Infant Don Henry of Castile,   | 689  | Carthage the new taken by the Romanes,  | 54   |    |
| Bishop of Pampelona slaine by the Constable of Nauarre,  | 838  | Care and diligence of a good Generall,  | 57   |    |
| Bishop excluded in the Country of Biscay,  | 863  | Castulo yeilded to the Romanes,   | 44   |    |
| Bishop being a murderer, is himselfe murdered,   | 872  | Castulo and Illiturgis, rebellious townes, 65. taken both by the Romanes,   | 66   |    |
| Birth of the Infanta Catherina of Castile,  | 914  | Cato defeats the Spaniards, 82. his seueritie in the Spaniards relaps,   | 83. he demantles the townes, 84. ibid. he seekes to corrupt the Celtiberians, 84. he disposeth of the reuenues of Spaine, | 85 |
| Bishops banished from Biscay,  | 919  | Caire built by Muhawiss ,  | 163  |    |
| Birth of Charles of Austria, who was king of Spain and Emperour,  | 962  | Cape S. Vincent why so called,  | 175  |    |
| Birth of John Prince of Portugall,  | 971  | Cattellonia why so called, 178. vnder the Soueraignie of France, 189. giuen in propriety to Geoffrey the heire,  | 191  |    |
| Birth of Charles Prince of Spaine,  | 1013 | Care of a Prince most commendable,  | 200  |    |
| Birth of D. Sebasti of Portugall,   | 1039 | Castile exempt from all subiection vpon a foolish bargain, 208. vnted to Nauarre,   | 229  |    |
| Bishops newly erected in the Netherlands,  | 1093 | Castile , a Princeesse of the Moores baptized,   | 226  |    |
| Birth of the Infanta D. Izabella , who was Queene of Castile and Arragon,   | 740  | Calatraua taken from the Moores,  | 280  |    |
| Biscaines defeated for war. of discipline,   | 695  | Castile and Leon diuided,   | 286  |    |
| Birth of Fernand of Arragon husband to Izabella ,  | 744  | Calatraua giuen to the Monkes of Cisteaux,  | 304  |    |
| Birth of D. Alphonso of Castile,  | 745  | Cathedral church at Toledo built by Don Roderic the Arch-bishop,   | 362  |    |
| Boldnes of Martius prooues successfull by the enemies negligence,   | 49   | Castile and Leon vnted,   | 364  |    |
| Boniface deliueres Affrick to Genferic , and the Vandales,   | 133  | Cattellonia freed from the soueraignie of France,   | 369  |    |
| Booke found in Spaine,   | 378  | Castilians in armes against Navar & Arragon,  | 386  |    |
| Beautie of Henry the new king of Castile,   | 567  | Castilians in Greece & Thrace,  | 455  |    |
| Booke of the holy Scriptures translated into the Portugall language,   | 681  | Castilians defeated by the Arragonois,  | 552  |    |
| Bountie of the Duke of Milan,  | 710  | Castilians burne the coast of Genoua,   | 502  |    |
| Body of Queene Izabella layed in a Friars weede,  | 874  | Carmona yeilded to D. Henry of Castile,  | 580  |    |
| Bountie of Gonsalo Fernandez the great Capitaine,   | 883. | Castile acknowledged the Pope,  | 595  |    |
| Bootie taken at the Indies,  | 916  | Castile acknowledged by them of Ebor,   | 604.   |    |
| Bona in Affricke taken by Andrew Dorin ,  | 993  | Castilians defeated by them of Ebor,  | 604.   |    |
| Bounty of the Emperour Charles to Prince Doria ,   | 1105 | red againe at Troncosa, 607. defeated by the Moores,  | 702  |    |
|  |      | Castile   |  |    |

The Table.

|   |       |   |       |
|---|-------|---|-------|
| Castile preferred before Arragon,   | 751   | texicar,  | 674   |
| Cattelans speake freely to their King, 763. they lue in vaine for their Prince, ibid. they complaine of the king of Castile, | 774   | Change of Bishops in Spaine,  | 723   |
| Calaoorra taken by Gaston of Foix from the Spaniards,  | 787   | Choler of the king of Castile,  | 712   |
| Castle of Burgos yeilded to Q. Izabella ,  | 855   | Christians being victors are vanquished,  | 736   |
| Castle of Zamora yeilded to K. Fernand ,   | 860   | Charles Prince of Viana calls himselfe King of Nauarre, 754. he is imprisoned by his father,   | 793   |
| Castro Nugno yeelds to king Fernand ,  | 870   | hee is deliuered out of prison, and poysoned by his step-mother,  | 764   |
| Canaries made subiect to the K. of Castile,   | 899   | Charitie of K. Fernand and Queene Izabella ,  | 881   |
| Castilians spoile the realme of Nauarre,  | 929   | Christians defeated by the Moores,  | 914   |
| Caia a small streame diuiding Castile from Portugall,   | 938   | Chancerie transported from cite Real to Granado,  | 877.  |
| Cadiz vnted to the crown of Castile,  | 947   | Charge of Bishops in Castile,   | 883   |
| Capitulation betwixt king Fernand and Mahomet the Little,   | 940   | Chancellor of Arragon accused to haue sought to dishonor Queene Germaine ,   | 920   |
| Causes of the D. of Alua's discontent,  | 950   | Cheures Gouvernor to Charles Prince of Spain, 925   | 925   |
| Causes of hatred betwixt the Spaniards and Flemings,  | 1126  | Charles king of Spaine chosen Emperour of Germany, called the fift, 960. his departure out of Castile forced, ibid. his entry into Pampelona,   | 973   |
| Causes of the rebellion of the Moores of Granado,   | 1138. | his coronation at Bolonia, 979. his going with an army to Tunis, 987. his coming into Sicily, 993. he goes with an army into Prouence, 994. his voyage to Alger, 1002. His constancie and pietie, 1005. he sollicitis K. Fernand his son, 1034. he resigns the government to his son Phil. 1041. he resigns the Empire to his brother, 1076. he passeth into Spaine to a solitarie life, 1077. his death, | 1081  |
| Carc. mos speech to D. Antonio ,  | 1216  | Christian slaues seaze vpon the castle of Tunes, 990  | 990   |
| Celts passe into Spaine,  | 10    | Christians laud with an army at Geibe,  | 1086  |
| Celtiberians take armes for the Romanes,  | 40    | D. Charles Prince of Spaine grievously sicke   | 1094. |
| Ceremonies of the Barbarians when they are sutors,  | 95    | he is vnpleasing to his father, 1126. he was viable for women,  | 1133. |
| Celtiberians defeated by Fulnius Flaccus ,   | 109   | Charles Archduke of Austria sent into Spain, 1137  | 1137  |
| Cesar disarms Afranius and Petrens ,   | 114   | Circuit of all Spaine,  | 14    |
| Cession of the rights of Rouffillon to the house of Aniou,  | 509   | Ciuitill warre in Arabia,   | 165   |
| Ceremonie at the K. of Nauars coronation,   | 625   | Cid Ruis Dias returns into Castile,  | 250   |
| Ceremony in taking possession of Nauarre,   | 693   | Ciuitill warre in Castile,  | 351   |
| Ceremony of the Order of the golden fleece,   | 696   | Ciuitill warres corrupt the best men,   | 736   |
| Ceremonies vsed at the taking of any towns from the Moores,   | 904   | Claude in D. Alphonso's will prodigious,   | 281   |
| Cesar Borgia Cardinall, Bishop of Pampelona,   | 953   | Clement of Launoy Viceroy in Naples,   | 429   |
| he is made Duke of Valentinois,   | 963   | Clergy of Toledo deliuer the city to K. Henry ,  | 803.  |
| Ceremonies at the swearing of the Archduke Philip and D. Joane Kings of Castile,                                      | 967   | Clergie of Spaine freed from paying the tenth penny for their benefices,  | 946   |
| Christian religion among the Gothes,  | 129   | Clergie of Spaine helpe the king with money, 1111   | 1111  |
| Christians persecuted in Affricke,  | 166   | Coniectures that the Celtes were mingled with the Iberians,   | 4     |
| Christians follow the Moores in their armes for spoile,   | 168   | Course of the riuer of Ebro,  | 15    |
| Charlemagne made heire of Ouiedo, and afterward reiected,  | 181   | Course of the riuers of Tagus and Guadiana,   | 16    |
| Change of the Estate of Castile,  | 195   | Contempt of militarie discipline followes a victorie,   | 42    |
| Christians defeated by the Moores, and the heire of Castile slaine,   | 266   | Councell of Carthage neglect Spaine, thinking to get Italy,   | 712.  |
| Change of Religion among the Arabians in Spain  | 301.  | Courage of Lucius Martius keeps the Romanes from despair,  | 48    |
| Christians persecuted by the Moores in Spaine, ibi.  | 318   | Confidence of P. Cornelius Scipio sonne to Publius Scipio slaine in Spaine,   | 51    |
| Chiefe conuents of the Knights of S. James,   | 318   | Con. bates vpon furious ambition,   | 67    |
| Christians in pay with the Moores against the king of Castile,  | 361   | Concord the ground of liberty,  | 75    |
| Children of King Thibaud the second,   | 391   | Contrebia taken by the Romanes,   | 90    |
| Charles of Aniou made k. of Naples & Sicily,   | 412   | Colonie of Libertines,  | 94    |
| Charles Prince of Salerne defeated, and taken by the Arragonois,   | 421   | Conspiracie of Spaniards at Numantia,   | 95    |
| Charles of Valois refuseth to quit his rights to Cattellonia,  | 432   | Corduba built by Marcellus ,   | 96    |
| Christians defeated by the Moores,  | 556   | Kkkkkk 3 Com-   |       |
| Charles king of Nauar a leper,   | 606   |   |       |
| Christians defeated by the Moores, neere to Mon-  |       |   |       |

The Table.

|  |     |   |     |
|--|-----|---|-----|
| Combate betwixt Emilianus & a Spaniard,                 | 96  | Councell of Constance,  | 677 |
| Couetousnes drew Lucullus into Spaine,                  | 97  | Combats not to be allowed among Christians,                     | 979 |
| L. Commodus Verus a persecuter of the church,           | 121 | Conquest of the Canaries,                                       | 680 |
| Council of Illiberis,  | 121 | Controuersie betwixt England and Castile for                    |     |
| Councils of Sardia and Syrmium,                                | 125 | precedence,   | 707 |
| Constantine a tyrant,                                   | 131 | Conditions of peace betwixt Castile, Nauarre and                |     |
| Councell at Toledo,  | 136 | Arragon,  | 712 |
| Councell at Tarazona, Saragossa, and other places,             | 137 | Constable of Castile sent from the court for fixe               |     |
| Conspiracie of the son and mother-in-law against               | 141 | yeares,   | 721 |
| the father,  | 143 | Councell to arme a multitude dangerous,                         | 325 |
| Councell of Toledo,  | 144 | Confederates besieged in Olmedo,                                | 729 |
| Councell of Seuile,  | 154 | Condemnation of the confederates,                               | 731 |
| Continuance of the Goths kingdom in Spaine,                    | 164 | Constable restored to fauour, and made Master of                |     |
| Council of the Mahometists at Damas,                           | 173 | S. James , 731. hee is charged, and in danger to         |     |
| Conquests of Alphonso the first, and 3. King of O-      | 173 | be slaine. 741. his possessions, 745.                           | 581 |
| uiedo,   | 223 | Complots betwixt king John and Gaston of Foix, to |     |
| Confusion and ciuill warre among the Moors,                    | 228 | ruine the right of Nauarre,                                     | 770 |
| Councils called in Nauarre,                                    | 246 | Conspiracie against the Queene of Castile and Ber-       |     |
| Combat of one Knight against another,                          | 249 | trand de la Cueva ,                                      | 779 |
| Conquests of the King of Arragon vpon the                      | 255 | Continuance of the warre in Cattalonia,                         | 786 |
| Moors,   | 266 | Confederates in Castile contemne the Popes au-                  |     |
| Controuersies for ecclesiasticall matters decided              | 268 | thoritie, 779. they appeale from him to a gene-                 |     |
| by armes,  | 293 | ral counsell,   | 800 |
| Cowardize of the sonnes in law of Cid Ruis Diaz ,       | 263 | Contention for the Bishopricke of Siguenza,                     | 801 |
| 263.   | 268 | Courtesie well rewarded,  | 804 |
| Couetousnes of the Geneuois infamous,                          | 268 | Confession of Isaue Queene of Arragon at her             |     |
| Conuersion of Maise a Jew,                              | 293 | death,  | 810 |
| Confirmation of a peace betwixt Nauarre and Ca-                | 293 | Contempt of Iustice in Castile,                                 | 821 |
| stille,  | 311 | Constable of Castile murdered by the people,                    | 832 |
| Cordoua yielded to the king of Castile,                        | 318 | Contention betwixt king Fernand and Queene I-     |     |
| Confirmation of the Order of Calatrava,                        | 319 | zabella ,  | 847 |
| Conuent for the Knights of S. James built,              | 319 | Consultation touching the re-union of the royall                |     |
| Colledges, commanderies, and Hospitals belon-                  | 348 | reuenue,  | 880 |
| ging to the Knights of S. James ,                       | 355 | Confederates to the Duke of Visco executed,                     |     |
| Councell of S. Iohn de Latran vnder Innocent the | 356 | 910.  |     |
| third,   | 380 | Contention betwixt the Arch bishop of Toledo,                   |     |
| Conuents of the Order of S. Dominicke , built by        | 370 | and the Queene of Castile,                                      | 915 |
| the King of Castile,   | 390 | Columbus his first comming to the Kings of Ca-           |     |
| Contentions in Arragon,  | 399 | stille. 918. his first voyage to the Indies, 945. hee           |     |
| Confines of Murcia and Valencia,                               | 409 | is made Admirall of the Indies. 948. his third                  |     |
| Cordoua surprized by the Christians,                           | 412 | voyage to the Indies, 956. he with his brother                  |     |
| Contumacie of D. Alphonso king of Portugal,             | 429 | are sent prisoners into Spaine, 960. his fourth                 |     |
| Councell at Lyons vnder Pope Gregory the tenth,         | 432 | voyage to the Indies, 970. his death,                           | 880 |
| 399.   | 447 | Councils are dangerous for the Church of Rome,                  |     |
| Complaints and requests of King Alphonso to the         | 447 | 883.  |     |
| Pope, but in vaine,  | 452 | Couetousnesse of a Spaniard controuled by an In-                |     |
| Comrade poysoned by Manfroy ,                    | 452 | dian,   | 906 |
| Conference of Deputies for the Kings of France &               | 452 | Conspiracie against king Fernand ,                       | 912 |
| Castile,   | 452 | Contention for the Master-ship of S. James ,             | 924 |
| Conditions of peace betwixt the King of Arragon                | 452 | Contention for the towne of Arcualo,                            | 924 |
| and Charles of Naples a prisoner,                       | 452 | Court of Parliament violated,                                   | 948 |
| Compromise betwixt the Christian Princes of                    | 452 | Complaints against Cardinall Ximenes ,                   | 949 |
| Spaine,  | 452 | Controuersie for the Earldome of Ribadeo,                       |     |
| Coronation of Philip of Eureux king of Nauarre,         | 452 | 952.  |     |
| 478.   | 452 | Coronation of the king of Castile, the first of that            |     |
| Conditions betwixt the king of Castile, and the                | 452 | name,   | 960 |
| Prince of Wales,   | 452 | Conference of Deputies touching the Realme of                   |     |
| Conditions of peace propounded by the King of                  | 452 | Nauarre,  | 968 |
| Portugall to Castile,  | 452 | Combat betwixt two Arragonois,                                  |     |
| Conditions propounded by the duke of Beneuent,                 | 452 | Councell giuen to the Emperour by the Bishop of                 |     |
| 646.   | 452 | Olma,   | 974 |
| Councell of a Jew against Iewes,                               | 452 | Colledge of Iesuites built at Eboras,                           | 977 |
|  | 452 | Confe-  |     |

The Table.

|  |       |  |     |
|--|-------|--|-----|
| Conference for the limits of Nauigation betwixt          |       | Defeat of Celtiberians,  | 91  |
| Castile and Portugal,                                    | 978   | Despaire of the Numantins,                                       | 108 |
| Conditions imposed vpon the Elector of Saxony,           | 1016  | Death of many learned Spaniards,                                 | 119 |
| Constancy of the Elector of Saxony,                      | 1018  | Defeat of the Emperor Valens army, and his misfe-         |     |
| Contreras a rebel at Peru,                        | 1034  | table end,   | 130 |
| Commendation of the Emperor Charles ,             | 1081  | Defeat of Alaric ,  | 131 |
| Council of Trent,  | 1094  | Defeat of Astila ,  | 133 |
| Controuersie betwixt the French and Spaniards            |       | Desire of reuenge in a woman damnable,                           | 134 |
| for precedence,  | 1095  | Defeat of Sueues and death of Richaire ,                  | 135 |
| Commissioners appointed to order the Moores,             | 1127  | Death of Ricaredo and his vertues,                        | 144 |
| Considerations of the Council of Spaine,                 | 1133  | Decree of the ninth Concile of Toledo,                           | 148 |
| Counsellors about D. Iohn of Austria,             | 1147  | Decree made against the Iewes,                                   | 152 |
| Conuoy defeated by the Moores of Granado,                | 1152  | Death of Mahomet ,  | 162 |
| Christians defeated by the Moores,                       | ibid. | Defeat of Moores,  | 174 |
| Commander of Castile dissuaded D. Iohn from       |       | Deeds of charity done by D. Ramir King of Leon,           |     |
| fighting with the Turke, 1164. hee is sent to            |       | 203  |     |
| succeed the Duke of Alba in the gouernment               |       | Death of the seuen brethren of Lara very lamen-                  |     |
| of the Low countries,                                    | 1178  | table,   | 214 |
| Cruelty of a Grandfather,                                | 10    | Defeat of the Castilians and death of their Earle,               |     |
| Cruelty and treachery of Lucullus ,               | 96    | 218  |     |
| Cruelty, auarice and infidelity of Valens against |       | Declining of the Moores Monarchy in Spaine, by                   |     |
| the Gothes,  | 129   | their diuisions,   | 220 |
| Cruelty of Fab. Maximus against the Spaniards,    | 101   | Death of D. Sancho King of Nauarre,                       | 230 |
| Cruelty of Agila against the Christians,          | 140   | Detention of D. Garcia of Nauarre in Castile,             | 237 |
| Cruelty of Vicerie to young Luiba ,        | 144   | Death of D. Garcia Sanchez King of Nauarre,               | 237 |
| Cruelty of King D. Alphonso ,                     | 414   | Deeds of almes done by the King of Castile,                      | 239 |
| Cruelty of Sancho King of Castile,                | 435   | Debate for the Primacy of Spaine,                                | 252 |
| Cruelty of D. Iohn of Castile,                    | 438   | Death of Cid Ruis Diaz ,                                  | 263 |
| Cruelty breeds feare, but not loue in subiects,          | 504   | Death of D. Alphonso the sixth,                           | 268 |
| Cruelties committed vpon the Iewes,                      | 632   | Death prodigious of D. Vrraca of Castile,                 | 280 |
| Cruelty and couetousnesse to the Indians made re-        |       | Dexterity of D. Alphonso king of Castile,                 | 288 |
| ligion odious to the vnbeleeuing,                        | 945   | Debate among Bishops to enlarge their Dioceses,                  |     |
| Cruelty of the sonne to his father and brethren,         | 1020  | 290  |     |
| Cruelty of the Marquis of Mendeiar,                      | 1144  | Death of the Emperor D. Alphonso ,                        | 301 |
| Cruelty of the Xereffe Mahomet ,                  | 1190  | Death of D. Sancho the desired,                           | 304 |
| Cruelty of the Marquis of Santa Cruz to the              |       | Death of D. Raymond Berenger Earle of Barcelo-            |     |
| French,  | 1224  | na,  | 310 |
| Custome to anoynt kings taken from the Hebrew,           | 188   | Defeat of Christians nere to Alarcos,                            | 329 |
| Custome to make women drinke first in Spaine,            | 218   | Deeds of D. Sancho the Strong,                            | 330 |
| Custome antient and religious to purge them-             |       | Deceit of Mary Queene of Arragon commendable,             | 333 |
| selues by oth,   | 246   | Descendants of the house of Champagne,                           | 334 |
| Cuenca taken from the Moores,                            | 320   | Death of D. Fernand of Nauarre,                           | 337 |
| Curse of the father vpon the sonne,                      | 417   | Death of D. Fernand sonne to the king of Castile,         |     |
| Custome of Alaua,  | 487   | 339  |     |
| Cusco reuolts from Gonsaluo Pizarro ,             | 1030  | Death of D. Sancho King of Portugal,                      | 344 |
| Conquest of the Island of the Tercera's,                 | 1227  | Death of D. Alphonso the noble, king of Castile,          |     |
|  |       | 347  |     |
|  |       | Death of D. Henry king of Castile,                        | 352 |
|  |       | Death of D. Aluar and D. Fernand de Lara,          | 355 |
|  |       | Death of D. Fernand king of Castile,                      | 381 |
|  |       | Death of D. Alphonso Infant of Arragon,                   | 393 |
|  |       | Death of the Infant D. Fernand de la Cerda ,              | 410 |
|  |       | Death of D. Iaime king of Arragon,                        | 411 |
|  |       | Death of D. Sancho king of Castile,                       | 438 |
|  |       | Death of Fernand king of Castile,                         | 458 |
|  |       | Death of D. Pedro of Castile and D. Iohn his vncl- |     |
|  |       | very strange,  | 463 |
|  |       | Defeat of Pisains and Sardinians before Callery,                 |     |
|  |       | 22   | 467 |
|  |       | Death of Mary Queene of Castile,                          | 466 |
|  |       | Death of D. Denis king of Portugal,                       | 469 |
|  |       | Defeat of Nauarrois by Guispucoa ,                        | 477 |
|  |       | Death  |     |

The Table.

|  |     |   |      |
|--|-----|---|------|
| Death of D. Fernand heire of Castile.                       | 495 | Death of D. John de Pacheco Master of Saint James.                         | 840  |
| Defeat of Arragonois and Nauarrois by the Castilians.              | 499 | Decrees of the Estates in Castile executed.                                       | 884  |
| Defeat of the garrison of Logrogne by the Earle of Foix.           | 500 | Discovery of Manicongo.   | 906  |
| Death of Ximenes de Luna Archbi. of Toledo.                 | 506 | D. spaire sometimes bringeth helpe.  | 933  |
| Defeat of the Castilian army and death of the Admiral.             | 509 | Death of John king of Portugal.  | 951  |
| Death of Philip king of Nauarre.                            | 517 | Death of Pope Alexander the sixth.   | 873  |
| Decree against the king of Maiorca.                                | 521 | Death of Isabel Queene of Castile.   | 874  |
| Defeat of the king of Arragonis troupes by his rebels.             | 523 | Description of Oran.  | 877  |
| Debate betwixt Toledo and Burgos for precdence.                    | 527 | Death of many noblemen in Spaine.   | 881  |
| Death of D. Alphonso king of Castile.                       | 528 | Death of Philip king of Castile.   | 881  |
| Detention of the Prince of Nauarre in France.                      | 591 | Demands vnciuilly made by king Fernand to him of Nauarre.                  | 902  |
| Death of D. Fernand king of Portugal.                       | 602 | Darien a neck of land at the Indies.  | 906  |
| Delivery of the Prince of Nauarre in fauor of the king of Castile. | 605 | Death of Gonsalo Fernandez of Cordoua.                                     | 920  |
| Death of young Gaston of Foix.                              | 606 | Defeat of Turkes at sea by the Spanish gallees.                                   | 930  |
| Death of D. Pedro king of Arragon.                          | 619 | Death of king John and Queene Catherine of Nauarre.                 | 933  |
| Demands of Portugal to Castile.                                    | 639 | Demands of the townes of Spaine.  | 945  |
| Demands of the Biscains to the King of Castile.                    | 640 | Demolitions in Nauarre.   | 996  |
| Death of Pope Clement at Auignon.                           | 649 | Death of Fernand Magellanes .  | 977  |
| Death of John king of Arragon.                              | 650 | Death of D. Manuel king of Portugal.                                       | 1000 |
| Death of the Archbishop of Toledo.                                 | 663 | Death of the Empreffe Isabella .   | 1000 |
| Demands made by D. Henry of Castile to the Estates.         | 666 | Death of Mary of Portugall wife to king Philip .                    | 1003 |
| Death of the two sonnnes of Nauarre.                               | 667 | Desseigne of the Emperor against Germany.   | 1014 |
| Death of Pere Lopez of Ayala a valiant Knight.              | 670 | Defeat and taking of the Elector of Saxony.                                       | 1016 |
| Death of D. Martin king of Sicile.                          | 673 | Death of Vasco Nuygues Gouvernor at Peru.                                  | 1018 |
| Death of D. Fernand king of Arragon.                        | 678 | Dexterity of Pedro Gasca Gouvernor at Peru.                                | 1018 |
| Death of Charles king of Nauarre.                           | 689 | Death of Queene Joane the Emperours mother.                                | 1040 |
| Death of John king of Portugal.                             | 704 | Death of D. John the third king of Portugal.                               | 1052 |
| Defeat of the Master of Alcantara by the Moores.                   | 709 | Description of Malta.   | 1114 |
| Death of Joane Queene of Naples and her testament.          | 717 | Degrading of a Priest by the Inquisition.   | 1123 |
| Death of Edward king of Portugal.                           | 722 | Desseignes of the Prince of Spaines discovered.                                   | 1130 |
| Death of D. Blanch Queene of Nauarre.                       | 722 | Death of the Prince of Spaine.  | 1131 |
| Death of two Queenes sisters beeing poysoned.                      | 723 | Death of Elizabeth Queene of Spaine.                                       | 1132 |
| Demands made by the confederats to the king of Castile.            | 730 | Death of the Marquis of Poza.   | 1136 |
| Death of D. Henry Infant of Arragon.                        | 741 | Defeat of Christians.   | 1162 |
| Deuise of the Prince of Nauarre.                                   | 746 | Death of Marc Antonio Bragadin.  | 1203 |
| Defeat and death of the Infant D. Pedro duke of Coimbra.    | 747 | Decree of the Governours against D. Antonio .                              | 1212 |
| Discovery of the Canaries.   | 747 | Death of Queene Anne of Castile.   | 1214 |
| Discovery of the coast of Affrike by Portugals.                    | 753 | Death of Philip Stroffy .  | 1223 |
| Desire of rule affections of a noble minde.                        | 761 | Distinction of Spaine within the Country.   | 15   |
| Desseignes to trouble Castile.                                     | 761 | Distinction of Spaine according to the antients.                                  | 23   |
| Desire of command an vncrued fury.                                 | 734 | Distinction of Colonels to pacifie a muteny.                                      | 69   |
| Death of D. Pedro Giron Master of Calatrava.                | 795 | Discretion of Colonels before Numantia.                                    | 103  |
| Desire of riches takes away all Ciuill respects.                   | 802 | Dissembling of Pompey before Numantia.                                     | 120  |
| Descent of Portugal.   | 773 | Diuision of the Government of Spaine.   | 129  |
| Death of the Infant D. Alphonso of Castile.                 | 805 | Distinction of the East and West Gothies.   | 129  |
| Deeds of charity done by the Earle of Ham.                         | 821 | Dissention betwixt the Emperours Lieutenants was the losse of Spaine and Affrike. | 133  |
|  |     | Diuerfity of religion kille all charity.  | 138  |
|  |     | Diuision among the Gothies.   | 145  |
|  |     | Discourfe of Mahumet not very credible.                                    | 149  |
|  |     | Disloyaltie of Paul a captaine to Bambal .                          | 149  |
|  |     | D. Diego Perello stem of the Princes of Castile.                           | 195  |

Diuision

The Table.

|  |       |  |       |
|--|-------|--|-------|
| Diuision among Christians giues an entry to infidels.  | 213   | Dragut beleeged by Doria at Gerbe and escapes.              | 1038  |
| Disposition of a woman inclined to reuenge.  | 214   | hee comes to Malta and is slaine there.                            | 1115  |
| Dishonolt desire of a Countesse of Castile.  | 218   | Duke of Brittan slaine at the Popes coronation.                    | 452   |
| Dignity of chiefe Iustice of Arragon.  | 272   | Dukes, Marqueses and Earles not hereditary in Spaine.              | 484   |
| Disposition of D. Alphonso king of Castile.   | 147   | Duke of Beneuent seeks to purge himselfe to the king of Castile.   | 646   |
| Diuision among the Nobility of Nauarre and Arragon.  | 284   | Duke of Bragances praides discovered by his secretary.             | 907   |
| Disposition of D. Raymond Berengers will.   | 310   | Duke of Viseo slaine by the king of Portugals owne hand.           | ibid. |
| Disposition of the spoile after the batteille of Muradel.  | 342   | Duke of Valentino sent prisoner into Spaine.                       | 873   |
| Disposition of king Thibaud .   | 373   | he escapes out of prison.  | 883   |
| Diuision in Arragon.   | 445   | hee is slaine at the siege of Viana.                               | 886   |
| Distrust of D. John of Castile and treachry of king Fernand cause of great troubles.       | 457   | Dutic of a well aduised captaine.                                  | 891   |
| Disloyalty of the king of Castile.   | 497   | Duke of Alba enters into Pampelona.                                | 905   |
| Disposition of the will of D. Frederic king of Sicile.  | 503   | he commits himselfe to the Cardinal Ximenes .               | 952   |
| Disposition of D. Pedro king of Portugal.   | 549   | Duke of Gandia becomes a Iesuite.                                  | 964   |
| Diuision of Castile before it was conquered.   | 561   | Duke of Alba sent victor into Italy.                               | 1041  |
| Disposition of Charles king of Nauarre.   | 592   | he complains of the Popes aduice.                                  | 1077  |
| Disposition of D. John king of Castile.   | 597   | he goes to assaile Rome.   | 1079  |
| Disposition of the noblemen of Portugal.   | 602   | he is sent into Flanders.  | 1129  |
| Disposition and qualities of Aluaro de Luna Constable of Castile.                                 | 745   | he sends to treat with the Queen of England.                       | 1170  |
| Diuines delude the Constable of Castile.   | ibid. | he enters into Portugal.   | 1211  |
| Diego Hurtado de Mendoza restored to his right of Guadaluara.                                     | 765   | Duke of Guise sent with an army into Italy.                        | 1076  |
| Disorders in the government of Castile.  | 826   | Duke of Medina Celi sent to gouerne the Low countries.             | 1170  |
| Diuision betwixt the father and the sonne.   | 897   | he refuseth the government.  | 1171  |
| Difference betwixt Ferdinand king of Arragon and Philip and Joane kings of Castile. | 880   | Duke of Albas exploits in Portugal.                                | 1212  |
| Disposition of John king of Nauarre.  | 884   | his death.   | 1226  |
| Distribution of the spoile at Oran.  | 894   | D. Diego Prince of Spaine borne.                            | 1174  |
| Difference betwixt a vassal and a subiect.   | 905   | Discourse betwixt D. Anthony and Carcamo .           | 1210  |
| Drinke giuen to king Fernand by the Queene his wife.  | 913   | Description of the Tercera's.                                      | 1218  |
| Diuision among Councillors in a state dangerous.   | 929   | Death of Diego Prince of Spaine.                            | 1224  |
| Discipline of them of Peru at the warre.   | 982   | Deputies sent from the Estates of the vniued Princes into England. | 1234  |
| Diu attempted in vaine by the Portugals.   | 996   |  |       |
| Disposition of the Alarabes of Affrike.  | 1007  |  |       |
| Diu beleeged by the king of Cambaca.   | 1018  |  |       |
| Disposition of D. Charles Prince of Spaine.   | 1132  |  |       |
| Disobedience and infolencies in Christian souldiers.   | 1146  |  |       |
| Disposition of king Sebastian .   | 1160  |  |       |
| Difficulties in pursuing the victory of Lepanto.   | 1171  |  |       |
| Domitian the second persecutor of the Church.   | 120   |  |       |
| Donation falsely fathered vpon Constantin .   | 142   |  |       |
| Docility of the Gothike nation.  | 129   |  |       |
| Donations, titles and preuiledges of Monasteries vncertaine.   | 210   |  |       |
| Donations to Churches.   | 230   |  |       |
| Domine of Olma Author of the Iacopins Order.  | 345   |  |       |
| Donation made by Alphonso de la Cerde to the king of Nauarre.                                     | 478   |  |       |
| Dissord betwixt the Governours and Estates of Portugal.  | 1208  |  |       |
| Drought prodigious.  | 13    |  |       |

E

|  |       |
|--|-------|
| Earles and Lieutenants gouerning Spaine.                             | 117   |
| Earle of Cartelonia murdered.  | 189   |
| Earles and Governours of Castile murdered.                           | 195   |
| Earle of Castile detained prisoner in Leon.                          | 207   |
| Earle of Barcelona slaine by the Moores.                             | 219   |
| Earle of Artois sent into Nauarre to punish the rebels of Pampelona. | 405   |
| Earle of Oren the Queene of Portugals mignon slaine.                 | 603   |
| Earle of Gyon seizeth vpon Ouedo.                                    | 648   |
| Earldome of Rouffillon cause of warre betwixt France and Arragon.    | 829   |
| Earle Cifuentes defeated by the Portugals.                    | 853   |
| Earldome of Rouffillon restored to Fernand .                  | 949   |
| Earldomes erected in Portugal by king Alphonso .              | 958   |
| Earthquake in Spaine.  | 874   |
| Earle of Egmont sent into Spaine.                                    | 1119  |
| Ebrahime an Antichristlike.                                   | 1092  |
| Edict to raze towncs standing in the mountains.                      | 121   |
| Edict to ruine the christian churches.                               | 123   |
| Edict made by Hali Hatan against the christians most cruell.  | 211   |
|  | Edict |

The Table.

|   |      |  |       |
|---|------|--|-------|
| Edict against Commanders of places that should resist the king.                     | 497  | Queene of Spaine his sister.   | 1123  |
| Edict against the Jewes.  | 946  | Interview of the Pope, Emp. & French king.   | 1000  |
| Edict against the Genuous trafficking into Spaine.                                  |      | Enemies to the Prince of Spaine.   | 1130  |
|   |      | Englishmens goods arrested in Spaine.  | 1137  |
|   |      | Enterprise vpon Tunes.   | 1173  |
|   |      | Entry of king Philip into Lisbon.  | 1220  |
| Edict against the Moores.   | 1127 | Equity of Hercules the Egyptian.   | 5     |
| Effects of immoderate choller.  | 886  | Equity of the king and Queene of Castile.  | 913   |
| Egise yielded to the Arragonois.  | 467  | Error of Osius.  | 125   |
| Elephants held to be common enemies.  | 95   | Estates without armes are lame.  | 154   |
| Election of the Pope given to the Cardinals at Rome.                                | 239  | Estates of Arragon make warre, peace and leagues.  |       |
| Election of Pedro de Luna to be Pope.   | 649  |  |       |
| Election of worthy men to mannage great affaires.                                   |      | Estates of Monson for the warre of Valencia.   | 368   |
|   |      | Estate of Castile miserable.   | 449   |
|   |      | Estates of Arragon, where the right of representation was put in practise.                         | 480   |
| Election preposterously made.   | 725  | Estate of Sardynia.  | 514   |
| Election of the Master of Saint James in the kings power.                           | 886  | Estates in Arragon, 618. they require reformation on of the kings house.                           | 620   |
| Election of Pope Pius the fifth.  | 1125 | Estates at Burgos for a peace.   | 633   |
| Emulation for honor.  | 55   | Estates at Toro and their remonstrances.   | 689   |
| Emerita now Melida built by the Barbarians.   | 117  | Estates of Navarre at Tafalla.   | 883   |
| Emerald of inestimable price.   | 295  | Estates of Arragon sweare to Prince John.  | 889   |
| Emperour Maximilian and king Fernand reconciled.                                    | 895  | Estate of Isane Queene of Castile mother to the Emperor Charles.                                   | 935   |
| End of reading of histories.  | 123  | Estate of Lisbon vnder D. Antonio.   | 1213  |
| End of Decian the persecutor.   | 124  | Estates of Portugal held at Tamar.   | 1219  |
| End of Tyrants miserable.   |      | Estate of Bellemarch Gouvernor of Navarre.   | 404   |
| End of Count Isidore, his wife and children very miserable.                         | 155  | Excess seems light in a confusion of State.  | 69    |
| End of the Vandales reigne in Affrike.  | 138  | Excesses of Fulvius Nobilior.  | 89    |
| Entry of the Moores into Gaule.   | 172  | Exploits of Quintus Fab. Maximus.  | 100   |
| Envy and ialousie passions in great men.  | 195  | Execution of Spanishe prisoners.   | ibid. |
| Entrevue of the kings of Castile Arragon and Navarre.                               | 387  | Exploits of Brutus the Consul.   | 104   |
| Envy and treachery among the Moores.  | 224  | Execution vpon rebels.   | 107   |
| Entrevue of the kings of Castile, Arragon and Portugal.                             | 446  | Exploits in Spaine by C. Jul. Cesar.   | 112   |
| Entrevue of the kings of Navarre and Castile.                                       | 540  | Exploits of Henry or Ervic king of Gothes.   | 141   |
| Enterprises of king Charles of Navarre detestable.                                  | 605  | Exploits of Leonigilde the Gothe.  | 167   |
| Entrevue of the Emperor Sigismund and the king of Arragon.                          | 678  | Exploits of the Arabians in Spaine.  | 207   |
| Entrevue of Lewis the 11. and the king of Castile.                                  | 773  | Example of Coniugal loue most rare.  | 207   |
| Enterprise of the Master of Saint James.  | 835  | Exploits and conquests of D. Sancho Earle of Castile.  | 219   |
| Entrevue of the king of Castile and the Princess Isabel his sister.                 | 837  | Extremadura and where it lies.   | 233   |
| Entrevue of the kings of Castile and Portugal at Guadalupa.                         | 778  | Exploits of D. Fernand king of Castile against the Moores.   | 237   |
| Entrevue of D. John king of Arragon and D. Fernand his brother.                     | 869  | Exploits of Cid Ruis Dias in Andalusia.  | 247   |
| Entrevue of Queene Isabel and the Duchesse of Viseo touching a peace.               | 874  | Excesses of Cid Ruis Dias, and his banishment out of Castile.                                      | 262   |
| End of the Arabians Monarchy in Spaine.   | 941  | Expedition to the holy warre in Siria.   | 271   |
| Enterprises vpon the Africans Moores.   | 956  | Expedition against the Mahometists.  | 277   |
| Entrevue of the kings of France and Arragon.  | 882  | Exercise of Bishops in that age.   | 277   |
| Enterprise of Oran by Cardinal Ximenes.   | 891  | Exploits of D. Alphonso the 8. against the Moores.   | 278   |
| Enterprise of K. Fernand against the French King.                                   | 919  | Expansions for the times and usurpations of D. Alphonso king of Castile.                           | 283   |
| Enterprises of King Charles and his mother necessary.                               | 957  | Exploits of D. Sancho of Portugal against the Moores.  | 322   |
| Entrevue betwixt Elenor the Emperors sister, and D. Maria of Portugal her daughter. | 1077 | Exploits of Christians against the Moores.   | 340   |
| Entrevue betwixt the French king and the  |      | Exploits of the king of Castile.   | 346   |
|   |      | Expedition of Moores into Spaine.  | 507   |
|   |      | Exploits of the king of Castile and Arragon.   | 546   |
|   |      | Expedition of D. Henry against his brother the king of Castile, 565. his second entry into Spaine. | 573   |
|   |      | Exploits   |       |

The Table.

|  |       |  |      |
|--|-------|--|------|
| Exploits of the Castilians in Navarre.                                 | 594   | Fertility of Sardinia.   | 21   |
| Exploits of the new King of Portugal.                                  | 608   | Fertility and riches of Spaine.  | 25   |
| Exactions vpon the Clergy.   | 629   | D. Fernand Gonzales first Earle of Castile; 200. he is surprized in Navarre & detayned prisoner.   | 205  |
| Excuses of the Queene of Navarre.                                      | 623   | D. Fernand King of Castile assigns portions to his children.   | 223  |
| Exactions cause of tumults in Guipuscoa.                               | 634   | Fernand King of Leon puts away his wife.   | 325  |
| Exploits of war betwixt the Castilians and Moores.                     | 670   | Feast of Triumphus Crucis in Spaine after the victory of Muradal.  | 343  |
| Exploits of the King of Arragon in Castile.                            | 695   | Fernand called the holy proclaimed King of Castile.  | 353  |
| Exploits of the Moores in Andalusia.                                   | 735   | Fernand Dias de los Cameros a conculionar and a rebell.  | 359  |
| Exploits of warre betwixt Navarre & Castile.                           | 737   | Fernand of Castile takes possession of Leon.   | 364  |
| Expedition into Affricke against Tanger.                               | 777   | D. Fernand brother to the King of Castile refuses the realme of Castile, 669. he pretends a title to the Crowne of Arragon, 675. hee is chosen and crowned at Saragossa.   | 677  |
| Execution at Seville.  | 859   | D. Fernand of Portugal a prisoner in Barbary.  | 713  |
| Exploits of the Earle of Lerin in Navarre.                             | 879   | D. Fernand K. of Arragon promised the Moores liberty of conscience. 905. he favours Almand of Albrat against the French King, 929. he is hure at Barcelona. 947. he proues vncharitable, 950. he is desirous to get the realme of Navarre, 962. he retires into Arragon, 881. he enters Naples. 882. his last will, 882. his last will, reformed by the aduice of his counsell, 921. his death, 922. | 922  |
| Executions of the inquisition in Spaine.                               | 885   | Fernand Corres voyage to the Indies, 876. hee is deprived of his gouernment of Mexico, 1006.   | 1006 |
| Exploits of Gonfalo Hernandez of Cordona surname the great Capitaine.  | 954   | Fernand Infante of Spaine borne.   | 979  |
| Excuses of the Catholike King for not maintaining a peace with France. | 873   | Fez wonne by the Xeriffe Mahomet, 1189. hee abandons it to the Turkes.   | 1192 |
| Exploits of Pedro Navarre at Arzilla.                                  | 887   | Fire from whence the Pyrenees tooke their name.  | 15   |
| Extremities of the Spaniard at the Indies.                             | 891   | Fight at sea betwixt Lelins and Asdrubal.  | 72   |
| Exploits of Gaston of Foix.  | 901   | Fire kindled in the Queene of Castiles haire by the Sunne beames.  | 778  |
| Exploits of Vasco Nugno of Bilbao at the Indies.                       | 906   | Fight at sea betwixt the French and Genoueses.   | 863  |
| Exploits of King Manuell in Affricke.                                  | 922   | Fleet of Christians at Messina.  | 1163 |
| Exactions of Pope Leo hindred by Cardinal Ximenes.                     | 946   | Flatterers cause. D. Sancho to rebell against the King his brother.  | 203  |
| Excesse committed by the Duke of Infantazgo.                           | 947   | Force of an army should be of natural subjects.  | 46   |
| Exploits of the Spanish army in Bearne.                                | 973   | Forces against Sertorius in Spaine.  | 110  |
| Excesses of Bouguillo Prouost of the Court.                            | 961   | D. Fortune King of Nauarre makes him-selfe a Monke.  | 198  |
| Extorsions of the E. vpon the Germaines.                               | 1035  | Foundations of Monasteries by the Princes, of Spaine.  | 217  |
| Excesse of a disordred soldiary.                                       | 1143  | Fort of Nauaret built.   | 328  |
| Exploits of the Marquis of Velez.                                      | ibid. | Forces of the Knights of Saint James.  | 310  |
|  |       | Foundation of Bilbao.  | 444  |
|  |       | Forme of the King of Nauarres othe to his subjects.  | 626  |
|  |       | Fontarabie besieged and the sege raised.   | 856  |
|  |       | Fort built by the Spaniard on the firme land at the Indies.  | 890  |
|  |       | Fort demanteled in Nauarre.  | 932  |
|  |       | Fort built in Affricke.  | 918  |
|  |       | Fontaraby taken by the French 966. recovered by the Spaniards.   | 972  |
|  |       | Forces of the Emperor Charles at his going to Tunes.   | 987  |
|  |       | Forces of Barberoussa in Tunes.  | 988  |
|  |       | Fort   |      |

The Table.

Fort built at Diu by the Portugals 997. befeigned
 by the Turkes. 998
 Fort built by the Spaniards in the Ifland of Gerbe, 1088. befeigned and taken by the Turkes. 1093
 Fort built at Tunes taken by the Turkes. 1174 Forces sent into Ireland by the Pope and king of
 Spaine. 1219
 Friends farre off are flow to succor. 38
 Friend tried at need. 109
 French invade Gaule. 130
 French defeated in Spaine. 139
 Freila murders his brother. 174
 French drawne into Spaine by the Moores diuifi-
 ons. 176
 French defeated at Ronceuaul. 181
 Fraud of the king of Nauarre ill executed. 287
 French king fauors the king of Nauarre. 300
 Frederic of Arragon feizeth vpon Sicile. 439
 French defeated by the Catalans in Greece. 456
 French succors fruteffe for Castile. 615
 Frederic Duke of Benauent a prifoner. 647
 Frederic duke of Arione dies in prifon. 698 Frederic of Arragon Earle of Luna a prifoner in Castile. 708
 French spoile Guipufcoa. 856
 Frederic Henricus confined into Sicile. 887 Francis Phelms entrench into Nauarre, and is poyf-
 ned. 898
 Francis Ximenes of Cisneros Archbishop of Teledo, 956. hee is made a Cardinal. 884. his conscience, forefront and magnanimity, 892. hee is made Gouvernor of Castile, 924. his prouidence for the peace of Spaine, ibid. his wifdome to maintaine his Authority, 927. he is an enemy to the Genouefes, 940. he is ambitious and impari-ent of iniuries, ibid. he maintaines his authority refolutely, 944. he is poisoned, 952. his fpeech to the Infant D. Ferdinand, ibid. his death and dispofition. 958
 Franget yeelds Fontaraby basely to the Spaniards, and is degraded. 973
 Francis the French king taken at Pauia. 974
 Francis Pizarro murdered at Peru. 1027
 Francis Drakes first voiage to the Indies. 1172
 Fury of Barbarians brutifh. 108
 Funerals of Iohn king of Portugal. 706
 Fulminations of Pope Iulio againft Lewis 12. 903
 French defeated at fea by the Spaniards. 1223
 Forts built at the Terceires. 1226

G

Gardines of Valencia. 27
 Gaditains call the Carthag. into Spaine. 47 32
 Galla father to M. Iulius. 68
 Gaditains offer to yeeld vnto the Romans. 68 Galsa a victor defeated by his rafhneffe, 98. hee is sent to fuppreffe the rebels in Spaine. 119
 Galicia made a kingdome. 191
 Garcia Earle of Castile murdered. 229
 Garcia king of Galicia difpoffeft, 241. he is made a prey to his enemy by reafon of his tiranies. 242

Garcia Almoravid head of a faction. 495
 Gaffon Earle of Foix fuccors the Nauarrois. 500
 Gardes fet about the Popes pallace. 664 Garcia Mendez of Badaiois flaine at Burgos by the mutinous multitude. 802
 D. Garcia de Toledo in difgrace. 1124
 Galere taken from the Moores. 1151
 D. Geoffrey gouernor or Earle of Barcelona. 186
 Genealogy of Ouiedo and Leon. 195
 Genealogy of Castile. 200
 Genealogy of Leon. 216
 Generofity and bounty of king Almenon to D.
 Alphons the fixth king of Castile. 246
 Genealogy of Castile and Leon. ibid.
 Genealogy of Portugal. 327
 Geneufes of the Gibiline faction againft the Arragonois in Sardinia. 502
 Gironne befeigned by the French and taken. 428
 Girdle enchanted. 535
 Gironne a principality for the eldeft fonne of Arra-
 gon. 542
 Gijon yeelded to the king of Castile, and the Earle banished. 654
 Gibraltar taken by the Castilians. 771
 Gibraltar fo called of Tariffe a Moore. 154
 Genoua diuided into factions. 1178
 Gold and filuer forbidden among the antient Maiorquins. 21
 God doth onely raife and ruine Estates. 50
 Gouernment of Spaine giuen to two Pretors. 80
 Gouernment of Spaine vnder the Emperours, 117
 Guernor flaine by a peafant for his exacting.
 118
 Ghofpel preached in Spaine in Tiberius time. ibid.
 Gothes invade the Romaine Empire, 126. they come out of Asia into Europe. 127
 Gothes, Cetes and Gepides all one. ibid.
 Gothes made Arrians by the Romans. 129
 Gothes ambitious and difloyal. 135
 Gothes defeated in Afrike by the Romans. 139
 Gothes kingdome in Spaine ruined. 154
 God not pleased with rebellion, though the Prince be a tyrant. 202
 Gothike feruice changed in Spaine. 254
 Gothike Characters abolifhed in Spaine. 256 Governours appointed in Arragon for the young kings perfon. 346
 Governours among the Moores make themfelues abfolut Lords. 354
 Gouernment of Castile diuided betwixt the Queene mother and the Duke of Pegnafel. 669
 Gouernment of a woman caufe of contention. 719 Gonfalo the great captaine breakes his faith and promife, 996. he is made duke of Terranova &
 Sella, 874. his is honored by king Lewis 12. 883 Gouleta taken by the Emperour, 988. taken againe
 by the Turkes. 1174
 Gouernours made by D. Sebastian going into Affrike. 1200
 Gouernours of Portugal after Henries death. 1207
 Gretians Authors of lies. 2
 Gracchus victory againft the Celtiberians. 92
 Gregory

The Table.

Gregory Bishop of Offia Protector of Vines, 265
Grecians defeated by the Cartelans, 455
Greene crosse the badge of the Knights of Calatraua, 676
Granado yielded to the Kings of Castile, 940 Greedines of the Flemmings gouerning K. Charles 945.
Greatnes of the King of Spaines dominions, 1095
Gun-powder an ancient inuention, 8
Guadalquivir, the Spring and cource, 16
Guipulco a member of the realme of Nauarre, 201.
Guifts to Elenor of England Queene of Castile in fauour of her marriage, 315
Guipulco yielded to the king of Castile, 335
Guipulcoans enemies to the Nauarrois, 500
Gifts of Henry the 4. king of Castile, 753
Gouernors draw king Philip into Portugall, 1210 they seeke to diffolue the Estates, ibid.

H

Hanno's voyage along the coast of Affricke, 34
Hannibal sent into Spaine. ibi. he is made Gouernor of Spaine, 36. he marcheth towards Italy, 39
Hanno defeated by Scipio, ibid. he is sent againe into Spaine, 61
Hambroz the Moore betrayes the Toledains, 180
Hatred betwixt fīue Christian kings raigning in Spaine, 326
Habit of the knights of Alcantara, 355
Haro Lord of Būcay much honored by the king of Castile, 429 Hatred betwixt D. Iohn Nugnes de Lara, and Don Alphonso of Albuquerque, 532 Hatred among Courtiers cannot be reconciled, but with the ruine of the one partie, 701
Hatred of the Portugueses and Castillians, 1210
Hesperus of whom Italy and Spaine are named, 5
Hercules defeats the Curetes, 9
Heaunes in Gn. Scipio's army without apparent cause, 47
Hermingold a Christian slaine by his fathers commandement, being an Arrian, 141
Henry of Lorrain the stemme of the house of Portugall, 247. he is the first Earle of Portugall, 258.
D. Henry takes vpon him the title of king of Castile, 566. he is defeated in battell, 570. he is releued againe by the French, 572. hee is settled king of Castile, 578. hee is peysoned, 596
D. Henry the 3. proclaymed king of Castile, 628
Hermite an Impostor, 644
D. Henry iubdues his rebels, ibid.
D. Henry Master of the Order of Christ first discovered at sea, 681
D. Henry Infant of Arragon depriued of his lands in Castile, 684
D. Henry de Guzman drowned neere to Gibraltar, 711.

Henry Prince of Castile wonne by the Conftables faction, 726
Henry the fourth king of Castile giues his enemies meanes to make war against him, 783, being destitute of all humane helpe, hee hath recourse vnto God, 784. he is degraded in effigie, and his brother declared King of Castile, 781. his patience, ibid. hee oppresseth his trustie seruants, and dares not deal with his rebels, 796. hee is forsaken by his subiects, 800. his indiscretion 803. his false oath, 825. hee takes no cares for the succcession of the Realme, 841
Hermendades of Castile, 828
Hernando Alarco beheaded, 881
S. Herme at Malta taken by the Turke, 1116
D. Henry king of Portugall, 1204. his proceeding touching the succcession, 1205. his death and disposition, 1207
Hypocritie of the Infant D. Sancho, 417
Hypocritie of the Inquisitors in Spaine, 1123
Horses in Spaine, 27
Hope and Despaire breed like effects at the seerge of Sagunt, 37
Honor and liberty animate valiant men, 66
Hospitality of king Amanan a Moore, 241
Houfe of Būcay, 313
Houfes of Religion built by Alphonso king of Portugall, being excommunicate, 391
Hospitaliers enriched with the spoys of the Templers, 453
Houfes of strength retreats for theeues, ruines in Guipulco, 740
Houfe of Braganza in Portugall, 776
Houfe of Mendoza gouernes the Realme of Castile, 797 Hospital of S. James built for Pilgrimes, 917
Hope of gaine makes vice remaine unpunished, 915.
Hunger in the Emperors army at Alger, 1008
Humanity of Metellus to poore innocents, 100
Huns chase the Gothes out of their conquests, 129
Humanity of the Gothes to the vanquished Sueues, 135.
Humanity of King Hazen to a Christian his prisoner, 214
Huesca taken and the Moores defeated, 204
Humanity and modesty of a Moorish king, 417
Hugb Iudge of Arborea murdered by his subiects 618.
Humanity of Christians to banished Iewes, 947
Husbandrie of Cardinall Ximenes, 937

I

Iaen deliuered to the king of Castile, 376
Iacobins first Inquisitors in Spaine, 1120
Iberians gaue the name to Spaine, 3
Idlenes makes souldiers insolent and malicious, 68.
Idlenes and ease enemies to vertue, 86
S. James taken by the Moores, 219
S. James of Compostella made an Arch-bishoprick, 278.

Don

The Table.

|  |       |   |      |
|--|-------|---|------|
| D. James king of Maiorca dispossessed by his nephew.   | 428   | Indiscretion of D. Gutierrez Fernandes.   | 308  |
| D. James king of Maiorca slain.  | 525   | Interest of the French king to the crowne of Castile.   | 352  |
| Jew Collector of the kings revenues slain in Guipuzcoa.  | 774   | Inhabitants of Pampelona refuse to doe homage to the king of Castile.   | 387  |
| Jewels and plate taken from Churches by the king of Castile.   | 852   | Injustice of D. Pedro king of Arragon to his brother.   | 419  |
| Jewes and converted Moores oppressed upon slanderous reports.  | 992   | Insolencies of the French in Sicile.  | 442  |
| Jewes constrained to be baptized.  | 958   | Invasion of Castile by the king of Granado.   | 573  |
| Ignorance makes people subiect.  | 30    | Integrity of D. John Ramires of Arcellan.   | 601  |
| Ignalada surprized by the Prince of Arragon.   | 788   | Integrity of Leonora Queene of Castile.   | 684  |
| D. John Nagues de Lara defeated and taken prisoner.  | 444   | Intercession for D. Henry Infant of Arragon.  | 684  |
| D. John of Castile brings the Moores into Spaine against the king his brother.   | 438   | Infants of Arragon loose all their land in Castile.   | 704  |
| D. John Alphonsus of Albuquerque poisoned.   | 537   | Insolencies of the Constable of Castile made knowne unto the king.  | 716  |
| D. John of Abendagno murdered by the Lord of Biscay.   | 539   | Insolency of the commons punished.  | 725  |
| D. John de la Cerda slain by the king of Castiles commandement.  | 546   | Ingratitude of Pope Calixtus.   | 755  |
| D. John of Arragon in the king of Castiles presence.   | 547   | Insolency of the confederats in Castile against the Popes Legat.  | 800  |
| D. John Master of Auiz aspires to the gouernment of Portugal, 603. he is chosen king of Portugal, 607. he calls the English into Spaine.   | 613   | Insolency of the Master of Saint James.   | 829  |
| D. John de Pacheco gouerns Prince Henry of Castile.  | 717   | Inquisition in Spaine against Jewes and Moores, and the fruits thereof.   | 870  |
| John king of Arragon pawneth Roussillon to Lewis the French king. 769. he is proclaimed an enemy to the country. 830. his second marriage ominous to the realme of Nauar, 862. he giues the precedence to his son the king of Castile, 864. his death. | 873   | Integrity of king Ferdinand and Queene Isabel.  | 899  |
| John king of Nauar goes into Castile, 962. he is forced to retire into France.   | 903   | Inquisition in Arragon.   | 927  |
| Saint John de Luz burnt by the Spaniards.  | 1006  | Injury don to the kings Receiueurs.   | 931  |
| D. John de Luna flies into France.   | 1076  | Indians gentle and tractable.   | 946  |
| John de la Valette great Master of Malta.  | 1116  | Inuettue made by the Constable Velasco, against Cardinal Ximenes.   | 926  |
| Islands about Spaine.  | 3     | Intreaty of the Infant D. Fernand to Cardinal Ximenes.  | 954  |
| Illicurgis besieged by the Carthaginians, taken by Scipio.   | 66    | Insolency against the kings Officers.   | 961  |
| Illora yeelded to king Ferdinand.  | 917   | Inigo of Loyola and his family.   | 962  |
| Impiety of Valens.   | 126   | Inquisition of Spaine attempted at Mylan.   | 1111 |
| Impatiency of Thibaud Earle of Champagne to reign.   | 366   | Inquisition reiected by the Arragonois.   | 1120 |
| Impiety of Manfroy Frederics bastard.  | 389   | Inquisitors what they be.   | 1130 |
| Imprisonment and murder of D. John Nagues de Prada.  | 536   | Imprisonment of the Prince of Spaine.   | 1130 |
| Imprisonment of the Master of Auiz.  | 599   | Inquisitors sharpe persecutors of Prince Charles.   | 1134 |
| Imprisonment of D. Pedro Manrique.   | 712   | 1134. they are chiefs of the council of Spaine.   | 1135 |
| Imprisonment of Charles Prince of Viana.   | 763   | Insolency of the Spanish soldiers in Granado.   | 1141 |
| Impunity the nurse of all disorders.   | 836   | Insolency of the Spaniards makes the Moores revolt.   | 1149 |
| Impositions cause of troubles.   | 1001  | Isabel king of Granado poisoned.  | 655  |
| Imperial army landed at Alger.   | 1003  | Isabel Queene of Nauar punished by the hand of God.   | 764  |
| Islands of Philippina discovered.  | 1113  | Isabel Queene of Castile deliuered of a daughter vnlawfully begotten.   | 767  |
| Imputations laid upon the Duke of Alba.  | 1216  | Isabel Infanta of Castile, newly borne, declared heire of the realme.   | 768  |
| Indiscretion and rashnesse of Bessures.  | 41    | Isabel borne in Adultery the subiect of all the troubles in Castile, 778. she is made sure to the king of Portugal.                   | 850  |
| Infidelity of the Celtiberians.  | 46    | Isabel wife to the Archduke Philip, heire to Castile and Arragon, 963. sought in her senses.  | 882  |
| Integrity of Paulus Emiliane.  | 86    | D. John of Austria opposite to Prince Charles, 1134. he comes to Granado against the Moores, 1146. his speech to the army at Lepanto. | 1168 |
| Incounter of L. Bibius vnfortunat.   | ibid. | Isabel a chaste Virgin.   | 148  |
| Inuention of Saint James Sepulcher.  | 279   | Saint Iren taken from the Moores.   | 297  |
|  |       | Isabel king of Granado slain by his subiects.   | 471  |
|  |       | Isabel Queene of Castile fauors the Lords against the Constable.  | 743  |

The Table.

|   |      |  |      |
|---|------|--|------|
| Isabella sister to king Henry, reiects the title of Queene of Castile, 805. shee procures a peace in Castile, 806. she marries with Ferdinand of Arragon, 817. her magnanimity, 822. shee is sworne heire to the crowne of Castile, 860. she is carefull to doe Iustice, 867. she pouereth the rebels in Estremadura. | 875  | King of Nauarres lands in Castile forfeited and giuen away.  | 696  |
| Italian an Earle brings the Moores into Spaine.   | 153  | King of Arragon defeated and taken prisoner at sea by the Geneuois.                                | 709  |
| Judges chosen in Castile.   | 196  | Kings of Castile and Nauarre visit the Constable.  | 724  |
| Iustice and treasor the chiefe members of an Estate.  | 846  | King of Castile puts the Constable to death, more through base feare them for the loue of Iustice. | 745  |
| Iustice established in Galicia.   | 884  | King of Nauarre and the Lords pacified and reconciled to the new king of Castile.                  | 759  |
| Iudgement of the Inquisitors against the Prince of Spaine.  | 1131 | King of Castile contemned of his subiects.   | 753  |
| D. John affects to bee king of Tunes, 1174. hee is made gouernor of the Netherlands, 1180. he aspires to the crowne of Eng. 1181.   | 1181 | King of Castile makes warre against Nauarre.   | 766  |
| Kings of Spaine, at the first, what they were.  | 7    | King of Castile reptoohed with the adulterat birth of his supposed daughter.                       | 781  |
| Kingdomes erected in Spaine by the Arabians and Christians.   | 24   | King of Portugal abandons Zamorra, 854. his base courage, 864. he despaires.                       | 865  |
| 1. Kings in the batraille whereas Astila was defeated.  | 134  | King of Manicongo becomes a Christian.   | 950  |
| 1. King forced by his children to leaue his crowne.   | 191  | Kings of France and Arragon diuide the realme of Naples, and dispossesse Frederic.                 | 966  |
| 1. King dispossessed becomes his sons Lieutenant, 1181.   | 235  | King of Nauar and his wife in factions.  | 985  |
| 2. Knights of the Lilly in Nauar.   | 235  | King of Tremessen defeated by the Spaniards.   | 1009 |
| 1. Kings of Spaine doe not acknowledge the Emperor.   | 240  | King of Tunes taken by his sonne.  | 1010 |
| 2. Knights Christians in pay with the Moores.   | 247  | King of Tunes expelled by Vlaccialy.   | 1160 |
| 1. Kings of Castile and Arragon spoile the heire of Nauar of his kingdom.   | 249  | King of Fez defeated by the Xeriffes.  | 1185 |
| 2. Knights of Calatrava first instituted.   | 304  | King of Fez and Marocat warre.   | 1187 |
| 1. Kings of Leon and Castile in quarrel.  | 321  | King of Fez defeated and taken, 1188. he is set at liberty.  | 1195 |
| 1. Kings of Nauar and Leon inuade Castile.  | 330  | Kings of Maroc electiue.   | 1195 |
| 1. King of Castile inuades Nauar.   | 335  | L  |      |
| 1. King of Castile being young deliuered into the hands of them of Lara.  | 350  | Language of the Spaniards at this day.   | 30   |
| 1. King of Leon enters Castile with an army against his owne sonne.   | 354  | Lauron taken by Sertorins in the view of Pompey.   | 110  |
| 1. King of Seuille a Moore, tributary to the king of Castile.   | 363  | Lawes of king Sischnib.  | 146  |
| 1. King of Arragon asketh pardon of the Pope.   | 370  | Law made by the Goxhes not to marry the kings widow.   | 151  |
| 1. King of Nauar confesseth himselfe vassal to him of Castile.  | 387  | Law of defying a towne.  | 246  |
| 1. Kings of Moores dispossessed and chased out of Spaine.   | 388  | Lawrence Suarez betraies king Aben Hut, who had entertained him in his exile.                      | 371  |
| 1. Kingdome of Tremessen.   | 408  | Lands called Beetries in Biscay &c.  | 533  |
| 1. King of Marq passeth into Spaine.  | 409  | Lands of the crowne giuen in recompence of seruice.  | 622  |
| King of Maiorca dispossessed by his brother.  | 422  | Lands confiscated being giuen away hinder the peace.   | 715  |
| King of Arragon set the Infants of Cerde at liberty.  | 434  | Lamentation of Isabella of Castile.  | 942  |
| King of Granado deposed.  | 455  | Landgraue of Hessen feared by the Emperour.  | 1116 |
| King of Arragon makes warre against the Moores of Affrike.  | 482  | Lebrissa and the beginning.  | 8    |
| King of Castile inuades Portugal with an army.  | 503  | Leon taken by the Christians.  | 171  |
| Knights in Castile executed.  | 553  | League of Christian Princes and Moores in Spaine against the French.                               | 181  |
| King of Nauarre fends for his wife.   | 643  | Leon the Christians chiefe city taken by the Arabians.   | 213  |
| King of Castile besieged by his own subiects.   | 683  | League betwixt the king of Castile and Prince of Arragon against Nauar.                            | 289  |

The Table.

|  |      |  |       |
|--|------|--|-------|
| Lewis the French king quits his right to Castile.   | 395  | Loues and vanities of Henry called the Vnable, king of Castile.   | 760   |
| League and marriage betwixt Nauar and Arragon.   | 491  | Loose life of Joane Queene of Castile.  | 801   |
| Leonora de Guzman mistress to the king of Castile, ill treated by the widow, 531. she is murdered by the Queenes commandement. | 533  | Lords holding the party of Fernand and Isabella and their opposits.  | 846   |
| Leagues full of Infidelity.  | 573  | Loue of a brother to his brother.  | 872   |
| Leonora Queene of Nauar light and vnkinde.  | 622  | Loxa besieged by the Castilians.   | 916   |
| League against Aluiz de Lara the Constable.   | 690  | Lord of Chaux sent for a third Gouvernor into Spaine.  | 943   |
| League treated to the prejudice of the king of Castile.  | 643  | Logrogne besieged by the French and releued by the Castilians.   | 965   |
| Leonora of Arragon restrained by the king of Castile.   | 697  | Loss received by the pirats of Arger.  | 1129  |
| League made by the king of Nauar broken.   | 730  | Lusius of whom comes Lusitania.  | 6     |
| Learning cherished by D. Alphons king of Arragon.   | 756  | Lusitanians defeated by Catinus .   | 86    |
| Leonora Pimentel, Countesse of Plaifance of a noble courage.  | 820  | Lucillus retires from Palenza with shame.   | 97    |
| Lewis of Beaumont affects the realme of Nauarre, 861. he is made Marquis of Huesca.   | 954  | Lusitanians revolt and defeat the Romans.  | 109   |
| League made against the Venetians.   | 879  | Lust of D. Alphons king of Castile.   | 315   |
| Learning and armes vnited, make a man compleat.  | 1182 | M  |       |
| Legionary souldiers inuented by Card. Ximenes .   | 928  | Madrid sometimes called Mantua .   | 11    |
| League against the Emperor Charles .  | 975  | Maioirquins expert in slings.  | 21    |
| Letters from king Charles to discharge Cardinal Ximenes .  | 957  | Manners of the Spaniards in general.   | 29    |
| League betwixt the Pope and Emperor.   | 918  | Magnanimity of the Numantins.  | ibid. |
| Lewis Prince of Sauoy dies in Spaine.   | 996  | Mafinissa a cruel Aduersary to the Romans.  | 46    |
| League made by the Princes of Germany and the French king against the Emperor.   | 1035 | L. Martins chosen general of the Roman army.  | 52    |
| League concluded betwixt the Pope, king of Spaine and the Venetians.   | 1160 | Maiefty ioyned with modesty in P. Scipio .  | 57    |
| Liberty deere to the Spaniards.  | 28   | L. Martins honoured by Scipio .  | 57    |
| Liberty of Christians among the Moores in Spaine.  | 187  | Mandanius and Indibilis revolt to the Romans.  | 58    |
| Limits betwixt Nauar and Arragon.  | 287  | Mafina Nephew to Maf. issa prisoner to the Romans.   | 60    |
| Lisbone taken from the Moores.   | 297  | Mans .  | 63    |
| Limitation of the Authority of Iustice Maior of Arragon.   | 524  | Mago and Mafinissa charge the Romans.  | 65    |
| Lisbone spoiled and burnt by the king of Portugal, 585. besieged by the Castilians.  | 604  | Mafinissa practised by Sillanus .  | 65    |
| Liberality of the new king of Portugal.  | 612  | Mago brother to Hans : al hopes to recour Spaine.  | 72    |
| Lisbone made an Archbishopprike.   | 621  | 72. hee spoiles the Gaditans, 74. hee makes a vaine attempt vpon new Carthage.   | 75    |
| Liberty of religion granted to the Moores.   | 940  | Manner of the Empurians lyuing.  | 80    |
| Limits of the Spaniards and Portugals nauigations made by the Pope.  | 950  | Magnanimity & clemency of Brutus to rebels.   | 104   |
| Library gathered by Diego Colombus .  | 881  | Magnanimity called to Rome to answer the ignominious accord made with the Numantins.   | ibid. |
| Lima called the city of kings.   | 1007 | is deliuered bound to the Numantins.   | 123   |
| Lisbone refuseth the king of Spaines letters.  | 1206 | Martirs at Saragossa.  | 161   |
| it yeelds to king Philip .  | 1214 | Manners of the Arabians.   | ibid. |
| Loue of subjects to their Prince.  | 205  | Mabumer his birth, and country, ibid. his doctrine published in Heraclius time, ibid. his death and childre, 162. he was ignorant of all learning. | 163   |
| Loue of integrity of D. Pedro d' Ansueros .   | 274  | Magnuza a Christian seruing the Moores forreth Pelagus sister.   | 169   |
| Lope de Hitero made Bishop of Cordoua.  | 371  | Marriage secretly made seuerely punished.  | 179   |
| Loyalty ill rewarded makes a good seruant deperate.  | 509  | Martirs vnder the Moores.  | 211   |
| Loues of D. Pedro king of Castile.  | 533  | Marriage for loue, vnfortunate.  | ibid. |
| Loue of the Earle of Lerin to the Prince Charles .  | 754  | Marriage betwixt a Christian and an Infidel reproued of God.   | 220   |
|  |      | Marriage of D. Alphons king of Castile with a Moore.  | 257   |
|  |      | Marriage of the daughter of Cid Ruis Dias .   | 262   |
|  |      | Maiorca taken by the Cattelans.  | 266   |
|  |      | Marriage of the Countesse of Portugal detestable.  | 271   |
|  |      | Magnanimity of king D. Alphons .  | 274   |
|  |      | Marrique de Lara slaine before Huete.   | 312   |
|  |      | Marriage betwixt Lewis of France and D. Blanch of Castile.   | 336   |
|  |      | Marquis of Villena valiant and charitable.   | 351   |
|  |      | Marriage of D. Henry king of Castile forced.  | 358   |
|  |      | Marriage of the king D. Sancho Capello .  | 358   |
|  |      | Marriage of the Infant D. Alphons of Portugal and Isabel of Castile.   | 378   |
|  |      | Marriage of D. Frederic of Castile with Blanche daughter of France.  | 395   |
|  |      | Manfroy vanquished and slaine by the French.  | 413   |
|  |      | Marriage of Charles 1. king of Nauarre.   | 475   |
|  |      | Mary of Naples Queene of Maiorca, vnchast.  | 502   |
|  |      | Maiorca conquered by the king of Arragon.   | 520   |
|  |      | Maffaker of Iewes in Nauarre.  | 476   |
|  |      | Mahumet king of Granada murdered by his subiects.   | 495   |
|  |      | Marriage of D. Pedro king of Arragon with the Infanta of Portugal.  | 523   |
|  |      | Marriage treated of betwixt D. Pedro king of Castile and Blanch of Bourbon.  | 533   |
|  |      | Malandrins passe into Spaine.  | 566   |
|  |      | Marriage vnlawful of the king of Portugal.   | 583   |
|  |      | Marriage of D. Martin of Arragon, with Mary heire of Sicile.   | 621   |
|  |      | Marriage betwixt the heire of Albuquerque and the king of Castiles brother.  | 628   |
|  |      | Majority of D. Henry king of Castile.   | 614   |
|  |      | Marriage of D. Martin king of Sicile and Donna Blanch of Nauarre.  | 667   |
|  |      | Marriage of D. Henry king of Arragon with the Joane of Prades.   | 673   |
|  |      | Marriage betwixt D. Alphons of Arragon and D. Maria of Castile.  | 677   |
|  |      | Madeira discovered.  | 681   |
|  |      | Marriage forced betwixt D. Henry of Arragon and D. Catherine of Castile.   | 683   |
|  |      | Marfeilles surprized by the king of Arragon.   | 687   |
|  |      | Mahumer defeated and Granada taken by Joseph Aben Almao .  | 702   |
|  |      | Magnanimity of Alphonso king of Arragon.  | 710   |
|  |      | Marriage of the Prince of Castile with the Infanta of Nauar.   | 717   |
|  |      | Marriage of the king of Nauarre with D. Ioane Henriques .   | 727   |
|  |      | Manner of reforming Nuns in Castile.   | 754   |
|  |      | Marquis of Villena becomes a pensioner to the French king.   | 773   |
|  |      | Magnanimity of the Infanta D. Isabella .  | 795   |
|  |      | Magnanimity and Iustice of D. Alphons of Castile.   | 802   |
|  |      | Marriage concluded betwixt Charles Duke of Guienne and D. Joane of Castile.  | 824   |
|  |      | Marriage of John Prince of Portugal with D. Leonora of Visco.  | 819   |
|  |      | Marshall of Nauarre treacherously slaine.  | 832   |
|  |      | Massacre of the new Christians.  | 834   |
|  |      | Marquis of Santillana surprizeth Carion.   | 839   |
|  |      | Marquis of Villena taken prisoner by his competitor, 841. he begins to adhere to king Fernand and Isabella , 854. hee is reconciled vnto them.                   | 877   |
|  |      | Mahumetaine hermite a murderer.   | 925   |
|  |      | Malaga yeelded to the king of Castile.   | 926   |
|  |      | Masterhip of Calatraua incorporated to the crowne of Castile.  | 934   |
|  |      | Marquis of Villena valiant and charitable.   | 937   |
|  |      | Marriage betwixt the Infant D. Alphons of Portugal and Isabel of Castile.  | 938   |
|  |      | Mastership of Saint James in the king of Castiles hands as Administrator.  | 949   |
|  |      | Marriage of the king of Arragon with Germaine of Foix.  | 880   |
|  |      | Mafines received pay among the Spaniards at the Indies.   | 916   |
|  |      | Magellanes and Faliero Portugals seruice in Castile.   | 923   |
|  |      | Magnanimity of Cardinal Ximenes .   | 947   |
|  |      | Marquis of Aguilar Gouvernor to D. Fernand .  | 955   |
|  |      | Maia a strong fort taken by the Castilians.  | 966   |
|  |      | Maiorquins vanquished and punished.   | 968   |
|  |      | Maximes of the point of honor at this day.   | 972   |
|  |      | Marriage of the Emperor Charles .   | 975   |
|  |      | Marriage of the Duke of Sauoy with D. Beatrix of Portugal.  | 977   |
|  |      | Marriage of John king of Portugal with the Emperors sister.   | 978   |
|  |      | Marriage of Philip Prince of Spaine with the Infanta of Portugal.   | 1008  |
|  |      | Marriage of Joane heire of Nauar to Antonio duke of Vendosme.  | 1025  |
|  |      | Marshall of Termes defeated by the Spaniards.  | 1081  |
|  |      | Marriage of the king of Spaine with Elizabeth of France.  | 1082  |
|  |      | Markes of the antiquity of Spaine.   | 1095  |
|  |      | Malta besieged by the Turkes.  | 1114  |
|  |      | Manner of the Inquisitors proceeding in Spaine.  | 1025  |
|  |      | Massacre of Moores that were in prison.  | 1146  |
|  |      | Marc Antonio Colonna perswads D. John to fight with the Turkes.  | 1165  |
|  |      | Mahomet the sonne of Abdalla expelled by Moluc his vnkle.   | 1197  |
|  |      | Marriage concluded betwixt Catherine Infanta of Spaine and the Duke of Sauoy.   | 1229  |
|  |      | Messina cause of the first Punike warre.  | 35    |
|  |      | Memorable defeat of Moores.  | 178   |
|  |      | Memory of D. Sancho Abarca .  | 202   |
|  |      | Metropolitaine of Languedoc vnder the Primat of Toledo.  | 255   |
|  |      | Men of learning admitted into the counsell of Castile.   | 379   |
|  |      | Menault second king of the Canaries fels the Islands to them of Seule.  | 680   |
|  |      | Merzalguibir a Port in Affrike taken by the Castilians.  | 877   |
|  |      | Mexico at the Indies taken by the Christians.  | 965   |
|  |      | Metz besieged by the Emperor.  | 1035  |
|  |      | Medina del Campo surprized by the confederats.   | 720   |
|  |      | Mendos speech to the French king, and his answer.   | 1230  |
|  |      | Mines in Spaine.   | 25    |
|  |      | Military exercises done by Scipio .   | 57    |
|  |      | Miseries of a place besieged.  | 108   |
|  |      | Mistaking the ruine of Pompey army.   | 116   |
|  |      | Mildnesse and Christian bounty of king Stizemb .  | 146   |
|  |      | Mignon of the Queene of Portugals drawes Castile and Portugal into armes.  | 600   |
|  |      | Miseries of ciuill warre.  | 629   |

The Table.

|  |     |  |      |
|--|-----|--|------|
| Marriage of the Infant of Castile with D. Violant of Arragon.   | 378 | Mastership of Saint James in the king of Castiles hands as Administrator.            | 949  |
| Marriage of D. Frederic of Castile with Blanche daughter of France.  | 395 | Marriage of the king of Arragon with Germaine of Foix.                        | 880  |
| Manfroy vanquished and slaine by the French.  | 413 | Mafines received pay among the Spaniards at the Indies.                       | 916  |
| Marriage of Charles 1. king of Nauarre.   | 475 | Magellanes and Faliero Portugals seruice in Castile.                   | 923  |
| Mary of Naples Queene of Maiorca, vnchast.  | 502 | Magnanimity of Cardinal Ximenes .   | 947  |
| Maiorca conquered by the king of Arragon.   | 520 | Marquis of Aguilar Gouvernor to D. Fernand .                                  | 955  |
| Maffaker of Iewes in Nauarre.  | 476 | Maia a strong fort taken by the Castilians.  | 966  |
| Mahumet king of Granada murdered by his subiects.   | 495 | Maiorquins vanquished and punished.   | 968  |
| Marriage of D. Pedro king of Arragon with the Infanta of Portugal.  | 523 | Maximes of the point of honor at this day.   | 972  |
| Marriage treated of betwixt D. Pedro king of Castile and Blanch of Bourbon.  | 533 | Marriage of the Emperor Charles .   | 975  |
| Malandrins passe into Spaine.  | 566 | Marriage of the Duke of Sauoy with D. Beatrix of Portugal.                    | 977  |
| Marriage vnlawful of the king of Portugal.   | 583 | Marriage of John king of Portugal with the Emperors sister.                   | 978  |
| Marriage of D. Martin of Arragon, with Mary heire of Sicile.   | 621 | Marriage of Philip Prince of Spaine with the Infanta of Portugal.             | 1008 |
| Marriage betwixt the heire of Albuquerque and the king of Castiles brother.  | 628 | Marriage of Joane heire of Nauar to Antonio duke of Vendosme.          | 1025 |
| Majority of D. Henry king of Castile.   | 614 | Marshall of Termes defeated by the Spaniards.  | 1081 |
| Marriage of D. Martin king of Sicile and Donna Blanch of Nauarre.  | 667 | Marriage of the king of Spaine with Elizabeth of France.                      | 1082 |
| Marriage of D. Henry king of Arragon with the Joane of Prades.   | 673 | Markes of the antiquity of Spaine.   | 1095 |
| Marriage betwixt D. Alphons of Arragon and D. Maria of Castile.  | 677 | Malta besieged by the Turkes.  | 1114 |
| Madeira discovered.  | 681 | Manner of the Inquisitors proceeding in Spaine.                                      | 1025 |
| Marriage forced betwixt D. Henry of Arragon and D. Catherine of Castile.   | 683 | Massacre of Moores that were in prison.  | 1146 |
| Marfeilles surprized by the king of Arragon.   | 687 | Marc Antonio Colonna perswads D. John to fight with the Turkes.        | 1165 |
| Mahumer defeated and Granada taken by Joseph Aben Almao .  | 702 | Mahomet the sonne of Abdalla expelled by Moluc his vnkle.       | 1197 |
| Magnanimity of Alphonso king of Arragon.  | 710 | Marriage concluded betwixt Catherine Infanta of Spaine and the Duke of Sauoy. | 1229 |
| Marriage of the Prince of Castile with the Infanta of Nauar.   | 717 | Messina cause of the first Punike warre.                                      | 35   |
| Marriage of the king of Nauarre with D. Ioane Henriques .   | 727 | Memorable defeat of Moores.  | 178  |
| Manner of reforming Nuns in Castile.   | 754 | Memory of D. Sancho Abarca .  | 202  |
| Marquis of Villena becomes a pensioner to the French king.   | 773 | Metropolitaine of Languedoc vnder the Primat of Toledo.                              | 255  |
| Magnanimity of the Infanta D. Isabella .  | 795 | Men of learning admitted into the counsell of Castile.                               | 379  |
| Magnanimity and Iustice of D. Alphons of Castile.   | 802 | Menault second king of the Canaries fels the Islands to them of Seule.        | 680  |
| Marriage concluded betwixt Charles Duke of Guienne and D. Joane of Castile.  | 824 | Merzalguibir a Port in Affrike taken by the Castilians.                              | 877  |
| Marriage of John Prince of Portugal with D. Leonora of Visco.  | 819 | Mexico at the Indies taken by the Christians.  | 965  |
| Marshall of Nauarre treacherously slaine.  | 832 | Metz besieged by the Emperor.  | 1035 |
| Massacre of the new Christians.  | 834 | Medina del Campo surprized by the confederats.                                       | 720  |
| Marquis of Santillana surprizeth Carion.   | 839 | Mendos speech to the French king, and his answer.                             | 1230 |
| Marquis of Villena taken prisoner by his competitor, 841. he begins to adhere to king Fernand and Isabella , 854. hee is reconciled vnto them. | 877 | Mines in Spaine.   | 25   |
| Mahumetaine hermite a murderer.   | 925 | Military exercises done by Scipio .   | 57   |
| Malaga yeelded to the king of Castile.   | 926 | Miseries of a place besieged.  | 108  |
| Masterhip of Calatraua incorporated to the crowne of Castile.  | 934 | Mistaking the ruine of Pompey army.   | 116  |
| Marquis of Villena valiant and charitable.   | 937 | Mildnesse and Christian bounty of king Stizemb .                              | 146  |
| Marriage betwixt the Infant D. Alphons of Portugal and Isabel of Castile.  | 938 | Mignon of the Queene of Portugals drawes Castile and Portugal into armes.            | 600  |
|  |     | Miseries of ciuill warre.  | 629  |

The Table.

|   |      |
|---|------|
| Mildnesse in a Prince without Injustice and severity, is hurtfull both to himselfe and his Estate.  | 751  |
| Misfortune in the king of Portugals voiage, into Affrike.   | 778  |
| Ministers of Justice punished exemplarily.  | 936  |
| Minorca spoiled by Barbarossa .  | 993  |
| Marriage of the Duke of Sauoy and the Infanta D. Catharina in Spaine.  | 1231 |
| Mountaine of Idubeda.   | 15   |
| Mountaines called Ianibals Ladders.   | 16   |
| Moore both in Cesar and Pompeis armies.   | 115  |
| Monarchy of the Gothes in Spaine.   | 146  |
| Moore defeated by D. Garcia K. of Ouedo .   | 191  |
| Moore of Barcelona tributaries to the French.   | 778  |
| Moore of Barcelona tributaries to the French, defeated by D. Ordago king of Leon.  | 194  |
| Moore drawne into Galicia by a Bishops faction.   | 212  |
| Moore drawne into Spaine by D. Alphonso king of Castile.   | 257  |
| Moore defeated by D. Alphonso .  | 275  |
| Modesty of greater force then armes.  | 278  |
| Moore spoile Toledo and Castile, 331. they invade Portugal.   | 332  |
| Moore of Seuille defeated.  | 361  |
| Moore expelled out of Minorca.  | 431  |
| Mother perswades her sonne to reuenge his fathers death.  | 434  |
| Moore raised from the sege of Siles and defeated.   | 508  |
| Monster borne in Cattelonia, slaine by the parents and they punished.   | 520  |
| Moore take Algezire.  | 579  |
| Modesty of D. Pedro Infant of Portugal.  | 706  |
| Moore of Granada drawne by the king of Nauar into Castile, 735. defeated nere vnto Arcos.   | 742  |
| Moore make furious sallies vpon the Christians, 897. they are defeated and their king taken by the Castillans.  | 900  |
| Melucca's found in the Castillans nauigation.  | 950  |
| Moore Mudeiars enforced to change their religion.   | 961  |
| Moore persecuted in Spaine.   | 964  |
| Moore strong and fit for the warre.   | 931  |
| Moore curious and superstitious.  | 1009 |
| Moore ill treated in Spaine.  | 1127 |
| Moore vnnaturall, 1145. they are thrust out of Granada, 1149. they are defeated by D. John of Austria, 1152. after an accord made their tract. | 1153 |
| Mutines resolute to submit them to Scipios mercy.  | 70   |
| Multituds in armies not alwaies of greatest effect.   | 340  |
| Murder of Garcia Lasso de la Vega .  | 484  |
| Murder of the Constable of France by the king of Nauar.   | 541  |
| Murder of D. Agnes de Castro .   | 549  |
| Murder of D. Philip de Castro .  | 580  |
| Murder of the Archbishop of Saragossa.  | 675  |
| Murder committed by the Earle of Lerin.   | 884  |
| Mutiny vnder a shew of religion.  | 918  |
| Muley Boabdellin submits himselfe to the kings of Castile.   | 936  |
| Mutines at the Indies through enuy.   | 918  |
| Murmuring of the Spaniards against Card. Ximenes .   | 928  |
| Multitude of Officers in the treasury hurtfull to the state.  | 937  |
| Muley Hefcen king of Tunes dispossessed by Barbarossa and restored by the Emperor.  | 984  |
| Muley Buafor demands succors in Spaine.  | 1025 |
| Murthers done by the Moore of Granada.  | 1140 |
| Muley Moluc speech of D. Sebastian .  | 1200 |
| Mutiny at Naples.   | 1232 |

N

|  |      |
|--|------|
| Nature and manners of the Spaniards.   | 27   |
| Nauar and Arragon vnited.  | 189  |
| Nauarrois defeated, and their king Don Garcia taken prisoner by the Earle of Castile.                       | 206  |
| Nauarre vassal to Castile, 286. invaded by the kings of Castile and Arragon, 316. he sends Ambassadors to Castile. | 336  |
| Nauarre vnder the protection of the French.  | 404  |
| Nauigations and conquests of Spaniards in the Ocean.   | 870  |
| Nauigations of the Portugals.  | 931  |
| Nauarre vnited to the crowne of Castile.   | 919  |
| Nauy sent into Flanders for king Charles .  | 952  |
| C. Nero sent Pretor into Spaine.  | 50   |
| Negligence of captaines punished sometimes at Rome.  | 103  |
| Nephew betraies his vncl through ambition.   | 704  |
| Nice the first General council.  | 124  |
| Nicholas Ouando Governour at the Indies.  | 976  |
| Nomination of Bishops belonged to the kings of Spaine.   | 151  |
| Noblemen of France at the sege of Saragossa.   | 271  |
| Nobility of Castile defend their liberties.  | 321  |
| Number of the dead at the battaile of Muradal.   | 341  |
| Nomination of the Bishop of Maiorca.   | 363  |
| Noblemen murdered by the commandement of D. Pedro king of Castile.  | 532  |
| Noblemen of Castile slaine at Aliubarota.  | 609  |
| Noblemen at the king of Nauarres coronation.   | 627  |
| Nobility of Castile defiled by their alliances with conuerted Iewes.   | 947  |
| Number of the Christian army going to Tripoly.   | 1084 |
| Nobility of the kings of Spaine.   | 1095 |
| Number of the dead at the battaile of Lepanto.   | 1169 |
| Numantia attempted in vaine by Q. Pompeius .  | 103  |
| Numantins reduced to extremity.  | 108  |
| Nugno de Lara vanquished by the Moore and slaine.   | 409  |
| Number of the French army at the Terceres.   | 1221 |

The Table.

|   |       |
|---|-------|
| Obstinacy of the Barbarians.  | 104   |
| Oppa Archbishop of Seuille, an Apostate.   | 170   |
| Ouedo built.   | 174   |
| Ouedo called the townes of Bishops and made an Archbishopprie.   | 190   |
| Ouedo sappiest in the kings titles.  | 199   |
| D. Ordago king of Leon puts a way his wife.  | 204   |
| Offences die not vnpunished.  | 218   |
| Order of the knights of Saint Sauior.   | 273   |
| Orders for the nobility of Nauarre.   | 287   |
| Order of Saint Iames instituted.  | 317   |
| Order of Calatraua.   | 319   |
| Order of the knights of Alcantara.  | 347   |
| Order of preaching Friars.  | 355   |
| Order of knights called de la Merced.   | 357   |
| Order Seraphical of Saint Francis.  | ibid. |
| Order of the knights of Christus instituted in Portugal.  | 453   |
| Obseruation in Philip the Faire and his posterity.   | 459   |
| Order of Montesa in Arragon.  | 465   |
| Oth recipocall betwixt the king and his subiects.   | 471   |
| Order of knights of the band.   | 489   |
| Obedience of the Noblemen of Castile to their king.   | 499   |
| Order betwixt Toledo and Burgos for precdence.  | 527   |
| Orders for Iewes apparel.   | 580   |
| Order of Saint Ierome in Spaine.  | 586   |
| Ordonances made by D. John king of Castile in his last testament.  | 629   |
| Orders for the gouernment of the realme of Castile.   | ibid. |
| Order for the gouernment of Castile.  | 637   |
| Orders for the giuing of spirituall liuings.  | 641   |
| Officers called in question.  | 659   |
| Order of the golden fleece instituted.  | 696   |
| Outrage committed by a Moore in Seuille vnpunished.   | 776   |
| Opinion of the Biscains concerning Bishops.   | 863   |
| Orders for the quiet of the realme of Nauar.  | 894   |
| Order touching the gouernment of Castile.   | 851   |
| Oran in Affrike taken miraculously.   | 893   |
| Order of the Nuns called the Conception.  | 900   |
| Orders for the Indies.  | 930   |
| Outrage committed by the Earle of Vregna.   | 948   |
| Oran besegged by the Turkes and valiantly defended.   | 1077  |
| Occasion of a victory lost by the Christians.   | 1086  |
| Order of the Christians army at Gerbe.  | 1087  |
| Oran besegged againe and well defended.   | 1112  |
| Obiects against the Prince of Spaine.   | 1130  |
| Order of the Christians and Turkes armies at Lepanto.   | 1168  |
| Passion in Amilcar the ruine of his country.   | 35    |
| Parle betwixt Masiniissa and Scipio .   | 74    |
| Palantines among the Spaniards.   | 106   |
| Pampelone begun.  | 112   |
| Pallardise the ruine of the Gothes kingdome.  | 157   |
| Palence restored to the king of Nauarre.  | 230   |
| Parricide among the Princes of Cattelonia.  | 234   |
| Papacy disputed by armes.   | 276   |
| Parliament at Toledo for the Moore warre.   | 339   |
| Pamplona in sedition, 346. diuided into two factions.   | 405   |
| Parricides committed by Conrade .  | 412   |
| Pablo a Iew conuerted, a learned Doctor and of a good life.  | 658   |
| Pampelona made one body.  | 689   |
| Pardon granted to the confederats.  | 731   |
| Parliament at Toledo.   | 880   |
| Pastors being negligent cause persecutions.   | 946   |
| Pampelona besegged in vaine by king John .   | 910   |
| it is abandoned by the Castillans, 962. it is taken by the Lords of Asperaut.   | 965   |
| Passage of king Francis a prisoner into Spaine.  | 974   |
| Pardon for the Moore proclaimed.  | 1145  |
| Perpenna and his confederats murder Serriorius , 111. he is punished for his treason.   | 112   |
| Pelagius the first king of the Asturias, 168. he flees into the mountaines, 169. he styles himselfe king of Ouedo .   | 171   |
| Pelagius a religious man cruelly murdered.   | 194   |
| Peace betwixt Nauarre and Castile.  | 289   |
| Peace betwixt Nauarre and Arragon.  | 303   |
| Pero Nugnes a faithfull vassal to his king.  | 309   |
| D. Pedro king of Arragon slaine in France.   | 345   |
| D. Pedro of Arragon drawes his brother.  | 401   |
| D. Pedro Sanches of Montagu, regent of Nauarre, 402. he is murdered.   | 405   |
| Peace betwixt France and Arragon.   | 436   |
| Perpignan taken by the French.   | 427   |
| Peace betwixt Nauarre and Castile.  | 501   |
| D. Pedro king of Castile, called the cruel, 531. he leaues his new wife 3. daies after his marriage, 534. he marries a second wife the first beeing liuing, 536. murthers committed by him, 538. he puts his brother to death, 546. his diuillish cruelty 548. he spoiles the Venetians at sea, 551. hee murthers two other of his brethren, 552. hee murthers Queene Blanch his wife, 554. his cruelty, couetousnesse and treachery, 557. his flight out of Castile, 567. he discontentes the English, 571. he is slaine by his base brother D. Hen . | 575   |
| Peace broken by the Castilian with Arragon.   | 556   |
| Peace betwixt Castile and Portugal.   | 585   |
| Peace betwixt Castile and Nauarre.  | 594   |
| D. Pedro of Portugal a great traoueller.   | 691   |
| D. Pedro of Arragon slaine at Naples.  | 714   |
| Pedro Sarmien deliueers Toledo to Prince H.   | 739   |
| Peace concluded betwixt Castile & Arragon.  | 768   |
| D. Pedro of Portugal chosen king of Arragon, 775. he is crowned at Barcelona, 786. he is defeated with the Castellans, ibid. he is poisoned.  | 789   |
| Pedro de Velasco made Constable of Castile.  | 834   |
| Pero Gonzales of Mendosa Cardinal of Spaine.   | 835   |

The Table.

|  |      |   |      |
|--|------|---|------|
| Perpignan yielded to the French.                             | 847  | Portugal whence it was so called.                         | 18   |
| Peace betwixt France and Castile.                            | 870  | Pouerty assures the peoples liberty.                      | 28   |
| Peace betwixt Portugal and Castile.                          | 875  | Policy of the Romaine and Carthag. captaines.             | 43   |
| Peace betwixt Portugal and Castile.                          | 875  | Pompey deceives the Numantins, 111. his wildome to        |      |
| Pedro of Nauarre made Earle of Albeto, 874. hee is           | 892  | to Spaine against Sertorius , 111. his wildome to  |      |
| chiefe conductor of the warre at Oran.                       | 879  | end the ciuill war, 112. he is made perpetual go-         |      |
| Peace betwixt France and Spaine.                             | 888  | uernor in Spaine, ibid. he gets the farther Spaine |      |
| Pegnon de Velez fortified by the Castilians.                 | 888  | to be at his deuotion.                                    | 115  |
| Pedro Arias d' Auila viceroy of the firme land at            | 917  | Policy of Flaccus Commissary of the victuals.      | 105  |
| the Indies.  | 918  | Popilius Lenas vnfortunat in the warre of Numan-   |      |
| Pearles in abundance at the Indies.                          | 955  | tia.  | 104  |
| D. Pedro Giron raiseth new troubles.                         | 981  | Pompeys sonne slaine by Cæsar .             | 116  |
| Peru discovered.   | 1080 | Power of Ballancing that of kings.                        | 146  |
| Peace betwixt the Pope and king of Spaine.                   | 1081 | Pope Benedict an heretike.                         | 151  |
| Peace betwixt France and Spaine.                             | 1083 | Posterity of Mudarra Gonfalez .                    | 218  |
| Perscutions in Spaine for religion.                          | 1112 | Portugal held in fee of the crowne of Leon.               | 258  |
| Pegnon de Velez how situated.                                | 1112 | Pope ratifies the election of the Emperour Rodol-  |      |
| Pedro Artoio defeated and slaine by the Moores.              | 1144 | phus.   | 456  |
| Pegnon of Fregiliana taken by the great Com-                 | 1148 | Pope and D. Alphonso king of Castile met at Beau-  |      |
| mander.  | 1172 | caire.  | 407  |
| Peace betwixt the Turke and the Venetians.                   | 1218 | Pompe at the creation of the Earl of Barcellos.           | 551  |
| People of the Terceeres brutish.                             | 8    | Policy cruell and detestable of Queene Leonora     |      |
| Pedro de Baldes defeated by them of the Terceeres.           | 8    | Telles.   | 558  |
| ibid.   | 8    | Pope Clement sends a Legat into Castile.           | 631  |
| Phenitiens spoile Spaine.                                    | 880  | Portugals slaine at Aliubarota.                           | 609  |
| Philip Archduke of Austria and Ioane his wife dri-           | 880  | Portugals slaine at Aliubarota.                           | 644  |
| uen into England by a storme.                                | 880  | Power of the realme of Granada.                           | 672  |
| Philip Prince of Spaine, sworn future king of Spain,         | 1007 | 3. Popes at one time in the Church of Rome.               | 679  |
| 1007. he goes into Flanders, 1025. his marriage              |      | Pope and Council condemne one an other.                   | 682  |
| with Mary Queene of England, 1039. hee is             |      | Possessions of D. John Infant of Arragon.          | 682  |
| made king of Naples, 1040. he is desirous of a               |      | Portugals forced to accept of dishonorable condi-         |      |
| made king of Naples, 1040. he is desirous of a               |      | tions.  | 713  |
| peace with the Pope, 1078. hee returnes into                 |      | Policy of the Bishop of Segobia.                          | 724  |
| Spaine, 1083. he sends succors into France, 1094             |      | Pope sends a Legate into Castile to treat a peace.        |      |
| his marriage with his Neece, 1156. he sends his              |      | 799   |      |
| gallies to assist the Venetians, 1157. his resoluti-         |      | Portugals enter into Castile with an army,                | 850  |
| on to warre against the Turke, 1173. he dis-                 |      | they are defeated.  | 857  |
| swords D. Sebastien from the voiage of Affrike,       |      | Power of the Inquisitors in Spaine.                       | 885  |
| 1198. his troups march towards Portugal,                     |      | Portugal army defeated at Albuhera.                       | 874  |
| 1208. he enters into Portugal, 1217. his bounty              |      | Pope giues the West Indies to the kings of Ca-            |      |
| in Portugal, 1220. he is acknowledged king in                |      | stile.  | 948  |
| Lisbone, ibid. he goes out of Portugal.               | 1226 | Prouost of the Court troubled in his charge and           |      |
| Pyrene mountains full of yron mines.                         | 2    | the fact punished.  | 903  |
| Pirenees why so called.                                      | 14   | Pope in despair.  | 903  |
| Piety of Isabel Queene of Portugal.                   | 469  | Policy of Cardinal Ximenes to keepe the noble-     |      |
| Pisans abandon the Island of Sardinia.                       | 480  | men in awe.   | 947  |
| Piety of a sonne ill rewarded by D. Pedro king of            | 530  | Pope Paul the 4. willing to treat of a peace.      | 1074 |
| Castile.   | 530  | Pompe at an execution done by the Inquisitors.            |      |
| Pizarro abandoned by his soldiers at Peru, 1031.             | 1031 | 1122  |      |
| he defeats his enemies, 1032. he is defeated and             | 1033 | Porto Carrero an indiscreet Governour of Gouleta.  |      |
| executed.  | 1033 | 1174  |      |
| Pisly Basha having taken Gerbe, enters Constantinople | 1093 | Portugal wholly reduced vnder king Philip.                | 1215 |
| in triumph.  | 99   | Pope Gregory allowes of the conquest of Portugal.  |      |
| C. Plautius defeated by Viriatus .             | 215  | 1217  |      |
| Pleasures corrupt both minde and body.                       | 441  | Prouinces out of Spaine vnder the iurisdiction            |      |
| Plague in Alphonso de la Cerdes campe.                | 736  | thereof.  | 14   |
| Places vpon the frontier of Castile abandoned by             | 930  | Preparation for yron.                                     | 29   |
| bad counsel.   | 930  | Prisoners taken in new Carthage.                          | 54   |
| Places yielded to the king of Castile.                       | 932  | Practise of the Gaditains discovered & suppressed.        | 72   |
| Placentia taken from D. Aluaro d' Estuniga .          | 910  | Pretors refuse their charge in Spaine.                    | 93   |
| Places returne to the obedience of the king of Na-           | 910  | Preparations in Spaine to resist Cæsar .           | 113  |
| uarre.   | 1215 | Prescillian the heretike beheaded at Treues.       | 126  |
| Places belonging to the Portugals in Affrike yield           | 1215 | Primacy of the Pope.                                      | 148  |
| to king Philip.  | 1215 | Priests forbidden to marry.                               | 174  |
|  |      | Prince  |      |

The Table.

|   |      |   |               |
|---|------|---|---------------|
| Princes too superstitious.                                | 177  | Proceeding of the Inquisition to torture.                   | 1122          |
| Practise of D. Garcia king of Nauarre against his  | 235  | Practises of the Court of Spaine.                           | 1135          |
| brother D. Fernand .                               | 235  | Practises of a Gold-smith to end the warre with             |               |
| Princes of Spaine betray their fellow Christians,         | 249  | the Moores.   | 1155          |
| Priuilidges granted to Toledo.                            | 256  | Priuilidges of the Inhabitants of Fez.                      | 1191          |
| Prelates of the French nation aduanced to Chur-           | 261  | Pretendants to the Crowne of Portugall.                     | 1205          |
| ches in Spaine.   | 261  | Punishment of mutines.                                      | 71            |
| Prouence giuen to the Earle of Barcelona.                 | 267  | Publike charge affected for priuate profite.                | 93            |
| Practises of the Countesse of Portugall against her       | 292  | Punishment of a cowardly Captaine.                          | 104           |
| sonne.  | 292  | Punishment of a trecherous Governour.                       | 136           |
| Primacie of Toledo confirmed.                             | 305  | Punishment of Rebels.                                       | 149           |
| Prouence returnes to the Crowne of Arragon.               | 317  | Punishment of a rash man.                                   | 267           |
| Process for the Primacie of Spaine.                       | 348  | Poursuite for the abolishing of the Templers.               | 453           |
| Practises of the Castilians and Arragonois against        | 418  | D. Philip the King of Spaine. Sonne sworne by the    |               |
| Nauarre.  | 450  | Estates of Portugall.                                       | 1226          |
| Priests allowed to keepe Concubins.                       | 450  |   |               |
| Pretension of Soueraignty ouer Nauar made by the          | 452  | Qualities of the mountaine Spaniards.                       | 28            |
| King of Castile.  | 452  | Queene of Nauar accused of adulterie.                       | 227           |
| Princes absence cause of libertie and disorder.           | 467  | her innocencie iustified.                                   | ibid.  |
| Pruna taken by the Christians.                            | 467  | Quarrels betwixt the Kings of Castile and Nauar.            |               |
| Preparation of the Moores against Spaine.                 | 550  | 235.  |               |
| Predictions of a Monke to the King of Castile.            | 552  | Qualities of D. Vraca Queene of Castile.             | 271           |
| Princes in continuall ialousie.                           | 564  | Queene D. Vraca vnchast, put away by her hus-        |               |
| Prince of Wales writes to Don Henry of Castile.    | 570  | band.   | 274           |
| Pretensions of John Duke of Lancaster, to Castile. | 585  | Queene of Portugall expelled for her Insolencies.           |               |
| his preparation against the King of Ca-                   | 587  | 377.  |               |
| stile.  | 592  | Queene Violant of Castile vnchast.                   | 414           |
| Profits of the Court of Rome stayd in Spain.              | 603  | Quarrels in Court, where D. Lope Dias of Haro is     |               |
| Prodigie at Ebora.  | 619  | slaine.   | 433           |
| Pretension of Lewis duke of Aniou.                 | 619  | Qualities of D. Pedro king of Arragon.                      | 513           |
| Pretensions of the King of Arragon to the realme          | 619  | Quarrels touching the successor to Castile.                 | 532           |
| of Sicily.  | 653  | Queene mother of Castile vnchast, and slaine by             |               |
| Proceedings of the Earle of Gilon.                        | 675  | her fathers commandement.                                   | 538           |
| Princes pretending to the Realme of Arragon.              | 718  | Queene of Nauarre refuseth to returne to her hus-           |               |
| Priuilidges of the Earles of Ribadeo.                     | 718  | band, 631. she is intangled in the troubles of              |               |
| Prince Henry of Castile made run away.             | 714  | Castile, 633. she is sent to her husband against            |               |
| Practises of Don Aluaro de Luna Constable of       | 743  | her will.   | 649           |
| Castile.  | 803  | Qualities and disposition of D. Henry the fourth     |               |
| Presage of the Constables end.                            | 825  | king of Castile.  | 749           |
| Practise against the Master of S. James.                  | 832  | Queen of Castile gotte with child by D. Bertrand     |               |
| Proceeding against the Arch-bishop of Toledo.             | 848  | de la Cueva .  | 766           |
| Practises of Leonora Countesse of Foix.            | 919  | Quarrels betwixt the Earles of Beneuent and Le-             |               |
| Practises of the Marquis of Villena in Portugall.         | 919  | mos.  | 822           |
| Princesse carefull of iustice.                            | 919  | Quarrels betwixt the Earles of Haro and Treuig-             |               |
| Princes seruants follow for profit and not for affe-      | 919  | no.   | 827           |
| ction.  | 919  | Quarrels betwixt the houses of Mendoza and Pi-              |               |
| Pretensions of Christian Princes against the Vene-        | 919  | mentel.   | 839           |
| tians.  | 919  | Qualities of the Princes Fernand & Isabella . | 845           |
| Proceeding of the Inquisition vniust.                     | 940  | Quarrell betwixt D. Frederick Henriques , and D.     |               |
| Proceedings of Cardnall Ximenes allowed by the     | 949  | Ramir Nuges de Guzman .                              | 886           |
| King.   | 956  | Qualities of king Muley Albo-cen .                   | 894           |
| Practises of the Flemish Courtiers to keepe the           | 1007 | Qualities of Christopher Columbus .                  | 918           |
| King from seeing the Cardinal.                            | 1097 | Qualities of Mannuel king of Portugal.               | 957           |
| Proceeding of Pizarro at Peru.                     | 1097 | Quarrell betwixt Pedro Giron , and the Duke of       |               |
| Preiudice done to the French king at the Council          | 1097 | Medina Sidonia.   | 925           |
| of Trent.   | 1097 | Qualities of Colonell Vilalua .                      | 933           |
| Princes of Austria go into Spaine.                        | 1112 | S. Quintins taken by the Spaniards.                         | 1080          |
|   |      | Queene Elizabeth conducted into Spaine.              | 1085          |
|   |      | Question of precedence vndecided at Rome.                   | 1010          |
|   |      | Quarrell betwixt the Duke of Alba and English.              |               |
|   |      | 1137.   |               |
|   |      | Queene of England refuseth to heare the duke of             |               |
|   |      | Alba's Ambassador.  | ibid.  |
|   |      |   | Ridage |

The Table.

|          |  |   |      |
|----------|--|---|------|
| R |  | to her husband,                                       | 643  |
|          |  | Red crosse, the marke of the Order of Calatraua,      |      |
|          |  | 659.  |      |
|          |  | Religious houses built by D. Nugno Aluarez Pe-        | 699  |
|          |  | reira, Constable of Portugal,                         |      |
|          |  | Recompences giuen by the King of Castile to the       | 792  |
|          |  | Lords that followed him,                              |      |
|          |  | Renee of Aniou chosen King of Arragon,                | 808  |
|          |  | Reformations in Andalusia,                            | 367  |
|          |  | Rebellion pacified in Castile,                        | 936  |
|          |  | Refusall of iustice cause of great troubles in Spain, |      |
|          |  | 939.  |      |
|          |  | Reconciliation of the Cardinall Ximenes, with the     | 947  |
|          |  | Duke of Infantaigo.                                   |      |
|          |  | Reformation of the Infant Don Fernand house           | 953  |
|          |  | by the Cardinall Ximenes,                             |      |
|          |  | Rebels defeated in Castile,                           | 962  |
|          |  | Returne of the Emperour Charles into Spaine.          | 967  |
|          |  | Rebellion in Maiorca,                                 | 968  |
|          |  | Religion a cloake for tyrants,                        | 985  |
|          |  | Retreat of Barbarossa from Tunes,                     | 991  |
|          |  | Rebellion of the Gantois,                             | 1001 |
|          |  | Rebellion of Goullette,                               | 1002 |
|          |  | Returne of Prince Philip into Spaine,                 | 1035 |
|          |  | Resolution of Aluaro de Sands in the fort of Ger-     | 1092 |
|          |  | be,   |      |
|          |  | Reasons of the Spaniards for their precedence,        |      |
|          |  | 1095.   |      |
|          |  | Reasons of the French for their precedence.           | 1098 |
|          |  | Retreat of the Turkes army from Malta,                | 1118 |
|          |  | Resolution in Spaine touching the gouernement         | 1126 |
|          |  | of the Low-countries,                                 |      |
|          |  | Resolution of the Christian armie at Messina,         | 1163 |
|          |  | Ricamed becomes a nurse of the Church,                | 143  |
|          |  | Riches of the Church of Toledo,                       | 252  |
|          |  | Rights at the temple at Ierusalem,                    | 267  |
|          |  | Rioie and Bureau taken by the Castillians from Na-    | 321  |
|          |  | uarre,  |      |
|          |  | Richard of England chosen Emperour,                   | 389  |
|          |  | Rigour of Don Pedro king of Castile,                  | 556  |
|          |  | Rigour of the Spanish Inquisition moderated,          | 885  |
|          |  | Riuer of Plata found by Iohn Dias de Solis,           | 907  |
|          |  | Rights of the Seigneuie of Venice to Cipres,          |      |
|          |  | 1158.   |      |
|          |  | Romaines seeke to get footing in Spaine,              | 35   |
|          |  | Resolution of a seruant louing his master,            | 36   |
|          |  | Romanes resolute to warre against the Carthaginians   |      |
|          |  | ans. 38. they are defeated by the Carthaginians       | 45   |
|          |  | 44. they procure them enemies in Affricke.            |      |
|          |  | they beseege Auringe, 62. they ioyne with the         | 64   |
|          |  | Carthaginians in battell,                             |      |
|          |  | Romane Captaines chased out of their campe by         | 69   |
|          |  | their murthered souldiers,                            |      |
|          |  | Romane Gouernors great exactors,                      | 70   |
|          |  | Romanes defeated by the Spaniards, 87. they are       |      |
|          |  | charged by the Celtiberians in a streight,            | 90.  |
|          |  | they are defeated by the Lusitanians:                 | 97   |
|          |  | Rome taken by the Gothes,                             | 101  |
|          |  | Romanes assailed by the Sueues in Spaine, and by      | 133  |
|          |  | the Gothes in Gaule,                                  |      |
|          |  | Royalty of the Gothes electiue,                       | 146  |
|          |  | Roderic a vicious king of the Gothes,                 | 153  |
|          |  | Rhodes taken by Manhanias,                            | 163  |
|          |  | Romaines  |      |
|          |  | Rabains Christians in Affricke,                       | 166  |
|          |  | Don Remir put out his brothers and his mothers        | 200  |
|          |  | eyes,   | 238  |
|          |  | Race of Cid Ruis Dias,                                | 356  |
|          |  | Raymond Berenger Earle of Prouence, father to 4.      | 883  |
|          |  | Queenes,  |      |
|          |  | Rashnes of the Earle of Lerin,                        | 7    |
|          |  | Religion, a cloake for Tyrants,                       |      |
|          |  | Religion is naturally reuerenced, whatsoeuer it be,   |      |
|          |  | 12  |      |
|          |  | Religion of the ancient Spaniards infamous,           | 28   |
|          |  | Religion receiued with great affection by the Spa-    | 30   |
|          |  | niards,   |      |
|          |  | Resolution of the two Scipio's.                       | 41   |
|          |  | Reward of vertue must not be sought by vitious        | 55   |
|          |  | meanes,   |      |
|          |  | Remembrance of great crimes makes men despe-          | 66   |
|          |  | rate.   |      |
|          |  | Resolution of the Asapians Barbarous,                 | 67   |
|          |  | Retreat of two Romaines from Palentia,                | 105  |
|          |  | Resolution of Rhetogines the Numantine.               | 107  |
|          |  | Resignation of Bishoprickes reproued,                 | 136  |
|          |  | Reward of a lustfull tyrant,                          | 140  |
|          |  | Repentance of Le-nigilde,                             | 141  |
|          |  | Religion the least care of Conquerors,                | 168  |
|          |  | Reuenge vpon the Toledans for their rebellion,        |      |
|          |  | 180.  |      |
|          |  | Rebell punished,                                      | 183  |
|          |  | Rebellion of the Gouernor of Biscay,                  | 189  |
|          |  | Rebellion in the realme of Leon,                      | 205  |
|          |  | Rebellion of the sonne against the father,            | 218  |
|          |  | Rewards and punishments maintaine Estates,            | 223  |
|          |  | Religious deedes of Don Sancho the great,             | 228  |
|          |  | Reuenge vnworthie of a royall mind,                   | 233  |
|          |  | Rebellions at Toledo draw the king of Castile to      | 250  |
|          |  | beseege it,   |      |
|          |  | Reparation of crimes by combate,                      | 263  |
|          |  | Reconciliation of the Kings of Castile and Leon,      |      |
|          |  | 347.  |      |
|          |  | Realme of Nauarre affected by the Kings of Ca-        | 402  |
|          |  | stile and Arragon,                                    |      |
|          |  | Rebellion in Castile,                                 | 359  |
|          |  | Reuenge of the death of Conradin of Suabe,            | 421  |
|          |  | Reformation of the king of Arragons house be-         | 431  |
|          |  | longs to the Estates,                                 |      |
|          |  | Reuolt in Sardynia,                                   | 482  |
|          |  | Reuolt in Castile,                                    | 485  |
|          |  | Rebels of Arragon fauoured by the King of Ca-         | 524  |
|          |  | stile, 523. they are defeated by the king of Ar-      |      |
|          |  | ragon,  |      |
|          |  | Reformation of the Iurisdiction of the Iustice Ma-    | 524  |
|          |  | ior of Arragon,                                       |      |
|          |  | Reuolt in Sardynia,                                   | 525  |
|          |  | Reuenues of Churches taken without the Popes          | 564  |
|          |  | permission,   |      |
|          |  | Records of Castile burnt,                             | 594  |
|          |  | Rebellion of the Earle of Gion,                       | 602  |
|          |  | Resolution for the Queene of Nauarre to returne       |      |

The Table.

|  |      |  |      |
|--|------|--|------|
| Romaines chased out of Spaine,                 | 166  | fight, 58. he hateth the title of a King.            | 59   |
| Roderigo Dias de Binar a valiant Knight,       | 238  | Situation of new Carthage,                           | 33   |
| Rout and death of Don Sancho of Arragon Arch-  |      | Scipio relies not vpon mercenaries as his father     |      |
| bishop of Toledo, by the Moores.               | 409  | had done, 62. hee deceiues Asdruball by his          |      |
| Robert Sonne to Charles King of Naples put to  | 440  | policy, 64. hee beseegeth Illiturgis, 65. hee re-    |      |
| rout by the Sicilians.                         | 674  | reloues to vanquish or die, 66. hee falls very       |      |
| Rocke of two Louers,                           | 685  | sicke, 68. hee makes an inuestiue against the        |      |
| Ruy d'Analos Constable of Castile charged with | 833  | mutinous soldiars. 70. he prepares to go against     |      |
| treason.                                       | 965  | Mandonius, 72. hee pardons the rebellious            |      |
| Roderigo Borgia a Cardinall,                   | 975  | Spaniards and returnes to Rome.                      | 75   |
| Rout of the French army at Noyan.              | 979  | Scipio Emilianus sent into Spaine reformes the       |      |
| Rome taken and sackt.                          | 1079 | army. 106. hee repairs Lucullus faults,              | 107  |
| Roderigo Portondo slaine by Pirates,           |      | Schisme among the Knights of Calatrava,              | 526  |
| Rome in danger to be sackt,                    |      | Schisme in the Church,                               | 595  |
|  |      | Scho taken by the Turke,                             | 1128 |
|  |      | Sutes of Iustice erected in Spaine by Constantine    |      |
|  |      | the greate,  | 24   |
|  |      | Seuerity in the auncient Romaines commendable,       | 50   |
|  |      | Sedition a mischeife which doth import Estates,      | 71   |
|  |      | Seuerity against soldiars hauing left their gard,    | 100  |
|  |      | Sertorius warre in Spaine. 109. hee is called by the |      |
|  |      | Lusitanians. 110. hee defeats Manlius and kills      |      |
|  |      | Domitius ibid. his life is set to sale, which makes  |      |
|  |      | him cruell.  | 111  |
|  |      | Seuile yeelds the primacy to Toledo.                 | 148  |
|  |      | Sects in Mahomets religion,                          | 164  |
|  |      | Sedition in Galicia,                                 | 208  |
|  |      | Seuile a royall seat of the Moores,                  | 213  |
|  |      | Seditions, reuolts and vsurpations amongst the A-    |      |
|  |      | rabian Princes,                                      | 244  |
|  |      | Seditions and trecheries among the Moores in         |      |
|  |      | Spaine,  | 253  |
|  |      | Sect newly sprung vp among the Arabians of Af-       |      |
|  |      | ricke,   | 294  |
|  |      | Seuile beseege and yeelded to King Fernand,          | 380  |
|  |      | Selga a kind of tribute,                             | 445  |
|  |      | Sentence giuen by the King of Castile against Don    |      |
|  |      | Diego Lopes de Haro.                                 | 448  |
|  |      | Sedition in Granado against King Mahomet,            | 460  |
|  |      | Sentence giuen by the Pope against the Templers,     |      |
|  |      | 453  |      |
|  |      | Seals taken from the Arch of Toledo,                 | 470  |
|  |      | Seuerity of the King of Castile, makes his Knights   |      |
|  |      | lie vnto the Moores.                                 | 496  |
|  |      | Sedition against the Iewes in Castile,               | 630  |
|  |      | Sentence against the Earle of Foix,                  | 661  |
|  |      | Sea of Toledo voyde foure yeares,                    | 663  |
|  |      | Sedition at Toledo,                                  | 738  |
|  |      | Seditions in Castelonia.                             | 768  |
|  |      | Seditions rayfed by two Archbishops vnclie and       |      |
|  |      | Nephew.  | 775  |
|  |      | Segobia deliuered to the confederate Lords,          | 800  |
|  |      | Seuile ill intreated by the factions of Guzman and   |      |
|  |      | Ponce,   | 867  |
|  |      | Seditions reuiued in Nauar,                          | 879  |
|  |      | Sedition in Granado.                                 | 920  |
|  |      | Seege of Granado.                                    | 939  |
|  |      | Seruant faithfull to King Fernand.                   | 881  |
|  |      | Sentence against the Earle of Lerin,                 | 883  |
|  |      | Sedition at Lisbon for religion,                     | 688  |
|  |      | Sedition   |      |

The Table.

|  |              |  |      |
|--|--------------|--|------|
| Sedition in Cardinall Ximenes campe caused by arafcall,           | 892          | Spaine nourisheth the hatred betwixt the Romansand Carthaginians,  | 35   |
| Seditions among the Spaniards at the West Indies,                            | 44           | Spaniards inconstant,  | 39   |
| 1897.  |              | Spaine fit to supply armes   | 44   |
| Sentence giuen by the Pope against Iohn of Albretking of Nauarre, | 902          | Spaniards being mercenary abandon the Romanes,   | 46   |
| Sedition at Vailodolit against Cardinall Ximenes ,                    | 929          | 46. they are defeated by Scipio and yeeld to hismercie,   | 73   |
| Sedition against the towne of Villafraze,                                    | 949          | Spaniards in old time glorious, ambitious, enuious,and trecherous,   | 77   |
| Secrets of Cardinall Ximenes discovered,                              | 953          | Spaniards take armes against the Pretor. 80. theywere alwaies apt to rebell. 83. they complaine ofthe couetousnesse of their Gouernours, | 93   |
| Seuerity of Cardinall Ximenes ,                                       | 955          | Spaine made one gouernement,   | 94   |
| Sect of Iesuites confirmed at Rome,  | 963          | Spaniards opinion of S. James his bodie,  | 119  |
| Sedition at Peru for the gouernement,  | 1026         | Spaine vnder Constantine diuided into fise Prouin-ces,  | 124  |
| Sentence inconsiderate and vnjust,   | 1027         | Spies in the king of Nauars Councell,  | 367  |
| D. Sebastian king of Portugall goes into Affricke,                    | 1176         | Speech of the King of Castile to his Councell,   | 511  |
| Seruice rashly performed,  | 1195         | Spoyle of a Iew condemned,   | 553  |
| Setruall taken by the Castillans,  | 1212         | Speech of the Bishop of Calaoorra to the king,   | 781  |
| Ships sent out of Castile to the Moluccos,                                   | 993          | Speech of the Arch-bishop of Toledo, too audaci-ous,   | 849  |
| Shipwracke of the Emperors fleet at Alger,                                   | 1004         | Spaniards first voyage to Guiney,  | 865  |
| Sicily why called Sicania,   | ibid. | Spaniards defeated at sea by the Portugals,  | 874  |
| Sicilius gaue the name to Sicily,                                     | ibid. | Speech of Katherine Queene of Nauar to her hus-band,  | 904  |
| Singularitie of the riuer of Guadiana,                                       | 16           | Spaniards defeated and slaine by the Indians,  | 918  |
| Simplicity of the Romanes,   | 38           | Speech of the Duke of Infantasgo,  | 927  |
| Silence required in a great Captaine,  | 53           | Spaniards slaine in the riuer of Plata,  | 922  |
| Sillanus defeats the Carthaginians,                                   | 61           | Speech of King Francis touching his promise tothe Emperor,  | 975  |
| Simplicitie of the Spaniards,  | 91           | Spaniards preferre their liues generously againstthe Affricans,  | 1005 |
| Sisenand Bishop of Compostella, a turbulent man,                      | 110          | Speech of the Prince of Spaine to the Duke of Al-ba,   | 1134 |
| Sicily and Naples held by the Normans,                                       | 411          | Speech of Queene Izabella dying, to the King,   | 1136 |
| Sicilian Euenfong,   | 420          | Spaniards of account slaine at Galere,   | 1151 |
| Seigneuries and rights of the house of Lara,                                 | 533          | Speech of Bragadino at Famagosta,   | 1161 |
| Sinceritie of Gonsalo , the great Captaine,                           | 882          | Strangers tyrannize ouer Spaine,   | 4    |
| Signe of Cardinall Ximenes ,  | 957          | Statues sent by the Pope into Arragon,   | 662  |
| Sienna loseth her libertie,  | 1041         | Stones very light fall from heauen,  | 713  |
| Shippe-wracke of the great Commanders fleet,                                 | 1148         | Statute of Cordoua for the Nobility,   | 941  |
| Ships of Spaine cast away,   | 1181         | Store-houses for munition in Spaine,   | 936  |
| Skirmish betwixt the Christians and Moores atGerbe,                      | 1087         | Studies of Inigo of Loyola author of the Iesuites,963.  |      |
| Slaughter of Spaniards,  | 83           | Spanish souldiers detest the crueltie of the Mar-quis of Santa Cruz,   | 1224 |
| Slaughter of Monkes made by the Moores,                                      | 212          | Succession of women in Arragon,  | 183  |
| Snakes in an armie in the dead of Winter,                                    | 788          | Succession of the Realmes of Castile and Leon bywomen,   | 233  |
| Soueraignes should be Iudges, and not parties intheir subiects quarrels, | 481          | Submission of Don Pedro king of Arragon to thePope,   | 333  |
| Souldiers should be alwaies in action,                                       | 81           | Superstitious acknowledgement of a great victory,  | 512  |
| 3. Sunnes seene together in Spaine,  | 174          | Submission of the king of Maiorca,   | 521  |
| Sobrarbre and Ribagorfa vnited to the Crowne ofArragon,                  | 234          | Successes of the warre of Naples,  | 723  |
| Sonne dispossesseth the father,  | 1009         | Superstitions of the Spaniards,  | 820  |
| South sea discovered by Vasco Nugnes of Balbao,                | 914          | Suspicion of loue betwixt the Princeesse of Nauarreand the Bishop of Pampelona,  | 838  |
| Sonne of Aly Bassa set at libertie by Don Iohn ,               | 1173         | Suiffes come to the warres of Granado,   | 901  |
| Spaine vnknowne before the Carthaginians,                                    | 2            | Submission of the Langtraue to the Emperor,  | 1017 |
| Spaniard at the first grosse and without religion,                           | 3            |  |      |
| Spaine why so called,  | 5            |  |      |
| Spaine like to an Oxe hide,  | 13           |  |      |
| Springs of the riuers of Ebro and Duero,                                     | 15           |  |      |
| Spaine reduced to one gouernement, 24. it is ram-pared by nature,        | 25           |  |      |
| Spaniards life simple and rude,  | 28           |  |      |
| Spanish toung a corrupt Latin,   | 29           |  |      |

The Table.

|   |   |   |      |
|---|---|---|------|
| Succors sent from Goa to Diu,   | 1022                                      | Titles of Leonora of Nauar,  | 838  |
| Succors sent to Malta,  | 1118                                      | Titles of king Fernand and Queene Izabella ,  | 874  |
| Superfluitie of the Portugals going to the warre,   | 1200                                      | Testament of Xeriffe Mahomet ,   | 1195 |
| Succors sent to the Terceres,   | 1226                                      | Townes in Sardynia,   | 22   |
| Sebastian , the first king of Portugall, 1197. bredvp by the Iesuites. ibid. he is vnfurnished of allthings for the warre of Affricke. 1199. his armygoing thither. 1200. his error and resolution,1201. his death, 1202. his bodie sent to thePortugals, | 1197.1199.1200.1201.1202. | Torismund king of Gothes slaine by his brothersprocurement,  | 134  |
|   |   | Toledo chiefe towne of the Gothes kingdome inSpaine,  | 137  |
|   |   | Townes of Spaine demantled, and the people dis-armed by Vitiza ,   | 152  |
|   |   | Toledo reduced vnder the Moores of Cordoua,188. yeelded to D. Alphonso king of Castil,                                     | 251  |
|   |   | it was called the Imperiall citiy,  | 255  |
|   |   | Tortosa taken by the Arragonois,  | 296  |
|   |   | Townes built by Don Fernand king of Leon,  | 313  |
|   |   | Townes and castles taken from the Moores,   | 375  |
|   |   | Townes taken by the Moores,   | 494  |
|   |   | Townes in Castile which giue voyces in the E-states,  | 527  |
|   |   | Townes in Castile yeeld to the King of Nauarre,   | 574  |
|   |   | Towne of Saint Vincent obtaines new priuiledges696.   |      |
|   |   | Tortosa yeelded to King Iohn of Arragon,   | 789  |
|   |   | Toledo reuolted, and reduced againe to the Kingsobedience,  | 804  |
|   |   | Townes of the Infantasgo giuen to the Marquesof Santillana,   | 824  |
|   |   | Toro deliuered to the king of Portugall, 850. be-seeged by King Fernand of Arragon, 851. sur-prized by the Castillans, | 866  |
|   |   | Tordefillas taken by the Confederats, 961. reco-uered againe,   | 962  |
|   |   | Truth the subiect of an Historie,   | 3    |
|   |   | Treasor of Spaine casually discovered,  | 11   |
|   |   | Truce betwixt the Sicilians and Carthaginians,  | 34   |
|   |   | Trecherie of Hanno against the Senate of Carthage35.   |      |
|   |   | Trecherie of a Spaniard,  | 41   |
|   |   | Trecherie of the Spaniards to the Carthaginianstheir allies,  | 64   |
|   |   | Truth breedes hatred in the wicked,   | 96   |
|   |   | Trecherie and crueltie of Ser. Galb. ,   | 98   |
|   |   | Treatie made with Vriatus broken by Cepio ,   | 101  |
|   |   | Traian a Spaniard, the third persecutour of theChurch,   | 120  |
|   |   | Trecherie of Stillico and defeat of the Imperial ar-mie,   | 131  |
|   |   | Traitors frustrate of their hope,   | 155  |
|   |   | Tribute payed by the Arabians to the Romanes,195.   |      |
|   |   | Tithes granted to Lay-men,  | 265  |
|   |   | Title of the house of Portugall,  | 292  |
|   |   | Titles of D. Sancho king of Castile,   | 426  |
|   |   | Tiscara a strong place taken from the Moores,   | 463  |
|   |   | Tyrant offended, is neuer truly reconciled,   | 504  |
|   |   | Title of Prince first giuen in Castile to the kings el-dest sonne,  | 615  |
|   |   | Title of Earle of Eureux ceaseth in the house ofNauarre,   | 668  |
|   |   | Tyrants care not to be hated, so as they be feared,692.   |      |
|   |   | Title of Princeesse first vsurped by the eldest sonneof Portugall,  | 706  |

The Table.

|  |      |  |       |
|--|------|--|-------|
| Troubles in Castile by reason of the Kings rage,                                       | 308  | Tumult made in Spaine by the Moors of Granada  | 1127. |
| Trecherie of D. Maurique de Lara against his Prince and Country,                | 309  | Turkes come to succour the Moores in Spaine,   | 1149. |
| Traytors iustly punished,  | 362  | Turkes goe to beseege Fez,   | 1191  |
| Troubles in Arragon,   | 400  | V  |       |
| Truce betwixt the Christians and Moores,   | 410  | V Allia the Gothe, a friend to the Romaines,   |       |
| Truce betwixt the French and Arragonois,   | 433  | makes warre in Spaine against the Barbari-   |       |
| Troubles raised by D. Henry of Castile,   | 441  | ans,   | 132   |
| Tribute imposed by the Pope vpon the Realme of Sicily,                                 | 455  | Vanity of humane greatnes.   | 155   |
| Troubles and quarrels where there is much idle Nobilitie,                              | 481  | Valencia taken by Cid Ruis Diaz ,   | 262   |
| Trecherie of Don Alphonso king of Castil against his owne blood,                | 483  | Valour of Cid Ruis Diaz ,   | 241   |
| Truce very beneficiall to the Moores,  | 496  | Valour of Don Alphonso , the noble king of Castile.   | 342.  |
| Treatie of mariage betwixt D. Pedro of Arragon, and D. Maria of Nauar.   | 503  | Vanity of the Emperour Fredericke ,   | 375   |
| Troubles by the report of a woman,   | 508  | Valentia taken by the Arragonois,  | 369   |
| Trecherie of the king of Arragon against the Earle of Transamara,                      | 556  | Valenciens mutinous and seditious,   | 523   |
| Treason of Don Roderigo of Vrris punished,                                      | 589  | Valencia subdued by the K. of Arragon,   | 524   |
| Trecherie of Queene Leonora Talles,   | 599  | Vagabond troups spoile Cattelonis,   | 620   |
| Treatie of mariage to the preiudice of Castile,  | 637  | Vailliolodit submits vnto the king,  | 794   |
| Troubles in Zamora,  | 667  | Vanity of the King of Portugall,   | 857   |
| Troubles in Arragon,   | 674  | Viana surprized by the marshall of Nauarre,  | 879   |
| Truce with the king of Granada,  | 674  | Vasco de Gama sayles to Calicut,  | 958   |
| Truce betwixt Castile, and the kings of Arragon and Nauar,                             | 698  | Vasco Nunges of Balbao beheaded at Darien,  | 919   |
| Troubles in Castile by false reports,  | 703  | Valeste a new towne built in the Island of Malta,  | 1119. |
| Truce betwixt Granada and Castile,   | 757  | Vertue giues to euery one his due reward,  | 57    |
| Treason discouered but not punished,   | 780  | Vertue alwaies enuiud,   | 110   |
| Treatie of marriage betwixt Isabella of Castile, and Fernand of Arragon, | 809  | Vertue not alwaies hereditarie,  | 172   |
| Trecherie of the Earle of Lerin against the Marshall of Nauar.                         | 883  | Vertue reuerenced euen by enemies.   | 207   |
| Treatie of peace betwixt France and Spaine,  | 972  | Vertue of Don Ramir the bastard of Nauar,   | 227   |
| Trecherie of mercenarie Moores,  | 894  | Vertue of king D. Alphonso the eight.   | 278   |
| Troubles raysted by the Archb. of Toledo,  | 825. | Vertues of D. Charles Prince of Nauar,  | 741   |
| Tripoly in Barbary taken by Pedro Nauarre ,                                     | 897  | Velez Malaga beseege by King Fernand ,   | 921   |
| Truce betwixt France and Spaine,   | 912  | Venetians defeated by the Spaniards,   | 916   |
| Trauels endured with great patience by the Spaniards,                                  | 916  | Veniero the Venetian General incensed against the Spanisli souldiers,   | 1167  |
| Treatie of Cambray,  | 979  | Victorie of great consequence for the Romaines,  | 43    |
| Tremessen rebels against the Emperour,   | 1008 | Vice and corruption abounds, where strangers abide.  | 77    |
| Tripoly beseege by the Christians,   | 1082 | Victorie gotten by the Pretor Heluins ,   | 81    |
| Troubles in the Low-countries,   | 1126 | Victorie of Scipio against the Lusitanians,   | 85    |
| Trecherie a diuellish reuenge,   | 1135 | Victorie of Ful. Flaccus against the Celtiberians,  | 89.   |
| Treatie of peace with the Moors of Granada,  | 1153 | Viriatus Captaine of the Lusitanians defeats Vitellius , 98. he is defeated by Q. Fab. Max. 99. he is fauoured by the Senate of Rome. 101. he is treacherously murthered and lamented by his souldiers. | 143   |
| Trecherie of Musapha at Famagosta,  | 1162 | Victorie admirable and almost incredible,  | 241   |
| Treafor brought by Sir Francis Drake out of the fourth sea,                     | 1181 | Vitiza a vicious king, his eyes put out by Rodericke   | 153.  |
| Tudela taken by the Earle of Perche,   | 271  | Victorie of the Christians against the Moores,   | 170   |
| Tumult at Badaios,   | 435  | Vices of Princes causes of sedition,   | 211   |
| Tumults in Castile for the gouernement,  | 464  | Victoria in Alaua built, 323. taken by the King of Castile.  | 336   |
| Tumults at Lisbon for their Kings marriage,  | 584  | Victories of the christians at sea against the Moors,  | 515.  |
| Turkes make profit of the Iewes banishment,  | 947  | Victorie of the Castillans at sea,   | 659   |
| Tumult at Malaga suppressed,  | 934  | Viceroy of Valencia slaine by the trecherie of his owne brother.   | 672   |
| Tunes taken by the Emperour,   | 991  | Viana  |       |
| Turkes repulsed at Diu,  | 999  |  |       |
| Turkes and Moores flie from Oran,  | 1077 |  |       |
| Turkes beseege the fort at Gerbe,  | 1090 |  |       |
| Turkes armie at Malta,   | 1116 |  |       |

The Table.

|   |       |   |              |
|---|-------|---|--------------|
| Viana beseege by the D. of Valentinois,   | 883   | War made by Castile and Arragon against Granada,  | 454          |
| Victory of Rauenna vnprofitable for the French,                                       | 903.  | War betwixt Nauar and Castile,  | 499          |
| Victory of D. Berenguela against the Turke,                                    | 939   | War made in Castile by the rebels,  | 504          |
| Victory of the Portugals at sea,  | 1024  | War made by Portugall against Castile,  | 505          |
| Vices common to young Noblemen,   | 1122  | War made by D. Henry king of Castile against the King of Portugall,  | 579          |
| Victorie of the Christians,   | 1169  | War in Sardynia,  | 581          |
| Vnion of Leon and Castile,  | 231.  | War betwixt Castile and Nauar,  | 593          |
| Vniuersity of Salamanca,  | 375   | War against the Earle of Gilon,   | 648          |
| Vnion in Arragon against the King for their liberties,                                | 422   | War made by the King of Castile against Arragon and Nauarre,  | 694          |
| Vniuersity of Palence,  | 338   | Warrant to apprehend the Constable,   | 745          |
| Vncle bawde to his neece,   | 533   | War of Vcles against the Marquis of Villena,  | 864          |
| Vnction of the king of Nauarre,   | 626   | War betwixt the French and Spaniards,   | 954          |
| Vnion of all the townes of Guipuscoa,   | 636   | War renewed by the persecuted Moores,   | 964          |
| Vicchaftines of Joane the 2. Queene of Naples,                                 | 686   | War against the Constable of Lerin,   | 886          |
| Vnion of the Prouinces and Commonalties in Castile for the administration of iustice, | 789   | War betwixt France and Spaine,  | 899          |
| Vnion of Castile and Arragon,   | 876   | War betwixt the French and the Emperour,  | 1005         |
| Vnion of Castile and Nauarre by conquest,   | 905   | Wisedome of the Romaines in matters of state,   | 85           |
| Vniuersity of Coimbra erected,  | 977   | Wisedome necessary in a Prince to choofe men of valour,   | 661          |
| Vniuersity of Tudela erected in Nauar,  | 1111  | Wonders of the mountaine of Stella,   | 15           |
| Voyage of D. Joane of Castile into Flanders,                                   | 955   | Women in Spaine warriors and valiant,   | 104          |
| Voyages made to the Indies.   | 906   | Workes of piety of D. Alphonso ,   | 188          |
| Voyage of Lopes Snares de Menses to the East Indies,                           | 971   | Women Moores massacred,   | 1151         |
| Voyage of Fernand Magellanes to the Moluques,                                  | 976.  | War renewed with the Moores of Granada,   | 1154         |
| Voyage of Sebastian del Cano ,   | 978   | War denounced by the Turke against the Venetians,   | 1157         |
| Voyage of the Castillans to the Moluques vntunate,                                    | 978   | X   |              |
| Voyage of Sir Francis Drake into the south sea,                                | 1180. | Xeriffs Kings of Marocco, and their beginning,  | 1182.        |
| Vsurpations of the king of Castil vpon Nauar,   | 238   | Xeriffe Mahomet Ben Hamet makes himselfe Lord of Turedant,   | 1183         |
| Vsurpations of D. Alphonso king of Castile,                                    | 248   | Xeriffs his sonnes seize vpon Marocco by treason  | ibid. |
| Vsurpations vpon the Clergie in Castile,  | 622   | Xeriffs breethren, in quarrell betwixt themselves,  | 1185.        |
| W   |       | Xeriffe Mahomet defeats his elder brother, they are reconciled.  | ibid. |
| W Arre to deliuer the oppressed, iust,   | 4     | Xeriffe Hamet breakes the peace made with his brother,   | ibid. |
| Warre in Spaine betwixt the Vandales and Sueues,                                      | 123.  | Xeriffe Mahomet s speech to his brother, 1187. his speech to the King of Fez, 1188. he is forced to flie out of Fez, 1191. hee recouers Fez againe, 1193. he is murthered, 1194. his testament, ibid. |              |
| War betwixt two breethren Moores,   | 136   | Xeriffe Mahomet sonne to Abdalla , being expelled, flies to King Philip for succor, 1198. hee craues ayde from Portugall.  | ibid. |
| Warre betwixt Nauarre and Castile for an iniurie done to the Ambassadors of Castile,  | 177   | Z   |              |
| War betwixt the Moores,   | 202   | Z Amora taken and ruined, 218. made a Bishoppricke.   | 278          |
| War betwixt Nauar and Castile,  | 212   | Zeir a Moorish King baptized,   | 368          |
| War betwixt 3. breethren, sonnes to Don Fernand King of Castile,               | 237   | Zamora in the power of the King of Portugall,   | 800          |
| War betwixt the mother and the sonne in Portugall,                                    | 241   | Zahara surprized by the Christians.   | 902          |
| War betwixt Nauar and Arragon,  | 276   | Zeale inconsiderate in Charles Prince of Spaine,   | 1133.        |
| War betwixt the king of Leon and his mother-in-law,                                   | 286   |   |              |
| War in Valencia against the Moores,   | 337   |   |              |

F f N f S.

Excuse these grosse misprissions, and for the re? I put my selfe to your favorable construction. fol. 225. lin. 48. for daughter, reade wife. f. 859. l. 21. for, suffered the Portugals to take it, read, suffered it to be taken from the Portugals. In the marg. fol. 273. for detestable, r. detestable. fol. 1144. r. by the Moores. f. 889. l. 123. for her husband, read, her sonne.